1957 After the Ball (Bennett) (as Walter de Freece)
1958 The Truth About Women (Box) (as Humphrey Tavistock); The Silent Enemy (Fairchild) (as Lt. Lionel Crabbe)
1959 Room at the Top (Clayton) (as Joe Lampton)
1960 Power Among Men (Polidoro, Hammid, and Sarma) (as Narrator); The Long and the Short and the Tall (Jungle Fighters) (Norman) (as Private Bamforth); Espresso Bongo (Guest) (as Johnny Jackson); The Alamo (Wayne) (as Colonel William Travis); Bitterfeld 8 (Mann) (as Weston Lagged)
1961 Two Loves (Spinster) (Walters) (as Paul Latrobe); Summer and Smoke (Goldenville) (as John Buchanan Jr.)
1962 A Girl Named Tamiko (Sturges) (as Ivan Kalin); Walk on the Wild Side (Dmytryk) (as Dove Linkhorn); The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm (Pal) (as Wilhelm Grimm); The Manucharian Candidate (Frankenheimer) (as Raymond Shaw)
1963 The Ceremony (as Sean McKenna, + d); The Running Man (Reed) (as Rex Black)
1964 The Outrage (Ritt) (as The Husband); Or Human Bondage (Hughes) (as Philip Carey)
1965 Life at the Top (Kotchiff) (as Joe Lampton); Darling (Schlesinger) (as Miles Brand); The Love Goddesses (Turell) (as Narrator)
1966 The Spy with a Cold Nose (Petrie) (as Dr. Francis Trevelyan); The Winter’s Tale (Dunlop) (as Leonides)
1968 Rebus (Zanchin) (as Jeff Miller); A Dandy in Aspic (Mann) (as Alexander Eberlin, + co-d uncredited); Fight for Rome (Siodmak) (as Cathicus)
1969 Fight for Rome II (Siodmak) (as Cathicus); He and She (Bolognini) (as He, + pr); The Magic Christian (McGrath) (as Hamlet)
1970 WUSA (Rosenberg) (as Farley); The Deep (Welshes) (as Hughie Warriner); Tchakovsky (Talankin) (as Narrator)
1972 Escape to the Sun (Golan) (as Major Kirsanov)
1973 Columbo: The Most Dangerous Match (Abroms—for TV) (as Emmett Clayton); Night Watch (Hutton) (as John Wheeler)
1974 Welcome to Arrow Beach (Tender Flesh) (as Jason Henry, + d)
1975 For For Fake (Welles) (cameo as Himself)

Publications

By HARVEY: articles—

On HARVEY: books—

On HARVEY: articles—

* * *

Effete, unscrupulous, coldly unemotional, hedonistic, and cad are the words most frequently used to describe the screen persona of this Lithuanian-born, South African-raised British actor who achieved international stardom as the ambitious working class “hero” in Room at the Top, the provocative 1959 film that heralded a bold new direction in the British cinema of the 1950s and 1960s.

Harvey’s heartless heartthrob in the film, Joe Lampton, who woos and wins an industrialist’s daughter he doesn’t love in order to get ahead (and by doing so destroys the woman of his own class he realizes too late that he does love), personified the cautionary “be careful what you wish for, you may get it’ message of this daringly frank (for its time), adult-oriented film.

Room at the Top paved the way for a host of even grittier “kitchen sink dramas” about British class and sexual warfare such as A Kind of Loving, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning, The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner, and This Sporting Life. And Harvey’s performance as the upstart Lothario from the other side of the tracks in it was the standard bearer for all the working class rebels with a cause played by Alan Bates, Albert Finney, Tom Courtney, and Richard Harris who followed in Harvey’s footsteps.

Harvey repeated the role of Joe Lampton in an equally frank sequel, Life at the Top. The film was less successful than its forbear, however, because it covered no new ground; it just confirmed the details of the empty life in store for Harvey’s character at the end of the first film.

Life at the Top was released in 1965, by which time Harvey was already a fixture of many high-profile films made on both sides of the Atlantic such as Butterfield 8, Summer and Smoke (from a Tennessee Williams play), Walk On the Wild Side, The Outrage (Kurosawa’s Rashomon remade as a western), and Darling, director John Schlesinger and writer Frederic Raphael’s acid portrait of the London scene in the ‘swinging Sixties.’ In each, Harvey played variations on his destructive but appealing heel persona—a persona that made him an unsuitable choice, however, for Of Human Bondage. Harvey was clearly miscast in the part of Somerset Maugham’s vulnerable hero Philip Carey, just as he had been early on in his career (and for the same reasons) as Romeo in Castellani’s Romeo and Juliet (1954). On the flip side, Harvey’s upper class air of almost posturing snobbishness made him an ideal Colonel William Travis, the effete defender of American freedom he played in John Wayne’s interminable epic The Alamo, a film where most of the fun (aside from the spectacular final battle) derived from watching Harvey and co-star Richard Widmark go head to head chewing the scenery.

Harvey had his two best roles (apart from Room At the Top) and gave his two best performances in Val Guest’s underrated satire Expresso Bongo, where he played a hilariously smarmy music promoter who maneuvers singer Cliff Richards into the big leagues, and John Frankenheimer’s classic The Manchurian Candidate. It is the latter film for which Harvey is today best remembered. He is perfectly cast as the cold fish Raymond Shaw, a Korean War POW brainwashed by the communist Chinese into being a remote-controlled assassin. In many ways, Shaw is the definitive Harvey hero—a character we never actually like but whom we do come to feel for. Ironically, Harvey almost didn’t get the part. Producer-star Frank Sinatra’s first choice for Shaw was Tony Curtis, but director Frankenheimer insisted on Harvey and fortunately got his way.

Shortly before his premature death of cancer, Harvey may have had another good part as a killer, in this case a psychopathic one, in Sinatra’s first choice for Shaw was Tony Curtis, but director of Welles’s works that remained either unfinished or unreleased at the time of Welles’s death in 1985.

—John McCarty

HASEGAWA, Kazuo

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Kyoto, 27 February 1908. Education: Attended Fushimi No. 3 Elementary School to 1921. Military Service: Served three-months basic training for Japanese Army, and spent the remainder of the war touring with theater groups, 1944–45. Family: Married 1) Tami Nakamura 1930 (divorced 1942); 2) Shige Iijima 1942, children: actor Narutoshi Hayashi and actresses Toshiko and Kazuo Arashii, and Chomaru Hayashi; under training as Kazuo Arashi, 1927—joined Shochiku Studio and made film debut (using name Chojiro Hayashi) in _Chigo no kenpo_; made about 120 films in the next ten years for this studio; 1937—joined Toho Studio; his popularity was enhanced after being attacked by a thug, allegedly hired by rival studio; from this point began using his real name, Kazuo Hasegawa; 1942—established the Shin Engi-za theater group; 1946–47—engaged by Shin-Toho Studio; 1948–52—the Shin Engi-za company began producing films as well as plays; 1949–63—member of Daihei Studio and executive officer, 1957–63; 1964—first TV appearance; 1960s—concentrated on stage work. Awards: Japanese Government Shiju-hosho, 1965; Minister of Education Award, 1978. Died: From cerebral tumor, 6 April 1984.

Films as Actor:

(as Chojiro Hayashi)

1927 _Chigo no kenpo_ (Inuzuka); _Ojo Kissu_ (Kinugasa); _Ran Fun_ (Inuzuka); _Doka azami_ (Kinugasa); _Kinno jida_ (Kinugasa); _Iwawari Asataro_ (Inuzuka); _Hofusei_ (Fuyushima); _Goyosen_ (Kinugasa); _Yabure amigasa_ (Inuzuka); _Akatsuki no henge_ (Kinugasa); _Korui_ (Yamazaki); _Koroi zoshi_ (Yamazaki); _Gekka no maki_ (Kinugasa); _Tenpo hiken-ron_ (Yamazaki)

1928 _Benten-kozo_ (Kinugasa) (title role); _Kyoraku hicho_ (Kinugasa); _Kakoku-ki_ (Kinugasa); _Futatsudo_ (Yamazaki) (as Shimpachi Aizawa); _Chokon yasha_ (Kinugasa); _Hokkibi_ (Hoshi); _Shirai Gonpachi_ (Yamazaki); _Ose Hangoro_ (Hoshi); _Kaito Sayamavoro_ (Koishi); _Tsugaru no ketsuen_ (Koishi); _Kikugoro goshi_ (Inoue); _Edo sodachi_ (Tomonari); _Kirare Yosa_ (Koishi); _Shigure-gasa_ (Koishi); _Ningyo bushi_ (Koishi); _Toribe- yama shinfu_ (Fuyushima)

---

ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

1929 _Kurode-gumi Sukeroku_ (Furuno); _Jigoku kaido_ (Ishiyama); _Obo Kissu_ (Fuyushima); _Fubuki-toge_ (Fuyushima); _Omokage_ (Hattori); _Yari no Gonzo_ (Furuno); _Tsukigata Hanpeita_ (Fuyushima) (title role); _Ise ondo_ (Takeuchi); _Sanza shigure_ (Hoshi); _Chi ni somuka mono_ (Tomonari); _Kuruheru meikun_ (Inoue)

1930 _Nogitsune Sanji_ (Koishi); _Jisei wa utsuru_ (Fuyushima); _Jikizamurai_ (Inoue); _Fuyuki shinfu_ (Fuyushima); _Matsudaira Choshichiro_ (Hoshi); _Sei no Yatappe_ (Hoshi); _Ninwa hina_ (Inoue); _Satsunau sodom_ (Fuyushima); _Chiyoda no ninjo_ (Hoshi); _Shochiku biggu paredo_ (Shimazu)

1931 _Fabuki ni sakebu ookami_ (Fuyushima); _Bijoub Sakyo_ (Hoshi); _Monzaburo no Hide_ (Watanabe); _Reimeiz en_ (Kinugasa); _Jurokaya seishin_ (Inuzuka); _Bato no zeni_ (Kinugasa); _Kagoya Dainagon_ (Futakawa); _Bata no zeni_ (Inoue); _Jonan no Yoemon_ (Inoue); _Nagebushi Yasuke_ (Fuyushima); _Edo no maki_ (Futakawa); _Hiren hikui-zuka_ (Inoue)

1932 _Yaji Kita bijin_ (Futakawa); _Konjiki-yasha_ (Nomura) (as Kanichi); _Tabigaera kokyo_ (Inuzuka); _Nemurikko_ (Kinugasa) (as Jirokichi); _Matsuri-uta_ (Inuzuka); _Akatsuki no henge_ (Fuyushima); _Dogo no kishi_ (Inoue); _Hototogisu_ (Gosho); _Kensetsu-ten_ (Akiyama) (as Jirokichi); _Kikugoro goshi_ (Inoue); _Chushingura_ (Kinugasa) (as Asano Takumonokami and Yoshihisa Sawaemono)

1933 _Adachi kyodai kagami_ (Futakawa); _Kikugoro goshi_ (Fuyushima); _Ten-ichibho to Iga_ (Kinugasa); _Kyokoku harusame-gasa_ (Fuyushima); _Irezumi hangan_ (Fuyushima); _Futakawa_ (Kinugasa) (as Yokino-jo, Yamitaro, and Yokino-jo’s mother); _Megumi ni kenka_ (Inuzuka); _Yamitaro_ (as Yokino-jo, Yamitaro, and Yokino-jo’s mother); _Shochiku biggu paredo_ (Shimazu)

1934 _Kutsukake Tokijiro_ (Kinugasa) (as Tokijiro); _Yasu Honnoji_ (Fuyushima); _Ishii Tsuneemon_ (Oosone); _Myoreki meikenshi_ (Inoue); _Tsukigata Hanpeita_ (Fuyushima) (title role); _Yakko Kagami_ (Fuyushima); _Edo wa utsuru_ (Fuyushima); _Genzaburo ihen_ (Kinugasa); _Koina no Ginpei_ (Fuyushima); _Uijin_ (Fuyushima); _Yaji Kita_ (Inoue)

1935 _Hanayome no negoto_ (Gosho) (as Yasuo); _Hana no ai_ (Ikeda); _Kurayami no Ushimita_ (Kinugasa); _Ronintabi sassho bosatsu_ (Kondo); _Yokko no henge_ (Kinugasa) (as Yokko-no, Yamitaro, and Yokko-no’s mother); _Kagoya hangan_ (Fuyushima) (as Ooka Echizen ni kami); _Tenpo Yasubei_ (Inoue); _Megumi ni kenka_ (Fuyushima)

1936 _Yokko no henge_ (Kinugasa) (as Yokko-no, Yamitaro, and Yokko-no’s mother); _Onatsu Seijuro_ (Inuzuka) (as Seijuro); _Arakawa no Saki_ (Oosone); _Odoro Meikun_ (Inoue); _Toribeyama shinju_ (Osone Hankuo)
(Fuyushima) (as Hankuro); Harusugata gonin-otoko (Fuyushima)

1937 Oosaka natsu-no-jin (Kinugasa) (as Sakazaki Izumo no kami); Tabi no kagero (Inuzuka); Tsuchiya Chikara: Rakka no make (as Tsuchiya Chikara and Sugino Jubeita); Sekkai no maki (Fuyushima); Suzukamori (Inoue); Moko raishu: Tekkoku Kofuku; Shishi-hen (Akiyama); Bancho sarayashiki (Fuyushima)

(as Kazuo Hasegawa)

1938 Tojuro no koi (Yamamoto) (as Sakata Tojuro); Mabuta no hana (Kondo); Tsurubachi Tsurujiro (Naruse) (as Tsurujirō); Gekka no wakamushi (Nakagawa)

1939 Ronin fubuki (Kondo); Chushingura Parts I and II (Takizawa and Yamamoto); Kenka-tobi Parts I and II (Ishida) (released as short 1951); Echigo-jishi matsuri (Watanabe); Byakuran no uta (Watanabe) (as Kokichi Matsumura); Gozoni asumaotoko (Takizawa)

1940 Aodaichi goyomi (Kondo); Hebihime-sama (Kinugasa) (as Hinokiyori Sentaro); Shin no yoru Parts I and II (Hase) (released as Soshu yokuoku 1952—short) (as Tetsuo Hase); Zoka Hebihime-sama (Kinugasa) (as Hinokiyori Sentaro); Moyuru daichi (Abe) (as Lt. Ohashi); Nessa no chikai (Watanabe) (as Kunihito); Gozoni asumaotoko (Takizawa) (as Utamak Bassityama)

1941 Sakujitsu kieta otoko (Makino) (as Bunkeichō); Hasegawa Roppa no lemitsu to Hikosa (Makino) (as Tokugawa Iemitsu and Kawamura Keibu); Orizshichichi nana-henge Parts I and II (Ishida); Awa no odoriko (Makino) (released as Kenun Naruto shibuki 1960—short); Kawazakajima gassen (Kinugasa) (as Hyakuzo); Otoko no hanamichi (Makino) (as Utamon III)

1942 Matteita otoko (Makino); Fukei-zu (Makino) (as Hayase Chikara); Zoka Fukei-zu (Makino) (as Hayase Chikara); Omokage no machi (Hagiwara)

1943 Ina no Kantaro (Takizawa) (released as Ina-bushi jinji 1953—short) (as Ongaku dai-shingun (Watanabe); Meijin Choji-bori (Hagiwara) (as Choji); Susume dokuritsu-ki (Kinugasa and Imai); Hitematu kakugó (Takizawa)

1944 Idaten kaido (Hagiwara); Shibai-do (Naruse); Inochi no minato (Watanabe)

1945 Ato ni tsuzuku o shinju (Watanabe); Sanju-san-gendo toshiya monogatari (Naruse)

1946 Hinok butai (Toyoda); Aku yo no tonosuma (Kinugasa) (as Kiichiro Taira); Kiri no yobanashi (Hagiwara)

1947 Toho Sen-ichi-ya (Ichikawa); Sakura-ndo: Kyo wa odote (Watanabe); Oedo no oni (Hagiwara); Bonbon (Saeki)

1948 Yurei akatsuki ni shisu (Makino); Yukyo no mure (Oosone); Koban-zame: Dogo-hen (Kinugasa)

1949 Koban-zame: Aizo-hen (Kinugasa); Heiji happy-aku-ya-cho (Saeki); Ashi o arrata otoko (Fuyushima); Koga-yashiki (Kinugasa); Hebihime dochu (Kimura); Zoku Hebihime dochu (Kimura); Fukei-zu (Makino) (short version of Fukei-zu and Zoku Fukei-zu, 1942)

1950 Kizudarake no otoko (Makino); Otomi to Yasuburo Parts I and II (Fuyushima) (as Yasaburo); Jogashima no ane (Tanaka); Senryo-hada (Fuyushima); Hito to nori (Tanaka); Oni azumi (Fuyushima); Beni-komori (Kinugasa)

1951 Ashura hangan (Mori); Tsuki no wataridori (Kinugasa); Zenigata Heiji (Mori) (title role); Meligetsu somato (Kinugasa); Orizuru-gasa (Fuyushima); Genji monogatari: Tale of Genji (Yoshimura) (as Hikari Genji); Tsuki kara kita otoko (Saeki); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Koibumi dochu (Fuyushima) (title role); Hebihime-sama (Kinugasa) (short version of Hebihime-sama and Zoku Hebihime-sama, 1940)

1952 Jirokichi goshi (Ito) (as Jirokichi); Shura-jo hibun: Soryu no maki (as Motomoto and Shin-nosuke); Hiu no maki (Kinugasa); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Jigoku no mon (Mori) (title role); Farrisode kyojo (Yasuda); Kantaro tsukiyo-uta (Tsaka) (as Kantaro); Daibutsu kaigen (Kinugasa) (as Kunihito); Fuun senryo-bune (Inagaki)

1953 Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Karakuri yashiki (Mori) (title role); Asama no mozu (Kinugasa); Hana no Kodo-kan (Mori); Shishi no za (Ito) (as Hoshio Yagoro); Hana no kenka-jo (Inuzuka); Jigokumon (Gate of Hell) (Kinugasa) (as Morito); Omatsuri Hanjiro (Inagaki) (as Hanjiro); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Konjiki no oookami (Mori) (title role)

1954 Hanano sandogasa (Inuzuka); Okiku to Harima (Ito) (as Aoyama Harima); Yoidore nito-ryu (Mori); Hana no nagawakizashi (Kinugasa); Shirazu no Yataro (Makita); Tekku bugyo (Kinugasa); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Yurei daimeyo (Hirozu) (title role); Chikamatsu monogatari (A Story from Chikamatsu; The Tale of the Crucified Lovers) (as Mehei)

1955 Itaro jishi (Tsaka); Nanatsu no kai no Ginji (Misumi); Jako yashiki (Tsaka); Bara wa ikatabika (Kinugasa); Tsubakuro-gasa (Tsaka); Tojuro no koi (Mori) (as Sakata Tojuro); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Doguro-kago (Tsaka) (title role); Nagasaki no yaro (Mori); Ore was Tokichiro (Mori)

1956 Hana no wataridori (Tsaka); Yoshinaka o meguru san-nin no onna (Kinugasa) (as Kiso Jiro Yoshinaka); Zangiku monogatari (Shima) (as Kikunosuke); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Shibi-jin-buro (Kado) (title role); Nezumikozou shinbikomi-hikae (Kado) (as Namu-zo); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Hito-ohada-gumo (Mori) (title role); Aizome-gasa (Kato); Tsukigata Hanpeita (Kinugasa) (title role)

1957 Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Madara-hebi (Kado) (title role); Nezumikozou shinbikomi-hikae: Ne-no-koku sango (Tsaka) (as Namu-zo); Genji monogatari: Ukifune (Kinugasa) (as Kaeru no kimi); Ninjo misu (Kato); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Megitsune yashiki (Kato) (title role); Naruto hicho (Kinugasa); Yuki no wataridori (Kato)

1958 Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Hachi-nin no hanayome (Makita) (title role); Yukyo gonin otoko (Kato); Edokko matsuri (Shima); Chushingura (Watanabe) (as Oshii Kuranosuke and Tamura); Inochi o kakeru otoko (Kato); Kuchibue o fuku wataridori (Tsaka); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Onibi doro (Kado) (title role); Hana no yoku-den (Yasuda); Nicherin o Mokodasha (Watanabe) (as Nichiren); Igano minatsuki; Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Yuki-onna no ashiato (Kado) (title role)

1959 Kagero-gasa (Misumi); Onna tokaizoku (Ito); Yamada Nagamasa Oju no tsurugi (Kado) (title role); Jirocho Fuji (Mori) (as Jirocho); Yotsuya kaidan (Misumi); Oyashiki-zame (Kato); Utamaro o meguru gonin no onna (Kinugasa) (as Utamaro); Furai monogatari: Ninkyo-hen (Watanabe); Seki no Yatappe (Kato) (title role)
1960  Futari no Musashi; Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Bijin-gumo (Misumi) (title role); Oeyama Shuten-doji (Tanaka); Zoku jirocho Fuji (Mori) (as Jirocho); San-nin no kaoyaka (Inoue); Hi-sen-ryo (Tanaka); Furai monogatari: Abare Hisha; IPpon-gatana dohyo-iri (Yasuda); Kyokaku harusame-gasa (Watanabe); San-kyodai no kettō (Tanaka)

1961  Hare-kosode (Yasuda); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Yoru no ennacho (Watanabe) (title role); Sakurada-mon (Nishiyama); Mito Komon umi o wataru (Watanabe); Kuroi sando-gasa (Nishiyama); Zenigata Heiji torimono-hikae: Bijin-zame (Misumi) (title role)

1962  Sabakareru Echizen no kami (Tanaka); Nakayoshi ondo Nippon ichi dayo (Inoue); Aoba-jo no oni (Misumi); Shin no shikotei (The Great Wall) (Tanaka)

1963  Yokino-jo henge (An Actor’s Revenge) (Ichikawa) (as Yokino-jo and Yamitaro); Edo mujo (Nishiyama)

Publications

By HASEGAWA: books—

Watashi no niju-nen.
Butai ginmaku rokuju-nen.

On HASEGAWA: book—

On HASEGAWA: article—

---

Kazuo Hasegawa, a handsome Kabuki star known as Chojiro Hayashi until 1938, attracted an enormous following as soon as he joined the Shochiku Studio. His romantic features and soft movements, which he learned from his training as an onnagata (female impersonator), thoroughly enchanted his fans. He studied with the director Teinosuke Kinugasa who had also been a Kabuki actor. Kinugasa understood this actor’s quality well, and continued to collaborate with him for several decades. Hasegawa also made countless swordplay films for the directors Fuyushima, Inuzuka, Inoue, Koishi, Hoshi, and Futakawa. Not content to rely on his Kabuki background, Hasegawa meticulously studied camera positions and lighting to understand how to present his attractive features most effectively in the film medium. For example, he consciously favored his left profile which was believed to be the better.

Among his 301 films, Hasegawa played period heroes such as samurais and lords, as well as detectives, actors, burglars, and gamblers. He most often played the familiar romantic type with high moral standards, struggling against injustice with the power of his sword. His acting style is elegant, with well-paced movement and delivery of dialogue. One of his most successful roles was in Kinugasa’s Yokino-jo-henge in 1935–36, which Hasegawa remade for Kon Ichikawa in 1963. Drawn from the Kabuki theater are such elements as the complicated plot, the actor playing multiple roles (Hasegawa plays the vengeful Kabuki actor Yukino-jo, his mother, and the Robin Hood-like burglar who assists the actor in obtaining vengeance), as well as the concept of a play-within-a-play. The critical and popular success of this film led to the production of several sequels, all using Hasegawa.

Hasegawa’s contemporary roles include romantic lovers in the Shochiku Studio’s light-comic shomin engi (ordinary people’s life) film genre and in the Toho Studio’s wartime romances set in China, in which he played a Japanese man loved by a Chinese girl. His other successful roles include those of a doomed lover in Mizoguchi's Chikamatsu monogatari, which brought him international recognition, and his role as a brave warrior in Kinugasa’s Jigoka-mon. These films were energetically exported under the auspices of the Daiei Studio, for which Hasegawa was the main star of the 1950s.

—Kyoko Hirano

---

HAWKE, Ethan

Nationality: American. Born: Austin, Texas, 6 November 1970.
Education: Attended New York University; studied acting at McCarter Theatre, Princeton, New Jersey; Carnegie Mellon University.
Family: Married the actress Uma Thurman, 1 May 1998; one daughter.

Films as Actor:

- 1985  Explorers (Dante) (as Ben Crandall)
- 1989  Dad (Goldberg) (as Billy); Dead Poets Society (Weir) (as Todd Anderson)
- 1991  Mystery Date (Wacks) (as Tom McHugh); A Midnight Clear (Gordon) (as Will Knot); White Fang (Kleiser) (as Jack); Rich in Love (Beresford) (as Wayne Frobiness)
- 1992  Waterland (Gyllenhaal) (as Mathew Price)
- 1994  Reality Bites (Stiller) (as Troy Dyer); Quiz Show (Redford) (as Don Quixote Student [uncredited]); Floundering (McCarthy) (as Jimmy); White Fang II: Myth of the White Wolf (Olin) (as Jack Conroy [uncredited])
- 1995  Before Sunrise (Linklater) (as Jesse); Search and Destroy (Nicollos) (as Roger)
- 1997  Gattaca (Salle) (as Vincent Freeman/Jerome Morrow)
- 1998  Great Expectations (Cuarón) (as Finnegan Bell); Newton Boys, The (Linklater) (as Jess Newton); The Velocity of Gary (Ireland) (as Nat)
- 1999  Joe the King (Whaley) (as Len Coles); Snow Falling on Cedars (Hicks) (as Ishmael Chambers)
- 2000  Hamlet (Almereyda) (as Hamlet)
Films as Director:

2000  The Last Word on Paradise

Publications

By HAWKE: book—

The Hottest State, Boston, 1996.

By HAWKE: articles—

Interview in Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 37, no. 2, 1995.
Interview in Interview (New York), April 1998.

On HAWKE: articles—

Newsweek, 18 January 1993.
Times (London), 29 April 1993.

* * * *

Ethan Hawke and River Phoenix were born the same year and made their debuts in the same film, Explorers, at the age of fifteen. Given the latter’s meteoric rise to fame, it is perhaps surprising that Hawke (admittedly in the lead role) makes by far the stronger impression—this under a director not noted for his sensitivity to actors (or indeed for much else). Immediately, the film establishes the basic rudiments of his persona/personality (his honesty as an actor makes it impossible to distinguish the two): idealism, accompanied by a bright and eager intelligence; sensitivity; something of the “dreamer” (literally, in this first film); vulnerability; and a certain defensiveness and desire to please. The permutations of these attributes will be the defining factors of Hawke’s career to date.

If his subsequent work invites one to add a further component, it is reticence. Hawke never seems to be forcing himself on the spectator’s attention, he never seems to be saying “Look at me, I’m acting,” he never seeks to grab the limelight from his fellow players or steal a scene. But if we respond to such courtesy with an attentive courtesy... of our own, we shall notice all kinds of things going on, subtleties of response, of inflection, of expression. He is not conventionally handsome but he has a most expressive and interesting face; from early in his career he seems to have wanted to distinguish himself from the seemingly endless parade of "teen idols" who come and go in modern Hollywood cinema with such monotonous and predictable regularity.

Three further teenage roles deserve mention. In Dead Poets Society he makes the most of an underdeveloped supporting role, as businessman Ted Danson’s estranged son, about to drop out of school and live on a five-person mixed-gender commune in Mexico. Without much help from the script he manages to communicate the character’s gentle strength, pleasure in being alive, and determination to live as he chooses, so that his share in helping his father rediscover his full humanity is convincing. Dead Poets Society gave him the opportunity to project idealism and integrity at whatever personal cost. The generally overlooked Mystery Date is an unexpectedly enjoyable light entertainment somewhat reminiscent of those Bob Hope comedy-thrillers of the 1940s in which, through mistaken identity, an innocent, naïve, and seemingly somewhat helpless young man becomes sucked into a chain of crazy, comic, and violent misadventures, comes out on top, and gets the girl. In place of Hope’s smartass wisecracks, we have Hawke’s vulnerability and panic balanced by his spontaneous inventiveness and resilience. The film enables him to demonstrate a real gift for comedy. He was twenty when he made Mystery Date, but playing seventeen. His adult career really begins the same year with Floundering, about the persecution of Japanese American rugby team whose plane crashed in the Andes, must have appeared irresistible, but Frank Marshall’s film is populated by a set of walking cliches mouthing more of the same. Hawke’s role is a self-critique of its narrator.

Yet, if one forgets Dickens (which the film effectively helps one do), is the subject in fact so big? David Lean thought it was, and made one of the most overrated films in the history of cinema. Cuaron makes a film, rather than an "adaptation," conceiving the whole in Minnellian terms of "camera choreography" but at the same time getting splendid performances from his players. The protagonist (no longer "Pip") is beautifully realized by Hawke in a characteristically thoughtful and disciplined assumption.

Yet Great Expectations remains above all a director’s film. Hawke’s finest personal achievements to date are, significantly, in ensemble movies in which performance is crucial but interaction even more so. Alive was of course, on paper at least, an ensemble film, but there is no interaction among the actors whatever: each speaks his line and you pass on to the next. Reality Bites is far too treasurable to be allowed to slip into oblivion just because its concern with Generation X is currently considered dated. No Big Subject here: just five characters trying to react honestly to a culture they feel has failed them, or just five admirable actors playing with or against or off each other with a quite magical aliveness and energy. Hawke is superb as the group’s ‘‘drop-out’’ a role that allows expression of a side of his persona seldom visible, a bitterness and cruelty revealed as a defence against pain and extreme vulnerability.

Before Sunrise came out in 1995, and a year later Hawke published his novel The Hottest State. Placed side by side they complement each other perfectly: both are studies of a single man/woman relationship, tentatively successful in the film, disasters in the novel; both are centrally concerned with the problems of gender, the problems, today, for young men and women trying to meet, understand, and accept each other. One senses that Hawke is himself closely involved with each male protagonist, and it is therefore most commendable that the novel, written in the first person, is essentially a self-critique of its narrator. Before Sunrise is one of the cinema’s perfect films. Hawke and his costar Julie Delpy collaborated on the script with Richard Linklater and his screenwriter Kim Krizan, supplying some of their own dialogue; the film belongs to the four of them, carrying the concept of ensemble to its ultimate. Here everything jells, and the result is one of the touchstones of screen acting, every interchange seeming as much lived as acted. Hawke also shines, in a more comedic role, in The Newton Boys, but the film offers fewer opportunities for intimacy.

Two cameo appearances should be noted, as extensions of his range. His five-minute turn in Floundering offers a devastatingly intense and painful rendering of hopeless drug addiction. His slightly larger role as a child’s counsellor in Joe the King was shot in a single day, with the character substantially reconceived and rewritten (in conjunction with his long-time friend director Frank Whaley), intelligently transformed from a somewhat cliched "caring liberal" to a tired and jaded man incapable of offering the title kid much help. In 2000, Hawke began work on his first film as director.

Hamlet provides the perfect climax to this celebration of Hawke’s abilities. Opinions will vary on the success of Almereyda’s audacious modern-dress adaptation (it seems to me brilliant and consistently riveting), but surely few will wish to dispute the success of Hawke’s performance. His Hamlet—painfully sensitive and vulnerable, deeply disturbed, the borderline between feigned and real insanity increasingly blurred—is the best on film to date, Shakespeare’s dialogue (what a wonderful screenwriter he has proved to be!) made to seem completely natural without harm to its poetic strength, a Hamlet... equally free of Olivier’s narcissism or Branagh’s alienating self-consciousness. The centuries of encrustation that have produced what we know (and dread) as “Shakespearean” acting disintegrate before him; he plays the role as if born for it.

—Robin Wood

HAWKINS, Jack

Films as Actor:

1930 Birds of Prey (The Perfect Alibi) (Dean) (as Alfred)
1932 The Lodger (The Phantom Friend) (Elvey) (as Joe Martin)
1933 The Good Companions (Saville) (as Albert); The Lost Chord (Elvey) (as Dr. Jim Selby); I Lived without You (Elvey) (as Mort); The Jewel (Denham) (as Peter Roberts); A Shot in the Dark (Pearson) (as Normal Paul)
1934 Autumn Crocus (Dean) (as Alaric Craven); Death at Broadcasting House (Denham) (as Herbert Evans)
1935 Peg of Old Drury (Wilcox) (as Michael O’Taffe)
1937 Beauty and the Barge (Edwards) (as Lt. Seton Boyne); The Frog (Raymond) (as Capt. Gordon)
1938 Who Goes Next? (Elvey) (as Capt. Beck); A Royal Divorce (Raymond) (as Capt. Charles)
1939 Murder Will Out (Neill) (as Stamp); Hamlet (Boisen) (documentary on Kronborg production of play)
1940 The Flying Squad (Brenon) (as Mark McGill)
1942 The Next of Kin (Dickinson) (as Major)
1948 The Fallen Idol (Reed) (as Detective Ames); Bonnie Prince Charlie (Kimmings) (as Lord George Murray); The Small Back Room (Powell and Pressburger) (as Waring)
1950 State Secret (The Great Manhunt) (Gilliat) (as Col. Galcon); The Black Rose (Hathaway) (as Tristram Griffen); The Elusive Pimpernel (The Fighting Pimpernel) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Prince of Wales); The Adventurers (The Great Adventure) (MacDonald) (as Pieter Brandt)
1951 No Highway (No Highway in the Sky) (Koster) (as Denis Scott); Angels One Five (O’Ferrall) (as Tiger Small)
1952 Home at Seven (Murder on Monday) (Richardson) (as Dr. Sparling); Mandy (Crash of Silence) (Mackendrick) (as Richard Searle); The Planter’s Wife (Outpost in Malaya) (Annakin) (as Jim Frazer); The Cruel Sea (Frend) (as Lt. Commander Ericson)
1953 Twice upon a Time (Pressburger) (as Dr. Matthews); Malta Story (Hurst) (as Air Officer Commanding); The Intruder (Hamilton) (as Wolf Merton); Front Page Story (Parry) (as John Grant); Prince Philip (Thomas—short) (as narrator)
1954 The Seekers (Land of Fury) (Annakin) (as Philip Wayne)
1955 The Prisoner (Glennville) (as Interrogator); Land of the Pharaohs (Hawks) (as Pharaoh); Touch and Go (The Light Touch) (Truman) (as Jim Fletcher)
1956 The Long Arm (The Third Key) (Frend) (as Supt. Tom Halliday); The Man in the Sky (Decision against Time) (Crichton) (as John Mitchell)
1957 Fortune Is a Woman (She Played with Fire) (Gilliatt) (as Oliver Branwell); The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean) (as Major Warden); Battle for Britain (Ashwood and Lloyd—short) (as narrator)
1958 Gideon’s Day (Gideon of Scotland Yard) (Ford) (as Inspector George Gideon); The Two-Headed Spy (de Toth) (as General Alex Scottland)
1959 Ben-Hur (Wyler) (as Quintus Arrius); The League of Gentlemen (Dearden) (as Norman Hyde)
1961 Two Loves (Spinster) (Walters) (as W. W. J. Abercrombie); La Fayette (Dréville) (as General Cornwallis)
1962 Five Finger Exercise (Mann) (as Stanley Harrington); Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (as General Allenby); Rampage (Karlson) (as Otto Abbot)
1963 Zulu (Enfield) (as the Rev. Otto Witt)
1964 The Third Secret (Crichton) (as Sir Frederick Belline); Guns at Batasi (Guillermín) (as Lt. Col. John Deal); Masquerade (Dearden) (as Col. Drexel); Lord Jim (Brooks) (as Marlow)
1965 Victory at Yorktown (Dréville—short; reedited version of La Fayette battle sequence, 1961) (as General Cornwallis); Judith (Mann) (as Major Lawton)
1966 Danger Grows Wild (The Poppy Is Also a Flower) (Young) (as General Behar); The Party’s Over (Hamilton) (+ exec co-pr
1967 Great Catherine (Fleming) (as Sir George Gorse)
1968 Shalako (Dmytryk) (as Sir Charles Daggett)
1969 Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Emperor Franz Josef); Monte Carlo or Bust! (Those Daring Young Men in Their Jaunty Jalopies) (Annakin) (as Count Levinovitch); Twinky (Lola) (as Judge Millington Draper)
1970 The Adventures of Gerard (Skolimowski) (as Millefleurs); Waterloo (Bondarchuk)
1971 Jane Eyre (Mann—for TV) (as Brocklehurst); When Eight Bells Toll (Périer); Nicholas and Alexandra (Schaffner); Kidnapped (Mann) (as Captain Hoseason); The Beloved (The Sin; Restless) (Cosmatos)
Jack Hawkins (left) in Bridge on the River Kwai

1972 Young Winston (Attenborough); Habrichka el hashemersh (Niet!; Escape to the Sun) (Golan)
1973 The Last Lion (de Witt); Theatre of Blood (Hickox); Tales That Witness Madness (Francis)

Publications

By HAWKINS: book—

On HAWKINS: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Spring 1994.

Jack Hawkins’ rise to stardom in the late 1940s and early 1950s, after more than a decade in unimportant supporting roles, is explained largely by his ability to embody a cultural myth that, in postwar Britain, was fast becoming outmoded and could be presented only as the object of nostalgic longing. With his self-effacing restraint and yet obvious confidence, Hawkins easily suggested that public school pluck which British war documentaries and films had presented as the Empire’s salvation during World War II.

By the 1950s, of course, that stiff upper-lipped and upper-class figure clearly belonged to the past. Hence Hawkins evoked him in films that celebrated national moments of triumph. As the long-suffering corvette captain in The Cruel Sea, Hawkins endures the dullness and horrors of war, and rises to its challenges with a determination to do the job right. In David Lean’s The Bridge on the River Kwai...
Kwai, Hawkins’s gentleman officer interrupts his scholarly career to do his bit in Burma, only momentarily losing his control when faced with the destructive paradoxes of war.

Since the character he created did belong to the past, it was perhaps inevitable that Hawkins remained uninvolved with the movement of British film toward “kitchen sink” realism in the late 1950s. Hawkins’s policeman in Gideon of Scotland Yard is a romanticized image of the kindly hobby, a lower-middle-class figure who does his appointed job without complaint. Instead, Hawkins found work in those costume or historical epics produced in such great numbers during the 1960s on both sides of the Atlantic. He played character roles in films such as Ben-Hur (as a ramrod-stiff Roman admiral) and Nicholas and Alexandra as well as different incarnations of the upper-crust Englishman in Waterloo, Jane Eyre, and Young Winston, films whose mythic quality was certainly enhanced by his presence.

The most memorable of these always competent and sometimes distinguished performances is his role (once again for David Lean) as General Allenby in Lawrence of Arabia, a film that attacks the notion of English reserve. Here Hawkins provides ironic contrast for the spectacularly successful self-actualization of Lawrence’s megalomaniac; Hawkins’s Allenby is an empire builder who must resign himself, somewhat bitterly, to the anonymity of his role, to obeying rules both written and unwritten.

—R. Barton Palmer

HAWN, Goldie

Films as Director:

1997 Hope (+ pr)

Films as Executive Producer:

1990 My Blue Heaven (Ross) (co-exec pr)
1995 Something to Talk About (Hallström)

Publications

By HAWN: articles—

On HAWN: books—

Films as Actress:

1968 The One and Only, Genuine, Original Family Band (O’Herlihy) (as giggly girl)
1969 Cactus Flower (Saks) (as Toni Simmons)
1970 There’s a Girl in My Soup (Boulting) (as Marion)
1971 $ (Dollars, The Heist) (Richard Brooks) (as Dawn Divine)
1972 Butterflies Are Free (Katselas) (as Jill)
1974 The Sugarland Express (Spielberg) (as Lou Jean Poplin); The Girl from Petrovka (Miller) (as Oktyabrina)
1975 Shampoo (Ashby) (as Jill)
1976 The Duchess and the Dirtwater Fox (Frank) (as Amanda Quaid)
1978 Foul Play (Higgins) (as Gloria)
1979 Viaggio con Anita (Travels with Anita; Lovers and Liars) (Monicelli) (as Anita)
1980 Private Benjamin (Zieff) (title role, + exec pr); Seems Like Old Times (Jay Sandrich) (as Glenda)
1982 Best Friends (Jewison) (as Paula McCullen)
1984 Swing Shift (Jonathan Demme) (as Kay Walsh, + pr); Protocol (Ross) (as Sunny Davis, + exec pr)
1986 Wildcats (Ritchie) (as Molly McGrath)
1987 Overboard (Garry Marshall) (as Joanna Stayton/”Annie Proffitt”)
1990 Bird on a Wire (Badham) (as Marianne Graves)
1991 Deceived (Harris) (as Adrienne Saunders); Here’s Looking at You, Warner Brothers (Guenette—for TV) (as herself)
1992 Housesitter (Oz) (as Gwen); Death Becomes Her (Zemeckis) (as Helen Sharp); Crisscross (Menges) (as Tracy Cross)
1996 The First Wives Club (P. J. Hogan)
1998 In My Life (Benson) (as herself)
1999 The Out-of-Towners (Weisman) (as Nancy Clark); A Salute to Dustin Hoffman (Gowers) (as guest)
2000 Town and Country (Chelsom)
But few, save industry insiders, realize that during the 1980s Goldie Hawn had become one of the most powerful producers in Hollywood, occupying a rung of power below only the likes of a Steven Spielberg or a George Lucas. Private Benjamin proved her mettle; Swing Shift and Protocol, while fascinating films, failed at the box office.

The remarkable fact is that Hawn, with her image as the ‘‘dizzy blond,’’ was able to acquire so much clout in the first place. In the 1960s few women were able to make their way from television fame to stardom on the silver screen. Goldie Hawn’s Emmy-winning work on the hit Laugh-In changed that, launching her movie career, as well as introducing the world to the considerable talents of Lily Tomlin.

Goldie Hawn made her first major motion picture count. She won an Oscar, as best supporting actress, for Cactus Flower in 1969. By the early 1970s she was considered a rising young star. Her performance in Steven Spielberg’s The Sugarland Express brought her notice among the rising young talents behind the camera; her fame spread because of the millions paid to see Hal Ashby’s Shampoo. But Goldie Hawn aspired to gain control of her projects.

After a disappointment producing The Girl from Petrovka, her break came with Private Benjamin for which she served as executive producer and star. Private Benjamin is the tale of a bubbleheaded, spoiled Jewish American Princess who enlists in the army and changes into a strong, mature woman. This was tailor-made for Hawn by Hawn, made a lot of money, and was eventually turned into an short-lived television series in which she did not star.

But being a producer was fraught with peril. Wildcats, directed by Michael Ritchie, has Hawn as a divorced mother of two who asks to become the football coach and with grit takes on the job for an inner-city Chicago high school. Eventually she earns the team’s respect and in the end coaches the team to a win in the big game (over the high school she worked at) and “proves” that women can coach football as well as men. Hawn the producer seems to be satisfied with obvious comic situations; it was hard to locate fresh “Goldie Hawn” vehicles.

Yet there were major exceptions. Her best work proved very, very good. For example, as the creative force behind Swing Shift, released in 1984 through Warner Brothers, producer Hawn and director Jonathan Demme crafted a complex tale of the female workers in a defense plant during World War II. The reaction of a Los Angeles, emerging into a mature city, and the sexual tension of the war—women doing traditionally men’s roles—was contrast with the difficulties of maintaining relationships near and far away. This is a rare Hollywood film told from a woman’s point of view. But therein comes the contradiction. Swing Shift was not what the public thought of a typical “Goldie Hawn” film and the movie quietly disappeared into the world of home video.

The contradiction can be fully appreciated by contrasting Swing Shift with a more typical Hawn-produced farce, Protocol. With a more conventional director, Herbert Ross, and a promising screenplay by Buck Henry, we have a scatterbrained “Goldie” (here named Sunny) who gets caught up in the world of politics in our nation’s capitol. Critics called it, appropriately, “Goldie Goes to Washington.” The pace was rapid fire, the jokes sometimes offensive (in particular to Arabs), but the laughs were genuine. In the end the critics found the film contrived. The film also made not as much money as expected and so the star of Goldie Hawn, the perpetual scatterbrained, blond smarter than she seemed at first glance, was giving way to a 45-year-old woman with few available roles.

The 1990s have not been good to Hawn, with little success associated with Deceived, Crisscross, or Housesitter. Her work as co-executive producer of My Blue Heaven also did not change the downward direction of her acting career. The 1990s were better on television with An Evening with Bette, Cher, Goldie, Meryl, Olivia, Lily and Robin, for ABC, and regular appearances on the annual television with 17.

Films as Actor:

1941 Virginia (Griffith); Bahama Passage (Griffith)
1947 Blaze of Noon (Farrow); Variety Girl (Marshall)
1949 El Paso (Foster); Manhandled (Foster)
1950 The Asphalt Jungle (Huston) (as Dix Handley)
1951 Journey into Light (Heisler); Flaming Feather (Enright); Denver and Rio Grande (Haskin)
1952 The Golden Hawk (Salkow); Hellgate (Warren); Flat Top (Eagles of the Fleet) (Seldner); The Star (Heisler); Kansas Pacific (Nazarro)
1953 Take Me to Town (Sirk); Fighter Attack (Seldner)
1954 Crime Wave (The City Is Dark) (De Toth); Johnny Guitar (Ray) (title role); Prince Valiant (Hathaway); Arrow in the Dust (Seldner); Naked Alibi (Hopper); Suddenly (Allen); So Big (Wise); Timberjack (Kane); Battle Taxi (Strock)
1955 The Eternal Sea (Auer); Shotgun (Seldner); The Last Command (Lloyd); Top Gun (Nazarro)
1956 The Come-On (Birdwell); The Killing (Kubrick); Crime of Passion (Oswald); Five Steps to Danger (Kesler)
1957 The Iron Sheriff (Salkow); Valerie (Oswald); Gun Battle at Monterrey (Hittleman and Franklin); Zero Hour (Bartlett)
1958 Terror in a Texas Town (Lewis); Ten Days to Tulara (Sherman)
1963 Dr. Strangelove, or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (Kubrick) (as Gen. Jack D. Ripper)
1964 A Carol for Another Christmas (Mankiewicz—for TV)
1969 Sweet Hunters (Guerra); Hard Contract (Pogostin) (as Michael Carlson)
1970 Loving (Kershner) (as Lepridon)
1971 Le Saut de l’ange (Cobra) (Boisset); Le Grand Départ (Taysse)
1972 The Godfather (Coppola) (as McCluskey)
1973 The Long Goodbye (Altman); The Final Program (The Last Days of Man on Earth) (Fuest)
1974 Deadly Strangers (Hayers)
1975 Cipola Colt (Cry Onion) (Castellari); Bertolucci secondo il cinema (Il cinema secondo Bertolucci) (Giuseppe Bertolucci—doc)
1976 1900 (Novecento) (Bernardo Bertolucci) (as Leo Dalco)

HAYDEN, Sterling

Films as Actor:

1941 Virginia (Griffith); Bahama Passage (Griffith)
1947 Blaze of Noon (Farrow); Variety Girl (Marshall)
1949 El Paso (Foster); Manhandled (Foster)
1950 The Asphalt Jungle (Huston) (as Dix Handle)
1951 Journey into Light (Heisler); Flaming Feather (Enright); Denver and Rio Grande (Haskin)
1952 The Golden Hawk (Salkow); Hellgate (Warren); Flat Top (Eagles of the Fleet) (Seldner); The Star (Heisler); Kansas Pacific (Nazarro)
1953 Take Me to Town (Sirk); Fighter Attack (Seldner)
1954 Crime Wave (The City Is Dark) (De Toth); Johnny Guitar (Ray) (title role); Prince Valiant (Hathaway); Arrow in the Dust (Seldner); Naked Alibi (Hopper); Suddenly (Allen); So Big (Wise); Timberjack (Kane); Battle Taxi (Strock)
1955 The Eternal Sea (Auer); Shotgun (Seldner); The Last Command (Lloyd); Top Gun (Nazarro)
1956 The Come-On (Birdwell); The Killing (Kubrick); Crime of Passion (Oswald); Five Steps to Danger (Kesler)
1957 The Iron Sheriff (Salkow); Valerie (Oswald); Gun Battle at Monterrey (Hittleman and Franklin); Zero Hour (Bartlett)
1958 Terror in a Texas Town (Lewis); Ten Days to Tulara (Sherman)
1963 Dr. Strangelove, or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (Kubrick) (as Gen. Jack D. Ripper)
1964 A Carol for Another Christmas (Mankiewicz—for TV)
1969 Sweet Hunters (Guerra); Hard Contract (Pogostin) (as Michael Carlson)
1970 Loving (Kershner) (as Lepridon)
1971 Le Saut de l’ange (Cobra) (Boisset); Le Grand Départ (Taysse)
1972 The Godfather (Coppola) (as McCluskey)
1973 The Long Goodbye (Altman); The Final Program (The Last Days of Man on Earth) (Fuest)
1974 Deadly Strangers (Hayers)
1975 Cipola Colt (Cry Onion) (Castellari); Bertolucci secondo il cinema (Il cinema secondo Bertolucci) (Giuseppe Bertolucci—doc)
1976 1900 (Novecento) (Bernardo Bertolucci) (as Leo Dalco)
Throughout his career, Sterling Hayden maintained that acting in film was only a means to an end, getting together enough money to buy a boat and go to sea. The claim has not been mere studio hype:
from 1941 until the early 1980s Hayden worked only enough to finance his ocean voyages which he chronicled in his best-selling autobiography Wanderer, a book that says much about life and ships and little about movies.

Though he repeatedly denied his talent as an actor, he made several screen appearances that display his rare capacity for erasing the line between acting and being. Playing such roles as the hired gunman who dies trying to get back to his horses in Kentucky in The Asphalt Jungle, the hardboiled leader of a doomed gang of race track thieves in The Killing, and the mad General Ripper who destroys the world in Dr. Strangelove, Hayden has become fixed in the public mind as the doomed man of conviction, the man who lives and dies by a bizarre and somewhat perverted moral code.

His portrayals in those three films highlight a career that saw Hayden move from quiet, handsome leading man to weathered character actor. In his later films, most notably The Long Goodbye, Loving, and Hard Contract, he is a bearded, self-confident, and possibly mad Ahab who has forgotten that the meaning in his life came from searching for the whale.

Hayden, who in later years lived in a barge on the Seine, was always the uneasy hero in a series of Westerns and crime films, most at Republic. Hayden’s early screen characters might hold a grudge or have a goal, but they just didn’t want to talk about it. His more recent characters want to do nothing else but talk about their lost goals and dreams.

Perhaps it was his unconventional lifestyle that led directors to seek him out for the slightly neurotic heroes of films in the 1950s. The Asphalt Jungle and The Killing are good examples, but even more striking is his appearance in eccentric B pictures such as The Harder They Fall. In this film Hayden plays a seaman who finds himself in a shootout with a gunman. The twist is that instead of a gun Hayden carries a harpoon. In Valerie, directed by Gerd Oswald, who directed Marlon Brando in The Wild One, Hayden played a Westerner who is viewed in radically different ways by the witnesses at a trial for murder. In this variation on Rashomon, Hayden’s character proves to be as much of an enigma as the actor himself.

It is somewhat ironic that Hayden’s most visible performance was in The Godfather as the corrupt policeman who is shot by Michael Corleone (Al Pacino). In the film Hayden’s character is neither mad nor misunderstood. He is coolly and cruelly corrupt, a chilling facet of the Hayden persona that was seldom explored.

—Stuart Kaminsky

HAYWARD, Susan

Nationality: American. Born: Edythe Marrener in Brooklyn, New York, 30 June 1919. Education: Attended Girls’ Commercial High School, Brooklyn. Family: Married the actor Jess Barker, 1944 (divorced 1954), twin sons Timothy and Gregory. Career: 1937—photographer’s model in New York; option from David Selznick led to film debut, then a short Warner Brothers contract; 1939—contract with Paramount, and films by Paramount and other studios during the next few years; 1945—signed with independent producer Walter Wanger; 1949—contract with 20th Century-Fox; 1959—formed own production company, Carrollton, Inc.; 1969—stage role in Mame; 1970s—worked in TV. Awards: Best Actress, Cannes Film Festival, for I’ll Cry Tomorrow, 1955; Best Actress, Academy Award and Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for I Want to Live, 1958. Died: Of a brain tumor, 14 March 1975.

Films as Actress:

1937 Hollywood Hotel (Berkeley) (as starlet at table)
1938 The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak); The Sisters (Litvak) (as telephone operator); Comet over Broadway (Berkeley) (as amateur actor); Campus Cinderella (Smith) (as coed); Girls on Probation (McGann) (as Gloria Adams)
1939 Beau Geste (Wellman) (as Isobel Rivers); Our Leading Citizen (Santell) (as Judith Schofield); One Thousand Dollars a Touchdown (Hogan) (as Betty McGlen)
1941 Among the Living (Heisler) (as Millie Pickens); Six Hops (Sanley) (as Carol Hopkins); Adam Had Four Sons (Ratoff) (as Hester Stoddard)
1942 Reap the Wild Wind (C. B. DeMille) (as Drusilla Alston); The Forest Rangers (Marshall) (as Tana Mason); I Married a Witch (Clair) (as Estelle Masterson); A Letter from Bataan (Pine—short); Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall) (as Genevieve)
1943 Hit Parade of 1943 (Rogell) (as Jill Wright); Young and Willing (E. Griffith) (as Kate Benson); Jack London (Santell) (as Charmain Kittredge)
1944 Skirmish on the Home Front (short); And Now Tomorrow (Pichel) (as Janice Blair); The Fighting Seabees (Ludwig) (as Constance Chesley); The Hairy Ape (Santell) (as Mildred Douglas)
1946 Deadline at Dawn (Clurman) (as June Goff); Canyon Passage (Tourneur) (as Lucy Overtire)
1947 Smash-Up: The Story of a Woman (Heisler) (as Angie Evans); They Won’t Believe Me (Pichel) (as Verna Carlson); The Lost Moment (Gabel) (as Tina Bordereau)
1948 Tap Roots (Marshall) (as Morna Dabney); The Saxon Charm (Binyon) (as Janet Busch)
1949 Tulsa (Heisler) (as Cherokee Lanning); House of Strangers (Mankiewicz) (as Irene Bennett); My Foolish Heart (Robson) (as Eloise Winters)
1951 I’d Climb the Highest Mountain (King) (as Mary Elizabeth Eden Thompson); Rawhide (Hathaway) (as Vinnie Holt); David and Bathsheba (King) (as Bathsheba); I Can Get It for You Wholesale (Gordon) (as Harriet Boyd)
1952 With a Song in My Heart (Lang) (as Jane Froman); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (as Helen); The Lusty Men (Ray) (as Louise Merritt)
1953 The President’s Lady (Levin) (as Rachel Donalson Robards); White Witch Doctor (Hathaway) (as Ellen Burton)
1954 Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves) (as Messalina); Garden of Evil (Hathaway) (as Leah Fuller)
1955 Untamed (King) (as Katie O’Neill); Soldier of Fortune (Dmytryk) (as Jane Hoyt); I’ll Cry Tomorrow (Mann) (as Lillian Roth)
1956 The Conqueror (Powell) (as Borta)
1957 Top Secret Affair (Potter) (as Dottie Peale)
1958 I Want to Live (Wise) (as Barbara Graham)
1959 Woman Obsessed (Hathaway) (as Mary Sharron); Thunder in the Sun (Rouse) (as Gabrielle Dauphin)
Susan Hayward (third from right) in The Hairy Ape

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Role(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Marriage-Go-Round</td>
<td>(W. Lang) (as Content Delville)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Ada</td>
<td>(Mann) (title role); Back Street (Miller) (as Rae Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>I Thank a Fool</td>
<td>(Stevens) (as Christine Allison)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Stolen Hours</td>
<td>(Petrie) (as Laura Dember)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Where Love Has Gone</td>
<td>(Dmytryk) (as Valerie Hayden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>The Honey Pot</td>
<td>(Mankiewicz) (as Mrs. “Lone Star” Crockett Sheridan); Think Twentieth (Fleischer—short); Valley of the Dolls (Robson) (as Helen Lawson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Heat of Anger</td>
<td>(D. Taylor—for TV) (as Jessie Fitzgerald); The Revengers (Daniel Mann) (as Elizabeth Reilly); Say Goodbye, Maggie Cole (J. Taylor—for TV) (title role)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On HAYWARD: books—

On HAYWARD: articles—

* * *

Susan Hayward’s career was in certain respects quite curious. Few stars of her stature have appeared in so few interesting films or worked so seldom with distinguished directors (Canyon Passage, The Lusty Men . . . except from the viewpoint of Hayward’s intrinsic interest there is really not much else to salvage). Considering the conditions within which female stars functioned in the classical period, the personality itself presents difficulties: abrasive, aggressive, intractable, it is not surprising that she took so long to become established, for years playing “other woman” roles (Forest Rangers, I Married a Witch) or being relegated to insipid or underdeveloped minor characters (Reap the Wild Wind); nor is it surprising that her major star roles tended to the solo tour de force rather than to the romantic love story (I’ll Cry Tomorrow, I Want to Live).

Untamed is perhaps the ideal Hayward title: her personality at all points resists the “taming” represented by the traditional Hollywood happy ending, the subordination of female desire to male desire, the woman’s surrender of her autonomy. Her two finest films make interesting and contrasted use of her intractability. The “happy ending” of Canyon Passage (one of the most underestimated of all Westerns) teams her with a “wanderer hero” (Dana Andrews) who equally refuses the confines of domesticity. Nicholas Ray’s use of her in The Lusty Men is, on the contrary, fascinating in its perversity: her aggressiveness is allowed its full expression (including rage and physical violence) but exclusively in the interests of home and settling.

It is again not surprising that the “taming” of Hayward took, in her most celebrated roles, extreme and drastic forms. The punishments that characterize her career begin early: already in The Forest Rangers the “happy ending” (the union of Fred MacMurray and Paulette Goddard at Hayward’s expense) requires that she be brutally assaulted with a fire hose. Most striking is the recurrent burden of alcoholism imposed on the Hayward characters (Smash Up, My Foolish Heart, I’ll Cry Tomorrow); but she is also crippled in With a Song in My Heart and (most extremely) executed in the electric chair in I Want to Live.

—Robin Wood

HAYWORTH, Rita

Nationality: American. Born: Margarita Carmen Cansino in New York City, 17 October 1918. Education: Attended Hamilton High School, and Carthay School, Los Angeles. Family: Married 1) Edward C. Judson, 1936 (divorced 1942); 2) the director and actor Orson Welles, 1943 (divorced 1948), daughter: Rebecca; 3) Prince Ali Khan, 1949 (divorced 1953), daughter: Princess Yasmin; 4) the singer Dick Haymes, 1953 (divorced 1955); 5) the producer James Hill, 1958 (divorced 1959), daughter: Princess Yasmin; 6) the producer John Huston, 1960 (divorced 1968); 7) the producer Mike Romanoff, 1968 (divorced 1973), daughter: Prince Samira; 8) the producer Allen C. Gordon, 1975 (divorced 1981). Career: 1926—film debut with her family group The Dancing Cansinos in La Fiesta; 1932—professional stage debut in Los Angeles; 1934–35—dancer with her father at Foreign Club, Tijuana, Mexico, and on California gambling boat; 1935—adult film debut in Dante’s Inferno, then one-year contract with Fox; 1937—contract with Columbia; 1958—freelance acting career began with Separate Tables, and continued into 1970s. Died: In New York City, 14 May 1987.

Films as Actress:

(as Rita Cansino)

1926 La Fiesta (short) (as Anna Case)
1934 Cruz diable (The Devil’s Cross) (De Fuentes)
1935 Under the Pampas Moon (Tinling) (as Carmen); Charlie Chan in Egypt (King) (as Nayda); Dante’s Inferno (Lachman) (as speciality dancer); Paddy O’Day (Seiler) (as Tamana Petrovich); Piernas de seda (Silk Legs) (Boland)
1936 Human Cargo (Dwan) (as Carmen Zorro); Meet Nero Wolfe (Biberman) (as Maria Maningula); Rebellion (Lady from Frisco) (Shores) (as Paula Castillo); A Message to Garcia (Marshall)
1937 Trouble in Texas (Bradbury) (as Carmen); Old Louisianna (Treason) (Willat) (as Angela Gonzales); Hit the Saddle (Wright) (as Rita)

(as Rita Hayworth)

1937 Criminals of the Air (Coleman) (as Rita); Girls Can Play (Hillyer) (as Sue Collins); The Shadow (The Circus Shadow) (Coleman) (as Mary Gillespie); The Game That Kills (Lederman) (as Betty Holland); Paid to Dance (Coleman) (as Betty Morom)
1938 Who Killed Gail Preston? (Barsha) (title role); There’s Always a Woman (Hall) (as Mary); Convicted (Barsha) (as Jerry Wheelen); Juvenile Court (Lederman) (as Marcia Adams);
The Renegade Ranger (Howard) (as Judith Alvarez); Homicide Bureau (Coleman) (as J. G. Bliss)

1939

The Lone Wolf Spy Hunt (The Lone Wolf's Daughter) (Godfrey) (as Karen); Special Inspector (Across the Border) (Barsha) (as Patricia Lane); Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks) (as Judy MacPherson); Music in My Heart (Santley) (as Patricia O'Malley)

1940

Blondie on a Budget (Strayer) (as Jean Forrester); Susan and God (The Gay Mrs. Trelux) (Cukor) (as Leonora Stubbs); The Lady in Question (C. Vidor) (as Natalie Rougin); Angels over Broadway (Hecht and Garmes) (as Nina Barona)

1941

The Strawberry Blonde (Walsh) (as Virginia Bush); Affectionately Yours (Bacon) (as Irene Malcolm); Blood and Sand (Mamoulian) (as Doña Sol); You'll Never Get Rich (Lanfield) (as Sheila Winthrop)

1942

My Gal Sal (Cummings) (as Sally Elliot); Tales of Manhattan (Duuvier) (as Ethel Halloway); You Were Never Lovelier (Seiter) (as Marina Aluna)

1943

Show Business at War

1944

Cover Girl (C. Vidor) (as Rusty Parka/Maribelle Hicks)

1945

Tonight and Every Night (Saville) (as Rosalind Bruce)

1946

Gilda (C. Vidor) (title role)

1947

Down to Earth (Hall) (as Terpsichore/Kitty Pendleton)

1948

The Lady from Shanghai (Welles) (as Elsa Barrister); The Loves of Carmen (C. Vidor) (title role)

1951

Champagne Safari (Leighter—documentary of Hayworth and Khan wedding trip)

1952

Affair in Trinidad (Sherman) (as Chris Emery)

1953

Salome (Dieterle) (title role); Miss Sadie Thompson (Bernhardt) (title role)

1957

Fire Down Below (Parrish) (as Irena); Pal Joey (Sidney) (as Vera Simpson)

1958

Separate Tables (Mann) (as Ann Shankland)

1959

They Came to Cordura (Rossen) (as Adelaide Gears)

1960

The Story on Page One (Odets) (as Jo Morris)

1962

The Happy Thieves (Marshall) (as Eve Lewis)

1964

Circus World (The Magnificent Showman) ( Hathaway) (as Lila Alfredo)

1966

The Money Trap (Kennedy) (as Rosalie Kenny); The Poppy Is Also a Flower (Danger Grows Wild) (Young) (as Monique)

1967

The Rover (L'Avventuriero) (Young) (as Caterina)

1971

Sons of Satan (I Bastardi, I gatti; The Cats) (Tessari) (as Martha); Road to Salina (La Route de Salina) (Lautner) (as Mara); The Naked Zoo (The Naked Lovers; The Hallucinators) (Gréfè)

1972

The Wrath of God (Nelson) (as Semona de la Plata)

1976

Circle (Seidelman)

Publications

On HAYWORTH: books—

Kobal, John, Rita Hayworth: The Time, the Place, and the Woman, New York, 1978.

Learning, Barbara, If This Was Happiness: A Biography of Rita Hayworth, New York, 1989.

On HAYWORTH: articles—

Kobal, John, “The Time, the Place and the Girl: Rita Hayworth,” in Focus on Film (London), Summer 1972.

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1994.

Helling, William P., “Rita Hayworth's The Loves of Carmen as Literary Criticism,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), October 1996.

* * *

Rita Hayworth's life might serve as the prototype for that of the glamorous movie queen, the classic story of the beautiful young woman trapped in a profession that took over her life in ways she found difficult to understand, much less control. Born into a show-business family, Hayworth went to work early as a dancing partner for her father, Eduardo Cansino of The Dancing Cansinos. Her grace and beauty soon attracted Hollywood, and, after a lackluster beginning playing bit parts as a Latin type in B pictures, she was remade from an ethnic beauty into an all-American glamour girl through new makeup, hair color, and an electrolysis treatment that lifted her hairline. The careful exploitation of her as the ultimate in Hollywood 1940s desirability brought her fame and wealth, but little happiness.

The Hayworth image was always sexy and alluring, but she didn’t play in only one type of film. She was the dancing star of 1940s escapist musicals, and at the same time she played femmes fatales in a series of films noir. Her first real success as a leading lady came in 1941, and her films that year reflect these differences: Rouben Mamoulian’s Blood and Sand, in which she was the temptress Doña Sol, and You’ll Never Get Rich, in which she was Fred Astaire’s dancing partner. She made another film with Astaire, You Were Never Lovelier, and many felt that Hayworth, a natural dancer with great stamina and rhythm, was Astaire’s best on-screen partner. Although her singing had to be dubbed, she found great success in the musicals of the 1940s.

Two of the most financially successful and best remembered films of the war years starred Hayworth: the musical Cover Girl, in which she co-starred with Gene Kelly, and the sexually suggestive Gilda, opposite Glenn Ford. Cover Girl presented Hayworth in a Technicolor version of her own story. An ordinary dancer is transformed before the audience’s eyes via clothing and makeup into a dazzling face on a magazine cover. She becomes a famous model as well as a successful musical comedy star, descending, as it seems, from the very heavens as she dances down a gigantic ramp in flowing chiffon. (Needless to say, none of it brings her happiness.) In Gilda she is used and abused by more than one man, and her apparent passivity allows her to be victimized and degraded, culminating in her famous striptease “Put the blame on Mame, Boys.” Hayworth’s image as a destructive but pliable woman seemed to stick with her after Gilda. “Every man I’ve known has fallen in love with Gilda and wakened with me,” she allegedly told a friend. One of her ex-husbands, Orson Welles, used Hayworth’s image as a passive yet destructive temptress in his film The Lady from Shanghai. Whether Hayworth played in musicals or dramas, she was always the ultimate in desirability. When in 1948 Life magazine dubbed her “The Love Goddess,” she was officially marked with the tagline that would plague her the rest of her life. The issue coincided with the release of her film Down to Earth, in which she played the Greek goddess of dance, Terpsichore. Her image as a woman men could not resist was further enhanced by her five unhappy marriages, in particular her wedding to Prince Ali Khan in 1949. This publicity bonanza, fully exploited by the tabloids, made Hayworth into an international celebrity. She soon returned to Hollywood, however, and resumed her career, although she would never regain the fame she had in the 1940s.

Hayworth continued to perform during the 1960s and 1970s, occasionally trying her hand at television or a serious drama, such as her role in Rattigan’s Separate Tables, for which she received good reviews. Hayworth’s most famous and successful films, musical or dramatic, tend to deal with her as a woman whose image does not truthfully reflect her personality, and for whom success, riches, and beauty bring no real and lasting personal satisfaction. Sadly enough, it seemed to be the story of her own life.

—Jeanine Basinger

HELM, Brigitte

Nationality: German. Born: Brigitte Eva Gisela Schittenhelm, in Berlin, 17 March 1906; daughter of a Prussian Army officer. Family: Married Hugo von Kumheim, 1935; two sons and two daughters. Career: Chosen by Fritz Lang to star in Metropolis, after the director saw her photograph and then screen test, 1925; subsequently worked under contract for Ufa, the national German film industry; abruptly retired in 1935, reportedly in reaction to Nazi takeover of the German film industry; moved with husband to Italy, 1942, and to Switzerland in the 1960s. Award: Deutscher Filmpreis (German Film Awards) Honorary Award “for continued outstanding individual contributions to German film over the years,” 1968. Died: Ascona, Switzerland, 11 June 1996.

Films as Actress:

1927 Metropolis (Lang) (as Maria/The Robot); Die Liebe der Jeanne Ney (The Love of Jeanne Ney) (Pabst) (as Gabrielle); Am Rande der Welt (At the Edge of the World) (Grune) (as Magda)
1928 Die Jacht der sieben Sünden (Yacht of the Seven Sins) (J. and L. Fleck); Abwege (Crisis; also known as Begierde and Desire) (Pabst) (as Irene); Alraune (Mandrake; Unholy Love) (Galeen) (title role)
1929 Die Wanderbare Lüge der Nina Petrovna (The Wonderful Lies of Nina Petrovna) (Schwarz); Skandal in Baben-Baden (Waschneck); Manolescu, Der König der Hochstapler (Tourjansky); L’Argent (Money) (L’Herbier) (as Baronin Sandorf)
1930 Die Singende Stadt (The Singing City) (Gallone) (as Claire Landshoff); Alraune (Daughter of Evil) (Oswald) (title role)
1931 Im Geheimdienst (In the Employ of the Secret Service) (Ucicky); Gloria (German and French versions) (Behrendt) (as Vera Latour)
1932 Hochzeitreise zu dritt (French version: Voyage de noces; Jacqueline et l’amour) (Fried) (French version: The Marathon Runner) (Waschneck); Die Herrin von Atlantis (English-language version: Mistress of Atlantis; French version: L’Atlantide) (Pabst) (as Alteina); Eine von uns (Meyer); The Blue Danube (Wilcox) (as Countess Gabrielle); Die Gräfin von Monte-Cristo (The Countess of Monte Cristo) (Hartl) (as Jeanette)
1933 Der Stern von Valencia (French version: L’Etoile de Valencia) (de Poligny); Spieme am Werk (Spies at Work) (Lamprecht); Die Schönen Tage von Aranjuez (French version: Adieu les beaux jours) (Meyer) (as Olga); Der Laufer von Marathon (The Marathon Runner) (Dupont); Inge und die Millionnen (Engel)
1934 Die Insel (French version: Vers l’abime) (Steinhoff); Furst Woronzoff (French version: Le Secret des Woronzoff) (Beucler) (as Diane); Gold (French version: L’Or) (Hartl, de Poligny) (as Florence Wills)
1935 Ein Idealer Gatte (An Ideal Husband) (Selpin) (as Lady Gertrud Chiltern)

Publications

On HELM: books—

On HELM: articles—

* * *

Though her fame rests almost entirely with one film, and her name is hardly a familiar one even to many avid moviegoers, images of Brigitte Helm are among the most haunting and famous of any in the first century of film history. Even those who have never seen Metropolis are familiar with the pale lovely face as it is seen imprisoned in a glass coffin, eyes closed, like some science-fiction Snow White, or Brunnhilde in a silver helmet, or virgin saint. Or perhaps they recall the nearly nude shimmy dancer rising from an Art Deco clamshell bed, a robot turned Babylonian love goddess. In reality Helm had quite a successful film career following Metropolis, until the Nazification of the German film industry caused her to retire by the time she was 30.

Helm was only 19 when Fritz Lang cast her in his science fiction extravaganza Metropolis. A sensation in its own day and a classic ever since, Metropolis has been celebrated as the first major science fiction portrayal of the future, with long unrivaled and still unforgettable special effects, not to mention delirious melodrama careening into both Expressionistic stylization and Hollywood-style chase and rescue scenes. Scholars have traced the film’s influence upon later films (e.g., 1984’s Blade Runner) and written a great deal about its relations to politics of the Left and Right, its splitting of the female image into virgin and robot-whore, and its sexualization of machinery, among many other matters. But studies of the figure of Maria and her robot double have seldom had much to say about Helm’s performance in itself, one of the most remarkable of the silent era.

Metropolis features a great range of acting styles, from the imperious restraint and minimal gestures of Jon Frederson, Master of Metropolis, to the comic realism of the burly Foreman, and to the Expressionistic contortions of Rotwang, the mad scientist who wants to give his robot the human form of the saintly Maria to satisfy his own strange lust and to thwart her spiritual leadership of the proletariat. Helm’s performance in both roles certainly leans toward Expressionism, as when Maria recoils in fear as Rotwang pursues her, or the false Maria gestures in insane ecstasy, one hand reaching crookedly to the sky, when she leads the workers on their rampage.

As the robot, Helm may be rather campily seductive when she first greets the Master of Metropolis, but when the double stands at Maria’s underground altar and incites the workers to riot, and later leads them in their attack upon the machinery, she seems genuinely to be working herself into a hysterical frenzy. Unforgettable too is the swaggering smirk she gives young Freder as the crowd seizes him, her hand stretching out the collar of her dress. Her convulsive laughter as the robot is dragged to the stake may be inexplicable, but it is chilling.

For as the saintly Maria (who does not have that name for nothing), Lang brings out the slightly strange beauty of Helm’s face, with its large eyes and small mouth, most notably during her first scene, when she enters the pleasure palace with the poor children, and later when she steps down from her pulpit to give a chaste, tender kiss to Freder, with her hunching of the shoulders only adding to the intensity.

Helm’s second film role, as the blind cousin of the title character in G.W. Pabst’s The Love of Jeanne Ney, was a supporting part, but one for which she received excellent notices, with particular praise for portraying blindness convincingly. Pabst (who reported her so absorbed by the role that she was nearly struck by a car during a street scene) places great ironic emphasis upon those huge eyes, as when the villain who plans to marry and murder her for her father’s money stares at them as if repelled, before kissing her on the forehead. Particularly memorable is the subtle way she recoils at the first touch of the villain, though her tour de force scene is later, when she brushes against him and then discovers the body of her just-murdered father.

Helm worked twice again with Pabst, first with the silent domestic drama Abwege (Crisis), one of the director’s—and the actress’s—most neglected major works. As a woman stifled in a marriage to a wealthy lawyer who scorches her friends, neglects her in favor of his work, and curiously plans her to run off with a less affluent artist, Helm is called upon to display a very large range of emotions—perhaps a few too many in rapid succession. Loving her husband but deluding herself that she can escape her misery and hurt him via a love affair or wild partying—even drug use—with her decadent friends in the Fast Set, Irene is alternately seductive and guilt-ridden, timid and bold, despairing and passionately hopeful. Pabst’s camera seems hypnotized by Helm’s strange beauty, especially her profile and what Paul Rotha, in a paeon to her performance, called “her slender, supple figure”; the character Walter, the artist and would-be lover who obsessively draws portraits of Irene that are prominently displayed in several scenes, seems a stand-in for the director, or perhaps the audience. One of Helm’s most splendid dramatic moments comes just after another would-be lover, a boxing champ, sexually attacks Irene in Walter’s apartment. When Walter enters just in time, and the boxer leaves, Irene is shamefacedly about to part forever from her friend when she hears her husband pounding on the studio door; she flings off her dress, stands in her slip with a look of defiance and erotic excitement, and cries to the astonished Walter, “Open the door!”

Her other Pabst film is a very different matter. As the title character of Mistress of Atlantis, she has rather little screen time and little to say, though in the English-language version her voice is pleasant and not heavily accented. (In the days before dubbing became a regular practice, Helm frequently starred in both German and French, and sometimes English, versions of the same film, with different supporting casts and occasionally directors.) The film is an Orientalist fantasy set in the Saharan desert, telling a story similar to the oft-filmed She. It is not clear whether or not Antinea has powers beyond sheer seductive beauty, but she does madden her captive worshippers. Though Pabst’s treatment of this material is quite unconventional in a number of respects, he does objectify his star in typical ways. A huge stone carving of her face is shown almost as often as she is; in one shot she stands beside it, both faces strikingly in profile. In another shot, in which she poses with a pet cheetah, her makeup and hairstyle may be Grecian, but here they seem eerily feline, as if she were the animal’s twin.

A contract player for Ufa who reportedly turned down the leading role in The Blue Angel (it went to Marlene Dietrich), Helm did make a successful transition from silent to talking film. She appeared in both the silent Alraune and its talkie remake two years later, playing a mad biologist’s “experiment” in genetic and social engineering. But whether playing murderous vamps, as in Alraune, or noble women, like her Lady Gertrude in her last film, a version of Oscar Wilde’s An Ideal Husband, Helm never found a role with the sensational impact that Metropolis had provided.

—Joseph Milicia

HENREID, Paul

Nationality: American. Born: Paul George Julius von Henreid in Trieste, Austria (now Italy), 10 January 1908; became U.S. citizen, 1946. Education: Attended Maria Theresianische Akademie, Vienna; Graphische Akademie, Vienna. Family: Married Elizabeth Camilla Julia Gluck, daughter: Monica. Career: 1929—joined book publishers A. G. Strobl, and attended the New Vienna Conservatory Dramatic Academy at night; 1932—film debut in Baroud; 1933—given contract by Max Reinhardt, and made stage debut in Faust; 1938—left Vienna after Nazi takeover of Austria; 1939—first British film, Goodbye, Mr. Chips; 1940—emigrated to America; played in Victoria and Albert and In Our Time in New York; 1941—joined the cast of radio serial Joyce Jordan, Girl Intern; contract with RKO; 1950s—much work as TV actor and director (he estimated he had directed 300 TV segments or plays); 1962—directed the play Everyman; 1972—appeared in Don Juan in Hell on stage. Died: Of pneumonia, in Santa Monica, California, 29 March 1992.

Films as Actor:

1932 Baroud (Love in Morocco) (Ingram)
1934 Hohe Schule (Das Geheimnis des Carlo Cavelli) (Engels)
1935 Eva (Riemann); . . . nur ein Komödiant (Engel)
1937 Victoria the Great (Wilcox) (bit role)
1939 Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Wood) (as Max Staefl); An Englishman’s Home (Madmen of Europe) (de Courville) (as Victor Brandt)
1940 Night Train to Munich (Night Train) (Reed) (as Karl Marsen); Under Your Hat (Elvey)
1942 Joan of Paris (Stevenson) (as Paul Lavallier); Now, Voyager (Rapper) (as Jerry Durrance); Casablanca (Curtiz) (as Victor Laszlo)
1944 In Our Time (Sherman) (as Count Stephen Orvid); Between Two Worlds (Blatt) (as Henry); The Conspirators (Negulescu) (as Vincent); Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as guest)
1945 The Spanish Main (Borzage) (as Laurent Van Horn)
1946 Devotion (Bernhardt) (as Nichols); Of Human Bondage (Goulding) (as Philip Carey)
1947 Deception (Rapper) (as Karel Novak); Song of Love (Brown) (as Robert Schumann)
1948 Hollow Triumph (The Scar) (Sekely) (as John Muller/Dr. Bartok, + pr)
1949 Rope of Sand (Dieterle) (as Commandant Paul Vogel)
1950 So Young, So Bad (Vorhaus) (as Dr. Jason); Last of the Buccaneers (Landers) (as Jean Lafitte); Dans la vie tout s’arrange (Cravenne); Pardon My French (The Lady from Boston) (Vorhaus—English version of Dans la vie tout s’arrange) (as Paul Rencourt)
1952 Thief of Damascus (Jason) (as Abu Andar); Stolen Face (Fisher) (as Dr. Philip Ritter); There Is No Escape (Fisher)
1953 Mantrap (Man in Hiding; Woman in Hiding) (Fisher) (as Hugo Bishop); Siren of Bagdad (Quine) (as Kazah)
1954 Kabarett (Dieses Leid bleibt bei dir) (Forst); Deep in My Heart (Donen) (as Florenz Ziegfeld); Pirates of Tripoli (Feist) (as Edri-Al-Gadrian)
1956 Meet Me in Las Vegas (Viva Las Vegas!) (Rowland) (as Maria’s manager)
1957 Ten Thousand Bedrooms (Thorpe) (as Anton)
1959 Holiday for Lovers (Levin) (as Eduardo Barroso); Never So Few (John Sturges) (as Nikko Regas)
1961 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli) (as Etienne Laurier)
1965 Operation Crossbow (Anderson) (as General Zeimann)
1966 Peking Remembered (Butler) (as narrator)
1969 The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes) (as the General)
1971 The Failing of Raymond (Sagal—for TV)
1975 Death among Friends (Mrs. R.—Death among Friends) (Wendkos—for TV)
1977 Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman) (as the Cardinal)
1987 Hollow Triumph (Sekely—for TV)

Films as Director:

1951 For Men Only (The Tall Lie) (+ pr, ro as Dr. Stephen Brice)
1956 A Woman’s Devotion (War Shock; Battleshock) (+ ro as Capt. Henrique Monteros)
1958 Girls on the Loose; Live Fast, Die Young
1964 Dead Ringer (Dead Image); Ballad in Blue (Blues for Lovers) (+ co-story)

Publications

By HENREID: book—

On HENREID: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.
Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), March and April 1983.

Paul Henreid knew how to play the continental gentleman, a debonair character who could display bravery and patriotism with quiet grace. He played that type of role in two Hollywood classics which are so solidly etched in the minds of film enthusiasts that the remainder of this actor’s full screen career dims against their bright lights. The first of these films, Now, Voyager, probably would have been remembered mainly as a tear-filled Bette Davis vehicle, in which the actress plays Charlotte Vance, a dowdy old maid headed for a nervous breakdown as the film begins. But Henreid, as Jerry Durrance, the unattainable love of Charlotte’s life, created an indelible image when, in a recurring motif, he lit two cigarettes simultaneously and then handed one to Davis, one of the great romantic gestures in silver screen history.
Paul Henreid (left) with Ingrid Bergman, Claude Rains, and Humphrey Bogart in Casablanca

Paul Henreid (left) with Ingrid Bergman, Claude Rains, and Humphrey Bogart in Casablanca

A few months later Casablanca was released. In it he plays Victor Laszlo, archetypal freedom-fighting Resistance leader/political refugee whose brave efforts against Nazi tyranny, and the subsequent tortures he suffered during a year in a German concentration camp, have left him just a couple steps below sainthood. His finest moment, in a film made up of memorable moments, is the scene at Rick’s Place in which he leads French citizens, demoralized under Nazi occupation, in a stirring rendition of the Marseillaise, drowning out the voices of German soldiers raised in a Nazi war song.

While Henreid’s characters never flirted or gave a heavy come-on toward female co-stars, the actor exuded an air of romance which most women—on-screen and in the audience—could not resist. Even when he vied for the woman he loved with actors who had more zip and flash (Bogart in Casablanca, Claude Rains in Deception), his reserved elegance won out. As the powers at Warner Brothers came to recognize the appeal of their continental gentleman, they took a giant step in imaginative casting by starring him in the swashbuckler adventure The Spanish Main, in which he plays a bold pirate who rescues Maureen O’Hara from the villainous Walter Slezak. In the Technicolor entertainment Last of the Buccaneers, he plays dashing Jean Lafitte most effectively, and he went on to star in a string of swashbucklers in the 1950s.

Henreid’s career dates to 1933, when he was discovered in Vienna by Otto Preminger. Shortly after that, he was given prominent stage roles in Max Reinhardt’s Viennese theater. In addition to honing his acting craft, he learned enough about directing from Reinhardt and later from an array of Warner Brothers’s filmmakers to begin directing in the 1950s. He pursued directing motion pictures, television shows (mainly for Alfred Hitchcock), and subsequently, television films until his death in 1992. Henreid’s autobiography Ladies Man appeared in 1984. In it he discussed aspects of his life practically unknown to many, including his prestigious acting career in Europe, his own real-life flight from the Nazis, his liberal politics, and the infamous blacklisting period in Hollywood which he claimed had a detrimental effect on his movie career.

—James D. Wilson, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg
HEPBURN, Audrey

Films as Actress:

(as Edda Hepburn)

1948  Nederland in 7 Lessen (Dutch at the Double) (Linden and Josephson)

(as Audrey Hepburn)

1951 One Wild Oat (Saunders) (as extra); Laughter in Paradise (Zampi) (as cigarette girl); Young Wives’ Tale (Cass) (as Eve Lester); The Lavender Hill Mob (Charles Crichton) (as Chiquita); Nous irons à Monte Carlo (Jean Boyer) (as cigarette girl); Monte Carlo Baby (Jean Boyer and Fuller) (English version of Nous irons à Monte Carlo) (as Linda Farrel); Secret People (Dickinson) (as Nora Brent)

1953 Introducing Audrey Hepburn (Dickinson—short); Roman Holiday (Wyler) (as Princess Anne)

1954 Sabrina (Sabrina Fair) (Wilders) (title role)

1956 War and Peace (King Vidor) (as Natasha Rostov)

1957 Funny Face (Donen) (as Jo Stockton); Love in the Afternoon (Wilders) (as Ariane Chevasse); Mayerling (Anatole Litvak—for TV)

1959 The Nun’s Story (Zinnemann) (as Sister Luke); Green Mansions (Ferrer) (as Rima); The Unforgiven (Huston) (as Rachel Zachary)

1961 Breakfast at Tiffany’s (Edwards) (as Holly Golightly); The Children’s Hour (The Loudest Whisper) (Wyler) (as Karen Wright)

1963 Charade (Donen) (as Reggie Lambert)

1964 Paris When It Sizzles (Quine) (as Gabrielle Simpson); My Fair Lady (Cukor) (as Eliza Doolittle)

1966 How to Steal a Million (Wyler) (as Nicole Bonnet); Two for the Road (Donen) (as Joanna Wallace)

1967 Wait until Dark (Terence Young) (as Susy Hendrix)

1976 Robin and Marian (Lester) (as Marian)

1979 Bloodline (Sidney Sheldon’s Bloodline) (Terence Young) (as Elizabeth Roffe)

1981 They All Laughed (Bogdanovich) (as Angela Niotes)

1986 Directed by William Wyler (Slesin—doc) (as herself)

1987 Love among Thieves (Roger Young—for TV) (as Baroness Caroline DuLac)

1989 Always (Spielberg) (as Hap)

1990 A Chance to Live (Barnes—for TV) (as presenter)

Publications

By HEPBURN: article—

Interview in Photoplay (London), August 1982.

On HEPBURN: books—

On HEPBURN: articles—

Thompson, F., “Audrey Hepburn,” in American Film (Hollywood), May 1990.
When Audrey Hepburn died in 1993 at the age of 63, the world mourned a film star who on-screen and off embodied grace, elegance, and strength. At the pinnacle of her screen career, Hepburn gave her audience the perfect postwar combination of tomboy and sophisticate. After her semiretirement from film in the late 1960s, Hepburn held an honorary place among the Hollywood royalty. In 1988 she began her second career as a tireless special ambassador for the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF).

Holly Golightly—whether dressed in a black Givenchy, enormous hat, and oval sunglasses hailing a taxi with a shrill whistle or in pigtails, sitting on the fire escape strumming “Moon River” on her guitar—epitomizes for many fans the essence of Audrey Hepburn’s film career. Marked by the internal contradictions of big city sophistication and rural, childlike innocence, Holly appears fragile, yet by the end of Breakfast at Tiffany’s the audience discovers her inner strength.

Like Holly Golightly, Hepburn’s past contributed greatly to the complexity and richness of her public persona. Hepburn was born in Belgium in 1929 to a Dutch baroness and an English banker who left when Hepburn was six years old. Trapped in Nazi-occupied Holland with her mother throughout World War II, Hepburn was reduced to eating tulip bulbs. She survived the war, but suffered many problems associated with malnutrition. The waiflike fragility which so many have admired and emulated was one result of wartime hardship.

After the war, Hepburn moved to London where she studied ballet and worked as a dancer and model. Her film career began unnoticeably with several small parts in English movies. A chance meeting with the writer Colette landed Hepburn on Broadway in the title role of the hit show Gigi. She received critical acclaim, but was not chosen to recreate the role on-screen. (The role went to Leslie Caron who has similar physical attributes.) Two years later, in her first major U.S. film role as Princess Anne in William Wyler’s Roman Holiday, Hepburn captured her audience’s heart and won an Academy Award.

Part of Hollywood’s royalty, Hepburn played opposite the realm’s most handsome charming princes—Gregory Peck, Humphrey Bogart, Cary Grant, Gary Cooper, Burt Lancaster, Henry Fonda, and Fred.
Astaire. That most of her leading men were older than her added to her gamine elegance and mystique.

As Sabrina Fairchild, a chauffeur’s daughter, Hepburn was torn between the smooth, handsome bachelor played by William Holden and his serious, businesslike older brother (Humphrey Bogart). Following her heart, Sabrina makes the right choice. Audrey Hepburn’s characters would continue to make the heart’s choice in all her best-loved movies. Her audiences loved and trusted her because she played characters whose hearts, if occasionally misguided, in the end were true and kind.

Sabrina also marked the beginning of Hepburn’s lifelong intimate friendship with the French fashion designer Hubert de Givenchy. She considered Givenchy one of her best friends and he has referred to her as a sister. He designed most of her screen clothes and she wore his designs offscreen as well. The clothes he designed for her almost always accentuated her long neck and showed off her strong shoulders. The Hepburn/Givenchy look countered the torpedo-breasted voluptuousness of the 1950s ideal woman. Hepburn gave women the possibility of a dignified, comfortable look in which intelligence and wit matter as much as physical beauty.

Princess Anne, Sabrina, and Holly Golightly share qualities with all of Audrey Hepburn’s roles: as the daughter of a private detective in Love in the Afternoon, an empathetic bookseller turned photographer’s muse in Funny Face, a typist in Paris When It Sizzles, and the daughter of an eccentric art forger in The Heiress. Hepburn charmed with her gamine elegance, her chic wardrobe, her indistinctly European accent, her intelligent, simple beauty, and her wide, expressive eyes. With The Nun’s Story, The Children’s Hour, and Two for the Road, she successfully attempted grittier roles. Her 1967 portrayal of Suzie Hendrix, a blind woman trapped by a killer in Wait Until Dark, proved Hepburn capable of an edgy, tense performance. During her semiretirement following Wait Until Dark, Hepburn returned to the big screen a few times, most notably perhaps in her critically acclaimed role opposite Sean Connery in Robin and Marian. Hepburn’s two-decade reign as one of Hollywood’s most extraordinary stars seems almost a fairy-tale interlude in a life ravaged by war and then spent serving others similarly ravaged. A former recipient of UNICEF relief aid, she considered her role as UNICEF special ambassador one of the most important in her life. Her final film appearance as Hap, the romantic angel in Steven Spielberg’s Always, left us with a screen image of what Hepburn always was—a serene, radiant presence with force of spirit whose effortless elegance and sovereignty inspires us all.

—Irene S. Goldman

HEPBURN, Katharine

Nationality: American. Born: Katharine Houghton Hepburn in Hartford, Connecticut, 9 November 1907 (or 1909). Education: Attended West Middle School; Oxford School for Girls, Hartford; Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania, 1924–28. Family: Married Ludlow Ogden Smith, 1928 (divorced 1934). Career: 1928—professional stage debut with Edwin H. Knopf’s stock company, Baltimore, in The Csaszar; New York debut in September under name Katharine Burns in Night Hostess; appearance on Broadway in November under own name in These Days; 1932—appearance in The Warrior’s Husband led to Hollywood offers; contract with RKO; film debut in George Cukor’s A Bill of Divorcement; 1934—returned to Broadway to star in The Lake; 1936—toured in Jane Eyre for the Theatre Guild; 1938—brought out of RKO contract rather than star in Mother Cary’s Chickens; 1938—on Broadway in The Philadelphia Story (written for her by Philip Barry); 1941—teamed with Spencer Tracy for first time in Woman of the Year; 1950—on Broadway as Rosalind in As You Like It; continued through 1950s to tour in Shakespeare productions; later stage roles through the early 1980s. Awards: Best Actress, Academy Award for Morning Glory, 1932–33; Best Actress, Venice Festival, for Little Women, 1934; Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for The Philadelphia Story, 1940; Best Acting (collectively awarded), Cannes Festival, for Long Day’s Journey into Night, 1962; Best Actress, Academy Awards, for Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner?, 1967, and The Lion in Winter, 1968; Best Actress, British Academy, for Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner? and The Lion in Winter, 1968; Best Actress, Academy Award, for On Golden Pond, 1981.

Films as Actress:

1932 A Bill of Divorcement (Cukor) (as Sydney Fairfield)
1933 Christopher Strong (Arzner) (as Lady Cynthia Darrington); Morning Glory (Sherman) (as Ada Love/Eva Lovelace’); Little Women (Cukor) (as Jo)
1934 Spittfire (Cromwell) (as Trigger Hicks); The Little Minister (Wallace) (as Lady Babbie)
1935 Break of Hearts (Moeller) (as Constance Dane); Alice Adams (Stevens) (title role)
1936 Sylvia Scarlett (Cukor) (title role); Mary of Scotland (Ford) (title role); A Woman Rebels (Sandrich) (as Pamela Thistlewaite)
1937 Quality Street (Stevens) (as Phoebe Throssel); Stage Door (La Cava) (as Terry Randall)
1938 Bringing Up Baby (Hawks) (as Susan Vance); Holiday (Cukor) (as Linda Seton)
1940 The Philadelphia Story (Cukor) (as Tracy Lord)
1942 Woman of the Year (Stevens) (as Tess Harding)
1943 Keeper of the Flame (Cukor) (as Christine Forrest); Stage Door Canteen (Borzage) (as herself)
1944 Dragon Seed (Bucquet) (as Jade)
1945 Without Love (Bucquet) (as Jamie Rowan)
1946 Undercurrent (Minnelli) (as Ann Hamilton)
1947 The Sea of Grass (Kazan) (as Lutie Cameron); Song of Love (Brown) (as Clara Schumann)
1948 State of the Union (Capra) (as Mary Matthews)
1949 Adam’s Rib (Cukor) (as Amanda Bonner)
1951 The African Queen (Huston) (as Rose Sayer)
1952 Pat and Mike (Cukor) (as Pat Pemberton)
1955 Summertime (Lean) (as Jane Hudson)
1956 The Rainmaker (Anthony) (as Lizzie)
1957 The Iron Petticoat (Thomas) (as Vinka Kovelenco); Desk Set (Walter Lang) (as Bunny Watson)
1959 Suddenly, Last Summer (Mankiewicz) (as Mrs. Violet Venable)
1962 Long Day’s Journey into Night (Lumet) (as Mary Tyrone)
1967  Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner? (Kramer) (as Christina Drayton)
1968  The Lion in Winter (Anthony Harvey) (as Eleanor of Aquitaine)
1969  The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes) (as Countess Aurelia)
1971  The Trojan Women (Cacoyannis) (as Hecuba)
1973  A Delicate Balance (Richardson) (as Agnes); The Glass Menagerie (Anthony Harvey—for TV) (as Amanda Wingfield)
1975  Rooster Cogburn (Millar) (as Eula Goodnight); Love among the Ruins (Cukor—for TV) (as Jessica Medlicott)
1977  Olly, Olly, Oxen Free (The Great Balloon Adventure) (Colla) (as Miss Pudd)
1978  The Corn Is Green (Cukor—for TV) (as Lilly C. Moffat)
1981  On Golden Pond (Rydell) (as Ethel Thayer)
1983  The Ultimate Solution of Grace Quigley (Grace Quigley) (Anthony Harvey) (title role)
1984  George Stevens: A Filmmaker’s Journey (Stevens, Jr.)
1986  Mrs. Delafield Wants to Marry (Schaefer—for TV) (title role); Spencer Tracy Legacy: A Tribute by Katharine Hepburn (Heeley—for TV)
1988  Laura Lansing Slept Here (Schaefer—for TV) (title role)
1993  The Man Upstairs (Schaefer—for TV) (as Victoria Brown)
1994  Love Affair (Caron) (as Ginny); This Can’t Be Love (Anthony Harvey—for TV) (as Marion Bennett); One Christmas (Tony Bill—for TV) (as Cornelia Beaumont)

Publications

By HEPBURN: books—

By HEPBURN: articles—

Interview with I. McAsh, in Films (London), May 1982.

On HEPBURN: books—

On HEPBURN: articles—

Mason, G., “‘Katharine the Great,’” in Films and Filming (London), August 1956.
Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1995.

* * *

Any account of Katharine Hepburn must necessarily be indebted to Andrew Britton’s book on her, which (together with Richard Dyer’s Stars) represents a significant breakthrough in attempts to deal with the star phenomenon that transcends the gossip column and career outline.

Hepburn has represented, on a number of levels, a problem that Hollywood never quite managed to solve, although it proposed a number of partial solutions. Aspects of the problem were how to publicize her; how to deal with her intransigent demands for better or different types of roles; which leading man, or type of male lead, to cast with or against her; and what sort of star vehicles to construct around her. Central to the problem is her famous rebelliousness. It is fitting that one of her 1930s films should be titled A Woman Rebels, since this characteristic was consistently expressed both by the characters she played and in her offscreen image. The rebelliousness could be used, up to a point, to construct her as an attractive identification-figure for the female viewer; but it threatened continuously to become too subversive, too radical, too incontrollable. The problem Hollywood faced with Hepburn was, precisely, that of containment. This gives her career, of course, a very special interest in relation to feminism: both on and off screen, Hepburn repeatedly challenged a male-dominated social order and the male-dominated industry that is at once a part of that order and represents its structures to the general public.

Britton argues convincingly that, from a feminist viewpoint, Hepburn’s most progressive work is located in the 1930s rather than in her more popular and famous later films such as The Philadelphia Story or the movies in which she was teamed with Spencer Tracy. Many of the films of this early period were explicitly concerned with a woman’s rebellion against male determination; some (Little Women, Stage Door) add to this strong connotations of lesbianism, in the wider sense in which that term is now commonly used in feminist discourse: female bonding for mutual support and solidarity. This in turn merges with strong overtones of androgyny, developed most fully in Sylvia Scarlett, in which for much of the film she is disguised as a boy. Gender, in fact, becomes a central issue when considering the Hepburn persona during this period, as the films frequently deal with (and undermine) the socially constructed norms of masculinity and femininity. It is interesting that in her first film (A Bill of Divorcement) and at all periods of her career Hepburn worked with George Cukor, producing much of her best, most responsive and vivid career outline. Any account of Katharine Hepburn must necessarily be indebted to Andrew Britton’s book on her, which (together with Richard Dyer’s Stars) represents a significant breakthrough in attempts to deal with the star phenomenon that transcends the gossip column and career outline.
Of Hepburn’s transition into old age, one might say that she at least retained her dignity, without the descent into exploitation horror movies suffered by Bette Davis, Joan Crawford, and Tallulah Bankhead. The alternative has proved, however, to be a move into the sort of “class” productions deemed respectable in middle-of-the-road bourgeois culture, and one may question whether it is really any happier a fate to spend one’s old age appearing in The Lion in Winter and The Madwoman of Chaillot than in Straitjacket or Die, Die, My Darling. Hepburn’s best work in this period has been, again, with George Cukor: the television movies Love among the Ruins and The Corn Is Green. On Golden Pond, a central movie of the Reagan era, finally subordinates her to the patriarchal order; yet her extraordinary vitality movingly survives.

In recent years, two biographical works have shed further light on Hepburn’s background and motivation. One is an autobiography, called Me, in which she reveals her relationships with family and friends, and her need to be in control both personally and professionally. The second is Barbara Leaming’s controversial tome, Katharine Hepburn, which serves to draw a very different and often unpleasant portrait of the Tracy-Hepburn relationship, and also her alleged romance with John Ford. In her late seventies and eighties, she continued acting in made-for-television movies (Mrs. Delafield Wants to Marry, Laura Lansing Slept Here, The Man Upstairs, This Can’t Be Love) which are rare in story content in that each focuses on an elderly woman. But she did not altogether abandon the big screen, appearing as Warren Beatty’s brittle but vigorous, wise aunt in Love and Mercy, and her need to be in control both personally and professionally.

—Robin Wood, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

HERSHEY, Barbara

Films as Actress:

(as Barbara Hershey)

1968 With Six You Get Eggroll (Morris) (as Stacey Iverson); Yours, Mine and Ours (Shavelson)
1969 Heaven with a Gun (Katzin) (as Leloopa); Last Summer (Perry) (as Sandy)
1970 The Liberation of L. B. Jones (Wyler) (as Nella Mundine); The Baby Maker (Bridges) (as Tish Gray)
1971 The Pursuit of Happiness (Mulligan) (as Jane Kaufman)
1972 Dealing: Or the Berkeley-to-Boston Forty-Brick Lost-Bag Blues (Williams) (as Susan); Boxcar Bertha (Scorsese) (title role)
1973 Time to Run (Adamson)
1974 The Crazy World of Julius Vrooder (Vrooder’s Hooch) (Hiller) (as Zanni)
1975 Love Comes Quietly (Angela) (van der Heyde) (as Angela); You and Me (Carradine); Diamonds (Golan) (as Sally)
1976 Dirty Knight’s Work (Trial by Combat; Choice of Weapons) (Connor) (as Marion); The Last Hard Men (McLaglen) (as Susan Burgade); Flood! (Bellamy—for TV) (as Mary Cutler)
1977 In the Glitter Palace (Butler—for TV) (as Ellen Lange); Just a Little Inconvenience (Flicker—for TV) (as Nikki Klausing); Sunshine Christmas (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Cody)
1980 The Stunt Man (Rush) (as Nina Franklin); Angel on My Shoulder (Berry—for TV) (as Julie)
1981 Take This Job and Shove It (Trikonis) (as J. M. Halstead); Americana (Carradine—produced in 1973) (as Jess’s daughter)
1983 The Entity (Furic) (as Carla Moran); The Right Stuff (Kaufman) (as Glennys Yeager)
1984 The Natural (Levinson) (as Harriet Bird)
1985 My Wicked, Wicked Ways . . . The Legend of Errol Flynn (Taylor—for TV) (as Lili Damita); Passion Flower (Sargent—for TV) (as Julia Maitland)
1986 Hannah and Her Sisters (Woody Allen) (as Lee); Hoosiers (Best Shot) (Anspaugh) (as Myra Fleener)
1987 Tin Men (Levinson) (as Nora); Shy People (Konchalovsky) (as Ruth Sullivan)
1988 A World Apart (Menges) (as Diana Roth); The Last Temptation of Christ (Scorsese) (as Mary Magdalene); Beaches (Garry Marshall) (as Hillary Whitney Essex)
1990 Tune in Tomorrow (Aunt Julia and the Scriptwriter) (Amiel) (as Aunt Julia); A Killing in a Small Town (Evidence of Love) (Gyllenhaal—for TV) (as Candy Morrison)
1991 Paris Trout (Gyllenhaal—for TV) (as Hanna Trout); Defenseless (Campbell) (as T. K. Katwuller); Julia Has Two Lovers (Shib) (as Aunt Frances)
1992 The Public Eye (Franklin) (as Kay Levitz); Stay the Night (Winer—for TV) (as Jimmie Sue Finger)
1993 Swing Kids (Carter) (as Frau Muller); Falling Down (Schumacher) (as Beth); Splitting Heirs (Robert Young) (as Duchess Lucinda); A Dangerous Woman (Gyllenhaal) (as Aunt Frances)
1994 Abraham (Sargent—for TV) (as Sarah)
1995 Last of the Dogmen (Murphy) (as Lillian Sloan)
1996 The Pallbearer (Reeves); Portrait of a Lady (Campion) (as Madame Serena Merle)
Barbara Hershey (center) with Dianne Wiest and Mia Farrow (right) in Hannah and Her Sisters

1998  A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries (Ivory) (as Marcella Willis); Frogs for Snakes (Poe) (as Eva); The Staircase (Arthur) (as Mother Madalyn)

1999  Drowning on Dry Land (Colpaert); Breakfast of Champions (Rudolph) (as Celia Hoover); Passion (Duncan) (as Rose)

Publications

By HERSEY: articles—

Interview with Jeff Silverman, in Chicago Tribune, 22 March 1987.
Interview with Mike Downey, in GQ (New York), November 1987.

Interview, in Film Directions (London), vol. 9, no. 34, 1988.

On HERSEY: articles—

* * *
Barbara Hershey is a generally fine actress who, too often, has been wasted in films not worthy of her talents. Her critical reputation was resuscitated in the late 1980s when she accomplished the feat of winning back-to-back Best Actress prizes at the Cannes Film Festival.

Hershey was a gifted drama student at Hollywood High School when she obtained a talent agent through a teacher. The good-looking 17-year-old brunette quickly found regular work on the television series The Monroes, and later in other small-screen shows before making her big-screen debut as Brian Keith’s possessive daughter in Sandy in Last Summer, Frank Perry’s artful and controversial study of four upper-class teenagers idling away a summer in a beach community. Here, Hershey was cast as a vivacious, willful beauty who manipulates her two male friends and taunts a plain-looking, less sexually experienced female. Observed the Variety critic, “Barbara Hershey has the sexual provocativeness and hoydenishness that is not calmed by any perceptive maturity.”

Another significant early role for Hershey came in Martin Scorsese’s first studio production, Boxcar Bertha. In this low-budget drama about the Great Depression, shot in 24 days in Arkansas, she appears in the title role, an orphaned vagrant who hops one freight train after another with her derelict lover, an embittered ex-labor agitator (David Carradine) and his band of train robbers. In retrospect, given the director with whom she was working, Hershey’s presence becomes calmed by any perceptive maturity.”

In 1969, Hershey played the first important lead of her career as Sandy in Last Summer, Frank Perry’s artful and controversial study of four upper-class teenagers idling away a summer in a beach community. Here, Hershey was cast as a vivacious, willful beauty who manipulates her two male friends and taunts a plain-looking, less sexually experienced female. Observed the Variety critic, “Barbara Hershey has the sexual provocativeness and hoydenishness that is not calmed by any perceptive maturity.”

In the 1970s, when Hershey was an attractive young actress who should have been peaking in popularity, her marketability was limited. This was partly because she had acquired a reputation as a hippie, which, in the eyes of many industry powers and moviegoers, meant she was flaky. Hershey was a flower-child, living out-of-wedlock with David Carradine and naming their baby boy “Free.” She had changed her own name to Barbara Seagull sometime after the making of Last Summer, during which she accidentally was involved in the killing of a seagull. Furthermore, she put off auditions by taking roles considered outrageous. For instance, in The Baby Maker, Hershey played a nonconformist hired to be impregnated by a man whose wife was sterile. And so, for the rest of the decade, she appeared mainly in minor and forgettable projects.

Then in 1980, director Richard Rush chose her for the outstanding black comedy The Stunt Man. This bit of casting took Hershey out of the second-rate ingenue roles to which she had been relegated, and placed her in her first womanly part. She played a quirky motion picture actress who appears to give her heart to a fugitive Vietnam astronaut Chuck Yeager; in The Natural, she is the personification of evil, an erotic mystery woman who comes on to baseball phenom Roy Hobbs, then shoots him and commits suicide. Her dark sexual appeal was exploited further in Hannah and Her Sisters, in which she plays the pivotal part of Lee, the girlfriend of a moody artist, who becomes the love object of her brother-in-law; and again in the black comedy Tin Men, where she appears as the wife of an aluminum side saleswoman who is seduced by her husband’s arch enemy. During the making of Boxcar Bertha, Hershey gave Martin Scorsese the idea of filming Nikos Kazantzakis’s controversial novel The Last Temptation of Christ. When he made the film 16 years later, the filmmaker handed her the coveted role of Mary Magdalene. But for many fans of three-handkerchief weepies, Hershey’s most dynamic role came playing opposite Bette Midler in the quintessential woman’s film Beaches.

The apex of three decades of filmic output came for Hershey when she was awarded the Best Actress Prize at Cannes two consecutive years. In 1987 she earned the award for Shy People, playing the head of a backwoods bayou clan. The following year, she was recognized for a riveting performance as a political zealot dedicated to the abolishment of apartheid in South Africa in A World Apart.

Hershey’s more notable recent roles have been as characters who are secondary to the film’s primary focus: Michael Douglas’s estranged wife in Falling Down; a mystery woman opposite Joe Pesci in The Public Eye; and Debra Winger’s sister in A Dangerous Woman.

—Audrey E. Kuperberg

Hoffman, Dustin

Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, 8 August 1937. Education: Attended Los Angeles High School; Santa Monica City College for one year; acting classes at Pasadena Playhouse, 1956–58; also studied music at the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music. Family: Married 1) Anne Byrne, 1969 (divorced), two daughters; 2) Lisa Gottsegen, 1980, two sons, two daughters. Career: 1958—In New York as aspiring actor; 1961—Broadway debut in A Cook for Mr. General; 1967—film debut in The Tiger Makes Out; 1976—member of First Artists Productions; 1982—producer of his film Tootsie; 1984—starring role in New York stage version of Death of a Salesman; 1989—as Shylock in The Merchant of Venice, London. Awards: Most Promising Newcomer, British Academy, Golden Globe Award, for The Graduate, 1968; Best Actor, British Academy, for Midnight Cowboy and John and Mary, 1969; National Society of Film Critics Award, for Agatha, 1979; Best Actor Academy Award, Golden Globe Award, and Best Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Award, National Society of Film Critics Award, for Kramer vs. Kramer, 1979; National Society of Film Critics Award, and Golden Globe Award, for Tootsie, 1983; British Academy Award, for Tootsie, 1984; Emmy Award, for Outstanding Lead Actor in miniseries or special, for Death of a Salesman, and Golden Globe Award, 1986; Best Actor Academy Award, and Golden Bear, Berlin Festival, for Rain Man, 1988; Golden Globe Award, for Rain Man, 1989; Career Golden Lion Award, Venice Film Festival, 1996; Cecil B. DeMille Award, 1997; Lifetime Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1999. Address: c/o Punch Productions, 711 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10022, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1967 The Tiger Makes Out (Hiller) (as Hap); The Graduate (Mike Nichols) (as Benjamin Braddock)

1969 Midnight Cowboy (Schlesinger) (as Ratso Rizzo); John and Mary (Yates) (as John)
Dustin Hoffman (right) with Warren Beatty in Ishtar

1970  Un dollaro per 7 vigliacchi (El millón de Madigan; Madigan’s Millions) (Ash, Gentili, and Praeger—produced in 1967) (as Jason Fisher); Little Big Man (Arthur Penn) (as Jack Crabb); Arthur Penn Films “Little Big Man” (Ermitt—doc); Arthur Penn 1922—: Themes and Variants (Hughes—doc)

1971  Who Is Harry Kellerman and Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things about Me? (Grosbard) (as George Sacourey); Straw Dogs (Peckinpah) (as David Sumner)

1972  Alfredo Alfredo (Germi) (title role)

1973  Papillon (Schaffner) (as Louis Dega); Sunday Father (Leaf—short)

1974  Lenny (Fosse) (as Lenny Bruce)

1975  Lost in the Garden of the World (Williams) (as interviewee)

1976  All the President’s Men (Pakula) (as Carl Bernstein); Marathon Man (Schlesinger) (as Babe Levy)

1978  Straight Time (Grosbard) (as Max Dembo, + initial d)

1979  Agatha (Apted) (as Wally Stanton); Kramer vs. Kramer (Benton) (as Ted Kramer)

1982  Tootsie (Pollack) (as Michael Dorsey/Dorothy Michaels, + co-pr)

1983  The Best of Everything (Johnson)

1985  Death of a Salesman (Schlondorff—for TV) (as Willie Loman); Private Conversations (Blackwood—doc)

1987  Ishtar (Elaine May) (as Chuck Clarke)

1988  Rain Man (Levinson) (as Raymond Babbitt)

1989  Family Business (Lumet) (as Vito McMullen); Common Threads (Epstein and Friedman—doc) (as narrator)

1990  Dick Tracy (Beatty) (as Mumbles)

1991  Billy Bathgate (Benton) (as Dutch Schultz); Hook (Spielberg) (as Captain Hook)

1993  Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (as voice)

1992  Hero (Accidental Hero) (Frears) (as Bernie LaPlante)

1995  Outbreak (Petersen) (as Colonel Sam Daniels M.D.)

1996  American Buffalo (Corrente) (as Teach); Sleepers (Levinson) (Danny Snyder)

1997  Mad City (as Max Brackett); Wag the Dog (Levinson) (as Stanley Motts)

1998  Sphere (Levinson) (as Norman Johnson); Messenger: The Story of Joan of Arc (Besson) (as The Conscience)

1999  Cosm (de Bont); A Salute to Dustin Hoffman (Honoree)
Films as Producer:

1999  A Walk on the Moon; The Furies; The Devil’s Arithmetic
(for TV —ex pr)

Publications

By HOFFMAN: articles—

Interview, in Interview (New York), June 1976.

Interview with Mark Rowland, in American Film (Los Angeles), December 1988.

On HOFFMAN: books—

Cornelsen, Peter, Dustin Hoffman, Bergisch Gladbach, 1980.

On HOFFMAN: articles—

* * *

Dustin Hoffman was the first American movie star to apply the intensity of Method acting to the kind of sex-struck nebbishes Robert Morse played in commercial comedies and Woody Allen played in his stand-up/slapstick comedies. Hoffman’s best scenes as Benjamin in The Graduate, the movie that catapulted this diminutive, unglamorous actor to unlikely and major stardom, are the comic seductions with Anne Bancroft. Benjamin’s adenoidal dimness is a great joke on innocence. We like him because he seems unworthy of this sophisticated catch. The basic deliberateness of Hoffman’s craft is clearer in his next picture, Midnight Cowboy, in which he gets into the crowskin of Ratso Rizzo, a seedy New York drifter who befriends Jon Voight’s Joe Buck, a newcomer trying to make it as a hustler. Hoffman as Rato practically plots the coordinates of corruption and unworldliness on graph paper—but expertly. Usually, catching the actor acting lessens the viewer’s enjoyment; Hoffman makes it work. This is not to say that his most intently acted performances lack depth. One of his finest performances is as Max Dembo in Ulu Grosbard’s too little seen Straight Time, a study of criminal psychology which eschews a co-star, instead displaying Hoffman in relation to a whole slate of superb supporting players, with every interaction revealing another layer of Dembo’s locked-in mentality. Here Hoffman merges his focus as an actor with Dembo’s bone-dry focus on burglary. The scene in which Dembo stays too long while robbing a jewelry store, and a consequent one in which he punishes the junkie getaway driver who panicked, are awesome in their daring.

In Tootsie, Sydney Pollack’s deserved smash-hit comedy, Hoffman parodied his own reputation as a “difficult” actor. His Michael Dorsey cannot even get hired in commercials because, dressed up as a vegetable, he argued with a director about its motivation. He can only land a role in a soap opera by reading for it in drag as “Dorothy Michaels.” Hoffman’s vanity lies mainly in his reputation as a fine actor, and he does not hesitate to make Dorothy womanly in an appropriately ungaily way. His scrupulous self-satire combined with Pollack’s satirical insider’s view of an actor’s lot, enabled the star to give the most entertaining as well as the most thoroughly thought-out male drag performance in movie history. Watching him try to reach the challenging blond beauty (Jessica Lange) who is his soap co-star while masquerading as the woman she has come to confide in like a mother, gives the wild transvestite comedy the added dimension of an unusually textured and poignant romantic comedy.

Hoffman’s Dorothy yields more depth than the honed pyrotechnics of his autistic savant Raymond in Barry Levinson’s Rain Man which, despite the plaudits and prizes, is in reality, a very wet commercial picture about redemption through sacrifice. You have to watch Hoffman because Raymond’s affliction means he cannot integrate himself into the scenes—you cannot take him for granted. With the incentive of showing up his much younger, “hot” co-star, Tom Cruise, Hoffman’s performance is at once meticulously crafted and totally shameless. He is better in 1989’s Family Business, as Vito, a hard-working merchant caught between Sean Connery as his elementally attractive criminal father and Matthew Broderick as his own self-righteous son who is infatuated with Connery. Perhaps Hoffman’s performance did not get the attention it deserved for the very reason that it is realistic and uncharacteristically unassumimg in its demonstration of how Vito’s rage and frustration are inextricable from his love for his son. We believe that he would do anything for him, and feel affronted by the son’s contempt.

As the journalist on the trail of Agatha Christie in the ill-received Agatha, the mechanics of his technique allow Hoffman to rise to the challenge of Vanessa Redgrave’s emotionally overwrought novelist, but he seemed less suited to his big action hits, _Papillon, Marathon Man, Outbreak_, and _Sphere_. Furthermore, when he is too openly ingratiating, as in _Kramer vs. Kramer_, his effort can all be waste, though we are happy to watch him go through ancient shtick—single father unable to cook a meal—that we would hesitate to endure in the hands of another actor. Then, too, Hoffman lacks the expansiveness of personality that can overcome fundamental miscasting, leaving him reliant on technique and hard work in a film such as _Lenny_. His attempt to portray Lenny Bruce, the foul-mouthed junkie who shone like the white underbelly of show biz, was something of a _tour de force_, rewarded with an Oscar nomination but ill-received by many who felt his impersonation a failure to get under Bruce’s skin. The actor’s delight in disguise has seduced him into frivolous, villainous grotesques such as Mumbles in _Dick Tracy_ and the flamboyant Captain Hook, while his occasional latter-day tendency to style himself, unnecessarily, as an elder statesman, unbalanced the three-man character study of _American Buffalo_, and his over-the-top courtroom cameo for Barry Levinson in _Sleepers_. So much for the caveats. The less dynamic and obtusive he wills himself to appear, the more concrete and absorbing is his performance. His expertly serio-comic, exaggerated ne’er-do-well, Bernie LaPlante in _Hero_ suggested an older, more robust and slightly cleaner Ratso Rizzo, while one of his least remarked but most authentic performances surfaced in _Mad City_. His has-been TV reporter, carelessly exploiting the desperation of John Travolta’s hostage-taking loser, exemplifies that Hoffman is now at his best as shrewdly observed, ignoble and self-absorbed men under explicitly contemporary pressures, characters he nails with his dogged and dispassionate performances. Underaken as an inexpensive, quickly-filmed wheeze with Levinson, back-to-back with their labors on the bloated sci-fi thriller _Sphere_, the actor’s mischievous impersonation of an arrogant, self-glorying Hollywood hack producer in _Wag the Dog_, staging a phony war for his own ends but blind to the bigger picture and his own ultimate expendability, offered the unique pleasure of a toe-to-toe with Robert de Niro, another giant whose indifference to appearing charming made their teaming irresistibly funny and interesting.

Dustin Hoffman has remained a star of substance and weight for 33 years in the face of changing trends and it is not difficult to see why. His command of himself is absolute, his presence comfortingly familiar (cf. Robert Redford, Harrison Ford, the advantage of whose glamour he never had), his skills and intelligence married to the right role make him an _actor_ rather than a movie star. Whatever his identifiable shortcomings, he always works hard in the attempt to deliver a considered performance and, best of all, while he might sometimes be predictable, he is never boring.

—Alan Dale, updated by Robyn Karney

HOLDEN, William

Nationality: American.  Born: William Franklin Beedle Jr. in O’Fallon, Illinois, 17 April 1918.  Education: Attended South Pasadena High School and Pasadena Junior College, California.  Family: Married the actress Brenda Marshall, 1941 (divorced 1971), sons: Peter and Scott.  Career: 1938—stage debut in _Manya_ at Pasadena Playhouse workshop theater; short Paramount contract and film debut in _Prison Farm_; 1942–45—served in U.S. Army: lieutenant; 1945—reentered films with Columbia; 1950s—TV actor and narrator in documentaries.  Awards: Best Actor Academy Award, for _Stalag 17_, 1953; co-recipient, Special Jury Prize for Ensemble Acting, Venice Festival, for _Executive Suite_, 1954.  Died: In Santa Monica, California, 12 November 1981.

Films as Actor:

1938 _Prison Farm_ (Louis King) (as an inmate)
1939 _Million Dollar Legs_ (Dmytryk) (as a graduate); _Golden Boy_ (Mamoulian) (as Joe Bonaparte)
1940 _Each Dawn I Die_ (Keighley) (bit role); _Invisible Stripes_ (Lloyd Bacon) (as Tim Taylor); _Our Town_ (Sam Wood) (as George Gibbs); _Those Were the Days_ (J. T. Reed) (as P. J. ‘’Petey’’ Simmons); _Arizona_ (Ruggles) (as Peter Municie)
1941 _I Wanted Wings_ (Leisen) (as Jeff Young); _Texas_ (George Marshall) (as Dan Thomas)
1942 _The Remarkable Andrew_ (Heisler) (as Andrew Long); _The Fleet’s In_ (Schertzinger) (as Casey Kirby); _Meet the Stewarts_ (Alfred E. Green) (as Michael Stewart)
1943 _Young and Willing_ (E. H. Griffith) (as Norman Reese)
1947 _Blaze of Noon_ (Farrow) (as Colin McDonald); _Dear Ruth_ (William Russell) (as Lt. William Seacroft); _Variety Girl_ (George Marshall) (appearance)
1948 _Rachel and the Stranger_ (Norman Foster) (as Big Davey); _Apartment for Peggy_ (Seaton) (as Jason); _The Man from Colorado_ (Levin) (as Captain Del Stewart)
1949 _The Dark Past_ (Maté) (as Al Walker); _Streets of Laredo_ (Fenton) (as Jim Dawkins); _Miss Grant Takes Richmond_ (Lloyd Bacon) (as Dick Richmond); _Dear Wife_ (Haydn) (as Bill Seacroft)
1950 _Father Is a Bachelor_ (Norman Foster and Berlin) (as Jimmy Rutledge); _Sunset Boulevard_ (Wilder) (as Joe Gillis); _Union Station_ (Maté) (as Lt. William Calhoun); _Born Yesterday_ (Cukor) (as Paul Verall)
1951 _Force of Arms_ (Curtiz) (as Peterson); _Submarine Command_ (Farrow) (as Commander White)
1952 _Boots Malone_ (Dieterle) (title role); _The Turning Point_ (Dieterle) (as Jerry McKibben)
1953 _Stalag 17_ (Wilder) (as Sefton); _The Moon Is Blue_ (Preminger) (as Donald Gresham); _Forever Female_ (Rapper) (as Stanley Krown); _Escape from Fort Bravo_ (John Sturges) (as Capt. Roper)
1954 _Executive Suite_ (Wise) (as McDonald Walling); _Sabrina_ (Wilder) (as David Larrabee); _The Country Girl_ (Seaton) (as Bernie Dodd); _Miyamoto Musashi_ (Samurai) (Inagaki) (as narrator)
1955 _The Bridges at Toko-Ri_ (Robson) (as Lt. Harry Brubaker); _Love Is a Many Splendored Thing_ (King) (as Mark Elliott); _Picnic_ (Logan) (as Hal Carter)
1956 _The Proud and the Profane_ (Seaton) (as Lt. Col. Colin Black); _Toward the Unknown_ (LeRoy) (as Maj. Lincoln Bond)
1957 _The Bridge on the River Kwai_ (Lean) (as Shears)
1958 The Key (Reed) (as David Ross)
1959 The Horse Soldiers (Ford) (as Maj. Henry Kendall)
1960 The World of Suzie Wong (Quine) (as Robert Lomax)
1962 Satan Never Sleeps (McCarey) (as Father O’Banion); The Counterfeit Traitor (Seaton) (as Eric Erickson); The Lion (Cardiff) (as Robert Hayward)
1964 Paris When It Sizzles (Quine) (as Richard Benson); The Seventh Dawn (Lewis Gilbert) (as Ferris)
1966 Alvarez Kelly (Dmytryk) (title role)
1967 Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as Ransome)
1968 The Devil’s Brigade (Mclaglen) (as Li. Col. Robert T. Frederick)
1969 The Wild Bunch (Peckinpah) (as Pike Bishop); The Christmas Tree (Terence Young) (as Laurent)
1971 Wild Rovers (Edwards) (as Ross Bodine)
1972 The Revengers (Daniel Mann) (as John Benedict)
1973 The Blue Knight (Robert Butler—for TV) (as Bumper Morgan); Breezy (Eastwood) (as Frank Harmon)
1974 Open Season (Collinson) (as Wolkowski); The Towering Inferno (Irwin Allen and Guillermin) (as Jim Duncan)
1976 Network (Lumet) (as Max Schumacher); 21 Hours at Munich (William A. Graham—for TV) (as Manfred Schreiber)
1978 Damien—Omen II (Taylor) (as Richard Thorn); Fedora (Wilder) (as Barry Detweiler)
1979 Ashanti (Fleischer) (as Jim Sandell)
1980 The Earthling (Collinson) (as Patrick Foley); When Time Ran Out (Goldstone) (as Shelby Gilmore)
1981 S.O.B. (Edwards) (as Tim Culley)

Publications

By HOLDEN: article—

“’I’m Old-Fashioned—and This Is Why,’” in Films and Filming (London), January 1961.

On HOLDEN: books—

On HOLDEN: articles—

Obituary, in Maclean’s (Toronto), 28 December 1981.
Stars (Mariembourg), no. 17, Autumn 1993.

In the truest sense of a misused phrase, it was impossible to dislike William Holden. Enshrining the philosophy of “Never apologize, never explain,” his screen character epitomized the engagingly unreliable drinking pal or feckless nephew to whom one lends money, confident the loan will be neither repaid nor—more importantly—unreliable drinking pal or feckless nephew to whom one lends money, confident the loan will be neither repaid nor—more importantly—resented. A Holden character seldom descended to self-pity, or flinched from the worst results of rapacity, superficiality, or cowardice. Paradoxically, audiences were convinced by this cordial venality that under the chromium shell hid a good man awaiting rescue, a hero who had everything but for whom

In 1939, when he slipped into Golden Boy by the back door, after Warner Brothers’ refusal to lend Columbia the play’s original star, John Garfield, Hollywood had few roles for the uncultured and weak-willed wise guys Holden was later to play with such ease. A flop as O’Dell’s Italian working-class hero, torn between boxing and the violin, Holden marked time in unmemorable Westerns and comedies until Montgomery Clift’s last-minute defection from Billy Wilder’s Sunset Boulevard gave Holden the sleazy screenwriter role.

His Joe Gillis, an amalgam of Pat Hobby and Sammy Glick, is the faultlessly realized portrait of a Hollywood loser whose ambitions have shrunk to a second-hand Oldsmobile and half a feature credit. But even shot dead and floating in Gloria Swanson’s pool, he can still, in a sardonic commentary, view his fate with uncontrived irony.

Since writing a part with Holden in mind must have been a scenarist’s nightmare, many of his best roles came, like that in Sunset Boulevard, on the rebound. Wilder wanted Charlton Heston for the prison camp profiteer Sefton in Stalag 17, and favored someone younger for Sabrina until Cary Grant’s replacement by Humphrey Bogart dictated an older man for his playboy brother. Yet for both roles he seems the natural choice. Our belief in Holden’s unflinching opportunism convinces us that Sefton should be more able than his fellow prisoners to spot the spy in their midst, and as David Larrabee, a thoroughbred stallion permanently at stud among the organdied daughters of Long Island, Holden catches the exact balance of tarnished golden boy and calculating seducer.

Holden was seldom convincing as a man who gave orders. No army would follow an officer so patently protective of his own skin. Nevertheless, he often played such roles: a cavalry captain in Escape from Fort Bravo, a jet pilot in The Bridges at Toko-Ri, an infantry officer in The Devil’s Brigade and The Bridge on the River Kwai, and a cop who coped efficiently, if skeptically, with his duty in The Blue Knight. Only John Ford saw more in this character and made him, in The Horse Soldiers, a pacifist military doctor grappling with John Wayne’s hard-nosed Civil War raider, a minor milestone in Holden’s career.

One of the handsomest men ever to grace a movie screen, the Adonis-like Holden seemed ill-at-ease with his physical perfection, as if it were an impediment to being taken seriously as an actor. As with Robert Taylor and Montgomery Clift, two other stars whose personas were linked to their exquisiteness, Holden seemed less persuasive with the passage of time. With a few graceful exceptions, Holden’s work as a character-star from the sixties onward seems curiously uncommitted and unfocused. As a leading man, Holden’s key role as Hal, the aging charm boy of Picnic, in which Holden is unforgettable as a self-conscious drifter unable to recapture his college athletics halcyon days. After this overheated American in which Holden’s sensuous body language underscored by “Moonglow” ignited the libidos of an entire Kansas town, and after that soggy valentine to miscegenation, Love Is A Many Splendorous Thing, this star’s charisma flickered on the back burner until he reemerged as a noticeably aged, somewhat burned-out leading man.

Still billed above the title, Holden stopped coasting long enough to unleash some staggering achievements in his twilight years. Amidst the raging violence of The Wild Bunch, and the hyperbolic fever of Network, Holden functions as a voice of reason and grounds both of these classic exercises in hysteria in a discernible reality. Ineffably sad-looking, Holden reaches out to the audience in Fedora, The Blue Knight, and Wild Rovers with intimations of his own mortality. In his final film, Blake Edwards’s nihilistic black comedy S.O.B., he could play a one-bottle and two-women-a-day man with complete credibility, but by now the residue of his cocky swagger from Stalag 17 could be viewed as a defense mechanism against loneliness. We could see more clearly that his trademark cynicism was always a pose. In his late career knock-outs, Holden seems to be saying that he was a man who had everything but for whom everything was somehow not enough. Whatever psychological emptiness Holden carried around inside himself, neither a distinguished movie career nor alcoholic marathons could fill the void. On-screen, at least, this tarnished hero could redeem himself by fadeout. His legacy is an unusual one for a major star—an anarchoic presence embraced by filmgoers despite an angles-playing pragmatism that takes a circuitous route from the self-serving to the grudgingly altruistic.

—John Baxter, updated by Robert Pardi

HOLLIDAY, Judy

Judy Holliday did not star in many films—only seven. In her short career, however, she won an Academy Award for her first starring role in Born Yesterday. The first indication that Judy had a unique quality was evidenced in her part in Adam’s Rib. She practically stole the show from Katharine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy. It was on Katharine Hepburn’s insistence that Holliday got the part in Born Yesterday as a ploy to ensure that she got the part of Billie Dawn in Born Yesterday, a part she made famous on Broadway. Born Yesterday cast Holliday as a dumb blonde, but that is really an unfair description. Billie Dawn is not dumb, merely uneducated. As the film progresses we see through Holliday’s fine acting a growth of character that an education can provide.

Holliday was a stunning success as Billie Dawn and a successful career seemed eminent. But it was short-lived. Her fame brought her to the attention of the U.S. Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities. In addition to Holliday’s sympathy for certain left-wing or liberal causes, Born Yesterday was being criticized in certain right-wing circles as communist propaganda. A lot of background maneuvering relieved some of the pressure on Holliday’s career, and she filmed The Marrying Kind, a comedy/drama that was a social commentary on the pressures of the working class. Once again Holliday gave a stunning performance in a part quite different from that in Born Yesterday. Holliday displayed a wide acting range and proved that she was able to handle drama as well as comedy. Judy’s unofficial blacklisting ended with It Should Happen to You, her fourth film with the director George Cukor. Holliday was cast as Gladys Glover, a woman striving to become famous. Gladys wasn’t a dumb blonde exactly: she was more of an oddball. Judy took a mediocre script and turned her character into a dazzling kook.

It is discouraging, however, that Hollywood was so shallow that an actress like Judy Holliday succeeds as one character and is forever cast in that mold. In Adam’s Rib, Born Yesterday, and The Marrying Kind, Holliday demonstrated that she was an accomplished actress who could display a wide range of emotion and a naive, womanly innocence. It was unfortunate that her death was so untimely. It would have been interesting to see Holliday in films that she chose for herself.

—Maryann Oshana

HOMOLKA, Oscar

Nationality: Austrian. Born: Vienna, Austria, 12 August 1898 (some sources give 1901 and 1903). Education: Attended the Royal Dramatic Academy, Vienna. Military Service: Served in the Austrian Army during World War I. Family: Married 1) the actress Grete Mosheim (divorced); 2) the actress Vally Hatvany, 1937 (died 1938); 3) Florence Meyer (divorced), sons: Vincent, Laurence; 4) the actress Joan Tetzel, 1949 (died 1977).

Career: On stage in Edward II (also co-director with Brecht) in Munich, then member for ten years of Max Reinhardt’s troupe in Berlin; 1926—film debut in Die Abenteurer eines Zehnmarkscheines; 1932—directed stage play Pygmalion; 1933—left Germany with rise of the Nazis, and worked in the United Kingdom; 1935—West End debut in Close Quarters; 1936–66—lived and worked in the United States; 1940—Broadway debut in Grey Farm; later acted on stage in I Remember Mama, 1944 and in film version, 1948, and Rashomon, 1959; lived in England after 1966.

Films as Actor:

1926 Die Abenteurer eines Zehnmarkscheines (K13 513) (Viertel); Bremende Grenze (Wachnec); Das Mädchen ohne Heimat (Vom Freudenhaus in die Ehe; Aftemath) (David)
1927 Dirntentragödie (Women without Men; The Tragedy of the Street) (Rahn); Fürst oder Clown (Rasumny); Die heilige Lüge (Holger-Madsen); Der Kampf des Donald Westhof (Wendhausen); Die Leibeigenen (Eichberg); Petronella (Schwartz); Regine, die Tragödie einer Frau (Waschnek); Schinderhannes (The Prince of Rogues) (Bernhardt)
1928 Die Rothaussgasse (Oswald)
1929 Masken (Meiren); Revolte im Erziehungshaus (Asagaroff)
1930 Hokuspokus (Der Prozess der Kitty Kellermann; Hocuspocus) (Ucicky); Dreyfus (The Dreyfus Case) (Oswald) (as Esterhazy)
1931, 14, die letzten Tage vor dem Weltbrand (Oswald); Der Wege nach Rio (Oswald); Zwischen Nacht und Morgen (Dirntentragödie) (Lamprecht); Im Geheimdienst (In the Employ of the Secret Service) (Ucicky); Nachtkolonne (Bauer); Die Nächte von Port Said (Mittler)
1932 Spione am Werk (Spies at Work) (Lamprecht)
1933 Moral und Liebe (Jacoby); Unsichtbare Gegner (Katscher)
1936 Rhodes (Rhodes of Africa) (Viertel) (as Paul Kruger); Sabotage (The Woman Alone) (Hitchcock) (as Carl Verloc); Everything Is Thunder (Rosmer)
1937 Ebb Tide (Hogan)
1940 Seven Sinners (Garnett); Comrade X (King Vidor)
1941 The Invisible Woman (Sutherland); Rage in Heaven (Van Dyke); Ball of Fire (Hawks) (as Prof. Gurkakoff)
1943 Mission to Moscow (Sutherland) (as Litvinoff); Hostages (Tuttle)
1946 The Shop at Sly Corner (The Code of Scotland Yard) (King)
1948 I Remember Mama (Stevens) (as Uncle Chris)
1949 Anna Lucasta (Rapper)
1950 The White Tower (Tetzlaff)
1951 Der schweigende Mund (Hartl)
1952 Top Secret (Mr. Potts Goes to Moscow) (Zampi)
1953 The House of the Arrow (Anderson)
1954 Prisoner of War (Marton)
1955 The Seven Year Itch (Wildier)
1956 War and Peace (King Vidor) (as Gen. Kutuzov)
1957 A Farewell to Arms (Charles Vidor)
1959 The Key (Reed) (as Van Dam)
1959 La tempest (The Tempest) (Lattuada) (as Savelic)
1961 Mr. Sardonicus (Castle) (as Krull)
1962 Boys’ Night Out (Gordon) (as Dr. Prokosch); The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm (Levin) (as the Duke); The Mooncussers (Neilson—for TV)
1964 The Long Ships (Cardiff) (as Krok); Ambassador at Large (Schaffner—for TV)
1965 Joy in the Morning (Segal) (as Stan Pulaski)
1966 Funeral in Berlin (Hamilton) (as Col. Stok)
1967 The Happening (Silverstein) (as Sam); Billion Dollar Brain (Russell) (as Col. Stok)
1968 The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Jarrott—for TV)
1969 Assignment to Kill (Reynolds) (as Inspector Ruff); The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes) (as The Commissar)
1970 Song of Norway (Stone) (as Engstrand); The Executioner (Wanamaker) (as Racovsky)
1974 The Tamarind Seed (Edwards) (as Gen. Golitsyn)
1975 One of Our Own (Sarafian—for TV)

Publications

On HOMOLKA: article—

Profile, in The New Yorker, 2 December 1944.
Information (Wiesbaden), July 1976.

* * *

Arriving in Germany from Vienna in 1918, Oscar Homolka soon achieved success on the stage, where for ten years he was a leading man in Max Reinhardt’s famous theatrical troupe. In 1926 Homolka began his long film career, one that became international when, in 1933, Hitler assumed power. Homolka fled to Paris, then London where his career soon resumed on the stage and in film.

Soon thereafter he was invited to the United States where he spent most of the next 14 years as a character actor, generally playing a cruel or bumbling European whose thick accent and thicker eyebrows were the key defining attributes. Predictably, Hollywood loved him most as the blustering Uncle Chris in I Remember Mama. In a 1944 New Yorker profile Homolka is quoted thus, “‘In Europe I played Othello, but in American pictures... I am just the mean fellow who leers at the little heroine and dies hideously in the end.’”

Howard Hawks, thankfully, showed us another side of Homolka when he cast him in Ball of Fire as the pipe-sucking Professor...
Gurkakoff, one of eight hermetic encyclopedia writers childishly lovestruck by Barbara Stanwyck’s nightclub singer, Sugarpuss O’Shea.

Beginning in 1951, Homolka began working outside the United States. In the mid-1960s he settled in England where once again he specialized in playing the heavy foreign adversary. In both Funeral in Berlin and Billion Dollar Brain he played the Russian intelligence officer Stok, adversary to Michael Caine’s Harry Palmer. In Blake Edwards’s The Tamarind Seed he was the nasty Russian General Golitsyn. His most famous Russian characterization, however, was as Tolsky’s General Kutuzov in King Vidor’s version of War and Peace. His gravel-voiced Russian commandant brought him excellent notices; in retrospect, the performance seems as gratuitous in its showiness as the film itself.

Such, however, cannot be said of his best screen role, that of Verloc in Alfred Hitchcock’s Sabotage. Rather than cast him as a stereotypical German heavy, Hitchcock, while never excusing Verloc’s guilt, perversely endowed this character with a sympathetic edge. Verloc is guilty of sabotage, but is also clearly a man trapped between loyalties. Homolka’s tense and frightened performance heightens this complex conception. He literally seems to shrink with guilt over his role in the death of his young brother-in-law, Stevie. Verloc’s death, visualized in Hitchcock’s famous dinner-table montage, seems an act of mercy. In these last moments, Homolka effectively releases the tensions built up across the narrative and greets death with a peculiar calm.

—Doug Tomlinson

HOPKINS, (Sir) Anthony

Films as Actor:

1967 The White Bus (Anderson) (as Brechtian)
1968 The Lion in Winter (Harvey) (as Richard the Lion-Hearted)
1969 Hamlet (Richardson) (as Claudius); The Looking Glass War (Pierian) (as John Avery)
1971 When Eight Bells Toll (Périer) (as Philip Calvert)
1972 Young Winston (Attenborough) (as David Lloyd George)
1973 A Doll’s House (Garland) (as Torvald Helmer)
1974 The Girl from Petrovka (Miller) (as Costya); Juggernaut (Lester) (as Supt. John McLeod); All Creatures Great and Small (Whatham) (as Siegfried Farnon)
1976 Dark Victory (Butler—for TV) (as Michael); Victory at Entebbe (Chomsky—for TV) (as Yitzhak Rabin); The Lindbergh Kidnapping Case (Kulik—for TV) (as Bruno Hauptmann)
1977 Audrey Rose (Wise) (as Elliot Hoover); A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as Lt. Col. John Frost)
1978 Magic (Attenborough) (as Corky/Fats); International Velvet (Forbes) (as Capt. Johnson); Kean (Jones—for TV) (title role)
1979 Mayflower: The Pilgrim’s Adventure (Schafer—for TV) (as Capt. Jones)
1980 The Elephant Man (Lynch) (as Frederick Treves); A Change of Seasons (Richard Lang) (as Adam Evans)
1981 The Bunker (Schafer—for TV) (as Adolf Hitler); Othello (Miller—for TV) (title role); Peter and Paul (Day—for TV) (as St. Peter)
1983 The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Tuchner—for TV) (as Quasimodo)
1984 The Bounty (Donaldson) (as Captain Bligh); Io e il duce (Mussolini and I) (Negrin—for TV) (as Count Ciano); A Married Man (Davies and Jarrott—for TV) (as John Strickland)
1985 Arch of Triumph (Hussein—for TV) (as Dr. Ravic); Guilty Conscience (Greene—for TV) (as Arthur Janinson); Heartland (Billington—for TV)
1986 Blunt (Glenister—for TV) (as Guy Burgess); 84 Charing Cross Road (Jones) (as Frank Doel); The Good Father (Newell) (as Bill Hooper)
1987 The Dawning (Knights) (as Major Angus Barry/Cassius); The Tenth Man (Gold—for TV) (as Chavel); Across the Lake (Maylam—for TV) (as Donald Campbell)
1989 A Chorus of Disapproval (Winner) (as Dafyddd Ap Llewellyn)
1990 Desperate Hours (Cimino) (as Tim Cornell); One Man’s War (Toledo—for TV) (as Joel Filartiga)
1991 The Silence of the Lambs (Jonathan Demme) (as Dr. Hannibal “Cannibal” Lecter)
1992 Howards End (Ivy) (as Henry Wilcox); Freejack (Murphy) (as McCandless); The Efficiency Expert (Spotswood) (Joffe) (as Wallace); Chaplin (Attenborough) (as George Hayden); Brum Stoker’s Dracula (Coppola) (as Prof. Abraham Van Helising); To Be the Best (Wharmby—for TV) (as Jack Figg)
1993 The Remains of the Day (Ivy) (as Stevens); The Trial (David Jones) (as the priest); Shadowlands (Attenborough) (as Jack Lewis); . . . und der Himmel steht still (The Innocent) (Schlesinger) (as Bob Glass); Selected Exits (Tristram Powell—for TV) (as Gwyn Thomas); Earth and the American Dream (Courtoure—doc) (voice only)
1994 The Road to Wellville (Parker) (as Dr. John Harvey Kellogg); Legends of the Fall (Zwick) (as Colonel William Ludlow)
1995 Nixon (Stone) (title role)
1996 Marlon Brando: The Wild One (Joyce—for TV) (as himself); Surviving Picasso (Ivy) (as Pablo Picasso)
1997 The Edge (Tamahori) (as Charles Morse); Amistad (Spielberg) (as John Quincy Adams)
Anthony Hopkins (left) and Alec Baldwin in The Edge

1998 Meet Joe Black (Brest, Smithee) (as William Parrish); The Mask of Zorro (Campbell) (as Don Diego de la Vega/Zorro)
1999 Siegfried & Roy: The Magic Box (Leonard) (as Narrator); Instinct (Turtletaub) (as Ethan Powell); Titus (Taymor) (as Titus)
2000 Mission Impossible 2 (Woo) (as IMF chief); Hannibal (Scott) (as Dr. Hannibal Lecter)

Films as Director:

1990 Dylan Thomas: Return Journey
1995 August (+ ro as Ieuan Davies)

Publications

By HOPKINS: book—

By HOPKINS: articles—

Interview with Lawrence Grobel, in Playboy (Chicago), March 1994.

On HOPKINS: books—

On HOPKINS: articles—

Ecran (Paris), May 1979.
Films Illustrated (London), December 1980.

* * *

Anthony Hopkins appeared in films for two decades without advancing to screen stardom. His performances, many of them in smaller-budget films, were lauded by critics, but audiences did not eagerly await his next movie appearance or place his name on lists of screen favorites. Perhaps his problem was that he lacked an identifiable persona and never developed into a Hollywood “type”; he seemed always to be hiding in period costumes or thick makeup. All the years of relative anonymity ended with his Oscar-winning performance in the most abhorrent role of his career, that of Hannibal Lecter in The Silence of the Lambs, one of the most popular and well-publicized pictures of 1991.

Now, in middle age, Hopkins’s rugged looks and extraordinarily appealing voice (which often have led critics and fans to comparisons with fellow Welshman Richard Burton) are adding zest to an array of projects with which he has been associated, whether they be television movies, prestige art films, or extravagant Hollywood productions. His authoritative presence and incomparable acting ability are the elements which make him a standout performer, but it is his screen magnetism, displayed finally in choice star roles, which made him an international movie star.

Like his mentor Laurence Olivier, who often acted while camouflaged in thick makeup, Hopkins acquired a remarkable chameleon quality in his acting quite early in his career and kept with it for years. This has suited him particularly when taking on a series of biographical roles—Lloyd George, Adolf Hitler, Bruno Hauptmann, Donald Campbell, Captain Bligh, Yitzhak Rabin, Richard the Lion-Hearted, and even Richard Nixon—as well as with outrageous fictional grotesques such as Quasimodo, Lambert Le Roux, and Hannibal Lecter.

Besides the historical pieces in which he appeared, his pre-1990s performances do include a few unbalanced characters who may have laid a foundation for him to become celluloid’s most credible cannibal killer. For instance, in Magic he played a demented ventriloquist, and in Audrey Rose he was a menacing stranger who claims a 12-year-old girl is his dead daughter reincarnated.

The international celebrity that he had sought since his humble, lower-middle-class boyhood in South Wales finally arrived with his chilling performance as a psychotic serial killer in The Silence of the Lambs. Hopkins’s definitive interpretation of the warped, nightmarish criminal who not only murders but also dines on his prey flabbergasted audiences. His odd facial expressions, and the wiggling of his tongue in an eerily manner, heavily contributed to the film’s well-earned status as a classic of the horror genre.

Hopkins’s two follow-up pictures were James Ivory’s Howards End and The Remains of the Day. These two cinematic gems (both of which co-starred Emma Thompson) made him a darling of the art-house crowd. In the first film, which is based on a novel of Edwardian England by E. M. Forster, he plays a widower with a mahogany veneer that hides a chip-board heart. The subtle bearing of Hopkins’s character underscores the snobbery among Britain’s classes of that time, and the repression of emotion that was called for by the existing social conventions. In the second film, Hopkins plays a tradition-bound head butler who sacrifices his personal emotions and desires in the line of duty. Both of these characters are quiet beings who internalize their feelings. As such, their on-screen depictions could well have been stiff, blank signposts in the hands of a lesser actor, but Hopkins made both into three-dimensional and exciting individuals.

Shadowlands brought Hopkins the opportunity to play a full-fledged romantic gentleman in the character of real-life British writer C. S. Lewis. For this film, Hopkins began as a rather stiff, cloistered middle-aged Oxford educator who flowers as he becomes infused with love for a forthright American poet (Debra Winger). Hopkins’s development from bookworm to enthusiastic lover showed audiences a most welcomed romantic quality. This role was, in a way, a graduated version or expansion of the character of the kindly bookstore salesman he played in 84 Charing Cross Road.

Hopkins is an actor who can take on most any role. His presence can even make an otherwise mundane film mandatory viewing. Such is the case in The Road to Wellville, a disappointing adaptation of T. Coraghessan Boyle’s comic novel, in which he transcends the poor script to give a delightfully animated, over-the-top performance—complete with silly, bucktoothed grin—as John H. Kellogg, the real-life inventor of corn flakes. In Legends of the Fall, the more sobering saga of early twentieth-century life in Montana, he is seen as the independent, feisty, and humanistic patriarch who has sired a trio of sons. In the latter part of this film, he is called upon to portray an elderly, partially paralyzed stroke victim who is left with marred speech. Under heavy makeup (again), he drags his disfigured body without ever losing his character’s sense of eminence and dignity. It is the sort of specialty role Olivier himself would have fancied.

One suspects that Olivier, a fine Titus Andronicus in Peter Brook’s memorable 1950s UK theatre production, would have approved heartily of Hopkins’ extraordinary turn-of-the-millennium performance as the increasingly deranged old Roman warrior in Titus, the bloodily vivid feature directing debut of Julie Taymor, who staged the musical The Lion King on both sides of the Atlantic. It marked Hopkins’ first encounter with Shakespeare for more than a decade when he had appeared in King Lear and Antony and Cleopatra back-to-back at the National Theatre. Before he completed filming Titus in Rome, Hopkins suddenly announced he was going to quit acting because he was disillusioned with his career. Later he claimed he’d been misquoted, and merely felt burned out and just needed a rest.

After averaging at least two films a year throughout most of the 1990s the workaholic Hopkins, who has moved full-time to Los Angeles, stopped taking major roles for 18 months. His movie comeback smacks of Hollywood opportunism and a very substantial payday, reprising the role of Dr. Lecter in the new film version of author Thomas Harris’s long-awaited Silence of the Lambs sequel, Neither original director Jonathan Demme nor co-star Jodie Foster decided to join him for the ride this time around.

—Quentin Falk

HOPKINS, Miriam

Films as Actress:

- 1928 The Home Girl (Lawrence—short)
- 1930 Fast and Loose (Newmeyer) (as Marion Lenox)
- 1931 The Smiling Lieutenant (Le Lieutenant souriant) (Lubitsch) (as Princess Anna); Twenty-Four Hours (The Hours Between) (Gering) (as Rosie Duggan)
- 1932 Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian) (as Ivy Pearson); Two Kinds of Women (DeMille) (as Emma Krull); Dancers in the Dark (Burton) (as Gloria Bishop); The World and the Flesh (Cromwell) (as Maria Yaskaya); Trouble in Paradise (Lubitsch) (as Lily Vanier)
- 1933 The Story of Temple Drake (Roberts) (as Louise Storr); Design for Living (Lubitsch) (as Gilda Farrell)
- 1934 All of Me (Flood) (as Lydia Darrow); She Loves Me Not (Nugent) (as Curly Flagg); The Richest Girl in the World (Seiter) (as Dorothy Hunter)
- 1935 Becky Sharp (Mamoulian) (title role); Barbery Coast (Hawks) (as Mary Rutledge “Swan”); Splendor (Nugent) (as Phyllis)
- 1936 These Three (Wyler) (as Martha Dobie); Men Are Not Gods (Reisch) (as Ann Williams)
- 1937 The Woman I Love (The Woman Between) (Litvak) (as Helene Maury); Woman Chases Man (Blystone) (as Virginia Travis); Wise Girl (Jason) (as Susan Fletcher)
- 1938 The Old Maid (Goulding) (as Delia Lovell)
- 1940 Virginia City (Curtiz) (as Julia Haynes); The Lady with Red Hair (Bernhardt) (as Mrs. Leslie Carter)
- 1942 A Gentleman after Dark (Marin) (as Flo Melton)
- 1943 Old Acquaintance (Sherman) (as Millie)
- 1944 Skirmish on the Home Front (short)
- 1949 The Heiress (Wyler) (as Lavinia Penniman)
- 1950 The Mating Season (Leisen) (as Fran Carleton)
- 1951 Carrie (Wyler) (as Julia Hartswood)
- 1952 The Outcasts of Poker Flat (Newman) (as Duchess)
- 1961 The Children’s Hour (The Loudest Whisper) (Wyler) (as Mrs. Lily Mortar)
- 1964 Fanny Hill (Fanny Hill: Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure) (Meyer) (as Maude Brown)
- 1965 The Chase (Penn) (as Mrs. Reeves)
- 1970 Comeback (Hollywood Horror House) (Wolfe)

Publications

On HOPKINS: article—

Linssen, Céline, "'Unfortunately, I Am No Gentleman,': Miriam Hopkins,” in Skrien (Amsterdam), August-September 1990.

Petite Miriam Hopkins commanded attention on-screen. Her Hollywood vogue lasted less than a decade, but Southern breeding and accent gave her work a no-nonsense graciousness which (particularly in her early films) proved attractively diverting.

Hopkins’s work in musical and, later, dramatic theater led to Paramount’s signing her in 1931. After a slow start, she essayed a succession of well-received portrayals and earned a top star position. She was Maurice Chevalier’s partner in The Smiling Lieutenant, the trollop in Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, a charming jewel thief in Trouble in Paradise: apparent versatility served to her advantage.

Miriam Hopkins
Actually, the same ladylike bitchiness characterized most of her screen work. By the mid-1930s, fewer scripts met with her approval, and she switched to Goldwyn Studios and later to Warners. She played Becky Sharp, patterned on Thackeray’s Vanity Fair, competing with the novelty of the first three-color process Technicolor feature. But These Three—Lillian Hellman’s The Children’s Hour reconstructed as a conventional triangle drama—displayed Hopkins at her best: likably crisp and energetic, capable of connecting with the emotional demands of the part.

She rivaled Bette Davis off and twice on-screen (in Old Acquaintance and The Old Maid) but Davis won the audience sympathy and critical praise, since Hopkins tended to overdramatize. Increasingly, Hopkins abandoned Hollywood for the stage; she had picked up a reputation for feuding with co-stars.

Her own temperament and bad judgment of material, as much as the decreasing demand for her brand of histrionics, virtually ended her film career by the 1940s. She returned later in occasional character parts as shrewish, meddlesome relatives in The Heiress, Carrie, and, oddly, the remake of The Children’s Hour.

—Richard Sater

HOPPER, Dennis

Nationality: American. Born: Dodge City, Kansas, 17 May 1936.

Career: Mid-1950s—appeared in repertory at Pasadena Playhouse, and studied acting with Dorothy McGuire and John Swope at Old Globe Theatre, San Diego; 1955—film debut in Rebel without a Cause; contract with Warner Brothers; sculptor and still photographer—several one-man shows of photographs; 1969—directed first film Easy Rider. Awards: Best Supporting Actor, National Society of Film Critics, and LA Film Critics, for Blue Velvet, 1986. Address: Box 1889, Taos, NM 87571, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1954 Johnny Guitar (Nicholas Ray) (bit as posse member)
1955 Rebel without a Cause (Nicholas Ray) (as Groon); I Died a Thousand Times (Heisler)
1956 Giant (Stevens) (as Jordan Benedict III); Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (John Sturges) (as Billy Clanton)
1957 No Man’s Road (Martinson—for TV); A Question of Loyalty (Doniger—for TV); The Story of Mankind (Irwin Allen) (as Napoleon); Sayonara (Logan) (as voice); The Young Land (Tezlafl) (as Hatfield Carnes)
1958 From Hell to Texas (Manhunt) (Hathaway) (as Tom Boyd); Key Witness (Karlsen) (as “Cowboy”)

1961 Night Tide (Harrington) (as Johnny Drake)
1963 Tarzan and Jane Regained . . . Sort of (Warhol)
1965 The Sons of Katie Elder (Hathaway) (as Dave Hastings)
1966 Queen of Blood (Planet of Blood) (Harrington) (as Paul)
1967 Cool Hand Luke (Roseberg) (as Max); The Glory Stompers (Lanza) (as Chino); Panic in the City (Davis) (as Goff)
1968 Hang ’em High (Post) (as the Prophet); Head (Rafelson)
1969 True Grit (Hathaway) (as Moon); The Festival Game (Klinger and Lytton) (as interviewee)
1971 Crush Proof (Ménil)
1973 Kid Blue (Frawley) (as Bickford Waner)
1975 James Dean, the First American Teenager (Connolly—for TV) (as interviewee)
1976 Mad Dog Morgan (Mora) (as Daniel Morgan); Tracks (Jaglom) (as Jack Falen)
1977 Der Amerikanische Freund (The American Friend) (Wenders) (as Tom Ripley); Les Apprentis sorciers (Cozarsinsky)
1978 Couleur chair (Weyergans); L’ordre et la sécurité du monde (d’Anna)
1979 Apocalypse Now (Coppola) (as freelance photographer)
1980 Wild Times (Compton—for TV)
1981 Renacida (Reborn) (Luna); King of the Mountain (Nosseck) (as Cal)
1982 Human Highway (Shakey) (as Cracker); The Osterman Weekend (Peckinpah) (as Richard Tremayne)
1983 Ramblefish (Coppola) (as Father)
1984 The Inside Man (Clegg) (as Miller)
1985 White Star (Klick); My Science Project (Betuel) (as Bob Roberts); Stark (Holcomb—for TV); O. C. and Stiggs (Alman) (as Sponson)
1986 Running Out of Luck (Temple) (as video director); The American Way (Riders of the Storm) (Phillips) (as Captain); Blue Velvet (Lynch) (as Frank Booth); Hoosiers (Best Shot) (Anspaugh) (as Shooter); The Texas Chainsaw Massacre Part II (Hooper) (as Lt. “Lefty” Enright)
1987 River’s Edge (Hunter) (as Feck); Black Widow (Rafelson) (as Ben Dumers); Straight to Hell (Cox) (as I. G. Farben); The Pick-Up Artist (Toback) (as Flash Jensen)
1988 Blood Red (Masterson) (as William Bradford Berrigan)
1989 Chattahoochee (Jackson) (as Walker Benson); Flashback (Amurri)
1990 Superstar: The Life and Times of Andy Warhol (Workman—doc); Black Leather Jacket (Mead) (as narrator); Motion and Emotion (as himself); Hollywood Mavericks (as himself)
1991 Paris Trout (Gyllenhaal—for TV) (title role); Indian Runner (Sean Penn) (as Caesar); A Hero of Our Time; Eye of the Storm (Zeltser) (as Marvin Gladstone); Doublecrossed (Young—for TV) (as Barry Seal)
1992 Sunset Heat (for TV); Nails (Flynn—for TV) (as Harry “Nails” Niles)
1993 Boiling Point (Harris) (as Red Diamond); Red Rock West (Dahl) (as Lyle); Super Mario Bros. (Morton and Jankel) (as King Koopa); True Romance (Scott) (as Clifford Worley); The Heart of Justice (Baretto—for TV) (as Austin Blair)
1994 Speed (de Bont) (as Howard Payne); Witch Hunt (Schrader—for TV) (as H. Phillip Lovecraft)
Dennis Hopper with Amy Irving in Carried Away

1995  Search and Destroy (Salle) (as Dr. Luther Waxling); Waterworld (Kevin Reynolds) (as Deacon); Basquiat (Build a Fort, Set It on Fire) (Schnabel)
1996  James Dean: A Portrait (Legon—doc) (as himself); Carried Away (Barreto) (as Joseph); Basquiat (Schnabel) (as Bruno Bischofberger); Samson and Delilah (Roeg—for TV) (as Generale Tariq)
1997  U2: A Year in Pop (Linnane) (as Narrator); Top of the World (Cold Cash, Showdown—for TV) (Furie) (as Charles Atlas); Road Ends (King) (as Gilchrist); Happy Birthday Elizabeth: A Celebration of Life (Margolis—for TV) (as himself); The Good Life (Harrison); Space Truckers (Star Truckers) (Gordon) (as John Canyon); The Blackout (Ferrara) (as Mickey Wayne)
1998  Wie man die Leute von ihrem Geld trennt (Vaske—for TV); Tycus (Putch) (as Peter Crawford); Black Dahlia (Laspina, Trow) (as Walter Pensky); Meet the Deedles (The Deedles) (Boyum) (as Frank Slater)
1999  The Venice Project (Dornhelm) (as Roland/Salvatore); The Source (Workman) (as William S. Burroughs); The Prophet's Game (Worth) (as Vincent Swan); Lured Innocence (Kawasaki) (as Rick Chambers); Jesus' Son (Maclean) (as Bill); Bad City Blues (Stevens) (as Cleveland Carter); Edtv (Howard) (as Hank); Straight Shooter (Bohn) (as Frank Hector)
2000  Lack of the Draw (Bercovici) (as Giani Ponti); Jason and the Argonauts (Willing—for TV) (as Pelias); Tycus (Putch) (as Peter Crawford); The Spreading Ground (Vanlint) (as Det. Ed Delongpre); Listen with Your Eyes (Benedikt—doc) (as himself); Knockaround Guys (Koppelman and Levien) (as Benny ‘Chains’ Demaret); Held for Ransom (Stanley) (as JD)
2001  Ticker (Pyun); LAPD: To Protect and to Serve (Anders)

Films as Director:

1969  Easy Rider (+ co-sc, ro as Billy)
1971  The Last Movie (+ co-sc, ro)
1980  Out of the Blue (+ ro as Don)
1988  Colors
1989  Backtrack (Catchfire) (d as ‘‘Allen Smithee’’ + ro as Milo)
HOPPER

1990 The Hot Spot
1994 Chasers (+ ro as Doggie)

Publications

By HOPPER: book—

Dennis Hopper: Out of the Sixties, Pasadena, California, 1986.

By HOPPER: articles—

‘‘Dennis Hopper, Riding High,’’ in Playboy (Chicago), December 1969.
‘‘How Far to the Last Movie?,” in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), October 1982.
‘‘Citizen Hopper,’’ interview with C. Hodenfield, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1986.
Interview with B. Kelley, in American Film (Los Angeles), March 1988.
Interview with David Denicolo, in Interview (New York), February 1990.
Interview with C. Bierinckx, in Film en Televisie + Video, February 1991.
‘‘Sean Penn,’’ interview with Julian Schnabel and Dennis Hopper, in Interview (New York), September 1991.
‘‘Question and Answer Game with Dennis Hopper,’’ interview in Blimp, Summer 1992.
‘‘Rebel-ution,’’ interview with Sean Penn, in Interview (New York), October 1994.
Interview in Vanity Fair (New York), November 1996.

On HOPPER: books—

On HOPPER: articles—

Macklin, F. A., ‘‘Easy Rider: The Initiation of Dennis Hopper,’’ in Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Fall 1969.
Burke, Tom, ‘‘Dennis Hopper Saves the Movies,’’ in Esquire (New York), December 1970.
Burns, Dan E., ‘‘Dennis Hopper’s The Last Movie: Beginning of the End,’’ in Literature/Film Quarterly, 1979.

Algar, N., ‘‘Hopper at Birmingham,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1982.
Scharres, B., ‘‘From Out of the Blue: The Return of Dennis Hopper,’’ in Journal of the University Film and Video Association (Carbondale, Illinois), Spring 1983.
Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1995.

* * *

Perhaps no other persona better signifies the lost idealism of the 1960s than that of Dennis Hopper. From his beginnings in Rebel without a Cause, Giant, and Gunfight at the O.K. Corral, to such surrealistic epics as Apocalypse Now and Blue Velvet, the sight of Hopper’s face alone now conjures up a menacing, violent, drug-ridden character.

As with many actors with such potent personas, Hopper’s has stemmed in large part from his offscreen behavior. His violent nature, as well as a long ordeal of substance abuse (both alcohol and cocaine), has led to a typecasting that generally results in Hopper playing a psychotic villain. A significant turning point came with Hopper’s 1969 directorial debut Easy Rider, in which he played a cynical biker in contrast to Peter Fonda’s idealistic biker. The film left an indelible impression on American popular culture, as an indictment of American conformity and a celebration of the drug counterculture permeating the nation at the time. Another standout performance came with Coppola’s Apocalypse Now, in which Hopper played a mad photographer—again, apparently his on-screen performance here (boisterous, drug-starved, and generally crazy) is very similar to that of his offscreen behavior during the shoot.

Another landmark and perhaps Hopper’s greatest “comeback” came with David Lynch’s Blue Velvet, in which he played a sadistic kidnapper who, among other things, inhales an unspecified gas and screams “Mommy” at Isabella Rossellini during bizarre sex scenes. A star was reborn, and Hopper’s performance became as much a conversation piece as the film itself. This lead to similarly offbeat performances in River’s Edge, Paris Trout, and Search and Destroy.

In the action thriller Speed, Hopper seemed to perfect the psychotic villain, and sharpened his black-humor edge. The film was a massive box-office success, and thus ensured further typecasting, this time in the most expensive movie ever made, Waterworld. Hopper managed to be surprisingly fresh in his role as a postapocalyptic psychotic villain, and proved the only decent element in an otherwise mediocre film. Not to be overlooked are the less widely seen but nonetheless fine performances delivered in The American Friend and Out of the Blue, among others. Ever since Easy Rider, virtually all of Hopper’s films suggest an overwhelming loss, the loss of faith, hope, and idealism so closely identified culturally with the 1960s.

—Matthew Hays
HOSKINS, Bob

Nationality: British. Born: Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk, 26 October 1942. Education: Attended Stroud Green School, Finsbury Park, London. Family: Married 1) Jane Livesey (divorced), two children; 2) Linda, two children. Career: Worked in a variety of jobs, then became actor with the Unity Theatre, London; later theater work for the Royal Court Theatre, the Royal Shakespeare Company, 1976, and the National Theatre, including Guy's and Dolls, 1982; 1972—film debut in Up the Front; 1974—in TV mini-series Shoulder to Shoulder, Pennies from Heaven, 1978, Flickers, 1981; 1987—directed first film, The Raggedy Rawney (released 1990). Awards: Best Actor Awards from Cannes Festival, New York Film Critics and Los Angeles Film Critics, and British Academy of Film and Television Arts Award for Best Actor, for Mona Lisa, 1986. Agent: Hutton Management Ltd., 200 Fulham Road, London SW10 9PN, England.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Up the Front (Kellet)</td>
<td>(as recruiting sergeant)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The National Health (Gold)</td>
<td>(as Foster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Inserts (Byrum)</td>
<td>(as Big Mac)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Royal Flash (Lester)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Zulu Dawn (Hickox)</td>
<td>(as Sgt. Maj. Williams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The Long Good Friday (Mackenzie)</td>
<td>(as Harold Shand)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Othello (Jonathan Miller—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Iago)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Pink Floyd—The Wall (Alan Parker)</td>
<td>(as rock 'n' roll manager)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>The Honorary Consul (Beyond the Limit) (Mackenzie)</td>
<td>(as Colonel Perez)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Cotton Club (Francis Ford Coppola)</td>
<td>(as Oneyy Madden); Lassiter (Roger Young) (as Becker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Brazil (Gilliam)</td>
<td>(as Spoor); The Dunera Boys (Lewin); Io e il duce (Mussolini and I) (Negrin—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Mona Lisa (Neil Jordan)</td>
<td>(as George); Sweet Liberty (Alda) (as Stanley Gould)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne (Clayton)</td>
<td>(as James Madden); A Prayer for the Dying (Hodges) (as Father Da Costa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis)</td>
<td>(as Eddie Valiant)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Heart Condition (Parriott)</td>
<td>(as Jack Mooney); Mermaids (Benjamin) (as Lou Landsky)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Shattered (Petersen)</td>
<td>(as Gus Kleins); The Favor, the Watch, and the Very Big Fish (Lewin) (as Louis Aubinard); Hook (Spielberg) (as Smee); The Inner Circle (Konchalovsky) (as Beria)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Passed Away (Peters)</td>
<td>(as Johnny Scanlan); Blue Ice (Mulcahy) (as Sam García)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Super Mario Bros. (Morton and Jankel)</td>
<td>(as Mario Mario)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>World War II: When Lions Roared (Sargent—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Winston Churchill); The Changeling (Simon Curtis—for TV) (as De Flores)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Nixon (Oliver Stone)</td>
<td>(as J. Edgar Hoover); Balto (Wells—animation) (as voice of Boris); Ding Dong (Todd Hughes) (as himself)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>The Secret Agent (Hampton)</td>
<td>(as Mr. Verloc, +co-pr); Michael (Ephron) (as Vartan Malt)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Spice World (Spiers)</td>
<td>(as himself); 24 7: Twenty Four Seven (TwentyFourSeven) (Meadows) (as Alan Darcy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>Parting Shot (Winner)</td>
<td>(as Gerd Layton); Captain Jack (Young) (as Jack); The Forgotten Toys (Ralph—for TV) (as Teddy); Cousin Bette (McAnuff) (as Cesar Crevel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>A Room for Romeo Brass (Meadows)</td>
<td>(as Home Tutor); Live Virgin (Marois) (as Joey Quinn); Let the Good Times Roll (Ibelhauptaite); Felicia's Journey (Egoyan) (as Joseph Ambrose Hilitch); David Copperfield (Curtis) (as Mr. Micawber—for TV); From Star Wars to Star Wars: The Story of Industrial Light and Magic (Kroll) (as himself); The White River Kid (Glimcher) (as Brother Edgar)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Don Quixote (Yates)</td>
<td>(as Sancho Panza—for TV); Nortiega: God's Favorite (Spottiswoode) (role—for TV); American Virgin (Live Virgin) (Marois) (as Joey); Enemy at the Gates (Annaud) (as Kruschev)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>The Raggedy Rawney (produced in 1987) (+ ro as Darky, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Rainbow (+ro as Frank Bailey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Tube Tales (with Gaby Dellal—for TV)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By HOSKINS: articles—

On HOSKINS: book—

On HOSKINS: articles—

* * *

Britain can boast precious few contemporary film stars with the screen presence to bring off that extraordinary, seemingly endless final shot in The Long Good Friday in which London gang boss Harold Shand is captured at the doors of the Savoy by the very IRA gang he believes he has just liquidated, and driven through the streets of the West End to an uncertain, but undoubtedly unpleasant, fate. If ever there was an illustration of Hoskins’s remark that “the camera can see you think” then this is it. Indeed his whole incarnation of Shand in The Long Good Friday amply justifies director John Mackenzie’s description of Hoskins as “the most exciting, explosive natural film acting talent that [Britain] has produced in years.”

Hoskins’s roles, and especially that of Shand, are often memorable for their Cagneyesque sense of barely suppressed violence, their sense of seething passions simmering just beneath the surface of working class resentment. But what is sometimes overlooked is his ability to incarnate ordinary, everyday people and, more to the point, to do so in a way that makes them compulsively interesting, watchable, and endearing. This was one of the reasons which made the television mini-series Flickers, about the early days of British cinema, and Pennies from Heaven (infinitely preferable in every way to the feature film version) such memorable experiences and, doubtless, such milestones in Hoskins’s acting career. As Kenith Trodd, the producer of the latter, put it, “because [Hoskins’s character] Arthur Parker was an Everyman figure he had to be both very squalid and very identifiable. He had to be loved, despised and pitied, and Bob had the quality to get that over.” The novelist and screenwriter William Boyd has also picked up on this quality in the actor; remarking on his “gritty ordinariness” and “potent banality” he notes that he has “an ability to play the ordinary man with a kind of tender veracity which is unrivaled.”

It should also be pointed out that Hoskins has by no means confined himself to roles such as these (although he brings many of the same qualities to them)—one has only to think of his gruff but fatherly doomed sergeant major in Zulu Dawn (writer-producer Cy Endfield’s “prequel” to Endfield’s smash hit Zulu); his portrayal of real-life gangster Owney Madden in The Cotton Club (a supporting performance that stole the film out from under its more famous star, Richard Gere); his Irish priest in A Prayer for the Dying; the neurotic Jewish screenwriter in Sweet Liberty; the fruity, power-mad J. Edgar Hoover in Stone’s Nixon; the low-key but villainous spy in The Secret Agent (a more faithful rendering of the Joseph Conrad novel on which Hitchcock’s classic Sabotage was also based); and especially the vulnerable, suffering character playing opposite Maggie Smith in The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne to realize just how versatile and adaptable an actor Hoskins actually is. And even if, in Who Framed Roger Rabbit?, Hollywood presented us with a rather different Hoskins to the inimitable Arthur Parker of Pennies or the lovable Cockney rogue who falls for a London streetwalker of Mona Lisa, both films are a remarkable testimony to Hoskins’s tremendous screen presence. Many other actors would have disappeared beneath the elaborate special effects of a Roger Rabbit, whereas Hoskins not only remains triumphantly visible, he shines.

The same is true of Hoskins’s performance as the cartoonish pirate Smee, aide to Dustin Hoffman’s insufferably mugging title character, in Spielberg’s Hook. All but Hoskins seem swallowed up in this gargantuanly bloated—and remarkably tedious—variation on the J. M. Barrie fable Peter Pan. Even Hoskins’s performance in Super Mario Bros., a feature film based on—of all things—a video game, has much to recommend it, although apart from the obvious money factor, why an actor of Hoskins’s gifts would consent to appear in like this and Spice World (the cinematic debut and swan song of the flash-in-the-pan British all-girl rock band The Spice Girls) is a mystery.

Only Hoskins’s turn in the television docudrama World War II: When Lions Roared evidenced the possibility that occasionally a role may indeed be beyond his versatile grasp. His performance as Churchill, especially when contrasted with Michael Caine’s remarkably well-realized Stalin, was more caricature of the man than realistic portrait.

Despite such lapses of taste in choosing projects such as the aforementioned Hook, Super Mario Bros, and Spice World, Hoskins’ star power has not been diminished, and he’s used it off and on to help resurrect the moribund British film industry by producing and/or writing and directing home grown productions of his own — such as The Raggedy Rawney, a labor of love for Hoskins that took several years to find a distributor, but was, unfortunately, not a financial success outside of its native land. He has also used his stature in the industry as a versatile character actor capable of carrying a film on his shoulders to help get works with seemingly limited commercial potential of other filmmakers off the ground, as with Canadian director Atom Egoyan’s potential of other filmmakers off the ground, as with Canadian Died: Plane shot down by Nazis, 1 June 1943.

—Julian Petley, updated by John McCarty

HOWARD, Leslie

Nationality: British. Born: Leslie Howard Stainer (some sources say Laszlo Horvath) in London, 3 April 1893. Education: Dulwich College, London. Military Service: Discharged from service in World War I suffering from shell shock. Family: Married Ruth Evelyn Martin, son: Ronald; daughter: Leslie Ruth. Career: After working in a bank, became stage actor; 1914—film debut in short The Heroine of Mons; 1917—a stage debut in Peg o’ My Heart on tour; 1919—co-founded Minerva Productions; 1920—American stage debut in Just Suppose; 1930—American film debut in version of his stage success Outward Bound, then a series of films in the United States for Warner Brothers, MGM, and Selznick; 1938—returned to England to direct, produce, and act in his own films; co-directorial debut with Pygmalion; 1940—began series of broadcast talks Britain Speaks. Awards: Best Actor, Venice Festival, for Pygmalion, 1938. Died: Plane shot down by Nazis, 1 June 1943.

Films as Actor:

1914 The Heroine of Mons (Noy—short)
1917 The Happy Warrior (Thornton) (as Rollo)
1919 The Lackey and the Lady (Bentley) (as Tony Dunciman)
1920 Five Pound Reward (Brunel—short) (as Tony Marchmont); Bookworms (Brunel—short) (as Richard)
1930 Outward Bound (Milton) (as Tom Prior)
1931 Five and Ten (Daughter of Luxury) (Leonard) (as Berry); Never the Twain Shall Meet (Van Dyke) (as Dan Pritchard); Devotion (Milton) (as David Trent); A Free Soul (Brown) (as Dwight Winthrop)
1932 Service for the Ladies (Reserved for Ladies) (Korda) (as Max Tracey); Smilin’ Through (Franklin) (as John Carteret); The Animal Kingdom (The Woman in His House) (Griffith) (as Tom Collier)
1933 Secrets (Borzage) (as John Carlton); Captured! (Del Ruth) (as Captain Fred Allison); Berkeley Square (Lloyd) (as Peter Standish)
1934 The Lady Is Willing (Miller) (as Albert Latour); Of Human Bondage (Cromwell) (as Philip Carey); British Agent (Curtiz) (as Stephen Locke)
1935 The Scarlet Pimpernel (Young) (as Sir Percy Blakeney); The Petrified Forest (Mayo) (as Alan Squier)
1936 Romeo and Juliet (Cukor) (as Romeo); Master Will Shakespeare (Tourneur—short) (includes footage from Romeo and Juliet)
1937 It’s Love I’m After (Mayo) (as Basil Underwood); Stand-In (Garnett) (as Atterbury Dodd)
1939 Intermesse: A Love Story (Escape to Happiness) (Ratoff) (as Holger Brand); Gone with the Wind (Fleming) (as Ashley Wilkes)
1940 Common Heritage (Hanau—short) (as narrator)
1941 From the Four Corners (Havelock-Allen—short); The White Eagle (Cekalski—short) (as narrator); 49th Parallel (The Invaders) (Powell) (as Philip Armstrong Scott)
1942 In Which We Serve (Coward and Lean) (as voice)
1943 War in the Mediterranean (Hanau—short) (as narrator)

Films as Producer:

1920 The Bump (Brunel—short); Twice Two (Brunel—short); Too Many Cooks (Brunel—short); The Temporary Lady (Brunel—short)
1943 The Lamp Still Burns (Elvey)

Films as Director:

1938 Pygmalion (co-d with Asquith, + ro as Professor Higgins)
1941 Pimpernel Smith (Mister V) (pr, + title role); publicity film for the Royal Institute for the Blind, title unknown
1942 The First of the Few (Spitfire) (pr, + ro as R. J. Mitchell)
1943 The Gentle Sex (narrator, + ro as silhouette)

583
Leslie Howard with Olivia de Havilland in Gone with the Wind

Publications

By HOWARD: book—

By HOWARD: article—

On HOWARD: books—

On HOWARD: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1982.

* * *

In an article he wrote for the Saturday Evening Post in 1930, Leslie Howard asserted that “what the actor is in private life, he is to a large extent on the stage, because he cannot conceal himself and his true personality from his audience.’” Indeed in his films, as well as in plays, Leslie Howard was Leslie Howard—an idealistic, dreamy, upright Englishman. His “natural” approach to acting created a new style in the late 1920s when he became established on Broadway. Rather than adopt the modish and overwrought declamatory style of, say, a John Barrymore, he spoke conversationally, underplaying and relaxing into his roles.

His approach was tailor-made for the screen. He became very popular in the 1930s, a time when Hollywood was a haven for “aristocratic” English actors—Herbert Marshall, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, and Charles Laughton, to name a few. While American actors such as James Cagney and John Garfield slugged their way out of predicaments, the British actors demonstrated the supremacy of brains over brawn. As the Scarlet Pimpernel, for example, Howard fought the French with trickery and daring disguises rather than brains over brawn. As the Scarlet Pimpernel, for example, Howard of predicaments, the British actors demonstrated the supremacy of brains over brawn. As the Scarlet Pimpernel, for example, Howard fought the French with trickery and daring disguises rather than fisticuffs and swordplay. Whether or not his characters were brave, Howard usually played men of superior intellect—Henry Higgins in Shaw’s Pygmalion, a writer in The Petrified Forest, a violinist in Intermezzo, a professor in Pimpernel Smith, a well-read humanist in The 49th Parallel, and an aeronautical engineer in Spitfire. Unlike Marshall, Hardwicke, and Laughton, Howard was never a villain and frequently played characters who were unrelentingly noble. The effete Ashley Wilkes in Gone with the Wind notwithstanding, his nobility usually shone through acts of singular courage—sacrificing his life for Bette Davis in The Petrified Forest, risking his life to save others in The Scarlet Pimpernel and Pimpernel Smith, and fighting the Nazis (in a brains over brawn sort of way) in the aforementioned film and The 49th Parallel. Although he was popular with women, the basis of his appeal was asexual. His characters were charming, witty, honorable, and intelligent; they liked and seemed to understand women. They did not pose the threat of a domineeringly masculine Rhett Butler. According to Molly Haskell, “women’s preference for the English gentleman—witty, under-refined, unsexual or apparently misogynous, paternal—is rooted in an instinct for self-preservation. . . . A woman wants a hero who will look into her eyes and embrace her soul and demand nothing sexually,” thereby allowing her to retain her strength and selfhood. Howard’s characters liked and respected women (as Howard did in real life) and, with the exception of Professor Higgins, let them be.

Howard appeared in 25 films in 13 years, giving his most acclaimed performances in Berkeley Square (nominated for the 1933 Academy Award), Of Human Bondage, The Scarlet Pimpernel, and Pygmalion (nominated for the 1938 Academy Award). Yet he viewed acting principally as a financial means for engaging in other pursuits—writing plays, directing plays and films (Pygmalion, Pimpernel Smith, and Spitfire), and producing (Intermezzo, Pimpernel Smith). He intended, after the war, to give up acting and to produce and direct both plays and films. But on 1 June 1943, returning from a trip to Lisbon (to lecture on the theater and indirectly on the war), he was shot down by the Nazis, who believed Churchill was on board his commercial airliner. Britain had lost a fine actor and a great patriot. According to David Shipman, “it is no exaggeration to say that no figure in British show business was so deeply mourned, or missed, during this century.’”

—Catherine Henry

HOWARD, Trevor

Nationality: British. Born: Cliftonville, Kent, 29 September 1916. Education: Attended Clifton College, Bristol; Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London. Military Service: Served in the Royal Artillery in Norway and Sicily, 1940–43; invalided out. Family: Married the actress Helen Cherry, 1944. Career: 1934—stage debut in Revolt in a Reformatory; then played in repertory; 1938—in West End production of French without Tears; 1944—film debut in The Way Ahead; 1960—began series of plays and movies for TV. Awards: Best British Actor, British Academy, for The Key, 1958. Died: In Bushley, Hertfordshire, 7 January 1988.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>The Way Ahead (Reed)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>The Way to the Stars (Johnny in the Clouds) (Asquith) (as S/L Carter); Brief Encounter (Lean) (as Dr. Alec Harvey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>I See a Dark Stranger (The Adventurers) (Lauder) (as Lt. David Bayne); Green for Danger (Gilliat) (as Dr. Barney Barnes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>They Made Me a Fugitive (I Became a Criminal) (Cavalcanti) (as Clem Morgan); So Well Remembered (Dmytryk) (as Dr. Whiteside)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>The Passionate Friends (One Woman’s Story) (Lean) (as Steve Stratton); The Third Man (Reed) (as Major Galloway); Golden Salamander (Neame) (as David Redfern)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Odeete (Wilcox) (as Captain Peter Churchill); The Clouded Yellow (Thomas) (as David Somers)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Lady Godiva Rides Again (Lauder) (as guest); Outcast of the Island (Reed) (as Peter Willems); The Gift Horse (Glory At Seu) (Bennett) (as Lt. Col. Hugh Fraser)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>The Heart of the Matter (O’Ferrall) (as Harry Scobie); La Mano dello straniero (The Stranger’s Hand) (Soldati) (as Major Court)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>April in Portugal (as narrator)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Les Amants du Tage (The Lovers of Lisbon) (Verneuil); Cockleshell Heroes (Ferrer) (as Captain Thompson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Run for the Sun (Boulting); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson); Deception (Bricken)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Interpol (Pickup Alley) (Gilling) (as Frank McNally); Manuela (Stowaway Girl) (Hamilton) (as James Prothero)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>The Key (Reed) (as Chris Ford); The Roots of Heaven (Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Moment of Danger (Malaga) (Benedek) (as John Bain); Sons and Lovers (Cardiff) (as Walter Morel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>The Lion (Cardiff) (as John Bullitt); Mutiny on the Bounty (Milestone) (as Captain Bligh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Man in the Middle (Hamilton) (as Major Kennsington)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Father Goose (Nelson) (as Commander Frank Houghton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Operation Crossbow (Anderson) (as Professor Lindemann); Von Ryan’s Express (Robson) (as Major Frank Finchman); Morituri (The Saboteur Code Name “Morituri”) (Wicki) (as Col. Statter); The Liquidators (Cardiff) (as Col. Mostyn)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Danger Grows Wild (The Poppy Is Also a Flower) (Young—for TV) (as Lincoln); Triple Cross (Young) (as a civilian)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1967  The Long Duel (Annakin) (as Freddy Young); Pretty Polly (A Matter of Innocence) (Green) (as Robert Hook)
1968  The Charge of the Light Brigade (Richardson) (as Lord Cardigan)
1969  Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (as Air Vice Marshal Keith Park); Twinky (Lola) (Donner)
1970  Ryan’s Daughter (Lean) (as Father Collins); The Night Visitor (Benedek)
1971  Catch Me a Spy (Clement); Mary, Queen of Scots (Jarrott); Kidnapped (Mann)
1972  Pope Joan (Anderson) (as Pope Leo); The Offence (Lumet); Ludwig (Visconti)
1973  A Doll’s House (Losey); Catholics (Gold—for TV); Craze (Francis)
1974  Eleven Harrowhouse (Avakian); Persecution (The Terror of Sheba) (Chaffey); The Count of Monte Cristo (Greene); Who? (Gold); Cause for Concern (Benson) (as narrator)
1975  Hennessy (Sharp); Conduct Unbecoming (Anderson); The Bawdy Adventures of Tom Jones (Owen); Der flüsternde Tod (Death in the Sun; Night of the Askari; Whispering Death; Blind Spot) (Goslár)
1976  Eliza Fraser (A Faithful Narrative of the Capture, Sufferings, and Miraculous Escape of Eliza Fraser; The Rollicking Adventures of Eliza Fraser) (Burstall); Aces High (Gold)
1977  Slavers (Goslár); The Last Remake of Beau Geste (Feldman); Babel Yemen (Gane) (as narrator)
1978  Superman (Donner) (as First Elder); Stevie (Enders) (as The Man); How to Score a Movie (Enders) (as narrator); One, Take Two (Die Rebellen) (Megahy); Vol de nuit (Night Flight) (Davis—for TV)
1979  Hurricane (Troell) (as Father Malone); Meteor (Neame)
1980  The Sea Wolves (McLaglen) (as Jack Cartwright); Sir Henry at Rawlinson End (Roberts); Staying on (Narizzano—for TV)
1981  Windwalker (Merrill) (title role); Light Years Away (Les Années lumières) (Tanner)
1982  Gandhi (Attenborough) (as Judge Broomfield); The Missionary (Loncraine) (as Lord Ames); The Deadly Game (Shaefier—for TV)
1983  Sword of the Valiant: The Legend of Gavain and the Green Knight (Weeks)
1984  George Washington (Kulik—for TV)
1985  Dust (Hansel) (as the Father); Time after Time (Hays—for TV); God Ron Tunbridge Wells (Palmer—for TV)
1986  Foreign Body (Neame) (as Dr. Sturrup); Christmas Eve (Oper—for TV); Peter the Great (Chomsky—for TV); Shaka Zulu (Faure)
1987  White Mischief (Radford) (as Jack Soames)
1988  The Unholy (Vila) (as Father Silva); The Dawning (Knights)
Publications

On HOWARD: books—

On HOWARD: articles—

Trevor Howard has the clearly enunciated speech of the English gentleman, and in his youth possessed the modest good looks and unassuming manners that qualified him for stage training at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. When World War II started he was still in his early twenties, and had had little time to make a mark. After service in the Royal Artillery, he was invalided out, and began to show his high qualities as an actor in repertory at the Arts Theatre in London, while at the same time appearing in uniform in such excellent war films as Carol Reed’s The Way Ahead and Anthony Asquith’s The Way to the Stars.

His lengthy roster of British film appearances (usually in starring or top supporting roles) began after his outstanding success as the quiet, sincere small-town doctor, a married man, who falls in love with Celia Johnson’s guilt-stricken housewife and mother in Noël Coward’s and David Lean’s Brief Encounter, a film that attracted exceptional critical attention and made a lasting reputation for its authenticity in the wake of the key British war films of 1944–45 that had consolidated the realist style. It matched exactly the quieter, more unassuming characteristics of the middle-class English lifestyle, which could nonetheless be revealed through the intimacy of film to be fraught with hidden emotional disturbances. Moving beyond the efficient, somewhat withdrawn but selflessly loyal English army officer—seen, for example in The Third Man, Odette, and Cockleshell Heroes—Howard gradually enlarged his screen image to embrace the civilian, quietly romantic hero typical of the kind of man many Englishwomen (and others) hoped to meet and marry, the hero of such films as Lean’s The Passionate Friends and George More O’Ferrall’s The Heart of the Matter.

To some audiences, this image of the sincere, good-looking, unassuming but often deeply emotional Englishman could appear to lack dash, even to be dull and unenterprising, except that Howard’s intuitive control over the nuances of feeling made these performances dramatically powerful. At the same time, with gathering age and experience, he began even as early as Reed’s Outcast of the Islands to enlarge his range still further and establish a reputation as a character actor. By the time of Sons and Lovers he was playing the miner Walter Morel, morose and difficult in his impoverished, working-class home, to such good effect that he was nominated for an Oscar. He also began to appear in American and Continental as well as British films.

By the 1960s and 1970s, his character range included such fine performances as the corseted, lecherous Lord Cardigan in The Charge of the Light Brigade, the toughly independent priest in Lean’s Ryan’s Daughter, Pope Leo in Pope Joan, Richard Wagner in the Italian production of Ludwig, and his effectively moving Dr. Rank in Joseph Losey’s version of A Doll’s House. He was ceaselessly employed in films for over 40 years, and remained a very favorite actor, especially in the eyes of the British public.

—Roger Manvell

HUDSON, Rock

Films as Actor:

1948 Fighter Squadron (Walsh) (as lieutenant)
1949 * Undertow* (Castle) (as detective)
1950 I Was a Shoplifter (Lamont) (as store detective); One Way Street (Fregonese) (as truck driver); Winchester '73 (Anthony Mann) (as Young Bull); Peggy (de Cordova) (as Johnny Higgins); The Desert Hawk (de Cordova) (as Captain Ras)
1951 Tomahawk (Sherman) (as Burt Hanna); Air Cadet (Pevney) (as upper classman); The Fat Man (Castle) (as Roy Clark); Iron Man (Pevney) (as Speed O’Keeffe); Bright Victory (Robson) (as Corporal John Flagg)
1952 Here Come the Nelsons (Meet the Nelsons) (de Cordova) (as Charles Jones); Bend of the River (Anthony Mann) (as Trey Wilson); Scarlet Angel (Salkow) (as Frank Truscott); Has Anybody Seen My Gal? (Sirk) (as Dan); Horizons West (Boetticher) (as Neal Hammond); The Lawless Breed (Walsh) (as John Wesley Hardin)
1953 Seminole (Boetticher) (as Lance Caldwell); Sea Devils (Walsh) (as Gilliat); The Golden Blade (Juran) (as Harun); Back to God’s Country (Pevney) (as Peter Keith)
1954 Taza, Son of Cochise (Sirk) (title role); Magnificent Obsession (Sirk) (as Bob Merrick); Bengal Brigade (Benedek) (as Captain Jeffrey Claybourne)
1955 Captain Lightfoot (Sirk) (as Michael Martin); One Desire (Hopper) (as Clint Saunders); All That Heaven Allows (Sirk) (as Ron Kirby)
1956 Never Say Goodbye (Hopper) (as Dr. Michael Parker); Written on the Wind (Sirk) (as Mitch Wayne); Giant (Stevens) (as Bick Benedict); Four Girls in Town (Sher)
1957 Battle Hymn (Sirk) (as Col. Dean Hess); Something of Value (Richard Brooks) (as Peter McKenzie); The Tarnished Angels (Sirk) (as Burke Devlin); A Farewell to Arms (Charles Vidor) (as Lt. Frederick Henry)
1958 Twilight for the Gods (Pevney) (as David Bell)
1959 This Earth Is Mine (Henry King) (as John Rambeau); Pillow Talk (Gordon) (as Brad Allen)
1961 The Last Sunset (Aldrich) (as Dana Stribling); Come September (Mulligan) (as Robert Talbot); Lover Come Back (Delbert Mann) (as Jerry Webster)
1962 The Spiral Road (Mulligan) (as Dr. Anton Drager)
1963 A Gathering of Eagles (Delbert Mann) (as Jim Caldwell); Marilyn (Henry Koster)—doc (as narrator)
1964 Man’s Favorite Sport? (Hawks) (as Roger Willoughby); Send Me No Flowers (Jewison) (as George Kimball); Strange Bedfellows (Frank) (as Carter Harrison)
1965 A Very Special Favor (Gordon) (as Paul Chadwick)
1966 Blindfold (Dunne) (as Dr. Bartholomew Snow); Seconds (Frankenheimer) (as Antiochus Wilson); Tobruk (Hiller) (as Major Donald Craig)
1968 Ice Station Zebra (John Sturges) (as Commander James Farraday)
1969 Ruba al prossimo tuo (Maselli) (as Captain Mike Harmon); The Undefeated (McLaglen) (as Col. John Henry Thomas)
1970 Darling Lily (Edwards) (as Major William Larrabee); Hornet’s Nest (Karlson) (as Captain Turner)
1971 Pretty Maids All in a Row (Vadim) (as Michael "Tiger" McDrew); Once Upon a Dead Man (Stem—for TV) (as Stewart McMillan)
1973 Showdown (Seaton) (as Chuck Jarvis)
1976 Embryo (Created to Kill) (Nelson) (as Dr. Paul Holliston)
1978 Avalanche (Corey Allen) (as David Shelby)
1980 The Mirror Crack’d (Hamilton) (as Jason Rudd)
1981 The Star Maker (Antonio—for TV)
1982 World War II (Greene—for TV)
1984 The Ambassador (J. Lee Thompson) (as Frank Stevenson); The Vegas Strip War (Englund—for TV) (as Neil Chaine)

Publications

By HUDSON: book—

By HUDSON: articles—

On HUDSON: books—

On HUDSON: articles—

On HUDSON: film—

Rock Hudson, television movie, directed by John Niccolella.

* * *

Rock Hudson was an actor who never quite found his niche in Hollywood. Basically a competent performer, and quite a fine one when directed well, Hudson appeared in more than his share of bad movies. He began his film career with almost no training when he appeared in Raoul Walsh’s Fighter Squadron. Legend has it that 38 takes were required for him to deliver his one line adequately. Hudson literally learned his craft on the job, a luxury not afforded to actors since the demise of the studio system. Although he started at Warner Brothers he moved to Paramount for his next film, William Castle’s Undertow. Then he appeared in Anthony Mann’s Winchester ’73, Frederick de Cordova’s The Desert Hawk, Joseph Pevney’s Air Cadet, and Mark Robson’s Bright Victory.

Hudson’s parts grew longer in a series of adventure films made during Hollywood’s last great production splurge: Mann’s Bend of the River, Sidney Salkow’s Scarlet Angel, Douglas Sirk’s Has Anybody Seen My Gal?, Budd Boetticher’s Horizons West and Seminole, and Walsh’s Sea Devils and Gun Fury. In the mid-1950s Sirk, the most influential director in Hudson’s career, used him perceptively in a number of better-than-average films: Taza, Son of Chichise, Captain Lightfoot, Magnificent Obsession, and All That Heaven Allows. The last two movies established him as a leading actor in “women’s” films. After a fine performance in George Stevens’s Giant, he made three additional films for Sirk, two of which, Written on the Wind and The Tarnished Angels, revealed a depth of character not previously evident in his films.

Hudson’s third shift in career came when he was cast in a series of light comedies, several opposite Doris Day. Although the films vary greatly in quality, they afforded Hudson an opportunity to explore his comedic talents. Michael Gordon’s Pillow Talk, Robert Mulligan’s Come September, Delbert Mann’s Lover Come Back, Norman Jewison’s Send Me No Flowers, Melvin Frank’s Strange Bedfellows, and Gordon’s A Very Special Favor culminated with Hudson’s comic tour de force in Howard Hawk’s’s slapstick farce, Man’s Favorite Sport?, in which Hudson gave a performance worthy of Cary Grant at his best.

From the mid-1960s Hudson appeared in a series of mediocre films including Roger Vadim’s Pretty Maids All in a Row, in which he played an aging lothario who degenerates from a life of sex to violent crime among a bevy of nubile high school girls. He reunited with his Giant co-star Elizabeth Taylor for The Mirror Crack’d, a big-budget adaptation of an Agatha Christie Miss Marple novel (Angela Lansbury played Miss Marple), an engaging murder mystery that hinted at a career upswing. He also had a major role in the compelling, critically acclaimed 1982 telefilm World War III.

Hudson made his last screen appearance in the 1984 telefilm The Las Vegas Strip Wars. A year later, while on a trip to Paris seeking medical treatment for an “unstated” illness, Hudson collapsed and the story broke that the actor had been diagnosed with AIDS. And the secret was finally out: the longtime romantic idol of the silver screen was gay. Hudson, his managers, and the studios for which he worked had successfully skirted the rumors of Hudson’s homosexuality for years. Hudson believed his career as a leading man would be finished if the truth ever got out. The revelation he had sought to avoid for years made headlines everywhere after his diagnosis, but it resulted in an outpouring of sympathy and good wishes, rather than scorn, from his many fans in virtually every corner of the globe. His last public appearance at a benefit hosted by former leading lady Doris Day revealed the awful truth of AIDS to the world in vivid and uncompromising terms, Hudson’s once strapping figure and handsome face now ravaged almost beyond recognition by the insidious virus. Five years after Hudson’s death of AIDS, his secret life and public career became the subject of an inevitable television docudrama, with Thomas Ian Griffith starring as Hudson.

—Charles L. P. Silet, updated by John McCarty

HUNTER, Holly

Films as Actress:

1981 The Burning (Maylam) (bit role as Sophie)
1983 Svengali (Harvey—for TV) (as Leslie); An Uncommon Love (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV) (as Karen)
1984 With Intent to Kill (Urge to Kill) (Robe—for TV) (as Wynn Nolen); Swing Shift (Jonathan Demme) (as Jeannie Sherman)
1987 Raising Arizona (Coen) (as Edwina); A Gathering of Old Men (Murder on the Bayou) (Schlöndorff—for TV) (as Candy Marshall); Broadcast News (James L. Brooks) (as Jane Craig)
1988 End of the Line (Russell) (as Charlotte Haney)
Hunters Actors and Actresses, 4th Edition

1989 Miss Firecracker (Schlamme) (as Carnelle Scott); Animal Behavior (Jenny Bowen) (as Coral Grable); Roe vs. Wade (Hoblit—for TV) (as Ellen Russell/“Roe”); Always (Spielberg) (as Dorinda Durston)

1991 Once Around (Hallström) (as Renata Bella)

1992 Crazy in Love (Coolidge—for TV) (as Georgie Symonds)

1993 The Positively True Adventures of the Alleged Texas Cheerleader-Murdering Mom (Ritchie—for TV) (as Wanda Holloway); The Firm (Pollack) (as Tammy Hemphill); The Piano (Campion) (as Ada McGrath)

1995 Copycat (Amiel) (as Detective M. J. Monahan); Home for the Holidays (Jodie Foster) (as Claudia Larson)

1996 Crash (Cronenberg) (Helen Remington)

1997 A Life Less Ordinary (Boyle) (as O’Reilly)

1998 Living Out Loud (LaGravenese) (as Judith Mohr)

1999 Woman Wanted (Kiefer Sutherland) (as Emma Riley); Jesus’ Son (Maclean) (as Mira)

2000 Things You Can Tell Just by Looking at Her (Garcia) (as Rebecca); Timecode (Figgis) (as an Executive); O Brother, Where Art Thou? (Coen) (as Penny); Harlan County War (Bill—for TV) (as Ruby Kincaid)

Publications

By Hunter: articles—

Interview with Jodie Foster, in Interview (New York), November 1995.

On Hunter: articles—

Despite appearing in a mere 20-odd films (both made-for-television and features), Holly Hunter has proven herself as one of the most versatile actors working today. Her penchant for screwy characterizations, from the beauty queen wannabe in The Miss Firecracker Contest to an overly neurotic workaholic in Broadcast News to a mute pianist in The Piano, has allowed Hunter to leave an indelible mark on the cinema of the past two decades.

Hunter’s acting began on the stage, where, after moving to New York City in 1980, she landed work with noted playwright Beth Henley in such plays as Crimes of the Heart and The Miss Firecracker Contest. Her break into film came when director Jonathan Demme saw her perform and cast her in Swing Shift in 1983. Sadly, the film suffered a bad edit job, but Hunter’s turn as a war-widow was spirited, and rightly attracted critical attention.

Several appearances in feature and made-for-television movies later, Hunter starred in Raising Arizona, which remains one of her finest moments and one of the defining of her career. The film was made by the maverick filmmaking team of Joel and Ethan Coen, and their decidedly offbeat, obtuse style is a perfect match for the wildly eccentric characterizations Hunter does best. Hunter played a cop who marries a convict on parole (Nicolas Cage), a man she had booked many times for robbing convenience stores. What is intriguing about watching Hunter in Arizona is her keen ability to take this weird, rather grating character—one which most actors would play flat—and flesh her out to full dimension.

In 1986, Hunter was cast at the last minute as an overly neurotic news program producer in Broadcast News, James L. Brooks’s acerbic take on television infotainment. If the character was not quite as eccentric as the one in Raising Arizona, it did not matter; Hunter brought such boundless energy to the role as to virtually steal the film from its considerable remaining cast, copping several awards as well as an Oscar nomination. Adding to what could be called an Eccentricity Portfolio was her surprise supporting role in Home for the Holidays, in which she played a rather tart secretary, picking up another Oscar nomination.

The biggest and most delightful surprise in Hunter’s career came with the 1993 film The Piano, directed by New Zealand filmmaker Jane Campion. As with Broadcast News, Hunter was not initially seen as a logical choice for the film’s lead (at first glance, The Piano would more easily be associated with the oeuvre of Meryl Streep). But Hunter exhibits a graceful, elegant power in the film. Playing a mute woman who expresses herself through her piano playing, Hunter was apparently drawn to the role in part because of the film’s challenging gender dynamic. Contrary to typical cinematic female roles, Hunter’s character is driven primarily by sexual interests, while the two men in the film (Harvey Keitel and Sam Neill) desperately want commitment. Hunter’s strengths here are inarguable; she gives the lead in The Piano a captivating depth which perfectly matches the profoundly moving tone of the film.

While working on a wide range of feature film characterizations, also of note is Hunter’s formal versatility. In addition to her considerable stage work, she has done several made-for-television movies. Hunter won an Emmy Award for Roe vs. Wade (1989), in which she played the woman best known as Jane Roe, who with the aid of feminist lawyers, challenged state law on abortion rights and won the landmark U.S. Supreme Court decision guaranteeing a woman’s right to abortion. Echoing some of the career choices of Jane Fonda, Hunter cited her conviction in the role as married to her offscreen activist work (Hunter sits on the board of directors of the California Abortion Rights Action League). Another Emmy came with The Positively True Adventures of the Alleged Texas Cheerleader-Murdering Mom (1993), in which Hunter plays (with relish) a grotesque southern maternal figure, eager to help her cheerleader daughter claw her way to the top at any cost. Again, Hunter’s instinct here appears perfect; the film itself, made for cable television, is a hilarious satire of the based-on-a-true-story made-for-television movie.

While Hunter has a penchant for the offbeat, her talents are not as well served by more conventional films. Her weakest performances have come in her efforts at more normal characterizations, in such films as Always, Once Around, and Home for the Holidays. In Always, Hunter seems constrained by the film’s simplistic, romantic premise. In Once Around and Home for the Holidays, the audience’s offscreen knowledge of Hunter, and the baggages she carries with her from previous films, makes her portrayal of a woman in dire need of a man ring false. Hunter is clearly best suited to highly unusual, quirky characters.

—Matthew Hays

HUPPERT, Isabelle

Films as Actress:

1971 Faustine et le bel été (Faustine and the Beautiful Summer; Growing Up) (Compagniez)
1972 Le Bar de la Fourche (Levent) (as Annie); César et Rosalie (César and Rosalie) (Sautet) (as Marite)
1973 L’Ampélopède (Weinberg)
1974  Glissements progressifs du plaisir (Robbe-Grillet); Les Valseuses (Going Places) (Blier) (as Jacqueline); Sérieux comme le plaisir (As Serious as Pleasure) (Benayoun); Dupont Lajoie (Boisset); Le Grand Délire (The Big Delirium) (Berry); Aloïse (de Kermadec) (title role)

1975  Rosebud (Rape of Innocence) (Preminger) (as Hélène); Docteur Françoise Gailland (No Time for Breakfast) (Bertuccelli) (as Elisabeth Gailland); Je suis Pierre Rivière (I Am Pierre Rivière) (Lipinska); Le Petit Marcel (Little Marcel) (Fansten) (as Yvette); Flash Back (Coggio)

1976  Le Juge et l’assassin (The Judge and the Assassin) (Tavernier) (as Rose)

1977  La Dentellière (The Lacemaker) (Goretta) (as Beatrice, “Pomme”); Des Enfants gâtés (Tavernier); Les Indiens sont encore loin (The Indians Are Still Far Away) (Moraz) (as Jenny Kern)

1978  Violette Nozière (Violette) (Chabrol) (title role); Retour à la bien aimée (Return to the Beloved) (Adam) (as Jeanne)

1979  Les Soeurs Brontë (The Brontë Sisters) (Téchiné) (as Anne)

1980  Sauve qui peut (la vie) (Slow Motion; Every Man for Himself) (Godard) (as Isabelle Rivièrè); Orökseg (Les Héritières; The Heiresses) (Mészáros); Loulou (Pialat) (as Nelly); Heaven’s Gate (Cimino) (as Ella Watson); La Dame aux Camélias (The True Story of Camille); La vera storia della signora delle camelie; Die Kameliendame (Bolognini and Festa Campanile) (as Alphonsine Plessis)

1981  Coup de torchon (Clean Slate) (Tavernier) (as Rose); Les Ailes de la colombe (Wings of a Dove) (Jacquot); Eaux profondes (Deep Water) (Deville) (as Melanie)

1982  La Femme de mon pote (My Best Friend’s Girl) (Blier) (as Viviane Arthaud); Passion (Passion, travail et amour) (Godard) (as Isabelle); La Truite (The Trout) (Losey) (as Frédérique)

1983  Coup de foudre (Entre Nous; At First Sight) (Kurys) (as Lena); Storia di Piera (Ferreri) (as Piera)

1985  Signé Charlotte (Signed Charlotte; Sincerely Charlotte) (Caroline Huppert) (as Charlotte); Sac de noeuds (All Mixed Up) (Balasko) (as Rose Marie); Le Plus Grand Musée (Lander—for TV)

1986  Cactus (Cox) (as Colo)

1987  Les Possédés (The Possessed) (Wajda) (as Maria Shatov); The Bedroom Window (Hanson) (as Sylvia Wentworth)
1989 Une Affaire des femmes (Story of Women) (Chabrol) (as Marie Latour); La Guerre la plus glorieuse (Petrovic); Milan noir (Black Milan) (Chammah) (as Sarah); La Garce (The Bitch) (Pascal) (as Aline Kammink/Edith Weber)
1990 La Vengeance d’une femme (A Woman’s Revenge) (Doillon) (as Cecile); Malina (Schroeter) (as the Woman)
1991 Madame Bovary (Chabrol) (title role); The Swindle (Jacquot) (as Betty)
1992 Après l’Amour (Love after Love) (Kuryys) (as Lola); Contre l’oubli (Against Oblivion) (Akerman and others) (as herself)
1993 L’Inondation (The Flood) (Minaev) (as Sofia)
1994 Amateur (Hartley) (as Isabelle); La Séparation (The Separation) (Vincent) (as Anne)
1995 La Cérémonie (A Judgment in Stone) (Chabrol) (Jeanne)
1996 Le Affinité elettive (The Elective Affinities) (Paolo and Vittorio Taviani) (as Carlotta)
1997 Les Palmes de M. Schutz (Pinotau) (as Marie Curie); Rien ne va plus (The Swindle) (Chabrol) (as Betty)
1998 L’École de la chair (School of Flesh) (Jacquot) (as Dominique)
1999 Saint-Cyr (Mazuy) (as Maintenon); Pas de scandale (Jacquot) (as Agnès Jeancour)
2000 La Vie moderne (Ferreira-Barbosa) (as Claire); La Fausse Suivante (False Servant) (Jacquot) (as La Comtesse); Les Destinées sentimentales (Assayas) (as Nathalie); Merci pour le Chocolat (Chabrol) (as Mica)

Publications

By HUPPERT: articles—

Interview with Stephen Harvey, in New York Times, 16 November 1980.

Interview with Serge Daney and Serge Toubliana, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1981.

Interview with Nick Roddick, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), May 1986.

Interview with M. Buruiana and M.-C. Abel, in Séquences (Montréal), March 1989.

Interview in Studio Magazine (Paris), no. 102, September 1995.

Interview in EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), December 1995.

Interview in Première (Paris), no. 242, May 1997

On HUPPERT: books—

On HUPPERT: articles—

Yakir, Dan, in After Dark, October 1980.

Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), September 1990.

* * *

Isabelle Huppert’s graduation from brief appearances to substantial roles came quickly. Within five years of making her debut she had achieved prominence as the rebellious middle-class teenager happily losing her virginity in Les Valseuses and had earned critical recognition for her exquisitely judged performance as the culturally alienated and sexually exploited “Pomme” of La Dentellière. As an unassuming hairdresser thrown into a pressurized student milieu by her immature lover, she copes bravely until, abandoned by him, she has a nervous breakdown. Huppert’s understated rendering of internalized emotions, through minimal gestures imbued with tragic poignancy, was outstanding.

Further portrayals of the emotionally repressed or unfulfilled character, often at odds with her sexual or social situation, were to follow. In Les Indiens sont encore loin she conveyed the secret anguish of a reserved and emotionally confused schoolgirl choosing death; in Les Soeurs Brontë she was a convincing Anne, the most self-absorbed of the frustrated literary sisters; in Loulou, a bored middle-class wife falling for a plausible working-class rogue (Depardieu), and suffering the lacerating tensions of class differences; in *Eaux profondes, a pathetic wife shackled to a perverse husband; in La vera storia della signora delle camelie, a demythologizing account of Marguerite Gautier’s life, she was the lonely, unloved heroine; and in Cactus, an unhappily married woman who builds a new life with a sightless partner, after losing an eye herself in an accident.

Huppert’s performance as the enigmatic murderess in Violette Nozière was both an extension of previous roles and a platform for others. A complex figure seeming to dutifully comply with the stuffy constraints of her cramped family life, Violette not only spends her nights as a good-time girl working the hotels but also seeks the death of her parents. Huppert brilliantly projects this disturbing duality: the self-effacing homely girl of earlier films is now dovetailed with the sexual woman of others.

In subsequent roles the image of the sexual Huppert was developed. In La Garce and The Bedroom Window she was a ruthless femme fatale; in the romantic thriller Milan noir she held sway over three men; in Coup de torchon she provided temptation for the lubricious Philippe Noiret; as Frédérique in The Trout she ensnared men for her self-advancement; while in Retour à la bien aimée she is a murderous fetishist’s obsession. For Cimino she was the charismatic whorehouse madame in Heaven’s Gate, while for Godard, in Sauve qui peut (la vie), her role as the jaded prostitute illustrated the vacuity of commercialized sex. Huppert has also exploited her sexual image for comic purposes. In La Femme de mon pote she humorously fails, despite all her guile, to seduce an uninterested disc-jockey played by the comedic Coluche, while in Hartley’s Amateur she gave a witty and playfully erotic performance as an unfulfilled nymphomaniac nun whose gift for pornography takes her from the convent to the unlikely world of the sex industry.

Since the pivotal Violette Nozière Huppert has made four further films for Chabrol, each revealing a different facet of her wide-ranging talent. In Une Affaire des femmes, she became his wartime back-street abortionist and, with a performance of considerable depth and subtlety, conveyed the woman’s unconscious rationalization of her actions. For her award-winning performance in La Cérémonie she transformed herself into Jeanne, a brash, exuberant, leather-clad postmistress who manipulates her more reserved friend Sophie (Sandrine Bonnaire) into murdering her bourgeois employers and trashing their home. The comedy thriller Rien ne va plus brought yet another incarnation as the delightfully seductive vamp adopting a variety of disguises to dupe her gullible victims out of their money.

Less convincing, however, was her restrained, overly passive performance as Flaubert’s fantasizing provincial adulteress Emma in Madame Bovary, where Chabrol, in his pictorially exquisite heritage version, appeared to privilege period recreation over characterization.

Huppert’s roles as disappointed or frustrated women often invite consideration of feminist issues and, in the hands of women directors, in the context of feminist issues and, in the hands of women directors, their viewpoints are often raised. As an example of this, consider the response to the sexual Huppert when she acts in films directed by male filmmakers. In an interview, Huppert observed, “When a woman director makes a film about a woman, the focus is always on her personal experience, her viewpoint is often raised.”

In a similar vein, Huppert’s performance as the enigmatic murderess in The Bedroom Window was both an extension of previous roles and a platform for others. A complex figure seeming to dutifully comply with the stuffy constraints of her cramped family life, Violette not only spends her nights as a good-time girl working the hotels but also seeks the death of her parents. Huppert brilliantly projects this disturbing duality: the self-effacing homely girl of earlier films is now dovetailed with the sexual woman of others.

In subsequent roles the image of the sexual Huppert was developed. In La Garce and The Bedroom Window she was a ruthless femme fatale; in the romantic thriller Milan noir she held sway over three men; in Coup de torchon she provided temptation for the lubricious Philippe Noiret; as Frédérique in The Trout she ensnared men for her self-advancement; while in Retour à la bien aimée she is a murderous fetishist’s obsession. For Cimino she was the charismatic whorehouse madame in Heaven’s Gate, while for Godard, in Sauve qui peut (la vie), her role as the jaded prostitute illustrated the vacuity of commercialized sex. Huppert has also exploited her sexual image for comic purposes. In La Femme de mon pote she humorously fails, despite all her guile, to seduce an uninterested disc-jockey played by the comedic Coluche, while in Hartley’s Amateur she gave a witty and playfully erotic performance as an unfulfilled nymphomaniac nun whose gift for pornography takes her from the convent to the unlikely world of the sex industry.

Since the pivotal Violette Nozière Huppert has made four further films for Chabrol, each revealing a different facet of her wide-ranging talent. In Une Affaire des femmes, she became his wartime back-street abortionist and, with a performance of considerable depth and subtlety, conveyed the woman’s unconscious rationalization of her actions. For her award-winning performance in La Cérémonie she transformed herself into Jeanne, a brash, exuberant, leather-clad postmistress who manipulates her more reserved friend Sophie (Sandrine Bonnaire) into murdering her bourgeois employers and trashing their home. The comedy thriller Rien ne va plus brought yet another incarnation as the delightfully seductive vamp adopting a variety of disguises to dupe her gullible victims out of their money.

Less convincing, however, was her restrained, overly passive performance as Flaubert’s fantasizing provincial adulteress Emma in Madame Bovary, where Chabrol, in his pictorially exquisite heritage version, appeared to privilege period recreation over characterization.

Huppert’s roles as disappointed or frustrated women often invite consideration of feminist issues and, in the hands of women directors, the female perspective may imply an exploration of feminist narrative strategies. In Orűkseg, Marta Mészáros tackles the issue of surrogate motherhood with Huppert as the child-bearer for a sterile friend and embroiled in subsequent jealousies and rivalries; in Josiane Balasko’s challenging comedy Signé Charlotte she was transformed into a fun-loving punk singer determined to take her chances. In two films for Diane Kurys, the feminist positions and narrative perspectives are explored: in Coup de foudre, she challenges traditional attitudes by abandoning her oafish husband to start a new life with a similarly unfulfilled female friend while in Après l’amour her viewpoint is again adopted as a successful, financially independent female who leaves her dull, career-oriented husband to take up with a pop star, though with painfully unhappy consequences. Most recently in Laurence Ferreira-Barbosa’s account of female constraints and corrosive boredom, The Bedroom Window, Huppert plays a middle-aged, childless provincial housewife filling her time with music.

Roles for male directors in the last decade have also reflected contemporary attitudes about women’s sexual and social roles. For Doillon in La Vengeance d’une femme she gave a brilliant performance as a cruel yet vulnerable wife sharing the news of her husband’s death with his former mistress and making every barbed word count; for Jacquot in Ecole de la chair, she gave a commanding performance as a raunchy divorcée and successful fashion executive who falls heavily for a young bisexual stud, only to suffer violence and emotional distress at his hands; in Malina, torn between two lovers, she again rejected her traditional style of understatement to reveal her joys and suffering in a remarkably physical performance; in her excursion into Russian cinema, Indagation, which raises questions of female self-image around issues of maternity and sterility, she plays a middle-aged wife desperate for a child and driven to murdering the younger woman her husband has taken as a mistress. Decidedly less dramatic was her elegiac performance in La Séparation as Anne, who calmly confesses to her husband (Daniel Auteuil) that she is having an affair. This is the Huppert of old, the uncommunicative, suffering female trapped in a marriage which is slowly and painlessly disintegrating.

More conventional roles complete Huppert’s recent repertoire: as the aristocratic Madame de Maintenon of Saint-Cyr; the socially-conscious upper-class house-wife of a criminal executive (Pas de scandale); the unhappy Baroness Carlotta who discovers love after her marriage (Le Affinità elettive); and as the committed research worker Marie Curie harassed by her director (Philippe Noiret) in Les Palmes de Monsieur Schutz. With more than sixty successful film and stage roles to her credit, Isabelle Huppert can rightfully claim recognition as a talented, questioning actress who enjoys the respect of her fellow professionals. As a comic performer she has been engaging and disarming; as a seductress she has projected a potent sensuality; as an iconoclastic, questioning rebel she has been disturbing; as a sensitive exponent of the feelings of the inarticulate she is unmatched. Her major roles have constantly reflected her awareness of the sexual and/or social conditioning which shapes women’s lives. A gifted linguist, she has enjoyed rewarding associations with directors, including several female directors, throughout Europe. The quality and range of her recent performances suggest there is still a great deal to be expected of this gifted actress.

—R. F. Cousins

---

HURT, John

Nationality: British. Born: Chesterfield, Derbyshire, 22 January 1940. Education: Attended Lincoln School; St. Martin’s School of Art, London; Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London. Family: Married 1) the actress Annette Robertson (divorced 1964); 2) Marie-Lise Volpelière-Pierrot (died 1983); 3) Donna Peacock, 1984 (divorced 1990); 4) Jo Dalton, 1990, one son: Alexander John Vincent.
John Hurt in The Elephant Man

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Roles</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>The Wild and the Willing (Young and Willing) (Thomas) (as Phil)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>This Is My Street (Hayes) (as Charlie)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>A Man for All Seasons (Zimmern) (as Richard Rich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>The Sailor from Gibraltar (Richardson) (as John)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Before Winter Comes (J. Lee Thompson) (as Lt. Francis Pilkington)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Sinful Davey (Huston) (as Davey Haggart)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>In Search of Gregory (Wood) (as Daniel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>10 Rillington Place (Fleischer) (as Timothy John Evans); Mr. Forbush and the Penguins (Cry of the Penguins) (Viola) (title role); The Pied Piper (Demy) (as Franz, Baron’s son)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Little Malcolm and His Struggle against the Eunuchs (Cooper) (as Malcolm Scrawdyke)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Do Yourself Some Good (Marquand—short) (as narrator); The Ghoul (Francis) (as Tom)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>East of Elephant Rock (Boyd); La linea del fiume (Stream Line) (Scavarda); Shadows of Doubt (Bolt); The Island (Fuest—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>The Disappearance (Cooper) (as Atkinson); Spectre (Clive Donner—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Watership Down (Rosen—animation) (as voice of Hazel); Midnight Express (Alan Parker) (as Max); The Shout (Skolimowski) (as Anthony); The Lord of the Rings (Bakshi—animation) (as voice of Aragorn)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Alien (Ridley Scott) (as Kane)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The Elephant Man (Lynch) (as John Merrick); Heaven’s Gate (Cimino) (as Billy Irvine)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>History of the World, Part I (Mel Brooks) (as Jesus)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1982 Partners (Burrows) (as Kerwin); Night Crossing (Delbert Mann) (as Peter Strelzyk); The Plague Dogs (Rosen—animation) (voice of Snitzer)
1983 King Lear (Elliott—for TV) (as the Fool); The Otherman Weekend (Peckinpah) (as Lawrence Fassett); Champions (Irvin) (as Bob Champion)
1984 1984 (Radford) (as Winston Smith); The Hit (Frears) (as Braddock); Success Is the Best Revenge (Skolimowski) (as Dino Montecurva)
1985 The Black Cauldron (Berman and Rich—animation) (voice of horned king); After Darkness (Othenin-Gerard) (as Peter Huninger); Free at Last (Lewis) (as narrator)
1986 Jake Speed (Lane) (as Sid); Rocinante (Guedes) (as Bill)
1987 “Segment X” of Aria (Bryden) (as Garsus); From the Hip (Clark) (as Douglas Benoit); Macbeth (Higgs); Vincent—The Life and Death of Vincent van Gogh (Vincent) (Cox—doc) (voice of Vincent); Spaceballs (Mel Brooks) (as himself)
1988 White Mischief (Radford) (as Gilbert Colville); Nuit Bengali (Bengali Night) (Klotz) (as Lucien Metz); Deadline (Stroud); Little Sweetheart (Poison Candy) (Simmons—for TV)
1989 Scandal (Caton-Jones) (as Stephen Ward); Windprints (Wicht) (as Charles Rutherford)
1990 Romeo-Juliet (Acosta); Frankensteiun Unbound (Corman) (as Dr. Joseph Buchanan); The Field (Sheridan) (as “Bird” O’Donnell); Who Bombed Birmingham? (The Investigation: Inside a Terrorist Bombing) (Beckham—for TV) (as Chris Mullin)
1991 King Ralph (Ward) (as Lord Percival Graves); I Dreamt I Woke Up (Boorman) (as Boorman’s After Ego); Resident Alien (Nossiter—doc)
1992 L’Oeil qui ment (Dark at Noon, or Eyes and Lies) (Raul Ruiz) (as Anthony/the Marquis); Mémoire tranquee (Lapse of Memory) (DeWolf) (as Conrad Farmer)
1993 Monolith (Eyres) (as Villano); Great Moments in Aviation (Kidron) (as Rex Goodyear)
1994 Foerreraedri (Betrayal) (Von Krasenstjerna—doc) (as narrator); Hans Christian Andersen’s Thumbelina (Bluth and Goldman—animation) (voice of Mr. Mole); Second Best (Menges) (as Uncle Turpin); Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (Van Sant) (as the Countess)
1995 Two Nudes Bathing (Boorman) (as Marquis de Prey); Rob Roy (Caton-Jones) (as Marquis of Montrose); Saigon Baby (Attwood—for TV) (as Jack Lee); Dead Man (Jarmusch) (as John Schollfield); Wild Bill (Bill) (as Charley Prince)
1996 Privateer 2: The Darkening (Hilliker, Robert) (as Joe the Bartender)
1997 Tender Loving Care (Wheeler) (as Dr. Turner); Love and Death on Long Island (Kwietniowski) (as Giles De’Ath); The Climb (Swaim) (as Chuck Langer); Bandytta (Dejczter) (as Bahbis); Contact (Zemeckis) (as S.R. Hadden)
1998 You’re Dead (Hurst) (as Maitland); Night Train (Lynch) (as Michael Poole); Magic (Garfein) (as Magician); The Commissioner (Sluizer) (as James Morton); All the Little Animals (Thomas) (as Mr. Summers)
1999 New Blood (Hurst) (as Alan White); If. . . Dog. . . Rabbit (Modine) (as Sean Cooper); Watership Down (Sullivan—for TV) (as General Woundwort—voice)
2000 Lost Souls (Kaminski) (role); The Tigger Movie (Falkenstein) (as Narrator)

Publications

By HURT: articles—

“The Outsider,” interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1989.
Interview with J. Smith, in Skoop (Amsterdam), July/August 1989.
Interview with Derek Winnert, in Radio Times (London), 13 October 1990.
Fuller, G., “‘But ‘Hotpants College’?’” (interview), in Interview (New York), March 1998.

On HURT: book—

On HURT: articles—

* * *

John Hurt is the least macho of any serious (as opposed to comic) actor who has ever risen to a kind of stardom, however sporadic and precarious. The basis of John Hurt’s image has always been weakness (physical, but most frequently also psychological) and unhealth (that thin, anxious, pasty face, and that frail body). It is not surprising that the cinema has consistently associated him with affliction. The first film in which he made a really strong impression (playing, typically, a very weak man) was I, Rillington Place. His unforgettable Timothy Evans—hapless, nervous, unstable, marginally retarded, eventually executed for a murder he did not commit and constitutionally unable effectively to defend himself—stole the movie from a distinguished cast that included Richard Attenborough as the actual guilty party, notorious British mass murderer John Reginald Christie. Interestingly, Hurt almost did not get the part. He was the last of dozens of British actors to be considered and got the role only when he arrived for his audition and the producers, who had previously dismissed him as a possibility, were stunned by his remarkable resemblance to the real Evans.

Since then, the array of afflictions from which Hurt has suffered on-screen has been formidable indeed, and the enormous weight of makeup under which he played the incomparably afflicted eponymous protagonist of the grim David Lynch film The Elephant Man—produced by, of all people, Mel Brooks! And for which Hurt received his first Oscar nomination—might be taken as symbolic. Hunted by the law (Sinful Davey); homosexuality (The Naked Civil Servant, Partners, Love and Death on Long Island); alcoholism (Heaven’s Gate); cancer (Champions), slimy space creatures erupting out of his chest (Alien); transvestism (Even Cowgirls Get the Blues); official persecution (Scandal); religious persecution (Jesus); time warps (Frankenstein Unbound); brutal treatment in a foreign land (Midnight Express) and even more protracted torture (1984) are among the many other crosses he has had to bear on film.

Through all these ordeals Hurt has maintained a remarkable dignity and integrity. If the image constructed by the totality of the roles has become something of a joke (what will they find for him to suffer from next?), the actor has never given a bad performance, and can hardly be blamed for the fact that, in the commercial cinema, if you do not look like Sylvester Stallone you do not get to play Rambo (one assumes in any case that Hurt would not wish to). Nevertheless, this has not stopped Hurt from getting high-profile roles in a number of action-genre films such as Sam Peckinpah’s The Osterman Weekend, and Stephen Fears’ The Hit. The latter cast Hurt very much against type by assigning him the role of one of the cold-blooded killers hired to pull off the title rub-out (the execution of a stool pigeon) rather than, as one might expect, the suffering target of assassination.

Hurt’s performances in gay roles, while the persona falls well within a certain cultural stereotyping, go some way in fact towards challenging the conventional view of homosexuality as an affliction; his much-maligned Billy Irvine in the much-maligned Heaven’s Gate, the extravagantly excessive Cimino film which sank United Artists, actually constitutes a brilliantly realized component in that film’s extraordinary total architecture.

Hurt’s recent roles have offered him contrasting opportunities: a rare chance to play a conventional “leading man” (one might even say a “romantic” lead) as he gets to sleep with Mary Shelley as the time-traveling scientist in cult director Roger Corman’s return to the megaphone after a twenty-year absence, Frankenstein Unbound, and a particularly colorful and excessive character-role in the Irish drama The Field. There is no question of Hurt’s ability to “carry” a film as its star, but only when his character is anything but a conventional lead and has the advantage of eccentric makeup (The Naked Civil Servant, The Elephant Man). It is not his fault that he makes very little impression in Frankenstein Unbound, as the character (in a highly unconventional situation, but very conventionally concealed) could have been played by almost anyone, and the film, although apparently an instant “cult classic,” is really quite bad.

The Field is another matter. Mistaken by some for a quasi-neorealist “slice of life,” it is in fact an all-stops-out melodrama with many of the strengths of that genre: vividly realized characters built upon the solid foundation of strong and enduring stereotypes, a relishing of “excess” in performance and direction, and the dramatization of impossible tensions and contradictions within the society. In this context, Hurt’s grotesque portrayal of a grotesque character, combining near-imbecility with a disturbingly malicious craftiness, is something of a tour de force, demonstrating once again his versatility and formidable technical control.

—Robin Wood

His performance as an effete, difficult-to-like (but ultimately sympathetic, largely due to Hurt), European writer past his prime becomes fixated on a younger man in Love and Death On Long Island demonstrated these qualities yet again. The performance earned him critical accolades—in fact, his best notices, particularly in America, since The Elephant Man—but, alas, not another Oscar nomination, despite the fact that many admirers of the low-profile film believed he’d be a shoo-in.

—updated by John McCarty

HURT, William

Nationality: American. Born: Washington, D.C., 20 March 1950. Education: Graduated from Tufts University, Medford, Massachusetts; attended the Juilliard School, New York. Family: Married 1) the actress Mary Beth Hurt, 1971 (divorced 1982); 2) Heidi Henderson, 1989 (divorced 1993), sons: Sam and William; son with the ballet dancer Sandra Jennings: Alex; daughter with the actress Sandrine Bonnaire: Jeanne. Career: Acted with the New York Civic Repertory Company, 1976; made his theatrical film debut in Altered States, 1979. Awards: Best Actor Academy Award, Best Actor British Academy Award, National Board of Review Best Actor (tied with Raul Julia), Cannes Film Festival Best Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Actor, for Kiss of the Spider Woman, 1985. Address: 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, California 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1978 Verna—USO Girl (Maxwell—for TV) (as Walter)
1979 Altered States (Ken Russell) (as Eddie Jessup)
1980 Eyewitness (The Janitor) (Yates) (as Daryl Deever)
1981 Body Heat (Kasdan) (as Ned Racine)
1983 Gorky Park (Apted) (as Arkady Renko); The Big Chill (Kasdan) (as Nick)
1985 Kiss of the Spider Woman (Babenco) (as Luis Molina)
1986 Children of a Lesser God (Haines) (as James Leeds)
1987 Broadcast News (James L. Brooks) (as Tom Grunick)
1988 A Time of Destiny (Nava) (as Martin Lawrence); The Accidental Tourist (Kasdan) (as Macon Leary)
1990 I Love You to Death (Kasdan) (as Harlan James); Alice (Woody Allen) (as Doug Tate)
1991 Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Trevor McPhee/Sam Farber); The Doctor (Haines) (as Jack McKee)
1993 The Plague (La Peste) (Puenzo) (as Dr. Bernard Rieux); Mr. Wonderful (Minghella) (as Tom)
1994 Trial by Jury (Gould) (as Tommy Vesey); Second Best (Menges) (as Graham Holt)
1995 Smoke (Wiang) (as Paul Benjamin); Confidences a un inconnu (Secrets Shared with a Stranger) (Bardwill)
1996 Jane Eyre (Zeffirelli) (as Edward Rochester); Michael (Nora Ephron) (as reporter); Loved (Dignam); Un Divan a New York (A Couch in New York) (Akerman) (as Henry Harriston)
1997 Loved (Dignam) (as K.D. Dietrickson)
William Hurt (right) and Jack Johnson in Lost in Space

1998 Dark City (Proyas) (as Inspector Frank Bumstead); The Proposition (Lesli Linka Glatter) (as Arthur Barret); Lost in Space (Hopkins) (as Professor John Robinson); One True Thing (Franklin) (as George Gulden)

1999 Sunshine (Szabó) (as Andor Knorr); The Miracle Maker (Hayes, Sokolov—for TV) (voice); Big Brass Ring (Hickenlooper) (as Blake Pellarin); Do Not Disturb (Maas) (as Walter); The 4th Floor (Klausner) (as Greg Harrison)

2000 The Simian Lane (Yellen) (as Edward); The Contaminated Man (Hickox); The Miracle Maker (Hayes and Sokolov—for TV) (as voice of Jairus); Dune (Harrison—for TV) (as Duke Leto Atreides)

On HURT: book—

On HURT: articles—

On HURT: articles—

Publications

By HURT: articles—

Interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1985.
Ciapara, E., “‘Mr. Wonderful,’” in Filmowy Serwis Prasowy (Warsaw), vol. 39, no. 12, 1993.

Campbell, V., and C. Oakley, “‘A Star is Born,’” in Movieline (Escondido), June 1996.

* * *

After compiling a solid résumé of stage credits, blond-haired William Hurt found celluloid stardom in the early 1980s, at which point he was touted as his generation’s Robert Redford. In fact, he was nominated by Time magazine as “the WASP movie idol of the 80s.” Beyond the hype, however, Hurt acquired a reputation for being a steadfastly dedicated actor, committed to giving intelligent performances, as witnessed by his impressive work in three early films: Altered States, his screen debut, playing a scientist who uses himself as a guinea pig in his research experiments; Eyewitness, as a janitor enamored of an attractive television reporter; and Body Heat, as a lawyer manipulated by a femme fatale.

As he might have been the first to acknowledge, Hurt had no movie idol aspirations. He wanted to be an actor first, with versatility and a commitment to craft being his prominent concerns. His ability to thoroughly transform himself into his characters is best exemplified by his performances in two disparate roles. In Broadcast News, he plays Tom Grunick, the cardboad-handsome bubblehead whose looks alone allow him to become Washington correspondent of a major network news division, and who is being groomed to anchor the evening news; in Kiss of the Spider Woman, he is Luis Molina, the effeminate homosexual prisoner obsessed with the high camp of old Hollywood movies. Tom Grunick is all facade, a pretty boy who has mastered the art of looking good. An original thought has never entered his head, and he must be spoon-fed questions, words, and ideas. Conversely, Luis Molina is all feeling, all emotion. He is coquetish, flamboyant, amusing—and as exorted as so many of Hurt’s other characters are restrained. In both roles, the actor offers knowing performances, inhabiting each character and making him thoroughly believable within the framework of the story.

Quite a few of Hurt’s other characters also have been cerebral: the enigmatic Edward Rochester, in Jane Eyre; Nick, the rootless, impotent drug-dealing Vietnam veteran who lives out of his beat-up sports car, in The Big Chill; James Leeds, the teacher of deaf pupils, in Children of a Lesser God; George Gulden, the detached, intellectually pompous college professor-writer, in One True Thing; and Macon Leary in The Accidental Tourist and Paul Benjamin in Smoke, both of whom have been shattered by the premature demise of loved ones. Hurt’s ability to project quietude might serve as a mask for his character’s sensitivity (as in The Accidental Tourist and Smoke), or might be plain thickheadedness (as in Broadcast News and Body Heat). Indeed, as Kathleen Turner’s bitch-goddess so properly observes in Body Heat, “‘You’re not very bright, are you? I like that in a man.’”

In the early 1980s, Hurt was considered a hot actor and premier leading man; by the 1990s, he had been stricken from the Hollywood A-list. His inability to maintain a movie star profile was the result of his proclivity for selecting idiosyncratic screen roles. The Plague (in which he plays a doctor) is an ambitious but ultimately unwatchable adaptation of the Albert Camus novel, and never even earned a U.S. theatrical release. Second Best, in which he offers a sensitive performance as an aging Welsh bachelor who decides to adopt a troubled ten-year-old boy, is not the kind of film to have audiences lining up at movie theaters. During the decade, Hurt’s highest profile films have included Smoke, Jane Eyre, and One True Thing. In Smoke, he is part of an ensemble; in Jane Eyre, Rochester is subordinate to the title character; in One True Thing, his presence and performance are obscured by the characters and star turns of Meryl Streep and Renee Zellweger. In some of his other films, Sunshine being a perfect example, he barely is noticeable. Late in the decade, he accepted the role of the scientist-father who leads his family on a space mission in Lost in Space, the clunky, special effects-dominated screen version of the 1960s TV series. His involvement in this project indicated that Hurt seemed to be rejecting his own value system and acknowledging the reality that in order to survive as a celluloid commodity you must play the Hollywood game. Only in his case, this acceptance may have come too late. Furthermore, he seemed way out of his element uttering such by-the-numbers lines as “You violated a direct order” and “We have to get that door open.” Additionally, Hurt’s career situation was exacerbated by his arious legal scuffles and stormy romantic relationships (most notoriously, a 1989 palimony case brought on by his ex-lover, ballet dancer Sandra Jennings)—a predicament which resulted in his seeming to be more often mentioned in tabloid headlines than film reviews.

—Rob Edelman

HUSTON, Anjelica

Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, 8 July 1951; daughter of the director John Huston. Education: Attended schools in England; trained for the stage at the Loft Studio and with Peggy Furey, David Craig, and Martin Landau. Family: Married the sculptor Robert Graham, 1992. Career: Film debut in A Walk with Love and Death, 1967; worked as photographic model, New York City, 1970s, then moved to California with partner Jack Nicholson and took acting lessons; in TV mini-series Lonesome Dove, 1989, Family Pictures, 1993, and Buffalo Girls, 1995. Awards: Best Supporting Actress, Academy Award, and Best Supporting Actress Awards, New York Film Critics, National Society of Film Critics, and Los Angeles Film Critics, for Prizzi’s Honor, 1985; Independent Spirit Award for Best Supporting Actress, for The Dead, 1987; National Society of Film Critics Best Supporting Actress Award, for Enemies: A Love Story, 1989; ShoWest Female Star of the Year Award, 1990; Los Angeles Film Critics Award for Best Actress, National Society of Film Critics Best Actress Award, and Independent Spirit Award for Best Female Lead, for The Grifters, 1991; Women in Film Crystal Award, 1996; Golden Apple Award for Female Star of the Year,
Anjelica Huston in The Witches

1998; Youth Jury Award and Donostia Lifetime Achievement Award, San Sebastian International Film Festival, for Agnes Brown, 1999.
Agent: c/o Toni Howard, William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

- 1967 A Walk with Love and Death (John Huston) (as Lady Claudia)
- 1969 Sinful Davey (John Huston); Hamlet (Richardson) (as Court Lady)
- 1976 The Last Tycoon (Kazan) (as Edna); Swashbuckler (The Scarlet Buccaneer) (Goldstone) (as woman of dark visage)
- 1981 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Rafelson) (as Madge)
- 1982 Frances (Clifford)
- 1984 This Is Spinal Tap (Rob Reiner) (as Polly Deutsch); The Ice Pirates (Raffill) (as Maida); The Cowboy and the Ballerina (Jerry Jameson—for TV)
- 1985 Prizzi’s Honor (John Huston) (as Maerose Prizzi)
- 1986 Captain Eo (Coppola—short); Good to Go (Short Fuse) (Novak)

1987 Gardens of Stone (Coppola) (as Samantha Davis); The Dead (John Huston) (as Greta Conroy)

1988 Mr. North (Danny Huston) (as Persis Bosworth-Tennyson); A Handful of Dust (Sturridge) (as Mrs. Rattery)

1989 Enemies, a Love Story (Mazursky) (as Tamara); Crimes and Misdemeanors (Woody Allen) (as Dolores Paley)

1990 The Grifters (Frears) (as Lilly Dillon); The Witches (Roeg) (as Miss Ernst/Grand High Witch)

1991 The Addams Family (Sonnenfeld) (as Morticia Addams)

1992 The Player (Altman) (as herself)

1993 Addams Family Values (Sonnenfeld) (as Morticia Addams); Manhattan Murder Mystery (Woody Allen) (as Marcia Fox); And the Band Played On (Spottiswoode—for TV) (as Dr. Betsy Reisz); Family Pictures (Saville—for TV) (as Lainey Eberlin)

1995 The Perez Family (Nair) (as Carmela Perez); The Crossing Guard (Sean Penn) (as Mary); Buffalo Girls (Hardy—for TV) (as Calamity Jane)

1998 Phoenix (Cannon) (as Leila); Ever After (Tennant) (as Baroness Rodmilla De Ghent); Buffalo ’66 (Gallo) (as Janet Brown)
1999 Agnes Browne (title role, + d); Cleopatra: The First Woman of Power (doc) (narrator)
2000 The Golden Bowl (La coupe d’or) (Ivory) (as Fanny); Time of Our Lives (Donoghue)

Films as Director:

1996 Bastard Out of Carolina

Publications

By HUSTON: articles—

Interview with Beverly Walker, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1987.
Interview with Joan Juliet Buck, in Interview (New York), December 1987.
Interview with Susan Morgan, in Interview (New York), December 1991; see also July 1991.
Interview with Sofia Coppola, in Interview (New York), October 1994.
Interview with Jan Aghed, in Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 38, no. 6 (267), 1996–97.

On HUSTON: books—

On HUSTON: articles—

Thomson, D., “‘A Bit of a Coyote, A Hell of a Woman,’” in American Film (Hollywood), November 1990.

* * *

In the movie world, nepotism has probably blighted as many careers as it has advanced. In the case of Anjelica Huston it did both. Luckily the damage came first, and early, giving her the chance to recover. By the time opportunity presented itself again she was ready to succeed on her own evident merits.

The daughter of John Huston and his fourth wife, the late Ricky Soma (to whom she bears a remarkable resemblance), Huston found herself at age 16 pushed into the female lead in her father’s medieval romance, A Walk with Love and Death. Her co-star was the equally unskilled Assaf (son of Moshe) Dayan. Unhappy about her inexperience and her own looks, she found the whole film “uncomfortable.” Like most of her father’s films of this period, the movie was trashed by the critics—although, again like most of his films of this period, its esteem has improved over the years. Nevertheless, the debacle effectively put her off acting for the next 15 years.

Further unsettled by the death of her mother in a car crash (“It drove me a little mad for five years”) she took up fashion modeling, her oblique, elegant features attracting the attention of Richard Avedon and Helmut Newton. At a Hollywood party, an encounter with Jack Nicholson led to a relationship that was to last, on and off, for 17 years.

For most of the 1970s Huston was relegated to being her father’s daughter and Nicholson’s partner—a status that occasional small screen parts (Swashbuckler, The Last Tycoon) did little to change. But in 1981 a serious car accident inspired “the need not to waste my life.” Ironically, during his own early years in Hollywood, her father had also been involved in a car crash, which claimed a life; the trauma prompted him to turn his life around. With Nicholson’s encouragement she took up acting classes and started building a career. Her striking looks and imperious presence gained her strong-women roles in some worthwhile films (Rafelson’s The Postman Always Rings Twice, as a lion tamer) and some cheerful rubbish (a pirate queen in Ice Pirates).

It was John Huston, making amends for her teenage debacle, who offered her daughter her breakthrough role. In his Mafioso black comedy, Prizzi’s Honor, she played the vengeful Maerose Prizzi, a Brooklyn Lucrezia Borgia, in a lethally funny performance that stole the film from its stars, Nicholson and Kathleen Turner. She herself ascribed her success to the script ("a part so solid that it protected me—one could wear the part like a coat") and to her father’s direction. She won a Best Supporting Oscar nomination. Her father was also nominated for his direction, mirroring the 1948 ceremonies when he and his own father, Walter Huston, were nominated (and won) in the same categories for The Treasure of the Sierra Madre. History failed to repeat itself, however, and this time, only one Huston, Anjelica, took home the prize.

Huston’s elegiac side was superbly drawn out in her father’s valedictory masterpiece, The Dead, adapted from the James Joyce short story by her brother, Tony. A film of flawless ensemble playing, it found its still center in the moment when Gretta Conroy, about to depart, halts on the stairway transfixed by the memory evoked by an old ballad. Huston played the scene with heart-stopping simplicity, her eyes and whole posture suggesting a grief held inside her for years, like an unborn child.

Huston rounded off the 1980s with four startlingly contrasted performances. Her concentration-camp survivor in Paul Mazursky’s Enemies: A Love Story was wryly down-to-earth, recognizing with sardonic compassion that time and suffering have matured her far beyond her husband’s inept reach. As chief of Roeg’s The Witches she played the comic-strip villainy to the hilt, pulverizing recalcitrant underlings and changing small boys into mice with mocking relish. For Woody Allen’s Crimes and Misdemeanors Huston turned her strength into neurotic tenacity, endowing Martin Landau’s possessive mistress with an edge of desperation that was painful to watch. And she dominated Stephen Frears’s bleak thriller, The Grifters, as Lilly Dillon, a predatory survivor driven by her own greed and terror into a downward spiral of destruction.
``I certainly grew up being doubtful about my looks, but now I guess I’ve grown into them.’’ Huston’s appearance is highly distinctive—poised, stylish, often beautiful, but never pretty. There is, underlying her tall, angular physique, a hint of fragility, of a capacity for hurt; naturally suited to tough roles, she can also appear touchingly warm and vulnerable. The one thing she can’t play is ordinary, as evidenced by her anti-war journalist in Coppola’s drab Gardens of Stone. But she was ideal casting for Morticia in The Addams Family and its sequel, Addams Family Values, based on Charles Addams’ macabre cartoons. Her reliably witty performance, and that of the late Raul Julia as her husband Gomez, redeemed the weakness of the scripts.

The Addams movies, though, may have done her a disservice, making her the automatic choice whenever a high-Gothic villainess is called for. Huston can carry off these roles, such as the wicked stepmother in the latter-day Cinderella tale, Ever After, with effortless style. But she’s capable of far more varied, nuanced work, and can turn minor supporting parts to impressive account: witness her scene-stealing leather-clad author in Manhattan Murder Mystery, or teamed with Ben Gazzara as Vincent Gallo’s terminally disaffected parents in Buffalo ’66. Her striking presence has been woefully underused, as if (as one recent critic put it) the Louvre “had been utilising the Winged Victory of Samothrace to keep the back door wedged open.’’ Huston may well agree, since she’s now turned director, so far with only limited success. But as with her late-flowering acting career, it would be unwise to write her off too soon.

—Philip Kemp

HUSTON, John

Films as Actor:

- 1929 The Shakedown (William Wyler) (unbilled); Two Americans (short)
- 1930 Hell’s Heroes (William Wyler) (unbilled); The Storm (William Wyler) (unbilled)
- 1963 The Cardinal (Preminger) (as Cardinal Glennon); The Directors (pr: Greenblatt) (appearance)
- 1968 Candy (Marquand) (as Dr. Dunlap); The Rocky Road to Dublin (Lennon—doc) (appearance)
- 1970 Myra Breckenridge (Sarne) (as Buck Loner); The Other Side of the Wind (Welles) (uncompleted)
- 1971 The Bridge in the Jungle (Kohner) (as Sleigh); Man in the Wilderness (Sarafian) (as Captain Filmore Henry); The Deserter (Kennedy) (as General Miles)
- 1973 Battle for the Planet of the Apes (J. Lee Thompson) (as Lawgiver)
- 1974 Chinatown (Polanski) (as Noah Cross)
- 1975 Breakout (Gries) (as Harris Wagner); The Wind and the Lion (Milius) (as John Hay)
- 1976 Sherlock Holmes in New York (Sagal—for TV) (as Professor James Moriarty)
- 1977 The Rhinemann Exchange (Kennedy—for TV) (as Ambassador Henderson Granville); Tentacles (Hellman) (as Ned Turner); Il Grande Attacco (The Biggest Battle; The Great Battle; Battle Force; The Battle of Mareth) (Lenzi); Angela (Sagal) (as Hogan); Hollywood on Trial (Helperrn Jr.—doc) (appearance)
- 1978 The Word (Richard Long—for TV) (as Nathan Randall); El Triangulo diabolico de la Bermudas (The Bermuda Triangle) (Cardona)
- 1979 Jaguar Lives! (Pintoff) (as Ralph Richards); Winter Kills (Richert) (as Pat Kegan)
- 1980 Il Visitatore (The Visitor) (Paradisi) (as Jersey Colsworth); Head On (Fatal Attraction) (Grant) (as Clarke Hill); Agee (Sears—doc) (appearance); John Huston’s Dublin (McGreevy—doc) (appearance)
- 1981 To the Western World (Kinmonth) (as narrator); John Huston: A War Remembered (Washburn—doc) (appearance)
- 1982 Cannery Row (Ward) (as narrator); Lights! Camera! Annie! (Kuehn—doc) (appearance)
- 1983 Lovesick (Brickman) (as Larry Geller, M.D.); A Minor Miracle (Young Giants) (Tannen)
- 1985 The Black Cauldron (Berman and Rich—animation) (as narrator); George Stevens: A Filmmaker’s Journey (Stevens Jr.—doc) (appearance)
- 1986 Directed by William Wyler (Slesin—doc) (appearance)

Films as Director:

- 1941 The Maltese Falcon (+ sc)
- 1942 In This Our Life (+ co-sc, uncredited); Across the Pacific (co-d)
- 1943 Report from the Aleutians (doc) (+ ro as narrator, sc); Tunisian Victory (Capra and Boulting; directed some replacement scenes when footage lost, + co-commentary)
- 1944 The Battle of San Pietro (doc) (+ ro as narrator, sc)
1946  Let There Be Light (doc) (+ ro as narrator, co-sc, co-ph); A Miracle Can Happen (On Our Merry Way) (King Vidor and Fenton; directed some Henry Fonda/James Stewart sequences, uncredited)
1948  The Treasure of the Sierra Madre (+ ro as American tourist, sc); Key Largo (+ co-sc)
1949  We Were Strangers (+ bit role as bank clerk, co-sc)
1950  The Asphalt Jungle (+ pr, co-sc)
1951  The Red Badge of Courage (+ sc); The African Queen (+ co-sc)
1952  Moulin Rouge (+ pr, co-sc)
1953  Beat the Devil (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1956  Moby Dick (+ pr, co-sc)
1957  Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison (+ co-sc); A Farewell to Arms (Charles Vidor; direction begun by Huston)
1958  Mr. North (Danny Huston) (co-sc, exec pr)
1960  The Barbarian and the Geisha; The Roots of Heaven
1961  The Misfits
1962  Freud (Freud: The Secret Passion) (+ ro as narrator)
1963  The List of Adrian Messenger (+ sc); De Sade (Enfield; d uncredited)
1964  The Night of the Iguana (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1965  The Bible (pilot series, uncredited) (+ ro as Noah/narrator)
1966  Casino Royale (co-d, + ro as McTarry); Reflections in a Golden Eye (+ voice heard at film’s beginning)
1967  Sinful Davey: A Walk with Love and Death (+ ro as Robert the Elder); De Sade (Fleischer; d begun by Huston)
1968  The Kremlin Letter (+ ro as Admiral, co-sc)
1969  The Last Run (Fleischer; d begun by Huston)
1970  Fat City (+ co-pr; The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean (+ ro as Grizzly Adams)
1971  The Mackintosh Man
1972  The Man Who Would Be King (+ co-sc)
1973  Independence (short)
1979  Wise Blood (+ ro as Grandfather, billed as “Jhon” Huston)
1980  Phobia
1981  Victory (Escape to Victory)
1982  Annie
1984  Under the Volcano
1985  Prizzi’s Honor
1987  The Dead

Other Films:

1931  A House Divided (William Wyler) (dialogue, sc); Law and Order (co-sc)
1932  Murders in the Rue Morgue (Florey) (dialogue, sc)
1935  It Happened in Paris (Robert Wyler and Carol Reed) (co-adapt, sc); Death Drives Through (Cahn) (co-sc)
1938  Jezebel (William Wyler) (co-sc); The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak) (co-sc)
1939  Juarez (Dieterle) (co-sc)
1940  The Story of Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet (Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet) (Dieterle) (co-sc)
1941  High Sierra (Walsh) (co-sc); Sergeant York (Hawks) (co-sc)
1946  The Killers (Siodmak) (sc, uncredited); The Stranger (Welles) (co-sc, uncredited); Three Strangers (Negulesco) (co-sc)
1988  Mr. North (Danny Huston) (co-sc, exec pr)

Publications

By HUSTON: books—

By HUSTON: articles—

Interview with Karel Reisz, in Sight and Sound (London), January/March 1952.
“How I Make Films,” interview with Gideon Bachmann, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1965.
“The Innocent Bystander,” interview with D. Robinson, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1972/73.

On HUSTON: books—

On HUSTON: articles—

Konigsberger, Hans, “From Book to Film—via John Huston,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1969.
“Huston” issue of Film Comment (New York), May/June 1973.

Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 17, nos. 2 and 4, 1989.
Sholievskaya, Sanya, “Alex North’s Score for The Misfits,” in Cue Sheet (Hollywood), April 1996.

On HUSTON: films—

Ride This Way Grey Horse, directed by Paul Joyce, 1970.
Huston: The Man, the Movies, the Maverick, television documentary, 1989.

* * *

Directors from John Cassavetes to Quentin Tarantino, Vittorio De Sica to Rainer Werner Fassbinder, have regularly worked in front of the camera. Even casual movie fans know that Alfred Hitchcock made celebrated cameo appearances in his films, and Orson Welles not only directed but starred in Citizen Kane.

But one of the most prolific of all actor-directors is John Huston. Certainly, performing was in Huston’s genes. His father was the fine actor Walter Huston; his daughter is the equally fine actress Anjelica...
Huston. In fact, he is the only filmmaker ever to direct a father (for The Treasure of the Sierra Madre) and a daughter (for Prizzi’s Honor) to Academy Awards.

Huston himself was graced with a deep, full, instantly recognizable voice. On occasion he narrated films; he is very much a faceless, able voice. On occasion he narrated films; he is very much a faceless, faceless faceless. He gave notable performances in Otto Preminger’s The Cardinal (as the brusque but benevolent Boston Cardinal); William Richard’s Winter Kills (as a patriarch whose son, a U.S. president, had been assassinated years earlier); and most especially Roman Polanski’s Chinatown (as the insidiously evil powerbroker Noah Cross). He effectively directed himself in The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean (as a properly grizzled Grizzly Adams) and Wise Blood (as a fire-and-brimstone preacher). While at his very best playing corrupted, hell-bent authority figures, Huston also could play farce, as he did in Marshall Brickman’s romantic comedy Lovesick, cast as Dudley Moore’s psychiatrist (who is predisposed to dropping off into slumberland during their sessions).

Nevertheless, Huston—like Orson Welles—far too often chose to slum on screen, accepting throwaway roles in schlocky films far beneath his stature. His filmography is littered with undistinguished parts in one-too-many potboilers, along with trashy Hollywood fare (most specifically, Christian Marquand’s Candy, Cy Endfield’s De Sade, and Mike Sarne’s Myra Breckenridge). By accepting such work, Huston simply traded in on his name. He phoned in his performance in the minimum amount of time, and with the minimum effort. His reward: a paycheck, no more, no less. Had he been so inclined, Huston might have left us with just as many memorable film roles as films he directed.

—Rob Edelman

HUSTON, Walter

Nationality: American. Born: Walter Houghton in Toronto, Canada, 6 April 1884. Education: Attended Lansdowne School, Toronto; dramatic classes at Toronto College of Music. Family: Married 1) Rhea Gore, 1905 (divorced 1913), son: the director John Huston; 2) Bayonne Whipple, 1914; 3) Nanette Eugenia Sunderland, 1931. Career: 1902–05—unsuccessful attempt at acting with road company and vaudeville; 1905–09—engineer in electric light and water plants in Montana, Texas, and Missouri; 1909—returned to vaudeville after forming a team with Bayonne Whipple, whom he later married; 1924—Broadway debut in Mr. Pitt; also appeared the same year in Desire under the Elms; 1929—film debut in short The Carnival Man; 1934—returned to Broadway for successful role in Dodsworth, later in film version; Awards: Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for Dodsworth, 1936; Best Supporting Actor Academy Award, for Treasure of the Sierra Madre, 1948. Died: 7 April 1950.

Films as Actor:

1929 The Carnival Man (Abbott—short); The Bishop’s Candlesticks (Abbott—short); Gentlemen of the Press (Webb) (as Wickland Snell); Two Americans (Meehan or Santley); The Lady Lies (Henley) (as Robert Rossiter); The Virginian (Fleming) (as Trampas); Abraham Lincoln (Griffith) (title role); The Bad Man (Badger) (as Pancho López); The Virtuous Sin (Cast Iron) (Gasnier and Cukor) (as General Gregori Platoff); The Criminal Code (Hawks)

1931 The Star Witness (Wellman); The Ruling Voice (Lee)

1932 A House Divided (Wyler); The Woman from Monte Carlo (Curtiz); Law and Order (Cahn); The Beast of the City (Brabin); American Madness (Capra); Night Court (Justice for Sale) (Van Dyke); The Wet Parade (Fleming); Rain (Milestone); Kongo (Cowen)

1933 Gabriel over the White House (La Cava) (as President); Hell Below (Conway); Storm at Daybreak (Boleslawsky); Ann Vickers (Cromwell); The Prizefighter and the Lady (Van Dyke); How I Play Golf No. 7: The Spoon (Jack Kellog—short)

1934 Keep ‘em Rolling (Archainbaud)

1935 The Tunnel (Transatlantic Tunnel) (Elvey)

1936 Rhodes of Africa (Rhodes) (Viertel); Dodsworth (Wyler)

1938 Of Human Hearts (Brown)

1939 The Light That Failed (Wellman)

1941 The Outlaw (Hughes); All That Money Can Buy (The Devil and Daniel Webster); Here Is A Man; Daniel and the Devil (Dieterle); Safeguarding Military Information (short) (as narrator); The Maltese Falcon (John Huston) (as Captain Jacoby); Swamp Water (The Man Who Came Back) (Re-noir); The Shanghai Gesture (von Sternberg); Our Russian Front (Milestone and Ivens) (as narrator)

1942 Always in My Heart (Graham); In This Our Life (John Huston) (as barman); Yankee Doodle Dandy (Curtiz) (as Jerry Cohan); Prelude to War (Capra) (as narrator); America Can Give It (as narrator)

1943 Edge of Darkness (Milestone); Mission to Moscow (Curtiz); The North Star (Milestone); The Battle of Britain (Wiellier) (as narrator); December 7th (Toland and Ford); For God and Country (Cahn—short) (as narrator); Know Your Enemy: Japan (Capra and Ivens) (as narrator)

1944 Dragoon Seed (Conway and Bucquet) (as Ling Tau); Pacific Northwest (Northwest U.S.A.) (Van Dyke—short) (as narrator); Suicide Battalion (training film) (as narrator); Knickerbocker Holiday (Brown) (as Pieter Stuyvesant)

1945 And Then There Were None (Ten Little Niggers) (Clair); The American People (Litvak—short) (as narrator); War Comes to America (Litvak—short) (as narrator)

1946 Let There Be Light (John Huston) (as narrator); Dragonzwyck (Mankiewicz); Duel in the Sun (Vidor) (as “The Sinkiller”)

1947 Summer Holiday (Mamoulian)

1948 The Treasure of the Sierra Madre (John Huston) (as Howard)
For most of his screen career Walter Huston was typecast as the pillar of American respectability; he was a bank manager in American Madness, a successful businessman in Dodsworth, a prison warden in The Criminal Code, a fictitious American president in Gabriel over the White House. In historical roles, Huston was very much a patriarchal figure: President Lincoln in Abraham Lincoln and Pieter Stuyvesant in Knickerbocker Holiday. Even in Yankee Doodle Dandy he is typecast as the father of that ultimate figure of American patriotism, George M. Cohan.

Playing non-Americans Huston was cast in equally conservative roles. He was suitably imperial as Cecil Rhodes in Rhodes of Africa. He was kind yet commanding as the doctor/commune head of a Soviet village in that curiously middle-American study of rural Russian life under German attack, The North Star.

Huston’s performance in Dodsworth is masterly and quietly understated, with his eyes and body movements indicating the hurt that he feels at his wife’s leaving him. Yet, on the whole, it is thanks to

---

Publications

By HUSTON: articles—

“‘In and Out of the Bag: Othello Sits Up in Bed the Morning After and Takes Notice,’” in Stage, March 1937.

“‘There’s No Place Like Broadway,’” in Stage, September 1983.

On HUSTON: books—

On HUSTON: articles—

1949 The Great Sinner (Siodmak)

1950 The Furies (Anthony Mann)

---

Film Dope (London), January 1983.

Nosferatu (San Sebastián), January 1996.

---

* * *
his less typical roles that Huston can be considered as great a screen performer as stage actor. He is tyrannical as the circuit preacher in Of Human Hearts and magnificently hypocritical as the ‘‘Sin Killer’’ bent on saving Jennifer Jones’s soul in Duel in the Sun. Above all he demonstrated a surprising impish quality as the devil in the guise of Mr. Scratch in The Devil and Daniel Webster, and as the old prospector (with that wickedly gleeful dance on discovering the gold) in his son John’s The Treasure of the Sierra Madre.

—Anthony Slide
INFANTE, Pedro

Nationality: Mexican. Born: Pedro Infante Cruz in Mazatlán, November-December 1917. Family: Married María Luisa León (divorced—but divorce not recognized in Mexican courts); had two children with Lupita Torrenera; lived with Irma Dorantes. Career: Left school after fourth grade and worked as errand boy and carpenter; 1939—singer of rancheras on Radio Station XEB in Mexico City; 1942—film debut as extra; 1947—role in Nosotros los pobres made him a celebrity. Awards: Mexican Ariele Awards, 1955 and 1956; Best Actor, Berlin Festival, for Tizoc, 1957. Died: In plane crash in Mérida, 15 April 1956.

Films as Actor:

1942 La feria de las flores (Benavides); Jesusita en Chihuahua (Cardona) (as Valentín Terraza); La razón de la culpa (Ortega) (as Roberto)
1943 Arriba las mujeres (Orellana) (as Chuy); Cuando habla el corazón (Segura); El Ametralladora (Castillo) (as Salvador Pérez Gómez); El Ametralladora; Mexicanos al grito de guerra (Gálvez Fuentes) (as Luis Sandoval); Viva mi desgracia (Rodríguez) (as Ramón Pineda)
1944 Escándalo de estrellas (Rodríguez) (as Ricardo del Valle y Rosales)
1945 Cuandolloran los valientes (Rodríguez) (as Agapito Treviño “Caballo Blanco”)
1946 Si me han de matar manaña (Zacarías) (as Ramiro); Los tres García and Vuelen los García (Rodríguez) (as Luis Antonio García)
1947 La barca de oro (Paradavé) (as Lorenzo); Soy charro de Rancho Grande (Paradavé) (as Paco Aldama); Nosotros los pobres (Rodríguez) (as Pepe “El Toro”); Cartas marcadas (Cardona) (as Manuel)
1948 Los tres huastecos (Rodríguez) (as Lorenzo, Victor, and Juan de Dios Andrade); Angelitos negros (Rodríguez) (as José Carlos); Ustedes los ricos (Rodríguez) (as Pepe “El Toro”); Dicen que soy mujeriego (Rodríguez) (as Pedro)
1949 El seminarista (Rodríguez) (as Miguel Morales); La mujer que yo perdi (Rodríguez) (as Pedro Montaño); La oveja negra and No desearás la mujer de tu hijo (Rodríguez) (as Silvano)
1950 Sobre las olas (Rodríguez) (as Juventino Rosas); También de dolor se canta (Cardona) (as Braulio Peláez); Islas Marias (Fernandez) (as Felipe); El gavilán pollo (González) (as José Inocencio Meléndez “El Gavilán”); Las mujeres de mi general (Rodríguez) (as General Juan Zepeda)
1951 Necesito dinero (Zacarías) (as Manuel); A toda máquina and ¿Qué te ha dado esa mujer? (Rodríguez) (as Pedro Chávez);

Ahi viene Martin Corona and El enamorado (Zacarías) (as Martin Corona)
1952 Un rincón cerca del cielo and Ahora soy rico (González) (as Pedro González); Por ellas aunque mal paguen (Oro) (as himself); Los hijos de María Morales (de Fuentes) (as Pepe Morales); Dos tipos de cuidado (Rodríguez) (as Pedro Malo); Ansiedad (Zacarías) (as Rafael—father and son); Pepe El Toro (Rodríguez) (title role)
1953 Reportaje (Fernández) (as Damian); Gitana tenías que ser (Baledón) (as Pablo Mendoza)
1954 Cuidado con el ser (Baledón) (as Salvador Allende); Cuidado con el amor (Zacarías) (as Salvador Allende); El mil amores (González) (as Bibiano Villarreal); Escuela de vagabundos (González) (as Alberto Medina); La vida no vale nada (González) (as Pablo Galván); Pueblo, canto, y esperanza (González) (as Lacho Jiménez); Los Gavilanes (Oróná) (as Juan Menchaca)
1955 Escuela de música (Zacarías) (as Javier Prado); La tercera palabra (Soler) (as Pablo Saldaña); El inocente (González) (as Ciberto Gaudázar “Cruci”); Pablo y Carolina (de la Serna) (as Pablo Garza)
1956 Tizoc (Rodríguez) (title role); Escuela de rateros (González) (as Raúl Cuesta Hernández and Victor Valdés)

Publications

On INFANTE: books—
Riera, Emilio García, Historia documental del cine mexicano, vols. 2–6, Mexico, 1970–74.
Blanco, Jorge Ayala, La aventura del cine mexicano, Mexico, 1979.
Blanco, Jorge Ayala, La búsqueda del cine mexicano, Mexico City, 1986.
Blanco, Jorge Ayala, La condición del cine mexicano, Mexico City, 1986.

On INFANTE: article—
De la Colina, José, “La gran familia del cine mexicano: Pedro Infante,” in Dicene (Mexico City), October 1987.

Some 30 years after his death, Pedro Infante, the unrivaled idol of Mexican film, remains alive in the culture of Latin America. More a personality than an actor, it could be said that Infante essentially played himself on the screen: an open, uncomplicated, and sincere representative of the people. His most memorable roles cast him as an urban worker or a rural charro, the Mexican cowboy. In contrast to the icy distance of similar male actors such as Jorge Negrete or Pedro Armendáriz, Infante recognized and reveled in the audience’s presence, often looking directly into the camera, winking and laughing, while singing his rancheras. He charmed everyone but the bad guys as he sang and acted his way through screen vehicles usually constructed around him. Directors, co-stars, and scriptwriters were of secondary importance; everyone from Tierra del Fuego to the Rio Grande went to see Pedro.

Although he demonstrated his acting skills by playing multiple roles in several films, he was at his best in the male-bonding movies such as Dos tipos de cuidado (“Two wild and crazy guys”) A toda máquina (“Full speed ahead”), and ¿Qué te ha dado esa mujer? (“What did that woman give you?”). In *Dos tipos Infante pointed to the primacy of the male-male relationship in machismo when he compared treachery by a woman and a man: “When a woman betrays us, well, we forgive her—because finally she’s a woman. But, when we’re betrayed by the man we think is our best friend—ay, Chihuahua—that really hurts.” In Dicen que soy mujeriego (“They say I’m a womanizer”—a reference to Infante’s off-screen exploits), Infante undercut the expectation created by the film’s title that a typically macho attitude towards women would be displayed. Instead he suggested that it is more virile to suffer than to cause suffering, dolefully complaining, “They say I’m a womanizer who plays around, but I feel lonely.”

A folk hero who could be tender or sentimental without compromising his masculine image, Infante met his end in the flamboyant manner that gives meaning to such a character. He felt that although his first wife had made him an actor, God had made him a pilot. Other flyers demurred, describing him as “loco”—a judgment confirmed by several near-fatal crashes prior to the final one. His funeral was a tumultuous event, complete with thousands of mourners, the leading stars of Mexican cinema, and mariachi bands. He is still the idol of the popular classes: his films are shown weekly on Mexican television, his records sell widely, and some 10,000 people attended an event commemorating the 25th anniversary of his death. The vitality of Pedro Infante—his style, grace, and charm—has not lost its allure.

—John Mraz

---

IRONS, Jeremy

Films as Actor:

1980  Nijinsky (Ross) (as Mikhail Fokine)
1981  The French Lieutenant’s Woman (Reisz) (as Charles Smithson/Mike)
1982  Moonlighting (Skolimowski) (as Nowak)
1983  Betrayal (David Jones) (as Jerry); The Wild Duck (Safran) (as Harold Ackland)
1984  Swann in Love (Un Amour de Swann) (Schlöndorff) (as Charles Swann)
1986  The Mission (Joffé) (as Father Gabriel); The Statue of Liberty (Ken Burns—doc) (as voice)
1988  Dead Ringers (Cronenberg) (as Beverly and Elliot Mantle)
1989  A Chorus of Disapproval (Winner) (as Guy Jones); Danny, the Champion of the World (Millar—for TV) (as William Smith); Australia (Andrien) (Edouard Pierson)
1990  Reversal of Fortune (Schroeder) (as Claus von Bulow)
1991  Operation Zebra (Zebra*ck*ra Opera) (Golan and Menzel) (as prisoner); Kafka (Soderbergh) (as Franz Kafka)
1992  Waterland (Gyllenhaal) (as Tom Crick); Damage (Malle) (as Dr. Stephen Fleming); Tales from Hollywood (Davies—for TV) (as Odin Von Horvath); From Time to Time (Blyth) (as H. G. Wells)
1993  M. Butterfly (Cronenberg) (as Rene Gallimard); The House of the Spirits (August) (as Esteban Trueba); Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (as voice)
1994  The Lion King (Minkoff—animation) (as voice of Scar)
1995  Die Hard with a Vengeance (McTiernan) (as Simon Peter Gruber)
1996  Lolita (Lyne) (as Humbert Humbert); Stealing Beauty (Bertolucci) (Alex Parrish)
1997  Chinese Box (Wang) (as John)
1998  The Man in the Iron Mask (Wallace) (as Aramis)

Publications

By IRONS: articles—

Interview with M. Bygrave, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1983.
Interview with M. Open, in Film Directions (Belfast), vol. 8, no. 32, 1986.

Interview with David DeNicolo, in Interview (New York), June 1990.

On IRONS: articles—

* Kino (Warsaw), June 1995.

Jeremy Irons (right) with Robert De Niro in The Mission

With his first major role in The French Lieutenant’s Woman starring opposite Meryl Streep, Jeremy Irons’s screen presence as an up-and-coming dramatic actor attracted an enormous amount of attention. Beginning his career on stage, Irons worked with the Bristol Old Vic repertory company and the Royal Shakespeare Company in the 1970s. Throughout his stardom, he has remained devoted to stage performances, with a major Broadway performance, The Real Thing by Tom Stoppard, and a few productions with the Royal Shakespeare Company in the late 1980s. In that Irons is a relatively young actor, whose film career has spanned just over two decades, it is far too early to come to any conclusive view of his accomplishment.

Irons’s striking matinee idol looks and melodious voice, his classical training and devotion to the theater, have resulted in gratuitous and premature comparisons to the young Laurence Olivier. Although potentially capable of Olivier’s range, Irons gives the appearance of being a much more consciously restrained actor than Olivier, one less given to the bravura turn, more concerned with the repressed elements in the characters he plays than with their tempestuous external behavior. Even his most flamboyant roles—including his tours de force in Reversal of Fortune and Dead Ringers—convey the notion that Irons defers instinctively to the subtle nuance and unarticulated silence more readily associated with his parts in works such as Pinter’s Betrayal, in which characters reveal as little as possible by speaking in ellipses. (“I’m very interested in what one conveys without words because I think it’s one of the ways we communicate best in films or plays,’’ he said in 1984. ‘‘I hate acting acting, seeing the wheels turn,’’ he once told an interviewer. ‘‘I dislike the vulgarity of excessive effort.’’

The dual roles Irons plays in The French Lieutenant’s Woman (a screen adaptation of John Fowles’s novel by Pinter), complemented by Streep’s equally powerful performance, trace the shocking similarities between the Victorian era and its modern counterpart. As Damian Cannon puts it: ‘‘A classical tale of passion, betrayal and loss is related using a mixture of Victorian costume drama and contemporary fiction.’’ In the film and the film within the film, Irons successfully portrays two men swamped by the mysterious power of love, or, more accurately, that of obsession and descending into the spiral of ultimate despair. Marked by his looks of confused desires and an increasingly warped physique and psyche, the two characters, in different time zones, mesh into one perpetual image of loss. Irons’s next major role came as the Jesuit priest in Roland Joffé’s award-winning film, The Mission. Despite the highly problematic, revisionist treatment of eighteenth-century colonialism in South America, Irons and Robert De Niro (playing Father Mendoza, a former slaver) render convincing portrayals of two sides of religious faith. While De Niro relentlessly emits powerhouse forcefulness out of repentance and a hope for redemption, Irons quietly yet unblinkingly sustains an iron will for sainthood through martyrdom.

Irons’s acting, however, did not get official recognition until another dual role performance in David Cronenberg’s 1988 Dead Ringers. Hailed as the best actor of the year by the New York Film Critics, Irons plays Elliot and Beverly Mantle, twin doctors, both gynecologists, both sexually deviant, obsessed men. One is a dashing playboy, the other inhibited and private. One becomes addicted to drugs, the other, in attempting to cure him, becomes hooked as well. One woos women, the other impersonates him in order to sleep with the women his twin has wooed and won. Both die a mutually macabre death. The ingredients of a Cronenberg horror film are present, a fact excessively trumpeted in the film’s inappropriate marketing, but the literary screenplay and Irons’s dazzling, contrasting performance as the twins properly emphasized the film’s true focus on filial obsession and descent into madness.

The most important role for Irons to date, however, came two years later as the mysterious Dutch socialite, Claus von Bulow, in Schroeder’s Reversal of Fortune in 1990. In this Oscar-winning role, Irons plays a ‘‘cold, emotionless, and calculating’’ (Mark R. Leeper) European aristocrat who has been found guilty of the attempted murder of his wife (played brilliantly by Glenn Close). Hiring a trial lawyer and professor of law Alan Dershowitz to defend him, von Bulow enigmatizes his entire defense team by his immaculately articulate power of speech and cultured yet ominous demeanor demonstrating absolute self-control. With or without words, Irons’s performance balances the detached charm and wit of the sophisticated rake of Restoration comedy (who never takes himself too seriously) with an antithetical air of menace calculated to invite speculation that von Bulow may indeed be a man capable of unspeakable acts. It is a difficult role that requires succinctly enunciated words and gesture, speech and the ‘‘unspeakable.’’ It is also in a role like this that one sees most clearly Irons’s ability to interlace the precision of stage acting and the minute yet significant details that filmic language is best at revealing.

For many, Irons’s performances in both Louis Malle’s 1992 Damage and Cronenberg’s 1993 M. Butterfly came as a double disappointment. The mediocrity of both films, however, seems less a shock than the cardboard villain he plays in McTiernan’s 1995 Die Hard with a Vengeance. Simon—brother of the terrorist, Hans, in the first Die Hard—is played with an embarrassing combination of Hopperish delirium and Travoltarian pretentious unwit. His performance in the remake of the classic Lolita represented a great improvement, capturing with skill and subtlety the melancholy of Nabokov’s tortured Humbert Humbert.

—Mark W. Estrin, updated by Guo-Juin Hong
JACKSON, Glenda

Films as Actresses:

1963 This Sporting Life (Anderson) (bit role)
1965 Benefit of the Doubt (Whitehead) (documentary appearance in on-stage role)
1967 Marat/Sade (Brook) (as Charlotte Corday)
1968 Tell Me Lies (Brook); Negatives (Medak) (as Vivien)
1970 Women in Love (Russell) (as Gudrun Brangwen)
1971 The Music Lovers (Russell) (as Nina Milyukova); Sunday, Bloody Sunday (Schlesinger) (as Alex Greville); Mary, Queen of Scots (Jarrott) (as Elizabeth I); The Boy Friend (Russell) (as Rita)
1973 Triple Echo (Apted) (as Alice); A Bequest to the Nation (The Nelson Affair) (Jones) (as Emma Hamilton); A Touch of Class (Frank) (as Vicki Allessio); Il sorriso del grande tentatore (The Tempter; The Devil Is a Woman) (Damiani) (as Sister Geraldine)
1974 The Maids (Miles) (as Solange)
1975 The Romantic Englishwoman (Losey) (as Elizabeth Fielding); Hedda (Nunn) (title role)
1976 The Incredible Sarah (Fleischer) (as Sarah Bernhardt); Nasty Habits (Lindsay-Hogg) (as Alexandra)
1978 House Calls (Zieff) (as Ann Atkinson); Stevie (Enders) (title role)
1979 Lost and Found (Frank) (as Tricia); The Class of Miss MacMichael (Narizano) (as Conor MacMichael); Build Me a World (Gane—doc) (as narrator)
1980 Hopscotch (Neame) (as Isobel von Schmidt); Health (Altman)
1981 Stop Polio (Keefe—doc) (as narrator); The Patricia Neal Story (Page and Harvey—for TV) (title role)
1982 The Return of the Soldier (Bridges) (as Margaret); Giro City (Karl Francis—for TV) (as Sophie)
1984 And Nothing but the Truth (Francis); Sakharov (Gold—for TV) (as Elena Bonner)
1985 Turtle Diary (Irvin) (as Nearer)
1986 Man-Made Famine (Sauvageot)
1987 Beyond Therapy (Altman) (as Charlotte); Business as Usual (Barrett) (as Babs Flynn)
1988 Salome’s Last Dance (Russell) (as Herodias/Lady Alice); Strange Interlude (Wise)
1989 The Rainbow (Russell) (as Anna Brangwen); King of the Wind (Duffell) (as Queen Caroline)
1990 Doombeach (Finbow) (as Miss); Open Space: Death on Delivery (TV doc)
1991 The Castle (Foreman); A Murder of Quality (Millar); The House of Bernarda Alba (for TV)
1992 Secret Life of Sir Arnold Bax (Russell—for TV) (as Harriet Cohen)
1999 Jerry Springer on Sunday (as herself—for TV)

Publications

By JACKSON: articles—

Interview with Hal Rubenstein, in Interview, May 1988.

On JACKSON: books—

Nathan, David, Glenda Jackson, Tunbridge Wells, Kent, 1984.
Glenda Jackson and Stratford Johns in Salome’s Last Dance

On JACKSON: articles—

Ecran (Paris), March 1978.

* * *

A stage-trained British actress, Glenda Jackson worked for the Royal Shakespeare Company and for Peter Brook before entering films. Her first important film performance was the re-creation of her stage role in Brook’s filming of his own stage production of the Peter Weiss play The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as Performed by the Inmates of the Asylum of Charenton under the Direction of the Marquis de Sade (Marat/Sade). Though not comprehensively distributed, the film excited critics in part because of Jackson’s bold performance as the narcoleptic inmate. Critical acclaim and an Academy Award came to her in 1970 for her performance as Gudrun in Ken Russell’s adaptation of D. H. Lawrence’s Women in Love. In a cold and often repellent interpretation, Jackson created a Gudrun who is sexually driven, intelligent, lyrical, and aloof.

Jackson is noted for her full and expressive voice, her theatrical diction, and performances based less on naturalistic precepts than a declamatory theatrical tradition. Her face, though sometimes charged with eroticism, is by no means conventionally attractive, nor is her body, often bared in her films. Her dark, probing eyes are vaguely unsettling, and her mannerisms of touching her tongue to her teeth and curling her lips are both erotic and unpleasant. Her presence, which is considerable, demands attention and attracts the eye; her assured self-consciousness about her technique helps her to create a variety of characterizations. She followed her performance in Women in Love by starring in another Russell film, The Music Lovers, playing Tchaikovsky’s nymphomaniac wife. It was a powerful, all-out performance in a film of such visual and sexual excess that many critics recoiled. Jackson subsequently made a small industry of playing Queen Elizabeth, first in Elizabeth R, a series for British television which was more responsible than anything else for gaining Jackson her American stardom, and then in the film Mary, Queen of Scots, opposite Vanessa Redgrave as Mary. The two women gave extraordinary and completely different kinds of performances: Jackson’s stylized and mannered, Redgrave’s more naturalistic and lyrical—a contrast that perfectly expressed the differences between the characters.

The remainder of Jackson’s film roles are noteworthy for their variety: as a woman who begins an affair with a married man in an American screwball comedy, A Touch of Class, in which Jackson proved surprisingly adept at repartee and slapstick, and for which she won her second Academy Award; as Hedda Gabler in the virtually undistributed Hedda, for which Jackson adapted her controversial stage performance and was given an Academy Award nomination; as poet Stevie Smith in Stevie, also based on a stage role, which presented a wry and much warmer Jackson than had heretofore been seen; as the contemporary heroine of John Schlesinger’s Sunday, Bloody Sunday, an examination of a love triangle with a bisexual apex, for which Jackson received another Academy Award nomination; as a conniving and conspiratorial nun patterned after Richard Nixon in the Watergate-inspired comedy, Nasty Habits; as Sarah Bernhardt in the underrated The Incredible Sarah, in which Jackson was also given the opportunity to portray Bernhardt acting in her most famous roles, including Joan of Arc and Camille; as an Adlai Stevenson-inspired, health faddist and possible transsexual, in Robert Altman’s comedy Health; and as the repressed heroine in the odd, Harold Pinter-written love story, Turtle Diary.

Jackson’s reputation as a film actress has declined somewhat in recent years, with the critical judgment that her screen persona remains unusually cold, whatever the role, and that her technique, from film to film, tends to be too unvarying. Unlike, say, Meryl Streep, who is the master of accents, Jackson has been unwilling, for example, to adjust her declamatory vocal technique—even in otherwise powerful, biographical performances in The Patricia Neal Story and Sakharov (both for television), playing well-known women (from Kentucky and Russia) who sound not even vaguely like Jackson. And yet it must be noted that Jackson has garnered extraordinary notice for her stage work in this period, including raves for the 1985 Strange Interlude (which has been preserved on video for television) and fascination for her controversial 1988 stage performance as Lady Macbeth. Perhaps the truth is that Jackson has a strong understanding of her own strengths and weaknesses and therefore sees no need to push beyond them; if she has lost some of her passion for acting, she has found her passion for politics and social commitment growing ever greater. Certainly, this political passion has been present as far back as her earliest, professional theatrical experiences (such as Peter Brook’s anti-Vietnam play and film, Tell Me Lies). Clearly, Sakharov interested Jackson because playing Elena Bonner allowed her to make a statement about human rights; similarly, Business as Usual was a pro-labor, didactic drama that allowed Jackson to comment upon sexual harassment in Margaret Thatcher’s England. Although Jackson made up with director Ken Russell, with whom she had had a falling out, to appear in Salome’s Last Dance and, more notably, to appear in The Rainbow in the role of Anna Brangwen (the mother of Gudrun, the character she played in Women in Love), Jackson has virtually retired from acting, since her election to a seat in the British House of Commons, representing a working-class neighborhood for the Labour Party.

—Charles Derry

JACKSON, Samuel L.

Nationality: American. Born: Atlanta, Georgia, 21 December 1948. Family: Married the actress LaTanya Richardson (1980); child: Zoe. Education: Attended Morehouse College, major in theater arts. Career: Worked in the theater, 1970s-80s; made his screen debut in Together for Days, 1972; originated the roles of Willie Boy and Wolf on stage in August Wilson’s The Piano Lesson and Two Trains Running at the Yale Rep, late 1980s; co-founder of the Just Us Theater Company, Atlanta, Georgia. Awards: Cannes Film Festival Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Supporting Actor, for Jungle Fever, 1991; Best Supporting Actor British Academy Award, Best Male Lead Independent Spirit Award for Pulp Fiction, 1994; Outstanding Supporting Actor in a Motion Picture Image Award, for A Time to Kill, 1996; Best First Feature (as co-executive producer) Independent Spirit Award, for Eve’s Bayou, 1997; Berlin Film Festival Best Actor, for Jackie Brown, 1997. Agent: ICM, 8942 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90211, U.S.A.
Films as Actor:

1972 Together for Days (Schultz) (as Stan)
1976 The Displaced Person (Jordan—for TV)
1981 Ragtime (Forman) (as gang member no. 2)
1987 Eddie Murphy Raw (Townsend) (as Eddie’s Uncle); Magic Sticks (Keglevic) (as Bum); Uncle Tom’s Cabin (Lathan—for TV) (as George)
1988 Coming to America (Landis) (as hold-up man); School Daze (Spike Lee) (as Leeds)
1989 Sea of Love (Becker) (as black guy); Do the Right Thing (Spike Lee) (as Senor Love Daddy); Dead Man Out (Pearce—for TV) (as Calvin Fredricks)
1990 GoodFellas (Scorsese) (as Stack Edwards); Mo’ Better Blues (Spike Lee) (as Madlock); Def by Temptation (Bond III) (as Minister Garth); A Shock to the System (Egleson) (as Ulysses); Betsy’s Wedding (Alda) (as taxi dispatcher); The Exorcist III (The Exorcist III: Legion) (Blatty) (as Dream Blind Man); The Return of Superfly (Shore) (as Nate); Common Ground (Newell—for TV) (as the Reverend Bob McClain)
1991 Jungle Fever (Spike Lee) (as Gator Purify); Strictly Business (Hooks) (as Monroe); Dead and Alive: The Race for Gus Farace (Mob Justice) (Markle—for TV)
1992 Patriot Games (Noyce) (as Mr. Simpson); Juice (Dickerson) (as Trip); Johnny Suede (DiCillo) (as B-Bop); Fathers and Sons (Paul Mones) (as Marshall)
1993 Amos & Andrew (Frye) (as Andrew Sterling); National Lampoon’s Loaded Weapon 1 (Quintanilla) (as Wes Lugger); Menace II Society (Allen Hughes and Albert Hughes) (as Tari Lawson); Jurassic Park (Myers— for TV) (as Arnold); True Romance (Scott) (as Big Don); The Meteor Man (Robert Townsend) (as Dre); Simple Justice (Helaine Head—for TV) (as the Steward)
1994 Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (as Jules Winnfield); The New Age (Tolkin) (as Dale Deveaux); Fresh (Yakim) (as Sam); Hail Caesar (Anthony Michael Hall) (as mailman); Assault at West Point: The Court-Martial of Johnson Whitattker (Kroll) (as host)
1995 Losing Isaiah (Gyllenhaal) (as Kadar Lewis); Kiss of Death (Schroeder) (as Calvin); Die Hard with a Vengeance (McTiernan) (as Zeus); Fluke (Carle) (as voice of Rumbo)
1996 The Great White Hype (Hudlin) (as the Rev. Fred Sultan); A Time to Kill (Joel Schumacher) (as Carl Lee Hailey); The Long Kiss Goodnight (Harlin) (as Mitch Henessey)
1997 Eve’s Bayou (Lemmons) (as Louis Batiste) (+ co-exec pr); One Eight Seven (Reynolds) (as Trevor Garfield); Jackie Brown (Tarantino) (as Ordell Robbie)
1998 Le rouge violon (The Red Violin) (Girard) (as Charles Morritz); All Saints: The First Video (as himself-uncredited); Sphere (Levinson) (as Harry Adams); Out of Sight (Soderbergh) (as Hejira—uncredited); The Negotiator (Gray) (as Danny Roman)
1999 Deep Blue Sea (Harlin) (as Russell Franklin); Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace (Lucas) (as Mace Windu);

From Star Wars to Star Wars: The Story of Industrial Light and Magic (Kroll) (as host)

2000 Rules of Engagement (Friedkin) (as Colonel Terry L. Childers); Shaft Returns (Singleton) (as John Shaft); Cavemen’s Valentine (Lemmons) (as Romulus Ledbetter) (+ co-exec pr); The 51st State (Yu) (as Elmo McElroy) (+ pr); Mefisto in Onyx (Widen) (+ pr)

Publications

By JACKSON: articles—

Interview with David Rensin, in Playboy (Chicago), April 1995.

On JACKSON: books—

Dils, Tracey E., Samuel L. Jackson (Black Americans of Achievement), Broomall, Pennsylvania, 1999.

On JACKSON: articles—

* * *

The early career of Samuel L. Jackson closely parallels that of another exemplary African-American character actor, Morgan Freeman. Both worked for years on stage and had unimportant movie roles before cementing their reputations in searing, eye-opening, award-caliber supporting performances.

In Street Smart, Freeman played a vicious pimp; in Jungle Fever, Jackson is brilliant as the pitiful, crack-addicted brother of the film’s main character (Wesley Snipes). Jackson’s Gator Purify constantly hits on brother Flipper for money and favors, endlessly and pathetically promising to clean up his life. He is a burden not only to Flipper but to his righteous parents. Nevertheless, Gator is not just another stereotypical African-American street hustler, a black villain in a story whose heroes all are white. Jungle Fever is directed by an African American, Spike Lee; while the character serves to mirror a certain very real segment of the urban black population, in the context of the story it is clear that he represents just one of many aspects of that community. Jackson’s riveting performance did not go unnoticed by critics. The actor may have failed to earn a well-deserved Oscar nomination, but he was cited with the first-ever Best Supporting Performance award at the Cannes Film Festival.

After establishing themselves in their breakthrough roles, the careers of Jackson and Morgan Freeman veer in different directions. On more than one occasion, Freeman has played characters who are sweetly sympathetic and gentle, or quietly commanding, while Jackson’s roles—even when cast as a hero—mostly remain hard-edged and frenetic. He is most fun to watch when playing such characters, whether they are the baddest of the bad or the best of the best.

In the 1990s, Jackson has been one of our most prolific movie actors, consistently bringing a raw, kinetic energy to his work. He appeared in roles of varying lengths in mega-budget epics whose scenarios are driven not by character exploration but by stunts and special effects (Jurassic Park, Die Hard with a Vengeance, The Long Kiss Goodnight, Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace); less splashier, more character-driven Hollywood fare (Losing Isaiah, Kiss of Death); made-for-television movies (Against the Wall, Assault at West Point; The Court-Martial of Johnson Whitaker); and high-profile releases of the New Wave of African-American filmmakers (the Hughes brothers’ Menace II Society, Ernest Dickerson’s Juice, and Kasi Lemmons’ Eve’s Bayou, in addition to Jungle Fever). Earlier, the actor also had roles in Lee’s Do the Right Thing and Mo’ Better Blues.

Four Jackson performances—each in a very different role—serve to exemplify the actor’s unfailing excellence and electrifying screen presence. In Quentin Tarantino’s Pulp Fiction, he has the showy role of Jules Winnfield, the bible-spouting hitman who is companion to the title character, an epithet-spewing creep, in John Travolta’s Vincent Vega. (Jackson plays a not-dissimilar character; in 1992’s Waxworks, he has the showy role of Louis XV.) In William Friedkin’s The Exorcist, he is Colonel Terry Childers, a fiercely proud, ultra-patriotic career marine who is up for the title role when the studio wants to cast an established actor; 1914—film debut in Der Herrscher (Halm); 1915—Betreuender Vater (Halm); 1916—Die Tochter des Peter; 1917—Der letzte Mann (Halm); 1918—Jung, braun, 1920—Ehe der Luise Rohrbach (Biebrach); 1919—Die Brüder (Henning); 1920—The Street of Sin (King of Sins) (Berger)

Nationality: Austrian. Born: Theodor Friedrich Emil Janenz in Rohrschach, Switzerland, 23 July 1884, of American father and German mother; naturalized Austrian citizen, 1947. Family: Married 1) Hanna Ralph; 2) Lucie Höflich; 3) the actress Gussy Holl. Career: After a short stint as a cook on a cargo boat, joined Gardelegen theater company at age 18; 1906—joined Max Reinhardt’s Berlin theater as established actor; 1914—film debut in Im Schützengräbern; 1927–29—made several films in Hollywood; early 1930s—formed the Deutsches Theater in Berlin; 1934—supervisor of State Theater; 1938—chairman of Tobis Film Company, which produced his films; 1941—became Artist of the State; 1944—last film Wo ist Herr Belling? not completed; blacklisted after the war, and made no more films though he was officially “de-Nazified.” Awards: Best Actor Academy Award for The Last Command and The Way of All Flesh, 1927–28; Best Actor, Venice Festival, for Der Herrscher, 1937. Died: In Stroblhof, Austria, 2 January 1950.

Facts as Actor:

1914 Im Schützengräbern (Schmidhäuserl)

1916 Frau Eva (Wiene); Im Angesicht des Toten; Aus Mangel an Beweisen (Edel); Passionels Tagebuch (Ralph); Stein unter Steinen (Bach); Nächte des Grauens (Robison); Der Zehnte Pavillon der Zitadelle (Kaden); Die Bettlerin von St. Marien (Halm); Unheimbar (Hans)

1917 Die Ehe der Louise Roehrbach (Biebrach); Das Geschäft (Reicher); Lulu (von Antalffy); Wenn vier dasselbe tun (Lubitsch); Das Fidele Gefängnis (Lubitsch); Der Ring der Giuditta Foscarini (Halm)

1918 Nach zwanzig Jahren (Zeyn); Die Augen der Mumie Ma (The Eyes of the Mummy) (Lubitsch) (as Radu)

1918–19 Keinendes Leben (2 parts) (Jacoby)

1919 Der Mann der Tat (Janson); Vendetta (Jacoby); Die Tochter des Mehemed (Halm); Madame DuBarry (Passion) (Lubitsch) (as Louis XV)

1920 Kohlhiësels Töchter (Lubitsch) (as Peer Xavero); Die Brüder Karamasoff (The Brothers Karamazov) (Froelich) (as Mitya); Das grosse Licht (Henning); Algol (Werkmeister); Colombine (Hartwig); Der Schädel der Pharaonentochter (Tollen); Anna Boleyn (Lubitsch) (as Henry VIII)

1921 Der Stier von Olivera (Schönfelder); Der Schwur des Peter Hergatz (Halm); Danton (Buchowetzki) (title role); Die Ratten (Kobe); Das Weib des Pharao (Lubitsch) (as Amenos)

1922 Ohello (Buchowetzki) (title role); Peter der Grosse (Buchowetzki) (title role)

1923 Tragödie der Liebe (May) (as Ombrade); Alles für Geld (Fortune’s Fool) (Schünzel); Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Waxworks) (Leni) (as Haroun-al-Rachid); Quo Vadis (Jacoby and d’Annunzio) (as Nero)

1924 Nju (Husbands or Lovers) (Czinner); Der letzte Mann (The Last Laugh) (Murnau) (as Doorman)

1925 Liebe macht blind (Mendes); Variété (Dupont) (as Boss); Tartuff (Herr Tartuff) (Murnau) (title role)

1926 Faust; Eine deutsche Volkssage (Murnau) (as Mephisto)

1927 The Way of All Flesh (Fleming) (as August Schillings)

1928 The Last Command (von Sternberg); The Street of Sin (King of Soho) (Stiller); The Patriot (Lubitsch) (as Paul I); Sins of the Father (Berger)

1929 Betrayal (Milestone)

1930 Der blaue Engel (The Blue Angel) (von Sternberg) (as Prof. Unrath); Liebling der Götter (Darling of the Gods) (Schwartz)
One of the great pleasures of film-going in the mid-1920s was to see the latest film starring the well-known German actor Emil Jannings. Of all the theater people who lent their talents to the new medium, he was arguably the greatest. In the 1920s he created a gallery of historical characters as well as people of his own time. Just after World War I, German films were not welcomed in the Allied countries, a fact advertised by numerous distribution companies. One of the first films to break this embargo was Ernst Lubitsch’s Madame DuBarry. Made in 1919 by an industry remarkable for its technical skills and the high artistic quality of its product, it was not released in the United States and western Europe until years later. Jannings portrayed Louis XV of France, making an impact that was to continue through his career.

Born of an American father and a German mother, the young Theodor Friedrich Emil Janenz took his first job as an assistant cook on a small cargo boat bound for London. Returning home, he toured Central Europe for a number of years as a member of the Gardelegen troupe of stage players. Eventually he joined the company of theatrical genius Max Reinhardt where his colleagues included Conrad Veidt, Werner Kraus, Paul Wegener, Lucie Höflisch, and Ernst Lubitsch. In 1914 he worked in some minor films and the following year he played in Nächte des Grauens, a typical horror film of its time. He then appeared in his first starring role in Frau Eva. Next Jannings was directed in three films by his old friend Lubitsch, of which the most important was Die Augen der Mumie Ma, before appearing in Lubitsch’s spectacular Madame DuBarry.

Jannings furthered his popularity and status by making a number of films with the actress Henny Porten and the director Dmitri Buchowitzki. By 1924 he had established a worldwide reputation as a great actor. He starred with Conrad Veidt and Elisabeth Bergner in Buchowitzki. By 1924 he had established a worldwide reputation as a great actor. He starred with Conrad Veidt and Elisabeth Bergner in Buchowitzki. By 1924 he had established a worldwide reputation as a great actor. He starred with Conrad Veidt and Elisabeth Bergner in Buchowitzki. By 1924 he had established a worldwide reputation as a great actor. He starred with Conrad Veidt and Elisabeth Bergner in Buchowitzki. By 1924 he had established a worldwide reputation as a great actor. He starred with Conrad Veidt and Elisabeth Bergner in Buchowitzki. neurasthenia. At the end of the war he retired to his estate on the Saltzkammergut in Austria. Much derogatory criticism has been written about Jannings’s role within the Nazi regime. One writer would even remark, ‘‘Jannings was a miserable human being . . . uncultured and semi-illiterate.’’ This seems to be little more than name calling, yet his participation in Nazism needs to be addressed.

No finer tribute could be paid him than from his old director, Josef von Sternberg: ‘‘Jannings had every right to the universal praise that was his for many years, and his position in the history of the motion picture is secure, not only as a superlative performer but also as a source of inspiration for the writers and directors of his time. This in my opinion is the highest compliment within the scope of an actor to earn.’’

—Liam O’Leary

JOHNSON, Celia

Films as Actress:

1934 Dirty Work (Walls)
1941 We Serve (short); A Letter from Home (short)
1942 In Which We Serve (Coward) (as Alick Kinross)
1943 Dear Octopus (The Randolph Family) (French) (as Cynthia)
1944 This Happy Breed (Lean) (as Ethel Gibbons)
1945 Brief Encounter (Lean) (as Laura Jesson)
1950 The Astonished Heart (Darnborough and Fisher) (as Barbara Faber)
1952 I Believe in You (Dearden) (as Matty); The Holly and the Ivy (O’Ferrall) (as Jenny Gregory)
1953 The Captain’s Paradise (Kimmins) (as Maud St. James)
1955 A Kid for Two Farthings (Reed) (as Joanna)
1957 The Good Companions (Lee Thompson) (as Miss Trant)
1969 The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (Neame) (as Miss Mackay)
1978 Les Misérables (Glenn Jordan—for TV)
1980 The Hostage Tower (Guzman—for TV); Staying On (Narizzano—for TV)

Publications

On JOHNSON: book—

On JOHNSON: articles—

Night. A suburban English railway station. As a train approaches at speed, a neatly dressed woman, bleak despair in her eyes, steps to the edge of the platform—and, at the last second, hesitates. Rachmaninov thunders on the soundtrack; the lights of the rushing train slap across the woman’s face as she stands horrified by the nearness of death.

The dramatic climax of Brief Encounter also proved to be the climax of Celia Johnson’s screen career. No matter what other roles she played, the near-adulterous, near-suicidal, suburban wife of David Lean’s film was the part she was remembered for. Not without reason: the film’s classic status rests on the intelligence, subtlety, and emotional honesty of her performance.

Not that Johnson made many films—less than a dozen features in all, and few of them particularly distinguished. The best were probably the three she made for Lean, all scripted by Noël Coward. In Which We Serve offered her little more than a cameo role, though beautifully executed; and she was clearly less than comfortable with a working-class part in This Happy Breed. Her range was a narrow one; within it she could be superb, but outside it her subtlety looked merely overcautious.

She also possessed a notable talent for sophisticated comedy, often displayed on stage but all too rarely on screen. As one of Alec Guinness’s bigamous wives in The Captain’s Paradise, she made the material seem better than it deserved; but her finest comic performance on film was in The Captain’s Paradise, where her delightfully acidulous Scots headmistress nearly stole the picture from Maggie Smith—no small achievement.

That was her last film, though Staying On, made for TV, reunited her with her co-star of Brief Encounter, Trevor Howard, and demonstrated that in the intervening years her playing had lost nothing of its warmth and quiet skill.

—Philip Kemp

JONES, James Earl

James Earl Jones (right) with Richard Harris in Cry, the Beloved Country

Films as Actor:

1964 Dr. Strangelove: Or, How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (Kubrick) (as Lt. Lothar Zagg)
1967 The Comedians (Glennville) (as Dr. Magiot)
1970 King: A Filmed Record . . . Montgomery to Memphis (Lumet and Joseph L. Mankiewicz—doc); End of the Road (Avakian) (as Dr. D); The Great White Hope (Ritt) (as Jack Jefferson)
1972 Malcolm X (Worth and Perc—doc) (as narrator); The Man (Sargent—for TV but released theatrically) (as President Douglass Dilman)
1974 Claudine (Berry) (as Roop)
1975 The UFO Incident (Colla—for TV)
1976 Deadly Hero (Nagy) (as Rabbit); The River Niger (Shah) (as Johnny Williams); The Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars and Motor Kings (Badham) (as Leon); Swashbuckler (The Scarlet Buccaneer) (Goldstone) (as Nick Debrett)
1977 Star Wars (Lucas) (as voice of Darth Vader); The Greatest (Gries) (as Malcolm X); Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman) (as older Kokumo); The Last Remake of Beau Geste (Feldman) (as Sheikh Abdul); A Piece of the Action (Poirot) (as Joshua Burke); The Greatest Thing That Almost Happened (Moses—for TV)
1978 The Bushido Blade (Kotani) (as Harpooner); Paul Robeson (Lloyd Richards—for TV)
1980 The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner) (as voice of Darth Vader); The Golden Moment: An Olympic Love Story (Sarafian); Guyana Tragedy: The Story of Jim Jones (William A. Graham—for TV) (as Father Div)
1981 Amy and the Angel (Rosenblum—for TV) (as the Angel Gabriel)
1982 Blood Tide (Jeffries) (as Frye); Conan the Barbarian (Milius) (as Thulsa Doom)
1983 Return of the Jedi (Marquand) (as voice of Darth Vader)
1984 The Vega Strip War (Englund—for TV) (as Jack Madrid); Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp (Burton—for TV)
1985 1877: The Grand Army of Starvation (Briers); The Atlanta Child Murders (Erman—for TV); City Limits (Lipstadt) (as Albert)
1986  My Little Girl (Kaiserman) (as Ike Bailey); Soul Man (Miner) (as Prof. Banks)
1987  Allan Quatermain and the Lost City of Gold (Gary Nelson and Newt Arnold) (as Umslopogaas); Gardens of Stone (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Sgt.-Major “Goody” Nelson); Matewan (Sayles) (as “Few Clothes” Johnson); Pinocchio and the Emperor of the Night (Hal Sutherland—animation) (as voice of Emperor of the Night)
1988  Coming to America (Landis) (as King Jaffe Joffer)
1989  Three Fugitives (Veber) (as Detective Dugan); Field of Dreams (Robinson) (as Coach Couzo)
1990  The Hunt for Red October (McTiernan) (as Adm. James Greer); Grim Prairie Tales (Coe) (as Morrison); Last Flight Out (Elikann—for TV) (as Al Topping); The Ambulance (Cohen) (as Lt. Spencer); Heat Wave (Hooks—for TV) (as Junius Johnson); Ivory Hunters (The Last Elephant) (Sargent—for TV) (as Inspector Nkuru); By Dawn’s Early Light (Sholdor—for TV) (as Alice)
1991  Terrorgram (Kienzle) (as Voice of Retribution); True Identity (Lane) (as himself); Convicts (Masterson) (as Ben Johnson)
1992  Scorcher (Beard) (as Bear); Snakers (Robinson) (as Mr. Bernard Abbott); Patriot Games (Noyce) (as Adm. James Greer); Lincoln (Kunhardt—for TV) (as narrator)
1993  Excessive Force (Hess) (as Jake, the bar owner); Percy and Thunder (Dixon—for TV) (as Percy Banks); Hallelujah (Lane—for TV) (as Old Man Taylor); The Meteor Man (Townsend) (as Mr. Moses); The Sandlot (Evans) (as Mr. Mertle); Sommersby (Amiel) (as Judge Isaacs); Dreamrider (Bill Brown)
1994  The Lion King (Minkoff—animation) (as voice of Mufasa); Clean Slate (Mick Jackson) (as Dobly); Clear and Present Danger (Noyce) (as Adm. James Greer); Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult (Segal) (as himself, uncredited); Twilight Zone: Rod Serling’s Lost Classics (Markowitz—for TV) (as host); Africa: The Serengeti (doc) (as narrator); Confections: Two Faces of Evil (Cates—for TV) (as Charlie Lloyd); The Vernon Johns Story (Fink—for TV) (title role)
1995  Jefferson in Paris (Ivory) (as Madison Hemings); Cry, the Beloved Country (Roodt) (as the Rev. Stephen Kumalo)
1996  A Family Thing (Richard Pearce) (as Ray Murdock); Looking for Richard (Pacino); Rebound: The Legend of Earl ‘The Goat’ Manigault (LaSalle—for TV) (as Dr. McDuffie)
1997  Casper: A Spirited Beginning (McNamara—for video) (as voice of Kibosh); Alone (Horton Foyte’s Alone) (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV) (as Grey); Good Luck (Guys Like Us); The Ox and the Eye (LaBrie) (as James Bing); The Second Civil War (Dante) (as Jim Calla); Gang Related (Cates—for TV) (as Charlie Lloyd); What the Deaf Man Heard (Harrison) (as Archibald Thacker)
1998  Summer’s End (Shaver) (as Dr. William Blakely); The Lion King II: Simba’s Pride (LaDucia, Rooney) (as Mufasa); Primary Colors (Nichols) (voice); Merlin (Barron) (as Mountain King)
1999  Undercover Angel (Stoller); The Annihilation of Fish (Burnett) (as Fish); Command & Conquer: Tiberian Sun (Kucan) (as General Solomon)

Publications

By JONES: book—

By JONES: articles—

Interview in Jet (Chicago), 4 July 1994.
Interview in Jet (Chicago), 16 January 1995.

On JONES: book—

On JONES: articles—

Mesic, Penelope, “‘Real Heat,’” in Chicago, February 1996.

* * *

When James Earl Jones was a young actor, it would have been impossible for him to have attained celluloid stardom. From the early 1950s through the late 1960s/early 1970s, only one African-American performer was allowed to achieve eminence on screen: Sidney Poitier. Such was the manner in which the racial politics of the era affected the movies. In the 1990s, Denzel Washington, Morgan Freeman, Wesley Snipes, Laurence Fishburne, and others have become movie stars—and Jones, too old to play romantic leads or action heroes, has aged into a venerable celluloid elder statesman and character actor.

Jones began pursuing an acting career in the 1950s, at which point he cut his teeth on the New York stage, often appearing with Joseph Papp’s New York Shakespeare Festival. He was past 30 when he debuted on-screen in Dr. Strangelove, and he was barely noticeable in a minor role. His first important movie work came in 1970, when he was approaching the age of 40. In The Great White Hope, he offers a mesmerizing performance as Jack Jefferson, a character based on Jack Johnson, the first black-American heavyweight boxing champion. It was a part he had originated on Broadway two years earlier. Jones did go on to play some starring parts—most intriguingly, the first black U.S. president in The Man, and most memorably, the Josh Gibson-like Negro League home-run hitter opposite Billy Dee Williams’s Satchel Paige-like hurler in The Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars and Motor Kings. Over the years, Jones frequently returned to the stage, and began appearing in television movies and mini-series (with one of his more distinguished roles being Alex Haley in Roots: The Next Generation).
But in most of his better films, including Matewan, Field of Dreams, The Sandlot, and the trilogy The Hunt for Red October, Patriot Games, and Clear and Present Danger, Jones has had supporting roles. As he began surfacing on screen with more frequency, many of his films—from Swashbuckler in 1976 through Excessive Force and The Meteor Man in 1993—have been unimpressive. Still, Jones is such an imposing presence that his impact is felt even when only his voice is employed on screen. Such is the case in the animated feature The Lion King, where he speaks the character of Mufasa, and most especially in the Star Wars trilogy, where he is the voice of Darth Vader.

In the mid-1990s, Jones has had two interesting starring roles: a back-country South African priest in Cry, the Beloved Country and a Chicago cop in A Family Thing. In these films, he is paired with a white actor (Richard Harris in the former, Robert Duvall in the latter). Both scenarios begin with the characters living in separate worlds; through the course of the story, they come to understand one another, realizing that they have much in common as human beings. In Cry, the Beloved Country, they are fathers whose sons suffer cruel fates; in A Family Thing, they are, in fact, half-brothers. The manner in which they learn to coexist serves to present a humanistic antidote to the racial polarization that pervades contemporary society.

While publicizing A Family Thing, Jones noted, “We are who we are for much more interesting reasons than our color”: a deeply humane observation, which reflects upon his own life and career as much as it does the theme of the movie he was promoting.

—Rob Edelman

JONES, Jennifer

Nationality: American. Born: Phylis Isley in Tulsa, Oklahoma, 2 March 1919. Education: Attended Monte Cassino Junior College, Tulsa; Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, one year; American Academy of Dramatic Arts, New York, 1938. Family: Married 1) the actor Robert Walker, 1939 (divorced 1945), sons: Robert and Michael; 2) the producer David Selznick, 1949 (died 1965), daughter: Mary (deceased); 3) Norton Simon, 1971. Career: Acted in some of her parents’ touring productions; some roles in New York with Cherry Lane Troupe; 1938—radio actress, Tulsa, followed by a couple of bit parts in films; 1941—contract with David Selznick was followed by stage work in John Houseman’s Hello Out There, and by study at Group Theatre with Sanford Meisner; 1943—starring role in Selznick’s The Song of Bernadette; 1966—played title role in The Country Girl on stage. Awards: Best Actress, Academy Award, for The Song of Bernadette, 1943. Address: P.O. Box 367, Malibu, CA 90265, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

- 1939 New Frontier (Frontier Horizon) (Sherman) (as Celia Braddock; billed as Phylis Isley); Dick Tracy’s G-Men (Witney and English) (as Gwen Andrews)
- 1943 The Song of Bernadette (Henry King) (title role)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Academy Award Category</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Cast</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Since You Went Away (Cromwell)</td>
<td></td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Love Letters (Dieterle)</td>
<td></td>
<td>Dieterle</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>The American Creed (Robert Stevenson—short); Cluny Brown (Lubitsch) (title role); Duel in the Sun (King Vidor) (as Pearl Chavez)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Portrait of Jennie (Jennie) (Dieterle)</td>
<td></td>
<td>Dieterle</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>We Were Strangers (Huston) (as China Valdez); Madame Bovary (Minnelli) (title role)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Gone to Earth (Powell) (as Hazel Woods); The Wild Heart (Powell and Pressburger—revised version of Gone to Earth, shortened)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Carrie (Wyler) (title role); Ruby Gentry (King Vidor) (title role)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Beat the Devil (Huston) (as Gwendolyn Chelm); Stazione termini (Indiscretion of an American Wife; Terminal Station; Indiscretion) (de Sica) (as Mary Forbes)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing (Henry King) (as Han Suyin); Good Morning, Miss Dove (Koster) (title role)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson) (as Betsy Rath)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Charles Vidor) (as Elizabeth Barrett); A Farewell to Arms (Charles Vidor) (as Catherine Barkley)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Tender Is the Night (Henry King) (as Nicole Diver)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>The Idol (Petrie) (as Carol)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Angel, Angel, Down We Go (Cult of the Damned) (Thom) (as Astrid)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Towering Inferno (Guillerman) (as Lisolette Mueller)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>She Came to the Valley (Band) (as Srita)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Publications

On JONES: books—

On JONES: articles—

Current Biography 1944, New York, 1944.

* * *

Jennifer Jones remains one of the more controversial actresses in the Hollywood cinema. In general, her professional and personal involvement with David O. Selznick has been given a prominence that has colored assessments of Jones’s distinctive contribution to 1940s cinema. Interestingly, the central issue is not that Jones lacked talent or screen presence. The longstanding criticism is that Selznick, because of his commitment to Jones, had no critical distance and, with King Vidor’s Duel in the Sun, tried to fashion an erotic identity for her, making Jones into a ridiculous creation. Previously, Jones’s screen persona was as an innocent child/woman, an image established by her first starring role in Henry King’s The Song of Bernadette. She had also given an intense and emotionally charged performance as the character.

Jennifer Jones remains one of the more controversial actresses in the Hollywood cinema. In general, her professional and personal involvement with David O. Selznick has been given a prominence that has colored assessments of Jones’s distinctive contribution to 1940s cinema. Interestingly, the central issue is not that Jones lacked talent or screen presence. The longstanding criticism is that Selznick, because of his commitment to Jones, had no critical distance and, with King Vidor’s Duel in the Sun, tried to fashion an erotic identity for her, making Jones into a ridiculous creation. Previously, Jones’s screen persona was as an innocent child/woman, an image established by her first starring role in Henry King’s The Song of Bernadette. She had also given an intense and emotionally charged performance as the character.

As the sensual half-breed Pearl in Duel in the Sun, Jones succeeds in giving an audaciously conceived performance employing a degree of physical gesture having more in common with silent-screen acting technique than with the naturalistic behavioral mannerisms associated with the sound cinema. In addition, while Jones’s physical presence is intended to be provocative, she does not allow her physicality to undermine the complex psychological dimensions of the character. Duel in the Sun is thus a remarkable achievement but, like Jones’s performance, it has often been misinterpreted as degrading to female sexuality. Though conceived on a lesser scale, Vidor’s Ruby Gentry is equally successful in dealing with the same themes, and again Jones’s sensuality is central to the expression of those concerns.

From the beginning, Jones’s screen persona was imbued with a degree of hysteria, and in Vincente Minnelli’s underrated Madame Bovary this characteristic erupts with particular impact. Minnelli, a director very sensitive to the various aspects of Jones’s sensibility, including her romantic indulgence, encourages her to give a subtle performance without relinquishing the extravagant conception the character has of her identity. These same elements might have been as fully articulated in the Michael Powell/Emeric Pressburger version of The Wild Heart, but unfortunately Selznick’s reworking of their footage does not present a rounded characterization.

Whether Jones would have ascended to the Hollywood Pantheon without her Svengali is less intriguing than revelations in the recent book Portrait of Jennifer that she regretted the pact she made with David O. Selznick, recast in this biography as a lumbering Lucifer. No matter what coloration one paints the envied Selznick-Jones collaboration with, her status as melodramatic princess of the forties is indisputable. If adjectives such as “ethereal” and “luminous” became excess baggage with the passage of time, these qualities were responsible for Jones’s realizing the evocative fantasy of Portrait of Jennie, the fortunes fools romance of Love Letters, and the valentine to homefront frustration, Since You Went Away, projects in which this actress’s breathtaking vulnerability aroused the audience’s protectiveness. If Selznick overproduced Portrait of Jennie, he stayed out of William Wyler’s way long enough for Jones to hold her own against Olivier with her superb characterization of an unwittingly destructive demimonde in the underappreciated Carrie.

Ultimately, Selznick’s make-or-break desire to out-Thalberg Thalberg with his very own Norma Shearer plaything named Jennifer proved fatal to both their careers. Surviving the Hollywood-in-flux fifties due to the unexpected box-office bonanza of a two different-worlds weepie, Love Is a Many Splendored Thing, Jones invested Good Morning, Miss Dove with appropriate starchy decorum and erased memories of kindred spirit Shearer in a four-hanky revisit with The Barretts of Wimpole Street. It was Selznick’s overblown, unnecessary revamp of A Farewell to Arms that proved a farewell to his moguldom and Jones’s major stardom. Deftly imbrcating the complexities in Jones’s persona with F. Scott Fitzgerald’s themes, the flawed Tender Is the Night is the last film to resurrect Jones’s patented fragility to good effect. Afterwards, the neurotic mannerisms consume her performances in the unworthy The Idol and the downright cheesy Angel, Angel Down We Go. Having purchased the rights to the novel, Terms of Endearment, Jones was cheated out of the plum role of Aurora by the director she had handpicked to helm her comeback. Perhaps, such ignominious treatment proved that cutthroat Hollywood had not changed much since her heyday. Offscreen, she has found philanthropist Norton Simon to protect her, but her radiance has been sorely missed on the big screen for many years.

—Richard Lippe, updated by Robert Pardi

JONES, Tommy Lee

revitalize career. Awards: Emmy Award, for The Executioner’s Song, 1983; Academy Award, Golden Globe Award, and Los Angeles Critics Award, Best Supporting Actor, for The Fugitive, 1993.

Agent: Michael Black, c/o International Creative Management, 8942 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1970 Love Story (Hiller) (as Hank); Eliza’s Horiscope (Sheppard) (as Tommy)
1973 Life Study (Nebbia) (as Gus)
1976 Smash-Up on Interstate 5 (Moxey—for TV); Jackson County Jail (Miller) (as Coley Blake); Charlie’s Angels (Moxey—for TV)
1977 Rolling Thunder (Flynn) (as Johnny Vohden); The Amazing Howard Hughes (William A. Graham—for TV) (title role)
1978 Eyes of Laura Mars (Kershner) (as John Neville); The Betsy (Petrie) (as Angelo Perino)
1980 Coal Miner’s Daughter (Apted) (as Doolittle “Mooney” Lynn); The Barn Burning (Werner—for TV)
1981 Back Roads (Ritt) (as Elmore Pratt)
1982 The Executioner’s Song (Schiller—for TV) (as Gary Gilmore); The Rainmaker (for TV)
1983 Nate and Hayes (Fairfax) (as Captain Bully Hayes)
1984 The River Rat (Rickman) (as Billy)
1985 The Park Is Mine (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV) (as Mitch); Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Hofsiss—for TV) (as Brick)
1986 Yuri Nosenko, KGB (Jackson—for TV); Black Moon Rising (Cokliss) (as Quint)
1987 Broken Vows (Taylor—for TV); The Big Town (Bolt) (as George Cole)
1988 Stranger on My Land (Elikann—for TV); Stormy Monday (Figgis) (as Cosmo); Gotham (Fonvielle—for TV) (as Eddie Mallard); April Morning (Delbert Mann) (as Moses Cooper)
1989 The Package (Andrew Davis) (as Thomas Boyette)
1990 Fire Birds (David Green) (as Brad Little)
1991 JFK (Oliver Stone) (as Clay Shaw)
1992 Under Siege (Andrew Davis) (as William Strannix)
1993 House of Cards (Lessac) (as Jake Beerlander); Heaven and Earth (Oliver Stone) (as Steve Butler); The Fugitive (Andrew Davis) (as U.S. Marshal Samuel Gerard)
1994 Cobb (Shelton) (title role); Natural Born Killers (Oliver Stone) (as Dwight McCloskey); Blue Sky (Richardson—produced in 1990) (as Hank Marshall); Blown Away (Hopkins) (as Ryan Gaerity); The Client (Schumacher) (as Roy Foltrigg)
1995  Batman Forever (Schumacher) (as D.A. Harvey “Two-Face” Dent)
1996  Men in Black (Sonnenfeld) (Kay)
1998  U.S. Marshals (Baird) (as Chief Deputy Marshal Samuel Gerard); Small Soldiers (Dante) (voice of Major Chip Hazard)
1999  Rules of Engagement (Friedkin) (as Colonel Hayes Hodges); Double Jeopardy (Beresford) (Travis Lehman)
2000  Space Cowboys (Eastwood) (as Willian “Hawk” Hawkins)

Film as Director:

1995  The Good Old Boys (for TV) (+ ro as Huey Calloway, co-sc)

Publications

By JONES: articles—

Interview with Carole Zucker, in Figures of Light: Actors and Directors Illuminate the Art of Film Acting, New York, 1994.

Interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1994.

“Onward and Upward with the Arts: Keeping up with Mr. Jones,” interview with Lillian Ross, in New Yorker, 4 April 1994.

Interview with E. Kelton, in Interview, June 1995.

On JONES: book—

On JONES: articles—

* * *

Tommy Lee Jones is capable of ferociously intense performances that verge on the extreme. Because of this, it is often easy to overlook his extraordinary range as an actor. Jones has shifted easily among film, television, and theater in a career that spans more than 25 years and often alternates between flamboyant and more understated roles. Recently associated with larger than life (some might say cartoonish) roles such as Ty Cobb in Cobb, “Two-Face” in Batman Returns, and Dwight McCloskey in Natural Born Killers, Jones appeared in nearly 15 films from 1989 through 1995 making him easily one of the busiest actors in Hollywood.

Always an actor of intelligence with a powerful screen presence, Jones’s career in the mid to late 1970s yielded some interesting work from such exploitation fare as Jackson County Jail to the more ambitious Rolling Thunder and Eyes of Laura Mars. It does seem that the first phase of his career had more than its share of country-boy parts, killers, and “heavies.”

An early turning point was his appearance in Michael Apted’s Coal Miner’s Daughter. Although Sissy Spacek garnered most of the critical attention and an Academy Award, Jones’s understated portrayal of Doolittle “Mooney” Lynn gave the film a realistic center it otherwise lacked. His next key performance was his intense turn as Gary Gilmore in the television adaptation of Norman Mailer’s The Executioner’s Song, a film whose direction was not up to the imaginative performance of its leading man.

The 1980s seem to have been something of an unfocused time for the actor. He made his share of ordinary films and his career seemed as if it would not fulfill its early promise. He alternated between serious fare such as Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (television), playing Brick to Jessica Lange’s Maggie and Rip Torn’s Big Daddy, and action films such as Black Moon Rising, and familiar psycho roles such as The Park Is Mine (television). Jones’s career seemed to be floundering. The turning point came with his beautifully understated performance in the highly acclaimed mini series Lonesome Dove. His exquisitely detailed performance as the withdrawn Woodrow Call plays against Robert Duvall’s more extroverted Gus with great subtlety. The performance reminded audiences that Jones was an actor of considerable range whose talents had been wasted in too many unremarkable films.

This range is clearly displayed in his astonishing performance as the elegant, refined Clay Shaw in Oliver Stone’s controversial JFK, a role that would garner Jones an Academy Award nomination for Best Supporting Actor. This performance illustrates how physical his work as an actor is and how he uses props and makeup (in this case cigarette and white wig) to good effect. Jones thoroughly inhabits the masonic Shaw with especially good use of speech rhythms that are both Louisiana-bound and pure Tommy Lee Jones. The actor strings together long sentences without seeming to come up for air, and occasionally shifts to a higher vocal pitch in a performance that rivets the audience’s attention.

Jones’s appearance as the deranged rocker/terrorist William Strannix in Under Siege confirmed that the actor was now commercially bankable. His rich, focused performance (along with Andrew Davis’s skillful direction) elevated the film several notches above the usually monotonous, Steven Seagal action picture. Jones was reunited with Davis (for a third time) in the hugely successful Harrison Ford vehicle The Fugitive, playing the determined Samuel Gerard. The film won Jones the most critical acclaim of his career, and he received an Oscar as Best Supporting Actor for his efforts. This last performance spurred Gavin Smith to ask “Is it only the character or also Tommy Lee Jones up there, funnier, faster and smarter than everybody else.”

At this point Jones’s career entered overdrive and he risked serious overexposure. He worked twice more with Oliver Stone in the 1990s. He gave an underrated performance in the critical and commercial flop Heaven and Earth, and appeared in the controversial Natural Born Killers in a role that seems excessive but is in keeping with every other aspect of the film. He appeared in several high-profile, big-budget films with director Joel Schumacher, The Client and
JOSEPHSON, Erland

Films as Actor:
1958 Ansiktet (The Magician; The Face) (Bergman) (as Egerman); Nära livet (Brink of Life; So Close to Life) (Bergman) (as Anders)
1968 Vargtimmen (Hour of the Wolf) (Bergman) (as Baron Von Morkens); Flickorna (The Girls) (Zetterling and Hughes)
1969 En Passion (A Passion of Anna; The Passion) (Bergman) (as Elis Vergerus)
1972 Viskningar och rop (Cries and Whispers) (Bergman) (as doctor)
1973 Scenes from a Marriage (Bergman) (as Johan)
1975 Monismanien 1995 (Monismania 1995) (Fant) (as teacher)
1976 Ansikte mot Ansikte (Face to Face) (Bergman) (as Dr. Tomas Jacobi)
1977 Den Allvarsamma Leken (Games of Love and Loneliness; The Serious Game) (as Editor-in-Chief Doncker); Oltre il bene e il male (Beyond Good and Evil; Au dela du bien et du mal) (Cavani) (as Friedrich „Fritz“ Nietzsche)
1978 Herbtsnotate (Autumn Sonata; Hostsanoten) (Bergman) (as Josef)
1979 Die erste Polka (The First Polka) (Emmerich) (as Leo Maria); Dimenticare Venezia (To Forget Venice) (as Nicky); A Look at Liv (Norway’s Liv Ullmann; Liv Ullman’s Norway) (Kaplan—doc)
1980 Karlekan (Love) (as Erland)
1981 Montenegro (Montenegro—Or Pigs and Pearls) (Makavejev) (as Martin Jordan)
1982 Bella Donna (Keglevic) (as Max); Fanny och Alexander (Fanny and Alexander) (Bergman) (as Isak Jacob); Variola vera (Markovic)
1983 La casa del tappeto giallo (The House of the Yellow Carpet) (as stranger); Nostalghia (Nostalgia) (Tarkovsky) (as Domenico)
1984 Un caso di incoscienza (A Case of Irresponsibility) (as Erik Sander); Dirty Story (as Gabriel Berggren); Efter Repetitioner (After the Rehearsal) (Bergman) (as Henrik Vogler); Angelas Krig (Angela’s War) (as Goldberg); Bakom Jalusiin (Behind the Shutters)
1985 The Flying Devils (De Flygande Djavlarna) (Reinf) (as Oscar Seidenbaum)
1986 Amorosa (Zetterling) (as David Sprengel); L’ultima Mazurka (Bettetini) (as Serra); Le Mal d’aimer (The Madalay of Love; The Devil’s Tail) (Treves) (as Robert’s father); Offset (The Sacrifice) (Tarkovsky) (as Alexander); Saving Grace (Robert M. Young) (as Monsignor Francesco Ghezzi); Garibaldi—The General (as Cavour)
1987 Il giorno prima (The Day Before) (Montaldo); Testament d’un poete Juif assassin (Testament of a Murdered Jewish Poet) (as Zapanve); Control (Montaldo—for TV)
1988 The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kaufman) (as the Ambassador); La donna spezzata (A Woman Destroyed) (as Maurizio)
1989 La Guerre la plus glorieuse (Migrations) (Petrovic); Haussenn (Szabó) (as Dr. Bettelheim); Directed by Andrei Tarkovsky (Leszczylowski—doc) (as narrator)
1990 God afton, Herr Wallenberg (Good Evening, Mr. Wallenberg) (Grede) (as Stockholm rabbi); Il Sole buio (The Dark Sun)
1991 The Ox (Oxen) (Nykvist) (as Silver); Cattiva (Egglesdon and Lizzani) (as Prof. Brokner); Meeting Venus (Szabó) (as Jorge Picabia); Prospero’s Books (Greenaway) (as Gonzalo)
1992 Sofie (Ullman) (as Semmy); Den ofrivillige golfaren (The Accidental Golfer) (Aaberg) (as the critic)
1993 The Dancer; The Last Witness (Sundvall) (as Samuel Rosenbaum)
1994 Dromspel (Dreamplay) (Straume) (as blind man)
1995 To Vlemna tou Odysseya (Ulysses’ Gaze; The Gaze of Odysseus; Le Regarde d’Ulysse) (Angelopoulos) (as preserver); Venetta (Haaström) (as OM); The Forbidden Fruit (as landlord); Kristin Lavransdatter (Ullmann) (as Brother Edvin); Pakten (The Sunset Boys) (Risin); Magisk cirkel (Enquist—for TV) (as Henry)
1996 À la recherche de Erland Josephson; Larmar och gör sig till (In the Presence of a Clown) (Bergman—for TV) (as Oswald Vogler)
1998 Den Tatuerade änkan (Molin—for TV) (as Per Gunnarsson); Från regnornarnas liv (Enquist—for TV) (as Johan Ludvig Heiberg); Ivar Kreuger (Molin—mini for TV); Magnetisörrens femte vinter (Magnetist’s Fifth Winter) (Henriksen) (as Mr. Hofverberg)

Films as Actor and Co-Director:
1978 En och En (One and One) (with Nykvist and Thulin) (as Uncle Dan, + co-pr, sc)
1980 Marmeladupproret (The Marmalade Revolution; La Revolte des confitures) (with Nykvist) (as Karl Henrik Eiler, + pr, sc)
Other Film:

1964 För att inte tala om alla dessa kvinnor (All These Women; Now about All These Women) (Bergman) (co-sc)

Publications

By JOSEPHSON: books—

Cirkel, 1946.
Spegeln och en portvakt, 1946.
Spel med bedroade artister, 1947.
Ensam och fri, 1948.
Lyssnarpost, 1949.
De vuxna barnen, 1952.
Utrykt, 1954.
Sällskapsspel, 1955.
En berattlelse om herr Silberstein, 1957; published as A Story about Mr. Silberstein, Evanston, Illinois, 1995.
Kungen ur leken, 1959.
Doktor Meyers sista dagar, 1964.
Kandidat Nilssons forsta natt, 1964.
Lejon i Overgangssalern (Ijjas Dromaten), 1981.

By JOSEPHSON: articles—

* * *

In Prospero’s Books, Erland Josephson plays Gonzalo to Gielgud’s eponymous hero, and has most of his lines spoken for him. He is not seen till near the end of the picture. When he finally appears, his grizzled physiognomy and guttural tones, that earthiness he brings to his screen roles are ill-matched against Greenaway’s graphics and against the full armory of Japanese video technology. Steeped in Ibsen and Strindberg, a distinguished Swedish actor, here, Josephson discovers, his accomplishments count for nothing. Not that Josephson is unused to indignity. In The Unbearable Lightness of Being, he plays the role of a former ambassador reduced to barroom status by 1968 and all that. Nevertheless, he makes a natural Lear or Prospero himself, albeit rather less mellifluous than Gielgud, and Ingmar Bergman and Andrei Tarkovsky in particular have used him to depict teetering monarchs of one sort or another.

As Alexander in Tarkovsky’s The Sacrifice, Josephson surveys death and destruction, imagines a holocaust. There is something saturnine, verging on the leaden, in his playing: his features, suffused with gloom and mapped with wrinkles, easily lend themselves to the grim melancholy of close-ups. On a more intimate level, as the “husband” to Liv Ullmann’s wife in Bergman’s Scenes from a Marriage, Josephson offers an effective rendering of that old archetype, the middle-class, middle-aged and largely sedentary man driven to menopausal despair. Here, he starts off as a bearded bourgeois gentleman, chewing on his pipe, but, as his marriage frays at the edges, and as he and Ullmann engage in a fit of anguished psycho-drama, stripping each others’ characters and pretensions bare, he emerges as a confused, baffled outcast, estranged from his family, background, and profession. This is television territory. The marital conflict is mainly confined to the home: to bedroom, sitting room, kitchen. As Ullmann gains in strength, Josephson seems to dwindle. By the end of the film, he has reconciled himself to disappointment (and has forsaken the family Volvo in favor of a tiny, cramped Citroen).

Unlike his contemporaries in Bergman Rep, most notably Max Von Sydow and Ullmann, Josephson has not been lured to America to caricature his gloomy Scandinavian persona in Woody Allen comedies or to take parts as assassins in political thrillers. He has been too busy in Sweden. He has published poetry, novels, short stories, stage plays, plays for radio and plays for television, and he has written several film scripts. He is active in Swedish Equity. He finds time to teach drama. Still, outside his native country, he remains in Bergman’s shadow.

When Tarkovsky, having recently left Russia, wanted an actor to convey his poignant longing for his homeland, his “nostalgia,” he chose Josephson. It is Josephson’s face which makes him so effective on film, that bearlike aspect, his ability to look lost and forlorn, to convey a sense of suffering and bewilderment, in spite of his bluff exterior. Were one to repeat Kuleshov’s famous experiment of the 1920s and to intercut the same shot of Josephson with images of joy, of sadness, of anger, of hunger, the audience would find the Swedish actor, even though he had not moved a muscle, wondrously expressive, capable of embodying every emotion just through “being there,” in front of the cameras. Nevertheless, he has the rare ability to combine a capacity for rage—for the grand gesture on the blasted heath—with a more subtle skill for understatement and comedy.

—G. C. Macnab

JOURDAN, Louis

Louis Jourdan with Leslie Caron in Gigi

Films as Actor:

1939 Le Corsaire (Marc Allégret—not completed)
1940 La Comédie du bonheur (L’Herbier)
1941 Premier rendez-vous (Decoin) (as Pierre Mortemard); Parade en sept nuits (Marc Allégret)
1942 L’Arlesienne (Marc Allégret); Félicie Nanteuil (Histoire comique) (Marc Allégret); La Vie de Bohème (L’Herbier); La Belle Aventure (Twilight) (Marc Allégret)
1943 Les Petites du Quai aux Fleurs (Marc Allégret); Untel Pere et Fils (The Heart of a Nation) (Duvivier)
1944 The Paradine Case (Hitchcock) (as André Latour)
1948 No Minor Voices (Milestone) (as Ottavio Quaglini); Letter from an Unknown Woman (Max Ophüls) (as Stefan Brand)
1949 Madame Bovary (Minnelli) (as Rodolphe Boulanger)
1951 Anne of the Indies (Jacques Tourneur) (as Capt. Pierre François La Rochelle); Bird of Paradise (Daves) (as André Laurence)
1952 The Happy Time (Fleischer) (as Uncle Desmonde)
1953 Rue de l’Extrapade (Jacques Becker); Decameron Nights (Fregonese) (as Boccaccio/Paganino/Giulio/Bertrando)
1954 Three Coins in the Fountain (Negulesco) (as Prince Di Cessi)
1956 La Mariée est trop belle (The Bride Is Much Too Beautiful) (Gaspard-Huit) (as Michel); The Swan (Charles Vidor) (as Dr. Nicholas Agi); Julie (Andrew L. Stone) (as Lyle Benton)
1957 Escapade (Habib)
1958 Dangerous Exit (Hurst) (as Duc de Beauvais); Gigi (Minnelli) (as Gaston Lachaille)

1959 The Best of Everything (Negulesco) (as David Savage)
1960 Can-Can (Walter Lang) (as Philippe Forstier); Leviathan (Keigel) (as Paul)
1961 Le vergine di Roma (Amazons of Rome) (Bragaglia and Cottafavi) (as Drusco); Le Comte de Monte Cristo (The Count of Monte Cristo; The Story of the Count of Monte Cristo) (Autant-Lara) (as Edmond Dantès)
1962 Il disordine (Le desorde; Disorder) (Brusati) (as Tom); Mathias Sandorf (Lampin) (title role)
1963 The V.I.P.’s (Asquith) (as Marc Champselle)
1965 Les Sultans (Delannoy)
1966 Made in Paris (Sagal) (as Marc Fontaine)
1967 Peach d’espoir (To Commit a Murder) (Molinaro) (as Charles Beaulieu)
1968 Le Avventure e gli amori di Miguel Cervantes (The Young Rebel; Cervantes; Les Aventures extraordinaires de Cervantes) (Sherman) (as Cardinal Acquaviva); A Flea in Her Ear (Charon) (as Henri)
1969 Run a Crooked Mile (Levitt—for TV); Fear No Evil (Wendkos—for TV)
1970 Ritual of Evil (Day—for TV)
1973 The Great American Beauty Contest (Day—for TV) (as Ralph Dupree)
1974 The Count of Monte Cristo (David Greene) (as De Villefort)
1977 The Man in the Iron Mask (Newell—for TV) (as D’Artagnan)
1978 Silver Bears (Passer) (as Prince di Siracusa)
1982 Swamp Thing (Craven) (as Arcane)
1983 Octopussy (Glen) (as Kamal)
1984 Double Deal (Kavanagh) (as Peter Sterling); Cover Up (Crane)
1985 Beverly Hills Madam (Hart—for TV) (as Douglas Corbin)
1988 Grand Larceny (Swarz—for TV) (as Charles Grand); Counterforce (Escuadron) (Loma—for TV) (as Kassar)
1989 The Return of Swamp Thing (Wynorski) (as Dr. Anton Arcane)
1992 Year of the Comet (Yates) (as Philippe)

Publications

By JOURDAN: articles—

On JOURDAN: book—

On JOURDAN: articles—

* * *
The career of Louis Jourdan—among the most wasted stars of the Hollywood cinema—must be seen in the context of Hollywood’s shifting but consistently uneasy flirtation with the specific forms of “otherness” represented by continental Europe. There have been many attempts to import European performers and build them into major stars. Most have been unsuccessful, their Hollywood careers short-lived, though women (Garbo, Dietrich, Bergman, Lamarr, and to an extent Alida Valli) have enjoyed more success than men (in the sound period, really only Charles Boyer).

With the important exception of the so-called woman’s film (generally the domestic or romantic melodrama), Hollywood movies imply a male spectator. Laura Mulvey suggests in her seminal article “Visual Pleasure and Narrative Cinema” (Screen, Autumn 1975), that the male protagonist carries the action forward; the woman, as “object of the gaze,” actually impedes it, functioning as a necessary spectacle, the “to-be-looked-at.” Woman, then, is intrinsically constructed as “other,” and her otherness (woman-as-mystery, the “eternal feminine”) is underlined, made even more exotic, by foreignness. The male protagonist is the main identification-figure, with whom we look at the woman. Herein lies the problematic otherness of male European stars: their erotic appeal is postulated on notions of sophistication, allure, beauty (rather than a ruggedly masculine handsomeness), and threatening overtones of decadence.

They are to-be-looked-at, constructing the spectator as feminine and evoking, for the male, all the dangers of repressed homosexual desire. After World War II, Hollywood’s restoration of women to their “rightful” place was inevitably accompanied by a new insistence on masculinity. Boyer became increasingly sinister (Gaslight), and was subsequently relegated to character roles. There was really no place for a Louis Jourdan.

Jourdan’s definitive (though rarely recognized) performance is in one of the finest, and most atypical, films ever produced in Hollywood: Ophüls’s Letter from an Unknown Woman. Joan Fontaine’s inexhaustibly complex and moving assumption of the title role has been widely celebrated, but Jourdan’s contribution is scarcely less remarkable. Without his sensitivity and vulnerability the entire project would become much simpler: a foolish woman infatuated with a callous, incorrigibly promiscuous concert pianist for whom she sacrifices all. Jourdan’s intensity gives to the role a sense of enormous (if dissipated) potential which confers dignity and substance not only on Stefan but on Lisa’s love for him.

Jourdan worked in only two other distinguished films in the 1940s, both quite central to their respective directors’ work, and both underrated by most critics: Minnelli’s Gigi, in which Jourdan functions splendidly in a role that, like Stefan in Letter, could easily have been merely unpleasant. His meatiest recent role was the title one in a BBC television version of Dracula, the most faithful adaptation of Stoker’s novel yet made, therefore the only one that does full justice to the novel’s conception of Dracula as the embodiment of a dangerous sexuality that escapes the norms of the patriarchal order.

Appearances in the occasional major studio film such as Octopussy (as the less-than-agile villain opposite Roger Moore’s equally long-in-the-tooth James Bond) and, more frequently, in exploitation pictures such as Swamp Thing and its lame sequel, The Return of Swamp Thing, have kept Jourdan’s aging continental looks before the cameras, but have added little luster to his long career.

—Robin Wood, updated by John McCarty

JOUVET, Louis

Films as Actor:

1932 Topaze (Gasnier) (title role)
1935 La Kermesse héroïque (Feyder) (as the Chaplain)
1936 Mister Flow (Siodmack) (title role); Les Bas-Fonds (Renoir) (as the baron)
1937 Mademoiselle Docteur (Salonique, nid d’espions) (Pabst) (as Simonis); Un Carnet de bal (Duvisier) (as the lawyer); Drôle de drame (Carné) (as the bishop); Forfaiture (L’Herbier) (as Wolfar); Alibi (Chenal) (as the commissioner); La Marsellaise (Renoir) (as Roederer)
1938 Ramuntcho (Barberis) (as the leader of the smugglers); La Maison du Malats (Chenal) (as Rossignol); Entrée des artistes (Allègre) (as Lambertin); Education de prince
Rim) (as Cercleux); Le Drame de Shanghai (Pabst) (as Ivan); Hôtel du Nord (Carné) (as a Viennese chief of police)

1940 Untel Père et fils (Duvivier) (as the colonial); Sérenade (Boyer) (as Gabriel Dupont and Isamora)

1946 Un Revenant (Christian-Jaque) (as Jean-Pierre); Copie conforme (Monseur Aliib) (Dreville) (as Favier)

1947 Quai des Orfèvres (Clouzot) (as Inspector Antoine)

1948 Les Amoureux sont seuls au monde (Decoin) (as Favier); Entre onze heures et minuit (Decoin) (as Inspecteur Carrel);

1949 Miquette et sa mère (Clouzot) (as Monchablond); Lady Paname (Janson) (as Bangolet)

1950 Knock ou Le Triomphe de la médecine (Lefranc) (as Dr. Knock, + artistic direction); Une Histoire d’amour (Lefranc) (as inspector); Comédien ambulants (Canolle—short)

Publications

By JOUVET: books—

By JOUVET: articles—

“L’Acteur à l’écran,” in Festival International (Cannes), May 1965.

On JOUVET: books—

On JOUVET: articles—

“Louis Jouvet,” in Film Dope (London), December 1983.
Stars (Mariembourg), March 1992; additions in Summer 1996.

* * *

Louis Jouvet was already established as a giant of the French theater before he made his first film at the age of 46. Theater always remained his priority; he sometimes claimed, provocatively, that he acted in movies only for the money. True or not, there was nothing casual about his screen performances. Memorable even in mediocre films, he brought to good material a subtlety and complexity of characterisation that set him among the finest of cinema actors.

Lean, saturnine, faintly reptilian in appearance, Jouvet regarded the world sardonically through narrowed eyes, evidently expecting the worst of humankind. In La Kermesse héroïque, his Spanish chaplain, lecherous and mercenary, openly revels in his own hypocrisy, certain of finding it echoed in all those he meets. He was richly sanctimonious as another clergyman, the Anglican bishop of Carné’s Drôle de drame, set in a wildly improbable Edwardian London; at one point, wishing to avoid the conspicuousness of clerical garb, he appears deliriously camouflaged in kilt and dark glasses.

Under weak direction, Jouvet could edge towards self-plagiarism, as he himself recognized: “If I’m being too Jouvet, stop me,” he warned the director of his last film. His disenchanted air suited him to almost all Jouvet’s finest screen roles came during the five years from 1935 to 1940. His postwar films were unremarkable, with one exception: Clouzot’s misanthropic policier, Quai des Orfèvres. Jouvet was the police detective, shabby and stubborn, retaining through his weary disillusionment a cold thin edge of compassion for the denizens of his seedy underworld. The hard-won humanity of his portrayal redeemed the film from facile cynicism.

—Philip Kemp
JÜRGENS, Curd

Films as Actor:

1935 Königswalzer (The King’s Waltz) (Maisch) (as Emperor Franz Joseph)
1936 Die Unbekannte (The Unknown Woman) (Wysbar) (as Hans Wellenkapl); Familienparade (Family Parade) (as Herr Acke)
1937 Zu neuen Ufern (To New Shores) (Sierck) (as a young man in the House of Lords); Liebe kann lügen (Love Can Lie) (Helbig) (as Student Holder Engröström); Tango Notturno Salonwagen E 417 (Private Car E 417) (Verhoeven)
1940 Herz ohne Heimat (Heart without Home) (Linnekogel); Weltrekord im Seitensprung (World Record in Infidelity) (Zoch); Operette (Forst) (as Carl Millocker)
1942 Wen die Götter lieben (Whom the Gods Love) (Hartl) (as Emperor Josef II); Stimme des Herzens (The Voice of the Heart) (Meyer)
1943 Ein Glücklicher Mensch (A Happy Man) (Verhoeven); Frauen sind keine Engel (Women Are No Angels) (Forst) (as Bandini)
1944 Kleine Sommermelodie (Little Summer Melody) (von Collande); Ein Blick zurück (Am Vorabend; A Look Back) (Menzel)
1947 Das singende Haus (The Singing House) (Antel)
1948 An klingenden Ufern (On Resounding Shores) (Unterkircher); The Mozart Story, Leckerbissen (Taste Treats) (Maisch) (as Emperor Franz Joseph); Der Engel mit der Posaune (The Angel with the Trumpet) (Hartl) (as Graf Traun); Der himmlische Walzer (The Heavenly Waltz) (von Cziffra); Hin und her (Back and Forth) (Lingen); Verlorenes Rennen (Lost Race) (Neufeld)
1949 Wiener-Mädel (Viennese Maidens) (Forst) (as Graf Lechenberg); Lambert fühlt sich bedroht (Lambert Feels Threatened) (von Cziffra); Hexen (Witches) (Schott-Schöbinger)
1950 Schuss durchs Fenster (A Shot through the Window) (Breuer); Prämien auf den Tod (Premiums for Death) (Jürgens) (+ sc with Kurt Heuser); Ein Lächeln im Sturm (A Smile in the Storm) (Chanas); Küssen ist keine Sünde (Kissing Is No Sin) (Marischka) (as Kammersänger Felix Alberti); Das Kuckucks-Ei (The Cuckoo’s Egg) (Firmer); Gestörte Hochzeitsnacht (Disturbed Wedding Night); Gute Nacht, Mary (Weiss); Pikanterie (Delicacy) (Braun)
1951 Der schweigende Mund (The Silent Mouth) (Hartl); Gangsterpremiere (+ d, sc) (as Franz Gribitz and Aldo von Pinelli); Geheimnis einer Ehe (Secret of a Marriage) (Weiss)
1952 Haus des Lebens (House of Life) (Hartl); Knall und Fall als Hochstapler (Knall and Fall As Swindlers) (Marischka); I. April 2000 (Liebeiner) (as Capitano Heracles); Du bist die Rose vom Wörthersee (You Are the Rose of Wörthersee) (Marischka); Praterherzen (Prater Hearts); Das Leben ist stärker (Verhoeven)
1953 Man nennt es Liebe (It’s Called Love) (Reinhardt); Musik bei Nacht (Music at Night) (Hoffmann); Der Letzte Walzer (The Last Waltz) (Rabenalt) (as Graf Sarassov); Alles für Papa (Everything for Dad) (Hartl) (as Clemens Haberland); Meines Vaters Pferde (My Father’s Horses) (Lamprecht); Rummelplatz der Liebe (Circus of Love) (Neumann) (as Toni)
1954 Das Bekenntnis der Ina Kahr (Afraid to Live; The Confession of Ina Kahr) (Pabst); Eine Frau von heute (A Woman of Today) (Verhoeven); Gefangene der Liebe (Prisoners of Love) (Jugert); Orient Express (Bragaglia/Rossellini); Des Teufels General (The Devil’s General) (Käutner) (as General Harras); Du bist die Richtige (You Are the Right One) (Engel/von Baky)
1955 Les Héros sont fatigués (The Heroes Are Tired; Heroes and Sinners) (Ciampi); Du mein stilles Tal (My Quiet Valley) (Steckel) (as Gerdi); Die Ratten (The Rats) (Siodmak); Liebe ohne Illusion (Love Without Illusion) (Engel); Teufel in Seide (Devil in Silk) (Hansen) (as Thomas Ritter)
1956 Michel Strogoff (Der Kurier Des Zaren) (Gallone) (as Strogoff); Et Dieu créa la femme (. . . And God Created Woman) (Vadim) (as Eric Carradine); Die Goldene Brücke (The Golden Bridge) (Verhoeven); Londra chiamata Polo Nord (The House of Intrigue; London Calling North Pole) (Coletti) (as Bernes); Ohne dich wird es Nacht (Without You It Grows Dark) (+ d, sc) (as Robert Kessler)
1957 Les Espions (The Spies) (Clouzot) (as Agent Alex); Oeil pour oeil (An Eye for an Eye) (Cayatte) (Doktor Walter); Amère victoire (Bitter Victory) (Ray) (Major Brand); The Enemy Below (Powell) (as Von Stolberg); Tamango (Berry) (Capitan Reinker)
1958 The Inn of the Sixth Happiness (Robson) (as Captain Lin Nan); Me and the Colonel (Glenville) (as Colonel Prokoszny); Der Schinderhannes (Duet in the Forest) (Käutner) (as Johann Bücker, “Schinderhannes”); A Happy Feeling (Edwards) (as Preston Mitchell); Le Vent se lève (Time Bomb) (Ciampi) (as Eric Muller)
1959 Ferry to Hong Kong (Gilbert) (as Mark Bertram Conrad); The Blue Angel (Dmytryk) (as Professor Rath); Wernher von Braun (I Aim at the Stars) (Thompson) (as Wernher von Braun); Katja, die angekündigte Kaiserin (Magnificent Sinner) (Siodmak) (as Zar Alexander II)
1960 Gustav Adolf’s Page (Hansen) (Gustav Adolf); Die Schachnovelle (Brainwashed; The Royal Game; Three Moves to Freedom) (Oswald) (as Werner von Basil); Bankraub in der Rue Latour (Bank Robbery In The Rue Latour) (+ d, as Cliff MacHardy)
1961  Le Triomphe de Michel Strogoff (The Triumph of Michael Strogoff) (Tourjansky) (as Michel Strogoff)

1962  Il Disordine (Disorder) (Brusati) (as Carlo’s Father); I Dongiovanni della Costa Azzurra (Beach Casanova) (Scala); Die Dreigroschenoper (Three Penny Opera) (Staudte) (as Macheath); The Longest Day (Annakin/Marton/Wicki) (as Major General Gunther Blumentritt); The Miracle of the White Stallions (Hiller) (as General Tellheim)

1963  Of Love and Desire (Rush) (as Paul Beckmann); Begegnung in Salzburg (Encounters in Salzburg) (Friedmann) (as General Hans Wilke); Château en Suède (Nutty, Naughty Chateau) (Vadim) (as Hugo Falsen); Hide and Seek (Endfield) (as Hubert Marek); Psyche ’59 (Singer) (as Eric Crawford); Les Parias de la gloire (Decoin)

1964  Lord Jim (Brooks) (as Cornelius); DM-Killer (Thiele)

1965  Das Liebeskarussell (Who Wants to Sleep?) (Thiele) (Stefan von Cramer)

1966  The Defector, Das Geheimmis der gelben Mönche (How to Kill a Lady; The Secret of the Yellow Monks; Target for Killing) (Köhler); Der Kongreß umsäumt sich (The Congress Enjoyed Itself) (Radvanyi); Zwei Girls vom roten Stern (An Affair of States; Duel à la Vodka) (Dechsel); Le Jardinier d’Argenteuil (The Gardener of Argenteuil) (Le Chanois)

1967  The Karate Killers (The Five Daughters Affair) (Shear) (as Carl von Kesser); Dalle Ardenne all’inferno (Dirty Heroes) (de Martino) (as General von Keist); Der Läuger und die Nonne (The Lier and the Nun) (Thiele) (as the Cardinal); Niente rose per OSS 117 (OSS 117 Murder for Sale) (Cerrato/Desagnat) (as the Major)

1968  Die Artisten in der Zirkuskuppel: Ratlos (The Artist in the Circus Dome: Clueless; Artists under the Big Top: Perplexed); Babek (Becker—mini, for TV) (as the man in the wheelchair); Der Arzt von St. Pauli (The Doctor of St. Pauli) (Thiele) (as Dr. Jan Diffring); The Invincible Six (The Heroes) (Negulesco) (as Baron); The Assassination Bureau (Dearden) (as General von Pinck)

1969  Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (as Baron von Richter); La Legione dei dannati (Legion of the Damned) (Lenzi); Auf der Reeperbahn nachts um halb eins (On the Reeperbahn at Half Past Midnight) (Olsen); Bitka na Neretvi (The Battle of Neretva) (Bulajic) (as German General); Cannabis (French...
Intrigue) (Koralnik) (as Emery); Hello-Goodbye (Negulesco) (as Baron de Choisis)

1970  Hexen bis aufs Blut gequält (Austria 1700; Burn, Witch, Burn; Mark of the Devil); Millionen nach Maß (Neureuther—for TV); Ohrfeigen (Box on the Ears); Der Pfarrer von St. Pauli (The Priest of St. Pauli) (Olsen); Das Stundenhotel von St. Pauli (Hotel by the Hour) (Olsen); The Mephisto Waltz (Wendkos) (as Duncan Ely)

1971 Nicholas and Alexandra (Schaffner) (as the German Consul); Fieras sin jaula (Bitter Whisky) (Logar) (as Roland); Käpt'n Raubhein aus St. Pauli (The Captain from St. Pauli) (Olsen); Profession: Aventuriers (Professor: Adventurers) (Mulot); À la guerre comme à la guerre (How Do I Become a Hero?) (Borderie) (as Russian General); Kill! Kill! (Gary) (as the Chief)

1972 Willi Tobler und der Untergang der 6. Flotte (Willi Tobler and the Decline of the 6th Fleet) (as V. Carlowitz—for TV)

1973 The Fall of Eagles (Cartier/Lindsay-Hogg/Cunliffe/Davies—for TV) (as Otto von Bismarck); Undercovers Hero (Soft Beds and Hard Battles) (Bouling) (as General von Grothjahn); The Vault of Horror (Further Tales from the Crypt) (Baker)

1974 Fräulein Else (Miss Else) (Haeusserman—for TV) (as Dorsay); Die gelbe Nachtigall (Antel—for TV); Cagliostro (Pettinari) (as Cardinal Brasci); Radiografiya di una Svastika

1975 Der Zweite Frühling (The Second Spring) (Lommel) (as Fox); Auch Mimosen wollen blühen (The Mimosa Wants to Bloom Too) (Mewes); Folies bourgeoises (The Twist) (Chabrol) (as jeweller); Povero Cristo (Carpì); Ab morgen sind wir reich und ehrlich (Rich and Respectable) (Antel)

1976 The Spy Who Loved Me (Gilbert) (as Carl Stromberg)

1978 Rot, rot, tot (Red, Red, Dead) (Mezger—for TV); Missile X—Geheimnusfrug Neutronenbombe (Cruise Missile; Missile X: The Neutron Bomb Incident; Teheran Incident) (Martinson) (as Baron); Schönner Gigolo, armer Gigolo (Just a Gigolo) (Hemmings) (as Prince); Steiner—Das eiserne Kreuz, Part 2 (Breakthrough) (McLaglen) (as General Hoffmann); La lunga strada senza polvere (Tau)

1979 Berggasse 19 (19 Berg Street) (Hausserman) (as Sigmund Freud); Goldengirl (Sargent) (Dr. Serafin); La Gueule de l’autre (Tchernia) (as Wilfrid); Die Patriottin (The Female Patriot); Warum die UFOs unseren Salat klauen (Why UFOs Steal Our Salad) (Pohland); Teheran-43 (The Eliminator) (Alavo/Naoumov) (as Maitre Legraine)

1981 The Sleep of Death (The Flying Dragon; The Inn of the Flying Dragon) (Calvin Floyd) (as the count); Collin (Schulze-Rohr—for TV)

1982 Smiley’s People (Langton—for TV) (as the General)

By JÜRGENS: books—

Geliebter Michael (play), performed in Munich, 1946.

By JÜRGENS: articles—

On JÜRGENS: books—

Bandmann, Christa, Es leuchten die Sterne, Munich, 1979.

On JÜRGENS: articles—

* * *

Curd Jürgens grew up in an upper-middle-class family in Neu-Westend, Berlin, the son of a French mother and a successful wholesale dealer in caviar, a foreshadowing of his later lifestyle. His aristocratic bearing, his tall, stately appearance, and his talent for languages formed the foundation of his career.

Since he wanted to become a writer, the eighteen-year-old Jürgens took a job as a reporter for the Acht-Uhr Abendblatt. He married actress Lulu Basler after conducting an interview with her. She and her mother, Maria Solani, a former silent film star, encouraged the strikingly handsome young man to become a film actor. To prepare himself, he read film magazines and took private acting lessons. When he applied for a job at the Ufa Studio in Neu-Babelsberg, he was discovered by Willi Forst, who hired him for the role of the young emperor Franz Joseph in Königswalzer (1935). The very next year Jürgens starred in Familienparade (1936), based on Georg Kaiser’s Kolportage. In 1937 he was cast opposite Zarah Leander, the Swedish actress who was a celebrated film star in Germany, in Zu neuen Ufern (directed by Detlef Sierck). In this tendentious, anti-British film depicting the attempts of the former British penal colony Australia to achieve independence, Jürgens played a representative of the House of Lords.

In 1938, shortly before the Anschluss, Jürgens moved to Vienna after marrying Lulu Basler. The marriage did not last long, because their work kept them separated. Jürgens’ career continued to advance rapidly, and he was hired at the Volkstheater. Initially the tall, blonde, blue-eyed German was regarded with suspicion; people considered him a Nazi. He lived in the so-called “skyscraper” in the center of Vienna, the favorite apartment house of artists and actors. Unknowingly, he not only moved into the former apartment of Hans Jaray, the popular film and stage star who had to emigrate, but he also assumed Jaray’s position at the Volkstheater.

In the winter of 1939, at the age of 23, Jürgens became a member of the prestigious Burgtheater. He was soon welcomed into aristocratic circles, enjoying life at the Heurigen in the Viennese wine. villages of Grinzing and Neustift, and for the rest of his life he remained attached to Vienna. His film career also flourished. In Karl Hartl’s Mozart film Wen die Götter lieben, Jürgens as Emperor Franz Joseph must appear to play the violin. A genial trick was employed: Willi Boskovsky, the concert master of the Viennese Philharmonic, ‘loaned’ him his bow arm.

Jürgens’ mentor Willi Forst included him in almost all his films: as the composer Millöcker in Operetta, as ‘Bandini’ in Frauen sind keine Engel, and as the Austrian ambassador Count Lechenperg in Forst’s major production Wiener Mädel. Forst delayed completion of this film to save his crew of thousands from being sent to the front during World War II. During the filming Jürgens was attracted to the leading lady Judith Holzmeister, a fervent anti-Nazi and daughter of the world famous architect Clemens Holzmeister, who built the Salzburg Festival Theater. Shortly before the end of the war, despite Forst’s support, Jürgens, classified as politically unreliable, was assigned to a work unit in the provinces.

In the chaotic postwar period Jürgens kept performing by organizing a theater tour in Bavaria before returning to Austria. To enable him to tour with the Burgtheater in Switzerland, he was granted Austrian citizenship. His wedding to Judith Holzmeister in Vienna with Willi Forst as his best man was treated as a major news event. Clemens Holzmeister built the couple a villa in fashionable Grinzing. In postwar Austria, where film was flourishing, Jürgens co-authored with his friend Kurt Heuser the screenplay Prämi en auf den Tod (1949) and directed the film. Jürgens also wrote, directed, and starred in a second film, Gangsterpremiere.

While performing with Oskar Werner in the French film Sturm über Alaska—for which the outdoor scenes were filmed in the Tyrol—the studio shots took Jürgens to Paris. At this time his home was the car, the plane, the film studio. One of his great assets as a European film star was his ability to dub his own films in his inimitable whiskey voice in Italian and French. A tour through the United States under the auspices of an exchange program opened a new world for him. The filming of Orient-Express, a German-French-Italian coproduction, took him to Rome for the first time. His tempestuous love affair with Eva Bartok kept his name in the scandal sheets. When he was making the film Das Bekenntnis der Ina Kahr with director G.W. Pabst in Germany, he cancelled his Burgtheater contract; he no longer wished to be a performing government official.

The now cosmopolitan Jürgens exchanged Berlin and Vienna for the in-places of the beautiful and rich in St. Tropez, London, and Rome. His wealth, fame, love affairs, and parties made more headlines in the illustrated and scandal magazines than his films. Following his divorce from Judith Holzmeister, he had a short-lived marriage with Eva Bartok. He enjoyed a major success in Des Teufels General, based on Carl Zuckmayer’s play; Jürgens played the honorable pilot General Harras, who sells his soul to the devil because of his love of flying.

In 1957 Jürgens successfully made the leap to Hollywood, starring in Bitter Victory with Richard Burton. He now held court from his estate in Cap Ferrat near Monaco. Although he had a reputation for high living, he worked steadily and hard, making one film after the other, always with reliably good performances, although many of them with weak scripts. In another big war film, The Enemy Below (1957), he played an educated and sympathetic German submarine captain engaged in a life and death struggle with an American destroyer commander (Robert Mitchum). Hollywood filmmakers no longer deemed it necessary to present every German as a fanatical Nazi; they needed the German market.

For his next wife, the Algerian model Simone Bicheron, Jürgens acquired a home in Gstaad for the winter and exchanged his house in Cap Ferrat for a rose farm in Venice for the summers. To enable him to move internationally easily, he kept houses and apartments in New York, Paris, Vienna, Zurich and the Bahamas.

As an internationally acclaimed star, Jürgens made films with leading actresses like Brigitte Bardot (Et Dieu créa la femme), Ingrid Bergman (The Inn of the Sixth Happiness), and Lilli Palmer (Teufel in Seide). He starred with Danny Kaye in Me and the Colonel, based on Franz Werfel’s comedy. Despite his many international movie roles, Jürgens returned occasionally to the theater: he played Jedermann at the Salzburg Festival, Sigmund Freud at the Theatre du Gymnase in Paris, and guest starred at the Vienna Burgtheater in Bertolt Brecht’s Galilei Galilei. His continuous travel and indulgent lifestyle with alcohol and drugs resulted in a major heart operation and poor health in his last years. He married a last time, to Margie Schmitz. His flamboyant lifestyle sometimes overshadowed his accomplishments as a beloved actor in 152 films. Six years before his death, the German with the Austrian passport, whom the press liked to call the ‘‘German oak,’’ wrote his autobiography, an engaging reflection with literary quality. It was severely criticized at the time because of its candidness. In the memory of his friends Curd Jürgens remains forever the cultivated gentleman with the French manners; in the memory of his many fans he will always personify the true film star.

—Gertraud Steiner Daviau
KAGAWA, Kyoko

Films as Actress:

1949 Damoi (Sato); Kagoe no motoite
1950 Mado kara tobidase (Shima); Seishun dekameron; Sasameyuki (Abe); Kimi to yuku amerika-ko (Shima); Ohtone no yo-ori; Wakasama zamurari torimonono: Nazo no nob-men yashiki (Nakagawa)
1951 Kujaku no sono (Shima); Ginza gesho (Naruse); Wakasama zamurari torimonono: Mado kara tobidase (Shima); Arashi no naka no haha (Abe)
1952 Oozora no chikai; Arashi no naka no hana; Shanhai gaeri no Chakkari fujin to ukkari fujin (Tanaka); Reimei hachigatsu jugo-nichi (Uchida); Kin no tamago; Okusan (Mother) (Naruse) (as Toshiko Fukuhara, the daughter); Daigaku no kotengu: Ohibi no kiroku (Naruse)
1953 Himeyuri no to (The Tower of Lilies) (Imai); Idaten kisha; Himegimi to ronin; Aiyoku no sabaki; Sono imoto; Asu wa koso (Sato); Montenruba no yo wa hukete
1954 Hanran (Abe); Utsukushii hito; Sansho dayu (Sansho: The Bailiff; The Bailiff) (Misoguchi) (as Anju); Kunsho (Shibuya); Onna no koyomi (Hisamatsu); Tomoshibi (Ieki); Tekka Bugyo; Haha no hatsukoi; Jihishincho (Matsubayashi); Chikamatsu monogatari (A Story from Chikamatsu) (The Tale of the Crucified Lovers) (Misoguchi) (as Osan)
1955 Aisutrebako; Namatsu no kao no Ginji; Akatsuki, no Gassho; Nonki saiban; Gokumoncho; Shinomi Gakuen (Shimizu); Aogashima no kodomotachi; Onnakyoshi no kiroku (Nakagawa); Oosho ichidai; Seido no Kirisuto (Shibuya); Innashaimase (Inuzuka)
1956 Abare andon (Watanabe); Shuu (Watanabe); Kurobishi sangokashi; Naze kanojo wa sonatta ka; Okasama wa daigakusa (Sugie); Ruten; Nezumi-koso shimbikomi-hikae (Kaido); Morishige yo doko e ikku (Mizuho); Neko to Shozo to futaru no onna (The Cat, Shozo, and the Two Women) (Toyoda); Shin-Heike monogatari: Shizuka to Yoshitsune; Tenjodaifu
1957 Joshu to tomoni (Women in Prison) (Hisamatsu); Arashi no naka no otoko (The Man in the Storm) (Taniguchi) (as Akiko); Osaka monogatari (Yoshimura); Yagyu bugie-cho (The Yangang; Secret Scrolls) (Inagaki) (as Oki); Hakage no musume; Donzoko (The Lower Depths) (Kurosawa) (as Okayo, her sister); Onna Goroshi abura jigoku (The Prodigious Son) (Hirakawa) (as Sister); Chiyo (Yoshimura)
1958 Kanpai!; Mieie-kokon; Onna de arukoto (Shinbei Nishihama); Tokyo no kyoujitsu; Anzukku (Naruse); Zenigata Heiji torimononohika: Onibi-doro (Kato); Tsuzurikata kyodai (Hisamatsu); Akai jinbaori (Yamamoto); Boku wa san-nin mae: Mori to mizuumi no matsuri (Uchida); Zenigata Heiji torimononohika: Yukimama no ashiato; Sorry hiken (Ninjutsu; Secret Scrolls, Part II) (Inagaki) (as Oki)
1959 Kagero-gasa (Mizutani); Aijo fudo; Ai no kane; Ningen no kabe (Yamamoto); Nippon tanjo (Inagaki); Funjii: Oda Nobunaga
1960 Oedo no kyoji; Arakare daimyo; Yurei hanjo-ki; Hi-sen-ryo (Tanaka); Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru (The Bad Sleep Well; The Rose in the Mud; The Worse You Are, the Better You Sleep) (Kurosawa) (as Keiko)
1961 Osaka-jo monogatari (Daredevil in the Castle; Devil in the Castle) (Inagaki) (as Ai); Kuroi Gashu: Aru suge; Aru sonan (Death on the Mountain) (Sugie); Mosura (Mothers); Godzillad vs. the Thing; Modora tai Godzillad; Honda (as showman); Onna bakari no yoru
1962 Kiri no minato no akari hana; Asu aru kagiri (Till Tomorrow Comes; Ashita aru kagiri) (Yamamoto); Saotome-ke no musumetachi (Hisamatsu)
1963 Tengoku to-jigoku (High and Low; Heaven and Hell; The Ransom) (Kurosawa) (as Reiko, Gondo’s wife); Dokuritsu bijin-tai; Shichi-nin no keiji; Onn o sagase
1965 Akahige (Red Beard) (Kurosawa) (as mental patient)
1966 Kaireinu Ichizoku (The Family) (Yamamoto)
1978 Tsubasa wa kokoro ni tskete (Horikawa)
1979 Otoko wa tskurai: Torajiro Haru no yume (Tora’s Spring Dream) (Yamada)
1986 Harukoma no Uta
1990 Shikibu monogatari (Kumai) (as Isa Otomo)
1993 Madadayo (Not Yet) (Kurosawa) (as professor’s wife)
1995 Deep River
1998 Wandafula raifu (After Life) (Koreeda)

Publications

By KAGAWA: article—

Interview with Alain Masson, in Positif (Paris), January 1996.
On KAGAWA: article—

* * *

Early in her career, Kyoko Kagawa worked in various film genres, specializing in the roles of innocent and sincere girls. She established her expertise at portraying this type of character in such roles as the kindhearted daughter in Mikio Naruse’s Okasan, as the youngest and most sensitive daughter in Ozu’s Tokyo monogatari, and as the student who tragically dies defending her native Okinawa in Tadashi Imai’s Himeyuri no to. Throughout her early performances, Kagawa demonstrated an acting style that was very natural, pragmatic, and realistic.

Kenji Mizoguchi expanded her capacity for believable suffering by giving her lead roles as the enslaved daughter who sacrifices her life for her brother in Sansho dayu and as a wife who elopes with her husband’s employer in the Kabuki-inspired Chikamatsu monogatari. In the latter role especially, Kagawa showed the tenacity required to survive the physical conflicts of human emotions. Her depiction of the dramatic changes a woman undergoes from a protected, wealthy wife to an independent, passionate lover was without compromise. Her next portrayal, of a helplessly shrewish wife in Toyoda’s Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru, was a surprising departure, with a stylized cynicism replacing the naturalistic innocence that was her trademark. Kagawa’s success in this unusual role, contradicting the actress’s image, widened her scope and reputation.

After appearing once more as an ingenue in Kurosawa’s Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru, she starred in another peculiar and stylized role as the apprehensive wife of a kidnapped president in Kurosawa’s Akahige. Kurosawa incorporated both facets of Kagawa’s image by casting her as an innocent girl who turns into a nymphomaniac at night. The performance, which was alternately naively idyllic and knowingly horrifying, was the highpoint of Kagawa’s career.

—Kyoko Hirano

KARINA, Anna

1959 Pigen og skoene (The Girl and the Shoes) (Schmedes—short)
1960 Le Petit soldat (The Little Soldier) (Godard—banned until 1963) (as Veronica Dreyer)
1961 Ce soir ou jamais (Deville); Présentation ou Charlotte et son steak (Rohmer—short) (shot in 1953 with dubbed voice);
Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Godard) (as Angela); Maid for Murder (She’ll Have to Go) (Asher) (as Toni); Le Soleil dans l’œil (Bourdon); Les Francés du Pont Macdonald (Varda—short burlesque film from Cléo de cinq à sept shown in advance of the feature)
1962 Cléo de cinq à sept (Cleo from 5 to 7) (Varda); Vivre sa vie (My Life to Live; It’s My Life) (Godard) (as Nana Kleinfrankenheim); Shéhérazade (La Schiava di Bagdad) (Gaspar-Huit) (title role); Le Joli Mai (Marker): “Le Corbeau et renard” (“The Fox and the Crow”) ep. of Les Quatre Vérités (Three Fables of Love) (Bromberger)
1963 Dragées au poivre (Sweet and Sour) (Baratier) (as Giselle); Un Mari à prix fixe (de Givray)
1964 Petit jour (Pierre—short); Band à part (Band of Outsiders; The Outsiders) (Godard) (as Odile); Le Voleur de Tibidabo (La vida es magnifica) (Ronet); De l’amour (Aurel) (as Hélène)
1965 La Ronde (Circle of Love) (Vadim) (as the chambermaid); Le Soldatess (Zurlini); Alphaville (Une étrange aventure de Lemmy Caution; Alphaville: A Strange Adventure of Lemmy Caution; Tarzan versus I.B.M.) (Godard) (as Natasha von...
Braun); Pierrot le fou (Peter the Crazy) (Godard) (as Marianne Renoir); La Religieuse (The Nun) (Rivette) (as Suzanne Simonin); Anna (Koralnik—for TV)

1966 Zârtliche Haie (Tendres requins) (Deville); Made in U.S.A. (Godard) (as Paula Nelson)

1967 Lo straniero (The Stranger; L’Etranger) (Visconti) (as Maria Cardona); ‘‘Anticipation’’ ep. of Le Plus Vieux Métier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (Godard) (as Natasha, Miss Conversation); Lamiel (Aurel)

1968 The Magus (The God Game) (Guy Green) (as Anne)

1969 Michael Kohlhaas—Der Rebhell (Schlöndorff) (as Elisabeth); Laughter in the Dark (Richardson); Justine (Cukor) (as Melissa); Le temps de mourir (Farwagi); Before Winter Comes (J. Lee Thompson) (as Maria Holz)

1970 L’alliance (de Chalonge); Cran d’Arret (Boisset)

1971 Rendez-vous à Bray (Delvaux); Carlos (Geissendörfer)

1972 The Salzburg Connection (Katzin) (as Anna Bryant)

1973 Pane e cioccolata (Bread and Chocolate) (Brusati) (as Elena)

1974 L’invenzione di Morel (Greco)

1975 L’Assassin musicien (Jacquot); Les Oeufs brouillés (Santoni)

1976 Chinesisches Roulette (Chinese Roulette) (Fassbinder) (as Irene); Also es war so . . . (Willi eine Zauberposse) (Thome)

1978 Chaussette surprise (Surprise Sock) (Davy) (as Nathalie)

1979 Just Like at Home (Mészáros) (as Anna); Historien om en moder (The Story of a Mother) (Weeke)

1980 Ausgerechnet Bananen (Lommel); Also es war so (Thome—for TV)

1981 L’Ami de Vincent (A Friend of Vincent) (Granier-Deferré)

1984 Ave Maria (Richard) (as Berthe Granjeux)

1986 Dame des Dunes (Joyce Butuel—for TV); Dernière chanson (Last Song) (Berry) (+ co-sc); Anna (Koralnik)

1987 Dernier été à Tanger (Last Summer at Tangiers) (Arcady) (as Myrrha); Cayenne-Palace (Maline) (as Lola)

1988 L’Oeuvre au noir (The Abyss) (Delvaux) (as Catherine)

1990 Manden, der ville vaere Skyldig (The Man Who Wanted to Be Guilty) (Roos) (as Edith)

1991 Treasure Island (as Mother)

1995 Haut bas fragile (Up, Down, Fragile) (Rivette) (as Sarah)

On KARINA: book—

On KARINA: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1995.

Anna Karina is best known for her work with her director/husband Jean-Luc Godard. Their relationship was a classic example of the male auteur constructing his personal film universe, as well as constructing his wife’s persona to fit or perform within that universe. Godard’s work with Karina is the best of his repertoire, and Karina’s work with most other directors is merely ordinary.

Originally from Denmark, Karina arrived in Paris in 1958 with limited facility in the French language, and having only modeling experience and one short film in her country to her credit. She turned down the part in A bout de souffle played by Jean Seberg, and instead performed in 1960’s Le petit soldat, Godard’s second feature, which earned her international recognition. The following year she appeared in Godard’s Une femme est une femme, the same year the two were married.

Godard was able to use Karina’s occasional awkwardness as an asset by emphasizing the vulnerability that was the most distinguishing trait of her youthful performances. Despite his almost palpable adoration for her expressed in such films as Une femme est une femme and Vivre sa vie, both of which have been described as documentaries on Karina herself, her characters were never mere victims or innocents. In Vivre sa vie, Karina’s character and her lover read Edgar Allan Poe’s The Oval Portrait, a foreshadowing of the ultimate dilemma Godard would face when the artist allows his cherished love to perish as he refines her portrait. As the series of collaborations progressed and, perhaps coincidentally, their marriage dissolved, Karina became definitively an active agent, an initiator of the action, even a betrayer. As an actress she had become an axiom of the Godardian cinema, a relative constant in his most highly animated period, representing herself as much as any fictional creation.

Apart from Godard’s films, Karina’s rather melancholy fragility has rarely been employed to full advantage. Jacques Rivette’s densely developed portrait of La Religieuse and, much later, Fassbinder’s Chinese Roulette emerge as the plainest exceptions. Her foray into the English-speaking cinema was, for the most part, disastrous, and her roles in such universally unpopular, expensive fiascos as The Magus and Justine were inconsequential at best. Although international stardom may have been unattainable, and while the French cinema is no longer the vanguard institution it was at the time, Anna Karina was clearly a contributing member of a group that set about actively to rethink the aims and the means of filmmaking.

—Richard Wilson, updated by Kelly Otter
KARLOFF, Boris

Films as Actor:

1916 The Dumb Girl of Portici (Ratinoff) (as extra)
1919 The Masked Raider (Kennedy); The Lightning Raider (Seitz); His Majesty, the American (Henabery) (bit role); The Prince and Betty (Thornby) (bit role); The Deadlier Sex (Thornby) (as Jules Borney); The Courage of Marge O’Doone (Smith) (as Tavish)
1920 The Last of the Mohicans (Tourneur) (as Huron Indian)
1921 Without Benefit of Clergy (Young) (as Ahmed Khan); The Hope Diamond Mystery (The Romance of the Hope Diamond) (Payton) (as Priest of Kama-Sita/Dakar); Cheated Hearts (Henley) (as Nei Hamid); The Cave Girl (Franz) (as Baptiste)
1922 The Man from Downing Street (The Jade Elephants) (José) (as Dell Monckton/Maharajah Jehan Darwar); The Infield (Young) (as Nabob); The Altar Stairs (Hillyer) (as Hugo); Omar the Tentmaker (Young) (as Holy Imam Mowaffak); The Woman Conquers (Forman) (as Raoul Maris)
1923 The Gentleman from America (Sedgwick); The Prisoner (Conway) (as Prince Kapskoli)
1924 Riders of the Plains (Jaccard); The Hellion (Bruce Marshall) (as outlaw); Dynamite Dan (Bruce Marshall) (as Tony Garcia)
1925 Perils of the Wind (Francis Ford); Parisian Nights (Santell) (as Pierre); Forbidden Cargo (Dangerous Cargo) (Buckingham) (as Pietro Castillano); The Prairie Wife (Ballin) (as Diego); Lady Robin Hood (Ince) (as Cabraza); Never the Twain Shall Meet (Tourneur) (as South Sea villain)
1926 The Greater Glory (Rehfeld) (as scissors grinder); Her Honor, the Governor (The Second Mrs. Fenway) (Withey) (as Snipe Collins); The Bells (Young) (as mesmerist); The Eagle of the Sea (Lloyd) (as pirate); Old Ironsides ( Sons of the Sea) (Cruze) (as Saracen pirate); Flames (Moomaw) (as Blackie Blanchette); The Golden Web (Lang) (as Dave Sinclair); Flaming Fury (Hogan) (as Gaspard); The Man in the Saddle (Clifford Smith) (bit role); The Nickel Hopper (Yates) (as lecher); Valencia (The Love Song) (Buchowitzki) (bit role)
1927 Tarzan and the Golden Lion (McGowan) (as Owaza); Let It Rain (Cline) (as crook); The Middlin’ Stranger (Thorpe) (as Al Meggs); The Princess from Hoboken (Dale) (as Pavel); The Phantom Buster (Bertram) (as Mexican smuggler); Soft Cushions (Cline) (as Chief Conspirator); Two Arabian Knights (Milestone) (as Purser); The Love Mart (Fitzmaurice) (as Fleming)
1928 Vanishing Rider (Taylor); Vultures of the Sea (Thorpe); The Little Wild Girl (Mattison) (as Maurice Kent)
1929 Burning the Wind (MacRae and Blache) (as Pug Doran); The Fatal Warning (Thorpe) (as Mullins); The Devil’s Chaplain (Worne) (as Boris); The Phantom of the North (Webb) (as Jules Gregg); Anne against the World (Worne); Two Sisters (Cummings) (as Cecili); Behind That Curtain (Cummings) (as Soudanese servant); The Unholy Night (The Green Ghost) (Barrymore) (as Abdoul)
1930 The Bad One (Fitzmaurice) (as prison guard); The Sea Bat (Ruggles) (as Consican); The Utah Kid (Thorpe) (as Baxter); Mother’s Cry (Henley) (as murder victim)
1931 King of the Wild (Thorpe) (as Mustapha); The Criminal Code (Hawks) (as Ned Galloway); Cracked Nuts (Cline) (as revolutionary); Young Donovan’s Kid (Donovan’s Kid) (Niblo) (as Cokey Joe); The Public Defender (Ruben) (as Professor); Smart Money (Green) (as Sport Williams); I Like Your Nerve (McCann) (as Luigi); Pardon Us (Parrott) (as convict); Five Star Final (LeRoy) (as T. Vernon Isopod);
The Mad Genius (Curtiz) (as father); Dirigible (Capra) (bit role); The Last Parade (Kenton) (bit role); The Guilty Generation (Lee) (as Ton Ricca); Graft (Cabanee) (as Joe Terry); The Yellow Ticket (The Yellow Passport) (Walsh) (as drunken Czarist aide); Tonight or Never (LeRoy) (as waiter); Frankensteins (Whale) (as the Monster); Business and Pleasure (Butler) (as Sheik)

1932 Behind the Mask (Dillon) (as Jim Henderson); Alias the Doctor (Curtiz) (as Autopsy Surgeon); Scarface (Hawks) (as Gaffney); The Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood (Dillon) (as himself); The Miracle Man (McLeod) (as Nikko); Night World (Henley) (as Happy MacDonald); The Old Dark House (Whale) (as Morgan); The Mummy (Freund) (as Im-Ho-Tep/Ardath Bey); The Mask of Fu Manchu (Brabin) (title role)

1933 The Ghoul (Hunter) (as Professor Morlant)
1934 The Lost Patrol (John Ford) (as Sanders); The House of Rothschild (Werker) (as Count Ledrantz); Screen Snapshots, Number Eleven (as himself); The Black Cat (The House of Doom; The Vanishing Body) (Ulmer) (as Hjalmar Poelzig); Gift of Gab (Freund) (as himself)

1935 Bride of Frankenstein (Whale) (as the Monster); The Raven (Friedlander) (as Edmond Bateman); The Black Room (Neill) (as Baron Gregor de Berghman/Anton de Berghman)

1936 The Invisible Ray (Hiller) (as Dr. Janos Rukh); The Walking Dead (Curtiz) (as John Ellman); The Man Who Lived Again (The Man Who Changed His Mind; Dr. Maniac; The Brainspinner) (Stevenson) (as Dr. Laurience); Juggernaut (The Demon Doctor) (Henry Edwards) (as Dr. Sartorius); Charlie Chan at the Opera (Humberstone) (as Gravell)

1937 Night Key (Corrigan) (as Dave Mallory); West of Shanghai (The War Lord) (Farrow) (as General Wu Yun Fang)

1938 The Invisible Menace (Without Warning) (Farrow) (as Jevries); Mr. Wong, Detective (Nigh) (title role)

1939 Son of Frankenstein (Lee) (as the Monster); The Mystery of Mr. Wong (Nigh) (title role); Mr. Wong in Chinatown (Nigh) (title role); The Man They Could Not Hang (Grinde) (as Dr. Henryk Savaard); Tower of London (Rowland V. Lee) (as Mord)

1940 Devil’s Island (Clemens) (as Dr. Charles Gaudet); The Fatal Hour (Mr. Wong at Headquarters) (Nigh) (as Mr. Wong); British Intelligence (Enemy Agent) (Morse) (as Franz Strendler); Black Friday (Lubin) (as Dr. Ernest Sovac); The Man with Nine Lives (Behind the Door) (Grinde) (as Dr. Leon Kravaal); Doomed to Die (The Mystery of Wentworth Castle) (Nigh) (as James Lee Wong); Before I Hang (Grinde) (as Dr. John Garth); The Ape (Nigh) (as Dr. Bernard Adrian); You’ll Find Out (Butler) (as Judge Mainwaring)

1941 The Devil Commands (Dmytryk) (as Dr. Julian Blair); Information Please Number Eight (as guest panelist); Information Please Number Twelve (as guest panelist)
1942 The Boogie Man Will Get You (Landers) (as Professor Nathaniel Billings)

1944 The Climax (Wagner) (as Dr. Hohner); House of Frankenstein (Kenton) (as Dr. Gustav Niemann)

1945 The Body Snatcher (Wise) (as John Gray); Isle of the Dead (Robson) (as General Nikolas Phereides)

1946 Bedlam (Robson) (as Master George Sims)
1947 Lured (Personal Column) (Sirk) (as Charles Van Druten); The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (McLeod) (as Dr. Hollingshead); Dick Tracy Meets Gruesome (Dick Tracy’s Amazing Adventure) (Rawlins) (as Gruesome); Unconquered (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Seneca Chief Guyasuta)

1948 Tap Roots (George Marshall) (as Tishomingo)
1949 Abbott and Costello Meet the Killer, Boris Karloff (Barton) (as Swami Tapur)

1951 The Strange Door (Pevney) (as Voltan); The Emperor’s Nightingale (Cisarav Slavik) (Makovec) (as narrator)

1952 The Black Castle (Juran) (as Dr. Meissen)

1953 Colonel March Investigates (Colonel March of Scotland Yard) (Endfield) (title role); The Hindu (Sabaka) (Ferrin) (as General Pollegar); Abbott and Costello Meet Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Lamont) (as Dr. Henry Jekyll); The Monster of the Island (Il mostro dell’isola) (Montero and Vecchietti) (as smugger)

1957 The Juggler of Our Lady (Kousel) (as narrator); Silent Death (Voodoo Island) (Le Borg) (as Phillip Knight)

1958 Frankenstein (Koch) (as Baron Victor von Frankenstein); The Haunted Strangler (Grip of the Stranger) (Day) (as James Rankin/Dr. Tenant)

1963 Corridors of Blood (The Doctor of Seven Dials) (Day) (as Dr. Thomas Bolton); The Raven (Corman) (as Dr. Scarabus)

1964 The Comedy of Terrors (Jacques Tourneur) (as Amos Hinchley); Black Sabbath (I tre volti della paura) (Bava) (as Gorca); Bikini Beach (Asher) (as art dealer)

1965 Die, Monster, Die! (Monster of Terror; The House at the End of the World) (Haller) (as Nahum Whitley)

1966 The Ghost in the Invisible Bikini (Weis) (as Hiram Stokane); The Daydreamer (Bass) (as voice)

1967 Blind Man’s Bluff (Cauldron of Blood; The Shrinking Corpse) (Edward Mann) (as Charles Badulescu); The Venetian Affair (Jerry Thorpe) (as Dr. Pierre Vaugiroud); Mondo balordo (Montero) (as narrator); Mad Monster Party (Bass) (as Karloff puppet); The Sorcerers (Reeves) (as Professor Monserrat)

1968 Targets (Bogdanovich) (as Baron Orlok)
1970 The Crimson Cult (Curse of the Crimson Affair) (Sewell) (as Professor Marshe); Isle of the Snake People (Ibañez and Hill) (as Dr. Carl Van Boulder)

1971 The Incredible Invasion (Sinister Invasion) (Ibañez and Hill) (as scientist); The Fear Chamber (Ibañez and Hill) (as scientist)

1972 House of Evil (Ibañez and Hill) (as menace)

Publications

By KARLOFF: articles—

“‘My Life as a Monster,’” in Films and Filming (London), November 1957.

On KARLOFF: books—

Aylesworth, Thomas, Monsters from the Movies, Philadelphia, 1972.

On KARLOFF: articles—

Ecran (Paris), May 1978.

Starburst, no. 57, 1983.

American Classic Screen (Shawnee Mission, Kansas), March-April 1983.

Katchmer, G., “Remembering the Great Silents,” in Classic Images (Muscatine), April 1996.

Norman, Barry, in Radio Times (London), 8 June 1996.

* * * *

In one sense, Boris Karloff could be judged a failure. A lifetime of roles intended to create horror and loathing only succeeded in making him one of the most loved of actors. Audiences who shuddered pleasurably at his ghouls saw straight through them, to the gentle, dignified man beneath. Karloff ended up a white-haired, grandfatherly figure telling spooky tales to delight the children, any suggestion of menace belied by the kindliness in his eyes. That same sympathy animated the monsters he created—grave, vulnerable beings, victims of the “normal” world around them.

Unlike Lorre or Lugosi, serious actors who chafed at the narrow range into which Hollywood forced them, Karloff never strongly objected to being typecast in horror movies. In part, his reaction was practical: the relief of a 45-year-old actor, with ten years of ramshackle stock companies and ten more of movie bit-parts behind him, suddenly finding fame and security in his 65th film, the 1931 James Whale version of Frankenstein. But he was also doing what he could do best. To the end of his days, he called the Frankenstein Monster the best friend any actor could have had.

Tall, gaunt, lantern-jawed, Karloff moved with a somnolent slowness that aptly evoked the inexorable, slow-motion menace of a bad dream. Deep-set eyes, overhanging brows, and a voice that seemed to echo from cobwebby vaults enhanced the intensity of his presence. Karloff never needed to gesticulate or rave; the quietly understated malevolence of his acting gained the more by contrast with the B movie hamming that often surrounded him.

Karloff began acting in silent films, most notably The Bells, where he played an evil mesmerist opposite hero Lionel Barrymore. But it was Frankenstein that made him a star—though a couple of good roles just before, in Hawk’s The Criminal Code and LeRoy’s Five Star Final (as the ineffably named phony clergyman, T. Vernon Isopod), helped bring him to James Whale’s attention when the original star of Frankenstein, Bela Lugosi, opted out of the role of the monster because he did not want to disguise his features under pounds of makeup and his distinctive voice with inarticulate grunts. Thus, Karloff got his most famous role by default. Nevertheless, the inarticulate pathos of Karloff’s portrayal of the monster, innocent and bewildered, staggering beneath the burden of emotions it can neither express nor control, lent the film dignity and depth, creating a lasting classic. Universal billed him in the credits only as “Karloff”; for future films, his first name was reinstated, but for filminggoers everywhere, young and old, generation after generation, no other name but “Karloff” was ever needed.

Karloff played the monster in two sequels for Universal (and once on television, in an episode of the hit television series Route 66). Without his presence, further sequels collapsed into routine programmers. (Ironically, Bela Lugosi finally did overcome his antipathy for the role of the monster and played it himself—long after Karloff had discarded it to go on to bigger things—in Universal’s Frankenstein Meets the Wolfman, the fourth entry in the studio’s long-running series.) Both Frankenstein sequels in which Karloff reprised his role, Bride of Frankenstein and Son of Frankenstein, were made during the 1930s, the period of Universal’s great horror cycle, and Karloff’s best decade. As The Mummy, a virtual remake of Universal’s smash hit Dracula, set in Egypt, he slowed his movements yet further into an ancient, hieratic solemnity, eyes burning fiercely in a face of weathered sandstone. Death-in-life roles suited his cadaverous deliberation: in Edgar G. Ulmer’s broodingly atmospheric The Black Cat, pacing gravely through galleries of women’s corpses preserved behind glass; a resurrected convict in Curtiz’s The Walking Dead; and, chuckling darkly, the clubfooted executioner Mord, henchman to Rathbone’s Richard III in Tower of London.

Within the narrow range of his work, Karloff varied each role through subtle individual touches. Often, he undercut them with ironic humor: lumbering and grunting as the drunkenly lecherous butler of The Old Dark House; silkily urbane in The Mask of Fu Manchu (a rendition later reworked for virtue in the Mr. Wong series); ultimately over the top as a religious fanatic driven to mania by the sunbaked desert as a member of The Lost Patrol. Val Lewton provided Karloff with three quality assignments in the 1940s: The Body Snatcher, Isle of the Dead, and the elegantly Hogarthian Bedlam. Lewton’s belief that horror can best be elicited through understatement and suggestion matched Karloff’s talents perfectly, and he responded with some of his most stylishly controlled playing, especially in The Body Snatcher, as murderous cabman and protege of Burke and Hare, John Gray, arguably his greatest performance outside the original Frankenstein. The role is easily one of the subtlest, and scariest, dual-personality villains in the history of screen horror.

He was also adept at comedy, originating the role of the murderous Karloff lookalike Jonathan Brewster in the classic stage comedy Arsenic and Old Lace, where he sent up his own image as the ultimate bogeyman; Raymond Massey took the role in the Frank Capra film version because Karloff was still playing it on tour at the time. Karloff again enjoyed sending up his image in Roger Corman’s Edgar Allan Poe spoof, The Raven, and The Comedy of Terrors, where he appeared with fellow screen bad guys Peter Lorre, Basil Rathbone, and Vincent Price. One of Karloff’s best roles came almost at the last, more or less playing himself in Bogdanovich’s directorial debut, Targets. As an avowed “antique, an anachronism” in an age of impersonal slaughter, Karloff manifested a touching dignity, and the film provided an affectionate farewell tribute—although, crippled by arthritis to the point of virtual immobility, he tread the boards through five more shockers the same year, one in England, the others in Mexico. Like one of the undead characters he often played, he arose from the grave four years after his death in his last released film, Blind Man’s Bluff, a feature he shot in Spain in 1967.

—Philip Kemp, updated by John McCarty

KAYE, Danny

Films as Actor:

1937 Dime a Dance (Christie—short)
1938 Getting an Eyeful (Christie—short); Cupid Takes a Holiday (Watson—short); Money on Your Life (Watson—short)
1942 Night Shift (Kanin—short)
1944 Up in Arms (Nugent) (as Danny Weems); The Birth of a Star (The Danny Kaye Story) (Pollard—compilation of Kaye’s shorts)
1945 Wonder Man (Humberstone) (as Buzzy Bellew/Edwin Dingle)
1946 The Kid from Brooklyn (McLeod) (as Burleigh Sullivan)
1947 The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (McCleod) (title role); A Song Is Born (Hawks) (as Professor Hobart Frisbee); Bob Hope Reports to the Nation (USO short) (appearance)
1949 It’s a Great Feeling (Butler) (as guest); The Inspector General (Koster) (as Georgi)
1951 Bernard Shaw’s Village (Frieze—short); On the Riviera (Walter Lang) (as Henri Duran/Jack Martin)
1952 Hans Christian Andersen (Charles Vidor) (title role)
1954 Knock on Wood (Panama and Frank) (as Jerry); Hula from Hollywood (Staub—short); White Christmas (Curtiz) (as Phil Davis); Assignment Children (short for UNICEF)
1955 The Court Jester (Panama and Frank) (as Hawkins)
1958 Merry Andrew (Kidd) (as Andrew Larabee); Me and the Colonel (Glenville) (as S. J. Jacobyowski)
1959 The Five Pennies (Shavelson) (as Red Nichols)
1963 The Man from the Diners’ Club (Tashlin) (as Ernie Klenk)
1969 The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes) (as Raggpicker)
1972 Pied Piper (short for UNICEF)
1981 Skokie (Wise—for TV) (as Max Feldman)

Publications

On KAYE: books—
The films of Danny Kaye comprise only one aspect of his overall career as a comedian. Kaye’s initial rise to fame came on the stage, in various revues and on Broadway. He also was extremely successful on the New York nightclub circuit. Reportedly, it was in one of these nightclubs that Sam Goldwyn caught Kaye’s act and offered him a film contract. This was not his first contact with the motion picture business. In the late 1930s he appeared in a few two-reelers for Educational Pictures which were not particularly entertaining or successful. In 1941 he turned down an MGM contract, choosing instead to continue working before live audiences. By the time Kaye decided to accept Sam Goldwyn’s offer, he already had established himself as one of the hottest young comedians in New York, and he came to Hollywood as a star before he made his first feature.

Because of Kaye’s success on the stage, Goldwyn spared no expense in launching his film career. His early films were lavish in their settings and featured extravagant musical numbers. Kaye’s own routines were tailor-written for him by his wife and creative partner, Sylvia Fine. With their complicated patter and witty lyrics, her songs complemented his style of comedy. Kaye had become famous for his verbal acrobatics and foreign double-talk. He specialized in such tongue twisters and rhymes as “The pellet with the poison’s in the vessel with the pestle, the chalice from the palace has the brew that is true,” from The Court Jester. Other examples include “The Lobby Number” in Kay’s feature debut, Up in Arms, in which he sings to a crowd in a theater lobby; and Wonder Man, in which he uses an opera to sing out the clues of a murder.
In many of his films Kaye was cast in dual roles, sometimes playing twins or lookalikes (as in Wonder Man and On the Double). Other times he played characters with multiple personalities (as in The Secret Life of Walter Mitty). Generally speaking, one side of Kaye’s character would be weak and helpless while the other would be strong and resourceful. During the course of the film, Kaye would learn to blend the two personalities in order to become a better individual.

In 1953 Kaye and his wife formed their own production company, Dena Productions. Together with the writers Norman Panama and Melvin Frank, they produced three pictures. One of these, The Court Jester, is not only Kaye’s finest film but one of the all-time-classic screen comedies. Its $4-million budget made it the most expensive comedy up to that time. Kaye also was capable of playing the graceful romantic, as he so capably did in White Christmas, where his soft singing voice was utilized so effectively. It is a shame that he was not allowed to play such roles more often.

Kaye also proved to be an equally fine dramatic actor. In the television movie Skokie, he offered a powerful performance as a concentration camp survivor who has settled in Middle America, and who sets out to thwart an attempt by neo-Nazis to hold a street demonstration. Earlier, in The Five Pennies, he was effective in the role of jazz musician Red Nichols.

Kaye also was noted for his many offstage and offscreen charitable endeavors, most specifically his varied activities on behalf of UNICEF.

—Linda Obalil, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

---

KEATON, Buster

Nationality: American. Born: Joseph Francis Keaton in Piqua, Kansas, 4 October 1895. Family: Married 1) Natalie Talmadge, 1921 (divorced 1933), sons: Joseph and Robert; 2) Mae Scribbens, 1933 (divorced 1936); 3) Eleanor Norris, 1940. Career: 1898–1917—beginning at the age of four, appeared with his parents, Joe and Myra Keaton, in vaudeville act billed as The Three Keatons; 1917—moved to California; 1917–20—appeared in 15 two-reelers for Comique Film Corporation, with Roscoe “Fatty” Arbuckle as director-actor-scriptwriter, starting with first film The Butcher Boy, 1917; 1918—as member of U.S. Army, entertained troops in France; 1919—offered own production company with Metro Pictures by Joseph Schenk; 1920–23—produced 19 two-reelers; 1923–28—directed ten features for Metro, starting with The Three Ages; 1929–31—plagued with marital problems and alcoholism, career faded during the transition from silent to sound films; 1934–39—starred in 16 comedies for Educational Pictures; 1935—became uncredited gag writer for the Marx Brothers and in the 1940s for Red Skelton’s features; 1939–41—appeared in ten two-reelers for Columbia; 1949—moved to TV to execute innovative commercials and become frequent guest in both comic and dramatic TV series; 1951—appearance with Chaplin in Chaplin’s Lime-light revived Keaton’s career. Awards: “George Award,” at first annual George Eastman Festival of Film Arts in Rochester, New York, 1956; special Academy Award, “for his unique talents which brought immortal comedies to the screen,” 1959; honored at the screening of Film, written by Samuel Beckett, at the Venice Film Festival, 1965. Died: Of lung cancer in Woodland Hills, California, 1 February 1966.

Films as Actor:

(two-reelers with Roscoe “Fatty” Arbuckle as director-actor-scriptwriter)

1917 The Butcher Boy (as village pest); A Reckless Romeo (as a rival); The Rough House (as grocer’s boy and cop); His Wedding Night (as delivery boy); Oh, Doctor! (as doctor’s son); Coney Island (Fatty at Coney Island) (as lifeguard); A Country Hero (as the dancer)

1918 Out West (as Bill Bullhum); The Bell Boy (as Arbuckle’s assistant); Moonshine (as assistant revenue agent); Good Night, Nurse! (as the doctor/a visitor); The Cook (as the waiter and general helper)

1919 A Desert Hero (as badman); Back Stage (as stagehand); The Hayseed (as store clerk)

1920 The Garage (Fire Chief) (as garage mechanic)

(silent features with Keaton as leading actor)

1920 The Saphead (Blaché) (as Bertie “The Lamb” Van Alstyne)

1927 College (Horne) (as Ronald)
1928  Steamboat Bill, Jr. (Reisner) (as Willie Canfield); The Cameraman (Sedgwick) (as Luke Shannon, + pr)
1929  Spite Marriage (Sedgwick) (as Elmer Edgemont)

(1930s sound features with Keaton in minor and some major roles)

1929  The Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Reisner) (as an oriental dancer)
1930  Free and Easy (Easy Go) (Sedgwick) (as Elmer Butts); Doughboys (The Big Shot; Forward March!) (Sedgwick) (as Elmer Stuyvesant, + pr)
1931  Parlor, Bedroom, and Bath (Sedgwick) (as Reginald Irving, + pr); The March of Time (Reichner—not completed); Sidewalks of New York (Jules White and Zion Myers) (as Homer Van Tine Harmon, + pr)
1932  The Passionate Plumber (Sedgwick) (as Elmer Tuttle); Speak Easily (Sedgwick) (as Professor Timoleon Zanders Post); What! No Beer? (Sedgwick) (as Elmer J. Butts); The Little King (not completed)
1934  Le Roi des Champs Elysées (Champ of the Champs Elysées) (Nosseck) (as Buster Garnier/Jim Le Balafre)
1936  The Invader (The Intruder; An Old Spanish Custom) (Brunel) (as Leander Proudfoot)

(sound two-reelers for Educational Pictures starring Keaton; role as Elmer unless otherwise noted)

1934  The Gold Ghost (Lamont) (as Wally); Allez Oop (Lamont)
1935  Palooka from Paducah (Lamont) (as Jim); One-Run Elmer (Lamont); Hayseed Romance (Lamont); Tar and Stripes (Lamont); The E-Flat Man (Lamont); The Timid Young Man (Sennett) (as Milton)
1936  Three on a Limb (Lamont) (as Elmer Brown); Grand Slam Opera (Lamont) (as Elmer Butts); Blue Blazes (Raymond Kane); The Chemist (Al Christie) (as Elmer Triple); Mixed Magic (Raymond Kane)
1937  Jail Bait (Lamont); Ditto (Lamont); Love Nest on Wheels (Lamont)

(two-reeler Columbia shorts starring Keaton)

1939  Pest from the West (Del Lord) (as American yachtsman); Mooching through Georgia (Jules White) (as Homer Cobb)
1940  Nothing but Pleasure (Jules White) (as Clarence Plunkett); Pardon My Berth Marks (Jules White) (as Elmer Pin-feather); The Taming of the Snood (Four Thirds Off) (Jules White) (as a hat shop owner); The Spook Speaks (Jules White) (as magician’s housekeeper); His Ex Marks the Spot (Buster’s Last Stand) (Jules White) (as the husband)
1941  So You Won’t Squawk (Del Lord) (as Eddie); General Nuisance (The Private General) (Jules White) (as Peter Hedley Lamar Jr.); She’s Oil Mine (Jules White) (as Buster Waters)

(feature films with Keaton in minor role, from 1939)

1939  Hollywood Cavalcade (Cummings) (as himself)
1940  The Villain Still Pursued Her (Edward F. Cline) (as William); Li’l Abner (Rogell) (as Lonesome Polecat); New Moon (Robert Z. Leonard) (as Prisoner “LuLu”)
1943  Forever and a Day (in sequence directed by Hardwicke) (as Dabb’s assistant)
1944  San Diego, I Love You (LeBorg) (as bus driver); Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe) (as Durante’s son)
1945  That’s the Spirit (Lamont) (as L. M.); That Night with You (Seiter) (as Sam, the short-order cook); She Went to the Races (Goldbeck) (as bellboy)
1946  God’s Country (Tansey); El Moderno Barba Azul (Boom in the Moon; A Modern Bluebeard) (Jamie Salvador) (as prisoner of Mexicans who is sent to the moon)
1949  The Lovable Cheat (Oswald) (as Curt Bois); In the Good Old Summertime (Robert Z. Leonard) (as Hickey); You’re My Everything (Walter Lang) (as waiter)
1950  Sunset Boulevard (Wild) (as himself)
1951  The Misadventures of Buster Keaton (compilation of three episodes of The Buster Keaton Show TV series)
1952  Limelight (Chaplin) (as piano accompanist); L’incantevole nemica (Captive Enemy) (Gora) (bit role)
1956  Around the World in Eighty Days (Michael Anderson) (as train conductor)
1960  The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Huckleberry Finn) (Curtiz) (as lion tamer)
1962  Ten Girls Ago (Harold Daniels—not completed)
1963  It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Stanley Kramer) (as Jimmy the Crook)
1964  Pajama Party (The Maid and the Martian) (Wies) (as Chief Rotten Eagle)
1965  Beach Blanket Bingo (Asher) (as himself); How to Staff a Wild Bikini (Asher) (as Bwana); Sergeant Deadhead (Sergeant Deadhead the Astronaut) (Taurog) (as Pvt. Blinken); The Man Who Bought Paradise (Hotel Paradise) (Ralph Nelson—for TV) (as Mr. Blore)
1966  A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (Richard Lester) (as Erronius)
1967  Due Marines e un Generale (War, Italian Style) (Scattini) (as Gen. Von Kassler)

(miscellaneous shorts)

1929  The Voice of Hollywood, Number 10 (Lewyn)
1931  The Stolen Jools (The Slippery Pearls) (McGann) (as a Keystone Kop)
1933  Hollywood on Parade (Lewyn)
1935  La Fiesta de Santa Barbara (Lewyn)
1936  Sunkist Stars at Palm Springs
1950  Un Duel à Mort (as a comic duelist, + co-sc)
1965  Film (Alan Schneider); The Railrodder (Potterton)

(industrial films)

1952  Paradise for Buster (Del Lord)
1960  The Devil to Pay (Skoble) (as Diablos)
1963  The Triumph of Lester Snapwell (James Calhoun) (title role)
1965  The Fall Guy (Bateman) (as Mr. Goodfarmer/Mr. Badfarmer)
1966  The Scribe (Sebert) (as newspaper reporter)
Films as Actor and Director:

(two-reelers with Keaton in the leading role, co-directed and co-scripted by Keaton with Eddie Cline, unless otherwise noted)

1920 One Week (as the husband); Convict 13 (as the golfer/ the victim); The Scarecrow (as roommate); Neighbors (as the boy)

1921 The Haunted House (as bank clerk); Hard Luck (as the melancholy boy); The High Sign (as the boy); The Goat (co-d and co-sc with Mal St. Clair) (as the boy); The Boat (as the captain of the DAMFINO)

1922 The Paleface (as Little Chief Paleface); The Playhouse (as the stage hand); Cops (as the unsuspecting victim); My Wife’s Relation (as the husband); The Blacksmith (co-d and co-sc with Mal St. Clair) (as the blacksmith’s assistant); The Frozen North (as the adventurer); The Electric House (as an electrical engineer); Daydreams (as the boy)

1923 The Balloonic (as the boy); The Love Nest (as sailor)

(silent features directed by Keaton, with Keaton as leading actor)

1923 The Three Ages (co-d with Cline) (as the boy); Our Hospitality (co-d with Blystone) (as Willie McKay)

1924 Sherlock, Jr. (as the theater projectionist/title role); The Navigator (co-d with Crisp) (as Rollo Treadway)

1925 Seven Chances (as Jimmie Shannon); Go West (as Friendless, + story)

1926 Battling Butler (Alfred Butler); The General (as Johnnie Gray)

(one-reelers directed by Keaton; sound)

1938 Life in Sometown, U.S.A.; Hollywood Handicap; Streamlined Swing

Other Films:

1939 The Jones Family in Hollywood (Mal St. Clair) (co-sc); The Jones Family in Quick Millions (Mal St. Clair) (co-sc)

Interview with Christopher Bishop, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1958.

Interview with Arthur Friedman, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1966.

On KEATON: books—

Meade, Marion, Buster Keaton: Cut to the Chase, New York, 1995.

Oldham, Gabriella, Keaton’s Silent Shorts: Beyond the Laughter, Carbondale, Illinois, 1996.

On KEATON: articles—

Review of The General, in Motion Picture Magazine, May 1927.

Bishop, Christopher, “The Great Stone Face,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1958.

By KEATON: book—

By KEATON: articles—

On KEATON: films—

The Buster Keaton Story, directed by Sidney Sheldon, 1957.

Sad Clowns (also known as Silents, Please), The History of Motion Pictures film series, 1961.

Buster Keaton Rides Again, documentary directed by John Spotton, 1965.

When motion picture critics began to reevaluate the comedy of Buster Keaton, he was the best-known silent screen comedian of the 1950s and early 1960s. This came about because he, more than any of his peers of the silent period, had made frequent appearances in television commercials, variety shows, and such series programs as Eddie Cantor Comedy Theatre, The Martha Raye Show, Playhouse 90, and Route 66. In some of the variety shows and commercials, Buster would execute some of the dangerous pratfalls that distinguished the knockabout comedy of his first film The Butler Boy in 1917. These balletlike tumbles led early viewers to marvel at the physical comedy he had perfected in his vaudeville act with his father and mother. This sometimes resulted in an evaluation of his acting as merely physical, deadpan, and mechanical. In fact, as early as 1924, an unidentified evaluator noted in a review of Sherlock, Jr. in Exceptional Photoplays that Keaton was the “Humpty Dumpty of the screen. . . . always falling from the wall and always getting up again.”

As critics attributed the essence of Keaton’s comedy to a type of mechanistic theory similar to that advanced by French philosopher Henri Bergson, the views on his comic acting became oversimplified. Coupled with this was an admiration of the lack of the sentimental that appealed to the intellectuals who viewed his 1920s features. These facets of his comedy also appealed to those who revisited Keaton’s work after seeing him on television in the 1950s. Nearly 40 years after an evaluation of his comedy was formulated into a reductionistic mold, Tom Gunning repeated the same concept in a 1995 Cineaste article entitled “Buster Keaton: Or the Work of Comedy in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction.” In 1958 Christopher Bishop in Film Quarterly set the error of reduction in stone with the statement that Keaton “seems detached from his surroundings, uninvolved to the point of lunacy, an extraordinarily neutral figure, driven by compulsion beyond his comprehension, his behavior without source in any conscious motivation.”

Such evaluations of Keaton’s character and acting are quite common, and they are intended as penetrating views on the quintessence of the comedian’s uniqueness in creating laughter. They fail to take into account many of the character traits that the actor uses in the development of the drama which would give dimension to the comedian’s acting. In Sherlock, Jr., for example, there are many of the obsessed, young boy characteristics that are quite fundamental to the plot and not “abstract” or lacking in “conscious motivation.”

Granted, Keaton utilized anesthesia of his emotion, somewhat in the mechanistic theory similar to that advanced by French philosopher Henri Bergson, the views on his comic acting became oversimplified. forward against a strong wind, he tails the suspect with great determination.

It is valid to compare the features of Buster Keaton’s films with those of Harold Lloyd. Most of the plots and the characterizations are tied to the tradition of the genteel comedy, often involving a pursuit of some magnitude. In Sherlock, Jr. it is the goal of solving a crime; in The General it is a struggle to recover a stolen locomotive; in The Cameraman it becomes the desire to shoot a significant movie newsreel event. Each of these plots follows the Horatio Alger Jr. success story, developed along comic lines. Keaton, like Lloyd and Charles Chaplin, utilized the struggle of the little man pitted against a hostile world.

In his 12 silent film features Buster Keaton was able to provide variety in the skillful acting of broad, comic scenes or sequences and restrained, subtle, humorous character-building scenes. His acting skills in the broader portions of his features proved to be equal to the skills of Chaplin and Lloyd by handling such material. Again, using Sherlock, Jr. as an example, his dangerous race on a motorcycle to rescue his girlfriend seemed to be on the level of Harold Lloyd’s “thrill comedy” that Lloyd executed climbing a skyscraper. Keaton also executed pratfalls with an agility and grace that surpassed the deftness of Chaplin and Lloyd.

An example of Keaton’s ability to handle subtle, character-developing humor evolves from his departure from the portrait of a poor, young man to that of a rich, young man in the 1924 The Navigator. Since he is spoiled through pampering and money that usually will buy anything, everything has become routine. As if he were going to buy a new suit, he tells his valet that he is going to get married; he marches formally up to a young woman who is a friend of the family and asks unemotionally: “Will you marry me?” She instantly and vehemently replies, “Certainly not!” He looks blankly away from her, turns on his heels, takes his cane and hat from a servant, and leaves without another word being spoken.

The four kings of comedy of the 1920s—Chaplin, Lloyd, Keaton, and Harry Langdon—created comic characters that were distinctive. Chaplin was the lost soul, the little tramp, on the edge of society; Lloyd portrayed the eager young man struggling for success, mostly on a social plain; Langdon enacted a child-man baffled by a big world. Buster Keaton seemed to be a combination of Lloyd and Langdon. His character, like Lloyd’s, struggled mightily to reach a goal. But, like Langdon, he found his environment perplexing. In a gesture used in many of his films Keaton executed an Indian-style survey of the horizon as he climbed a hill, a locomotive, or even an animal such as a cow or horse. This pose proved to be symbolic of a poor fellow lost in a broad, unknown, hostile world.

Those critics who try to apply Henry Bergson’s comic theory of mechanism to his character are only looking at the facet that appeals to them. True, Keaton achieves some of his comedy by a fine-tuned, smooth working of his body, but the exclusion of other traits of his portrayal (especially his link with the genteel comedy character of the popular fiction of the day) seems to be a grievous simplification of Keaton’s comedy. Furthermore, the so-called frozen face does reflect a tradition of the sad clown of the circus (Emmett Kelly, for example) handed down through the ages by the commedia dell’ arte, the moonstruck Pierrot, who never smiled, creating understated, deviant emotions that audiences found so entertaining.

—Donald W. McCaffrey

KEATON, Diane

Nationality: American. Born: Diane Hall in Los Angeles, California, 5 January 1946. Education: Attended Santa Ana High School, California; Santa Ana College and Orange Coast College; studied acting with Sanford Meisner at the Neighborhood Playhouse, New York. Family: Adopted daughter, Dexter. Career: 1967—acted in Woodstock summer theater, New York; 1968—Broadway debut in Hair; later stage roles in Play It Again, Sam with Woody Allen, 1969, and The Primary English Class, 1976; 1970—film debut in Lovers and Other Strangers; also a singer: engagements at Reno Sweeney, New York, and other clubs and theaters; 1980—book of photographs published; 1987—directed first feature, Heaven; 1990—directed music video for Belinda Carlisle; directed episode of Twin Peaks for TV; directed TV After School Special, “The Girl with the Crazy Brother.” Awards: Oscar for Best Actress, Best Actress, British Academy, and Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for Annie Hall, 1977. Agent: Stan Kamen, William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Lovers and Other Strangers</td>
<td>(Cy Howard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>The Godfather</td>
<td>(Coppola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Play It Again</td>
<td>(Ross)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Sleeper</td>
<td>(Luna Schlosser)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Godfather Part II</td>
<td>(Coppola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Love and Death</td>
<td>(Sonja)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>I Will I Will… for Now</td>
<td>(Lisa Chestnut)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Looking for Mr. Goodbar</td>
<td>(Dennis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Interiors</td>
<td>(Renata)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Manhattan</td>
<td>(Mary Wilke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Reds</td>
<td>(Louise Bryant)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Shoot the Moon</td>
<td>(Faith Dunlap)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Little Drummer Girl</td>
<td>(Mrs. Soffel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Crimes of the Heart</td>
<td>(Lenny)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Radio Days</td>
<td>(Woody Allen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Baby Boom</td>
<td>(Shyer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>The Good Mother</td>
<td>(Anna Dunlap)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>The Godfather, Part III</td>
<td>(Coppola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Success (Hunter); Father of the Bride</td>
<td>(Nina Banks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Running Mates (Dirty Tricks)</td>
<td>(Aggie Snow)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Look Who’s Talking Now</td>
<td>(Daphne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Manhattan Murder Mystery</td>
<td>(Carol Lipton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Amelia Earhart: The Final Flight</td>
<td>(Daphne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Father of the Bride, Part II</td>
<td>(Nina Banks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>The First Wives Club</td>
<td>(Zaks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Northern Lights</td>
<td>(Robert)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>The Only Thrill</td>
<td>(Masterson)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Diane Keaton with Warren Beatty in Red

1999 The Other Sister (Marshall) (as Elizabeth Tate)
2000 Town and Country (Chelsom)

Films as Director:

1982 What Does Dorrie Want? (doc)
1987 Heaven (doc) (+ sc)
1991 Secret Society (+ ro); Wildflower (for TV)
1995 Unstrung Heroes
1999 Mother’s Helper
2000 Hanging Up (+ ro as Georgia)

Films as Producer:

1990 The Lemon Sisters (Chopra) (+ro as Eloise Hamer)
1997 Northern Lights (Yellen—for TV) (+ro as Roberta)
1999 Oh What a Time It Was (TV mini)

Publications

By KEATON: books—

Mr. Salesman: A Book (editor), Santa Fe, New Mexico, 1993.

By KEATON: articles—

“ Heaven,” interview with M. Glicksman, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1987.
Diane Keaton gained attention in Woody Allen’s early comedies in which her sidekick’s awkwardness serves as character. She is not a professional ingenue but does not seem amateurish; in Play It Again, Sam, Sleeper, and Love and Death she wins us with her game responsiveness to Allen’s leads. With Annie Hall her freshness became an original style. She gets laughs from the play of half-thoughts and second-thoughts that do not quite keep Annie from developing the confidence to act on her impulses. Keaton’s career after Annie Hall has been an exploration of experience by women who either have not had the chance to develop their instincts (Mrs. Soffel, Crimes of the Heart, The Good Mother), or have not shaped an attitude toward life that can handle what life sends them (Interiors, Manhattan, Reds, Shoot the Moon, The Little Drummer Girl). Keaton’s gift is to discover her characters on camera; in the comedies there is dew in the air of her performance, and in the dramas the real pain of confusion, and sometimes both in the same movie.

Allen finally freed Keaton from her dependence on him by casting her as a Bergmanesque poet repelled by human involvement in Interiors. Playing Renata with the same hesitations and emotional elusiveness as her comic roles, she became a star with as identifiable a manner as Bette Davis or Katharine Hepburn. Unfortunately, she broke through when character acting achieved critical ascendancy. Thus while Meryl Streep garnered praise for much more deliberately and narrowly conceived performances, Keaton breathtakingly explored her star persona. Streep is famous for working by externals. Keaton, making her debut in 1970, helped reinvent movie naturalism in a freer, more explicit era; there is a feeling of transition, both internal and external, in her best performances.

Of course, even her fans see that in underwritten roles, such as Louise Bryant in Reds and Amelia Earhart in a 1994 television movie (a debunking of the aviatrix as her husband-promoter’s media creation), Keaton’s distinctive manner is too much up front. If we do not know what makes her character disconcerted and edgy she can grate. And in as thinly conceived a comedy as The Lemon Sisters Keaton courts and weds preciousness (her failing as a director, both in the documentary Heaven and the comic family drama Unstrung Heroes). This is the downside of being one of the least ingratiating of stars. The upside is that when she is likable, she is likable in character, and she is fearless about being many things besides likable. As Faith in Alan Parker’s Shoot the Moon, opposite Albert Finney as the writer-husband she throws out when she discovers he is having an affair, Keaton is a bitter, adamant antagonist to the helpless George, even though battling weighs her down. No actress has outdone Keaton at the comedy-drama of divided feelings. On a date, Peter Weller asks if he can kiss her, and she fumbles, “No . . . I mean, yes.” Keaton, one of the first actresses of the counterculture generation to become a star, plays out the confusions of women trained in vanishing conventions. Faith, a mother of four with a living husband, “should not” be dating, but she should know whether she wants to be kissed. Annie Hall’s charming diffidence becomes Faith’s desolation, both pervasive and remote, while at the same time Keaton displays new comic gusto in the restaurant scene when Faith and George’s fight spills over to another table. As Faith, caught between lives, Keaton gave the greatest performance by an American actress since Hepburn in Long Day’s Journey into Night combined unreachable pain with eccentric comic outbursts.

Since 1982 only Gillian Armstrong’s period piece Mrs. Soffel, about a prison warden’s wife who helps convict brothers escape, has been truly worthy of her. Keaton may be anachronistic, but she daringly probes the antisocial realms of female dissatisfaction with marriage and motherhood. Her other 1980s pictures are not major but she chose them intelligently for the roles they offered her. In The Little Drummer Girl she is an actress drafted into an antiterrorist plot. Charlie is an exaggeration of Keaton’s traits as an actress, pushed to the edge by a supervolatilie situation. When Charlie realizes the enormity of seducing and betraying a terrorist leader, she gropes for a division between acting and life; Keaton makes us feel the agony of dangling. In The Good Mother she suffers melodramatic punishment for a late awakening with a lover whose uninhibitedness around her daughter leads to a custody battle. Anna’s discovery of carnality, without coyness or prurience, is amazingly vivid. When Anna loses her daughter Keaton despairingly weighs the merits of sexuality and motherhood in face of a culture that polarizes them.

Keaton brings her remarkable physicality to comedy as well, especially Baby Boom, J. C., a corporate shark, has the personality for big business but her nerve endings lack the competitive training that men’s receive. She cannot keep her legs from shaking as she closes deals; the excitement is overwhelming—and infectious. Forced to care for an infant, J. C. moves to New England where she does not even have business into which she can channel her energy; in crises she is liable to fritz out completely and keel over. Keaton’s pratfalls are no less funny for the fact that she keeps J. C.’s motivation clear.
Slapstick performances by female leads are rare; this is among the best.

Keaton’s subsequent career includes a return as Kay in the third Godfather, which never gives her material that engages her advanced skill; a funny reteaming with Woody Allen in Manhattan Murder Mystery; and supporting roles in the Father of the Bride pictures, in which, practically reduced to pantomime, her reactions give these family comedies their only distinction. Keaton’s recent work is not as triumphant as her 1980s movies, but she is adaptable, evergreen. She is always a good enough reason to see a movie.

—Alan Dale

KEATON, Michael

Nationality: American. Born: Michael Douglas in Coraopolis, Pennsylvania, 9 September 1951. Family: Married the actress Caroline MacWilliams, son: Sean. Education: Attended Kent State University for two years, majored in speech. Career: Early 1970s—began performing in Pittsburgh coffeehouses; 1972—worked as technical crew member of WQED, Pittsburgh’s public TV station; 1975—moved to Los Angeles; 1977–82—did stand-up comedy at the Comedy Store and other comedy clubs, performed improvisational theater with the Los Angeles offshoot of Chicago’s Second City troupe, began writing comedy material and making appearances on television shows, and was cast in the TV sitcoms All’s Fair (1977), Working Stiffs (1979), and Report to Murphy (1982), and the comedy-variety shows Mary (1978) and The Mary Tyler Moore Hour (1979); 1982—made screen debut in Night Shift; 1985—cast as male lead in Woody Allen’s The Purple Rose of Cairo, but was replaced by Jeff Daniels after a week of shooting. Awards: Best Actor, National Society of Film Critics, for Beetlejuice and Clean and Sober, 1988. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1982 Night Shift (Ron Howard) (as Bill Blazejowski)
1983 Mr. Mom (Dragoti) (as Jack)
1984 Johnny Dangerously (Heckerling) (title role)
1986 Gang Ho (Working Class Man) (Ron Howard) (as Hunt Stevenson); Touch and Go (Mandel) (as Bobby Barbato)
1987 The Squeeze (Roger Young) (as Harry Berg)
1988 Beetlejuice (Burton) (as Betelgeuse); Clean and Sober (Caron) (as Daryl Poynter); She’s Having a Baby (John Hughes) (uncredited cameo)
1989 The Dream Team (Zieff) (as Billy Caulfield); Batman (Burton) (as Bruce Wayne/Batman)
1990 Pacific Heights (Schlesinger) (as Carter Hayes)
1991 One Good Cop (Gould) (as Artie Lewis)
1992 Batman Returns (Burton) (as Bruce Wayne/Batman)
1993 Much Ado about Nothing (Branagh) (as Dogberry); My Life (Rubin) (as Bob Jones); Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (voice only)
1994 The Paper (Ron Howard) (as Henry Hackett); Speechless (Underwood) (as Kevin)
1996 Multiplicity (Ramis) (as Doug Kinney)
1997 Frank Capra’s American Dream (Brower—for TV) (as himself); Inventing the Abbotts (O’Connor) (as narrator—uncredited); Jackie Brown (Tamantino) (as Ray Nicolet)
1998 Desperate Measures (Schroeder) (as Peter McCabe); Out of Sight (Soderbergh) (as Ray Nicolet—uncredited); Jack Frost (Miller) (as title role)
2000 Road to Glory (Currente)

Publications

By KEATON: articles—

“Dr. Michael & Mr. Keaton,” interview with L. Grobel, in Movieline (Escondido), August 1997.

On KEATON: articles—

Roman, S., in Esquire (New York), September 1983.

* * * *

There is a bit of larceny lurking in Michael Keaton’s eyes, and he has made that mischievous expression work well for him in comedies and dramas, playing men disturbed by the business of business and the business of life. On occasion, he turns that look into pure wickedness to play berserk and otherworldly characters.
Michael Keaton (right) with Andy Garcia in Desperate Measures

Keaton burst onto the film scene with his attention-grabbing performance in Night Shift, playing manic morgue worker Bill Blazejowski, who brings in extra earnings by moonlighting as a pimp. His follow-up, Mr. Mom, in which he plays a breadwinner who loses his job and consequently switches roles with his homemaker wife, may not have offered the most original comic script, but it was a box-office hit and solidified Keaton’s stardom. He scored again in the 1920s-gangster spoof Johnny Dangerously. If the film was a bit too sketchy to sustain its running time, Keaton offers an attractive performance as the title hoodlum. His Johnny Dangerously is a deft burlesque on Cagney, with his lines delivered in flawless deadpan.

After several lackluster efforts—Gung Ho, Touch and Go, The Squeeze—Keaton got back on track in two diverse films which, when contrasted, serve to show off his range.

In Beetlejuice, he donned heavy, homely makeup to play a comically macabre no-goodnik named Betelgeuse, a vulgar maverick ghost who markets himself as a ‘bio-exorcist’ to frighten the living. Keaton is outrageous, taking a sometimes vulgar and often broadly theatrical approach to the hilarious, mangy character who is so suitable to the bizarre mood of Tim Burton’s horror film. In Clean and Sober, Keaton once again is an unlikable, antisocial character. This time, his style is tense and energy-packed, but also more subdued, because the film is a drama of realism. It is the story of a lowlife hustler who checks into a private drug rehabilitation clinic to hide out after a young woman he has picked up at a bar overdoses from cocaine while in his bed. More than any of his previous roles, his Daryl Poynter goes through stages of character development as he is forced to look at the sad fact that he really is a cocaine addict whose life is spinning out of control as a result of his addiction.

Perhaps Keaton’s most famous performance to date is the title character in the megahit Batman and its sequel, Batman Returns. If the showcase performance in the former is Jack Nicholson’s (as The Joker) and the latter is Michelle Pfeiffer’s (playing Catwoman), Keaton more than holds his own as a sturdy superhero. He was a surprise casting choice for the dual role of Batman, the Caped Crusader, and his alter-ego, neurotic millionaire Bruce Wayne. But given the moody and repressed sides of Wayne’s personality, Keaton surely was the right actor for the job (especially after being given an extra layer of muscle by the kindly costume designer!). After a dispute over salary, he was replaced by Val Kilmer in the third Batman feature, Batman Forever.
Keaton took aspects of his Betelgeuse character and built them into the vulgar comedy part of Dogberry in Kenneth Branagh’s production of Shakespeare’s Much Ado about Nothing. This time the effect was less than spectacular, and there are moments when one wonders if he really is part of the same movie as the actors who share screen time with him. His follow-ups, however, were two powerful dramatic roles. In My Life, a four-handkerchief weeper, he is a successful career man whose body is being eaten away by cancer just as he is about to become a father. In The Paper, a fast-paced yarn about New York City journalists, he appears as an overworked but dedicated tabloid metro editor whose pregnant wife (Marisa Tomei) is pressuring him to find a higher paying job. Though the former role gives Keaton the better opportunity to thoughtfully build a three-dimensional character, both roles allowed the actor to present credible characters in well-conceived melodramas.

Keaton has the look of a playground scrapper, and maybe that is why he is at his best as an energetic fighter. He may be battling for truth and justice, or for absurdly comical and ridiculous reasons. In any case, when Keaton lets loose, one cannot be bored.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

KEITEL, Harvey

Films as Actor:

1968 Who’s that Knocking at My Door? (I Call First) (Scorsese) (as J. R.)
1970 Street Scenes (Scorsese—for TV)
1973 Mean Streets (Scorsese) (as Charlie)
1974 The Virginia Hill Story (Schumacher—for TV) (as Bugsy Siegel)
1975 Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore (Scorsese) (as Ben Everhart); That’s the Way of the World (Shining Star) (Shore) (as Coleman Buckmaster)
1976 Taxi Driver (Scorsese) (as Sport); Mother, Jugs & Speed (Yates) (as Speed); Buffalo Bill and the Indians, or Sitting Bull’s History Lesson (Altman) (as Ed Goodman); Welcome to L.A. (Rudolph) (as Ken Hood)
1977 The Duellists (Ridley Scott) (as Gabriel Ferand)
1978 Fingers (Toback) (as Jimmy Angelelli); Blue Collar (Schrader) (as Jerry Bartkowski)
1979 Health (Altman); Eagle’s Wing (Harvey) (as Henry); La Mort en Direct (Deathwatch) (Tavernier) (as Roddy)
1980 Bad Timing: . . . A Sensual Obsession (Roeg) (as Inspector Netusil); Saturn 3 (Donen) (as Benson)
1981 La Nuit de Varennes (That Night in Varennes; The New World) (Scorsese) (as Thomas Paine)
1982 The Border (Richardson) (as Cat)
1983 Exposed (Toback) (as Rivas); Une pierre dans la bouche (A Stone in the Mouth) (Leconte) (as the Fugitive); Corrupt (Order of Death; Cop Killer) (Fanza) (as Lt. Fred O’Connor)
1984 Falling in Love (Modardh) (as Ed Lasky); Dream One (Nemo) (Selignac) (as Mr. Legend)
1985 El Caballero del Dragon (The Knight of the Dragon; Star Knight) (Colomo)
1986 Camorra (Vicoli e delitti; Un complicato intrigo di donne, vicoli e delitti; The Naples Connection) (Wertmüller) (as Frankie Acquasanta); La Sposa Americana (as Ed Goodman); Bull’s History Lesson (Rudolph) (as Ken Hood); Sister Act (Nicholson) (as Jake Berman); Due occhi diabolici (Two Evil Eyes) (Romero and Argento) (as Rod Usher); Grandi Cacciatori (The Great Hunter) (Camino); Martin Scorsese Directs (doc for TV)
1987 Corsa in Discesa; L’inchiesta (The Inquiry; The Investigation) (Damianni) (as Pontius Pilate); The Pick-Up Artist (Toback) (as Alonzo); Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam (Couture)—doc (as narrator); Blindside (Lynch) (as Penfield Gruber)
1988 The Last Temptation of Christ (Scorsese) (as Judas Iscariot); Caro Gorbaciov (Dear Gorbachev; Cordial Gorbatschew) (Lizzanni); Down Where the Buffalo Go (Knox—for TV)
1989 The January Man (O’Connor) (as Frank Starkey); La bataille des trois rois (The Battle of Three Kings; Tambores de fuego; Drums of Fire) (Barka); Imagining America (for TV)
1990 The Two Jakes (Nicholson) (as Jake Berman); Due occhi diabolici (Two Evil Eyes) (Romero and Argento) (as Rod Usher); Grandi Cacciatori (The Great Hunter) (Camino); Martin Scorsese Directs (doc for TV)
1991 Mortal Thoughts (Rudolph) (as Det. John Woods); Thelma & Louise (Ridley Scott) (as Hal Sclobe); Bugsy (Levinson) (as Mickey Cohen); Miracle on 44th Street: A Portrait of the Actor’s Studio (doc for TV)
1992 Sister Act (Ardolino) (as Vince LaRocca); Reservoir Dogs (Tarantino) (as Mr. White, + co-pr); Bad Lieutenant (Ferrara) (title role); The Specialist (Badham)
1993 Dangerous Game (Snake Eyes) (Ferrara) (as Eddie Israel); Point of No Return (The Assassin) (Badham) (as Victor the Cleaner); The Young Americans (Cannon) (as John Harris); Rising Sun (Kaufman) (as Tom Graham); The Piano (Campion) (as George Baines)
1994
Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (as Winston Wolf); Monkey Trouble
(Pet) (Amurri) (as Shorty); Imaginary Crimes (Drazan) (as Ray Weiler); Somebody to Love (Rockwell) (as Harry Harrelson)

1995
Smoke (Wang) (as Auggie Wren); Clockers (Spike Lee) (as Rocco Klein); Blue in the Face (Wang and Auster) (as Auggie Wren, + ex pr); Get Shorty (Sonnenfeld) (cameo);
To Vlaima tou Odyssea (Apostel) (as A.);
The Gaze of Odysseus; Le Regarde d’Ulysse (Angelopoulos) (as A.);
American Cinema (doc for TV)

1996
From Dusk Till Dawn (Rodríguez) (as Jacob Fuller); Head above Water (Jim Wilson) (as George)

1997
Full Tilt Boogie (Kelly) (as himself); City of Industry (John Irvin) (as Roy Egan); Cop Land (Mangold) (as Ray Donlan);
Fairy Tale: A True Story (Sturridge) (as Harry Houdini)

1998
Shadrach (Styron) (as Vernon Dabney); Finding Graceland
(Winkler) (as Elvis); Lulu on the Bridge (Auster) (as Izzy Maurer); Il Mio West (Drazan) (as Johnny Lowen)

1999
Three Seasons (Bui) (as James Hager + ex pr); Holy Smoke
(Campion) (as PJ Waters); An Interesting State (Wertmüller);

Prince of Central Park (Leekley) (as Guardian); Presence of Mind (Aloy)

2000
U-571 (Mostow) (as Chief Klough); Little Nicky (Brill) (as Satan); Fail Safe (Fears—for TV) (as General Warren Black)

Publications

By KEITEL: articles—

“Jake Jake: Jack Nicholson and Harvey Keitel,” interview with

“Harvey Keitel, Zoe Lund, and Abel Ferrara: The Unholy Trinity
That Makes Bad Lieutenant a Religious Experience,” interview

“Dark Star/Dog Days,” interview with Brian Case and Nigel Floyd, “Staying Power,” interview with David Thompson, in Sight & Sound

“The Gospel According to Harvey,” interview with Georgina Howell,
Interview with Lawrence Grobel, in Playboy (Chicago), November 1995.

On KEITEL: books—

On KEITEL: articles—

Clark, John, filmography in Premiere (New York), September 1990.

Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1995.

* * *

Praised since his first screen appearances for his versatility and intensity, Harvey Keitel has steadily constructed one of the cinema’s most prolific and adventurous acting careers. He first emerged, a fully formed talent out of the legendary Actor’s Studio, as the central and most compassionate figure in Martin Scorsese’s semi-autobiographical early films. In spite of Keitel’s later, frequent divergence from those early roles, his performances for Scorsese—especially as the anguished Charlie in Mean Streets, torn between the Catholic Church and the Mob—have continued to shadow his ongoing identification with gritty, streetwise urban characters whose greatest conflicts are nevertheless internal or even metaphysical. (It thus seemed impossible to imagine Scorsese casting any other actor, even Robert DeNiro, as Judas in his controversial Last Temptation of Christ.) Although Keitel can be explosive on screen, his skills as an actor are most thoroughly committed performance in those films.

In the two decades following his indelible early performances, Keitel worked constantly in interesting but often little-seen films, increasingly in Europe (especially Italy, perhaps since his association with Scorsese perpetuated the illusion that Keitel, a Jew of Polish-Romanian descent, was himself Italian-American). Along with a number of impressive performances—with his French officer in The Duellists and auto worker in Blue Collar standouts—a retrospective glance at Keitel’s credits demonstrates his prescient knack for attaching himself to first-time directors who would soon thereafter become prominent filmmakers: after Scorsese, Keitel appeared in the debut feature films of Ridley Scott (The Duellists), Alan Rudolph (Welcome to L.A.), Paul Schrader (Blue Collar), and Quentin Tarantino (Reservoir Dogs, which Keitel co-produced); he has also worked with such independently-minded and funded figures as Robert Altman, Ettore Scola, Bertrand Tavernier, James Toback (in three films), Nicolas Roeg, Tony Richardson, Dario Argento, Lina Wertmüller, Abel Ferrara (twice), Jane Campion (twice), Spike Lee, and Wayne Wang (in a pair of films shot simultaneously from Paul Auster scripts). In his diverse work for such a range of distinctive filmmakers, Keitel seemed to risk the pursuit of a career that was more personally rewarding than aimed at pleasing a large audience.

After working steadily in rarely successful films, the early 1990s signaled a renaissance for Keitel, who continued to appear in diverse roles but finally again in popular and widely discussed films; he plays the sympathetic cops in Mortal Thoughts, Thelma and Louise, and Clockers (a delicate performance in Spike Lee’s most focused narrative), and their nightmarish double as the (frequently naked, even crucified) Bad Lieutenant; that the same actor could appear almost simultaneously in the light comedy Sister Act, the ultraviolent neo-noir Reservoir Dogs, and the art-house hit The Piano (as a half-primitive Mauori) demonstrated the astonishing range of his skills to a wider audience. Although Keitel’s willingness, in his early fifties, to appear nude in both Bad Lieutenant and The Piano was taken as evidence of his risk-taking as an actor, his real risks in those complex roles are far more substantial than just dropping his pants.

Most recently, Keitel has reunited with director Campion as a seductive and then seduced cult deprogrammer for Holy Smoke! and paid tribute to his own military career in the patriotic submarine film U-571, again demonstrating his graceful movement between offbeat and more conventional roles. Keitel’s introductory line in Tarantino’s Pulp Fiction—“I’m Winston Wolf, I solve problems”—may be a subtle comment on the actor’s own assurance at this point in his career: his presence, in both commercial entertainments and more challenging works, now virtually guarantees at least one riveting and thoroughly committed performance in those films.

—Corey K. Creekmur

KELLY, Gene

Nationality: American. Born: Eugene Curran Kelly in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 23 August 1912. Education: Attended Sacred Heart School and Peabody High School; Pennsylvania State University; University of Pittsburgh, A.B., 1933. Military Service: Served in U.S. Navy, 1944–47. Family: Married 1) the actress Betsy Blair, 1941 (divorced 1957), child: Kerry; 2) Jeanne Coyne, 1960 (died 1973), son: Timothy, daughter: Bridget; 3) Patricia Ward, 1990. Career: While still in college, had song-and-dance act with his brother Fred; assisted his mother in her dance school, and opened the Gene Kelly School of Dance, 1934; 1938—small parts in Broadway shows shows Leave It to Me and One for the Money; 1939—dance director for Billy Rose’s Diamond Horseshoe club; 1940—lead role in stage musical Pal Joey; 1942—film debut in For Me and My Gal for Selznick; then contract with MGM; 1950—directed first film (with Stanley Donen), On the Town; later directed pure dance film, Invitation to the Dance, 1956; 1957—left MGM, and became freelance actor and director; 1958—directed Flower Drum Song on Broadway;
Gene Kelly

Films as Actor:

1942 For Me and My Gal (Berkeley) (as Harry Palmer)
1943 Pilot Number Five (Sidney) (as Alessandro); DuBarry Was a Lady (Del Ruth) (as Alec Howe/Black Arrow); Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (as Eddy Marsh); The Cross of Lorraine (Garnett) (as Victor)
1944 Cover Girl (Charles Vidor) (as Danny McGuire); Christmas Holiday (Siodmak) (as Robert Manette)
1945 Anchors Aweigh (Sidney) (as Joseph Brady)
1946 Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli)
1947 Living in a Big Way (La Cava) (as Leo Gogarty)
1948 The Pirate (Minnelli) (as Sarafin); The Three Musketeers (Sidney) (as Dartagnan); Words and Music (Taurog)
1949 Take Me Out to the Ball Game (Berkeley) (as Eddie O’Brien)
1950 The Black Hand (Thorpe) (as Johnny Columbo); Summer Stock (Walters) (as Joe Ross)
1951 An American in Paris (Minnelli) (as Jerry Mulligan)
1952 It’s a Big Country (Thorpe and others) (as Icarus Xenophon); The Devil Makes Three (Marion) (as Capt. Jeff Eliot)
1954 Crest of the Wave (Seagulls over Sorrento) (John and Roy Boulting) (as Lt. Bradville); Brigadoon (Minnelli) (as Tommy Albright)
1955 Deep in My Heart (Donen) (cameo role)
1957 Les Girls (Cukor) (as Barry Nichols)
1958 Marjorie Morningstar (Rapper) (as Noel Airman)
1959 Inherit the Wind (Kramer) (as E. K. Hornbeck); Let’s Make Love (Cukor) (as guest)
1960 What a Way to Go! (Thompson) (as Jerry Benson)
1961 The Young Girls of Rochefort (Demy) (as Andy Miller)
1973 Forty Carats (Katselas) (as Billy Boyland)
1974 That’s Entertainment! (Haley, Jr.) (as host)
1977 Viva Knievel! (Douglas)
1980 Xanadu (Greenwald) (as Danny McGuire)
1981 Reporters (Depardon)
1985 That’s Dancing! (Haley Jr.)
1986 Sins (Hickox)
1994 That’s Entertainment! III (Friedgen and Sheridan)

Films as Director:

1950 On the Town (co-d with Donen, + ro as Gaby)
1952 Singin’ in the Rain (co-d with Donen, + ro as Don Lockwood)
1956 Invitation to the Dance (+ ro)
1957 It’s Always Fair Weather (co-d with Donen, + ro as Ted Riley)
1958 The Tunnel of Love
1962 Gigot
1967 A Guide for the Married Man
1969 Hello, Dolly!
1970 The Cheyenne Social Club
1976 That’s Entertainment, Part Two (co-d with Astaire, + ro as host)

Publications

By KELLY: articles—

Interview by C. L. Hanson, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), December 1966.
Interview with R. Haver, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1984.
“‘And Now, the Real Kicker. . . .’” interview by Graham Fuller, Interview, May 1994.
“‘Toeing the Lion: Gene Kelly of That’s Entertainment! III,’” interview in Entertainment Weekly, 13 May 1994.

On KELLY: books—

On KELLY: articles—

Cutts, John, “‘Kelly, Dancer, Actor, Director,’” in Films and Filming (London), August and September 1964.
Bibliography (Edinboro, Pennsylvania), Spring 1984.
McCullough, John, “‘Imagining Mr. Average,’” in CineAction! (Toronto), no. 17, 1989.
Obituary, in Variety (New York), 5 February 1996.
Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1996.
Avalone, M., “‘Gene Kelly: The Man Who Came to Dinner,’” in Classic Images (Muscatine), November 1996.

** * ***

Gene Kelly established his reputation as an actor and dancer, but his contribution to the Hollywood musical embraced choreography and direction as well. His experiments with dance and with ways of filming it include combining dance and animation (Anchors Aweigh and Invitation to the Dance), and special effects (The ‘‘Alter Ego’’ number in Cover Girl and the split-screen dance of It’s Always Fair Weather). His first attempts at film choreography relied on the established formulas of the film musical, but subsequently, particularly in the three films he co-directed with Stanley Donen, he developed a flexible system of choreography for the camera that took into account camera setups and movement, and editing.

Kelly consciously integrated dance and filmic elements with his on-screen characterizations, thereby developing a persona (and also a recognizable popular culture figure) that is manifested in the films’ plots, songs, and especially dances. Like his dance style, this complex persona draws on a variety of sources. The song-and-dance man of For Me and My Gal is a vaudeville hoofer, and his principal dances are tap routines. The introspective Pierrot of Invitation to the Dance, and the Pierrot-sailor of the “‘A Day in New York’” sequence from On the Town, are derived from commedia dell’arte, and their dances are more balletic. The swashbuckler of the dream dances in Anchors Aweigh and The Pirate is an athletic performer, combining the tours de force of ballet with acrobatic stunts.

Without disparaging his towering achievements as triple threat, it is clear that Kelly’s happy-go-lucky Yankee Doodle dancing boy image seems less resonant in today’s pop culture vacuum. Despite superb supporting turns in What a Way to Go! and Forty Carats, it is obvious that Kelly’s grinning goodwill ambassador fell out of step with the sixties antiestablishment antiheroes. But Kelly’s image does not need a rehabilitation so much as a reshifting “‘perception-wise,’” to paraphrase a tune from It’s Always Fair Weather. Mesmerized by Gene’s athleticized self-approval and tireless cérchez la femme-ing, critics and audiences have overlooked the contradictions in his cocky all-American huckster persona. Debuting as a draft dodger in For Me and My Gal, Kelly used his charisma’s sinister edge to limn a mother-fixed killer in Christmas Holiday, camouflaged his rendition of a gigolo in An American in Paris, deftly enacted a womanizing summer schlocker in Marjorie Morningstar, and capped off his musical comedy career as a small-time fight promoter toying with a fix in It’s Always Fair Weather.

Even in lighter fare (On the Town, Summer Stock), he often portrayed fellas bent on impressing people to get what they wanted. Reconsidering the Kelly persona from a distance of several decades, one can enjoy his eventual triumphs over shortcomings (including his own robust ego) in Singin’ in the Rain, etc. It is a tribute to his unflappable charisma that unsavory character flaws all registered as temporary slippage, indiscretions cured by true love and transformed by joyfully aggressive dance. In his most seductive choreography (The Pirate, Cover Girl), he seemed to be dancing his demons away, and it is time to credit him for a more complex image than previously assumed.

If his solo work reveals a pretentiousness that never darkened Astaire’s sunny horizons, no male dancer was ever as sexually potent in tandem on-screen; he can make a soft shoe with Debbie Reynolds an adventure in eros. Betrayed by overreaching with the ill-fated Invitation to the Dance, Kelly minimized his true gifts as entertainer and misjudged his audience’s appetite for his brand of high culture. It was barbarous of MGM not to lend him for Guys and Dolls and Pal Joey and to saddle him with the airless Brigadoon and heavy-handed Les Girls. If the last four decades were dotted by the dashing of tantalizing projects and by Kelly’s inability to stamp his post-Donen directorial assignments with his own personality, Kelly could take comfort in his singular contribution to the all-but-extinct musical form; time will reveal an icon more complex than the quixotic puddle jumper of Singin’ in the Rain. In film after film, this superb actor chowed back darker impulses to earn his goodness; he is the all-American operator who plays all the angles, but ultimately seeks the light in a song-and-dance spotlight.

—Jerome Delameter, updated by Robert Pardi
Kelly, Grace

Films as Actress:

1951 Fourteen Hours (Hathaway) (as Mrs. Fuller)
1952 High Noon (Zimmernann) (as Amy Kane)
1953 Mogambo (John Ford) (as Linda Nordley)
1954 Dial M for Murder (Hitchcock) (as Margot Wendice); Rear Window (Hitchcock) (as Lisa Fremont); The Country Girl (Seaton) (as Georgie Elgin); The Bridges at Toko-Ri (Robson) (as Nancy Brubaker); Green Fire (Martón) (as Catherine Knowland)
1955 To Catch a Thief (Hitchcock) (as Frances Stevens)
1956 The Swan (Charles Vidor) (as Princess Alexandra); High Society (Walters) (as Tracy Lord); The Wedding in Monaco (documentary short)
1964 Mediterranean Holiday (Leitner and Nussgruber—doc)
1977 The Children of Theatre Street (Dornhelm and Mack) (as narrator)
1979 Rearranged (Dornhelm) (as herself)

Publications

By KELLY: book—

On KELLY: books—

Hall, Trevor, Her Serene Highness, Princess Grace of Monaco, 1982.

On KELLY: articles—

Obituary, in Films and Filming (London), November 1982.
Stars (Mariembourg), no. 7, March 1990.
Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1992.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), July 1993.
Mooney, J., “Grace Kelly in Rear Window,” in Movieline (Escondido), vol. 7, January/February 1996.
Library Journal, 1 April 1999.
“The 100 Greatest Movie Stars of All Time,” in Entertainment Weekly, Special Issue, Fall 1996.

On KELLY: film—

Grace Kelly, television movie, directed by Anthony Page, 1983.

* * *

Grace Kelly’s career as a film actress was brief (1951–56), her rise meteoric, her end abrupt. At the height of her career, she married Prince Rainier of Monaco and never again acted in a film—although Alfred Hitchcock attempted to draw her out of retirement to make a comeback as the star of his film Marnie. Some sources say the former actress-turned-royalty was tempted, but that her prince scotched the idea. Tippi Hedren got the role.

Despite the brief five-year span of her career, and only 11 films, she captured the imagination of the moviegoing audience with her beauty, intelligence, and what Alfred Hitchcock referred to as her “sexual elegance.” She is still capturing it, years after her death, as one of the most-biographed stars Hollywood has ever produced.

After a small role as the wife of a man (Richard Basehart) who threatens to commit suicide by jumping from a skyscraper in Henry Hathaway’s taut Fourteen Hours, Kelly leaped into the big leagues opposite Gary Cooper in High Noon. Here, and thereafter, her roles often centered on the emergence of concealed passion after a thawing of her icy or principled front. Before she became a princess in real life, she exuded in her films an aloof and aristocratic if not royal manner that, within the films’ cliché-ridden plots, broke down into a touching and warm sexual feeling for a man socially beneath her, and a search for self-respect. This change, as manifested in Mogambo, Rear Window, The Country Girl, To Catch a Thief, The Swan, and High Society, seemed a response to the public being fascinated with elegant upper-class manners, dress, and speech, while desiring a classless equality underneath it all.

Her screen metamorphosis often resulted in a moving love scene containing a surprisingly torrid kiss that, in its dramatic and sensual flavor, gave vent to the undercurrents her performance to that point had implied. A supreme example is Mogambo, her third film; in it she plays a naïve, recently married English woman who falls for the charms of worldly safari guide Clark Gable. Her long-repressed surrender to his embrace and kiss generates a tremendous, almost explosive sexual heat. In The Swan, her last film before becoming a princess—in which she ironically prepared for her soon-to-be-real-life-role by playing a princess—the Variety reviewer found a similar scene “that must be figured as belonging to the ranks of the best love scenes ever filmed.” In To Catch a Thief, when she kisses Gary Grant, the screen literally erupts with fireworks in the Riviera sky. This thawing kiss releases her passion which, though resulting sometimes in just a dalliance, reveals the superficiality of her airs and the honesty of her feelings.

Hitchcock cast Kelly in his films as his quintessential heroine—a beautiful blond victim subject to brutal violence, or the threat of violence, or as the partner of a man in dangerous pursuit of something. It was the perfect pairing of director and actress. Delmore Schwartz, reviewing To Catch a Thief, suggested that Hitchcock and Kelly in their three films together succeeded in supplying the public’s need for “vividness and vitality of personality, genuineness of experience, a renewal of the excitement of curiosity and wonder.” In Rear Window, perhaps Kelly’s best film with Hitchcock, a basic Hitchcockian situation—a callous male protagonist discovers love for his girlfriend... when she is in danger and he is nearly helpless to protect her—is made all the more compelling by the presence of Kelly’s wit, charm, and attractiveness.

Kelly’s most accomplished performance was in the film version of Clifford Odets’s The Country Girl as she became more than a director’s tool or a vessel for audience excitement. In this role she was cast against type as the cynical, old-before-her-time, combative wife of a washed-up actor (Bing Crosby) who gets a last chance when a director (William Holden) puts faith in him. Her appearance contrasts with the clotheshorse elegance of her previous role in Rear Window. Here she dresses dowdily, in cardigan, glasses, and skirt, slouches, looks worn and haggard, and has a glazed look to her eyes. But she is a fighter, first for her husband, later for herself. The childlike happiness and gaiety present in previous roles only appears in a flashback which serves to point out all the more forcefully her frustrated condition. The range she covered in this role showed her potential for giving complex performances in roles not of her normal type. Unfortunately her studio, MGM, subsequently gave her no comparable role; they suspended her for turning down two of their choices. But Kelly got the last laugh and went on to become the most famous princess in the world until Di came on the scene.

—Alan Gevinson, updated by John McCarty

KENDALL, Kay

Nationality: British. Born: Justine Kendall McCarthy in Yorkshire, England, 21 May 1927. Education: Attended convent school. Family: Married the actor Rex Harrison, 1957. Career: 1939—stage debut, then with sister Kim Kendall, in a touring variety act; 1944—film debut in Fiddlers Three; 1946—9—on stage in plays and revues; 1957—American film debut in Les Girls. Died: Of leukemia, 6 September 1959.

Films as Actress:

1944 Champagne Charlie (Cavalcanti); Fiddlers Three (Watt); Dreaming (Baxter)
1945 Waltz Time (Stein) (as Lady-in-waiting)
1946 Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal); London Town (Ruggles) (as Patsy); Spring Song (Tully)
1950 Night and the City (Dassin); Dance Hall (Crichton) (as Doreen)
1951 Lady Godiva Rides Again (Lauder) (as Sylvie)
1952 Wings of Danger (Dresser) (as Alexia); Curtain Up (Smart) (as Sandra); It Started in Paradise (Bennett) (as Lady Caroline)
1953 Mantrap (Fishers) (as Vera); Street of Shadows (Vernon) (as Barbara); Genevieve (Cornelius) (as Rosalind); The Square Ring (Dearden) (as Eve Lewis); Meet Mr. Lucifer (Pelissier) (as Lonely Hearts Singer)
1954 Fast and Loose (Parry) (as Carol); Doctor in the House (Thomas) (as Isobel)
1955 The Constant Husband (Gilliat) (as Monica); Simon and Laura (Box) (as Laura); The Adventures of Quentin Durward (Thorne) (as Isabelle)
1956 Abdulla the Great (Abdullah’s Harem) (Ratoff) (as Ronnie)
1957 Les Girls (Cukor) (as Lady Wren)

1958 The Reluctant Debutante (Minnelli) (as Sheila Broadbent)
1959 Once More, with Feeling (Donen) (as Dolly Fabian)

Publications

On KENDALL: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), September 1984.

* * *

When Kay Kendall died at the age of 32, she had made a couple of dozen films, nearly all of them mediocre or worse, and none using more than a fraction of her talents. That she can still, 30 years later, be remembered with affection and regret, shows how far she was capable of transcending her material.

Startlingly tall (at 12, she qualified for the chorus line at the London Palladium), beautiful, and never more graceful than when she was acting helplessly drunk, Kendall brought to comedy a sharp intelligence and a sense of spirited self-mockery. Her ability to be at once sexy and funny—and all the sexier because she was funny—led several critics to compare her to Carole Lombard. But it also puzzled the studios, who never knew quite what to do with her. By the time they found out, it was too late.

Early in her career, she got what looked like her big break. At 19, with only a few negligible bit parts to her credit, she landed the female lead in one of the then most expensive British pictures ever made. This, unfortunately, was London Town, a direly inept musical with which Rank misguidedly hoped to storm the American market. That it flopped was no fault of Kendall’s, but her career was blighted: no films for four years, and then back to the bit parts—mostly socialites and gangsters’ molls.

Not until Genevieve, which she and Kenneth More stole from the nominal leads, John Gregson and Dinah Sheridan, were Kendall’s idiosyncratic talents revealed. Her performance as More’s fashion-model girlfriend, progressing through hauteur, disbelief and fury to final resignation in the face of rampant male lunacy, was witty and appealingly bemused, culminating in the tour de force of her drunken trumpet solo. Here, for all the evident lack of experience, was one of the great screen comediennes in the making.

Rank, disconcerted, pushed her into some unsuitable doss. She fought back with spirit, holding out for better roles, and matters improved slightly: Simon and Laura, with Peter Finch, and The Constant Husband, with Rex Harrison (whom she married), at least verged on sophistication, though hardly stretched her in either case. Kendall made no secret of her dissatisfaction with the material on offer. “If you’re a film actress in Britain,” she told the press, “you spend your life smuggling your physical equipment through the Customs.”

By now, Hollywood had taken notice. Quentin Durward required little of her except to look elegant in period costume, but there followed her two best films since Genevieve. Not that either of them was that good. Les Girls found its promising team of George Cukor, Cole Porter, and Gene Kelly all a long way below their best. Kendall, as the scissarist of a trio of hoofer, walked off with the picture, and did the same for The Reluctant Debutante, a routine West End comedy, with another off-form director (Minnelli this time). Her vitality and sparkle made both films seem far better than they actually were.

She had contracted leukemia, and made one last movie. Once More, with Feeling, a feeble comedy with Yul Brynner, was released after her death by way of inadequate memorial. But the sense of waste—at her early death, at her misuse by imperceptive producers—cannot finally overshadow the memory of her lithe, volatile presence, all too briefly illuminating the screen.

—Philip Kemp

KENNEDY, Arthur

Films as Actor:

1940 City for Conquest (Litvak); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz)
1941 High Sierra (Walsh) (as Red); Knockout (Clemens); Strange Alibi (Lederman); Highway West (McCann); Bad Men of Missouri (Enright) (as Jim Younger); They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh)
1942 Desperate Journey (Walsh)
1943 Air Force (Hawks)
1946 Devotion (Bernhardt—produced 1943) (as Branwell Brontë)
1947 Cheyenne (Walsh) (as The Sundance Kid); Boomerang! (Kazan)
1949 Champion (Robson); The Window (Tetzelaff); Too Late for Tears (Haskin); Chicago Deadline (Allen); The Walking Hills (Sturges)
1950 The Glass Menagerie (Rapper) (as Tom Wingfield)
1951 Red Mountain (Dieterle); Bright Victory (Lights Out) (Robson)
1952 Bend of the River (Where the River Bends) (Anthony Mann); Rancho Notorious (Lang); The Girl in White (So Bright the Flame) (Sturges); The Lusty Men (Ray)
1954 Impulse (de Lautour)

1955 Crashout (Foster); The Naked Dawn (Ulmer); The Man from Laramie (Anthony Mann); Trial (Robson); The Desperate Hours (Wyler)
1956 The Rawhide Years (Maté)
1957 Peyton Place (Robson) (as Lucas Cross)
1958 Twilight for the Gods (Peyn); Some Came Running (Minnelli)
1959 Home Is the Hero (Cook); A Summer Place (Daves)
1960 Elmer Gantry (Brooks)
1961 Murder She Said (Pollock); Claudelle Inglish (Young and Douglas)
1962 Adventures of a Young Man (Ritt) (as Doc Adams); Barabas (Fleischer) (as Pontius Pilate); Lawrence of Arabia (Lean)
1964 Cheyenne Autumn (Ford) (as Doc Holliday); Italiani brava gente (Attack and Retreat) (De Santis); Joaquin Murieta (Vendetta) (Sherman); Joy in the Morning (Segal)
1965 Il chico del Lunes (Monday’s Child) (Torre-Nilsson); Nevada Smith (Hathaway); Fantastic Voyage (Fleischer); The Brave Rifles (as narrator)
1968 Day of the Evil Gun (Thorpe); Lo sparco di Anzio (Anzio; The Battle for Anzio) (Dmytryk); Un minuto per pregare, un istante per morire (Escondido; A Minute to Pray, a Second to Die; Dead or Alive) (Giraldi)
1969 Hail Hero (Miller)
1970 Shark! (Fuller—produced 1967); The Movie Murderer (Sagal—for TV)
1971 My Old Man’s Place (Glory Boy) (Sherin); A Death of Innocence (Endows—for TV); The President's Plane Is Missing (Duke—for TV); Crawlspace (Newland—for TV)
1973 Bacciamo le mani (Ferretta; Kiss My Hand; Mafia War) (Schiraldi); Rico (De Michelis)
1974 Nakia (Horn—for TV); Fin de semana para los muertos (The Living Dead at the Manchester Morgue; Don’t Open the Window) (Grau); L’anticristo (The Antichrist; The Tempter) (De Martino) (as the Bishop); La polizia ha le mani legate (The Police Can’t Move; Killer Cop) (Ercoli)
1976 Roma a mano armato (Rome Armed to the Teeth; Brutal Justice) (Lenzi); La spiaggia del desiderio (Emmanuelle on Taboo Island) (D’Ambrosio); Nove ospiti per un delitto (Nine Guests for a Crime) (Baldi); The Sentinel (Winner)
1977 Ab Morgen sind wir reich und ehrlich (Rich and Respectable) (Antel); Gli ultimi angeli (L’avventurosa fuga; Last Angels) (Doria); Ciclon (Cyclone) (Cardona)
1978 Sono stato un’agente CIA (Covert Action) (Guerrieri); Bermuda: la fossa maledetta (La cueva de los tiburones; Cave of Sharks; The Sharks’ Cave) (Richmond)
1979 L’unanoide (The Humanoid) (Lewis)
1980 Movies Murderer (Sagal—for TV)
1989 Signs of Life (for TV)

Publications

On KENNEDY: articles—

* * *

Arthur Kennedy’s acting career represents one of solid, mainstream performance. In the 1940s he moved from minor roles in Warner Brothers staples (High Sierra, Air Force) to starring in ‘social problem’ films such as Champion. The 1950s and 1960s saw Kennedy reach the peak of his movie career with appearances in a number of highly regarded Westerns (The Man from Laramie, Bend of the River) plus several money-making spectacles (Elmer Gantry, Lawrence of Arabia).

Kennedy, like many character actors of Hollywood’s Golden Age, aspired to the stage. He received classical acting training at Carnegie Institute of Technology and in the mid-1930s moved to New York to ‘make it’ on Broadway. At this point in his career he never did. There were occasional triumphs, including, for example, a Broadway debut in Richard III with Maurice Evans’s company. But with his ‘discovery’ by a Warner Brothers’ talent scout, Kennedy, like many before him, moved to Hollywood. Success on Broadway (in Death of a Salesman) came only after he became a name in the movies.

Kennedy’s best film work came in a series of Westerns in the 1950s. In one brief span at the beginning of that decade he worked with Nicholas Ray, Fritz Lang, and Anthony Mann in three of the best Westerns ever made: The Lusty Men, Rancho Notorious, and Bend of the River. Later in the 1950s came yet another solid performance in Anthony Mann’s The Man from Laramie.

For a time in the mid-1950s it seemed Kennedy might even become a movie star. He received Academy Award nominations for best supporting actor in 1955, 1957, and 1958, the last for the box office smash Peyton Place. But it was not to be. Rather than leading to major roles this succession of nominations (with no win) only permanently established him as an ever-reliable character actor.

Kennedy’s career after 1960 produced few artistic triumphs. In part this is because he rarely worked for top-flight directors. Exceptions include John Ford (Cheyenne Autumn) and Sam Fuller (Shark). Like many a character actor of his generation, Kennedy turned more and more to television work. Although his lone attempt at a weekly series (Nakia) lasted for only 15 episodes, he achieved a degree of fame as a guest star in such anthology programs as General Electric Theater and Playhouse 90, and later in a number of movies made for television.

—Douglas Gomery

KERR, Deborah

Films as Actress:

1941 Major Barbara (Pascal) (as Jenny Hill); Love on the Dole (Baxter) (as Sally Hardcastle)
1942 Penn of Pennsylvania (The Courageous Mr. Penn) (Comfort) (as Guilietta Springetti); Hatter’s Castle (Comfort) (as Mary Brodie); The Day Will Dawn (The Avengers) (French) (as Kari)
1943 The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp (Powell and Pressburger) (as Edith Hunter)
1945 Perfect Strangers (Vacation from Marriage) (Korda) (as Catherine Wilson)
1946 I See a Dark Stranger (The Adventuress) (Lauder) (as Bridie Quilty)
1947 Black Narcissus (Powell and Pressburger) (as Sister Clodagh); The Hucksters (Conway) (as Kay Dorrance)
1948 If Winter Comes (Saville) (as Nona Tybar)
1949 Edward, My Son (Cukor) (as Evelyn Boul)
1950 Please Believe Me (Taurog) (as English heiress); King Solomon’s Mines (Bennett and Marton) (as Elizabeth Curtis)
1951 Quo Vadis? (LeRoy) (as Lygia)
1952 The Prisoner of Zenda (Thorpe) (as Princess Flavia)
1953 Thunder in the East (Vidor) (as Joan Willoughby); Dream Wife (Sheldon) (as Priscilla Effington); Young Bess (Franklin) (as Catherine Parr); From Here to Eternity (Zinnemann) (as Karen Holmes); Julius Caesar (Mankiewicz) (as Portia)
1955 The End of the Affair (Dmytryk) (as Sarah Miles)
1956 Tea and Sympathy (Minnelli) (as Laura Reynolds); The Proud and Profane (Seaton) (as Nurse Lee Ashley); The King and I (Lang) (as Mrs. Anna Leonowens)
1957 Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison (Huston) (as Sister Angela); An Affair to Remember (McCarey) (as Nickie)
1958 Bonjour Tristesse (Preminger) (as Anne); Separate Tables (Mann) (as Sybil Raiton-Bell)
1959  The Journey (Litvak) (as Lady Diana Ashmore);  Count Your Blessings (Negulesco) (as Grace Allingham);  Beloved Infidel (King) (as Sheilah Graham)
1960  The Sundowners (Zinnemann) (as Ida Carmody);  The Grass Is Greener (Donen) (as Hilary Rhyall)
1961  The Naked Edge (Anderson) (as Martha Radcliffe);  The Innocents (Clayton) (as Miss Giddens)
1964  The Chalk Garden (Neame) (as Miss Madrigal);  The Night of the Iguana (Huston) (as Hannah Jelkes)
1965  Marriage on the Rocks (Donohue) (as Valerie Edwards)
1967  Eye of the Devil (Thompson—produced 1966) (as Catherine de Montfaucon);  Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as Agent Mimi ["Lady Fiona McTarry"])
1968  Prudence and the Pill (Cook and Neame) (as Prudence Hardcastle)
1969  The Gypsy Moths (Frankenheimer) (as Elizabeth Brandon);  The Arrangement (Kazan) (as Florence Anderson)
1982  Witness for the Prosecution (Gibson—for TV)
1985  Reunion at Fairborough (Wise—for TV);  The Assam Garden (McMurray) (as Helen) 1986  Hold the Dream (Sharp—for TV) (as Emma Harte)

Publications

By KERR: articles—

Interview with Bruno Villien, in Cinémagraphe (Paris), December 1983.
Interview with Brian Baxter, in Films and Filming (London), December 1984.
Interview with Lelia Loban and Richard Valley, in Scarlet Street, Fall 1995.

On KERR: book—

On KERR: articles—

Film Dope (London), September 1984.
Vineberg, Steve, “Fred Zinnemann’s Actors,” in Film Criticism (Meadville), Spring 1994.

* * *

The preeminent English gentlewoman, Deborah Kerr performed with a ladylike spiritedness and wholesome sincerity that proved equally popular in Great Britain and America.

A stage actress in her late teens, Kerr graduated from a small role in Major Barbara that led to three skillfully varied roles in The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp and an authoritative nun in Black Narcissus; afterward, MGM brought her to Hollywood to play opposite Clark Gable in The Hucksters.

A decorative period—King Solomon’s Mines and others—did not take advantage of her surprising intensity, but her self-possession and well-bred personality worked to advantage in these popular films. Cast against type in From Here to Eternity as Burt Lancaster’s adulterous lover, Kerr broadened her emotional range in the minds of cinemagoers with a memorably sensual roll in the surf.

Extraordinarily versatile, the six-time Oscar nominee stood her ground in hoopskirts opposite Yul Brynner in The King and I, sparred charmingly with Cary Grant and David Niven several times, and smoldered opposite Robert Mitchum, most notably as a housewife made transcendent by sacrifice in The Sundowners.

When Kerr did not have a handle on a role (e.g., Beloved Infidel) her neurotic tremulousness (used tellingly to portray a neglected closet drinker in Edward, My Son) wound up parodying her cashmere-sweatered earth mother role as in Tea and Sympathy. At her sharpest, however, Kerr memorably agonized to find a balance between submerged desire and a self-imposed code of honor, whether as a wallflower doomed to Separate Tables or a nun taxed by her chastity habit in Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison.

Kerr’s abandonment of Hollywood after the failures of The Arrangement and Gypsy Moths was especially disheartening since the decade started so promisingly with her repressed governess in The Innocents, a spellbinding spin through Capote’s Freudinizing of Turn of the Screw, a splendidly evasive Miss Madrigal in the civilized Chalk Garden, and a definitive study in the denial of the flesh in a Night of the Iguana vulgarized by director John Huston but redeemed by its stars.

Advent at teary melodrama and light comedy, Kerr entranced a new generation of fans through the Affair to Remember clips that filled (and that were the sole reason to tolerate) Sleepless in Seattle. A superb theatrical performer, Kerr toured in made-to-order warhorses, enjoyed a Broadway return in Albee’s Seascape, and demonstrated that time had not withered her variety in such television showcases as the BBC’s Ann and Debbie and the opulent mini-series A Woman of Substance. Through a kaleidoscopic career, Kerr never lost the cool beauty and inborn gentility that initially established her stardom.

—Richard Sater, updated by Robert Pardi

KIDMAN, Nicole

Films as Actress:

1983 Bush Christmas (Prince and the Great Race) (Safran) (as Helen); BMX Bandits (Trenchard-Smith) (as Judy); Chase Through the Night (Rubie—for TV) (as Petra)
1984 Matthew and Son (Conway—for TV) (as Bridget Elliot)
1985 Wills & Burke (Weis) (as Julia Matthews); Winners (mini, for TV); Archer’s Adventure (Lawrence) (as Catherine)

Nicole Kidman in The Portrait of a Lady of talent, intelligence, and versatility, but the vast preponderance of her press coverage still dwells on trivial speculation about her marriage to Tom Cruise. (Is he secretly gay? Or is she? Were they given lessons in lovemaking for Eyes Wide Shut? Does it rile him that she’s several inches taller? And so forth.) When she appeared on the London stage (in Sam Mendes’ production of The Blue Room, adapted from Schnitzler’s Reigen) most of the male reviewers spent more time drooling over her on-stage nudity than assessing her acting ability. Even after displaying her range in three such diverse performances As To Die For, The Portrait of a Lady and Eyes Wide Shut, it seems Kidman still has trouble being taken seriously as an actress.

In her early roles, playing tomboyish teenagers in low-budget Australian family comedies like Bush Christmas and BMX Bandits, Kidman stood out with her rangy figure and wild red hair, exuding a nascent sexuality that scarcely meshed with the films’ anodyne, sub-Disney ethos. John Duigan latched on to the cool-bitch side of her screen persona, casting her as the snotty head girl who gives Thandie Newton a hard time in Flirting, but it was Phillip Noyce’s oceanbound thriller Dead Calm that gave her the crucial breakthrough role. At 19 she was way too young to play Sam Neill’s jaded wife, but she came into her own in the later part of the film, fighting off Billy Zane’s psychopath with a ferocity that seemed to stem less from fear than from indignation and moral outrage. Dead Calm got Kidman to Hollywood and landed her the token-female role in Days of Thunder, Simpson and Bruckheimer’s attempt to duplicate the testosterone-laden appeal of Top Gun. The film brought her together with Tom Cruise, and set an unhappy precedent for her Hollywood career. For the next few years Kidman found herself consigned to shallow, decorative roles in movies that left minimal scope for her talents. It hardly helped that the films were resolutely mediocre. If the stories of her ruthless pursuit of Gus Van Sant to secure the lead in To Die For are true, it’s hardly to be wondered at; after overstuffed dross like Far and Away and Batman Forever she was clearly desperate to be allowed to show what she could do.

As the murderously ambitious Suzanne Stone, local TV weathergirl determined to make it big, Kidman proved she could play comedy with pitch-perfect subtlety. Instead of taking the easy route of making her character a bimbo, she played her as a woman who has concentrated down to one narrow, obsessive focus, leaving herself brain- and heart-dead outside it. Using her svelte beauty like a weapon, Kidman’s screen persona, casting her as the snotty head girl who gives Thandie Newton a hard time in Flirting, but it was Phillip Noyce’s oceanbound thriller Dead Calm that gave her the crucial breakthrough role. At 19 she was way too young to play Sam Neill’s jaded wife, but she came into her own in the later part of the film, fighting off Billy Zane’s psychopath with a ferocity that seemed to stem less from fear than from indignation and moral outrage. Dead Calm got Kidman to Hollywood and landed her the token-female role in Days of Thunder, Simpson and Bruckheimer’s attempt to duplicate the testosterone-laden appeal of Top Gun. The film brought her together with Tom Cruise, and set an unhappy precedent for her Hollywood career. For the next few years Kidman found herself consigned to shallow, decorative roles in movies that left minimal scope for her talents. It hardly helped that the films were resolutely mediocre. If the stories of her ruthless pursuit of Gus Van Sant to secure the lead in To Die For are true, it’s hardly to be wondered at; after overstuffed dross like Far and Away and Batman Forever she was clearly desperate to be allowed to show what she could do.

As the murderously ambitious Suzanne Stone, local TV weathergirl determined to make it big, Kidman proved she could play comedy with pitch-perfect subtlety. Instead of taking the easy route of making her character a bimbo, she played her as a woman who has concentrated down to one narrow, obsessive focus, leaving herself brain- and heart-dead outside it. Using her svelte beauty like a weapon, Kidman’s Suzanne dazzles onlookers with her smile while the gleam of calculation never leaves her eyes.

To Die For gave Kidman her best role to date. The Portrait of a Lady and Eyes Wide Shut, both more ambitious films, in different ways constrained her, damping down the vibrant animal vitality that, unleashed, can radiate off the screen. Jane Campion’s film turned Henry James’s free spirit into a more lachrymose character, too easily subdued by John Malkovich’s domestic tyrant; Kidman dutifully went along with the concept but let the rebellion show in her eyes. Eyes Wide Shut reunited her with Cruise in their first on-screen partnership since Far and Away. Both actors were visibly unnerved by Kubrick’s over-meticulous direction; but Kidman came off the better of the two, achieving a poised intensity in her key monologues that showed up Cruise’s dazed acquiescence. Both films demonstrated her versatility, suggesting that Kidman’s potential as an actress has as yet scarcely been explored. It would be good to see her given the chance to prove it.

—Philip Kemp
KINGSLEY, Ben

Films as Actor:

1973 Fear Is the Key (Tuchner) (as Roche)
1982 Gandhi (Attenborough) (title role); The Merry Wives of Windsor (David Jones—for TV) (as Frank Ford)
1983 Betrayal (David Jones) (as Robert)
1984 Sleeps Six (James Cellan Jones)
1985 Harem (Joffe) (as Selim); Turtle Diary (Irvin) (as William Snow); Silas Marner: The Weaver of Raveloe (Giles Foster—for TV) (title role); Camille (Desmond Davis—for TV) (as Duval)
1987 Testimony (Tony Palmer) (as Dmitri Shostakovich); Maurice (Ivory) (as Lasker-Jones)
1988 Pascali’s Island (Dearden) (as Basil Pascali); Without a Clue (Sherlock and Me) (Eberhardt) (as Dr. Watson)
1989 Slipstream (Lisberger) (as Avatar); Murderers among Us: The Simon Wiesenthal Story (Brian Gibson—for TV) (title role)
1990 The Children (Tony Palmer) (as Martin Boyne); Una Vita Scellerata (A Violent Life) (Battiatto); The Fifth Monkey (Rochat) (as Cunda); Romeo-Juliet (Acosta) (voice only)
1991 L’Amour necessario (Necessary Love) (Fabio Capri) (as Ernesto); Bugsy (Levinson) (as Meyer Lansky); The War That Never Ends (Jack Gold—for TV) (as Pericles)
1992 Sneakers (Robinson) (as Cosmo); Freddie as F.R.O.7 (Freddy the Frog) (Acevski—animation) (as voice of Freddie)
1993 Dave (Reitman) (as Vice President Nance); Schindler’s List (Spielberg) (as Itzhak Stern); Searching for Bobby Fisher (Innocent Moves) (Zaillian) (as Bruce Pandolfini)
1994 Death and the Maiden (Polanski) (as Dr. Roberto Miranda); Liberation (Schwartzmann—doc) (as narrator)
1995 Joseph (Roger Young—for TV) (as Potiphar); Species (Donaldson) (as Xavier Fitch)

1996 Twelfth Night (Trevor Nunn) (as Feste); Moses (Young) (as Moses)
1997 The Assignment (Duguay) (as Amos); Weapons of Mass Destruction (Surjik) (as Julian Messenger); Photographing Fairies (Willing) (as Reverend Templeton)
1998 Parting Shots (Winner) (as Renzo Locatelli); The Tale of Sweeney Todd (Schlesinger) (as Sweeney Todd); Crime and Punishment (Dostoevsky’s Crime and Punishment) (Sargent—mini for TV) (as Porfiry)
1999 A Force More Powerful (York) (as narrator); The Confession (David Hugh Jones) (as Harry Fertig); Alice in Wonderland (Willing—for TV) (as Major Caterpillar); Peace Is Every Step: Meditation in Action—The Life and Work of Thich Nhat Hanh (Maida) (as narrator); Spooky House (Sachs) (as The Great Zamboni)
2000 What Planet Are You From? (Nichols) (as Graydon); Rules of Engagement (Friedklin) (as Ambassador Mourain); Till the End of Time (Rydel) (as Alfred Steiglitz)

Publications

By KINGSLEY: books—

By KINGSLEY: articles—

Interview with Michael Buckley, in Films in Review (New York), January 1983.
Interview with Dominique Benjamin, in Séquences (Montreal), January 1986.

On KINGSLEY: articles—

Ben Kingsley rose to fame as the star of Richard Attenborough’s biopic Gandhi (1981), his second screen appearance following a supporting role in the Alistair MacLean thriller Fear Is the Key released almost a decade earlier. Actor Attenborough had sought to film the life of the martyred Indian leader since the 1960s after turning producer-director. His friend and mentor, David Lean, had been fascinated with the subject for a long time as well, but had been unable to secure financing or approvals from the various powers that be in and out of the government of India necessary to shoot the film on location. Attenborough persevered, using a substantial amount of his own money to develop the project, which eventually found a backer in Goldcrest Entertainment. After considerable give and take (mostly give), the director received permission to film his considerably watered down, politically correct look at the life and times of Gandhi in India. His boldest stroke was casting the unknown Kingsley, whose father was Indian and mother British, in the title role. On screen for most of the epic’s rather ponderous 188 minutes, Kingsley carried the weight of the film almost entirely on his own shoulders and did so magnificently, delivering a performance of such restrained fire and spiritual strength that he earned a Best Actor Oscar. Though he has the unique ability to portray diverse ethnic types quite convincingly without resorting to make-up (in much the same way that Meryl Streep carries off foreign accents), Kingsley’s selection of roles and films since then are somewhat of a mixed bag.

Ben Kingsley rose to fame as the star of Richard Attenborough’s biopic Gandhi (1981), his second screen appearance following a supporting role in the Alistair MacLean thriller Fear Is the Key released almost a decade earlier. Actor Attenborough had sought to film the life of the martyred Indian leader since the 1960s after turning producer-director. His friend and mentor, David Lean, had been fascinated with the subject for a long time as well, but had been unable to secure financing or approvals from the various powers that be in and out of the government of India necessary to shoot the film on location. Attenborough persevered, using a substantial amount of his own money to develop the project, which eventually found a backer in Goldcrest Entertainment. After considerable give and take (mostly give), the director received permission to film his considerably watered down, politically correct look at the life and times of Gandhi in India. His boldest stroke was casting the unknown Kingsley, whose father was Indian and mother British, in the title role. On screen for most of the epic’s rather ponderous 188 minutes, Kingsley carried the weight of the film almost entirely on his own shoulders and did so magnificently, delivering a performance of such restrained fire and spiritual strength that he earned a Best Actor Oscar. Though he has the unique ability to portray diverse ethnic types quite convincingly without resorting to make-up (in much the same way that Meryl Streep carries off foreign accents), Kingsley’s selection of roles and films since then are somewhat of a mixed bag.

The pretentious Betrayal (1983), from a play by Harold Pinter, found Kingsley in a love triangle with Jeremy Irons and Patricia Hodge, the central gimmick of which is that the events of the story unfold in reverse, beginning with their resolution. He played an Arab sheik who kidnaps Nastassja Kinski for his desert nights in the sex-and-sand epic Harem (1985), a French-made extravaganza marked by all the subtlety of a Harlequin Romance novel. In the gentle drama Turtle Diary (1985), scripted by Pinter, he and Glenda Jackson play a pair of shy people who form a romantic relationship based on their mutual need to save some giant turtles in a zoo. As Dr. Watson in Without a Clue, he hires a bumbling actor played by Michael Caine to bring his fictional character of Sherlock Holmes to life. Alternately too stiff and too strained in his efforts to hit his comic marks, Kingsley demonstrated here that comedy, particularly farce-comedy, is not his forte, and has tended to avoid it since. And as a scientist who unlocks a DNA code transmitted from space to create an Alien-type super-monster in Species, he fairly disappeared (along with most of the cast) in that laughable sci-fi opus’s non-stop parade of spectacularly grisly special effects.

Although he had played the composer Dmitri Shostakovich in the Tony Palmer-directed biopic Testimony (1987), the film was barely released. Only when the 1980s began to wind down would Kingsley find another role equal in challenge and visibility to the one that brought him fame as the decade began. In the title role of the Abby Mann-scripted made-for-television biopic Murderers among Us: The Simon Wiesenthal Story, Kingsley was, in the words of critic Leonard Maltin, “mesmerizing . . . as the Holocaust survivor who dedicated the rest of his life to hunting down the war’s Nazi bigwigs.”

The 1990s have provided a range of roles for Kingsley, many of them in the kind of big-budget, commercial Hollywood product he had seemed studiously intent on avoiding after Gandhi. He brought a disturbing, sinister-with-a-knife sincerity to the part of Jewish gangster Meyer Lansky in Bugsy (1991). In Searching for Bobby Fischer (1993), based on a true story, he movingly revealed the inner turmoil of a chessmaster guiding a child prodigy whose genius for the game he too had exhibited in childhood but failed to fulfill. As the vice president in the political comedy Dave, he all but disappeared into the background, but that is the nature of the position itself, as the film suggests. And his part, as well as performance, in the cyber-caper comedy Sneakers is so unassuming that one almost forgets once the film is over that Kingsley was even in its high-profile cast.

As the Jewish business manager of the German profiteer Oskar Schindler (Liam Neeson) who saves the lives of more than a thousand Holocaust victims in Schindler’s List, Kingsley perfectly conveyed the conflicting emotions of a man who keeps expecting his benefactor to turn against him and his people, then comes to trust and admire the man for daring to stand against the exterminating Nazi tide. The performance earned Kingsley a Best Supporting Actor Academy Award nomination, although the role is actually a co-starring one.

Kingsley fared best among the largely miscast three-character drama Death and the Maiden, Roman Polanski’s adaptation of Ariel Dorfman’s play about a Chilean woman (Sigourney Weaver) who seizes the opportunity to get back at the man (Kingsley) she believes raped and tortured her while she was a political prisoner, when he unwittingly stops by with her husband (Stuart Wilson) for a drink. As Weaver applies the screws, Kingsley almost convinces the viewer he’s the victim in this dark and twisted tale of revenge and role reversal.

Kingsley felt Polanski was one of the most creative directors he’d ever worked with, although Death and the Maiden, their only collaboration together (so far), was neither a hit with audiences or most critics; it did little to enhance the careers of either man, though of the two, Kingsley has continued to work quite busily on stage and on the big screen as well as the small where he has appeared in a number of epic mini-series such as Turner Network Television’s Moses to which he brought a quiet dignity to the title role patented by Charlton Heston in DeMille’s The Ten Commandments.

—John McCarty

KINSKI, Klaus

Born: Nikolaus Günther Naksynski in Sopot (Zoppot), Free State of Danzig (later Germany; now Gdansk, Poland), 8 October 1926; grew up in Berlin. Military Service: German Army, 1944; captured by the British on second day of combat, spending rest of war as POW.

Films as Actor:

1948 Morituri (York)
1951 Decision before Dawn (Litvak) (as whining soldier)
1954 Ludwig II (Lanz und Elend eines Königs) (Kätner); Kinder, Mütter, und ein General (Hauen Sie ab mit Heldentum) (Benedek)
1955 Sarajewo (Um Thron und Liebe) (Kortnet); Hanussen (Fischer and Marischka)
1956 Waldwinter (Liebeneiner) (as Otto Hartwig); Geliebte Corinna (von Borsody)
1958 A Time to Love and a Time to Die (Sirk) (as Gestapo lieutenant)
1960 Der Rächer (The Avenger) (Anton) (as Lorenz Voss)
1961 Die toten Augen von London (Geheimnis von London; The Dead Eyes of London; Dark Eyes of London) (Vohrer) (as Edgar Strauss); Das Geheimnis der gelben Narzissen (The Devil’s Daffodil; Daffodil Killer) (von Rathony) (as Peter Keene); Bankraub in der Rue Latour (Jürgens); Die seltsame Gräfin (The Strange Countess) (von Baky) (as Stuart Bresset); Das Rätsel der roten Orchidee (The Puzzle of the Red Orchid; Gangster in London) (Ashley) (as Steve); Die Kurve (Zadek—for TV)
1962 Der rote Rausch (Schleif); Dir Tür mit den sieben Schlössern (Das Gasthaus an der Themse; The House with Seven Locks) (Vohrer) (as Gregor Gubanow); The Counterfeit Traitor (Seaton) (as Kindler)
1963 Der schwarze Abt (The Black Abbot) (Gottlieb); Der Zinker (The Squeaker) (Vohrer); Die schwarze Kobra (Zehetgruber); Das indische Tuch (Vohrer); Scotland Yard jagt Doktor Mabuse (Die scharlochatrote Dschunke; Scotland Yard Hunts Dr. Mabuse) (Paul May); Das Geheimnis der schwarzen Witwe (Secret of the Black Widow) (Gottlieb); Piccadilly null Uhr zwölf (Zehetgruber); Kali-Yug, la dea della vendetta (Die Göttin der Rache) (Camerini); Il mistero del tempio indiano (Aufbruch in Indien; Das Geheimnis des indischen Tempels) (Camerini)—this film and the previous edited into one version titled Kali-Yug, Goddess of Vengeance
1964 Die Gruft mit dem Räselschloss (Gottlieb); Wartezimmer zum Jenseits (Vohrer); Der letzte Ritt nach Santa Cruz (Last
Kinski in Fitzcarraldo (Olsen); Winnetou: II Teil (Giorni di fuoco; Le Tresor des montagnes bleues; Last of the Renegades) (Reinl) (as Luke); Das Geheimnis der chinesischen Nelke (Secret of the Chinese Carnation) (Zehetgruber) 1965

Das Verratertor (Traitor’s Gate) (Francis); The Pleasure Girls (Die Goldpuppen) (O’Hara) (as Nikko); Neues vom Hexer (Vohrer); La Guerre secrète (The Dirty Game) (Terence Young); Estambul 65 (Operación Istanbul; L’homm de’ Istanbul; That Man in Istanbul) (Isasi-Isasmendi) (as Schenck); Doctor Zhivago (Lean) (as Kostoved) 1966

Per qualche dollaro in più (For a Few Dollars More) (Leone) (as hunchback); Our Man in Marrakesh (Bang! Bang! You’re Dead) (Sharp) (as Jonquil); Das Geheimnis der gelben Mönche (Wie tötet man eine Dame; Target for Killing) (Köhler); Spie contro il mondo (Gern hab’ ich die Frau’n gekillt; Spy against the World; Killers Carnival; Carnival of Killers) (Cardiff) 1967

Quien sabe? (A Bullet for the General) (Damiani) (as El Santo); Circus of Fear (Psycho-Circus) (Moxey) (as Manfred); Die blute Hand (Creature with the Blue Hand) (Vohrer); Carmen, Baby (Metzger); Su-muru (The Million Eyes of Su-muru) (Shonteff) (as President Boong); Five Golden Dragons (Summers) (as Gert); L’uomo, l’orgoglio, la vendetta (Man, Pride, and Vengeance; Mit Django kam der Tod) (Bazzoni); Coplan sauve sa peau (Les Jardins du diable; Requiem for a Snake; Devil’s Garden) (Boisset); Mister Zehn Procent—Miezen und Moneten (Sigpress contro Scotland Yard) (Zurli) 1968

Ad ogni costo (Grand Slam; Top Job) (Montaldo) (as Erich Weiss); Ognuno per se (Das Gold von Sam Cooper; The Ruthless Four; Sam Cooper’s Gold) (Holloway, i.e. Capitani) (as blond); Sartana (Se incontri Sartana, prega per la tua morte) (Kramer, i.e. Parolini); A qualsiasi prezzo (Vatican Story) (Miraglia); Due volte Giuda (Cicero); Cinque per l’inferno (Five into Hell) (Kramer, i.e. Parolini); Il grande silenzio (La grand Silence) (Corbucci); Marquis de Sade: Justine (Justine and Juliet; Justine) (Franco) 1969

I bastardi (I gatti; Sons of Satan; The Cats) (Tessari) (as Adam); Il dito nell’piaga (Salt in the Wound; The Dirty Two) (Ricci); La legge dei gangsters (Quintero) (Marcellini); Double Face (Das Gesicht im Dunkeln; A doppia faccia; Puzzle of horrors) (Hampton, i.e. Freda); Sono Sartana, il vostro bechino (I’ll Dig Your Grave) (Ascott, i.e. Carnimeo); Paroxismus (Black Angel; Venus in Furs) (Biliam and Franco) (as Ahmed); La Peau de Torpédo (Children of Mata Hari; Pill of Death) (Delamoney); E Dio disse a Caino . . . (And God Said to Cain) (Dawson, i.e. Margheriti)

1970

Wie dommt ein so reizendes Mädchen zu diesem Gewerbe? (Mir hat es immer Spass gemacht; How Did a Nice Girl Like You Get into This Business?) (Tremper); Per una barba piena di dollari (Nevada Kid; A Barrel Full of Dollars; Adios companeros) (Deem, i.e. Fidani); La belva (Costa); Prega il morte e ammazza il vivo (Warren, i.e. Vati); Giù le mani . . . carogna (Fidani); Appuntamento col disonore (Rendezvous with Dishonor; The Night of the Assassins) (Bolzoni); I lepardi di Churchill (Commando Attack) (Praudeax)

1971

El Conde Dracula (Count Dracula) (Franco); Nella stretta morsa del ragno (Dracula im Schloss des Schreckens; Web of the Spider; And Comes the Dawn . . . but Colored Red) (Dawson, i.e. Margheriti) (as Edwin Allan Poe; La bestia uccide a sangue freddo (Der Triebmördner; The Cold-blooded Beast; Slaughter Hotel; Asylum Erotica) (Di Leo); Lo chiamavano King . . . (Reynolds, i.e. Romitelli); Black Killer (Moore, i.e. Orroccolo); L’occhio del ragno (Eye of the Spider) (Bianchi-Montero); La vendetta e un piatto che si serve freddo (Vengeance Trail) (William Redford, i.e. Squitieri); La mano nascosta di Dio (Palli)

1972

Il venditore di morte (The Price of Death) (Thomas, i.e. Alberto); Doppia tuglia per Minnesota Stinky (Deem, i.e. Fidani); Il ritorno di Clini il solitario (Ti attende una corda . . . Ringo) (Bagram, i.e. Balcazar)

1973

Aguiro, der Zorn Göttes (Aguirre, the Wrath of God) (Hergoz) (title role); Il mio nome è Shanghai Joe (Mezzogiorno di fuoco par Lin-Hao; Cinque pistole di violenza; To Kill or to Die) (Caiano); La mano spietata della legge (The Bloody Hands of the Law) (Gariazzo); La morte sorride all’assassino (Sette strani cadaveri) (Massacesi); Imperativo categorigo: control il crimine con rabbia (Gariazzo); La mano che nutre la morte (Garrone)

1974

Le orme (Footprints) (Bazzone); Le amanti del mostro (Garrone); Who Stole the Shah’s Jewels? (Leoni)

1975

L’important c’est d’aimer (The Most Important Thing Is Love; The Main Thing Is to Love) (Zulawski) (as Karl); Lifespan (Whitelaw) (as Industrialist); Un genio, due comparì, un pollo (The Genius) (Damiani) (as Doc Foster); Das Netz (The Webs) (Purzer)

1976

Jack the Ripper (Der Dirmenmörder von London) (Franco); Madame Claude (Jaeckin)

1977

Nuit d’or (Maoti); Entebbe: Operation Thunderbolt (Golan); Mort d’un pourri (Lautner)

1978

La Chanson de Roland (Cassenti); Zoo zéro (Fleischer)

1979

Nosferatu—Phantom der Nacht (Nosferatu—The Vampire) (Hergoz) (as Count Dracula); Woyzeck (Hergoz) (title role); Haine (Traquenard) (Gauth)

1980

Schizoid (Murder by Mail) (Paulsen) (as Dr. Pieter Fales)

1981

Buddy Buddy (Wildor) (as Dr. Zuckerbrot)

1982

Fitzcarraldo (Hergoz) (as Brian Sweeney Fitzgerald) (title role); The Soldier (Codename: The Soldier) (Glickenhaus) (as Dracha); Venom (Haggard) (as Jacmel); Love and Money (Toback) (as Frederick Stockheinz); La Femme enfant (Billetdoux) (as Marcel); Fruits of Passion (Terayama)

(as Sir Stephen); Burden of Dreams (Blank—doc on making of Fitzcarraldo); Android (Lipstadt) (as Dr. Daniel)

1983

Beauty and the Beast (Vadim—for TV)

1984

The Little Drummer Girl (George Roy Hill) (as Kurtz); The Secret Diary of Sigmund Freud (Danford B. Greene) (as Dr. Max Bauer); Titan Find (Creature) (Malone) (as Hans Rudy Hofner); Hitchhiker (Hodges and Zetterling); Codename Wildgeese (Geheimcode Wildganse) (Dawson, i.e. Margheriti) (as Charlton)

1985

Kommando Leopard (Commando Leopard) (Dawson) (as Silveira); Creature (Malone) (as Hofner); El Caballero del dragon (The Knight of the Dragon; Star Knight) (Colomo) (as Boetius); Revenge of the Stolen Stars (Lommel) (as Duncan McBride)

1986

Crawlspace (Schmoeller) (as Dr. Karl Gunther)

1987

Timestalkers (Schultz—for TV) (as Dr. Joseph Cole); Cobra Verde (Herzog); Rough Justice (Costa)

1988

Nosferatu a Venezia: Il ritorno di Nosferatu (Caminito)

Film as Actor, Director, and Scriptwriter:

1989

Paganini (title role)

Publications:

By KINSKI: books—

Ich bin so wild nach deinem Erdbeermund, Munich, 1975.

By KINSKI: article—

Interview in Image et Son (Paris), July 1976.

On KINSKI: books—

On KINSKI: articles—

“Klaus Kinski,” in Film Dope (London), September 1984.
Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1996.
Slatter, W.J., “Inane Success, Insatiable Excess,” in Audience (Simi Valley), October/November 1996.

669
On KINSKI: film—

Mein liebster Fiend—Klaus Kinski, documentary, directed by Werner Herzog, 1999.

* * *

Klaus Kinski’s screen career began 25 years before his performance in Werner Herzog’s remarkable Aguirre, the Wrath of God. Yet, of the numerous directors with whom Kinski worked, only Herzog captured the full range and originality of the actor’s talents. In their films together, Kinski’s passion and power became the brush with which Herzog painted his vivid portraits; it was an inspired wedding of an actor’s style and a director’s vision.

The Polish-born Kinski was a renowned and often controversial stage actor in Germany as a young man, but his work in films consisted almost entirely of well-paid roles in second-rate European features. There were a few memorable exceptions to this pattern—he appears briefly in Doctor Zhivago as a passenger on the long train ride, and as a villain in Leone’s For a Few Dollars More—but not until 1973 and Aguirre did a film role reveal the true measure of Kinski’s menacing power and maniacal fervor. As a Spanish conquistador going slowly mad in the jungles of South America, Kinski is the personification of Herzog’s theme of the destructiveness of absolute power. Yet Kinski is also a strangely heroic figure, a man obsessed with his fantasies and, in his own mind, the instrument of an angry God. There is a romantic bravura to Kinski’s performance that is the antithesis of the naturalistic style of acting so prevalent in recent years, and its tone is exactly right for Herzog’s epic tale.

In Nosferatu—Phantom der Nacht, Herzog’s eerie, philosophical retelling of the classic vampire story, Kinski is again an obsessive, terrifying character. The richly atmospheric film pays homage to the great tradition of the German silent era, and Kinski is made up to resemble Max Schreck in Murnau’s 1922 Nosferatu. Despite ashen face, sunken eyes, and razor-sharp fangs, Kinski’s performance conveys the psychological torture inherent in the vampire legends, and it is this blend of oppressive horror and sexuality that sets the tone for Herzog’s film.

In Woyzeck Herzog again makes use of Kinski’s compelling intensity this time channeling it through a powerless character driven to an act of terrible violence. As the soldier whose sanity snaps under the crushing circumstances of his life—in a role that was perhaps frighteningly close to the actor’s own experience as a prisoner of war during World War II—Kinski reveals a vulnerability as raw and dangerous as an exposed nerve. His final explosion is an agonizing release from the pain and helplessness that has marked the character’s life.

Fitzcarraldo returns to the South American settings of Aguirre, and once more Kinski was cast (in place of the originally slated Jason Robards) as a man who becomes heroic through his willingness to sacrifice everything to achieve his dream. Yet the dream here is a benign and curiously joyful one, not the expression of a lust for power, but a desire to bring opera to a remote jungle town. Kinski’s portrayal of the man in pursuit of this mad fantasy has the now familiar gleam of obsessive zeal, but the threatening quality has gone, leaving in its place a character who is driven but also possessed of a childlike innocence. The vital role that dreams and impossible quests play in our lives has been a pervasive theme in Herzog’s work, and never has it been more eloquently articulated than by Kinski’s performance in Fitzcarraldo.

Kinski’s work with Herzog won him international recognition, as well as roles in films by other well-known directors, most notably James Toback’s Love and Money and George Roy Hill’s The Little Drummer Girl, in which he gives a memorable performance as Kurtz, the complex, charismatic Israeli spymaster. Kinski appeared in one final Herzog film, Cobra Verde, in 1987. He then made his directorial debut two years later with Paganini, which he also wrote and played the title role in. Critic David Thomson called the sexually explicit and intense screen biography of the violinist and composer “close to unwatchable.” It ironically became Kinski’s final film credit after he died two years later, ending a 43-year movie career.

Kinski will certainly be best remembered, however, for his roles in Herzog films; it was in these few films that Kinski enjoyed his finest moments on screen. In bringing Herzog’s very personal visions to life, Kinski achieved the highest expression of his own unique abilities.

—Janet E. Lorenz, updated by David E. Salamie

KINSKI, Nastassja

Films as Actress:

1974 Falsche Bewegung (The Wrong Move) (Wenders) (as Mignon)
1976 To the Devil a Daughter (Sykes) (as Catherine Beddows); Reifzeugnis (For Your Love Only) (Petersen) (as Sina Wolf)
1978 Così come sei (Stay as You Are) (Lattuada) (as Francesca); The Passion Flower Hotel (Leidenschaftliche Blauemchen; Boarding School) (Farwagi) (as Deborah Collins
1980 Tess (Polanski) (as Tess Durburyfield)
1982 One from the Heart (Coppola) (as Leila); Cat People (Schrader) (as Irena Gallier)
1983 Exposed (Toback) (as Elizabeth Carlson); La Lune dans le caniveau (The Moon in the Gutter) (Beineix) (as Loretta Channing)
1984 Unfaithfully Yours (Zeff) (as Daniella Eastman); The Hotel New Hampshire (Richardson) (as Susie the Bear); Paris,
Texas (Wenders) (as Jane); Maria’s Lovers (Konchalovsky) (as Maria Bosic)
1985 Harem (Joffe) (as Diane); Revolution (Hudson) (as Daisy McConahay); Frühlingssymphonie (Spring Symphony; Symphony of Love) (Schamoni) (as Clara Wieck)
1987 Maladie d’amour (Malady of Love) (Deray) (as Juliette); Intervista (Fellini)
1988 Magdalene (Stille nacht; Silent Night) (Teuber) (as Magdalene)
1989 Acque di primavera (Torrents of Spring) (Skolimowski) (as Maria Nikolaevna Polozov)
1990 Il sole anche di notte (Night Sun) (Tavianis) (as Cristina); Il Segreto (The Secret) (Pachard)
1991 L’Envers du decors: Portrait de Pierre Guffroy (Behind the Scenes: A Portrait of Pierre Guffroy) (Salis—doc) (as herself); The Insulted and the Injured; Dawn (Maselli)
1992 In Camera Mia (Martino); La Bionda (The Blonde) (Rubini) (as Christine)
1993 Faraway, So Close (In Weiter Ferne, So Nah!) (Wenders) (as Raphaela)
1994 Crackerjack (Mazzo—for TV) (as K. C.); Terminal Velocity (Sarafian) (as Chris/Krista Morrow)
1996 The Foolish Heart
1997 One Night Stand (Figgins) (as Karen); Father’s Day (Reitman) (as Collette Andrews); Bella Mafia (Greene—mini for TV) (as Sophia Luciano)
1998 Susan’s Plan (Landis) (as Susan); Playing by Heart (Carroll) (as Melanie); Savior (Antonijevic) (as Maria); Little Boy Blue (Tibaldi) (as Kate West); Your Friends & Neighbors (LaBute) (as Cheri)
1999 The Lost Son (Menges) (as Deborah Spitz); The Intruder (Bailey) (as Badge Muller)
2000 The Magic of Marciano (Barbieri) (as Katie); Red Letters (Battersby) (as Lydia Davis)

Publications

By KINSKI: articles—

Interview, in Cinema (West Germany), November 1979.
Interview with Andy Warhol, in Inter/View (New York), August 1980.
Interview with Jodie Foster, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1982.

Interview, in Photoplay (London), September 1983.

On Kinski: book—

On Kinski: articles—

Mahrenholz, S., “Konturen, an denen sich Phantasien entzünden,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), February 1996.

Sars, Summer 1996.

---

After very auspicious beginnings—having been discovered by Wim Wenders and elevated to stardom by Roman Polanski—Nastassja Kinski has so far had a less distinguished film career than a great many critics and early fans had predicted. Questions of talent aside, one likely reason why Kinski did not quickly become the next Ingrid Bergman or Audrey Hepburn (among the classic stars to whom she was compared) was her choice of projects after Tess, her breakthrough film. Her choices were admirably adventurous and varied, and often for important directors, but most of the resulting films were considered highly flawed or at least controversial, though Kinski’s performances were often cited as saving graces rather than part of the problem.

Following her debut as the deaf-mute Mignon figure in Wenders’s update of Wilhelm Meister, and various European films that established her as a charming, sexually provocative teenager, Tess introduced Kinski to a much wider audience. These viewers saw a face with remarkably large eyes and lips (the wide mouth more prominent in later films), and heard a unique voice, with slurred, almost warbled sounds, especially the vowels preceding “r”s (not to be explained simply by her adoption of a Dorset accent). Much of the film called for her to be silent, eyes downcast, suggesting an inwardsness, a soul perplexed and suffering. (Almost nothing is shown of the passionate side of Hardy’s Tess, as if a subtext of Polanski’s affair with the teenaged Kinski were allowed to suffice. Significantly, one never even overhears Tess’s quarrel with Alec before she murders him, as reported in the novel.)

Kinski’s first American role, a supporting one as the tightrope-walking vamp in One from the Heart, called for her to be little more than odd and exotic. A much more challenging role was the lead in Paul Schrader’s Cat People, calling for a more intense version of the persona from Tess: sweetly innocent, miserably victimized, yet latenly erotic and violent. As a woman who finds that she turns into a black panther when she has sex, Kinski has the appropriate haunted look, and of course the unusual facial features and voice that sounds American yet with some untraceable accent. She is convincingly shy and terror-stricken, less convincingly demonic in the weakly motivated swimming-pool scene. Today Cat People may seem repellently voyeuristic, without a trace of the ironic distance one finds in, say, Hitchcock, and tiresome in its “take” on the myth of the virgin woman becoming a deadly animal when sexually aroused, but it made Kinski more of a star.

Her next roles, in Exposed and The Moon in the Gutter, allowed her to play less passive women, though hardly more in control of their destinies; but both films received notoriously negative reviews for directorial pretentiousness. By comparison, her portrayal of Clara Wieck in Spring Symphony was notably conservative and innocuous, like the film itself. Unfaithfully Yours at least demonstrated that Kinski could handle light comedy in charming fashion (here with an Italian accent).

But in 1984 Kinski achieved two major performances. Maria’s Lovers, a curious fantasasia on motifs from Tess, features her as the virginal bride of a young World War II veteran who proves to be impotent (only with the woman he loves) and deserts her; later she is seduced and made pregnant by a traveling musician, but consequently reunited with her husband. Kinski, her hair pulled back to reveal a less glamorized version of her striking features, is allowed more vivacity and intense emotional expression by director Andrei Konchalovsky than Polanski had permitted Tess: most notable are a tender scene with the father-in-law (Robert Mitchum) and an outburst at her unfaithful though tormented husband (John Savage).

In Paris, Texas, 90 minutes go by before Kinski, as the object of the protagonist’s quest, is glimpsed on the screen, except in a home movie, and another ten minutes before she looks directly at the screen (through a peepshow window, the viewpoint of her estranged husband [Harry Dean Stanton]) and begins to speak, in a Texas accent that is not flawless but still acceptable, almost touching. Asked in Film Quarterly about Kinski’s public image as a “nymphet,” Wim Wenders, who conceived the part for her, said that she fitted into the film’s “subtext . . . which is a man insisting on a certain image of a woman. . . . I’ve followed Nastassja’s career . . . and some of [her films] were painful to me because I felt there was someone who was trapped. There’s a really great actress, and she’s totally exploited because of her image. . . . I felt she was waiting to show the other side of that image. And she did.” Wenders eventually takes the audience to the other side of the peepshow frame, to the woman’s point of view. Kinski is tremendously affecting in an exposed role that essentially consists of two scenes with Stanton, in the second of which she mostly just reacts to his long monologue, then delivers a four-minute monologue of her own.

Following these performances, Kinski appears to have focused primarily upon her private life, including children; her roles have been less frequent, and seldom remarkable. As the “other woman” in the Turgenev costume drama Torrents of Spring she is rather flat, like the rest of the cast. As the angel Raphaela in Faraway, So Close, Wenders’s sequel to Wings of Desire, she is, at least, quite perfect for the supporting role: hauntingly lovely of face and voice, ineffably sad. Playing conventional heroines in recent thrillers, she has little to do but look charming in the low-budget Crackerjack, while in Terminal Velocity, in the meeter role of an ex-KGB agent who becomes the sidekick of an American flyboy (Charlie Sheen), she is a sexier sort of Nancy Drew as she swoops along dark corridors. One can only wonder if this featured role in a standard Hollywood action film signif- ies a new phase in a unique, seemingly unfulfilled career.

—Joseph Milicia

KLINE, Kevin

Nationality: American. Born: St. Louis, Missouri, 24 October 1947. Education: Attended Indiana University (major in music), 1972; studied at Juilliard. Family: Married the actress Phoebe Cates, 1989, two children: Joseph and Greta. Career: 1972–76—founding member of the Acting Company, New York City; 1977—played role of Woody Reed in TV soap opera, Search for Tomorrow; 1982—film debut in Sophie’s Choice; 1987–88—artistic associate, Acting Company; 1990—acted and directed in production of Hamlet, later produced for television; 1993—artistic associate, New York Shakespeare Festival. Awards: Tony Award, for On the Twentieth Century, 1978; Tony Award, for The Pirates of Penzance, 1980; Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor, for A Fish Called Wanda, 1988. Agent: Jeffrey Hunter, William Morris Agency, 1325 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019–6026.

Films as Actor:

1982 Sophie’s Choice (Pakula) (as Nathan)
1983 The Pirates of Penzance (Leach) (as Pirate King); The Big Chill (Kasdan) (as Harold)
1985 Silverado (Kasdan) (as Paden)
1986 Violets Are Blue (Fisk) (as Henry Squires)
1987 Cry Freedom (Attenborough) (as Donald Woods)
1988 A Fish Called Wanda (Charles Crichton) (as Otto West)
1989 The January Man (O’Connor) (as Nick Starkey)
1990 I Love You to Death (Kasdan) (as Joey)
1991 Soapdish (Hoffman) (as Jeffrey Anderson); Grand Canyon (Kasdan) (as Mack)
1992 Chaplin (Attenborough) (as Douglas Fairbanks); Consenting Adults (Pakula) (as Richard Parker)
1993 George Balanchine’s The Nutcracker (Ardolino) (as narrator); Dave (Reitman) (as Dave Kovic/Bill Mitchell)
1994 Princess Caraboo (Austin) (as Frixos)
1995 French Kiss (Paris Match) (Kasdan) (as Luc Teyssier)
1996 Fierce Creatures (Cleese and Robert M. Young) (as Rod McKane/Vince McKane); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Trousdale and Kirk Wise—animation) (as voice of Phoebus); Looking for Richard (Pacino) (as himself)

1997 In & Out (Oz) (as Howard Brackett); The Ice Storm (Lee) (as Ben Hood); Fierce Creatures (Shepisi, Young) (as Vince McCain/Rod McCain)
1999 A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Hoffman) (as Nick Bottom); Wild Wild West (Sonnenfeld) (as Artemus Gordon/President Ulysses S. Grant)
2000 The Road to El Dorado (Bergeron et al.—animation) (as voice of Tulio)

Film as Director:

1990 Hamlet (for TV) (+ title role)

Publications

By KLINE: article—

“‘Kevin Kline from Stage to Screen,’” interview with James M. Welsh, in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), October 1986.

“‘You’ve Heard of Watergate—This Is Surrogate,’” telephone conversation with Sigourney Weaver, in Interview (New York), May 1993.

On KLINE: articles—

Clark, John, “‘Kevin Kline,’” in Premiere (New York), May 1990.

Hoffman, Jan, “‘A Pair of Aces,’” in Premiere (New York), May 1990.

Wetzseon, Ross, “‘Kevin Can Wait,’” in New York, 10 May 1993.

Kaplan, J., “‘Mr. Decline,’” in New York, 8 September 1997.

* * *

His first words on film were in an assumed Southern accent, announcing the technical virtuosity that would be the hallmark of his best work. Contravening the conventional wisdom that in screen acting less is more, Kline, trained in both classical and popular theater, is most arresting when allowed to import the large gestures favored, when not actually required by the stage. His screen persona thus tends to be that of a man who gets carried away with his enthusiasms, his ideas, most often himself. Roles requiring him to exhibit restraint or signal inner reflection can deaden his reflexes; Kline never seems so intelligent an actor as when he is playing stupid—witness his hilariously, self-enraptured, testosterone-driven dolt in A Fish Called Wanda. So exuberant is his performance that it literally takes a steamroller to halt the flow of his comic invention.

When no overt technical demand is made on the expressiveness of his voice or his body, Kline can be subdued, even dispirited. His debut in Sophie’s Choice was an exception, a film in which Kline’s uncanny impersonations, impulsive humor, and physical glamour were unpredictably fused in his portrayal of an irresistible and charismatic madness. His subsequent dramatic parts, however, have been less successful in exploiting his physical and emotional volatility to unexpected or fresh use. The irrepressible narcissism of his comic persona is not so much expunged as sublimated into a much more subtle, sometimes more objectional form of good guyism in such films as the environmentally and emotionally correct Violets Are Blue. Nor has Kline fared well in genres, such as the Western, that call upon him to simplify his emotions into archetypal attitudes. As Paden, the quiet and aimless cowboy out to change his luck in Silverado, Kline is meant to evoke the taciturn and secretly troubled masculinity of the classic Western hero (especially in the High Noonish final shoot-out), but at best manages to suggest a muted rather than heroically restrained psyche.
KLINE ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

Kevin Kline (left) and Tom Selleck in In & Out

His most frequent and somewhat uneven work has been with Lawrence Kasdan, for whom Kline epitomizes the white liberal male afflicted with all the pieties and perplexities such a species is heir to. Kline is Kasdan’s model for the aging radical whose midlife anomic manifests itself in the form of earnest soul-searching rather than sexual lunacy. In The Big Chill he is such a genial host to the friends of his radical youth that he even agrees to father a child for a woman whose biological clock is about to ring its final alarm. Eleven years later, he plays virtually the same decent white liberal befuddled rather than appalled by the state of the world in Grand Canyon, only in this film Kasdan offers a less admiring view of Kline’s sensitive husband, generous friend, and preternaturally patient “good father.” He gives Kline a superman dream of flight that hints at the moral giddiness underlying his quiet decencies.

The trouble with a morally unimpeachable Kline is that he is no match for his impeachable comic double who invariably proves not only to be more entertaining, but finally, a better ethical monitor. In the confession scene that opens I Love You to Death, Kline gives a hilarious rendering of a happy sinner’s uncontrite, but dutiful effort to recall the time, frequency, and number of his adulterous encounters with all the precision due to a ritual confession. In Soapdish he does a rollicking turn as a former soap star (as he once was) condemned to do dinner theater in Florida until his deceased character is recalled to life, only to find himself at the center of an equally absurdist Oedipal drama offstage.

But it is Dave that represents the quintessential Kline performance since in this film he gets to impersonate himself. Two halves of his screen persona confront each other in this dizzy tale of a presidential double taking on the role, then the power, and finally the wife of a comatose president: the white liberal who has lost the values that once defined and sustained him (for the first time Kline plays the philandering husband without a trace of exculpatory male sentimentalism) and the comic ego, reincarnated in the gentle form of a populist who appreciates the simple joys of life. It helps to have Sigourney Weaver assisting in the comic transfer of power and affection. Kline is less fortunate in French Kiss, in which Meg Ryan’s unrelievedly mannered performance almost overwhelms the subtle allure of Kline’s laraceous charmer. Imitating not only a French accent but the mumble that gives movie Frenchmen their cachet, Kline reconciles the Gallic shrug and American double-take to register a surprising array of emotions—from a bemused laissez-faire sexuality to a conniving larcenous charmer. Imitating not only a French accent but the mumble mannered performance almost overwhelms the subtle allure of Kline’s—Maria DiBattista

---

KORTNER, Fritz

Born: Fritz Nathan Kohn in Vienna, Austria, 12 May 1892. Education: Studied at the Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts, Vienna. Family: Married the actress Johanna Hofer, son: Peter Kortner. Career: Actor in Mannheim and Hamburg; 1911—joined Max Reinhardt’s theater, Berlin; achieved star status with his performance in Die Wandlung, 1919, and became a leading actor-director in German-language theater; 1915—film debut in Manya, Die Türkin; 1918—film directing debut with Gregor Marold, 1933—left Germany with rise of Nazis and found refuge in New York after stays in Vienna, Prague, and London; wrote two Broadway plays and worked as actor and screenwriter in Hollywood; returned to Germany after the war and regained his stage reputation. Awards: Deutscher Filmpreis for career, 1966. Died: Of leukemia in Munich, 25 July 1970.

Films as Actor:

1915 Die grosse Gefahr (Sauer); Im Banne der Vergangenheit (Piel); Manya, die Türkin (Piel); Police Nr. 1111 (Piel)
1916 Das zweite Leben
1917 Der Brief einer Toten (Friesler)
1918 Die andere Ich (Friesler) (as Professor); Frauenhure (Kundert) (as Jagdehilfe); Sonnwendhof (Leyde)
1919 Satanas (Murnau); Das Auge des Buddha (Monet) (as Indian servant); Ohne Zeugen (Baron und Kundert)
1920 Die Brüder Karamasoff (The Brothers Karamazov) (Buchowitzki and Froelich); Katharina die Grosse (Saville) (Gute); Weitbrand (Gad); Danton (All for a Woman) (Buchowitzki); Das Haus zum Mond (Martin); Der Schädel der Pharaonentochter (Tollen); Die Lieblingssfrau des Maharadscha (Mack); Die Nacht der Königin Isabeau (Wiene); Gerechtigkeit (Lux)
1921 Hintertreppe (Backstairs) (Jesner); Am roten Kliff (Henning); Aus dem Schwarzbuch eines Polizeikommissars (Hanus); Der Eisenbahnkönig (Illés); Die Verschwörung zu Genua (Leni); Landstrasse und Gross-stadt (Wilhelm)
1922 Peter der Grosse (Peter the Great) (Buchowitzki); Am Rande der Gross-stadt (Kobe); Der Graf von Essen (Felnry); Der Ruf des Schicksals (Guter); Die Finsternis und ihr Eigentum (Hartwig); Luise Millerin (Froelich); Sterbende Völker (Reinert)

Films as Director:

1918 Gregor Marold
1919 Else von Erlenhof
1931 Der brave Sünder (The Upright Sinner) (+ co-sc)
1932 So ein Mädel vergisst man nicht (+ co-sc)
1955 Die Stadt ist voller Geheimnisse (City of Secrets; Secrets of the City) (+ co-sc); Sarajevo (for TV)

Publications

By KORTNER: book—

---

Awards:

1923 Schatten (Warning Shadows) (Robison); Arme Sünderin (Gariazzo); Nora (Viertel)
1924 Armes kleines Mädchen (Kayser); Dr. Wislizenus (Kobe); Moderne Ehren (Otto)
1925 Orlacs Hände (The Hands of Orlac) (Wiene) (as Nera)
1926 Dürfen wir schweigen (Oswald)
1927 Beethoven (The Life of Beethoven) (Löwenstein) (title role); Maria Stuart (Fehler) (as Bothwell); Mata Hari (Mata Hari, the Red Dancer) (Fehler); Primanerliebe (Land); Alpentragödie (Land); Die Ausgestossenen (Gerger); Die Geliebte des Gouverneurs (Fehler) (+ co-sc); Mein Leben für das Deine (Morat); Revolutionshöchzeit (The Last Night) (Sandberg); Die Frau auf der Folter (A Scandal in Paris); Die Bühne der Pandora (Pandora’s Box) (Pabst) (as Dr. Schön); Frau Sorge (Land)
1929 Die Frau, nach der Mann sich sehnt (Three Loves) (Bernhardt); Atlantik (Dupont); Gifts (Dubson); Die Nacht des Schreckens (Righelle); Das Schiff der verlorenen Menschen (Tourneur); Die Frau im Taler (Trotz); Sonnambul (Trotz)
1930 Dreyfus (The Dreyfus Case) (Oswald) (title role); Menschen in Küfig (Love Storm) (Dupont); Der Andere (Wiene) (dual role); Die grosse Sehnsucht (Szekely)
1931 Der Mörder Dmitri Karamasoff (The Murderer Dimitri Karamazov) (Ozep) (title role)
1932 Danton (Behrendt) (title role)
1934 Chu Chin Chow (Forde) (as Abu Hassan); Evensong (Saville) (as Kober)
1935 Abdal the Damned (Grune) (title role); The Crouching Beast (Hanbury) (as Ahmed Bey)
1936 Midnight Menace (Bombs over London) (Hill) (as Peters)
1943 The Strange Death of Adolf Hitler (Hagan) (as Marbach, + sc)
1944 The Hitler Gang (Farrow) (as Otto Strasser)
1946 The Wife of Monte Cristo (Ulmer) (as Potemkin)
1947 The Brasher Doubloon (Brahm)
1948 Berlin Express (Tourneur); The Vicious Circle (The Woman in Brown) (Wildor)
1949 Der Ruf (The Last Illusion) (von Maky) (+ sc)
1950 Epilog (Käutner)
1952 Blaubart (Christian-Jacque) (as Haushofmeister); Die Stimme des Anderen (Engel) (+ co-sc)

Publications

By KORTNER: book—

On KORTNER: books—

On KORTNER: articles—

Film Dope (London), January 1985.

* * *

Fritz Kortner, like his contemporary Conrad Veidt and the slightly older Emil Jannings, was associated with Max Reinhardt’s Berlin theater in the years before and after World War I, and like them he became an important stage actor, combining a stage and a film career. His long life allowed him to continue after World War II as a leading, if often controversial, figure on the German-language stage.

His acting had a wider range than that of Werner Krauss, though like Krauss he was often cast in important parts in the expressionist films of the 1920s. He could be flamboyant (as in Warning Shadows), or more contained, as Lotte Eisner’s description of him in Backstairs indicates: “Everything is motivated: the slow reactions of a poor indecisive man scared of love, the hesitations of an outcast of fortune who, having won his happiness by dint of guile, stops wanting to believe in it. . . . This instinctively Expressionistic actor blends into the setting.” But he was also able to play such characters as Dr. Schön in Pandora’s Box, Beethoven, Dmitri Karamazov, Bothwell, and Dreyfus.

England failed to recognize his ability when he went into exile after Hitler’s taking power in Germany, and he acted in such minor films as Chu Chin Chow and Abdul the Damned; he had slightly better luck in the United States. After World War II he made a few films in Germany, but concentrated on stage work.

—George Walsh

KRAUSS, Werner

Nationality: Austrian. Born: Gestunhausen, Germany, 23 July 1884, became citizen of Austria. Family: Married Marie Bard (died 1944). Career: Stage actor, first in German provinces; 1914—film debut in Die Pagode; 1916—on Berlin stage under Max Reinhardt; 1933—appeared on London stage; in Nazi propaganda films, and named Actor of the State; continued acting on stage, and in a few films, after World War II; 1955—directed stage play The Caine Mutiny Court Martial. Died: In Vienna, 20 October 1959.

Films as Actor:

1914 Die Pagode (Fekete) (as Mr. Wu)
1915 Die vertauschte Braut

1916 Hoffmanns Erzählungen (Tales of Hoffman) (Oswald) (as Dapertutto); Nacht des Grauens (Robison); Zirkusblut (Oswald)
1917 Der Friedensreiter; Der Fremde; Die Rache der Toten (Oswald); Die Seeschlacht (Oswald); Wenn Frauen lieben und hassen (Speyer)
1918 Es werde Licht (Part III) (Oswald); Das Tagebuch einer Verlorenen (Oswald); Opium (Reinert); Stürme des Lebens (Oswald)
1919 Die Frau mit den Orchideen (Rippert); Rose Bernd (Halm); Die Prostituierte (Rippert); Totentanz (Rippert); *Christus; Fräulein Pffifkas; Das Mädchen und die Männer (Oswald)
1920 Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari) (Wiene) (title role); Die Brüder Karamasoff (The Brothers Karamazov) (Buchowetzki and Froelich) (as Dmitri); Der Bucklige und die Tänzerin (Maurnau); Johannes Goth (Gerhardt); Das lachende Grauen (Pick); Danton (All for a Woman) (Buchowetzki) (as Robespierre); Die Beichte einer Toten; Der Mann ohne Namen (The Man without a Name) (Jacoby)
1921 Christian Wahnzüge (Gad); Die Frau ohne Seele (Lasko); Grausige Nächte (Pick); Das Medium (Rosenfeld); Der Roman der Christine von Herre (Berger); Scherben (Shattered) (Pick); Sappho (Buchowetzki); Zirkus des Lebens (Guter); Die Beute der Erinnyen (Rippert); Der Tanz um Liebe und Glück (Zeyn)
1922 Der brennende Acker (Burning Soil) (Murnau); Josef und seine Brüder (Froelich); Lady Hamilton (Oswald); Lusie Millerin (Froelich); Die Nacht der Medici (Grune); Nathan der Weise (Noa); Othello (Buchowetzki) (as Iago); Tragikomödie (Wiene); Der Graf von Essex (Felnner); Die Marquise von Pompadour (Halm)
1923 Der Pappenmacher von Kiang-Ning (Wiene); I.N.R.I. (Crow thorns*)* (Wiene); Zwischen Abend und Morgen (Robison); Das alte Gesetz (This Ancient Law) (Dupont); Fridercius Rex (von Cserepy); Der Schatz (The Treasure) (Pabst); Das unbekannte Morgen (Korda); Adam und Eva (Porges); Altdorf der Student Prince (Behrendt); Fräulein Raffke (Eichberg); Der Kaufmann von Venedig (Felnner); Der Menschenfeind (Walther-Fein)
1924 Dekameron-Nächte (Decameron Nights) (Wilcox) (as Sultan); Ein Sommerachtstraum (A Midsummer Night’s Dream) (Neumann) (as Bottom); Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Waxworks) (Leni) (as Jack the Ripper)
1925 Eifersucht (Jealousy) (Grüne); Das Haus der Lüge (The Wildenste) (Pick); Die freudlose Gasse (Streets of Sorrow; Joyless Streets) (Pabst) (as butcher); Die Dame aus Berlin (von Kabdebo); Die Moral der Gasse (Speyer); Revelle, das grosse Wecken (Kaufmann); Der Trödler von Amsterdam (Janson)
1926 Tartüff (Tartuffe) (Murnau) (as Orgon); Geheimnisse einer Seele (Secrets of a Soul) (Pabst); Man spielt nicht mit der Liebe (Don’t Play with Love) (Pabst); Nana (Muffat); Der Student von Prag (The Student of Prague); Das Tagebuch einer Toten (Galeen) (as Devil); Kreuzzug des Weibes (Unwelcome Children) (M. Berger); Überflussige Menschen (Rasumny)
1927 Funkzauber (Oswald); Die Hose (A Royal Scandal; The Trousers) (Behrendt); Laster der Menschheit (Meinert);
Die Hölle der Jungfrauen (Dinesen); Da hält die Welt dem Atem an (Basch); Der fidele Bauer (Seitz); Unter Ausschluss der Öffentlichkeit (Conrad Wiene)

1928 Looping the Loop (Robison)
1929 Napoleon auf St. Helena (Pick)
1931 Yorck (Ucicky) (title role)
1932 Mensch ohne Namen (The Man without a Name) (Ucicky)
1935 Hundert Tage (Wenzler—German version of Campo di maggio)
1936 Burgtheater (Vienna Burgtheater) (Forst)
1939 Robert Koch (Steinhoff) (as Dr. Rudolf Virchow)
1940 Jud Süß (Harlan) (several roles)
1941 Annelie (Die Geschichte eines Lebens) (von Baky)
1942 Die Entlassung (Liebeneiner); Zwischen Himmel und Erde (Braun)
1943 Paracelsus (Pabst)
1950 Prämien auf den Tod (Jurgens); Der fallende Stern (Braun)
1955 Sohn ohne Heimat (Deppe)

Publications

By KRAUSS: books—

Schauspiel meines Lebens (autobiography), edited by H. Weigel, 1957.

On KRAUSS: book—

Kracauer, Siegfried, From Caligari to Hitler: A Psychological History of the German Film, Princeton, New Jersey, 1947.

On KRAUSS: article—

* * *

Perhaps the greatest actor of the German Expressionist era, Werner Krauss is best known today for his work as Dr. Caligari in Robert Wiene’s The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, as the obsessed Count Muffat in Jean Renoir’s version of Emile Zola’s Nana, and for his part in Veit Harlan’s antisemitic rendering of Jud Süß.

In The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari Krauss epitomizes the German Expressionist performance aesthetic which would dominate the next decade: an obvious external expression of interiority. Throughout the central part of the film, Krauss hobbles through nightmare sets, his crippled walk an expression of a crippled mind, his dark and menacing facial and body makeup of the rot within, his sparse and erratic white hair of his overall decrepitude. His posture, rounded inward to symbolize mystery and enclosure, refuses the spectator any sympathetic identification. At the film’s end, when Caligari is shown to be the head of an asylum and the film the rantings of an inmate, Krauss expressionistically softens all aspects of posture and characterization to appear the epitome of benevolence.

In the wake of Caligari, Krauss continued to play evil or obsessed characters. Notable roles include Iago in Buchowetzki’s Othello and Jack the Ripper in Leni’s Waxworks.

By 1926, Krauss was the leading German film actor of his time, having worked with F. W. Murnau, G. W. Pabst, Lupu Pick, E. A. Dupont, Carl Froelich, Richard Oswald, and Paul Leni. But as he admitted to Jean Renoir, his general physical character had become a cliché. He had invested every character with the bowed head, drooping shoulders, and studied walk of an individual burdened with the cares of the world. That posture had become his prop, and Renoir, then attracted to Expressionism, utilized it. In Nana Count Muffat falls prey to the demands of the exploitative Nana. Totally submissive to her demands, he ultimately disgraces himself by barking, sitting, rolling over, and playing dead like a dog. His utterly degraded character is reflected in his lumpish posture. That same year he appeared to much acclaim as the devil in Henrik Galeen’s version of The Student of Prague.

Unlike many of the major talents of his time, Krauss did not flee Germany upon the rise of Nazism. Instead, he starred in many of their cinematic vehicles. The most notorious was Jud Süß, a film demanded by the Nazi Minister of Propaganda, Joseph Goebbels. In the years following the war, all associated with this film were plagued with recriminations for their participation. After the fall of Hitler, Krauss appeared in only three more films before his death in 1959.

—Doug Tomlinson

KRISTOFFERSON, Kris

Films as Actor:

1971 The Last Movie (Chincherro) (Hopper) (+ ro as Whistler, mus)
1972 Cisco Pike (Norton) (as Cisco Pike) (+ mus)
1973 Blume in Love (Mazursky) (as Elmo Cole) (+ mus); Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid (Peckinpah) (as William H. “Billy the Kid” Bonney); The Gospel Road (Elfstrom) (+ ro as Vocalist, mus)
1974 Free to Be . . . You and Me (Davis, Steckier, Wolf) (+ro as Songer); Bring Me the Head of Alfredo Garcia (Traiganne
Kris Kristofferson (front row, right) with John Hurt (front row, left) in Heaven’s Gate

la cabeza de Alfredo Garcia (Peckinpah) (as Paco); Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore (Scorsese) (as David)

1976 The Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea (Carlino) (as Jim Cameron) (+ mus); A Star Is Born (Pierson) (as John Norman Howard); Vigilante Force (Armitage) (as Aaron Arnold)

1978 Semi-Tough (Ritchie) (as Shake Tiller); Convoy (Peckinpah) (as Rubber Duck)

1979 Freedom Road (Kadr—for TV) (as Abner Lait)

1980 Heaven’s Gate (Johnson County Wars) (Cimino) (as James Averill)

1981 Rollover (Pakula) (as Hubbell Smith)

1984 Flashpoint (Tannen) (as Logan); Songwriter (Rudolph) (as Blackie Buck) (+ mus); The Lost Honor of Kathlyn Beck (Act of Passion) (Langton—for TV) (as Ben Cole)

1985 Trouble in Mind (Rudolph) (as Hawk)

1986 The Last Days of Frank and Jesse James (Graham—for TV); Blood and Orchids (Thorpe) (as Curt Maddox); Stagecoach (Post) (as Ringo)

1987 Amerika (TV mini-series) (Wrye) (as Devin Milford)

1988 Big Top Pee-Wee (Kleiser) (as Mace Montana); The Tracker (Dead or Alive) (Guillermin—for TV) (as Noble Adams)

1989 Millennium (Anderson) (as Bill Smith); Welcome Home (Schaffner) (as Jake)

1990 Sandino (Littin) (as Tom Holte); Night of the Cyclone (Perfume of the Cyclone) (Irving) (as Stan); Pair of Aces (Lipstadt—for TV)

1991 Another Pair of Aces: Three of a Kind (Bixby) (as Rip)

1992 Original Intent (Marcarelli) (as Jack Saunders); No Place to Hide (Danus) (as Joe Garvey); Miracle in the Wilderness (Dobson—for TV) (as Jericho Adams); Christmas in Connecticut (Schwarzenegger—for TV) (as Jefferson)

1993 Paper Hearts (Cheatin’ Hearts) (McCall) (as Tom); Knights (Pyun) (as Gabriel); Trouble Shooters: Trapped Beneath the Earth (May—for TV) (as Stan Mather)

1994 Sodbusters (Levy—for TV) (as Destiny)

1995 Pharoah’s Army (Henson) (as Preacher); Inflammable (Werner—for TV); Brothers’ Destiny (Long Road Home, The Road Home) (Hamilton—for TV) (as Davis); Adventures of the Old West (Purvis—for TV); Big Dreams and Broken Hearts: The Dottie West Story (D’Elia—for TV) (as himself); Tad (Thompson—for TV) (as Abraham Lincoln)

1996 Blue Rodeo (Werner—for TV); Dolly Parton: Treasures (for TV); Lone Star (Sayles) (as Sheriff Charlie Wade)

1997 Fire Down Below (Alcalà) (as Orin Hanner Sr.); Message to Love: The Isle of Wight Festival (Lerner) (as himself)

1998 Dance with Me (Haines) (as John Burnett); Blade (Norrington) (as Abraham Whistler); A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries
1999 Netforce (Leiberman) (mini—for TV) (as Steve Day); Payback (Helgeland) (as Bronson); Limbo (Sayles) (as Smilin’ Jack); Molokai: the Story of Father Damien (Cox) (as Rudolph Meyer); The Joyriders (Battersby) (as Eddie)

2000 The Ballad of Ramblin’ Jack (Elliot) (as Himself); Perfect Murder, Perfect Town (Schiller) (mini—for TV) (as Lou Ritt)

2001 Eye See You (Gillespie) (as Doc)

Other Films:

1971 Clay Pigeon (Slate and Stern) (mus)

1972 Fat City (Huston) (mus)

Publications

On KRISTOFFERSON: books—

* * *

Active in the film industry for thirty years, Kris Kristofferson never seemed too bothered about movie stardom. Already a major singer-songwriter and recording artist, the anti-establishment author of ‘‘Help Me Make It through the Night’’ and ‘‘Me and Bobby Mcgee’’ adapted well to acting without developing either a dominant film presence or a discernable career plan. Ruggedly handsome, Kristofferson appeared relaxed and easygoing onscreen, agreeably masculine rather than aggressively macho, confident enough in himself to be believably sensitive and caring towards the likes of Ellen Burstyn and Barbra Streisand. During the mid 1970s, Kristofferson carved a niche as Hollywood’s premiere romantic co-star, yet the big hits were credited to his bigger-name leading ladies, leaving him with doubtful commercial standing as a solo act. Kristofferson’s ambivalence towards the movie business didn’t help, the actor abruptly quitting the wartime romance Hanover Street (1979), then announcing his retirement. Judging by Kristofferson’s subsequent career, many film executives took him at his word. That said, even the peak period of the 1970s was an uncertain time for Kristofferson, his first decade in movies topped and tailed by appear-

When the blazing sun is at its zenith, you can see the smoke rising from the sawmill or the smokestacks of the steel mill. It is a sight to behold, a testament to the power and energy that drives these industries. But it is not just a sight to behold; it is also a moment that speaks to the very core of what it means to be human. It is a moment that reminds us of our connection to the earth, and the way that we rely on it for our survival.

When the blazing sun is at its zenith, you can see the smoke rising from the sawmill or the smokestacks of the steel mill. It is a sight to behold, a testament to the power and energy that drives these industries. But it is not just a sight to behold; it is also a moment that speaks to the very core of what it means to be human. It is a moment that reminds us of our connection to the earth, and the way that we rely on it for our survival.

When the blazing sun is at its zenith, you can see the smoke rising from the sawmill or the smokestacks of the steel mill. It is a sight to behold, a testament to the power and energy that drives these industries. But it is not just a sight to behold; it is also a moment that speaks to the very core of what it means to be human. It is a moment that reminds us of our connection to the earth, and the way that we rely on it for our survival.

When the blazing sun is at its zenith, you can see the smoke rising from the sawmill or the smokestacks of the steel mill. It is a sight to behold, a testament to the power and energy that drives these industries. But it is not just a sight to behold; it is also a moment that speaks to the very core of what it means to be human. It is a moment that reminds us of our connection to the earth, and the way that we rely on it for our survival.

When the blazing sun is at its zenith, you can see the smoke rising from the sawmill or the smokestacks of the steel mill. It is a sight to behold, a testament to the power and energy that drives these industries. But it is not just a sight to behold; it is also a moment that speaks to the very core of what it means to be human. It is a moment that reminds us of our connection to the earth, and the way that we rely on it for our survival.
1990s output is undoubtedly his high-profile cameo role in John Sayle’s Lone Star. Appearing in extended flashbacks as the late, unlamented sheriff of 1950s Rio County, Texas, Kristofferson turns his usual screen image on its head, portraying an irredeemably vile man. With narrow eyes set in a heavy, lined face, the swaggering, arrogant Charley Wade offers soft-spoken menace and a cobra smile. Racist, corrupt, and homicidal, Wade recalls Cisco Pike’s lawman adversary Leo Holland, complete with short hair and clipped moustache, a neat full circle for Kristofferson. Fittingly, Wade starts and ends the film as bullet-blasted bone fragments. Was his going up worth the coming down?

—Daniel O’Brien

KUMAR, Dilip

Nationality: Indian. Born: Yusuf Khan, in Peshawar (now Pakistan), 1922. Family: Married the actress Saira Banu. Career: 1940—worked in a British army canteen, Bombay; 1944—film debut in Jwar Bhata; also producer until Ganga Jumna, 1961; appointed Sheriff of Bombay, 1980.

Films as Actor:

1944 Jwar Bhata (Amiya Chakravarty) (as Jagdish)
1945 Pratima
1946 Milan (Nauka Dubi) (Nitin Bose)
1947 Jugnu; Neel Kamal (Kidar Nath Sharma)
1948 Anokha Pyar; Ghar Ki Izzat (Daryani) (as Chanda); Mela; Nadiya Ke Paar; Shaheed (Kumar)
1949 Andaz (A Matter of Style; Beau Monde) (Mehboob Khan) (as Dilip); Shaam e Myna (B. Mitra) (as Manoj)
1950 Arzoo; Babul (Sunny) (as Ashok); Jogan (Kidar Nath Sharma) (as Vijay)
1951 Deedar (Vision) (Nitin Bose) (as Shamu); Hulchul; Tarana (S. S. K. Prasad) (as Shankar)
1952 Aan (Savage Princess; Pride) (Mehboob Khan) (as Jai Tilak); Daag (Amiya Chakravarty) (as Shankar); Sangdil
1953 Footpath (Saradhi) (as Noshu); Shikast
1954 Amar (Eternal) (Mehboob Khan) (title role)
1955 Azad (Free) (Naidu) (as Khan Saheb/title role); Devdas (Bimal Roy) (title role); Insaniyat (Humanity) (Vasan) (as Mangal); Udan Khatola (Sunny) (as Kashi)
1957 Naya Daur (B. R. Chopra) (as Shankar); Musafir (Traveller) (Mukherjee)
1958 Madhumati (Bimal Roy) (as Devendra); Yahudi (Bimal Roy) (as the Roman Prince Marcus)
1959 Paigham (Vasan) (as Ratanan)
1960 Kohinoor; Mughal-e-Azam (K. Asif) (as Prince Salim)
1961 Ganga Jumna (Nitin Bose) (as Ganga)
1964 Leader
1966 Dil Diya Dard Liya (A. R. Kardar) (as Shankar); Pari
1967 Ram Aur Shyam (Tapi Chanakya)
1968 Admi; Sangharsh (H. S. Rawail); Sadhu Aur Shaitan
1970 Sagina Mahato (Tapas Sinha—in Bengali); Gopi
1972 Anokha Milan; Dastaan
1974 Sagina; Phir Kabb Milogi
1976 Bairaaq
1980 Chandravaty (B. R. Chopra) (as Chanayaka)
1981 Krantigandi (Ramesh Sippy) (as Ashwini Kumar); Vidhata
1983 Mazdoor
1984 Duniya; Mashal
1986 Karma (Subhash Ghai) (as Rana Vishnu Pratap Singh); Dharam Adhikari
1989 Kanoon Apna Apna
1990 Izzatdar
1991 Saudagar (Subhash Ghai) (as Bir Singh “Biru”)

Publications

By KUMAR: articles—

On KUMAR: books—

On KUMAR: articles—

Film World (India), January 1975, January 1979, and June 1980.

Thomas, R., “‘Indian Cinema: Pleasures and Popularity,’” in Screen (London), May/August 1985.

Sathe, V. P., “‘The Three Aces,’” in Cinema in India (Bombay), vol. 4, no. 4, 1993.

* * *

There is a persistent notion of a division in the Hindu tradition between the renouncer and the man of the world. Writers have noticed such features in modern Indian models of masculinity and heroism, in fields ranging from the world of cricket to that of commercial film narratives. Devdas, a character who is forbidden his beloved for social reasons, and drinks his life away, is one of the key renouncer figures in modern Indian literature and cinema. When a second film version was made in 1955, it was inevitable that, of the contemporary crop of film stars, it would be Dilip Kumar who played the lead role. The Devis of 1955 is the Devdas for generations of Indian audiences. The tragic hero and the failed love became such staples of folklore that even today any variation on the said theme evokes a comparison with Dilip Kumar.

The renouncer failed in romance and withdrew from social life not because he was inadequate, but because of social prejudice. He could also simply be ill-fated. Kumar played a number of roles that essentially came from this character-type, though there were often quite complicated variations. He did of course play more positive roles, such as in the swashbuckling stunt films Aan (Pride) and Azad (Free), perhaps in a conscious move to diversify his screen presence. Even in such generic shifts, the legacy of his conventional “loser” image is discernible; in the costume action film Insaniyat (Humanity) his beloved marries another, and Kumar dies saving her child; and his outlaw peasant hero in Ganga Jumna first loses his wife and is then killed by his policeman brother for taking the law into his own hands.

There was evidently something glamorous in the renouncer hero’s obsession with an impossible romance. But the highlighting of social prejudice as a factor in the narrative of romantic failure could make the conception quite powerful, exposing the injustice of the social order, and the inhuman ways in which intimate marital and familial ties were cynically arranged for material gain. Examples of this are Kumar’s Deedar (Vision), and Pyaasa (The Thirsty One) for which it is said Guru Dutt initially wanted Kumar before casting himself in the lead role.

There are other, darker variations of the renouncer narrative. In the fascinatingly contrived Andaz (A Matter of Style) Dilip (Kumar) falls in love with Nina (Nargis) who, unknown to him, is already betrothed to Rajen (Raj Kapoor), absent while their friendship is developing. Nina is unaware that her friendly behavior has been misinterpreted by Kumar, and is shocked to hear his confession of love the day after she has married Rajen. Later, after a violent encounter with Rajen, Kumar becomes deranged and tries to force himself on Nina, who is compelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him. The bulk of the story is seen from Nina’s viewpoint, and there are definite indications that her feelings towards Kumar are pelled to kill him.

Perhaps most intriguing is Amar (Eternal). Kumar is a debonair lawyer, practicing in the countryside, is engaged to the sophisticated Madhubala, daughter of a local estate owner. His urbane poise is undone when he meets a lively young peasant woman, played by Nimmi. He displays vicious, uncontrollable feelings towards her which culminate in his shocking rape of the girl. He finally renounces his betrothal to Madhubala, and marries Nimmi. This renunciation destabilizes genres and star discourses. The story of urban sophistication and comedy is deconstructed by combining it with the tale of rural simplicity and innocence: the hero of the first genre becomes the villain of the second. Further, Kumar is paired with Nimmi, a secondary female star who, in earlier work, was always shown to desire the hero without his reciprocating her love (Deedar, Aan).

These kinds of sophisticated variations on Kumar’s star personality and his relationship to the renouncer archetype tended to give way before the altogether different type of genre that emerged in Hindi movies in the 1960s. Leader, for example, is a fascinatingly vulgar exercise in performance; its narrative, about the way Gandhian political values are threatened by corruption and violence, is merely a topical excuse to string together a series of boisterous romantic and comic routines. The aging Kumar was engaged in holding onto a youthful image by presenting himself as irresponsible and carefree and as leader of a group of teenage boys. Throughout his career and growth, Kumar is noted for his consummate skill in taking any role and bringing it to life, becoming an icon figure in the process. Contrived or otherwise, Kumar had an opportunity that many of the image-bound stars of Bombay never had. He always insisted and got a wide variety of roles, diverse plot structures, and complex climaxes that gave vent to his acting talents.

In the 1970s Kumar’s appeal waned, but he has recently re-emerged in a series of powerfully recessive performances. As an older character in Shakti (Power), for instance, he displays a relentless authoritarian face quite remote from the images of romantic loss and longing that defined his early career. In Saudagar, he takes on the legendary hero Raj Kumar, as they both get embroiled in the fights of two legendary friends who become archenemies. From the Bombay Talkies’ Jwar Bhata in 1944, Kumar has traversed many ups and downs to reach Izzatdar in 1990, an aging actor with a younger heartthrobGovinda starring in the lead role. Now Kumar holds his position as the veteran of Bollywood. All the young actors may not aspire to achieve his success but certainly do wish to acquire at least a portion of the thespian’s legendary talent.

In the 1990s, the 72-year-old actor has other interests that take up most of his time. Kumar has said, “as an actor who can get people to respect me, I must do more than act. I must take actions.” With that as his guiding line, he has been taking active part in mitigating social distresses. He threw open the gates of his huge house, which he had used to seclude himself from society, to house the riot victims of the Bombay religious strife in 1993. He traveled all over the United States to raise money for the Bosnian Muslims. The thespian now has the role of his lifetime, and like all the other complex characterizations he took on, he is doing full justice to this one too.

—Ravi Vasudevan, updated by Usha Venkatachallam

KYO, Machiko

Films as Actress:

1944 Tengu-daoshi (Inoue); Danjuro sandai (Three Generations of Danjuro) (Mizoguchi)
1949 Saigo ni warau otoko (Yasuda) (as dancer); Hanakurabe tanuki-goten (Kimura); Chika-gai no donken; Mitsu no shinju; Chijin no ai (Kimura) (as Naomi); Hebi-hime dochu (Kimura and Marune)
1950 Zoku Hebi-hime dochu (Kimura and Marune); Harukanari haha no kuni (Ito); Asakusa no hada (Kimura); Bibo no umi (Hisamatsu); Fukkatsu; Rushomon (In the Woods) (Kurosawa) (as Masago); Hi no tori (Tanaka); Itsuwareru seiso (Yoshimura) (as Kimicho)
Machiko Kyo

1951 Koi no Oranda-zaka (Suzuki); Jiyu-gakko (Yoshimura) (as Yuri); Joen no hatoba; Mesuina (Kimura); Genji monogatari (Tale of Genji) (Yoshimura) (as Awaji no kami); Bakuto ichidai (Kimura)

1952 Asakusa kurenai-dan; Nagasaki no uta wa wasureji; Taki-no Shiraito (Nobuchi) (title role); Bijō to tozoku (Kimura); Daibutsu kaigen (Kinugusa) (as Maya-no-uri); Bijō no tokudane

1953 Ugetsu monogatari (Ugetsu; Tales of a Pale and Mysterious Moon after the Rain) (Mizoguchi) (as Lady Wakasa); Kurohyo; Ani imoto (Older Brother, Younger Sister) (Kimura) (as Mon); Jigokumon (The Gate of Hell) (Kinugasa) (as Kesa)

1954 Aru onna (Toyoda) (as Yoko); Aizen katsura (Kimura) (as Katsue Takaishi); Shunkin monogatari (Ito) (as Okoto); Asakusa no yoru (Shima); Sen-hime (Kimura); Banzoku geisha (Shima); Hara no uzumaki

1955 Bara ikatabika (Kinugasa); Yokihi (Princess Yang Kwei-fei) (Mizoguchi) (title role); Tojuro no koi (Mori); Shin josei mondo (Shima)

1956 Shin Heike monogatari: Yoshinaka o meguru san-nin no onna (Kinugasa) (as Tomoe); Niji ikutabi; Akasen chitai (Street of Shame) (Mizoguchi) (as Mickie); Tsukigata Hanbeita (Kinugasa) (as Hagino); The Teahouse of the August Moon (Daniel Mann) (as Lotus Blossom)

1957 Itohan monogatari (Ito) (as Itohan); Stajio wa tenya wanya; Odoriko; Onna no hata; Jigokka-bana; Yoru no cho (Yoshimura); Ana (The Pit; The Hole) (Ichikawa)

1958 Yurakacho de aimasho (Shima); Kanashimi wa onna dakeni (Shindo) (as the niece); Haha; Chushingura (Watanabe) (as Rui); Osaka no onna (Kinugasa) (as Osen); Akasen no hi wa kiezu; Yoru no sugao; Musume no boken (Shima)

1959 Anata to watashi no ai-kotoba: Sayonara, konnichiwa (Goodbye, Hello) (Ichikawa); Sasameyuki (Shima); Onna to kaizoku (Ito); Yoru no togyo; Jirocho Fuji (Mori); Kagi (Odd Obsession) (Ichikawa) (as Ikuo Kenmochi); Ukigusa (Floating Weeds; The Duckweed Story; Drifting Weeds) (Ozu) (as Sumiko)

1960 Jokei (Yoshimura); Ruten no ooji; Bonchi (Ichikawa); San-nin no kaoyaku (Inoue); Ashi ni sawatta onna (Masumura); Kao; Oden jigoku (Kimura)

1961 Konki (Yoshimura); Nuregame Botan; Onna no kunsho (Yoshimura); Kodachi o tsukau onna (Samurai Daughter) (Ikehiro); Shaka (Buddha) (Misumi) (as Yashas Nandabala)

1962 Kurotokage (Black Lizard) (Inoue); Nakayoshi-ordo: Nippon ichi dayo; Shin no shikotei (The Great Wall) (Tanaka); Onna no issho (Masumura) (as Kei Nunobiki)

1963 Jokei kazoku; Dendai ichiki monogatari: Dotanuki

1964 Amai shiru (Sweet Sweat) (Toyoda)

1965 Tanin no kao (The Face of Another) (Teshigahara) (as the wife); Jinchohe (The Daphne) (Chiba) (as first daughter); Chiisai tosho (Yinugasa) (as Yayoi Yamamura)

1966 Senba-zuru (Thousand Cranes) (Manumura) (Chikako Kurimoto)

1970 Yabure kabure

1974 Kareinaru ichizoku (The Family) (Yamamoto)

1975 Kinkan-shoku

1976 Yobanai (Imai) (title role); Otoko wa tsuraiyo: Torajiro junjo-shishu (Tora’s Pure Love) (Yamada)

1985 Kesho (Make Up) (Ikehiro)

Publications

On KYO: articles—

* * *

Machiko Kyo was perhaps the first Japanese actress to be “groomed” as a star through the more typically Western attention to glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour. Drawing upon her background as a dancer, her sex appeal was emphasized by Daiei and her early director Masaichi Nagata, and her glamour.
Typecast because of her alluring appearance, she successfully extended her range in Kurosawa’s Rashomon, which brought her and the Japanese cinema international attention. Her explosive performance in the role of a temperamental woman who is both shockingly assertive and audaciously seductive startled the public and critics. Her next great success came in Yoshimura’s Itsuwareru seiso, a remake of Mizoguchi’s prewar masterpiece Gion no shimai. Kyo played with enthusiasm a geisha attempting to vanquish men who exploit women. Her reputation at the studio was gradually established through her work in a series of fine films for Yoshimura and Kimura.

For Mizoguchi, Kyo played the role of the ghost princess who bewitches a potter in Ugetsu monogatari. Employing the type of movement used in Noh drama, she successfully conveyed the chilling atmosphere typical of the ghost genre within the Noh repertoire, combining a horrifying effect with a mysterious eroticism. She also collaborated with Mizoguchi in the title role of Yokihi, and as a Westernized prostitute in his final film Akasen chitai; at one moment while simultaneously eating, smoking, chewing gum, and talking, she outrageously summarizes both her character’s tactile eroticism as well as her own considerable comic skills.

Kyo established an international reputation with these performances, as well as in Kinugasa’s Jigokumon, to which she contributed a visually stunning portrayal as a tragic aristocratic wife. Her first American film, The Teahouse of the August Moon, was also her first comedy, but her success in it inexplicably led to no other American films, and even for a short while seemed to reduce her popularity in Japan.

Her performances in Ozu’s Ukigusa and in Toyoda’s Amai shiru show her mature acting style, which combines her passion with a new contemplative quality. Her role in the latter film (which earned her many awards) is particularly sublime, a depiction of a woman at the bottom of society, managing to survive despite her suffering and victimization. She further expanded her range by undertaking complicated new roles. These include the wife in Teshigahara’s Tainin no kao, whose husband secretly undergoes plastic surgery to alter his appearance. She nevertheless recognizes him, and allows him to seduce her. Opposed to such characters is her portrayal of an extremely ambitious woman in Satsuo Yamamoto’s political entertainment film, Kareinaru ichizoku. Through her unforgettable work with many of Japan’s greatest directors, and since many of her films were distributed internationally, Kyo remains one of the most diverse and recognizable talents in the Japanese cinema.

—Kyoko Hirano, updated by Corey K. Creekmur
LADD, Alan

Films as Actor:

1932 Once in a Lifetime (Mack)
1933 Saturday’s Millions (Sedgwick)
1936 Pigskin Parade (The Harmony Parade) (Butler)
1937 The Last Train from Madrid (Hogan); All over Town (Horne); Hold ’em Navy (That Navy Spirit) (Neumann)
1938 The Goldwyn Follies (Marshall); Come on Leathernecks (Cruze); Freshman Year (McDonald)
1939 Rulers of the Sea (Lloyd); The Green Hornet (Beebe and Taylor—serial); Hitler, Beast of Berlin (Beasts of Berlin; Hell’s Devils; Goose Step) (Scott)
1940 Brother Rat and a Baby (Baby Be Good) (Enright); In Old Missouri (McDonald); The Light of Western Stars (Selander); Gangs of Chicago (Lubin); Those Were the Days (Good Old School Days) (Laird); Cross Country Romance (Woodruff); Wildcat Bus (Woodruff); Captain Caution (Wallace); The Howards of Virginia (The Tree of Liberty) (Lloyd); Meet the Missus (St. Clair); Her First Romance (Dmytryk); Blame It on Love (doc); Meat and Romance (doc)
1941 Petticoat Politics (Kenton); The Reluctant Dragon (Werker); I Look at You (short); The Black Cat (Rogell); Citizen Kane (Welles) (as reporter); Paper Bullets (Gangs Inc.) (Rosen); Great Guns (Banks); Cadet Girl (McCary); Unfinished Rainbows (doc)
1942 Joan of Paris (Stevenson); This Gun for Hire (Tuttle) (as Raven); The Glass Key (Heisler) (as Ed Beaumont); Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall) (as guest)
1943 Lucky Jordan (Tuttle) (title role); China (Farrow) (as Mr. Jones); Letters from a Friend (Shourds—doc)
1944 And Now Tomorrow (Pichel) (as Dr. Merek Vance); Skirmish on the Home Front (doc)
1945 Salty O’Rourke (Walsh) (title role); Hollywood Victory Caravan (Russell—doc); Duffy’s Tavern (Walker) (as guest)
1946 The Blue Dahlia (Marshall) (as Johnny Morrison); O.S.S. (Pichel) (as John Martin); Two Years before the Mast (Farrow) (as Charles Stewart)
1947 My Favorite Brunette (Nugent) (as guest); Calcutta (Farrow) (as Neale Gordon); Variety Girl (Marshall) (as guest); Wild Harvest (Garnett) (as Joe Madigan)
1948 Saigon (Fenton) (as Maj. Larry Briggs); Beyond Glory (Farrow) (as Rocky Gilman); Whispering Smith (Fenton) (as Luke Smith)
1949 The Great Gatsby (Nugent) (as Jay Gatsby); Chicago Deadline (Allen) (as Ed Adams); American Portrait (doc); Eyes of Hollywood (doc)
1950 Captain Carey U.S.A. (After Midnight) (Leisen) (as Webster Carey)
1951 Appointment with Danger (Allen) (as Al Goddard); Branded (Maté) (as Choya); The Road to Hope (doc)
1952 Red Mountain (Dieterle) (as Brett); The Iron Mistress (Douglas) (as Jim Bowie); The Sporting Oasis (short)
1953 Thunder in the East (Charles Vidor) (as Steve Gibbs); Shane (Stevens) (title role); The Desert Legion (Pevney) (as Paul Lartal); Botany Bay (Farrow) (as Hugh Tallant); Paratrooper (The Red Beret) (Young) (as Canada)
1954 Saskatchewan (O’Rourke of the Royal Mounted) (Walsh) (as O’Rourke); Hell below Zero (Robson) (as Duncan Craig); The Black Knight (Garnett) (as John); Drum Beat (Daves) (as Johnny MacKay)
1955 The McConnell Story (Tiger in the Sky) (Douglas) (as Mac McConnell)
1956 Hell on Frisco Bay (Tuttle) (as Steve Rollins); Santiago (The Gun Runner) (Douglas) (as Cash Adams); A Cry in the Night (Tuttle) (as narrator)
1957 The Big Land (Stampeded) (Douglas) (as Chad Morgan); Boy on a Dolphin (Negulesco) (as James Clader)
1958 The Deep Six (Maté) (as Alec Austen); The Proud Rebel (Curtiz) (as John Chandler); The Badlanders (Daves) (as Peter Van Hook)
1959 The Man in the Net (Curtiz) (as John Hamilton)
1960 Guns of the Timberland (Webb) (as Jim Hadley); All the Young Men (Bartlett) (as Kincaid); One Foot in Hell (Clark) (as Mitch Barrett)
1961 Orazi e Curiazi (Duel of Champions) (Baldi and Young) (as Horatio)
1962 Thirteen West Street (Leacock) (as Walt Sherill)
1963 The Carpenterbaggers (Dmytryk) (as Nevada Smith)
In the opening moments of This Gun for Hire, Alan Ladd checks his gun, feeds a kitten, slaps the maid, tosses a ball to a cute little girl, and cold-bloodedly shoots down two people whom he has been hired to rub out. With Veronica Lake’s guidance, he eventually does the Right Thing, but it was his clear-eyed amorality that audiences responded to; This Gun for Hire made Ladd a star overnight.

He was already, by that time, a veteran of a decade in films, but had never made much of an impact: he was a college student in Pigskin Parade, a sailor in Hold ’em Navy, one of the reporters at the end of Citizen Kane, and a cheerful animator explaining a storyboard to Robert Benchley in The Reluctant Dragon. After This Gun for Hire Ladd became more prolific and quite popular, but his range never extended appreciably. Stalwart and manly, he could also be dour; he seldom smiled without irony. Never a personable figure on the screen,

Publications

On LADD: books—

On LADD: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1985.

Stars (Mariembourg), Spring 1994.

* * *

Alan Ladd (left) with Brandon de Wilde in Shane
Ladd’s appeal was that of an icon: serene face, athletic body, piercing eyes, and an overall tough-guy demeanor that was precisely appropriate for the dark side of the 1940s.

His enigmatic, slightly mocking persona was used to diverse effect by his more perceptive directors—John Farrow, Tay Garnett, Raoul Walsh—and his frequent teamings with insolent twin-soul Veronica Lake provided his stolid imperturbability with a dash and resonance that did not always surface without her. Ladd and Lake were an inspired team; they were so alike in both countenance and manner that they often seem incestuous siblings rather than the conventional lovers that the script means for them to be. Ladd’s sullen calm could also take on a veneer of Old World charm which made him a natural and courtly swashbuckler in colorful, exciting entertainments: Desert Legion; The Iron Mistress (in which he played Jim Bowie), The Red Beret, Santiago, Saskatchewan.

Shane was Ladd’s last great part; his character looks back on a life of gunfire and bloodshed with a complex mixture of nostalgia and regret. Shane’s past was, in short, like Ladd’s filmic history. When the gunfighter rides away, we feel the loss of this cool and violent man who so wanted to be a hero, but who just didn’t have it in him.

—Frank Thompson

LADYNINA, Marina

Nationality: Russian. Born: Tyomino, Russia, 24 June 1908.

Films as Actress:

1935 Vrazhdiye tropy (Dangerous Paths) (Ivan Pravov and Olga Preobrazhenskaya)
1938 Bogataya nevesta (The Rich Bride) (Ivan Pyryev) (as Marinka)
1939 Traktoristy (Tractor-Driver) (Ivan Pyryev) (as Mara’ina Bazhan)
1940 Lyubimaya devushka (The Beloved) (Ivan Pyryev)
1941 Svinarka i pastukh (Swineherd and Shepherd) (Ivan Pyryev) (as Glisha Novikova)
1942 Sekretar raykoma (The Partisans)
1944 V shest chasov vechera posle voiny (Six P.M. After the War) (Ivan Pyryev) (as Varya Pankova)
1947 Skazaniye o zemle sibirskoi (Ballad of Siberia) (Natasha Malinina)
1949 Kubanskie kazaki (Cossacks of the Kuban) (Ivan Pyryev) (as Galina Ermolayevna Peresvetova)
1954 Ispytaniye vernosti (Trustworthiness Test) (K. Pyryev and Ivan Pyryev)

Publications

On LADYNINA: books—

On LADYNINA: films—

Ranga, Dana, director, East Side Story (documentary), 1997.

Marina Ladynina debuted in Vrazhdiye tropy (1935), directed by veterans Ivan Pravov and Olga Preobrazhenskaya. For the rest of her career in cinema, however, she worked exclusively with film director Ivan Pyryev, who, along with Grigoriy Aleksandrov, was the leading author of Soviet musical comedies, one of the few well-developed popular genres within the system of Stalinist film culture. The making of musical comedies was encouraged by a decree which Boris Shumiatki, administrative head of Soviet cinema at the time, issued in 1935 and in which cinema was recommended to focus on making ‘‘movies for the millions.’’ Ladynina’s career directly reflects this directive—she was an actress with whom millions of viewers could identify.

Unlike Aleksandrov’s leading lady, dazzling mega star Lyubov Orlova, Ladynina was a comedienne with a special talent for character parts. She was a short, fast-talking, funny, down-to-earth girl with intense blue eyes and a turned-up nose, and she usually appeared surrounded by an entourage of cheerful peasant girlfriends. While Orlova’s natural milieu was the world of elaborate stage performances involving lavish interiors and glamorous outfits, Ladynina’s world was inhabited by Stakhanovite shock workers, amateur wood carvers, and good-natured shepherds. Similarly, while Grigoriy Aleksandrov’s films were considered a more refined entertainment value, Pyryev’s films conveyed straightforward propaganda messages which make them look particularly implausible and contrived from today’s point of view. As a rule, Pyryev’s films featured working class protagonists—tractor drivers, farm workers—and were known for their hyperbolization of prosperity and the happiness of Soviet life at collective farms. Film historian Neya Zorkaya has noted that even though all these films were marketed as true to life, they completely neglected any realist criteria and promoted a myth of high achieving Kolkhoz mode, or production, at times when agriculture was undergoing a serious crisis.

Ladynina fully realized her onscreen identity—she was the simple-hearted, joyful, and hard-working Soviet peasant girl—after appearing in Bogataya nevesta (1938). Marinka, her heroine in the film, a young girl with two suitors, is not rich in the literal sense: her wealth comes from the government appreciation of her work achievements. After this film, a series of similar roles in similar films followed. Most of these musical comedies were scripted by Viktor Gusev, and Ladynina’s role in each one of them was inevitably a variation of the prototype tested in Bogataya nevesta—a hard working, cheerful, witty, and class conscious peasant girl. Her roles in musicals immediately preceding World War Two all fall under the tested recipe of socialist optimist entertainment. Even though consciously non-compliant with the socialist realist straitjacket, Pyryev was making yet another film of the same kind every year, and Ladynina got the chance to star in Traktoristy (1939), Lyubimaya devushka (1940), and Svinarka i pastukh (1941). For these films she was regularly paired with actor Nikolai Kryuchkov.

Leading Soviet composer Tikhon Khrennikov, who authored the music for two of Pyryev’s films, co-starred with Ladynina in both instances. While in Svinarka i pastukh (1941) Khrennikov only had a supporting role, later on he became her main partner for the romantic comedy V shest chasov vechera posle voiny (1944), one of... the few films made and released under the difficult war-time conditions, while most filmmaking activity was put on hold. Due to the combination of propaganda and entertainment in his work, Pyryev was one of the few directors who had the chance to make not just one but two films during the war; Ladynina also starred in his partisan war-time drama Sekretar raykoma (1942), written by Iosif Prut, in which she played a functionary of the Communist Party district committee engaged in resistance activities.

After the war Ladynina was cast in several more movies by Pyryev—in the musical drama Skazaniye o zemle sibirskoy (1947) and the musical comedy Kubanskie kazaki (1949). Kubanskie kazaki was believed to have been made with direct interference from Stalin, and is considered an extreme example of an idealized and exaggerated representation of reality. Ladynina’s last appearance was in the romantic drama Ispytaniye vernosti (1954).

For Kubanskie kazaki and Ispytaniye vernosti, Pyryev used musical scores by Isaak Dunayevsky, the prominent film composer who regularly worked with the other titan of the Soviet musical, Grigoriy Aleksandrov. Dunayevsky had also written the music for Pyryev’s early Bogataya nevesta (1938), released in the same year as Aleksandrov’s Volga-Volga. Thus, while Aleksandrov and Pyryev may represent two different branches in the tradition of the Stalinist musical, it is important to underscore that they branch out from Dunayevsky’s music.

In 1997 German director Dana Ranga made the documentary East Side Story, a cinematic investigation into the history of the Stalinist musical. The film features extensive commentary by historian Maya Turovskaya, who discusses the opportunism and social conformity of Pyryev’s cinematic work. In this documentary Marina Ladynina appears in a selection of clips from Traktoristy (1939), Svinarka i pastukh (1941), V shest chasov vechera posle voiny (1944), and Kubanskie kazaki (1949).

—Dina Iordanova

LAKE, Veronica

Films as Actress:

(as Constance Keane)

1939 The Wrong Room (Brock—short); Sorority House (That Girl from College) (Farrow); All Women Have Secrets (Neumann)
1940 Young as You Feel (St. Clair); Forty Little Mothers (Berkeley)
1941 I Wanted Wings (Leisen) (as Sally Vaughn); Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen); Sullivan’s Travels (Preston Sturges) (The Girl)
1942 This Gun for Hire (Tuttle) (as Ellen Graham); The Glass Key (Heisler) (as Janet Henry); I Married a Witch (Clair) (as Jennifer)
1943 Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall); So Proudly We Hail (Sandrich) (as Lt. Olivia D’Arcy)
1944 The Hour before the Dawn (Tuttle) (as Dora Bruckmann)
1945 Bring on the Girls (Lanfield) (as Teddy Collins); Out of This World (Walker) (as Dorothy Dudge); Daffy’s Tavern (Walker) (as guest); Hold That Blonde! (Marshall) (as Sally Martin)
1946 Miss Susie Slagle’s (Berry) (as Nan Rogers); The Blue Dahlia (Marshall) (as Joyce Harwood); Ramrod (De Toth) (as Connie Dickason)
1947 Variety Girl (Marshall) (as guest)
1948 Saigon (Fenton) (as Letty Stanton); Isn’t It Romantic? (McLeod) (as Candy); The Sainted Sisters (Russell) (as Letty Stanton)
1949 Slattery’s Hurricane (De Toth) (as Dolores)
1952 Stronghold (Sekeley) (as Mary Stevens)
1966 Footsteps in the Snow (Green)
1973 Flesh Feast (Time for Terror) (Grinter) (as Dr. Elaine Frederick, + co-pr)
Publications

By LAKE: book—

On LAKE: book—

On LAKE: article—

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1985.

* * *

Veronica Lake, the girl with the “peek-a-boo hairstyle,” is a consummate product of the Hollywood star machine. In the golden years of the studio system, stars were created overnight by media hype and studio-released “hot tips.” It was this system that transformed aspiring actress Constance Ockelman into glamour sensation Veronica Lake. Her image “sold” so well that, in the early years of the war, Lake herself was asked to appeal to women factory workers to clip their copycat tresses to avoid industrial accidents.

Veronica Lake emerged in 1938 when, following an unsuccessful screen test at MGM, her film clip reached the desk of a producer at Paramount. Paramount was then suffering a drought and the producers were looking for a new face. In 1941 they cast Lake in the war film I Wanted Wings. An eight-year contract with Paramount followed. Later that year, Preston Sturges noticed Lake and cast her opposite Joel McCrea in the classic social comedy Sullivan’s Travels. Her sultry, dry-humored vamp was the perfect complement to actors of McCrea’s type. It was this success that motivated the studio to pair Lake with Alan Ladd in what became billed as one of the romantic duos of the decade.

Many feel that Ladd and Lake created a model for the “toughs and vamps” breed of acting that was later to be perfected by Bogart and Bacall. Four major films highlight this most successful period of Lake’s career: This Gun for Hire, followed by The Glass Key, The Hour before Dawn, and Saigon. In 1948, when her contract expired, Lake left Hollywood. Interviews suggested that she felt she had outgrown her stereotypic vamp image. Yet, in spite of her frustration at being typecast, she did not escape the image in her one notable role of her post-Hollywood period, in an action picture called Stronghold, independently produced in Mexico, partly with her own money.

—Rob Winning

LANCASTER, Burt

Films as Actor:

1946 The Killers (Siodmak) (as the Swede)
1947 Desert Fury (Lewis Allen) (as Tom Hanson); Brute Force (Dassin) (as Joe Collins); Variety Girl (George Marshall) (as guest)
1948 I Walk Alone (Haskins) (as Frankie Madison); All My Sons (Reis) (as Chris Keller); Sorry, Wrong Number (Litvak) (as Henry Stevenson); Kiss the Blood off My Hands (Blood on My Hands) (Foster) (as Bill Saunders); Criss Cross (Siodmak) (as Steve Thompson)
1949 Rope of Sand (Dieterle) (as Mike Davis)
1950 The Flame and the Arrow (Jacques Tourneur) (as Dardo); Mister 880 (Goulding) (as Steve Buchanan)
1951 Jim Thorpe: All American (Man of Bronze) (Curtiz) (title role); Vengeance Valley (Thorpe) (as Owen Daybright); Ten Tall Men (Goldbeck) (as Sgt. Mike Kincaid)
1952 The Crimson Pirate (Siodmak) (as Capt. Vallo)
1953 Come Back, Little Sheba (Daniel Mann) (as Doc); The Key (Parker—doc); South Sea Woman (Lubin) (as Sgt. O’Hearn); From Here to Eternity (Zinnemann) (as Sgt. Warden); Three Sailors and a Girl (Del Ruth) (as guest)
1954 His Majesty O’Keefe (Haskins) (title role); Apache (Aldrich) (as Massai); Vera Cruz (Aldrich) (as Joe Erin)
1955 The Rose Tattoo (Daniel Mann) (as Alvaro Mangiacavallo)
1956 Trapeze (Reed) (as Mike Ribble); The Rainmaker (Anthony) (as Starkbuck); Playtime in Hollywood (short)
1957 Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (John Sturges) (as Wyatt Earp); The Sweet Smell of Success (Mackendrick) (as J. J. Hunsecker); The Heart of Show Business (Staub—doc) (as narrator)
1958 Run Silent, Run Deep (Wise) (as Lt. Jim Bledsoe); Separate Tables (Delbert Mann) (as John Malcolm)
1959 The Devil’s Disciple (Hamilton) (as Anthony Anderson)
1960  The Unforgiven (Huston) (as Ben Zachary); Elmer Gantry (Richard Brooks) (title role)
1961  The Young Savages (Frankenheimer) (as Hank Bell); Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer) (as Ernst Janning)
1962  Birdman of Alcatraz (Frankenheimer) (as Robert Stroud)
1963  A Child Is Waiting (Cassavetes) (as Dr. Matthew Clark); The List of Adrian Messenger (Huston) (as guest); Il gattopardo (The Leopard) (Visconti) (as Prince Don Fabrizio Salinas)
1964  Seven Days in May (Frankenheimer) (as Gen. James M. Scott)
1965  The Train (Frankenheimer) (as Labiche); The Hallelujah Trail (John Sturges) (as Col. Thadeus Gearhart); Handle With Care (doc) (as narrator); Operation Head Start (doc) (as narrator)
1966  The Professionals (Richard Brooks) (as Bill Dolworth)
1967  All about People (doc)
1968  The Scalp hunters (Pollack) (as Joe Bass); The Swimmer (Perry) (as Ned Merrill)
1969  Castle Keep (Pollack) (as Maj. Falconer); Jenny Is a Good Thing (Horvath—doc) (as narrator); The Gypsy Moths (Frankenheimer) (as Mike Rettig); In Name Only (Swackhamer—for TV)
1970  Airport (Seaton) (as Mel Bakersfield); King: A Filmed Record . . . Montgomery to Memphis (Mankiewicz and Lumet—doc) (as co-narrator)
1971  Lawman (Winner) (as Jerred Maddox); Valdez Is Coming (Sherin) (as Bob Valdez); H + 2 (Coombs—doc) (as narrator)
1972  Ullana’s Raid (Aldrich) (as McIntosh); Mose (Moses) (De Bosio—for TV) (title role)
1973  Scorpio (Winner) (as Cross); Graduation (Stanfield—doc) (as narrator); Executive Action (Miller) (as Farrington)
1974  Gruppo di famiglia in un interno (Conversation Piece) (Visconti) (as the Professor); James Wong Howe (Quo—doc) (as narrator)
1975  A Life in Your Hands (doc) (as narrator)
1976  Buffalo Bill and the Indians (Altman) (as Ned Buntline); 1900 (Novecento) (Bertolucci) (as Alfredo Berlinghieri); Victory at Entebbe (Chomsky—for TV) (as Defense Minister Peres)
1977  The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos) (as MacKenzie); The Island of Dr. Moreau (Taylor) (title role); On the Edge of Reality (doc); Twilight’s Last Gleaming (Aldrich) (as Lawrence Dell)
1978 Go Tell the Spartans (Post) (as Major Asa Barker)
1979 Zulu Dawn (Hickox) (as Col. Durnford); Arthur Miller on Home Ground (Rasky—for doc); Cattle Annie and Little Britches (Johnson) (as Bill Doolin)
1981 La Pelle (The Skin) (Cavani) (as Gen. Mark Cork); Atlantic City (Malle) (as Lou)
1983 The Osterman Weekend (Peckinpah) (as Maxwell Darnforth); Local Hero (Forsyth) (as Happer); The Making of a “Local Hero” (With a Little Help from His Friends) (Turner—for doc)
1985 Scandal Sheet (Rich—for TV) (as Harold Fallen); Little Treasure (Sharp) (as Teschemacher)
1986 Tough Guys (Kanew) (as Harry Doyle)
1987 Il giorno prima (Montaldo); Jeweller’s Shop (Anderson); The Legacy of the Hollywood Blacklist (Chailin—for TV) (as narrator); Control (Montaldo—for TV) (as Herbert Monroe)
1988 Rocket Gibraltar (Petrie) (as Levi Rockwell)
1989 Field of Dreams (Robinson) (as Dr. “Moonlight” Graham)
1990 Voyage of Terror: The Achilles Lauro Affair (Negrin—for TV) (as Leon Klinghoffer); Phantom of the Opera (Richardson—for TV) (as Gerard Carrier)
1991 Separate but Equal (Stevens, Jr.—for TV) (as John W. Davis)

Films as Director:

1955 The Kentuckian (+ ro as Big Eli)
1974 The Midnight Man (co-d, + co-pr, co-sc, ro as Jim Slade)

Publications

By LANCASTER: article—

On LANCASTER: books—

On LANCASTER: articles—

Buford, Kate, “Lancaster: Dance with the Leopard,” in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1993.
Lane, Anthony, in New Yorker, 14 November 1994.

* * *

Burt Lancaster started his life by running off to the circus, leaving New York University where he had been a basketball star, and becoming an acrobat with partner Nick Cravat, who would later appear alongside Lancaster in many films, such as Trapeze, the actor’s sober tribute to the daredevil life of the aerial artist he once had been. Lancaster’s circus experience supplied him with certain qualities that were advantageous to a movie actor: a powerful physique and complete physical control. Nature supplied him with other features that contributed to his star quality: rugged good looks and, especially, the keyboard smile that would become his trademark.

His first screen roles, obtained for him by agent Harold Hecht, usually cast Lancaster as a brooding ex-convict, a taciturn villain, or a tense goon—most notably in Ernest Hemingway’s The Killers, Lancaster’s screen debut, where he played a crooked prizefighter nicknamed the Swede who is marked for death. It was only a few years after this that Lancaster followed the groundbreaking lead of actor James Stewart and went freelance, starting his own film production company in partnership with Hecht and James Hill. Hecht, Hill, and Lancaster’s first picture was the well-received Apache, directed by Robert Aldrich. Lancaster starred as Massai, a warrior who refuses to surrender to the white man’s ways after the capture of Geronimo, and is marked for extinction. Over Lancaster and Aldrich’s objections, the film’s grim conclusion was compromised in favor of a happier one for box-office reasons. The same star-director team followed Apache later that year with the acerbic Western adventure, Vera Cruz, a smash hit. Several decades later, Aldrich and Lancaster teamed again for Ulzana’s Raid, a potent saga of the Indian Wars that also mirrored the then-current Vietnam conflict; it concluded on the bleak, more realistic note denied them earlier on Apache.

Lancaster has projected earnestness as the truth-seeking son of Edward G. Robinson in All My Sons, lovableness as the truck driver opposite Anna Magnani in The Rose Tattoo, a hilarious parody of—and homage to—the films of Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. that Lancaster had enjoyed as a youth. Lancaster seized every opportunity to take his shirt off, swing on ropes from ship to ship, and smile from ear to ear. He brought the same qualities to his role as the grinning mischief-maker. This character first appeared in The Flame and the Arrow, which was followed by the delightful adventure comedy The Crimson Pirate, a hilarious parody of—and homage to—the films of Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. that Lancaster had enjoyed as a youth. Lancaster seized every opportunity to take his shirt off, swing on ropes from ship to ship, and smile from ear to ear. He brought the same qualities to his role as The Rainmaker, one of the most ingratiating conmen in the history of the movies—and then combined them with his unique brand of bravado, energy, and physicality to create his Oscar-winning role as Elmer Gantry in which he was the embodiment of Sinclair Lewis’s famous charlatan evangelist, orator, businessman, hustler, and lover.

A former president of the American Civil Liberties Union, Lancaster espoused liberal causes most of his life. Perhaps to understand himself—and illuminate them for others—he liked playing characters diametrically opposed to his own political beliefs. Examples include John Frankenheimer’s Seven Days in May, as the chairman of the Joint Chiefs who tries to orchestrate a military coup d’état, and Robert Aldrich’s potent political thriller Twilight’s Last Gleaming, where he played the messianic General Dell, who commandeers a nuclear silo and threatens to launch a strike if the Pentagon refuses to own up to the real motives behind the Vietnam War. The latter role and film remained among his favorites.

In another favorite role, he was again the embodiment of a character taken from a famous novel, although of a totally different nature from Elmer Gantry. Guiseppe Di Lampedusa’s physical description of the Sicilian prince in his novel The Leopard fits Lancaster to a tee, and director Luchino Visconti saw to it that Lancaster got the part in the Italian-made film version of the novel. Though not of the Method school, Lancaster always carefully prepared for and immersed himself in his roles. In fact, he reportedly knew more about Sicilian aristocracy, customs, traditions, and history than anyone else connected with the film except Visconti and Di Lampedusa. His authoritative demeanor, melancholic expression, and meditative mien contribute to one of the most believable historical figures in modern cinema. He starred again for Visconti as a retired, reclusive professor besieged by modernity in Conversation Piece. Also noteworthy is one of Lancaster’s last screen appearances in Atlantic City where he plays an aging two-bit crook still hoping for his big chance, a performance that earned him another Oscar nomination.

Lancaster’s career remains unmatched for his persistent refusal to allow Hollywood to typecast him strictly as a he-man. Because of his deep concern for the content of his films and eagerness to work with directors he considered important, he was willing to undertake virtually any kind of part.

—Elaine Mancini, updated by John McCarty

---

LANCHESTER, Elsa

Nationality: American. Born: Elsa Sullivan Lanchester (or Elizabeth Sullivan) in Lewisham, London, 28 October 1902; became U.S. citizen, 1950. Education: Attended Isadora Duncan’s Bellevue School, Paris, 1912, and assistant on lecture tours; Margaret Morris’s school, Chelsea, London. Family: Married the actor Charles Laughton, 1929 (died 1962). Career: 1918—taught dancing at Margaret Morris’s school on the Isle of Wight; 1920—stage debut in a music hall act; founded children’s theater, Soho; 1922—West End debut in Thirty Minutes in a Street; 1924—opened the London nightclub The Cave of Harmony; film debut in the amateur film The Scarlet Woman; other stage and film work in the 1920s, often with Laughton; 1930—in stage play Payment Deferred in London, and in 1931 in New York; 1932—short contract with MGM; 1933–34—acted at the Old Vic with Laughton; 1939—settled permanently in the United States; active in revue sketches from 1941, touring nightclubs with Ray Henderson, and in her own one-woman show Elsa Lanchester—Herself, 1951–61; in TV series The John Forsythe Show, 1965–66.

Films as Actress:

1927 One of the Best (Hunter) (as Kitty)
1928 The Constant Nymph (Brunel) (as lady); Bluebottles (Montague—short); The Tonic (Montague—short); Daydreams (Montague—short)
1929 Mr. Smith Wakes Up (Hill—short)
1930 Comets (Geneen) (as herself)
1931 The Love Habit (Lachman); The Stronger Sex (Gundrey); Potiphar’s Wife (Elvey) (as Mathilde); The Officer’s Mess (Haynes) (as Cora Melville)
1932 The Private Life of Henry VIII (Korda) (as Anne of Cleves)
1934 David Copperfield (Cukor) (as Clickett)
1935 Naughti Marietta (Van Dyke); The Bride of Frankenstein (Whale) (as Mary Shelley/The Bride)
1936 The Ghost Goes West (Clair) (as dinner guest); Rembrandt (Korda) (as Hendrickie Stoffels); Miss Bracebridge Does Her Duty (Garmes—short)
1938 Vessel of Wrath (The Beachcomber) (Pommer) (as Martha Jones)
1941 Ladies in Retirement (Charles Vidor) (as Emily Creed)
1942 Son of Fury (Cromwell) (as prostitute); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier)
1943 Forever and a Day (Clair and others) (as waitress); Thumbs Up (Sanley) (as Emmy Finch); Lassie Come Home (Wilcox)
1944 Passport to Destiny (McCary) (as charwoman)
1946 The Spiral Staircase (Siodmak) (as Mrs. Oakes); The Razor’s Edge (Goulding) (as secretary)
1947 Northwest Outpost (Dwan) (as chaperone); The Bishop’s Wife (Koster) (as maid)
1948 The Big Clock (Farrow) (as artist)
1949 The Secret Garden (Wilcox) (as maid); Come to the Stable (Koster) (as artist); The Inspector General (Koster) (as mayor’s wife)
1950 Buccaneer’s Girl (De Cordova) (as madam); Mystery Street (Sturges) (as landlady); The Pretty Girl (Levin) (as spinster); Frenchie (King) (as Duenna)
1952 Dreamboat (Binyon) (as school president); Les Misérables (Milestone) (as Madame Magloire); Androcles and the Lion (Erskine) (as Megaera)
1953 Girls of Pleasure Island (Herbert, Gunzer) (as housekeeper)
1954 Hell’s Half Acre (Auer) (as Lida O’Reilly); Three Ring Circus (Pevney) (as bearded lady)
1955 The Glass Slipper (Walkers) (as wicked stepmother)
1957 Witness for the Prosecution (Wilder) (as nurse)
1958 Bell, Book, and Candle (Quine) (as matchmaker witch)
1964 Honeymoon Hotel (Levin) (as chambermaid); Mary Poppins (Stevenson) (as nanny); Pajama Party (Weis) (as housekeeper)
1965 That Darn Cat (Stevenson) (as nosy neighbor)
1967 Easy Come, Easy Go (Rich) (as yoga teacher)
1968 Blackbeard’s Ghost (Stevenson)
1969 Rascal (Tokar) (as housekeeper); Me Natalie (Coe) (as landlady)
1971 Willard (Mann)
1973 Terror in the Wax Museum (Fenady)
1974 Arnold (Fenady)
1976 Murder by Death (Moore) (as Dame Jessie Marbles)
1980 Die Laughing (Werner) (as Sophie)

Publications

By LANCHESTER: books—

Elsa Lanchester Herself, New York, 1983.

By LANCHESTER: article—

Interview, in Radio Times (London), 9 July 1983.

On LANCHESTER: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1985.

*   *   *

Elsa Lanchester, the daughter of two prominent socialists, had always been a free spirit, studying with Isadora Duncan at the age of 11, teaching dance and directing a children’s theater while still in her teens, then starting a London theatrical club called The Cave of Harmony. By the time she met Charles Laughton, her future husband, in 1927, she had tired of her bohemian life and was attracted to his “middle-class respectability.” She and Laughton appeared together in several plays (to favorable reviews), but as Laughton’s film career took off, her career began to suffer.

There were probably two reasons for this. First, she was not beautiful; though perkily attractive, she was small, with frizzy red hair and an oddly blunted nose. Not considering her leading-lady material, Hollywood might have forgotten her altogether had it not been for her husband, who in turn represented her second problem. According to Lanchester, producers resented the implied pressure of “if Charles works, Elsa must be used, too,” and she began to lose ground professionally. Her bits as maids, prudes, and assorted eccentrics seemed a far cry from her London theatrical successes, including her role as the last Peter Pan to be personally approved by James Barrie. Sometimes producers would even fabricate Lanchester vehicles to lure the Laughtons, “changing” their plans once the two were hooked. If she did get into a Laughton picture, she felt she was “acting with a pistol at my head” and that she had to be good.

Luckily, she almost always was, whether or not she appeared with Laughton. Given the prejudice against her looks, it is ironic that she is probably best known in this country for her role as the Bride of Frankenstein (in the film of the same name). Wrapped in yards of bandage, a wire cage with hair pieces on her head and three to four hours’ worth of makeup on her face, she hissed in imitation of swans she had heard as a child in London (some of her hisses and screams were run backward on the soundtrack). Yet she was pleased to be in the film because, as the sweet-as-sugar Mary Shelley, she was allowed to show the range of her acting.

She was able to demonstrate that range under less grueling circumstances, registering most effectively in The Beachcomber (she and Laughton played the leads in this film produced by his Mayflower production company), The Private Life of Henry VIII (as Anne of Cleves, she gave the best performance of Laughton’s wives), and Witness for the Prosecution (both she and Laughton winning Oscar nominations). She also contributed delightful cameos in a number of other pictures, notably Bell, Book, and Candle (as an addled witch), The Big Clock (as an eccentric artist), Honeymoon Hotel (as yet another maid), and The Razor’s Edge (as a social secretary).

To supplement these rather meager and intermittent opportunities, Lanchester ultimately returned to the cabaret of her youth. In the 1940s she joined the Turnabout Theatre, performing cabaret songs, and in the 1960s, she took an elaborate, one-woman show (Elsa Lanchester—Herself) on the road, to rave reviews. The free spirit of Elsa Lanchester appealed to live audiences denied the opportunity to experience it in films by Hollywood’s commercial cowardice.

—Catherine Henry

LANDAU, Martin

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
<th>Role</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Stagecoach to Dancer’s Rock (Bellamy)</td>
<td>John (Bellamy)</td>
<td>Dade Coleman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Cleopatra (Joseph L. Mankiewicz)</td>
<td>Alexander (Rufius)</td>
<td>Mankiewicz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens)</td>
<td>Ezra (Caiaphas)</td>
<td>Stevens</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Nevada Smith (Hathaway)</td>
<td>Mike (Jesse Cox)</td>
<td>Hathaway</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>They Call Me Mr. Tibbs! (Douglas)</td>
<td>Jerome (Logan Sharpe)</td>
<td>Douglas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>A Town Called Hell (Parrish)</td>
<td>Sharif (Colonel)</td>
<td>Perrin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Black Gunn (Hartford-Davis)</td>
<td>Genie (Capelli)</td>
<td>Hollywood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Savage (Spielberg—for TV)</td>
<td>Paul (Paul Savage)</td>
<td>Spielberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Destination Moonbase Alpha (Tom Clegg)</td>
<td>Captain John Koenig</td>
<td>Spielberg</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Martin Landau in The Adventures of Pinocchio

Actor, Funniest Supporting Actor in a Motion Picture American Comedy Award, Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role in a Motion Picture Golden Globe, for Ed Wood, 1994; San Diego World Film Festival Lifetime Achievement Award, 1998. Address: 7455 Palo Vista Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90046, U.S.A.
LANDAU

1976 Tony Saitta (Tough Tony; Strange Shadows in an Empty Room; Blazing Magnums) (Herbert) (as Dr. George Tracer)
1979 Meteor (Neame) (as General Barry Adlon); The Death of Ocean View Park (Swackhammer—for TV) (as Tom Flood)
1980 The Last Word (Boulting) (as Captain Garrity); Without Warning (It Came without Warning) (Greydon Clark) (as Fred Dobbs); The Return (The Alien’s Return) (Greydon Clark) (as Marshal)
1981 The Harlem Globetrotters on Gilligan’s Island (Baldwin—for TV) (as J. J. Pierson)
1982 Alone in the Dark (Sholder) (as Byron “Preacher” Sutcliff); The Fall of the House of Usher (Conway—for TV) (as Roderick Usher)
1983 The Being (Easter Sunday) (Kong) (as Garson Jones)
1984 Access Code (Sobel)
1986 Kung Fu: The Movie (Richard Lang—for TV) (as John Martin Perkins III)
1987 Cyclone (Fred Olen Ray) (as Bosarian); Sweet Revenge (Sobel) (as Cicero); Empire State (Peck) (as Chuck); Run If You Can (Virginia Lively Stone); Delta Fever (William Webb) (as Bud); Death Blow (Nussbaum); The Return of the Six-Million-Dollar Man and the Bionic Woman (Ray Austin—for TV) (as Lyle Stemming)
1988 Tucker: The Man and His Dream (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Abe Karatz)
1989 Trust Me (Houston); Crimes and Misdemeanors (Woody Allen) (as Judah Rosenthal); Paint It Black (Hunter) (as Daniel Lambert)
1990 Real Bullets (Lindsay); Firehead (Yuval) (as Admiral Pendleton); By Dawn’s Early Light (Sholder—for TV) (as the President); Max and Helen (Saville—for TV) (as Simon Wiesenthal)
1992 Tipperary; The Color of Evening; Mistress (Primus) (as Jack Roth); Legacy of Lies (May—for TV); Something to Live For: The Alison Gertz Story (Fatal Love) (McLaughlin—for TV) (as Jerry Gertz)
1993 Eye of the Stranger (Heavener) (as Mayor Howard Baines); Sliver (Noyce) (as Alex Parsons); No Place to Hide (Danus) (as Frank McCay); 12:01 (Sholder—for TV) (as Dr. Thadius Moxley)
1994 Intersection (Rydell) (as Neal); Ed Wood (Burton) (as Bela Lugosi); Time Is Money (Paolo Barzman) (as Mac)
1995 Joseph (Roger Young—for TV) (as Jacob)
1996 City Hall (Harold Becker) (as Judge Walter Stern); The Adventures of Pinocchio (gepetto)
1997 Legend of the Spirit Dog (Goldman, Spence) (as voice of Storyteller); B* A* P*S (B.A.P.S) (Townsend) (as Mr. Blakemore); The Long Way Home (Harris) (as voice)
1998 Winter (Nagle); Rounders (Dahl) (as Abe Petrovsky); Steve McQueen: The King of Cool (Katz) (doc) (as himself); The X Files (Bowman) (as Dr. Alvin Kurtzweil)
1999 Sleepy Hollow (Burton) (as Van Garrett); The Joyriders (Bawlersby) (as Gordon Trout); Edtv (Howard) (as AI); Bonanno: A Godfather’s Story (Poulette—for TV) (as Joseph Bonanno); The New Adventures of Pinocchio (Anderson) (as Gepetto); Carlo’s Wake (Valerio) (as Carlo Torello)
2000 Ready to Rumble (Robbins) (as Sal); Very Mean Men (Vitale) (as Drunk); Shiner (Irvin)

Publications

By LANDAU: articles—

On LANDAU: articles—

Écran Fantastique (Paris), May-June 1995.

After appearances in several prestige features—most notably Alfred Hitchcock’s North by Northwest and Joseph L. Mankiewicz’s Cleopatra—Martin Landau became a star as Rollin Hand in the hit television series Mission: Impossible. But the actor and his then-wife, Barbara Bain, who co-starred with him on the show, left after two seasons in a contract dispute. Neither of their careers were to recover. For almost two decades, Landau was just another working actor, appearing in seemingly endless low-budget throwaways and such made-for-television fare as The Harlem Globetrotters on Gilligan’s Island.

His renaissance from the industry scrap heap came when he was cast in Francis Coppola’s Tucker: The Man and His Dream, which netted Landau critical kudos and an Oscar nomination. He offers an eye-opening performance as Abe Karatz, a New York financier who helps Preston Tucker (Jeff Bridges) start up an automobile manufacturing company. Finally, Landau had a movie role worthy of his gift for fleshing out character. His performance is at once entertaining and quite moving; the character of Karatz is at the core of the story, and Landau adds some genuine heart to what is an otherwise slickly made film. Those who had forgotten Landau existed, or had considered him a has-been (or worse, a never-was), had no choice but to acknowledge his talent.
The actor earned further acclaim, and a second Oscar nomination, in Woody Allen’s Crimes and Misdemeanors, a high drama of ethics and morality in contemporary American society. Landau plays Judah Rosenthal, a pillar of his community whose neurotic, possessive mistress (Anjelica Huston) threatens to expose his extramarital activities. Judah feels he has no alternative but to initiate her murder. He at first is horrified by his decision, but soon comes to rationalize the action as being necessary to his survival. And in Tim Burton’s Ed Wood, Landau was never better as the aging horror film star Bela Lugosi. He walked off with virtually every critics’ prize, along with the Best Supporting Actor Oscar, for his beautifully rendered performance.

But perhaps his most revealing late-career role is in Mistress, in which Landau plays a character one senses he knows all too well: Jack Roth, an aging film producer who has come upon an old screenplay written by a movie purist/failed writer (Robert Wuhl). Roth feels that the script is a “knockout,” and wants to get it made. But there is a catch: The producer notes that the script “does get heavy in places.” It is, after all, about a painter who commits suicide. In order to secure funding for the project, Roth declares that perhaps the suicide part can be deleted—even though the act is the entire point of the story.

Roth is an intriguing character. He takes his meetings not at Le Dome or another A-list eatery but at a glorified diner. He “used to be a big shot at Universal,” but blew his career after standing up to his boss in a show of integrity. If the project in question had been a success, Roth might have gotten away with his indiscretion. But it bombed, and for 15 years he has had to “crawl around on my hands and knees to get a couple of bucks for something.”

Landau’s departure from Mission: Impossible might be contrasted to Jack Roth’s indiscretion. Thankfully for Landau, he eventually was able to reestablish himself on the A-list of Hollywood actors—albeit after too many years, and too many bad movies. Post-Ed Wood, he has been a busy actor, appearing in a range of roles. Perhaps his best was in the media satire Edtv, in which he stole his every scene as Woody Harrelson and Matthew McConaughey’s ailing stepfather.

—Rob Edelman

Films as Actor:

(in two-reel shorts)

1924 Picking Peaches (Kenton); Smile Please (Del Ruth); Shanghaied Lovers (Del Ruth); The Cat’s Meow (Del Ruth); His New Mama (Del Ruth); The First Hundred Years (F. Richard Jones); The Luck of the Foolish (Harry Edwards); The Hansom Cabman (Edwards); All Night Long (Edwards); Feet of Mud (Edwards)

1925 The Sea Squawk (Edwards); Boobs in the Wood (Edwards); His Marriage Wow (Edwards); Plain Clothes (Edwards); Remember When? (Edwards); Horace Greeley, Jr. (Edwards); The White Wing’s Bride (Goulding); Lucky Stars (Edwards); There He Goes (Edwards)

1926 Saturday Afternoon (Edwards and Capra)

(in features)

1926 Tramp, Tramp, Tramp (Edwards); Ella Cinders (Alfred E. Green) (cameo); The Strong Man (Capra) (as Harry Selby, the boy)

1927 Long Pants (Capra) (as Harry Selby); His First Flame (Edwards); Fiddledsticks (Edwards—short); Soldier Man (Edwards—short)

(in two-reel sound shorts)

1929 Hotter than Hot (Lewis R. Foster); Sky Boy (Rogers); Skirt Szy (Cruze)

1930 A Soldier’s Plaything (A Soldier’s Pay) (Curtiz—feature) (as Tim); See America Thirst (Craft—feature) (as Wally); The Shrimp (Rogers); The Head Guy (Guiol); The Fighting Parson (Guiol); The Big Kick (Doane); The King (Horne)

1932 The Big Flash (Gillstrom)

1933 Hallelujah, I’m a Bam (Hallelujah, I’m a Tramp; New York) (Milestone—feature) (as Egghead); My Weakness (David Butler—feature) (as Cupid); Tired Feet (Gillstrom); The Hitch Hiker (Gillstrom); Knight Duty (Gillstrom); Tied for Life (Gillstrom); Hooks and Jabs (Gillstrom); Marriage Humor (Edwards); The Stage Hand (Edwards); Leave It to Dad (Edwards); On Ice (Gillstrom); Pop’s Pal (Edwards); A Roaming Romeo (Gillstrom)

1934 Trimm’d in Furs (Lamont); Circus Hoodoo (Gillstrom); No Sleep on the Deep (Lamont); Petting Preferred (Gillstrom); Counsel on De Fence (Ripley); Shivers (Ripley)

1935 His Bridal Sweet (Goulding); The Leather Necker (Ripley); His Marriage Mixup (Black); I Don’t Remember (Black); Atlantic Adventure (Rogell—feature) (as Sniper)

1938 He Loved an Actress (Mad about Money) (Melville Brown—feature) (as Otto); There Goes My Heart (McCleod—feature) (as minister); A Doggone Mixup (Lamont); Sue My Lawyer (White)

1939 Zenobia (Elephants Never Forget) (Gordon Douglas) (as Prof. McCrackle)

1940 Mishbehaving Husbands (Beaudine—feature) (as Henry Butler); Cold Turkey (Lord)

1941 All-American Co-ed (Prinz—feature) (as Hap Holden); Double Trouble (West—feature)
His character had the moon face and the tight smile of an idiot child. Comedian Harry Langdon gave his clown a pathetic loneliness combined with a feline curiosity. With a rare gift for subtle, smooth pantomime, Langdon rose from a mediocore position as a vaudeville comedian to rival and nearly equal the great clowns who had already achieved success in the motion pictures by the mid-1920s.

Under the supervision of Harry Edwards and Frank Capra, Langdon captured the hearts of the critics and the general public with three excellent comedies: Tramp, Tramp, Tramp; The Strong Man; and Long Pants. The critic James Agee in his famous 1949 Life essay “Comedy’s Greatest Era,” rated the comedian higher than most commentators did. Agee described Langdon as a “virtuoso of hesitation and of delicately indecisive motions” with “a subtle emotional and mental process” similar to Charlie Chaplin’s.

The one obvious difference between Langdon’s and Chaplin’s characters, however, is the mentality of the portraits. Langdon falls into the class of “dumb” clowns—somewhat like Stan Laurel’s creative efforts. Most of the humor of the character springs from a childlike man who is lost in a sophisticated world. Unlike Chaplin’s character, this little fellow is a simpleton who seldom takes action; he is a sexless baby who concentrates on his bag of popcorn when a prostitute makes eyes at him. Without a will of any consequence, this frail creature evokes laughter and sympathy when he is pitted against physical and mental superiors. This passive attitude is quite passive and of delicately indecisive motions” with “a subtle emotional and mental process” similar to Charlie Chaplin’s.

This character’s loneliness is further underscored by his attitudes toward physical and mental superiors. His character has an aggressiveness which involved them in sharp, strong struggles. They had moments of violent action—kicking and physical and mental superiors. This passive attitude is quite different from the comic creations of both Chaplin and Harold Lloyd, whose characters had an aggressiveness which involved them in sharp, strong struggles. They had moments of violent action—kicking and biting their opposition—generally a bully twice their size. Their works, therefore, were sprinkled with the spice of invective comedy which provided variety and fast-paced conflict. Even Capra, noted for his excellent fast-paced films, realized he had to let Langdon work a scene slowly to use the detailed pantomimed routines which were the comedian’s forte.

This whimsy of Langdon’s comic portrait did not seem to click when he dismissed Frank Capra, who had directed The Strong Man and Long Pants. Langdon tried to direct three of his own features in the late 1920s, and the works were neither critical nor popular successes. It is possible that Langdon leaned too heavily on what some evaluators of the day thought was “Chaplinesque pathos” in such features as Three’s a Crowd, an approach Harry Edwards and Capra had avoided. Langdon never fully recovered from his failure in the late 1920s. Many of his later two-reel shorts show some brilliant refreshing of his silent screen routines, but he more often appeared providing some comedy in low-budget musical features.

The strength of Langdon’s best films lies in his acting. Like Chaplin in his approach to his little tramp, Langdon brought a captivating intensity to his portrayal of the little-boy-lost. Langdon seemed to live the role he was acting. He became a skilled creator of an unusual comic character and deserves to be placed among the kings of silent screen comedy, Chaplin, Lloyd, and Buster Keaton.

—Donald McCaffrey

LANGE, Jessica

Nationality: American. Born: Cloquet, Minnesota, 20 April 1949. Education: Attended Cloquet High School, Minnesota; University of Minnesota, St. Paul. Family: Married the photographer Paco Grande, 1970 (divorced 1982); one daughter with the dancer Mikhail Baryshinikov: Alexandra; two children with the actor/writer Sam Shepard: Hannah Jane and Samuel Walker. Career: 1971–73—lived in Paris, where she studied mime with Etienne DeCroux, and danced at the Opera Comique; then worked as a model for the Wilhelmina agency in New York; 1976—film debut in King Kong, and given contract with the producer Dino De Laurentiis (broken, 1979); 1980—professional stage debut in Angel on My Shoulder; 1982—nominated for Academy Award as both Best Actress (in Frances) and Best Supporting Actress (in Tootsie) in same year; founder, Far West productions. Awards: Best Supporting Actress Academy Award, and Best Supporting Actress, New York Film Critics, for Tootsie, 1982; Best Actress Academy Award, for Blue Sky, 1994; Golden Globe Award, for A Streetcar Named Desire, 1995. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1976 King Kong (Guillermin) (as Dwan)
1979 All That Jazz (Fosse) (as AngeliQue)
1980 How to Beat the High Co$t of Living (Scheerer) (as Louise)
1981 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Rafelson) (as Cora Papadakis); The Best Little Girl in the World (O’Stein—for TV)
1982 Tootsie (Pollack) (as Julie); Frances (Clifford) (as Frances Farmer)
1984 Country (Pearce) (as Jewel Ivy, + co-pr); Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Hofsis—for TV) (as Maggie)
1985 Sweet Dreams (Reisz) (as Patsy Cline)
1986 Crimes of the Heart (Beresford) (as Meg Magrath)
1988 Everybody’s All-American (When I Fall in Love) (Hackford) (as Babs Rogers Grey); Far North (Shepard) (as Kate)
1989 Music Box (Costa-Gavras) (as Ann Talbot)
1990 Men Don’t Leave (Brickman) (as Beth Macauley)
1991 Cape Fear (Scorsese) (as Leigh Bowden)
1992 Night and the City (Irwin Winkler) (as Helen Nasseross); O Pioneers! (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Alexandra Bergson)
1993 Blue Sky (Richardson—produced in 1990) (as Carly Marshall)
1995 Rob Roy (Caton-Jones) (as Mary); Losing Isaiah (Gyllenhaal) (as Margaret Lewin); A Streetcar Named Desire (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Blanche Dubois)
1997 A Thousand Acres (Moorhouse) (as Ginny Cook Smith)
1998 Hush (Darby) (as Martha Baring); Cousin Bette (McAnuff) (as Bette Fisher)
1999 Titus (Taymor) (as Tamora)

Publications

By LANGE: articles—

“Jessica Lange: From Kong to Cain,” interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1981.
Interview in American Film, August 1990.

On LANGE: book—

On LANGE: articles—

Thompson, David, “Raising Cain,” in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1981.

Jessica Lange exudes a European quality, call it passion perfumed by mystery, that has not dampened her leading lady allure. What the sensual Lange brings to all her roles is an intense conviction that bowls over audiences and sometimes sends her directors screaming into the night. Locking horns, for example, with Paul Brickman over his own conception, Men Don’t Leave, she remolds his sunnier personality-driven seriocomedy into a melodrama worthy of Stanwyck or Dunne. The light touch necessary for a star-vehicle comedy may forever elude her, but as a dramatic actress she burns through directors’ shortcuts and limitations in material to the heart of the matter.

In her dramas, when Lange approaches a man, it is almost a challenge to put up or shut up (Nicholson in The Postman Always Rings Twice, Powers Boothe in Blue Sky, Ed Harris in Sweet Dreams); she is just as direct in other circumstances. The only occasions when the resilient Lange crumbles are when her antagonists are dishonest (Music Box, Losing Isaiah, Frances) — a lying heart is an affront to the driven women she plays.

That solar-powered honesty was there from the beginning. Isn’t it time to reevaluate that notorious remake of King Kong—to stop disparaging it for failing to top the thrills of the original classic and to view it as a lyrical romance between a cover girl and the world’s tallest leading man. An incredibly sexy fairy tale, the excoriated King Kong, which critics used as a wedge to drive Lange’s career into bimbo oblivion, actually contains the first evidence of that pulverizing sincerity audiences now accept. You could tell she really felt sorry for that big ape, a compassion which she more selectively meted out to future co-stars.

Premier (Boulder), April 1995.

* * *

Jessica Lange exudes a European quality, call it passion perfumed by mystery, that has not dampened her leading lady allure. What the sensual Lange brings to all her roles is an intense conviction that bowls over audiences and sometimes sends her directors screaming.

Recovering from a critical drubbing that would have sent lesser souls to a permanent room at the Betty Ford Clinic, Lange slowly proved she was more than just the plaything of a gigantic rubber monkey. Anger over her mistreatment seems to fester in subsequent performances which carry the subtext of I-Told-You-Jerks-I-Could Act. Shouting out what Lana Turner could only whisper in the remake of The Postman Always Rings Twice, a movie whose obviousness was no match for the original’s film noir glamour, Lange wipes everyone else off the screen. Although she won a consolation prize Oscar for her supporting work in Tootsie, she should have beaten the Queen of Accents, Meryl Streep, to the best actress prize for Frances. As Dunaway accomplished with her Mommie Dearest, Frances is a tribute from one kindred-spirit actress to another, in this case a celebration of a mistf actress who religiously fought the studio system. This tour de force as Frances Farmer is a brave, audience-distancing performance in which Lange remains true to Farmer’s neurotic distaste for dissembling; as she journeys into this lost soul’s emotional inferno, one feels one is witnessing acting attuned to the dark visions of Ingmar Bergman which has somehow been misplaced in a conventional Hollywood biopic.

Despite a predilection for folksy reverence that makes Country, Far North, and O, Pioneers, tediously noble, Lange purred tantalizingly in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, soulfully embodied country-and-western legend Patsy Cline in Sweet Dreams, and saved Everybody’s All-American from meretriciousness with another scalding portrayal, this time as a beauty queen whose will of iron lets her rise above being taken for granted. Going mad once more in Blue Sky, Lange won a best actress Oscar for this bittersweet fable abandoned by Orion Pictures after bankruptcy proceedings. Then, despite the sensitivity of her portrayals, she seemed stuck in a message movie cul-de-sac with The Music Box and Losing Isaiah, glorified TV movies masquerading as big screen events.

Still strikingly beautiful, Lange has railed against the downtime awaiting actresses of a certain age. Having recently rebounded with her stunning appearance in King Kong. Defiantly jutting her chin forward, she continues to extend her range with a magnetic turn as the monstrous mother in Titus. One hopes, that just as Katharine Hepburn managed to jump start her stalled stardom in the 1950s, Lange may be warming up for the most productive years of her career in the millennium.

—Robert Pardi

LANSBURY, Angela

1944 Gaslight (Cukor) (as Nancy Oliver); National Velvet (Brown) (as Edwina Brown)
1945 The Picture of Dorian Gray (Lewin) (as Sibyl Vane)
1946 The Harvey Girls (Sidney) (as Em); The Hoodlum Saint (Taurog) (as Dusty Willard); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (as guest star)
1947 The Private Affairs of Bel Ami (Lewin) (as Clotilde de Marelle); If Winter Comes (Saville) (as Mabel Sabre)
1948 Tenth Avenue Angel (Rowland) (as Susan Bratten); State of the Union (Capra) (as Kay Thorndyke); The Three Musketeers (Sidney) (as Queen Anne)
1949 The Red Danube (Sidney) (as Audrey Quail); Samson and Delilah (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Semadar)
1951 Kind Lady (John Sturges) (as Mrs. Edwards)
1952 Mutiny (Dmytryk) (as Leslie)
1953 Remains to Be Seen (Weis) (as Valeska Chauvea)
1954 Key Man (A Life at Stake) (Guilfoyle) (as Doris Hillman)
1955 A Lawless Street (Joseph H. Lewis) (as Tally Dickinson); The Purple Mask (Humberstone) (as Madame Valentine)
1956 The Court Jester (Panama and Frank) (as Princess Gwendolyn); Please Murder Me (Godfrey) (as Myra Leeds)
1958 The Long Hot Summer (Ritt) (as Minnie Littlejohn); The Reluctant Debutante (Minnelli) (as Mabel Claremont)
1959  Season of Passion (Summer of the 17th Doll) (Norman) (as Pearl)
1960  The Dark at the Top of the Stairs (Delbert Mann) (as Mavis Pruitt); A Breath of Scandal (Curtiz) (as Countess Lina)
1961  Blue Hawaii (Turnerig) (as Sarah Lee Gates)
1962  The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli) (as voice of Marguerite Laurier); All Fall Down (Frankenheimer) (as Annabel Willart); The Manchurian Candidate (Frankenheimer) (as Raymond’s mother)
1963  In the Cool of the Day (Robert Stevens) (as Sibyl Logan)
1964  The World of Henry Orient (George Roy Hill) (as Isabel Boyd); Dear Heart (Delbert Mann) (as Phyllis)
1965  The Greatest Story Ever Told (George Stevens) (as Claudia); The Amorous Adventures of Moll Flanders (Terence Young) (as Lady Blystone); Harlow (Douglas) (as Mama Jean Bello)
1966  Mister Buddwing (Woman without a Face) (Delbert Mann) (as Gloria)
1970  Something for Everyone (Prince) (as Countess Herthe von Orstein)
1971  Bedknobs and Broomsticks (Stevenson) (as Eglantine Price)
1975  The Story of the First Christmas Snow (Bass and Rankin—animation for TV) (as voice of Sister Theresa)
1978  Death on the Nile (Guillermin) (as Mrs. Salome Otterbourne)
1979  The Lady Vanishes (Page) (as Miss Froy)
1980  The Mirror Crack’d (Hamilton) (as Miss Marple)
1982  The Last Unicorn (Rankin Jr. and Bass—animation) (as voice of Mommy Fortuna); Little Gloria . . . Happy at Last (Hussein—for TV) (as Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney); Sweeney Todd (Hughes and Prince) (as Nellie Lovett)
1983  The Pirates of Pencenach (Leach) (as Ruth); The Gift of Love: A Christmas Story (Delbert Mann—for TV)
1984  Ingrid (Feldman—for TV)
1985  The Company of Wolves (Neil Jordan) (as Granny); The Murder of Sherlock Holmes (Corey Allen—for TV)
1986  A Talent for Murder (Rakoff—for TV)
1988  Shootdown (Pressman—for TV)
1989  The Shell Seekers (Hussein—for TV) (as Penelope Keeling)
1990  The Love She Sought (Sargent—for TV) (as Agatha McGee)
1991  Beauty and the Beast (Wise and Trousdale—animation) (as voice of Mrs. Potts)
1992  Mrs. Harris Goes to Paris (Shaw—for TV) (title role); Disney Sing-Along-Songs (as voice of Mrs. Potts)
1996  Mrs. Santa Claus (Hughes) (as Mrs. Santa Claus)
1997  Beauty and the Beast: The Enchanted Christmas (Knight—for video) (as voice of Mrs. Potts); Muder, She Wrote: South by Southwest (Shaw—for TV) (as Jessica Fletcher); Anastasia (Bluth, Goldman) (as voice of Dowager Empress Marie)
1999  The Unexpected Mrs. Pollifax (Anthony Pullen Shaw—for TV) (as Mrs. Emily Pollifax); Muder She Wrote: A Story to Die For (Shaw—for TV) (as Jessica Fletcher)

Publications

By LANSBURY: book—

Angela Lansbury’s Positive Moves (physical fitness), with Mimi Avins, New York, 1990.

By LANSBURY: articles—

Interview, in Radio Times, 17 December 1983.

On LANSBURY: books—

On LANSBURY: articles—

Hallowell, John, “‘A Smashing New Dame to Play Mame,’” in Life (New York), 17 June 1966.
Nosferatu (San Sebastian), January 1996.

* * *

Although recent years have seen the enormously talented Angela Lansbury become the definitive leading lady of Broadway musicals, she has never enjoyed a similar stardom on the screen despite the many film roles and awards she has to her credit. While she possesses unarguable acting ability and star quality, under the scrutiny of the camera her less than glamorous looks have made leading-lady, star-vehicle roles difficult for her to obtain from the very beginning.

Born in London, Lansbury began dramatic training as a child, continuing in the United States after being evacuated during the German blitz. After signing with MGM, she was nominated for an Oscar for Best Supporting Actress in her first film, Gaslight. Although still in her teens at the time, this role started her on a path of character parts in which she was often younger than the unsympathetic character.

A second Academy Award nomination followed for The Picture of Dorian Gray, an adaptation of the Oscar Wilde novel. Lansbury subsequently appeared in a series of fine supporting performances, notably in Capra’s State of the Union, Martin Ritt’s The Long Hot Summer, and Delbert Mann’s version of The Dark at the Top of the Stairs. Perhaps the best example of Lansbury’s ability to play characters much older than herself is her unforgettable chilling portrayal of Laurence Harvey’s devious mother in The Manchurian Candidate. In reality, she was only three years Harvey’s senior.
Watching Lansbury the television hostess pop up on awards shows like a latter-day Toastmaster General seems a thorough waste of this versatile actress’s time. These great lady stints could also be viewed, however, as a measure of the respectful affection audiences feel for her reassuring Jessica Fletcher, a television detective character with a record number of relatives to clear of murder charges. Since resoundingly garnering the megastardom denied her during her MGM contract period, Lansbury has evidenced a regrettable taste for bland, but high-rated, star vehicles such as The Shell Seekers and Mrs. ‘Arris Goes to Paris. Lansbury acolytes who have experienced her glamorous Mame, indefatigable Mama Rose in Gypsy, and homicidally enterprising Mrs. Lovett in Sweeney Todd, know that Jessica Fletcher and subsequent television appearances only tap a smidgen of this powerhouse’s talent. On-screen, Lansbury remains an unparalleled character star who can look back with pride on her psychologically crippling mother in All Fall Down, her divine poseur in Death on the Nile, her foolish adulteress in The World of Henry Orient, and her stylishly decadent countess in Something for Everyone.

After being shortsightedly passed over for the movie of Mame in favor of human fghorn Lucille Ball, Lansbury did get to kick up her heels in Bedknobs and Broomsticks, an affable treat but not Mary Poppins. Mothballing her musical comedy ambitions and once again donning old lady drag in The Mirror Crack’d and The Lady Vanishes, is it any wonder Lansbury embraced the nonfrumpy vistas of Murder, She Wrote in which she could play her own age and display the personal warmth not required by most of her celebrated acting outings? After her long-running series is history, Lansbury will continue to delight and astonish her fans, but one hopes her hard-won and long-overdue stardom will not tempt her to orphan her unscrupulous schemers and larger-than-life eccentrics in favor of variations on reliable, gracious, down-to-earth buttsinksi, J. B. Fletcher.

—Bill Wine, updated by Robert Pardi

LAUGHTON, Charles

Films as Actor:

1928 Daydreams (Montague—short) (as Rajah); Bluebottles (Montague—short) (as policeman); Frankie and Johnnie (Montague—short)
1929 Piccadilly (Dupont) (bit role)
1930 Wolves (Wanted Men) (De Courville)
1931 Down River (Godfrey)
1932 The Old Dark House (Whale) (as a Lancashire knight); The Devil and the Deep (Gering) (as submarine captain); Payment Deferred (Mendes); The Sign of the Cross (DeMille) (as Nero); in Lubitsch-directed ep. of If I Had a Million (anthology film)
1933 Island of Lost Souls (Kenton); The Private Life of Henry VIII (Korda) (title role); White Woman (Walker) (as Horace Prin
1934 The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin) (as Mr. Barrett)
1935 Ruggles of Red Gap (McCary) (title role); Les Misérables (Boleslawsky) (as Javert); Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd) (as Captain Bligh)
1936 Rembrandt (Korda) (title role); I, Claudius (von Sternberg— not completed) (title role)
1937 Vessel of Wrath (The Beachcomber) (Pommer)
1939 St. Martin’s Lane (The Sidewalks of London) (Whelan); Jamaica Inn (Hitchcock); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle) (as Quasimodo)
1940 They Knew What They Wanted (Kanin) (as Tony Patucci)
1941 It Started with Eve (Koster)
1942 The Tuttles of Tahiti (Charles Vidor); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier); Stand by for Action (Leonard)
1943 Forever and a Day (Clair and others); This Land Is Mine (Renoir); The Man from Down Under (Leonard)
1944 The Canterville Ghost (Dassin) (title role); The Suspect (Siodmak)
1945 Captain Kidd (Lee) (title role)
1946 Because of Him (Wallace)
1948 The Paradine Case (Hitchcock); On Our Merry Way (A Miracle Can Happen) (King Vidor) (as guest); The Big Clock (Farrow); Arch of Triumph (Milestone); The Girl from Manhattan (Green)
1949 The Bripe (Leonard); The Man on the Eiffel Tower (Meredith) (as Inspector Maigret)
1951 The Blue Veil (Bernhardt); The Strange Door (Pevney); ‘‘The Cop and the Anthem’’ ep. of O. Henry’s Full House (Koster); Abbott and Costello Meet Captain Kidd (Lamont) (as Captain Kidd)
1953 Salome (Dieterle) (as King Herod); Young Bess (Sidney) (as Henry VIII)
1954 Hobson’s Choice (Lean) (title role)
1957 Witness for the Prosecution (Wilder)
1960 Sotto dieci bandiere (Under Ten Flags) (Coletti) (as British Admiral); Spartacus (Kubrick) (as Gracchus)
1962 Advise and Consent (Preminger) (as Senator Seab Cooley)
Charles Laughton (right) with Clark Gable in Mutiny on the Bounty

Film as Director:

1955  The Night of the Hunter (+ co-sc)

Publications

On LAUGHTON: books—

On LAUGHTON: articles—

Green, R., “The Big Picture,” in Boxoffice (Chicago), June 1996.

* * *

703
Charles Laughton, one of the most distinguished actors of the century, was successful alike on stage and in film, yet, full of artistic self-doubts throughout his career, he was fraught by worries, largely of his own making, including problems arising from his homosexuality. Like Michel Simon in France, he was haunted by concern about his appearance; both men found themselves repellently ugly yet both had features which, though homely and far from conventionally handsome, possessed wonderful mobility of expression. In their particular cases, their appearance in fact became a great dramatic asset. Intended by his father, a hotelier in Scarborough, to follow the same occupation, Laughton broke away to train at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art where he became a gold medalist in 1925. Once on the stage, he found his lifelong supporter and fellow-artist in the young character actress Elsa Lanchester, with whom in 1928 he appeared in two notable experimental two-reel film comedies Bluebottles and Day Dreams. His feature film debut was in a silent production, É. A. Dupont’s Piccadilly, followed by appearances in other British features. Meanwhile, his stage career took him to America in 1931 as the murderer in the play Payment Deferred, which was subsequently filmed.

Laughton’s outstanding success in films came, in both Britain and America, in the early 1930s in a long succession of star character parts—parallel to his commanding position in the theater, where he starred notably in Shakespeare at the Old Vic and, much later, at Stratford upon Avon. He played an effete sadistic Nero in DeMille’s The Sign of the Cross and an amusing bit part in the composite film If I Had a Million, developing a genius alike for comedy and drama. His brilliance in Korda’s The Private Life of Henry VIII won him an Academy Award; he followed this with a veritable gallery of impressive character portraits—as Elizabeth Barrett Browning’s father in the Sidney Franklin version of The Barretts of Wimpole Street, as the dignified English butler in Leo McCarey’s Ruggles of Red Gap, as Javert in Richard Boleslawski’s version of Les Misérables, and as Captain Bligh in Frank Lloyd’s Mutiny on the Bounty. He was the artist in Korda’s Rembrandt, the beachcomber in Erich Pommer’s Vessel of Wrath (The Beachcomber), the street entertainer in Tim Whelan’s St. Martin’s Lane (Sidewalks of London), and Quasimodo in William Dieterle’s version of The Hunchback of Notre Dame.

By the 1940s, with the Laughtons settled in Hollywood, films became his principal source of income, enabling him to own a handsome home and establish a collection of paintings. His roles alternated between the excellent and the mediocre, the excellent including those in Garson Kanin’s They Knew What They Wanted (with Carole Lombard) and Henry Koster’s It Started with Eve, his cowardly ghost in Jules Dassin’s The Canterville Ghost, the Crippen-like murderer in Robert Siodmak’s The Suspect, and the magazine tycoon in The Paradine Case. He starred in John Farrow’s thriller, The Big Clock and was Inspector Maigret in the French-American production The Man on the Eiffel Tower. Many films of this period, however, were indifferent vehicles for Laughton’s great talent, and it was good that in his final years he was given certain characters in which he could shine—as Hobson, the north of England bootmaker in David Lean’s version of Stanley Houghton’s play Hobson’s Choice, as the elderly barrister in Billy Wilder’s version of Agatha Christie’s Witness for the Prosecution, and finally as the wily, crusty senator in Otto Preminger’s Advise and Consent. This part he just managed to get through before his death.

Laughton had also in his later career established a new departure, giving dramatic readings, notably from the Bible and from Bernard Shaw’s Man and Superman. He also directed one film with evident skill, The Night of the Hunter, a sinister thriller of great atmospheric power, containing a fine performance by Robert Mitchum.

—Roger Manvell

LAUREL, Stan, and Oliver HARDY

Hardy. Nationality: American. Born: Norvell Hardy Jr. in Harlem, Georgia, 1892. Education: Attended Georgia Military College; Atlanta Conservatory of Music; studied law briefly at the University of Georgia, Atlanta. Family: Married 1) Madelyn Saloshin, 1913 (divorced); 2) Myrtle Lee, 1921 (divorced 1937); 3) Virginia Lucille Jones, 1940. Career: 1900—debut as singer with the Coburn Minstrel Show, then toured with his own singing act; 1910–13—operated a movie theater in Milledgeville, Georgia; 1913—joined the Lubin film company in Jacksonville, Florida, and made film debut in Outwitting Dad, 1914; 1914–26—made films for Vim, Edison, and other companies in New York and Florida (and after 1918 in California). Died: In North Hollywood, California, 7 August 1957.

1926—Laurel and Hardy brought together as a team by Hal Roach (though they had both appeared in A Lucky Dog, 1917); worked together as team for the next 30 years, making both shorts and features for Hal Roach until 1940, then for other studios; toured Britain with a music hall revue, 1947 and 1954; Laurel stopped acting upon Hardy’s death, but continued to write.

Films as Actor: Hardy:

(as Oliver “Babe” Hardy or Babe Hardy in early films)

1914 Outwitting Dad; Back to the Farm (Louis); Pins Are Lucky; The Soubrette and the Sipp (Hotaling?); The Smuggler’s Daughter (Hevener); The Female Cop (Hevener); Those Love Pangs (The Rival Mashers); Busted Hearts (Chaplin); The Rise of the Johnsons

1915 What He Forgot (Hevener); Cupid’s Target (Hevener); Spaghetti and Lottery (Louis); Gas and the Anarchists (Murphy); Shoddy the Tailor (Louis); The Paperhanger’s Helper; Spaghetti a la Mode; Charley’s Aunt; Artists and Models; The Tramps; The Prize Baby (Hevener); An Expensive Visit (Louis); Cleaning Time (Louis); Mixed Flats (Louis); Safety Worst; Twin Sisters (Hotaling); Baby (Myers); Who Stole the Doggies?; A Lucky Strike (Hotaling); The New Butler (Hotaling); Matilda’s Legacy (Hotaling); Her Choice (Price); Cannibal King; What a Cinch (Louis); Clothes Make the Man (Louis); The Dead Letter (Louis); Avenging Bill (Hotaling); The Haunted Hat (Louis); The Simp and the Sophomores (Louis); Babe’s School Days (Louis); Ethel’s Romances (Middleton); The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford (Wharton—serial); Something in Her Eye; A Janitor’s Joyful Job; Fatty’s Fatal Fun; Ups and Downs (Stull and Burns); This Way Out (Stull and Burns)

1916 Chickens (Stull and Burns); Frenzied Finance (Stull and Burns); Busted Hearts (Stull and Burns); A Stiffy Affair (Stull and Burns); Bungles’ Rainy Day (Stull and Burns); The Tryout (Stull and Burns); Bungles Enforces the Law (Stull and Burns); Bungles’ Elopement (Stull and Burns); Bungles Lands a Job (Stull and Burns); One Too Many; The Serenade; Nerve and Gasoline; Their Vacation; Mamma’s Boy’s; A Battle Royal; All for a Girl; Hired and Fired; What’s Sauce for the Goose; The Brave Ones; The Water Cure; Thirty Days; Baby Doll; The Schemers; Sea Dogs; Hungry Hearts; Edison Bugg’s Invention (Hevener); Never Again; Better Halves; A Day at School; A Terrible Tragedy (Hevener); Spaghetti; Aunt Bill; The Heroes; It Happened in Pikersville (Hevener); Human Hounds; Dreamy Knights; Life Savers; Their Honeymoon; An Aeriel Joyride (Walter or Charles Reed); Sidetracked; Stranded (Burstein); Love and Duty; Artistic Atmosphere; The Reformers; Royal Blood; The Candy Trail; The Precious Parcel (The Precious Packet); A Maid to Order; Twin Flats; A Warm Reception; Pipe Dreams; Mother’s Child; Prize Winners; Ambitious Ethel; The Guilty Ones 1917 He Winked and Won; Fat and Fickle; The Boycott Baby; Wanted—A Bad Man; The Other Girl; The Love Bugs; Back Stage (Gillstrom); The Hero (Gillstrom); Dough-Nuts (Gillstrom); Cupid’s Rival (Gillstrom); The Villain (Gillstrom); A Millionaire (Gillstrom); A Mixup in Hearts (Gillstrom); The Goat (Gillstrom); The Genius (Gillstrom); The Stranger (Gillstrom); The Fly Cop (Gillstrom); The Modiste (Gillstrom); The Star Boarder (Gillstrom); The Chief Cook (Gillstrom); The Candy Kid (Gillstrom); The Station Master (Gillstrom); The Hobo (Gillstrom); The Pest (Gillstrom); The Prospector (Gillstrom); The Band Master (Gillstrom); The Slave (Gillstrom)

1918 The Artist (Gillstrom); The Barber (Gillstrom); King Solomon (Gillstrom); His Day Out (Gillstrom); The Orderly (Gillstrom); The Rogue (Gillstrom); The Scholar (Gillstrom); The Messenger (Gillstrom); The Handy Man (Parrott); Bright and Early (Parrott); The Straight and Narrow (Parrott); Playmates (Parrott)

1919 Freckled Fish (Le Brandt); Hop the Bell-Hop (Parrott); Lions and Ladies (Griffin); Mules and Mortgages (Howe); Too-see and Tamales (Noel Smith) (+ co-sc); Healthy and Happy (Noel Smith); Flips and Flows (Praet); Yaps and Yokels (Noel Smith); Mates and Models (Noel Smith); Squabs and Squabbles (Noel Smith); Bungs and Bunglers (Noel Smith); Switches and Sweeties (Noel Smith)

1920 Dames and Dentists (Noel Smith); Maids and Muslin (Noel Smith); Squeaks and Squawks (Noel Smith); Fists and Football (Robbins); Pals and Pugs (Robbins); He Laughs Last (Robbins); Springtime (Robbins); The Decorator (Robbins); His Jonah Day (Robbins); The Back Yard (Robbins)

1921 The Nuisance (Robbins); The Blizzard (Robbins); The Tourist (Robbins); Straight from the Shoulder (Van Dyke); The Fall Guy (Semon); The Savvill (Semon); The Fly Cop (Peebles, Semon, and Taurog)

1922 Golf (Semon); The Counter Jumper (Semon); Fortune’s Mask (Ensminger); The Little Wildcat (Divad); One Stolen Night (Ensminger)

1923 The Three Ages (Keaton and Cline); Rex, King of the Wild Horses (Jones); Be Your Age (McCarey)

1924 The Girl in the Limousine (Semon); Her Boy Friend (Semon); Kid Speed (Semon); The Wizard of Oz (Semon) (as the tin woodman); The Perfect Clown (Newmeyer)

1925 Is Marriage the Bunk? (McCarey); Isn’t Life Terrible? (McCarey); Enough to Do (Laurel); Wandering Papas (Laurel); Yes, Yes, Nanette (Laurel and Hennecke); Navy Gravy (Parrott); Stick Around; Hop to It; Should Sailors Marry?

1926 Stop, Look, and Listen (Semon); Madame Mystery (Laurel and Wallace); Long Live the King (McCarey); Thundering Fleas (McGowan); Along Came Auntie (Guilo); Crazy Like a Fox (McCarey); Be Your Age (McCarey); *Should Men
Films Directed by Laurel:

1925  Yes, Yes, Nanette (co-d with Hennenck); Unfriendly Enemies (co-d with Finlayson); Moonlight and Noses; Wandering Papas; Enough to Do

1926  On the Front Page (+ ro); Madame Mystery (co-d with Wallace); Never Too Old (co-d with Wallace); The Merry Widower; Wise Guys Prefer Brunettes; Raggedy Rose (co-d with Wallace)

Film Co-Produced by Laurel:

1939  Knight of the Plains (Newfield)

Films as Actors: Laurel and Hardy:

(shorts)

1917  A Lucky Dog (Robbins)
1926  45 Minutes from Hollywood (Guiol)
1927  Duck Soup (Guiol); Slipping Wives (Guiol) (Laurel as handyman; Hardy as butler); Love 'em and Weep (Guiol) (Laurel as business associate; Hardy as party guest); Why Girls Love Sailors (Guiol) (Laurel as Willie Smelt; Hardy as Second Mate); The Second Hundred Years (Guiol) (as convicts); Call of the Cuckoos (Bruckman) (as asylum inmates); Sailors Beware! (Yates) (Laurel as cab driver; Hardy as purser); With Love and Hisses (Guiol) (as recruits); Sugar Daddies (Guiol) (Laurel as lawyer; Hardy as butler); Hats Off (Yates) (as detectives); Putting Pants on Philip (Bruckman) (Laurel as Philip; Hardy as J. Piedmont Mumblethunder); The Battle of the Century (Bruckman) (Laurel as prize fighter; Hardy as manager); Should Tall Men Marry? (Bruckman)

1928  Leave 'em Laughing (Bruckman); Flying Elephants (Butler); The Finishing Touch (Bruckman); From Soup to Nuts (Kennedy); You’re Darn Tootin’ (The Music Blasters) (Kennedy); Their Purple Moment (Parrott); Should Married Men Go Home? (Parrott); Two Tars (Parrott); Habeus Corpus (Parrott); We Faw Down (We Slip Up) (McCarey); Early to Bed (Flynn)

1929  Liberty (Criminals at Large) (McCary); Wrong Again (McCary); That’s My Wife (French); Big Business (Horne); Unaccustomed As We Are (Foster); Double Whoopie (Foster); Berth Marks (Foster); Men of War (Foster); Perfect Day (Parrott); They Go Boom (Parrott); Bacon Grabbers (Foster) (as process servers); The Hoose-Gow (Parrott); Angora Love (Foster)

1930  Night Owls (Parrott); Blotto (Parrott); Brats (Parrott) (Laurel as Stanley/Stanley’s son; Hardy as Oliver/Oliver’s son); Below Zero (Parrott); Hog Wild (Aerial Antics; Hay Wire) (Parrott); The Laurel and Hardy Murder Case (Parrott); Another Fine Mess (Parrott)

1931  Be Big (Parrott); Chickens Come Home (Horne); The Stolen Jools (The Slippery Pearls) (McGann) (Laurel as policeman; Hardy as police driver); Laughing Gravy (Horne); Our Wife (Horne); Come Clean (Horne); One Good Turn...
(Horne); Beau Hunks (Beau Chumps) (Horne); On the Loose (Roach)

1932 Helpmates (Parrott); Any Old Port (Parrott); The Music Box (Parrott); The Chimp (Parrott); County Hospital (Parrott); Scram! (McCary); Their First Mistake (George Marshall); Towed in a Hole (George Marshall); Wild Poses (McGowan)

1933 Twice Two (Parrott) (Laurel as Stanley/Mrs. Hardy, + sc; Hardy as Oliver/Mrs. Laurel); Me and My Pal (Rogers and French) (+ sc by Laurel); The Midnight Patrol (French); Busy Bodies (French) (+ sc by Laurel); Dirty Work (French)

1934 Oliver the Eighth (The Private Life of Oliver the Eighth) (French); Going Bye-Bye! (Rogers); Them Thar Hills! (Rogers) (+ co-sc by Laurel); The Life Ghost (Rogers)

1935 Tit for Tat (Rogers) (+ sc by Laurel); The Fixer-Uppers (Rogers); Thicker than Water (Horne) (+ story by Laurel)

1936 On the Wrong Trek (Parrott and Law) (as hitchhikers)

1937 The Tree in a Test Tube (doc)

(features)

1929 Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Riesner)
1930 The Rogue Song (Lionel Barrymore and Roach) (Laurel as Ali-Bek; Hardy as Murza-Bek)
1931 Pardon Us (Jailbirds; Gaol Birds) (Parrott)
1932 Pack Up Your Troubles (George Marshall and McCarey)
1933 Fre Dia volo (The Devil’s Brother; The Virtuous Tramps) (Roach and Rogers) (Laurel as Stanlio; Hardy as Olio); Sons of the Desert (Sons of the Legion; Fraternally Yours) (Seiter)
1934 Hollywood Party (Boleslawski and Dwan); Babes in Toyland (March of the Wooden Soldiers; Laurel and Hardy in Toyland; Revenge Is Sweet; Wooden Soldiers) (Meins and Rogers) (Laurel as Stanley Dum; Hardy as Oliver Dee)
1935 Bonnie Scotland (Horne) (Laurel as Stanley McLaurel, + co-sc; Hardy as Ollie)
1936 The Bohemian Girl (Horne and Rogers); Our Relations (Lachman) (Laurel as himself/Alfie Laurel, + pr; Hardy as himself/Bert Hardy)
1937 Way Out West (Horne) (+ pr by Laurel); Pick a Star (Sedgwick)
1938 Swiss Miss (Blystone); Block-Heads (Blystone)
1939 The Flying Deuces (A. Edward Sutherland)
1940 A Chump at Oxford (Alfred Goulding); Saps at Sea (Gordon Douglas)
1941 Great Guns (Banks)
1942 A-Haunting We Will Go (Werker)
1943 Air Raid Wardens (Sedgwick); Jitterbugs (St. Clair); The Dancing Masters (St. Clair)
1944 The Big Noise (St. Clair)
1945 Nothing but Trouble (Sam Taylor); The Bullfighters (St. Clair)
1946 Atoll K (Robinson Crusoeoland; Utopia; Escapade) (Joannon)

Selected Compilation Films Featuring Laurel and Hardy:

1957 The Golden Age of Comedy (pr: Youngson and Sennett)
1960 When Comedy Was King (pr: Youngson)
1963 Days of Thrills and Laughter (pr: Youngson); 30 Years of Fun (pr: Youngson)
1965 Laurel and Hardy’s Laughing Twenties (pr: Youngson)
1966 The Crazy World of Laurel and Hardy (Garry Moore)

1967 The Further Perils of Laurel and Hardy (pr: Youngson)
1970 Four Clowns (pr: Youngson)

Publications

By LAUREL: articles—

On LAUREL and HARDY: books—

McCabe, John, Mr. Laurel and Mr. Hardy, New York, 1961; new ed., 1966.

Giusti, Marco, Laurel and Hardy, Venice, 1978.

Gehring, Wes D., Leo McCarey and the Comic Anti-Hero in American Film, New York, 1980.

Owen-Pawson, Jenny, and Bill Moulard, Laurel before Hardy, Kendal, Cumbria, 1984.

Jones, Lori S., ed., Laurel and Hardywood (special quadruple ed. of Pratfall magazine), Universal City, California, 1985.

Pantieri, José, I magnifica Laurel e Hardy, Forli, 1986.

On LAUREL and HARDY: articles—

- Pope, Dennis, “Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy,” in Film (London), Autumn 1967.
- Gehring, Wes, on Leo McCarey and Laurel and Hardy, in Films in Review (New York), November 1979; see also issues for February and April 1980.
- Berglund, B., “Did Stan Laurel Make His Film Debut as Early as 1915?,” in Griffithiana (Gemona, Italy), September 1988.

Of all the truly great screen clowns of the silent and early sound periods, Laurel and Hardy took longest to gain serious critical recognition, perhaps because, unlike Chaplin and Keaton, they were never their own directors. Nevertheless, Charles Barr’s book—one of the most delicate and sensitive works of film criticism so far published, to which this present note is, inevitably, heavily indebted—amply makes amends.

It was their peculiar distinction to be the great comic poets of the mainstream bourgeoisie. Chaplin was always “the trump;” Lloyd was too genteel to be representative. Fields’s character deliberately withdrew into alcoholism and misanthropy; Keaton was by nature—if quite unconsciously and reluctantly—alienated from everything. But Stan and Ollie, even when they played convicts or down-and-outs, were incorrigibly addicted to the bourgeois norm. Not that they represented conformity to those norms—not in the least. On the contrary, they dramatize the contradictions of bourgeois life carried to their most extreme. Everything they do is based on contradiction. Totally committed to each other, they are also totally and continuously at odds. Similarly, their apparent total commitment to the norms, mores, manners, conventions, and rituals of bourgeois culture is accompanied by an equally absolute resistance to them. Even when they are not knowingly transgressing (because they can never resist temptation), they are expressing their discontent, their instinctive refusal to be safely contained, by an extraordinary and virtually continuous barrage of accidents, destruction, misunderstandings, and Freudian slips. In this they surely speak, more eloquently than any other comedians, most hilariously and touchingly, for the great mass of human individuals trapped within bourgeois norms (because, like Stan and Ollie, they do not know there are or could be any other), continually trying to adjust, continually, in their behavior, betraying their frustrations and resentment. Laurel and Hardy represent the bourgeois condition simply taken to its logical absurdity.

The main body of their great work lies clearly in the shorts, and it can hardly be accidental that their work during their finest, most consistently brilliant period was under the supervision of Leo McCarey. It is not clear how much McCarey actually contributed, but what is clear, is the perfect compatibility: the same contradictions, the same tensions between conformity and anarchy, structure many of McCarey’s finest feature films (Make Way for Tomorrow, The Bells of St. Mary’s, Rally ‘round the Flag, Boys!).

There are extraordinary shorts in which they play tramps, servants, and convicts, in which much of the humor derives from the contradiction between their situation and their inveterate commitment to bourgeois gentility; but perhaps the most fully characteristic are those in which they act out the contradictions directly, in representations of bourgeois marriage, courtship, family, or (as in Big Business) capitalist competition. There are “doubling” films: Brats, in which they play themselves and their own children, a film about the horrors of “socialization;” and Twice Two, in which they play themselves and each other’s wives, a film about the horrors of bourgeois marriage. Or there are those in which they try to circumvent the constraint of domesticity: Helpmates and, arguably their finest feature-length film, Sons of the Desert. As Charles Barr argues, the essence of their subversiveness lies in their connotations of the childish or childlike: they are children arrested somewhere in the middle of the process of socialization, still committed to the pleasure principle but extremely uneasy about it, vaguely grasping the reality principle but instinctively resistant to its domination, more polymorphously perverse than homosexual (for all their scenes in bed together), preferring each other’s company to anyone else’s (including, and especially, their wives’) because, although continually at loggerheads, they know they are two of a kind (however different in physique and temperament), in their reluctant, unwitting, but absolute incorrigible refusal to be definitively integrated within the culture they also represent.

—Robin Wood

LÉAUD, Jean-Pierre

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 5 May 1944; son of the scriptwriter Pierre Léaud and the actress Jacqueline Pierreux. Career: Child actor: film debut in Les Quatre Cents Coups by Truffaut, 1959; subsequently made several other films with Truffaut, and worked as assistant to Truffaut and Godard; 1967—stage debut at Avignon Festival; 1986—received suspended prison sentence for assaulting 80-year old neighbor with flowerpot. Awards: Best Actor, Berlin Festival, for Masculin-féminin, 1966.

Films as Actor:

- 1959 Les Quatre Cents Coups (The 400 Blows) (Truffaut) (as Antoine Doinel); Le Testament d’Orphée (The Testament of Orpheus) (Coecteau) (as schoolboy)
- 1962 “France” ep. of L’Amour à vingt ans (Love at Twenty) (Truffaut) (as Antoine Doinel)
- 1965 Pierrot le Fou (Peter the Crazy) (Godard) (as young man in cinema); Mata-Hari Agent H.21 (Richard)
- 1966 Masculin-féminin (Masculine-Feminine) (Godard) (as Paul); Le Départ (Skolimowski) (as Marc); Made in U.S.A. (Goddard) (as Donald Siegel)
- 1967 La Chinoise (Godard) (as Guillaume Meister); “Anticipation” ep. of Les Plus Vieux Métier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (Godard) (as bellboy); “Le Pere Noël a les yeux bleus” (“Santa Claus Has Blue Eyes”) ep. of Les Mauvaises Fréquentations (Bad Company) (Eustache) (as Daniel); Le Week-end (Goddard) (as Saint-Just/man in phone booth)
- 1968 Le Gai Savoir (The Joy of Learning) (Goddard—for TV) (as Emile Rousseau); Baisers volés (Stolen Kisses) (Truffaut) (as Antoine Doinel); Dialog (Dialogue) (Skolimowski)
- 1969 Porcile (Pigsty; Pigpen) (Pasolini); Los herederos (The Heirs) (Diegues)
- 1970 Der leone have sept cabecas (The Lion Has Seven Heads) (Rocha); Domicile conjugal (Bed and Board) (Truffaut) (as Antoine Doinel)
- 1971 Les Deux Anglaises et le continent (Two English Girls; Anne and Muriel) (Truffaut) (as Claude Roc)
- 1972 Last Tango in Paris (Ultimo tango a Parigi) (Bertolucci) (as Tom)
- 1973 Une Aventure de Billy le Kid (Moulet); Le Maman et la putain (The Mother and the Whore) (Eustache) (as Alexandre); La Nuit américaine (Day for Night) (Truffaut) (as Alphonse); Spectre (Out One—Out Two) (Rivette)
- 1976 Les Lolas de Lola (Dubois); Umarmungen und andere Sachen (Richter)

---

Films as Assistant Director:

- 1964 La Peau douce (The Soft Skin) (Truffaut); Une Femme mariée (The Married Woman) (Goddard)
- 1965 Alphaville (Une étrange aventure de Lemmy Caution; Alphaville: A Strange Adventure of Lemmy Caution; Tarzan versus I.B.M.) (Goddard)

Publications

By LÉAUD: articles—

On LÉAUD: articles—

The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Winter 1972/73.

Jean-Pierre Léaud is best known for his work with the director François Truffaut, who chose him, at the age of 14, to portray the young Antoine Doinel in Les Quatre Cents Coups. Léaud went on to play Doinel in four more films over the next 20 years, creating an unprecedented cinematic portrait of a character’s development from adolescence to adulthood. Léaud has also worked extensively with Jean-Luc Godard, appearing in several of the director’s most acclaimed films. His association with both filmmakers made Léaud one of the key actors of the influential French New Wave, as well as a familiar figure in international cinema.

Jean-Pierre Léaud is best known for his work with the director François Truffaut, who chose him, at the age of 14, to portray the young Antoine Doinel in Les Quatre Cents Coups. Léaud went on to play Doinel in four more films over the next 20 years, creating an unprecedented cinematic portrait of a character’s development from adolescence to adulthood. Léaud has also worked extensively with Jean-Luc Godard, appearing in several of the director’s most acclaimed films. His association with both filmmakers made Léaud one of the key actors of the influential French New Wave, as well as a familiar figure in international cinema.

Léaud’s long collaboration with Truffaut has had an immeasurable impact on his career, and it is as Antoine Doinel that the actor has given his most memorable performances. The character of Antoine represents Truffaut’s public—and highly personal—examination of his own life, and Léaud has become, in effect, the director’s alter ego. In Les Quatre Cents Coups Truffaut presents a scathing record of his own unhappy childhood, and Léaud captures perfectly the humor and pain of misunderstood adolescence. This is childhood’s dark side, and Truffaut’s famous freeze-frame of the runaway Léaud’s haunting young face at the film’s conclusion is one of the classic images of modern cinema. The later films adopt a much lighter tone as Antoine encounters love, marriage, fatherhood, and, finally, divorce, and Léaud’s performances provide an engaging combination of humor, intensity, and hopeless romanticism. In Baisers volés and Domicile conjugal Antoine pursues and weds the bemused Claude Jade, yet there is an underlying strain of self-absorption in the character that will eventually end the relationship in L’Amour en fuite. Léaud manages to retain Antoine’s boyish appeal even as he reveals himself to be ill-equipped to deal with the responsibilities of adult life.

The qualities Léaud displays in the Doinel films are also present in much of his other work. In Truffaut’s Academy Award-winning La Nuit américaine, the young love-struck actor who asks “Are women magic?” might easily be Antoine, while the hero of Les Deux Anglaises et le continent shares Doinel’s single-minded romantic obsessions. Léaud is an actor of decidedly limited range, and he is most effective within the framework of a particular character type. It is impossible to think of him in the wide spectrum of roles open to a De Niro or a Depardieu; he is, rather, a performer capable of bringing to life specific qualities in the characters he plays. The casting of Léaud as Doinel was a fortuitous one, both for Truffaut, who found in the actor the ideal personification of his autobiographical creation, and for Léaud, who was presented with a part tailor-made for his talents.

Léaud’s work for other directors, among them Godard, Bertolucci, and Pasolini, also relies on his familiar mannerisms and style. There is something inherently (and intentionally) amusing in Léaud’s intensity, and he brings a wry edge of humor to such socio-political commentaries as Godard’s Masculin-Féminin, La Chinoise, and Le Week-end. In Bertolucci’s Last Tango in Paris he appears as Maria Schneider’s boyfriend, performing a clever send-up of a self-important young filmmaker as he follows her endlessly with his camera. All of these roles bear the characteristic stamp of Léaud’s passionate, ingenuous personality.

—Janet E. Lorenz

LEE, Bruce

Nationality: American. Born: Lee Yuen Kam in San Francisco, California, 27 November 1940, of Chinese parents. Education: Attended the University of Washington, Seattle. Family: Married Linda (Lee), son the actor Brandon Lee (deceased). Career: Lived in Hong Kong as a child, and made a number of films as a child actor; appeared as Kato in the Green Hornet TV series, 1966–67, and also in Batman, Ironside, Blondie, and Longstreet series, usually as a karate practitioner or teacher; from 1971, associated with series of kung-fu films made in Hong Kong; he directed one himself (released posthumously). Died: In Hong Kong, 20 July 1973.

Films as Actor:

(as Lee Siu Lung)

1946 The Birth of Mankind
1948 My Son A-Chen
1949 Kid Cheung
1951 Infancy
1953 A Mother’s Tears; Blame It on Father; Countless Families (A Myriad Homes)
1954 In the Face of Demolition
1955 An Orphan’s Tragedy; We Owe It to Our Children; Orphan’s Song
1956 Those Wise Guys Who Fool Around; Too Late for Divorce
1957 Thunderstorm
1958 The Orphan (The Orphan Ah-Sam)
1961 A Goose Alone in the World

(as Bruce Lee)

1969 Marlowe (Bogart) (as Winslow Wong)
1971 Fists of Fury (The Big Boss) (Lo Wei) (as Chen)
1972 The Chinese Connection (Fist of Fury) (Lo Wei) (as Chen Chen)

Film as Actor, Director, and Scriptwriter:

1973 Enter the Dragon (The Deadly Three) (Clouse) (as Lee); The Unicorn Fist
1974 Kato and the Green Hornet (compilation of three Green Hornet episodes) (as Kato)
1979 Game of Death (Bruce Lee’s Game of Death) (Clouse) (as Billy Lo)
1990 The Best of the Martial Arts Films (Weintraub—compilation)

Other Films:

1969 The Wrecking Crew (Karlson) (karate adviser)
1979 Circle of Iron (The Silent Flute) (co-story)

Publications

By LEE: books—

Tao of Jeet Kune Do, Burbank, California, 1975.
Bruce Lee’s Fighting Method: Basic Training, with M. Uyehara, Burbank, California, 1977.

By LEE: articles—
Interview with Liu Chia-Liang, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), September 1984.

On LEE: books—
Uyehara, M., Bruce Lee: The Incomparable Fighter, Burbank, California, 1988.
Thomas, Bruce, Bruce Lee, New York, 1993.
Little, John R., Bruce Lee: Words of a Master, Lincolnwood, 1998.
Bishop, James, Remembering Bruce: The Enduring Legend of the Martial Arts Superstar, Nipomo, 1999.
Little, John, editor, Bruce Lee’s Striking Thoughts, Boston, 2000.

On LEE: articles—
Flanigan, B. P., “Kung Fu Krazy, or The Invasion of the ‘Chop Suey Easterns’,” in Cineaste (New York), vol. 6, no. 3, 1974.
Kaminsky, S. M., “Kung Fu Film as Ghetto Myth,” in Journal of Popular Film (Bowling Green, Ohio), Spring 1974.
Moore, J., “I Was Bruce Lee’s Voice,” in Take One (Montreal), March 1975.

Lo, Kwai-Cheung, “Muscles and Subjectivity: A Short History of the Masculine Body in Hong Kong Popular Culture,” in Camera Obscura (Bloomington), September 1996.

On LEE: films—

Bruce Lee was a phenomenon—a martial artist who, as an actor, became the hero and teacher of millions. As a child, Lee appeared in at least 20 Hong Kong film productions. Pursuing a career there and in the United States as a martial artist, Lee became well known and frequently taught actors, developing his own style of martial arts known as Jeet Kune Do. Due to his reputation, he was offered the role of Kato in the television series The Green Hornet.

After a few small parts in American films, Lee’s breakthrough came when he returned to Hong Kong with his family in 1970. Due to the popularity of The Green Hornet, Lee found himself greeted by Hong Kong citizens as a local hero. Raymond Chow, the founder of Golden Harvest Productions, saw in Lee the great potential of a superstar and signed him for a two-film contract. With the immense box-office success of both Fists of Fury and The Chinese Connection, Lee went on to make his first English-language production, Enter the Dragon. Three months after the completion of the film and one month before its premiere, Lee’s sudden death at the moment of his emerging international stardom shocked and saddened the world.

Another explanation for Lee’s status as a cult figure may have something to do with his screen image. Because he was physically a small man, with the persona of a shy incompetent or a bumbling boy-next-door, it was hard to imagine that he could destroy any number of armed opponents singlehandedly. To many, Lee was the avenger of the underprivileged and oppressed, the “little man” rising up to battle the corruption surrounding him. He was a member of an oppressed minority who reflected the frustrations of minorities everywhere; he was the underdog who came out on top.

The 1990s have seen not only Jet Li’s remake of Fists of Fury but also Jackie Chan’s breakthrough in the United States with Rumble in the Bronx; like Lee, in the late 1970s Chan was discovered by Raymond Chow, who groomed him as a new Bruce Lee. People still remember Lee. A new generation of kung-fu movie stars, though employing different styles and incorporating more modern techniques, still have to prove that they can match up with—in terms of physical agility and fighting ability—the legendary Bruce Lee.

—Maryann Oshana, updated by Guo-Juin Hong LEE, Christopher

Films as Actor:

1948 Corridor of Mirrors (Terence Young) (as Charles); Scott of the Antarctic (Frend) (as Bernard Day); Hamlet (Olivier); One Night with You (Terence Young); Penny and the Pownall Case (Hand) (as Jonathan Blair); A Song for Tomorrow (Fisher) (as Auguste); Saraband for Dead Lovers (Saraband) (Dearden); My Brother’s Keeper (Roome)

1949 Trotti True (The Gay Lady) (Hurst)

1950 Prelude to Fame (McDonnell) (as newsman); They Were Not Divided (Terence Young) (as Lewis)

1951 Captain Horatio Hornblower (Walsh) (as Spanish Captain); Valley of the Eagles (Terence Young) (as detective)

1952 Paul Temple Returns (Rogers) (as Sir Felix Reymbourne); The Crimson Pirate (Siodmak); Top Secret (Zampi)

1953 Innocents in Paris (Parry); Babes in Baghdad (Ulmer); Moulin Rouge (Huston)

1955 That Lady (Terence Young) (as Captain); Man in Demand (McDonald); Crossroads (Fitchen—short) (as the ghost); The Dark Avengers (The Warriors) (Levin) (as Captain of the Guard); Storm over the Nile (Korda and Young) (as Karaga and Young); The Cockleshell Heroes (Ferrer); Private’s Progress (Boulting) (as German officer)

1956 Port Afrique (Maté) (as Franz Vermes); Beyond Mombasa (George Marshall) (as Gil Rossi); The Battle of the River Plate (Pursuit of the Graf Spee) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Manola); Moby Dick (Huston); Alias John Preston (MacDonald) (title role)

1957 The Curse of Frankenstein (Fisher) (as the Creature); The Traitors (The Accursed) (McCarthy); Fortune Is a Woman (She Played with Fire) (Gigliati) (as Charles Highbury); Bitter Victory (Ray) (as Sgt. Barney); Ill Met by Moonlight (Night Ambush) (Powell and Pressburger)

1958 A Tale of Two Cities (Thomas) (as Marquis de St. Evremonde); The Battle of the V J (Unseen Heroes) (Sewell) (as Brunner); The Truth about Women (Box) (as François); Dracula (Horror of Dracula) (Fisher) (title role); Corridors of Blood (Day) (as Resurrection Joe)

1959 The Hound of the Baskervilles (Fisher) (as Sir Henry Baskerville); The Man Who Could Cheat Death (Fisher) (as Dr. Pierre Gerard); Tempi duri per vampiri (Uncle Was a Vampire; Hard Times for Vampires) (Steno); The Mummy (Fisher) (as Kharis); Treasure of San Teresa (Hot Money Girls) (Rakoff) (as Jaeger)

1960 The City of the Dead (Horror Motel) (Moxey) (as Professor Driscoll); Too Hot to Handle (Terence Young) (as Novak); Beat Girl (Wild for Kicks) (Greville) (as Kenny); The Two Faces of Doctor Jekyll (House of Fright) (Fisher) (as Paul Allen); The Hands of Orlac (Les Mains d’Orlac) (Gréville) (as Nero)

1961 Taste of Fear (Scream of Fear) (Holt) (as Dr. Gerrard); The Terror of the Tongs (Bushell) (as Chung King); The Devil’s Agent (Carstairs) (as Baron von Staub); Das Rätsel der rötten Orchidee (The Puzzle of the Red Orchid) (Ashley); Ercole al centro della terra (Hercules at the Center of the Earth; Haunted World) (Bava) (as Lichas)

1962 Devil’s Daffodil (Das Geheimnis der gelben Narzissen) (Ray) (as Chung); The Pirates of Blood River (Gilling) (as La Roche); Sherlock Holmes and the Haldsand des Todes (Sherlock Holmes and the Deadly Necklace) (Fisher and Witherstein) (title role)

1963 La cripta de l’ucciso (Terror in the Crypt) (Mastrocinque) (as Count Karnstein); La frusta e il corpo (Night Is the Phantom, What?) (Bava) (as Kurt Menlli)

1964 The Devil Ship Pirates (Sharp) (as Captain Robeles); La vergine di Norimberga (Horror Castle; Castle of Terror) (Dawson) (as Erich); The Gorgon (Fisher) (as Professor Carl Meister); Dr. Terror’s House of Horrors (Francis) (as Franklyn Marsh); Il castello dei morti viva (Castle of the Living Dead) (Ricci and Wise) (as Count Drago)

1965 She (Day) (as Billiali); The Face of Fu Manchu (Sharp) (title role); The Skull (Francis) (as Sir Matthew Phillips)

1966 Dracula—Prince of Darkness (Fisher) (title role); Rasputin the Mad Monk (Sharp) (title role); The Brides of Fu Manchu (Sharp) (title role)

1967 Circus of Fear (Psycho-Circus) (Moxey) (as Gregor); Theatre of Death (Blood Fiend) (Gallu) (as Phillippe Darvas); Five Golden Dragons (Summers) (as Dragon); The Vengeance of Fu Manchu (Summers) (title role); Die Schlangengrube und das Pendel (The Blood Demon) (Reinl) (as Count Regula); Victims of Terror (Victims of Vesuvius) (Bain—short); Night of the Big Heat (Island of the Burning Damned) (Fisher) (as Hanson)

1968 The Devil Rides Out (The Devil’s Bride) (Fisher) (as Duc de Richleau); The Face of Eve (Eve) (Summers) (as Colonel Stuart); Curse of the Crimson Altar (The Crimson Cult) (Sewell) (as J. D. Morley); The Blood of Fu Manchu (Kiss and Kill) (Franco) (title role); Dracula Has Risen from the Grave (Francis) (title role)

1969 The Oblong Box (Hessler) (as Dr. Neuhardt); The Magic Christian (McGrath) (as Dracula); Vampir (Portobella)

1970 Scream and Scream Again (Hessler) (as Fremont); The Castle of Fu Manchu (Franco) (title role); Julius Caesar (Burge) (as Artemidorus); Taste the Blood of Dracula (Sadsy) (title role); The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes (Wilders) (as Mycroft Holmes); The Scars of Dracula (Baker) (title role); The House That Dripped Blood (Duffell) (as John Reid); *I, Christopher Lee with Barbara Shelley in Dracula, Prince of Darkness

1971
- Hannie Caulder (Kennedy) (as Bailey); El Conde Dracula (Count Dracula) (Franco) (title role); In Search of Dracula (Floyd—doc) (title role/narrator)

1972
- The Creeping Flesh (Francis) (as James Hildern); Dracula A.D. 1972 (Gibson) (title role); Death Line (Raw Meat) (Sherman) (as Stratton-Villiers); Nothing but the Night (Sasdy) (as Colonel Bingham)

1973
- The Satanic Rites of Dracula (Count Dracula and His Vampire Brides) (Gibson) (title role); The Three Musketeers (The Queen’s Jewels) (Lester) (as Rochefort); The Wicker Man (Hardy) (as Lord Summerisle); Evlalie quitte les champs (Le Boucher, la star, et l’orpheline; The Star, The Orphan, and the Butcher) (Savary) (as Van Krig); Poor Devil (Sheerer—for TV) (title role)

1974
- Horror Express (Martin) (as Professor Alex Saxton); The Four Musketeers (Revenge of Milady) (Lester) (as Rochefort); The Man with the Golden Gun (Hamilton) (as Scaramanga); Dark Places (Sharp) (as Dr. Ian Mandeville)

1975
- Diagnosis: Murder (Diagnosis for Murder) (Hayers—for TV); To the Devil a Daughter (Sykes) (as Father Michael Rayner); Killer Force (The Diamond Mercenaries) (Guest) (as Major Chilton); Whispering Death (Goslar) (as Albino); Revenge of the Dead (Evans Lee) (as narrator); Dracula’s Son (Dracula, père et fils) (Molinaro) (as Dracula)

1976
- Alien Encounter (Starship Invasions) (Hunt—for TV) (as Capt. Ramses)

1977
- Airport ’77 (Jameson) (as Martin Wallace); Meatcleaver Massacre (Evan Lee)

1978
- End of the World (Hayes) (as Father Pergado); Caravans (Fargo) (as Sardar Khan); The Passage (Thompson) (as gypsy); Return to Witch Mountain (Hough) (as Dr. Victor Gamon); The Silent Flute (Circle of Iron) (Moore) (as Zetan); Jaguar Lives! (Pintoff) (as Adam Cain); Bear Island (Sharp) (as Professor Lechinski); The Pirate (Annakin—for TV) (as Samir)

1979
- 1941 (Spieberg) (as Captain von Kleinschmidt); Nutcracker Fantasy (Takeo Nakamura—animation) (as voice); An Arabian Adventure (Connor) (as Caliph Alquaza)

1980
- The Salamander (Zinner—for TV); Once upon a Spy (Nagy—for TV) (as Marcus Valorum); Rally (Safari 3000; Two in the Bush) (Hurwitz) (as Lorenzo Borgia); Serial (Persky) (as Luckman Skull)
Lee quickly establishing himself as an actor who did not fit readily undistinguished small roles in films, television, and the theater, with Christopher Lee's entrance into the acting profession was hardly an auspicious one. With only minimal acting experience and through the assistance of family contacts, he managed in 1947 to secure for an institution devised by British film tycoon J. Arthur Rank to foster mous with horror, and Hammer horror in particular. It is a pity, critically despised and derided of all film genres has tended to obscure although perhaps inevitable, that his association with one of the most
Since the mid-1950s Christopher Lee's name has been synonymous with horror, and Hammer horror in particular. It is a pity, although perhaps inevitable, that his association with one of the most critically despised and derided of all film genres has tended to obscure the quality of his performances within numerous horror productions and his activities elsewhere.

Christopher Lee's entrance into the acting profession was hardly an auspicious one. With only minimal acting experience and through the assistance of family contacts, he managed in 1947 to secure for himself a place at what came to be known as the Rank Charm School, an institution devised by British film tycoon J. Arthur Rank to foster and groom new acting talent. There followed nearly ten years of undistinguished small roles in films, television, and the theater, with Lee quickly establishing himself as an actor who did not fit readily

Published works

By LEE: books—

Christopher Lee's Archives of Horror, London, vol. 1, 1975, and Tall, Dark and Gruesome (autobiography), London, 1977.

By LEE: articles—

Interview, in L'Ecran Fantastique (Paris), July/August 1984.
Interview with D. Parra and P. Ross, in Revue du Cinéma (Paris), “Interview with the Ex-Vampire,” interview with R. Valley, in “Horror after Hammer,” interview with D. Fischer, in Midnight
Marquee, Summer 1993.
“Christopher and His Kind,” interview with Glenn Kenny, in TV
“Blood Brothers,” interview with Richard Johnson, in Radio Times

On LEE: books—

Pirie, David, Heritage of Horror: The English Gothic Cinema
Eyles, Allen, Robert Adkinson, and Nicholas Fry, The House of Pohle, Robert Jr., and Douglas C. Hart, The Films of Christopher Lee, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1983.
McCarty, John, Splatter Movies: Breaking the Last Taboo of the Miller, Mark A., Christopher Lee and Peter Cushing and Horror

On LEE: articles—

Ecran (Paris), December 1979.
Del Valle, D., “Tall, Dark and Gruesome,” in Films and Filming
(London), September 1985.
Parra, Danièle and Ross, Philippe, “Christopher Lee: S'évader du
Film Dope (London), March 1996.

Since the mid-1950s Christopher Lee’s name has been synonymous with horror, and Hammer horror in particular. It is a pity, into any of the accepted categories for British film actors: too tall (6’ 4”) to be a matinee idol, with looks altogether too striking to be a character performer.

But with Hammer’s 1956 production of The Curse of Frankenstein, British cinema finally found a place for Lee’s talents. Cast as the Creature, Lee managed through skillful mime to convey a real sense of physical pain and suffering. While not a performance to rival Karloff’s classic Monster from the 1930s (Hammer’s filmmakers would subsequently be much more interested in Baron Frankenstein himself rather than his inhuman progeny), it did earn Lee a place in the Hammer team and ensured that he would be a key player in that company’s enormously successful construction of a recognizably British horror cinema.

The two most distinctive features of Lee’s acting style as revealed in the Hammer films are his ability to project a sense of physicality through stance and gesture and his deep, sonorous voice. These two elements were combined to perfection in Hammer’s version of Dracula, the film that finally made Lee a star. In what was one of his most meticulous performances, Lee endowed the vampire count with an overwhelmingly sexual presence that was light years away from Bela Lugosi’s more melodramatic posturings in the part.

Lee continued to work in the horror genre throughout the 1960s and 1970s, playing a variety of authority figures, both good and evil, in some of the most noteworthy horror films of the period—The Gorgon, The Devil Rides Out, The Creeping Flesh, and The Wicker Man, to name but a few. He also brought a much-needed dignity to other, less distinguished products of the genre, including, sadly, Hammer’s own Dracula cycle which by the late 1960s was increasingly reliant on Lee’s charismatic presence to carry some rather uninspired scripts. At the same time, Lee was handing in characteristically assured and precise performances in a variety of nonhorror parts, with perhaps the best of these being the role of Mycroft Holmes in Billy Wilder’s The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes. (Lee is probably the only actor who in the course of his career has played both Sherlock and Mycroft Holmes as well as Henry Baskerville.)

It is fair to say that despite his undoubted versatility Lee is at his best in fantastic or stylized settings—whether this be Castle Dracula or Scaramanga’s exotic island retreat in the James Bond film The Man with the Golden Gun. In more realistically depicted worlds, he

Films as Actress:

1947 The Romance of Rosy Ridge (Rowland) (as Lissy Anne MacBean); If Winter Comes (Saville) (as Effie Bright)
1948 Hills of Home (Mitchell) (as Margit Mitchell); Words and Music (Taurog) (as Dorothy Feiner Rodgers)
1949 Act of Violence (Zinnemann) (as Edith Enley); Little Women (LeRoy) (as Meg); That Forsyte Woman (Sargent) (Bennett) (as June Forsyte); The Doctor and the Girl (Bernhardt) (as Evelyn Heldon); The Red Danube (Sidney) (as Maria Buhlen); Holiday Affair (Hartman) (as Connie)
1951 Strictly Dishonorable (Panama and Frank) (as Isabelle Dempsey); Angels in the Outfield (Brown) (as Nancy Peterson); It’s a Big Country (Charles Vidor and others) (as Rose Szabo)
1952 Just This Once (Weis) (as Lucy Duncan); Scaramouche (Sidney) (as Aline de Guarrillac de Bourbon); Fearless Fagan (Donen) (as Abby Ames)
1953 Confidentially Connie (Buzzell) (as Connie Bedloe); The Naked Spur (Anthony Mann) (as Linda Patch); Houdini (George Marshall) (as Bess); Walking My Baby Back Home (Bacon) (as Chris Hall)
1954 Prince Valiant (Hathaway) (as Aleta); Living It Up (Brown) (as Wally Cook); The Black Shield of Falworth (Mate) (as Lady Ann); Rogue Cop (Rowland) (as Karen)
1955 Petey Kelly’s Blues (Webb) (as Ivy Conrad); My Sister Eileen (Quine) (as Eileen Sherwood)
1956 Safari (Terence Young) (as Linda Latham)
1957 Jet Pilot (von Sternberg—produced in 1950) (as Anna)
1958 Touch of Evil (Welles) (as Susan Vargas); The Vikings (Fleischer) (as Morgana); The Perfect Furlough (Edwards) (as Lieutenant Vicki Loren)
1960 Who Was That Lady? (Sidney) (as Ann Wilson); Psycho (Hitchcock) (as Marion Crane); Pepe (Sidney) (as guest)
1962 The Manchurian Candidate (Frankenheimer) (as Rosie)
1963 Bye Bye Birdie (Sidney) (as Rosie DeLeon); Wives and Lovers (Rich) (as Bertie Austin)
1966 Kid Rodelo (Carlson) (as Nora); Three on a Couch (Lewis) (as Dr. Elizabeth Acord); Harper (Smythe) (as Susan Harper); An American Dream (Gist) (as Cherry McMahan); The Spy in the Green Hat (Sargent—edited from eps. of The Man from U.N.C.L.E. TV series) (as Miss Diketon)

---

LEIGH, Janet

Nationality: American. Born: Jeanette Helen Morrison in Mercedes, California, 26 July 1927. Education: Studied music and psychology, College of the Pacific. Family: Married 1) John Carlyle, 1942 (marriage annullled 1942); 2) Stanley Reames, 1945 (divorced 1948); 3) the actor Tony Curtis, 1951 (divorced 1962), children Kelly Lee, and the actress Jamie Lee Curtis; 4) Robert Brandt, 1964. Career: 1946—seven-year contract with MGM; 1947—film debut in The Romance of Rosy Ridge; 1949—borrowed by Howard Hughes for three RKO films, beginning with Holiday Affair; 1950s—worked with Columbia and Universal; 1957—began TV work on Schitz, Peyton Place, The Invisible Man. Address: 1625 Summit Ridge Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.
Janet Leigh in Psycho

1968 Ad Ogni Costo (Grand Slam; Top Job) (Montaldo) (as Mary Ann)
1969 Hello Down There (Sub-A-Dub-Dub) (Arnold) (as Vivian Miller); The Monk (McCowan—for TV); Honeymoon with a Stranger (Peyser—for TV)
1970 The House on Green Apple Road (Day—for TV)
1971 Deadly Dreams (Kjellin—for TV)
1972 One Is a Lonely Number (Stuart) (as Gert Meredith); Night of the Lepus (Claxton) (as Gerry Bennett)
1973 Murdoch’s Gang (Dubin—for TV)
1977 Murder at the World Series (McLaglen—for TV); Telethon (Rich—for TV) (as Elaine)
1978 The Sea Gypsies (Raffill) (as Aline de Gravillac)
1979 Boardwalk (Verona) (as Florence)
1980 The Fog (Carpenter) (as Kathy Williams); Mirror, Mirror (Lee—for TV) (as Millie Gorman)
1985 On Our Way (Pressman—for TV); Hitchcock: il brivido del genio (The Thrill of Genius) (Bortolini and Masenza)
1997 In My Sister’s Shadow (Stern—for TV) (as Kay Connor)
1998 Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later (Miner) (as Norma)
1999 Hitchcock: Shadow of a Genius (Haines) (as herself)

Publications

By LEIGH: books—

By LEIGH: articles—

“Psyched-up for Psycho,” interview with Michael Ankerich, in Classic Images (Muscatine), September 1995.
On LEIGH: books—

On LEIGH: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1995.

***

For the first decade of her career (and to a great extent subsequently as well), Janet Leigh’s screen persona was restricted almost exclusively to Hollywood’s most conventional image of the ‘‘nice girl.’’ Before Psycho, she appeared in a few distinguished films (the swashbuckler Scaramouche; The Naked Spur, one of Anthony Mann’s most intense Westerns; the charming if minor My Sister Eileen; and of course Touch of Evil), but none of them gave her the opportunity to construct a star identity that transcended the persona’s conventionality, nor, unfortunately, have any of her films since Psycho.

Her roles in Touch of Evil and Psycho are so strikingly (if superficially and coincidentally) similar that it is instructive to compare the use made of her by Welles and Hitchcock. In both, she is trapped in an otherwise deserted and isolated motel and cruelly terrorized. It is in Touch of Evil that the animus against women—and, especially, female sexuality—that disfigures all of Welles’s films except The Magnificent Ambersons is most blatantly exposed. He gives Leigh’s Suzie the film’s tritest dialogue (occasionally sprinkled with automatic smart-ass racism), establishing a brash superficiality that, while at odds with Leigh’s conventional ‘‘nice girl’’ persona, can scarcely be said to extend it profitably. She is encouraged to be both spunky and sexual, but any possible positive connotations those qualities might suggest are neutralized by the character’s shrillness and insensitivity (as far as men are concerned, she is a real nuisance). She can then be punished in the film’s protracted terrorization and rape sequences, shot and edited with unmistakable relish, the character reduced to an object on which any horror can be inflicted.

The objectification of Leigh in Touch of Evil has its answer in Psycho, where, throughout the film’s first part, she is the central identification-figure for audience and director, the movement of her consciousness conveyed with almost unprecedented intimacy and inwardness. Hitchcock’s point-of-view methodology produces a performance whose effectiveness might seem dependent upon editing (Marion Crane’s car journey contains few shots lasting more than a few seconds, and, after one brief establishing two-shot, the entire Marion/Norman dialogue on which the film hinges is built on cross-cutting). Yet the more one sees the film the more one is convinced that the inexhaustible fascination of its first half owes a great deal to Leigh’s presence: the precise communication of Marion’s shifting perceptions and states of mind is the fruit of one of the cinema’s great performer/director collaborations, dwarfing everything else in Leigh’s career.

Although Leigh has not officially retired from acting, she has devoted most of her time in recent years to appearing on the lecture circuit discussing her work with Hitchcock in Psycho, Welles in Touch of Evil, and John Frankenheimer in The Manchurian Candidate, the best film of her post-Psycho period even though she had a relatively thankless role in it as Frank Sinatra’s love interest.

She has also turned to writing, producing an autobiography in 1984 and a chatty memoir about the making of Psycho in 1995. The book is entertaining and readable but relatively lightweight in the research department compared with Stephen Rebello’s definitive Alfred Hitchcock and the Making of ‘‘Psycho’’ published five years earlier.

Like a number of Hollywood stars in the twilight of their careers, a list that includes Kirk Douglas and Leigh’s former husband Tony Curtis, she has also tried her hand at fiction—using Hollywood as a backdrop for her first novel, House of Destiny, the story of an aging star not unlike Leigh herself.

—Robin Wood, updated by John McCarty

LEIGH, Jennifer Jason

Nationality: American. Born: Jennifer Jason Leigh Morrow in Los Angeles, California, 5 February 1962; daughter of the actor Vic Morrow and the writer Barbara Turner. Education: Trained at the Lee Strasberg Institute. Career: Began appearing as a guest actress in... on such TV series as Family, The Waltons, and Trapper John, M.D., 1970s; made her stage debut in a Los Angeles Valley College production of The Shadow Box, 1979; made her screen debut in Eyes of a Stranger, 1981; earned her first important notices in Fast Times at Ridgemont High, 1982. Awards: Best Supporting Actress New York Film Critics Circle, Best Supporting Actress Boston Society of Film Critics, for Miami Blues and Last Exit to Brooklyn, 1990; Venice Film Festival Volpi Cup-Best Ensemble Cast, for Short Cuts, 1993; honored with a tribute at the Telluride Festival, 1994; Best Actress Independent Spirit Film Award, Best Actress National Society of Film Critics, Best Actress Chicago Film Critics, for Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle, 1994; Montreal World Film Festival Best Actress, New York Film Critics Circle Best Actress, for Georgia, 1995. Agent: ICM, 8942 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90211, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1978 The Young Runaways (Mayberry—for TV) (as Heather)
1980 Angel City (Leacock—for TV) (as Kristy Teeter)
1981 Eyes of a Stranger (Wiederhorn) (as Tracy); The Killing of Randy Webster (Wanamaker—for TV) (as Amy Wheeler); The Best Little Girl in the World (O’Steen—for TV) (as Casey Powell)
1982 Fast Times at Ridgemont High (Heckerling) (as Stacy Hamilton); Wrong Is Right (The Man with the Deadly Lens) (Richard Brooks) (as young girl); The First Time (Nosseck—for TV) (as Bonny Dillon)
1983 Easy Money (Signorelli) (as Allison Capoletti); Girls of the White Orchid (Death Ride to Osaka) (Kaplan—for TV) (as Carol Heath)
1984 Grandview, U.S.A. (Kleiser) (as Candy Webster)
1985 Flesh + Blood (The Rose and the Sword) (Verhoeven) (as Agnes)
1986 The Hitcher (Harmon) (as Nash); The Men’s Club (Medak) (as Teensy)
1987 Under Cover (Stockwell) (as Tanille La Rue); Sister, Sister (Condron) (as Lucy Bonnard)
1988 Heart of Midnight (Chapman) (as Carol Rivers); God Bless the Child (Eikann—for TV)
1989 Last Exit to Brooklyn (Edel) (as Tralala); The Big Picture (Guest) (as Lydia Johnson)
1990 Miami Blues (Armitage) (as Susie “Pepper” Waggoner); Buried Alive (Till Death Do Us Part) (Darabont—for TV) (as Joanna Goodman)
1991 Rush (Zanuck) (as Kristen); Backdraft (Ron Howard) (as Jennifer Vaitkus); Crooked Hearts (Bortman) (as Marriet)
1992 Single White Female (Schroeder) (as Hedra Carlson); The Prom (Shainberg) (as Lana)
1993 Short Cuts (Altman) (as Lois Kaiser)
1994 The Hudsocker Proxy (Coen) (as Amy Archer); Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle (Rudolph) (as Dorothy Parker)
1995 Dolores Claiborne (Hackford) (as Selena St. George); Georgia (Grosbard) (as Sadie, + co-pr)
1996 Kansas City (Altman) (as Blondie O’Hara); Bastard Out of Carolina (Huston—for TV) (as Anney)
1997 Washington Square (Holland) (as Catherine Sloper); Spawn II (Nelson, Radomski—for TV) (as voice of Lilly); A Thousand Acres (Moorhouse—for TV) (as Caroline Cook)

1998 The Love Letter (Curtis—for TV) (as Elizabeth Whitcomb); Thanks to a Grateful Nation (Holcomb—mini for TV) (as Teri Small); Hercules (for TV) (as voice of Tempest the Amazon)
1999 eXistenZ (Cronenberg) (as Allegra Geller)
2000 Skipped Parts (Davis) (as Lydia Callahan); The King Is Alive (Levering); Beautiful View (Turner)

Publications

By LEIGH: articles—

“‘Midnight Heart,’” interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1990.
Interview with Lance Loud, in Interview (New York), May 1990.
Interview with Jeff Yarbrough, in Interview (New York), April 1991.
Interview with John Turturro, in Interview (New York), January 1996.

On LEIGH: articles—

Jennifer Jason Leigh’s most typical roles have been young women who are deeply vulnerable, and whose lives have taken disastrous, potentially tragic turns. Her characters often are quite sexually active, using their bodies and their sexuality to temporarily—but never permanently—ward off their demons.

Her performances are consistently memorable. Her first substantial screen role came in Fast Times at Ridgemont High, released in 1982, when Leigh was 20 years old. Her character is a forerunner of many of her later roles: Stacy Hamilton, a virginal high school student who is so curious about sex that she soon is “doing it” with everyone in sight, much to her eventual disillusionment and degradation. Fast Times at Ridgemont High featured a large cast of up-and-comers, including Sean Penn, Judge Reinhold, Phoebe Cates, and Forest Whitaker (and, in smaller roles, Eric Stoltz, Anthony Edwards, and Nicolas Cage). Yet Leigh was singled out as a star-to-be. “Don’t they know they have a star on their hands?” raved critic Roger Ebert. “I didn’t even know who Leigh was when I walked into [the film], and yet I was completely won over by her. She contained so much life and light that she was a joy to behold.”

Through the 1980s, Leigh found herself in a series of mostly unmemorable movies. Her next eye-catching performances came in Miami Blues, playing an ingenuous young woman whose boyfriend is a killer, and Last Exit to Brooklyn, cast as a troubled prostitute struggling to survive in a chaotic world. Two impressive follow-ups were Rush (as a narcotics cop who becomes addicted to both drugs and her troubled partner) and Single White Female (playing a psycho roommate—and an all-out villainess). Leigh’s most representative performances were in Miami Blues and Rush; both are related to Fast Times at Ridgemont High in that her characters start out as well-scrubbed or well-meaning innocents but end up exploited and mistreated.

Leigh has not always played the bleary-eyed, substance-abusing victim. In The Big Picture, she displays a flair for comedy as a zany performance artist. In Short Cuts, she is a matter-of-fact working-class housewife employed as a phone-sex worker, who diapers her baby as she purrs erotic nothings into the ears of faceless strangers at the other end of the line. And in The Hudsucker Proxy, Leigh is Amy Archer, Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter who sets out to destroy paper-tiger corporate president Norville Barnes (Tim Robbins). The actress plays the role with more than a touch of Katharine Hepburn in her voice and mannerisms. Archer might be a variation of the character Hepburn played opposite Spencer Tracy decades earlier in Woman of the Year: a tough and respected journalist who is feminized in the course of the story.

A truly outstanding—and controversial—starring role came in Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle, Alan Rudolph’s take on the famed Algonquin Round Table of the 1920s. At the film’s core is the character of the writer-humorist Dorothy Parker (played by Leigh). She renders Parker as a brittle, sensitive lost soul, a woman who attained a certain level of professional success but who was not destined to find personal contentment. Some felt Leigh’s acting to be Oscar-worthy; others were convinced she was grossly miscast, and garbled her way through her performance. In any case, she did not have the central role in her follow-up to Mrs. Parker. In Dolores Claiborne, Leigh is Selena St. George, a psychologically scarred journalist who is long estranged from the title character, her mother (Kathy Bates). Bates’s performance is the commanding one here; Leigh’s role is the less sensational. But the two actresses play off one another quite effectively.

In her next film, Georgia, scripted by her mother, Barbara Turner—her father is the late actor Vic Morrow—Leigh finally secured what may prove to be the role of a lifetime. Georgia, to be sure, is not a great film, but it does offer what was to be one of the most outstanding performances of 1995. Leigh commands the screen as Sadie, a young woman whose older sister, Georgia, is a famous and beloved folk-rock singer who is as well-adjusted as she is beautiful. Sadie is something else altogether. She is a self-destructive wannabe singer who toils as a motel housekeeper and plays with bands in dreary bars and bowling alleys, while her sister fills concert halls. Sadie drinks “whatever’s cheap or free,” and often does so first thing in the morning. She at once admires and loves her sister, and is jealous of her success. This only partially explains the underlying tension between the two, which plays itself out as the story unfolds. The film’s major flaw is that Sadie is depicted as having little talent, which simply is not true. Sadie might be a clone of Janis Joplin; in the person of Leigh, she offers moving renditions of various songs, especially Van Morrison’s “Take Me Back.” The result is a case of an actress transcending her character’s limitations.

During the latter half of the 1990s, Leigh kept on playing desperate characters. In Kansas City, Robert Altman’s flavorful Depression-era saga, she is Blondie O’Hara, a despairing young telegraph operator who is obsessively in love with her husband, a pea-brained young hood, and concocts a scheme that involves the kidnapping of a prominent socialite. In The Hudsucker Proxy, she plays a virtual reality game designer who finds herself trapped in one of her own concoctions. In Anjelica Huston’s controversial Bastard Out of Carolina, she is an emotionally fragile, tragically dependent woman who ignores her second husband’s sexual abuse of her pre-teen daughter. In Lucinda Williams’ A Thousand Acres, a muddling King Lear variation, she is one of three daughters of a stubborn farm patriarch (and is overshadowed by Michelle Pfeiffer and Jessica Lange, cast as her siblings). By far her best role of the period was in Agnieszka Holland’s version of Henry James’s Washington Square. Here, Leigh is cast as Catherine Sloper, the awkward, plain-Jane daughter of wealthy, domineering Dr. Austin Sloper (Albert Finney), who finds herself suddenly courted by poor-but-dashing fortune hunter Morris Townsend (Ben Chaplin). As in Dolores Claiborne, Georgia, Kansas City, Bastard Out of Carolina, and A Thousand Acres, Leigh plays a character with a complex familial bond.

Almost 50 years earlier, Washington Square was filmed as The Heiress, with Olivia de Havilland winning a Best Actress Oscar for LEIGH, Vivien

Films as Actress:

1934 Things Are Looking Up (de Courville) (as schoolgirl)
1935 The Village Squire (Denham) (as Rose Venables); Gentleman’s Agreement (Pearson) (as Phil Stanley); Look Up and Laugh (Dean) (as Marjorie Belfer)
1936 Fire over England (William K. Howard) (as Cynthia)
1937 Dark Journey (Saville) (as Madeleine Godard); Storm in a Teacup (Saville and Dalrymple) (as Victoria Grow); 21 Days (Twenty-One Days Together; The First and the Last) (Dean) (as Wanda)
1938 A Yank at Oxford (Conway) (as Elsa Craddock); St. Martin’s Lane (Sidewalks of London) (Whelan) (as Libby)
1939 Gone with the Wind (Fleming)—additional scenes directed by Cukor, Wood, Menzies, and David O. Selznick) (as Scarlett O’Hara)
1940 Waterloo Bridge (LeRoy) (as Myra Lester)
1941 That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (Korda) (title role)
1946 Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal) (as Cleopatra)
1948 Anna Karenina (Duvivier) (title role)
1951 A Streetcar Named Desire (Kazan) (as Blanche Dubois)
1954 Elephant Walk (Dieterle) (as Ruth Wiley in Ceylon long shots)
1955 The Deep Blue Sea (Litvak) (as Hester Collyer)
1961 The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone (Quintero) (title role)
1965 Ship of Fools (Kramer) (as Mary Treadwell)

Publications

On LEIGH: books—

On LEIGH: articles—

Current Biography 1946, New York, 1946.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1986.
Stars (Mariembourg), March 1990.

* * *

Vivien Leigh was a complex personality though she appeared at first to be just a petite, distinctly upper-class young girl with an unusual, refined kind of beauty that seemed to approach perfection. She was determined to go on the stage in spite of a privileged upbringing, a convent education, and an early marriage which brought her a house in Mayfair. By 1935 she had appeared on the London stage and in her first film.

It was her romantic supporting role in Fire over England in 1936, opposite Laurence Olivier as a dashing young man in the court of Elizabeth I, that led to one of the cinema’s most celebrated acting partnerships, as famous a love-match in its time as that between Burton and Taylor in the 1960s. Olivier’s Hollywood engagement to play Heathcliff in Wuthering Heights drew Leigh to California in his wake, and her arrival coincided with the prolonged search for a suitable actress to appear as the seductive, self-willed Scarlett O’Hara in Gone with the Wind. In the face of the fiercest competition, Myron Selznick persuaded his brother David to give her the part, and her success in a role that seemed made to her measure led to world fame and an Academy Award. Nevertheless, her special qualities—elfin stature, a grace of movement and gesture, and a porcelain-like facial beauty always enhanced by subtle black-and-white cinematography—had already been revealed in the romantic British film St. Martin’s Lane, opposite Charles Laughton as a street entertainer entranced by her vagrant, waiflike girl.

The outbreak of World War II brought Olivier back to London, and Leigh (who was free to marry him only in 1940 due to the complications of their respective divorces) temporarily halted her promising Hollywood career in order to be with him during his period of war service in the Fleet Air Arm. Nevertheless, she appeared with Robert Taylor in the American film Waterloo Bridge, made in Britain, and with Olivier in Alexander Korda’s That Hamilton Woman, in which she was again able to play the siren in a romanticized version of the notorious, obsessive relationship between Lord Nelson and Emma Hamilton.

From this point on, Leigh was to maintain an active stage career, together with infrequent film appearances. She worked closely with Olivier in many stage productions, notably Shakespearean seasons in Britain and America. She was effective in Gabriel Pascal’s ponderous screen adaptation of Shaw’s Caesar and Cleopatra and as the ill-fated heroine in Julien Duvivier’s filming of Anna Karenina. Having played Blanche Dubois in Olivier’s London stage production of A Streetcar Named Desire, she was invited by Elia Kazan to recreate the role in his 1951 screen version of the Tennessee Williams play.

One wishes Leigh had not treated the movies disdainfully in favor of living up to the demands of being Lady Olivier on stage. Despite health problems stemming from tuberculosis and spells of nervous exhaustion, she managed to enchant audiences on both sides of the Atlantic, even winning a Tony Award for her musical comedy brio in Tovarich. It is one of the cinema’s great ironies that a genteel Englishwoman’s most notable screen roles were both quintessentially American Southern belles. In inhabiting the fierce soul of Dixie in Gone with the Wind and then illuminating the decline visited upon Southern hospitality in Streetcar Named Desire, Leigh rose to the occasion of giving definitive interpretations to two great roles in one lifetime. If one examines Joanne Whaley-Kilmer chafing udder her starched petticoats in television’s Scarlett or Ann-Margret and Jessica Lange riding their respective Streetcars, one is confronted with understudies barely scratching the surface of indelible creations Leigh clawed to singular life. If Tennessee William’s The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone fails to camouflage its homosexual undercurrents, Leigh brings great dignity to a crudely directed film about the symbolic link between death and the decay of desirability. After this hothouse chronicle of the unloved (which can be viewed as a menopausal horror film), she turned up her pert nose at another gambol through the magnolias, the scary Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte, and instead graced the stage once more. Booked aboard the metaphoric claptrap of Ship of Fools, Stanley Kramer’s floating Judgment at Nuremberg, Leigh sails above her material with a luminous portrait of a coquette unwilling to sell herself short despite the ravages of time. Magically when Leigh does the Charleston, the years melt away; Leigh always acted with her entire being, and one can sense her feeding the role of Mrs. Treadwell with her own despair about time running out. Whatever physical or psychological demons she wrestled with, she was never an actress for half-measures and she danced out of her film career on a high note on the high dramatic seas of Ship of Fools. She died in 1967 while rehearsing with Michael Redgrave for a stage production of Albee’s Delicate Balance.

—Roger Manvell, updated by Robert Pardi

LEMMON, Jack

Nationality: American. Born: John Uhler Lemmon III in Boston, 8 February 1925. Education: Attended Rivers Country Day School, Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts; Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, graduated 1943; Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, B.A. and B.S., 1947; studied acting in New York with Uta Hagen. Military Service: Served as communications officer in Naval Reserve, 1945. Family: Married 1) the actress Cynthia Stone, 1950 (divorced 1956), son: actor Christopher (Chris) Lemmon; 2) the actress Felicia Farr, 1962, daughter: Courtney. Career: After graduating from Harvard, worked as a piano player at the Old Nick saloon in New York, 1948; worked as an actor in radio soap opera; was producer and actor in several TV series: That Wonderful Guy, 1949–50, The Couple Next Door, 1950, The Ad-Libbers, 1951, and Heaven for Betsy, 1952, all with Cynthia Stone; made Broadway debut in Room Service, 1953; signed a contract with Columbia Pictures, 1953; made film debut in It Should Happen to You, 1954; was a regular on TV series Alcoa Theatre, 1957–58; appeared on Broadway in Face of a Hero, 1958; directed the film Kotch, 1971; narrated the The Wild West TV mini-series, 1993. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Academy Award, for Mister Roberts, 1955; Best Foreign Actor British Academy Award, Best Motion Picture Actor-Musical/Comedy Golden Globe, for Some Like It Hot, 1959, Best Foreign Actor British Academy Award, Best Motion Picture Actor-Musical/Comedy Golden Globe, for The Apartment, 1960; Best Actor San Sebastian International Film Festival, for Days of Wine and Roses, 1962; Best Motion Picture Actor-Musical/Comedy Golden Globe, for Avanti!, 1971; Best Actor Academy Award, for Save the Tiger, 1973; Best Actor British Academy Award, Cannes Film Festival Best Actor, for The China Syndrome, 1979; Berlin Film Festival Best Actor, Best Foreign Actor Genie Award, for Tribute, 1981; Cannes Film Festival Best Actor, for Missing, 1982; National Board of Review Career Achievement Award, 1986; American Film Institute Lifetime Achievement Award, 1988; Screen Actors Guild Lifetime Achievement Award, 1990; American Comedy Awards Lifetime Achievement Award, 1991; Cecil B. DeMille Golden Globe, 1991; National Board of Review Best Actor, Venice Film Festival Volpi Cup for Best Actor, for Glengarry Glen Ross, 1992; Venice Film Festival Volpi Cup for Best Ensemble Cast, for Short Cuts, 1993; Berlin Film Festival Honorary Golden Bear, 1996; Outstanding Performance by a Male Actor in a Television Movie or Miniseries Screen Actors Guild Award, for Tuesdays with Morrie, 1999; Best Performance by an Actor in a Mini-Series or Motion Picture Made for TV Golden Globe, for Inherit the Wind, 1999; Hollywood Film Festival Lifetime Achievement Award, 1999. Agent: Jalem Productions, 141 El Camino, Suite 201, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1954 It Should Happen to You (Cukor) (as Pete Sheppard); Phffft! (Robson) (as Robert Tracy)
1955 Three for the Show (Potter) (as Marty Stewart); Mister Roberts (Ford and LeRoy) (as Ensign Pulver); My Sister Eileen (Quine) (as Bob Baker)
1956 You Can’t Run Away from It (Powell) (as Peter Warne)
1957 Fire Down Below (Parrish) (as Tony); Operation Mad Ball (Quine) (as Pvt. Hogan)
1958 Cowboy (Daves) (as Frank Harris); Bell, Book and Candle (Quine) (as Nicky Holroyd)
1959 Some Like It Hot (Wilder) (as Jerry/Daphne); It Happened to Jane (Quine) (as George Denham)
1960 The Apartment (Wilder) (as Baxter); Pepe (Sidney) (as himself)
1961 The Wackiest Ship in the Army (Murphy) (as Lt. Rip Crandall)
1962 Stowaway in the Sky (Lamorisse) (as narrator); The Notorious Landlady (Quine) (as William Gridley); Days of Wine and Roses (Edwards) (as Joe)
1963 Irma la Douce (Wilders) (as Nestor); Under the Yum-Yum Tree (Swift) (as Hogan)
1964 Good Neighbor Sam (Swift) (as Sam Bissel)
1965 How to Murder Your Wife (Quine) (as Stanley Ford); The Great Race (as Prof. Fate) (Edwards)
1966 The Fortune Cookie (Wilder) (as Harry Hinkle)
1967 Luv (Donner) (as Harry Berlin)
1968 The Odd Couple (Saks) (as Felix Ungar)
1969 The April Fools (Rosenberg) (as Howard Brubaker)
1970 The Out-of-Towners (Hiller) (as George Kellerman)
1972 The War Between Men and Women (Shavelson) (as Peter Wilson); Avanti! (Wilder) (as Wendell Armbruster)
1973 Save the Tiger (Avildsen) (as Harry Stoner)
1974 Wednesday (Kupfer); The Front Page (Wilder) (as Hildy Johnson)
1975 The Prisoner of Second Avenue (Frank) (as Mel)
1976 The Entertainer (Wrye—for TV) (as Archie Rice); Alex and the Gypsy (Korty) (as Alexander Main)
1977 Airport ’77 (Jameson) (as Don Gallagher)
1979 The China Syndrome (Bridges) (as Jack Goddell)
1980 Tribute (Clark) (as Scottie Templeton)
1981 Buddy Buddy (Wilders) (as Victor Clooney)
1982 Missing (Costa-Gavras) (as Ed Horman)
1985 Mass Appeal (Glenn Jordan) (as Father Tim Farley); Macaroni (Scola) (as Robert)

1986 That’s Life (Edwards) (as Harvey Fairchild)
1987 Long Day’s Journey into Night (Miller—for TV)
1988 The Murder of Mary Phagan (Hale—for TV) (as Gov. John Staton)
1989 Dad (Goldberg) (as Jake Tremont)
1991 JFK (Stone) (as Jack Martin)
1992 Glengarry Glen Ross (Foley) (as Shelley Levine); The Player (Altman) (as himself); For Richer, for Poorer (Sandrich—for TV) (as Aram Katourian)
1993 A Life in the Theater (Mosher—for TV) (as Robert); Short Cuts (Altman) (as Paul Finnigan); Grumpy Old Men (Petric) (as John Gustafson); Earth and the American Dream (Couturie) (doc) (voice only); Luck, Trust & Ketchup: Robert Altman In Carver Country (Dorr, Kaplan) (doc) (as Interviewee)
1994 The Grass Harp (Charles Matthau) (as Morris Ritz); Grumpier Old Men (Deutch) (as John Gustafson); Getting Away with Murder (Harvey Miller) (as Max Mueller/Luger)
1996 Hamlet (Branagh) (as Marcellus); A Weekend in the Country (Bregman—for TV) (as Bud Bailey); My Fellow Americans (Segal) (as Russell P. Kramer)
1997  Puppies for Sale (Krauss); Out to Sea (Coolidge) (as Herb Sullivan); 12 Angry Men (Friedkin—for TV) (as Juror #8)
1998  The Long Way Home (Jordan—for TV) (as Tom Gerrin); The Odd Couple II (Deutch) (as Felix Ungar)
1999  Inherit the Wind (Petrie—for TV) (as Henry Drummond); Tuesdays with Morrie (Jackson—for TV) (as Morrie Schwartz); Forever Hollywood (Glassman, McCarthy) (doc)
2000  The Legend of Bagger Vance (Redford) (as Hardy Greaves)

Film as Director:

1971  Kotch (+ ro as stranger on bus)

Publications

By LEMMON: articles—

“Such Fun to Be Funny,” in Films and Filming (London), November 1960.
Interview with S. Greenberg, in Film Comment (New York), May-June 1973.
“Saint Jack,” interview with Michael Wilmington, in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1993.

On LEMMON: books—

On LEMMON: articles—

Brandlmeier, Thomas, “Die Berlinale als Verleger: Wyler, Kazan, Lemmon,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), 12–18 February 1996.

* * *

In Jack Lemmon’s special brand of comedy, he spotlights the futility of the well-brought-up and well-intentioned male who flounders in a society rife with corruption and hypocrisy. His characters can triumph only when they develop a stronger sense of self, and take stands against those who abuse them. The flip side of this marvelous actor is that he is equally adept at playing dramatic roles. He is at his finest when cast as characters who either are sadly and tragically deluded, or are complacent, average Americans who become radicalized by events that shatter their value systems.

As a younger movie star, Lemmon’s best roles were as characters who moved from states of innocence to states of awareness through painful, if often humorous, experience. This type of character development highlighted Lemmon’s nuances of gesture and facial expressions to their best advantage, as the characters endured bafflement and disorientation in their brave attempts to understand their world. In Mr. Roberts, Lemmon’s Ensign Pulver starts out a comical wheeler-dealer, a jester-schwer who is far more adept at talking than functioning. But upon hearing of the death of the title character, who had been in conflict with his ship’s martinet captain, Pulver’s face and entire form are energized as he defiantly throws the captain’s sacred palm tree overboard. Through most of The Apartment (in which Lemmon, as he often was in the initial phases of his career, is directed by Billy Wilder), his character, C. C. Baxter, is caught in a web of petty corporate corruption. In order to curry favor with his superiors, Baxter lends them his apartment for their overnight trysts, resulting in habitual inconvenience and many a sleepless night. Finally, having fallen in love with his boss’s mistress, Baxter regains his dignity and quits his job. Lemmon plays this spineless organization man to perfection, making his transformation all the more impressive. Few viewers can resist the moment when Baxter thrusts out his formerly weak chin and tells his boss what he can do with the job and his key to the executive washroom.

Lemmon’s other great early career comic performance came in a classic concoction meant strictly for laughs, Some Like It Hot, in which he and Tony Curtis dress in drag and join an all-girl band after accidentally witnessing the St. Valentine’s Day Massacre. In 1966, still barely over a quarter-way through his career, Lemmon was paired with Walter Matthau in The Fortune Cookie, an inspired teaming which has continued through various other films well into the 1990s. Lemmon and Matthau are at their best when playing polar opposites who find themselves united by happenstance. They have never been funnier than in The Odd Couple, in which both actors’ comic abilities are exploited to the extreme with Lemmon as the neurotically obsessive neatnik Felix Ungar and Matthau as the glorious slob Oscar Madison.

In Lemmon’s initial noteworthy roles, he was called upon to be a comic actor. But as his career progressed, he displayed his flip side as a superb dramatic actor-tragedian. His first great dramatic role is Joe, the pathetic alcoholic, in Days of Wine and Roses. In Save the Tiger, he brilliantly plays another miserable creature, Harry Stoner, a dress manufacturer who (like so many of his comic characters) has lost his innocence. But in so doing, he has become a weaker rather than stronger man as he shrugs his shoulders and submits to the daily acts of degradation he feels are necessary to his survival in the business world. Lemmon plays a variation on this character in Glengarry Glen Ross, David Mamet’s emotionally gripping adaptation of his stage play, in which Lemmon gives what is perhaps his most riveting late-career screen performance as real estate salesman Shelley “The Machine” Levine. As with Willy Loman in Death of a Salesman—and Harry Stoner in Save the Tiger—Levine is an aging, desperate man. He will say anything and do anything to get the good leads that will allow him an audience for his tired sales pitches. Levine is all sweat and angst beneath his superficially friendly handshake, and Lemmon plays him with a master touch.

The actor has also played more sympathetic dramatic characters. He commands the screen in two overtly political dramas in which his characters undergo catharses similar to the ones experienced by his more comic alter-egos. In The China Syndrome, Lemmon plays nuclear power plant worker Jack Godell, a loyal company man who is transformed upon realizing that the authorities have failed to deal with the causes of an accidental meltdown at his plant. In Missing, he is conservative American businessman Edorman, who becomes radicalized upon the disappearance of his son in a Latin American country, and by his realization of America’s squalid complicity in the country’s repressive policies.

As Lemmon’s career entered its fifth decade, the actor made a brief but memorable appearance in The Grass Harp, directed by Charles (son of Walter) Matthau. Here, he plays just the type of character who might have been his nemesis in The Apartment: a slick, scheming entrepreneur-shyster who entices and then cons a narrow-minded, naive small-town businesswoman. He is especially fine in his poignant vignette in Short Cuts, playing a character who has forgotten how to feel: a father, estranged for many years from his son, who reenters the latter’s life from out of nowhere—and who does not even know his own grandson’s name. Another excellent starring role came in A Life in the Theater, a television movie which, like Glengarry Glen Ross, is based on a David Mamet play. Lemmon plays Robert, an older actor who has devoted his life to the stage; in fact, to him, life is the theater. He and a younger actor are seen rehearsing, performing, and forever discussing and arguing about the craft of acting during a season of repertory plays. Primarily, A Life in the Theater serves as a showcase for Lemmon, who offers a canny, knowing performance as Robert—yet one more in a seemingly unending line of colorful, memorable characterizations.

Not all of Lemmon’s late-career roles have been serious and dramatic. In 1993, he was re-teamed with old pal Walter Matthau in Grumpier Old Men. The two were cast as senior citizen variations of The Odd Couple’s Oscar and Felix: lifelong pals who endlessly and comically feud. The film’s success led to a by-the-numbers sequel, Grumpier Old Men, the manely comic Out to Sea, and the distressingly unnecessary and unfunny Odd Couple II. Particularly in the latter, the actors are game—but their act is tired. Lemmon fared a bit better when paired with fellow senior actor James Garner in the comedy My Fellow Americans, with both cast as former American presidents who despise each other but must work together to foil a nefarious scheme.

Lemmon’s most important late-1990s credits are a trio of high-profile made-for-TV movies: projects that are too intelligent and literate for Hollywood to make into theatrical features. In 12 Angry Men, Inherit the Wind, and Tuesdays with Morrie, the actor offers sterling performances. And as he has aged, he has come to be viewed as an American treasure, an actor’s actor who is beloved by his peers. In 1998, Lemmon earned a Golden Globe nomination for 12 Angry Men, but was bested for the prize by Ving Rhames (for his performance in Don King: Only in America). While accepting his award, Rhames respectfully called Lemmon to the stage and all but handed over his trophy. Then Kevin Spacey, upon winning his Best Actor Academy Award for 1999’s American Beauty, paid special, heartfelt tribute to Lemmon in his acceptance speech.

—Rodney Farnsworth, updated by Rob Edelman

LEWIS, Jerry

Joseph; 2) the actress/dancer Sandra Pitnick, 1983, one daughter.

Awards: Commander of the Order of Arts and Letters, and Commander of the Legion of Honor, France, 1984; DHL (hon.), Mercy College, 1987; Prof. cinema, University of Southern California.

Agent: William Morris Agency, Inc., 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>My Friend Irma (George Marshall) (as Seymour)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>At War with the Army (Walker) (as Pfc. Alvin Korwin); My Friend Irma Goes West (Walker) (as Seymour); The Milkman (Barton) (as milkman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>That’s My Boy (Walker) (as Junior Jackson); Sailor Beware (Walker) (as Melvin Jones)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Road to Bali (Walker) (cameo); Jumping Jacks (Taurog) (as Hap Smith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>The Stooge (Taurog—produced in 1951) (title role); The Caddy (Taurog) (title role); Money from Home (George Marshall) (as Virgil Yokum); Scared Stiff (George Marshall) (as Myron Myron Mertz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Living It Up (Taurog) (as Homer Flagg); Three Ring Circus (Jerrico, the Wonder Clown) (Pevney) (as Jerry Hotchkiss)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>You’re Never Too Young (Taurog) (as Wilbur Hoolick); Artists and Models (Tashlin) (as Eugene Fullstack)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Pardners (Taurog) (as Wade Kingsley Jr./Wade Kingsley Sr.); Hollywood or Bust (Tashlin) (as Malcolm Smith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Delicate Delinquent (McGuire) (as Sidney Pythias, + pr); The Sad Sack (George Marshall) (as Bixby)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Rock-a-Bye-Baby (Tashlin) (as Clayton Poole, + pr); The Geisha Boy (Tashlin) (title role, + pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>L’il Abner (Frank) (cameo); Don’t Give Up the Ship (Taurog) (as John Paul Steckler)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Visit to a Small Planet (Taurog) (as Kreton); Cinderella (Tashlin) (title role, + pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>It’s Only Money (Tashlin) (as Lester March)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (cameo as mad driver); Who’s Minding the Store? (Tashlin) (as Raymond Pfiffner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>The Disorderly Orderly (Tashlin) (title role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Boeing, Boeing (Rich) (as Robert Reed)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Way . . . Way Out (Gordon Douglas) (as Peter Mattemore)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Don’t Raise the Bridge, Lower the River (Paris) (as George Lester)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Hook, Line and Sinker (George Marshall) (as Peter Ingersoll, + pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Director and Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Bellboy (title role, + pr, sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>The Ladies’ Man (as Herbert Herbert Heebert/Heebert’s mother, + pr, co-sc); The Errand Boy (title role, + co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>The Nutty Professor (as Professor Julius Kelp/Buddy Love, + co-pr, co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>The Patsy (as Stanley Belt, + co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>The Family Jewels (as Willard Woodward/the Peyton Brothers, + pr, co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Three on a Couch (as Christopher Pride/Warren/Ringo/Rutherford/Heather, + pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>The Big Mouth (title role, + pr, co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Which Way to the Front? (as Brendan Byers III, + pr); One More Time (d only)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>The Day the Clown Cried (not completed) (title role, + sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Hardly Working (as Bo Hooper, + co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Cracking Up (Smorgasbord) (as Warren Neffron/Dr. Perks, + co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By LEWIS: books—

By LEWIS: articles—

“Mr. Lewis Is a Pussycat,” interview with Peter Bodganovich, in Esquire (New York), November 1962.

Interview with D. Rabourdin, in Cinéma (Paris), April 1980.

Interview with Serge Daney, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1983.

On LEWIS: books—

Marchesini, Mauro, Jerry Lewis: Un comico a perdere, Verona, Italy, 1983.

On LEWIS: articles—

Hume, Rod, ‘‘Martin and Lewis: Are Their Critics Wrong?,’’ in Films and Filming (London), March 1956.
Taylor, John, ‘‘Jerry Lewis,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1965.
Sarris, Andrew, ‘‘Editor’s Eyrie,’’ in Cahiers du Cinéma in English (New York), no. 4, 1966.
Coursodon, J.-P., ‘‘Jerry Lewis’s Films: No Laughing Matter?,’’ in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1975.
Shearer, H., ‘‘Telethon,’’ in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1979.
Shearer, H., ‘‘Telethon,’’ in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1979.
Jerry Lewis Section of Casablanca (Madrid), June 1983.
‘‘Jerry Lewis,’’ in Film Dope (London), September 1986.

Hoberman, J., ‘‘Before There Was Scarface, There Was Rubberface,’’ in Interview (New York), February 1993.
Rapf, Joanna E., ‘‘Comic Theory from Feminist Perspective: A Look at Jerry Lewis,’’ in Journal of Popular Culture (Bowling Green, Ohio), Summer 1993.
Krutnik, Frank, ‘‘Jerry Lewis: The Deformation of the Comic,’’ in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Fall 1994.
Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1995.
Seessler, Georg, ‘‘Cinderella & Big Mouth: Jerry Lewis & Dean Martin,’’ in EPD Film (Frankfurt), April 1996.
Greene, R., ‘‘King of Comedy: the Life and Art of Jerry Lewis,’’ in Boxoffice (Chicago), November 1996.

Lionized by the French critics as a comic auteur equal to Chaplin and Keaton, Jerry Lewis has seldom found much favor with critics in his own country. While other comedians such as Abbott & Costello (even The Three Stooges) who were similarly dismissed by contemporaries reviewers but have since achieved a degree of artistic respectability—in some quarters, more than that—with the passage of time, Lewis has yet to experience such reappraisal. He remains more honored in Europe—especially France, although Germany and Spain have showered him with honors, too—than at home despite a career as prolific in its output as those of his more esteemed comic colleagues.

The reason for this may be that Lewis’s style of comedy—which, in its post-Dean Martin period, focused almost exclusively on Lewis himself, almost never the characters or events surrounding him—strikes people as self-indulgent, self-centered, even egotistical; this is a major turnoff, particularly to critics. Also, the screen character he created and lavished so much attention on—the child who never grew up, a mugging simpleton Lewis dubbed ‘‘the Kid’’—is very much an acquired taste. Children, especially young tots, find the character amusingly simpatico. But many older viewers, from age 20 on, find it forced, grating, shallow, stupid, and excruciatingly witless.

Lewis began his career as a borscht belt comedian and impersonator of well-known singers of the day whose voices and mannerisms he mimicked to the accompaniment of recordings. His career was going nowhere until a chance meeting with a crooner named Dean Martin, whose career was likewise stalled, led to their teaming up. Their mostly improvised act involved Lewis’s manic attempts to destroy Martin’s numbers by breaking him up on-stage. It was audiences who found it amusingly simpatico. But many older viewers, from age 20 on, find it forced, grating, shallow, stupid, and excruciatingly witless.

Lewis starred in more than a dozen wildly popular comedies (even The Three Stooges) who were similarly dismissed by contemporaries reviewers but have since achieved a degree of artistic respectability—in some quarters, more than that—with the passage of time, Lewis has yet to experience such reappraisal. He remains more honored in Europe—especially France, although Germany and Spain have showered him with honors, too—than at home despite a career as prolific in its output as those of his more esteemed comic colleagues.

The reason for this may be that Lewis’s style of comedy—which, in its post-Dean Martin period, focused almost exclusively on Lewis himself, almost never the characters or events surrounding him—strikes people as self-indulgent, self-centered, even egotistical; this is a major turnoff, particularly to critics. Also, the screen character he created and lavished so much attention on—the child who never grew up, a mugging simpleton Lewis dubbed ‘‘the Kid’’—is very much an acquired taste. Children, especially young tots, find the character amusingly simpatico. But many older viewers, from age 20 on, find it forced, grating, shallow, stupid, and excruciatingly witless.

Lewis began his career as a borscht belt comedian and impersonator of well-known singers of the day whose voices and mannerisms he mimicked to the accompaniment of recordings. His career was going nowhere until a chance meeting with a crooner named Dean Martin, whose career was likewise stalled, led to their teaming up. Their mostly improvised act involved Lewis’s manic attempts to destroy Martin’s numbers by breaking him up on-stage. It was audiences who broke up; within months, Martin & Lewis was the hottest comedy team in show business. Word spread, Hollywood called, and Martin & Lewis made their screen debut low down in the cast list of My Friend Irma, a comedy based on a hit radio show of the time. The team essentially reprised its stage act in the film. Audiences felt they stole the picture, a hit, which was followed by a sequel, My Friend Irma Goes West, in which the duo was top-billed with stars John Lund and Marie Wilson. Signed to a long-term contract by Paramount, Martin & Lewis starred in more than a dozen wildly popular comedies for the studio until their celebrated split in 1956 following the appropriately titled Hollywood or Bust. Many believed their Hollywood careers would go bust without each other, but Martin & Lewis proved them wrong. Martin went on to achieve a successful solo career as a singer, actor, and television star. After The Delicate Delinquent, his first film without Martin (in which Darren McGavin stepped into the Martin straight man role), Lewis decided he no longer needed a straight man for his antics, and went solo himself.

Lewis’s disenchantment with the nature of the team’s screen persona was among the stated reasons for the break-up. Critic David Thomson has described the persona as that of “. . . two men at odds: Lewis seems hurt by Martin’s callousness, just as Martin seems offended by the proximity of a slob.” As the team’s films progressed, Martin’s suave and sophisticated character seemed to become increasingly scornful and unscrupulously manipulative of Lewis’s nitwit character, whose antics escalated into an insufferably annoying plague on both their houses. But some critics have voiced another possible reason for the split: Lewis’s ambivalent desire to be like Martin and simultaneous hostility toward him. These critics have pointed to Lewis’s The Nutty Professor (1963) as a not-so-subtle expression of this inner war. In the film—a comic take on Stevenson’s Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde that Lewis starred in, co-wrote and directed—he plays a nerdy, lovesick chemistry professor in the “Kid” mold and the alter-ego he unleashes with his magic formula: suave singer and lounge lizard Buddy Love, a character viewed as a vicious takeoff on Martin. Later, in Boeing, Boeing, a romantic farce co-starring Tony Curtis, Lewis ironically played the more subdued, straight man role, a role Dean Martin could easily have stepped in himself, so there may be some validity to the critics’ assessment.

Lewis’s most important collaboration after the break-up with Martin was with Frank Tashlin, a former Warner Brothers cartoon director turned feature filmmaker, whose satiric style and eye for the cartoonlike, belly-laugh sight gag strongly influenced Lewis’s subsequent career and own directorial approach. Lewis made two films for Tashlin with Martin (Artists and Models, Hollywood or Bust) and six without, arguably the best of which is Rock-a-Bye-Baby (1958), a remake of the Preston Sturgess classic The Miracle of Morgan’s Creek (1944).

Lewis turned to directing with The Bellboy (1960), hailed by French critics as Lewis’s breakthrough film and funniest movie to date. It was quickly followed by The Ladies’ Man and The Errand Boy (both 1961), then The Nutty Professor, which the French named the best picture of the year and Lewis’s masterpiece—his intervening films with Tashlin notwithstanding. By 1965, Lewis was being deified by the French as the greatest comic artist since Buster Keaton, an apt comparison on a number of levels. For one thing, Lewis’s increasing penchant for inserting pathos and the occasional “message” into his work was less like Keaton than Chaplin, whose career Lewis seemed bent most on emulating. Unlike Chaplin, however, Lewis’s scenes of pathos tend to be more mawkish than tear-jerkingly sentimental.

Lewis’s The Day the Clown Cried (1972), a seriocomic look at the Holocaust from the perspective of a Jewish comic imprisoned in a Nazi death camp, remains his most ambitious attempt to emulate Chaplin. Whether he succeeded or not we still do not know as the film has yet to be released due to legal entanglements with its backers. The debacle apparently crushed Lewis’s spirits for a time; he did not make another film until 1979’s aptly titled Hardly Working, a critically scorned (in America) but commercial hit.

Since then, Lewis has chosen to remain in the public mind primarily as host of the Labor Day Muscular Dystrophy Telethon, an annual charitable rite with which he has been associated for years. His film performances have mostly been for other directors, the most notable being Martin Scorsese, in whose 1983 The King of Comedy Lewis undertook his first dramatic role as a late night television talk show entertainer in the vein of Johnny Carson stalked by an ambitious fan. Lewis’s performance garnered well-deserved accolades not just in France, but, at last, in the United States as well. In 1995 he made his Broadway debut as the devil in a revival of the musical comedy Damn Yankees and was similarly acclaimed. Perhaps these two atypical roles, and the impressive kudos he received for his performances in them, auger better things to come for the indomitable “Kid” in his native land.

—John McCarty

LEWIS, Juliette

Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, 21 June 1973; daughter of the actor Geoffrey Lewis. Education: Received high school equivalency diploma. Family: Married to Steve Berra, 1999. Career: 1985—acting debut in the cable TV mini-series Home Fires; mid to late 1980s, appeared in several TV situation comedies, including I Married Dora, 1987–88, and a recurring role on Wonder Years, 1989–90; 1988—theatrical movie debut in My Stepmother Is an Alien; 1990—first leading role in the TV movie Too Young to Die?; 1990s—continued work in films, as well as in television commercials and music videos. Agent: William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1988 My Stepmother Is an Alien (Benjamin) (as Lexie)
1989 Meet the Hollowheads (Life on the Edge) (Burman) (as Cindy Hollowhead); National Lampoon’s Christmas Vacation (Chechik) (as Audrey Griswold); The Runnin’ Kind (Tash)
1990 Too Young to Die? (Markowitz—for TV) (as Amanda Sue Bradley)
1991 Crooked Hearts (Bortman) (as Cassie Warren); Cape Fear (Scorsese) (as Danielle Bowden)
1992 Husbands and Wives (Woody Allen) (as Rain)
1993 That Night (One Hot Summer) (Bolotin) (as Sheryl O’Connor); Kalifornia (Sena) (as Adele Corners); What’s Eating Gilbert Grape (Hallström) (as Becky)
1994 Romeo Is Bleeding (Medak) (as Sheri); Natural Born Killers (Oliver Stone) (as Mallory Knox); Mixed Nuts (Lifesavers) (Nora Ephron) (as Gracie Barzini)
1995 The Basketball Diaries (Kalvert) (as Diane Moody); Strange Days (Bigelow) (as Faith Justin)
1996 From Dusk Till Dawn (Rodriguez) (as Kate Fuller); The Audition (Lightfield, Lewis) (+ pr); The Evening Star (as granddaugther)
1997 Full Tilt Boogie (Kelly) (as herself)
1998 Men (Kelly) (as April)
1999 The Other Sister (Marshall) (as Carla Tate)

Publications

By LEWIS: articles—

‘‘Juliette and Her Friends,’’ interview with Wolf Schneider, in Interview (New York), July 1993.
‘‘Meeting the Mrs. . . .’’ interview with D.E. Williams, in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), October 1994.
Interview with Jenny Cooney, in Empire, no. 59, 1994.

On LEWIS: articles—

Park, J., ‘‘She’s Got a Foot in the Door,’’ in People Weekly (New York), 9 December 1991.
Mithers, C. L., ‘‘Screen Angel,’’ in Mademoiselle, September 1993.

* * *

In her relatively short film career, Juliette Lewis has amassed an impressive array of screen credits. Inspired by her well-known character actor father, Geoffrey Lewis, she has been acting in films and television since the age of 13. Although she has no formal acting training, Lewis has consistently demonstrated her astonishing ability to craft well-studied and fascinating performances. Accordingly, she has been sought out by a number of major directors and actors, and despite her youth, she has chosen roles that have given her the opportunity to exercise her wide-ranging acting skills—regardless of the commercial or star-making potential of the films.

Lewis earned her first significant critical praise with her appearance in the television movie Too Young to Die?, in which she played a bereft young teenager who is manipulated into murdering a former lover by Brad Pitt’s smarmy hustler. Then, her breakthrough theatrical film performance was in Scorsese’s Cape Fear, for which she received Golden Globe and Academy Award nominations, and which confirmed her reputation as a major young Hollywood talent. Her riveting performance is both confident and complex: she plays a shy, confused teenager in the awkward throes of her sexual awakening who gets caught in the web of a psychotic rapist. In the film’s extraordinarily memorable and chilling seduction scene, Lewis perfectly conveys her young character’s sense of attraction and repulsion for Robert De Niro’s oddly compelling stranger.

More of a gamine than a conventionally pretty actress, Lewis is able to accommodate a variety of “looks”—from the perfect embodiment of threatened innocence, as in Too Young to Die? and Cape Fear, to the sexy, scantily clad, and aggressive femme fatale/rock star of Strange Days. In both her leading roles and her ensemble film work, Lewis typically has played naive, dispossessed, working-class characters, who are either strangely menacing or even coldly violent, as in Kalifornia and Natural Born Killers. Indeed, her role as the sexually abused and disaffected serial killer in the latter further confirmed her unusual willingness to risk playing mostly unsympathetic characters. An example of this occurs in the eccentric, over-the-top film Romeo Is Bleeding, in which she plays the underage mistress of Gary Oldman’s crooked cop. But, she also delivered an inspired and convincing performance in Husbands and Wives as an upper-middle class, east-coast collegian who is the sexually knowing object of desire for Woody Allen’s middle-aged character. Likewise, her performance in What’s Eating Gilbert Grape—as a smart, sensitive, and worldly young woman traveling with her grandmother through the Midwest in a trailer, who captivates and enlightens Johnny Depp’s Gilbert—displays her uncanny ability to produce quiet and subtly nuanced characterizations.

In her rare press and television interviews, Lewis repeatedly has expressed her desire to elude Hollywood’s conventional star system, in order to continue taking chances and hone her already admirable talents as a performer. Still in her early twenties, Lewis fortunately has ample time in which to pursue and to demonstrate her creative and artistic priorities.

—Cynthia Felando
LLOYD, Harold

Films as Actor:

1913 The Old Monk’s Tale (Dawley—995 feet) (as extra)
1914 Samson (Macdonald) (as extra); The Patchwork Girl of Oz; (The Ragged Girl of Oz) (Macdonald) (as Hottentot)
1915 Love, Loot and Crash (Cogley—one-reeler); Their Social Splash (Gillstrom—553 feet) (as the Minister); Miss Fatty’s Seaside Lovers (Arbuckle—one-reeler) (as masher); From Italy’s Shores (Turner—two-reeler) (as gangster); Courthouse Crooks (Parrott—two-reeler) (as Tom, youth out of work)

(in one-reel comedies directed by Hal Roach)

1915 Just Nuts (as Willie Work); Lonesome Lake; Once Every Ten Minutes; Spit-Ball Sadie; Soaking the Clothes; Pressing His Suit; Terribly Stuck Up; A Mixup for Mazda; Some Baby; Fresh from the Farm; Giving Them Fits; Bughouse Bellhops; Tinkering with Trouble; Great While It Lasted; Ragtime Snap Shots; A Fozzle at a Tee Party; Ruses, Rhymes and Roughnecks; Peculiar Patients’ Pranks; Lonesome Lake, Social Gangster

(alternatively directed by Hal Roach and Alf Goulding, with several directed by Lloyd)

(two-reelers)

1917 Lonesome Lake’s Lively Life; Lonesome Lake on Tin Can Alley; Lonesome Lake’s Honeyymoon; Lonesome Lake, Plumber; Stop! Lake! Listen!; Lonesome Lake, Messenger; Lonesome Lake, Mechanic; Lonesome Lake’s Wild Women; Lonesome Lake Loses Patients; Birds of a Feather; Lonesome Lake from London to Laramie, Love, Laughs, and Lather; Clubs Are Trump; We Never Sleep

(one-reelers as young man with horn-rimmed glasses)

1917 Over the Fence (as Ginger, co-d with Macdonald); Pinched; By the Sad Sea Waves; Bliss; Rainbow Island; The Flirt; All Aboard (as the boy); Move On; Bashful; Step Lively

1918 The Tip; The Big Idea; The Lamb; Hit Him Again; Beat It; A Gasoline Wedding; Look Pleasant, Please; Here Come the Girls; Let’s Go; On the Jump; Follow the Crowd; Pipe the Whiskers; It’s a Wild Life (Pratt); Hey There!; Kicked Out; The Non-Stop Kid (as the boy); Two-Gun Gussie (as Harold); Fireman, Save My Child; The City Slicker (as Harold); Sic ‘em Towser, Somewhere in Turkey; Are Crooks Dishonest? (as Jim); An Ozark Romance; Kicking the Germ out of Germany; That’s Him; Bride and Gloom; Two Scrambled; Bees in His Bonnet; Swing Your Partners; Why Pick on Me? (as the boy); Nothing but Trouble; Hear ‘em Rave; Take a Chance; She Loves Me Not

1919 Wanted—$500; Going! Going! Gone!; Ask Father (as the boy); On the Fire (The Cheif) (Roach) (as Winkle); I’m on My Way (as the boy); Look Out Below; The Dutiful Dup; Next Aisle Over; A Sammy in Siberia; Just Dropped In; Crack Your Heels; Ring Up the Curtain (as the boy); Young Mr. Jazz; Si, Senor; Before Breakfast; The Marathon; Back to the Woods; Pistols for Breakfast; Swat the Crook; Off the Trolley; Spring Fever (as Billy); Billy Blazes, Esq.; Just Neighbors (as the boy); At the Old Stage Door; Never Touched Me (as the boy); A Jazzed Honeymoon; Count Your Change (Step Lively) (as the boy); Chop Suey and Co. (as Officer Harold); Heap Big Chief; Don’t Shove (as the boy); Be My Wife; The Rajah; He Leads, Others Follow; Soft Money; Count the Votes; Pay Your Dues (as the boy); His Only Father

(two-reelers, unless otherwise noted)

1919 Bumping into Broadway (as the boy); Captain Kidd’s Kids (Roach) (as the boy); From Hand to Mouth (Goulding) (as the boy)

1920 His Royal Slynx (Roach) (as the American boy); Haunted Spooks (Roach and Goulding) (as the boy); An Eastern
Westerner (Roach) (as the boy); High and Dizzy (Roach) (as Harold Hal); Get Out and Get Under (Roach); Number, Please (Roach and Newmeyer) (as the boy)

1921 Now or Never (Roach and Newmeyer—three-reeler); Among Those Present (Newmeyer) (as O'Reilly, the boy); I Do (as the boy); Never Weaken (Newmeyer—three-reeler) (as the boy)

(feature-length films)

1921 Sailor-Made Man (Newmeyer) (as the boy)
1922 Grandma’s Boy (Newmeyer) (as the boy, Sonny/Granddaddy in flashback); Dr. Jack (Newmeyer) (title role)
1923 Safety Last (Newmeyer and Sam Taylor) (as the boy); Dogs of War (Roach—two-reeler) (as himself); Why Worry? (Newmeyer and Sam Taylor) (as Harold Van Pelham)
1924 Girl Shy (Newmeyer and Sam Taylor) (as the poor boy, Harold Meadows, + pr); Hot Water (Sam Taylor and Newmeyer) (as Hubby, + pr)

1925 The Freshman (Sam Taylor and Newmeyer) (as Harold “Speedy” Lamb, + pr)
1926 For Heaven’s Sake (Sam Taylor) (as “The Uptown Boy,” J. Harold Manners, + pr)
1927 The Kid Brother (Milestone, Howe, Neal, and Wilde) (as Harold Hickory, + pr)
1928 Speedy (Wilde) (as Harold “Speedy” Swift, + pr)
1929 Welcome Danger (Mal St. Clair and Bruckman) (as Harold Bledsoe, + pr)
1930 Feet First (Bruckman) (as Harold Horne, + pr)
1932 Movie Crazy (Bruckman) (as Harold Hall, + pr)
1934 The Cat’s Paw (Sam Taylor) (as Ezekiel Cobb, + pr)
1936 The Milky Way (McCarey) (as Burleigh “Tiger” Sullivan, + pr)
1938 Professor Beware (Nugent) (as Prof. Dean Lambert, + pr)
1947 Mad Wednesday (The Sin of Harold Diddlebock) (Preston Sturges) (as Harold Diddlebock)
1962 Harold Lloyd’s World of Comedy (compilation) (+ pr)
1966 Harold Lloyd’s Funny Side of Life (compilation) (+ pr)
Films as Producer:

1941 A Girl, a Guy, and a Gob (The Navy Steps Out) (Wallace)
1942 My Favorite Spy (Garnett)

Publications

By LLOYD: book—

By LLOYD: articles—

“My Ideal Girl,” in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), July 1918.
“For the People, by the People,” in Filmplay Journal, April 1922.
“We Interview the Boy,” interview with Gladys Hall and Adele Fletcher, in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), July 1922.
“Harold Lloyd Tells the Most Dramatic Moments of His Life,” in Motion Picture, December 1925.
“When They Gave Me the Air,” in Ladies Home Journal, February 1928.
“Looking at the World through Horn-Rimmed Specs,” in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), September 1933.
“Interview with Harold Lloyd,” interview with Arthur Friedman, in Film Quarterly (Berkley), Summer 1962.
“The Serious Business of Being Funny,” interview with Hubert I. Cohen, in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1969.
“Harold Lloyd Talks to Anthony Slide about His Early Career,” in Silent Picture (London), Summer/Autumn 1971.

On LLOYD: books—

McCaffrey, Donald W., Three Classic Silent Screen Comedies Starring Harold Lloyd, Cranbury, New Jersey, 1976.

On LLOYD: articles—

Taylor, Sam, “Directing Harold Lloyd,” in Motion Picture Director, November 1925.
Slide, Anthony, obituary in Silent Picture (London), Summer/Autumn 1971.
Brownlow, Kevin, Harold Lloyd: A Renaissance Palace for One of the Silent Era’s Great Comic Pioneers, in Architectural Digest, April 1990.
Brownlow, Kevin, “Preserved in Amber,” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1993.
Siegel, Scott, and Barbara Siegel, “‘Harold Lloyd,’” in American Film Comedy, New York, 1994.

On LLOYD: film—

* * *

The sophistication and maturation of the silent screen comedy feature emerged in only a few years in the early 1920s—a phenomenon that came from the innovative efforts of Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, and Buster Keaton. As these three comedians graduated from one- and two-reel films, the scope of the five- and six-reel works dictated a need for a wider range of story material and a variety in acting levels and styles. An article entitled “Comedy Development,” by Lloyd in the 1924 Truth about the Movies by the Stars indicated the actor saw the necessity of avoiding the same theme and type of film: “It is our intention to mix up the type of offering we will present. That has been our policy in the past, and it has worked out highly satisfactorily. . . . For no matter how great the appeal of a player, he cannot go on forever giving his public the same kind of picture, release after release.”

As a very popular comedian in his one- and two-reelers, the actor first employed a character with limited dimension. From 1915 to 1918 Lloyd used an oddball tramp, Lonesome Luke, closely related to the circus clown and relied on wacky comic material that became the staple of a Mack Sennett slapstick short. When he switched to a character closer to that developed by the light comedians of the time—the young man next door—his acting style changed and his characterization became more appealing. A more realistic mode of acting became evident in his 1919 one-reel, Just Neighbors. The comedian developed incidents of frustration in the beginning of the film as he played a young man from the suburbs trying to catch a commuter train to his job in the city. The struggle of this character, called simply “The Boy,” exhibited subtle facial expressions of annoyance, avoiding the broad body gestures of the earlier Lonesome Luke tramp character. Nevertheless, when Lloyd’s young man gets into an altercation with his neighbor, a broad, slapstick fistfight shows a return to the comedy acting style of Lloyd’s early films.

When Lloyd adopted the story material of the genteel comedians of the twenties—Charles Ray, Wallace Reid, and Douglas MacLean—he surpassed them in acting skills and the quality and quantity of laughable movies. In the development of a comic character in his first feature, Grandma’s Boy (1922), the comedian could create a lighter, character-based humor of humiliation set against a stronger, broader, and ludicrous situation when his shy, withdrawn character metamorphoses into an aggressive young man battling a villain. From hangdog expressions and wilted bodily movements the comedian showed a transition to a bold, erect stature of a man with a jutting aggressive jaw.

The key to understanding the comic character created by Lloyd lies in the leading figure’s zeal. The enthusiasm of this character gives it distinction. Leading comedians of the time—Chaplin, Keaton, and Langdon—seldom used this trait in their comic characters. Lloyd, on the other hand, used this trait as the basic facet of his portrait. Some of the best comic moments of his films occur when Harold’s zeal leads him into situations that backfire. His eagerness to be successful socially or financially leads him into the path of a rival who is a villain or into a scheme with many pitfalls. The comedian’s acting ability comes into play as he attempts to cover his distress with a twisted smile. Attempts to impress a college clique in the 1925 The Freshman show the comedian exhibiting overeagerness to the point that he becomes the subject of the group’s ridicule. As the character is humiliated, Lloyd provides a variety of humorous, pained expressions. But eventually the character’s enthusiasm turns the tide in his favor. The fault that gains laughter is also the virtue that wins the victory. And victory quite often is achieved with the assistance of luck.

One of the misconceptions that has distorted the evaluation of Harold Lloyd’s comic abilities is the view of some critics that he merely used a string of clever gags in his features—that he was in the same league as the lightweight, genteel comedians such as Ray, Reid, and MacLean who were popular actors in the silent features of the twenties. In the essay “‘Harold Lloyd: Comedy through Characterization’” in Harold Lloyd: The King of Daredevil Comedy, Leonard maltin refutes this concept. Maltin considers the comedian’s acting talent to be an integral part of the characterization in the pictures he created: “For in order for that character to succeed as he did, there had to be a basic credibility . . . in his disarmingly natural performances. Like so many great performers who make their work look easy, Lloyd suffered the natural consequence of having certain critics believe that he wasn’t really contributing much to his own films—that he was simply a likable fellow surrounded by funny incidents, and therefore a success by circumstance. This does a great injustice to a major comedy talent.”

There is little doubt that Harold Lloyd has the credentials to be ranked as one of the kings of comedy of the silent period. A showing today of his Grandma’s Boy, Safety Last, The Freshman, and The Kid Brother brings high praise from sophisticated audiences. Not well known are his sound films. Lloyd made the transition to sound pictures more easily than the other three kings of comedy: Chaplin, Keaton, and Langdon. Like the eager, adventurous character he portrayed, Lloyd plunged into sound films with Welcome Danger in 1929. Under his own supervision he did five more feature in the thirties: Feet First, Movie Crazy, The Cat’s Paw, The Milky Way, and Professor Beware. His last feature in 1947 under the direction of Preston Sturges, The Sin of Harold Diddlebock (renamed Mad Wednesday), did not meet with Lloyd’s high standards. Nevertheless, this forties film and his sound films of the thirties were a match for if not superior to other comedies created in these two decades.

—Donald McCaffrey

---

LOCKWOOD, Margaret

Nationality: British. Born: Karachi, India (now Pakistan), 15 September 1916. Education: Attended Sydenham High School; studied dance at the Italia Conti school; Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts, 1933. Family: Married Rupert Leon, 1937 (divorced 1950), daughter: Margaret Julia. Career: 1931—stage debut in A Midsummer Night’s Dream at the Holborn Empire; 1935—film debut in Lorna Doone; 1939—brief visit to Hollywood; 1948—TV debut in Pygmalion as Eliza Doolittle, also played role on stage, 1951; later stage work included An Ideal Husband, 1965, and Lady Frederick, 1970; 1952—contract with Herbert Wilcox; 1965—in TV series The Flying Swan with daughter Julia; later work included Justice, 1972–73. Awards: Commander, Order of the British Empire, 1980. Died: In London, 15 July 1990.

Films as Actress:

1935 Lorna Doone (Dean) (as Annie Ridd); The Case of Gabriel Perry (Wild Justice) (de Courville) (as Mildred Perry); Some Day (Powell) (as Emily); Honours Easy (Mycroft) (as Ann); Man of the Moment (Banks) (as Vera); Midshipman Easy (Men of the Sea) (Reed) (as Donna Agnes)

1936 Jury’s Evidence (Ince) (as Betty Stanton); The Amateur Gentleman (Freeland) (as Georgina Hunstanton); The Beloved Vagabond (Bernhardt) (as Blanquette); Irish for Luck (Woods) (as Ellen O’Hare)

1937 Street Singer (de Marguenat) (as Jenny Green); Who’s Your Lady Friend? (Reed) (as Mimi); Dr. Syn (Neil) (as Imogene); Melody and Romance (Elvey) (as Margaret Williams)

1938 Owd Bob (To the Victor) (Stevenson) (as Jeannie McAdam); Bank Holiday (Three on a Weekend) (Reed) (as Catherine Lawrence); The Lady Vanishes (Hitchcock) (as Iris Henderson)

1939 Rulers of the Sea (Lloyd) (as Mary Shaw); Susannah of the Mounties (Seiter) (as Vicky Standing); A Girl Must Live (Reed) (as Leslie James); The Stars Look Down (Reed) (as Jenny Sunley)

1940 Night Train to Munich (Night Train; Gestapo) (Reed) (as Anna Bomasch); The Girl in the News (Reed) (as Anne Graham)

1941 Quiet Wedding (Asquith) (as Janet Royd)

1942 Alibi (Hurst) (as Helene Ardoniu)

1943 The Man in Grey (Arliss) (as Hester Shaw); Dear Octopus (The Randolph Family) (French) (as Penny Randolph)

1944 Give Us the Moon (Guest) (as Nina); Love Story (A Lady Surrenders) (Arliss) (as Lissa Campbell)

1945 A Place of One’s Own (Knowles) (as Annette); I’ll Be Your Sweetheart (Guest) (as Edie Story); The Wicked Lady (Arliss) (as Barbara Worth/Lady Skelton)

1946 Bedelia (Comfort) (as Bedelia Carrington)

1947 Hungry Hill (Hurst) (as Fanny Ross); Jassy (Box) (as Jassy Woodroffe); The White Unicorn (Bad Sister) (Knowles) (as Lucy)

1948 Look before You Love (Huth) (as Ann Markham)

1949 Cardboard Cavalier (Forde) (as Nell Gwynne); Madness of the Heart (Bennett) (as Lydia Garth)

1950 Highly Dangerous (Baker) (as Frances Gray)

1952 Trent’s Last Case (Wilcox) (as Margaret Manderson)

1953 Laughing Anne (Wilcox) (as Anne)

1954 Trouble in the Glen (Wilcox) (as Marissa Mengues)

1955 Cast a Dark Shadow (Gilbert) (as Freda Jeffries)

1976 The Slipper and the Rose (Forbes) (as Stepmother)

Publications

By LOCKWOOD: books—

By LOCKWOOD: articles—

Interview, in Film Weekly (London), 2 September 1939.

Interview, in Picturegoer (London), 9 December 1944.

Interview, in TV Times (London), 20 November 1975.

On LOCKWOOD: books—

On LOCKWOOD: articles—

National Film Theatre Booklet (London), September/October 1986.

Film Dope (London), February 1987.

Although Margaret Lockwood had made 31 films in the preceding years, The Wicked Lady (1945) is the one film for which she is most remembered. For Margaret Lockwood the role and the title were destined to become synonymous with her. In a career of more than 40 films and numerous television appearances, Margaret Lockwood was “wicked” in only three of them. But it was her ability to play this type of character that remains the key point of identity for her star image in popular memory.

The “quota quickie” era of the 1930s had allowed Lockwood to make a large number of cheap films that familiarized her with studio techniques and enabled her to develop an acting style for camera. In 1935 alone she made six films—more than any other year of her career. This intense apprenticeship in film acting established Margaret Lockwood as a fresh actress at a time when most of British stars came from a strong theater or music hall tradition. Her biographer sees this point as a significant aspect of her later appeal: “The British cinema hadn’t so far discovered and groomed a star it could call its own. Margaret, unmannered and possessing a technique which hadn’t been schooled in the theater, was a natural for the camera and the microphone. The first favoured her pretty, well-defined features, the second a pleasant, musical voice free of the curlicues and exaggerations which most young actresses of that time assumed.’

By the end of the 1930s, Margaret Lockwood was emerging as a star with a career modeled through a Hollywood-style British studio system. In 1937, Margaret Lockwood was offered a three-year contract with Gainsborough Studios as the company’s first move to implement the plan to create Britain’s first custom-made film star. The success of films such as The Lady Vanishes and The Stars Look Down established her star status and enabled her to go on to become the most popular and successful British screen actress of the 1940s.

The significance of The Wicked Lady then is not so much in terms of establishing Margaret Lockwood’s star image as in changing it. When she had played a cheap, scheming hussy who trapped the hero into marriage in The Stars Look Down the critics acclaimed her performance, but fans all over the country wrote indignant letters to the star and the producer. The prospect of a similar reaction caused performance, but fans all over the country wrote indignant letters to the establishment of an unremarkable star image—the genteel, demure and very English middle-class woman. But with this established track record it was all the more shocking to see the display of ruthless independence, sexual desire and wickedness that The Man in Grey unleashed. The advent of The Wicked Lady in 1945 offered the prospect of taking the image to its limits with a part designed to be the most ruthless, amoral character any British film had ever dared to present. From being the ‘nice girl,’’ she suddenly became exciting, daring, glamorous and independent—a transformation that was greeted with astounding adulation by her audiences.

If the potency of the wicked lady image lay in the shock of seeing a dramatic change in Margaret Lockwood’s star image, it also touched a chord in the “new woman” emerging from the disciplines of a long war. As Hilton Tims notes, this wicked lady was “a woman of independence, flouting hidebound convention, flaunting her superiority over men and contempt for them with courage, singlemindedness and feminine wiles.”

Such characteristics were enormously appealing and exciting for those British women who had tasted independence during the war years and were striving against attempts to return them to submissive domesticity. Appearing as she did in the popular women’s genre of melodrama, Margaret Lockwood provided her female audience with a fantasy role model for the immediate postwar years. The intensity of this portrayal and the strength of the chord that was struck ensured that Margaret Lockwood would carry this image into the history of British cinema.

—Margaret O’Connor

LOLLOBRIGIDA, Gina

Films as Actress:

1946 Aquila Nera (The Black Eagle) (Freda); Lucia di Lammermoor (Ballerini)
1947 Il segreto di Don Giovanni (Mastrocinque); Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo (Lattuada); Vendetta nel sole (A Man about the House) (Arliss and Amato); L’elisir d’amore (Costa)
1948 Follie per l’opera (Costa) (as Dora); I pagliacci (Costa) (as Nedda)
1949 Campane a martello (Children of Chance) (Zampa) (as Agostina Bortolizzi); La sposa non può attendere (Franciolini) (as Donata)
1950 Miss Italy (Coletti) (as Lisetta Minneci); Cuori senza fontiere (The White Line) (Zampa) (as Donata Sebastian); Vita da cani (Steno and Monicelli) (as Margherita); Aline (Pastina) (title role)
1951 Passaporto per l’Oriente (A Tale of Five Cities; A Tale of Five Women) (Tully and others) (as Maria Severini); La città si difende (Four Ways Out) (Gemini) (as Daniela); Enrico Caruso, leggenda di una voce (Gentilomo) (as Stella); Achtung! Bandit! (Lizzani) (as Anna); Fanfan la Tulipe (Fanfan the Tulip; Soldier in Love) (Christian-Jaque) (as Adeline); Amnon non ho... pero... pero (Bianchi) (as Gina)
1952 “The Trial of Frine” ep. of Altri tempi (Times Gone By) (Blasetti) (as Frine); Les Belles de nuit (La bella della notte; Beauties of the Night) (Clair) (as Leila); Moglie per una notte (Camerini) (as Ottavia)
1953 Le infedeli (The Unfaithfuls) (Steno and Monicelli) (as Lulla Possenti); La provinciale (Soldati) (as Gemma Foresi); Il maestro di Don Giovanni (Crossed Swords) (Krimis) (as Francesca); Pane, amore, e fantasìa (Bread, Love and Dreams) (Comencini) (as the girl, “Frisky”); Beat the Devil (Huston) (as Maria Dannreuther)
1954 Le Grand Jeu (Flesh and the Woman; Il grande giuoco; The Big Game) (Siodmak) (as Elena/Silvia); La romanina (Woman of Rome) (Zampa) (as Adriana); Pane, amore, e gelosìa (Comencini) (as Carotenuto)
1955 La donna più bella del mondo (Leonard) (as Lina Cavalieri); Frisky (Comencini) (title role)
1956 Trapeze (Reed) (as Lola); Notre Dame de Paris (The Hunchback of Notre Dame) (Delannoy) (as Esmeralda)
Gina Lollobrigida in Bread, Love and Dreams

1958 Anna di Brooklyn (Anna of Brooklyn; Fast and Sexy) (Lastricati and Denham) (as Anna)
1959 La Loi (Where the Hot Wind Blows; Le legge; The Law) (Dassin) (as Marietta); Never So Few (John Sturges) (as Carla Vesari); Solomon and Sheba (King Vidor) (as Sheba)
1960 Go Naked in the World (MacDougall) (as Giulietta Cameron); Come September (Mulligan) (as Lisa Fellini)
1961 Venere imperiale (Imperial Venus; Vénus impériale) (Delannoy) (as Paolina Borghese)
1962 Mare matto (Castellani) (as Margherita)
1964 Woman of Straw (Dearden) (as Maria Marcello); “Monsignor Cupido” ep. of Le bambole (Four Kinds of Love; The Dolls) (Bolognini) (as Beatrix)
1965 Strange Bedfellows (Frank) (as Toni Vincente)
1966 Io, io, io... e gli altri (Blasetti) (as Titta); Les Sultans (L’amante italiana) (Delannoy) (as Lisa); Hotel Paradiso (Glenville) (as Marcelle Cot); Le piacevoli notti (Crispino and Lucignani) (as Domicilla)
1967 La morte la fatto, l'uovo (Plucked; A Curious Way to Love) (Questi) (as Anna)
1968 The Private Navy of Sgt. O’Farrell (Tashlin) (as Maria); Un bellissimo novembre (That Splendid November) (Bolognini) (as Cettina); Le Avventure e gli amori di Miguel Cervantes (The Young Rebel; Cervantes; Les Aventures extraordinaires de Cervantes) (Sherman) (as Giulia Toffolo)
1969 Buona Sera, Mrs. Campbell (Frank) (as Carla Campbell); Stuntman (Baldi) (as Evelyn Lake)
1970 ... e continuavano a fregarsi il milione di dollari (Martin) (as Alicia)
1971 Le avventure di Pinocchio (Comencini) (as la fata turchina)
1972 Herzbube (King, Queen, Knave) (Skolimowski) (as Martha Dreyer); Peccato mortale (Rovira-Beleta) (as Netty); Bad Man’s River (Matalo) (Gene Martin) (as Alicia)
1975 Roses rouges et piments verts (The Lonely Woman) (Rovira-Beleta)
1977 Nido de viudas (Widow’s Nest) (Navarro)
1983 Stella emigranti (Masenza) (as herself)
1985 Deceptions (Shavelson and Chenault—for TV) (as Princess Alexandra)
1986 The Love Boat: The Christmas Cruise (for TV) (as Carla Lucci)
1995  Les Cent et une Nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Actor for a Day)
1997  XXL (Zeitoun)

Film as Director:
1975  Portrait of Fidel Castro (doc)

Publications
By LOLLOBRIGIDA: books—
Manila (photographs), 1972.
The Philippines (photographs), Liechtenstein, 1976.
Magica innocenza (photographs), Sao Paulo, 1993; as The Wonder of Innocence, New York, 1994.

By LOLLOBRIGIDA: article—
Interview in Kino (Sofia), February 1994.

On LOLLOBRIGIDA: books—

On LOLLOBRIGIDA: articles—
Ecran (Paris), July 1978.
Cahiers du Cinema (Paris), March 1996.

* * *

Gina Lollobrigida will always be remembered as the first sex symbol to emerge from the rubble of postwar Europe. Her rise in Italy coincided with the decline of the neorealist movement. Italian filmmakers had been concentrating on making films that showed the depressing reality of Italy after the war, and although these films were critically acclaimed in other countries, they were unpopular in their home market, where audiences wanted escapist Hollywood-style glamour rather than confrontation with the day-to-day reality of their drab lives. Lollobrigida became the embodiment of their escapist fantasies after Italian producers realized her potential and cast her in films providing Italian cinemagoers with “rosy realism.” As a result she played a role in boosting Italy to a major position on the world’s film market.

From the outset of her career, she was typecast as a seductress, whether in costume dramas, romantic comedies, or thrillers; her acting ability was clearly limited, and her range varied little from film to film. Nonetheless, she received numerous awards for her acting, including the Italian equivalent of the Oscar, the Silver Ribbon, for her performance in Pane, amore, e fantasia. The Italian film critics awarded her the Grolla d’Oro for her performance in La provinciale, the French public and film industry voted her Best Foreign Actress for three successive years, and the International Cinema Club awarded her a prestigious David trophy. All these awards demonstrate that, within the confines in which she worked, Lollobrigida was unbeatable.

It was only natural that this buxom beauty should come to the attention of Hollywood. Howard Hughes gave her a contract but was not forthcoming in giving her a film, so after waiting around in Hollywood for three months she decided to pack her bags and return to Italy. The legal battles that followed kept her out of Hollywood for several years, possibly doing irreparable damage to her career. She did, however, appear in a number of successful American productions shot in Europe, including Trapeze, Solomon and Sheba, and Come September, which helped to maintain her popularity in America. As Europe’s most sought-after actress, Lollobrigida was fortunate to work under the direction of Vittorio De Sica, René Clair, and John Huston, and opposite actors as diverse as Jean-Paul Belmondo, Burt Lancaster, Frank Sinatra, Alec Guinness, and Errol Flynn.

—Curtis Hutchinson

LOM, Herbert

Nationality: Czech. Born: Herbert Charles Angelo Kuchacevich ze Schlunderpacheru in Prague, Austria-Hungary (now Czech Republic), 11 September 1917. Education: Attended University of Prague; studied acting at the Prague School of Acting; scholarships to the London Embassy School, the Sadlers Wells School, and the Westminster School. Family: Married Dina Scheu, 1948, two sons. Career: 1937—film debut; 1939—moved to England, studied acting, also one of the “voices of freedom” for the BBC European service; late 1950s—began working in Hollywood; 1978—published novel Enter a Spy; 1984—in TV mini-series Lace; also a painter and composer.

Films as Actor:
1937  Žena pod křížem (Woman under the Cross)
1940  Mein Kampf My Crimes (Norman Lee)
1942  The Young Mr. Pitt (Reed) (as Napoleon); Secret Mission (French) (as medical officer); Tomorrow We Live (At Dawn We Die) (King)
1943  The Dark Tower (Harlow) (as Torg)
1944  Hotel Reserve (Hanbury, Comfort, and Greene) (as Monsieur Andre Roux)
1945  The Seventh Veil (Bennett) (as Dr. Larson); Night Boat to Dublin (Huntington) (as Keitel)
1946  Appointment with Crime (Harlow) (as Gregory Lang)
1947  Dual Alibi (Travers) (as Jules and George de Lisle); Snowbound (Macdonald) (as Keramikos)
1948  Good Time Girl (Macdonald) (as Max); Portrait from Life (The Girl in the Painting) (Fisher) (as Hendleman); The Brass Monkey (Lucky Mascot) (Freeland) (as Peter Hobart)
1949  The Lost People (Knoewles); Golden Salamander (Neame) (as Ranki)
1950  Night and the City (Dassin) (as Kristo); State Secret (The Great Manhunt) (Gilliat) (as Karl Theodor); The Black Rose ( Hathaway) (as Anthemus); Cage of Gold (Dearden) (as Rahman)
1951  Hell Is Sold Out (Anderson) (as Dominic Danges); Two on the Tiles (School for Brides) (Guillermin) (as Ford); Mr. Deming Drives North ( Kimmins) (as Mados); Whispering Smith Hits London (Whispering Smith versus Scotland Yard) (Searle) (as Ford)
1952  The Ringer (Hamilton) (as Maurice Meister); The Net (Project M7) (Asquith) (as Alex Leon); The Man Who Watched Trains Go By (Paris Express) (French) (as Julius de Koster Jr.)
1953  Rough Shoot (Shoot First) (Parrish) (as Peter Sandorski); The Love Lottery (Crichton) (as Amico); Star of India (Lubin) (as Narbonne)
1954  Beautiful Stranger (Twist of Fate) (Miller) (as Emil Landosh)
1955  The Ladykillers (Mackendrick) (as Louis)
1956  War and Peace (King Vidor) (as Napoleon)
1957  Fire Down Below ( Parrish) (as harbor master); Hell Drivers (Endfield) (as Gino); Action of the Tiger (Young) (as Trifon); I Accuse! (Ferrer) (as Major DuPaty de Clam)
1958  Chase a Crooked Shadow (Anderson) (as Vargas); The Roots of Heaven (Huston) (as Orsini); Intent to Kill (Cardiff) (as Juan Menda)
1959  No Trees in the Street (Thompson) (as Wilkie); The Big Fisherman (Borzage) (as Herod Antipas); Passport to Shame (Room 43) (Rakoff) (as Nick); Flame over India (Northwest Frontier) (Thompson) (as Van Leyden); Third Man on the Mountain (Banner in the Sky) (Annakin) (as Emil Saxon)
1960  I Aim at the Stars (Thompson) (as Anton Reger); Spartacus (Kubrick) (as Tigranes)
1961  Mr. Topace (I Like Money) (Sellers) (as Castel Benac); El Cid (Anthony Mann) (as Ben Yusuff); Mysterious Island (Endfield) (as Captain Nemo); The Frightened City ( Lemont) (as Waldo Zhemkov)
1962  The Phantom of the Opera (Fisher) (title role); The Treasure of Silver Lake (Reinl) (as Brinkley); Tiara Tuhiiti (Kotchey) (as Chong Sing)
1963  The Horse without a Head (Chaffey)
1964  A Shot in the Dark (Edwards) (as Chief Inspector Charles Dreyfus)
1965  Return from the Ashes (Thompson) (as Dr. Charles Bovard)
1966  Our Man in Marrakesh (Bang! Bang! You’re Dead) (Sharp) (as Mr. Casimir); Gambit (Neame) (as Shabbandar); Die Nibelungen (Whom the Gods Wish to Destroy) (Reinl) (as Koenig Etzel)
1967  Die Nibelungen II (Reinl) (as Koenig Etzel); Assignment to Kill (The Assignments) (Reynolds) (as Matt Wilson); The Karate Killers (Shear) (as Randolph)
1968  The Face of Eve (Eve) (Summers) (as Diego); Villa Rides! (Kulik) (as General Huerta); 99 Women (Island of Despair) (Franco) (as the governor); Uncle Tom’s Cabin (as Simon Legree)
1969  Doppelganger (Journey to the Far Side of the Sun) (Parrish) (as Dr. Hassler); Mister Jericho (Hayers—for TV)
1970  Count Dracula (Franco) (as Van Helsing); Dorian Gray (The Secret of Dorian Gray) (Dallamano) (as Lord Henry Wotten); Mark of the Devil (Burn Witch Burn; Hexen bis aufs Blutegelä) (Armstrong) (as Count Cumberland)
1971  Murders in the Rue Morgue (Hessler) (as Marot)
1972  Asylum (House of Crazies) (Baker) (as Byron)
1973  Dark Places (Sharp) (as Prescott); And Now the Screaming Starts (Baker) (as Henry Fengriffen)
1974  The Return of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Dreyfus); And Then There Were None (Ten Little Indians) (Collinson) (as Dr. Armstrong)
1976  The Pink Panther Strikes Again (Edwards) (as Dreyfus)
1977  Charleston (Fondato) (as Inspector Watkins)
1978  Revenge of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Dreyfus)
1979  The Lady Vanishes (Page) (as Dr. Hartz); The Man with Bogart’s Face (Sam Marlow, Private Eye) (Day) (as Mr. Zebra)
1980  Hopscotch (Neame) (as Mikhail Yaskov)
1982  The Trail of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Dreyfus)
1983  Memed, My Hawk (The Lion and the Hawk) (Ustinov) (as Ali Safa Bey; The Dead Zone (Cronenberg) (as Dr. Sam Weizak); Curse of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Dreyfus)
1985  King Solomon’s Mines (Thompson) (as Col. Bockner)
1987  Whoops Apocalypse (Bussmann) (as Gen. Mosquera); Scoop (Gavin Miller—for TV) (as Mr. Baldwin)
1988  Dragonard (Master of Dragonard Hill) (Kikoin); Skeleton Coast (Coast of Skeletons) (Cardos) (as Elia); Going Bananas (My African Adventure) (Davidson) (as Mackintosh); The Crystal Eye (Tornatore)
1989  River of Death (Carver) (as Col. Ricardo Diaz); Ten Little Indians (Death on Safari) (Birkshaw) (as Gen. Romensky); Masque of the Red Death (Birkshaw) (as Ludwig)
1991  The Pope Must Die (The Pope Must Diet) (Richardson) (as Vittorio Corelli); La Setta (The Devil’s Daughter; The Sect) (Soavi) (as Gran Vecchio)
1993  Son of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Inspector Dreyfus)
1998  Marco Polo (Marco Polo: Return to Xanadu) (Erschbamer)

Publications

By LOM: books—

Enter a Spy (novel), 1978.
Dr. Guillotine: The Eccentric Exploits of an Early Scientist (novel), 1993.

By LOM: articles—

Interview, in Films and Filming (London), March 1979.
Interview, in Films (London), April 1983.
On LOM: articles—

* Screen International (London), 4 May 1984.

Although he has tackled such exotic roles as Napoleon (twice; in The Young Mr. Pitt and War and Peace), Captain Nemo (in The Mysterious Island), Herod Antipas (in The Big Fisherman), the Phantom of the Opera, Simon Legree, and Oscar Wilde’s Lord Henry Wotten, Herbert Lom is liable to be best remembered for his continuing role as Chief Inspector Dreyfus, the French police commissioner driven to murderous madness by his blithely inept junior, Inspector Clouseau (Peter Sellers) in the Blake Edwards Pink Panther series, introduced in A Shot in the Dark and reaching a climax of insanity in The Pink Panther Strikes Again. After so many screen roles as villains, Lom obviously relished the chance to unbind—as he had done earlier, also alongside Sellers, in The Ladykillers. Lom’s presence in the Pink Panther series became as indispensable to their comic value as that of Sellers himself—and all that lifts the three Panther sequels produced after Sellers’s death from the comic doldrums. The last, to date, was Son of the Pink Panther, starring Italian comic Roberto Begnini as the bumbling scion of Dreyfus’s nemesis.

Making a strong impression, after some minor roles, as the concerned and suave psychoanalyst in The Seventh Veil—a role he later reprised in the television series The Human Jungle—Lom established a screen image as an intelligent, foreign, ambiguous character whose suave purring could mask either benevolence or larceny. Between services in historical epics such as War and Peace, The Black Robe, El Cid, and Spartacus, Lom became a fixture of British crime movies—equally well cast as a Pole, an Italian, a Greek, a Maltese, a Frenchman, a German, or a Hungarian—and provided interesting villainy to a run of fine-to-outstanding movies (Appointment with Crime, Good Time Girl, Intent to Kill, Passport to Shame) set in a rainy, jazz-driven, smoky-club-clotted Soho that constitutes interesting villainy to a run of fine-to-outstanding movies (British crime movies—equally well cast as a Pole, an Italian, a Greek, a Maltese, a Frenchman, a German, or a Hungarian—and provided interesting villainy to a run of fine-to-outstanding movies (Appointment with Crime, Good Time Girl, Intent to Kill, Passport to Shame) set in a rainy, jazz-driven, smoky-club-clotted Soho that constitutes London’s answer to Chandler country.

As Kristo, the suave Greek who runs all the wrestling in London, he is a sinister but tender presence in Jules Dassin’s Night and the City, mourning his father by ordering Richard Widmark’s murder, and bringing far more to the screen than is actually in the role, while he had fun in a rare lead in The Frightened City, as a corrupt accountant named Waldo Zhernikov who tries to enforce a protection racket on the clubs with the aid of Alfred Marks and Sean Connery as London hardmen. His overdone Italian martyr in the otherwise racket on the clubs with the aid of Alfred Marks and Sean Connery as London hardmen. His overdone Italian martyr in the otherwise

In the 1960s and 1970s, Lom’s roles made excursions into spying (Our Man in Marrakesh, The Karate Killers, Assignment to Kill, Hopscotch, The Man with Bogart’s Face), mini-epic (Flame over India, Whom the Gods Wish to Destroy—the low-rent remake of Fritz Lang’s Nibelungen, Peter and Paul), science fiction (a future spy with a camera eyeball in Journey to the Far Side of the Sun), Nazi villainy (The Lady Vanishes) and Euro-Western (Villa Rides! dottod in among cosmopolitan assignments such as Gambit, opposite Shirley MacLaine and Michael Caine, a clever gimmick movie in which Lom plays two versions of the richest man in the world.

When Cary Grant turned down the role, Hammer Films selected Lom for its classy remake of the classic The Phantom of the Opera, directed by Terence Fisher. Though the film has gained in esteem over the years, it was neither a critical nor commercial success when it came out, and Lom made no more films for Hammer, drifting instead into horror movies for other studios and directors. He made a stolid Dr. Van Helsing in Jesus Franco’s feeble attempt to finally film Bram Stoker’s Count Dracula “as written,” a grim witchfinder in the notorious Mark of the Devil, which was rated “V for Violence” and for which “vomits bags” were issued at the box office. Occasional class acts did ensue, however, notably And Now the Screaming Starts, where he was the cause of a family curse, Asylum (as a mad psychic sending his consciousness out to kill as wax mannequins), and a survivor of the holocaust, now a psychiatrist, who gets a firsthand demonstration of Christopher Walken’s sixth sense in Cronenberg’s The Dead Zone.

—Kim Newman, updated by John McCarty

Lombard, Carole

Nationality: American. Born: Jane Alice Peters, in Fort Wayne, Indiana, 6 October 1908 (some sources say 1909). Education: Attended dancing and acting schools as a child; Fairfax High School, California. Family: Married 1) the actor William Powell, 1931 (divorced 1933); 2) the actor Clark Gable, 1939. Career: 1921—film debut as a 13-year-old in A Perfect Crime; 1925—contract with Fox, and appeared in Marriage in Transit; 1927—made a series of Mack Sennett shorts; 1930–37—under contract to Paramount, made a series of successful comedies; later films made for David O. Selznick and RKO. Died: In plane crash, 16 January 1942.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Cast</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>A Perfect Crime</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Dick Turpin (Blystone); Gold and the Girl (Mortimer); Marriage in Transit (Neill) (as Celia Hathaway); Hearts and Spurs (Van Dyke) (as Sybil Estabrook); Darud of the Badlanders (Reynolds) (as Ellen Boyd)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>The Road to Glory (Hawks)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>The Fighting Eagle (Crisp); Smith’s Pony (short); The Girl from Everywhere (Cline—short)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Half a Bride (La Cava); The Divine Sinner (Pembroke) (as Millie Claudert); Me, Gangster (Walsh) (as Blonde Rosie); Show Folks (Stein) (as Cleo); Power (Higgin);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Run, Girl, Run (Goulding—short); The Beach Club (Edwards—short); The Best Man (Edwards—short); The Swim Princess (Goulding—short); The Bicycle Flirt (Edwards—short); The Girl from Nowhere (Edwards—short); His Unlucky Night (Edwards—short); The Campus Carmen (Edwards—short)

1929 Matchmaking Mamas (Edwards—short); Ned McCobb’s Daughter (Cowen) (as Jennie); High Voltage (Higgin) (as Billie Davis); Big News (La Cava) (as Marg); The Racketeer (Higgin) (as Rhoda); Dynamite (DeMille)

1930 The Arizona Kid (Santell) (as Virginia Hoyt); Safety in Numbers (Schertzinger) (as Pauline); Fast and Loose (Newmeyer) (as Alice O’Neil)

1931 It Pays to Advertise (Tuttle) (as Mary Grayson); Man of the World (Wallace) (as Mary Kendall); Ladies’ Man (Mendes) (as Rachel Fendley); Up Pops the Devil (Sutherland) (as Anne Merrick); I Take This Woman (Gering and Vorkapich) (as Kay Dowling)

1932 No One Man (Corrigan) (as Penelope Newbold); Sinners in the Sun (Hall) (as Doris Blake); Virtue (Buzzell) (as Mae); No More Orchids (Wallace) (as Anne Holt); No Man Of Her Own (Ruggles) (as Connie Randall)

1933 From Hell to Heaven (Kenton) (as Colly Tanner); Supernatural (Halperin) (as Roma Courtney); Brief Moment (Burton) (as Abby Fane); The Eagle and the Hawk (Walker) (as the beautiful lady); White Woman (Walker) (as Judith Denning)

1934 Bolero (Ruggles) (as Helen Hathaway); We’re Not Dressing (Taurag) (as Doris Worthington); Twentieth Century (Hawks) (as Lily Garland); Now and Forever (Hathaway) (as Toni Carstairs); Lady by Choice (Burton) (as Alabam’ Lee)

1935 The Gay Bride (Conway) (as Mary); Rumba (Gering) (as Diana Harrison); Hands across the Table (Leisen) (as Regi Allen)

1936 Love Before Breakfast (Walter Lang) (as Kay Colby); My Man Godfrey (La Cava) (as Irene Bullock); The Princess Comes Across (Howard) (as Princess Olga)

1937 Swing High, Swing Low (Leisen) (as Maggie King); Nothing Sacred (Wellman) (as Hazel Flagg); True Confession (Ruggles) (as Helen Bartlett)

1938 Fools for Scandal (LeRoy) (as Kay Winters)

1939 Made for Each Other (Cromwell) (as Jane Mason); In Name Only (Cromwell) (as Julie Eden)

1940 Vigil in the Night (Stevens) (as Anne Lee); They Knew What They Wanted (Kanin) (as Amy Peters)

1941 Mr. and Mrs. Smith (Hitchcock) (as Ann Smith)

1942 To Be or Not to Be (Lubitsch) (as Maria Tura)

Publications

On LOMBARD: books—

On LOMBARD: articles—

Photoplay (New York), June and September 1931, October 1933, March and May 1938, May 1939, and October 1940.

* * *

Legend has it that Carole Lombard was cast for her first screen role, as a 13-year-old tomboy in Allan Dwan’s A Perfect Crime, after the director spotted her playing baseball in the street. Whatever the truth to the story, that role was the beginning of a prolific and often hectic career in which she made more than 40 talking films before her tragic death in a plane crash. Except for a brief interlude to allow her to graduate from junior high school, the actress, appearing first as Carol, and after 1930 Carole, Lombard made movie after movie—creating some of Hollywood’s most memorable comedic roles.

Signed by Fox in 1925, she had small parts in Marriage in Transit with R. William Neill and Hearts and Spurs with W. S. Van Dyke before a car accident resulted in the cancellation of her contract. By 1927 she was working for Mack Sennett, for whom she made more than a dozen two-reel comedy shorts with such Sennett stars as Billy Bevan, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin, and Billy Gilbert. Some bit parts in other feature films, such as Raoul Walsh’s Me, Gangster, finally led to a Pathé contract resulting in her first all-talking picture, High Voltage, directed by Howard Higgin. In 1930, she signed a seven-year contract with Paramount where she was allowed to develop her comic talents in such films as Fast and Loose, It Pays to Advertise, and Man of the World, in between being used as a decorative blonde in routine roles.

During these years she also appeared in Wesley Ruggles’s No Man of Her Own, opposite Clark Gable; Stuart Walker’s White Woman, with Charles Laughton; and Ruggles’s Bolero, starring George Raft. In 1934 she emerged as a truly first-rate comedienne when she appeared opposite John Barrymore in Howard Hawks. This turned out to be the first of four remarkable roles that characterized the best of her performances in the “Screwball” comedies of the 1930s.

From the mid-1930s until her death in 1942, Carole Lombard bounced from studio to studio out on loan from Paramount, appearing in a wide variety of films. At the end of the decade she made two serious films which suggest the potential depth of her talent, George Stevens’s Vigil in the Night and Garson Kanin’s They Knew What They Wanted. One critic has remarked that it could only have been the need for a dark-haired heroine that kept her from getting the Scarlett O’Hara role in Gone with the Wind.

Her last two films, Alfred Hitchcock’s Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Ernst Lubitsch’s To Be or Not to Be, further broadened her talents and provided a brief glimpse of how those talents could have been used. Her cool reserve might have made her one of Hitchcock’s blonde heroines, and Lombard’s wit and glamour seem exactly right for Lubitsch’s stylish comedies.

Her death, while on a bond-selling tour to aid the war effort, stunned the American people. Clark Gable, her second husband, remained emotionally crushed for years. The telegram of condolence sent to Gable by President Roosevelt seemed to sum up the feelings of the time: ‘‘She brought great joy to all who knew her and to millions who knew her only as a great artist. . . . She is and always will be a star, one we shall never forget nor cease to be grateful to.’’

—Charles L. P. Silet

---

LOREN, Sophia

Nationality: Italian. Born: Sofia Villani Scicolone in Rome, 20 September 1934. Family: Married the producer Carlo Ponti, 1957, sons: Carlo Jr. and Eduardo. Career: Began her film career as an extra in Quo Vadis? (produced in 1949), also a model for photographed cartoon strips and appeared in beauty contests; “discovered” by Carlo Ponti; 1957—first American film, The Pride and the Passion; 1988—in TV mini-series Mario Pazo’s The Fortunate Pilgrim. Awards: Best Actress, Venice Festival, for The Black Orchid, 1959; Best Actress Academy Award, Best Actress, Cannes Festival, and Best Foreign Actress, British Academy, for Two Women, 1961; Honorary Oscar, for being “one of the genuine treasures of world cinema who, in a career rich with memorable performances, has added permanent luster to our art form,” 1990; created Knight, French Légion d’honneur, 1991; Cecil B. DeMille Lifetime Achievement Award, Hollywood Foreign Press Association, 1994; also eight David Di Donatello Awards. Address: c/o La Concordia Ranch, 1151 Hidden Valley Road, Thousand Oaks, CA 91361, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

(as Sofia Scicolone-Lazzaro)

1950 Cuori su mare (Hearts upon the Sea) (Bianchi); Il voto (The Vote) (Bonnard); Le sei mogli di Bababa’ (Bluebeard’s Six Wives) (Ludovico); Io sono il capatza (Simonelli); Luci del varietà (Variety Lights) (Fellini)

1951 Quo Vadis? (LeRoy—produced in 1949); Era lui, si! si! (It’s Him, Yes! Yes!) (Metz); Milano miliardaria (Milana the Millionnaires) (Metz); Anna (Lattuada); The Magician in Spite of Himself (Metz); Il sogno di Zorro (The Dream of Zorro) (Soldati); E’arrivato l’accordatore (The Piano Tuner Has Arrived) (Coletti); Lebbra bianca (Trapani)

1952 La favorita (The Favorite) (Barlacchi)

(as Sophia Loren)

1952 White Slave Trade (Comencini)

1953 Aida (Fracassi) (title role); La domenica della buona gente (Good People’s Sunday) (Majano); Il paese dei campanelli (The Country of Bells) (Boyer); Pellegrini d’amore (Pilgrim of Love) (Forzano); Carosella napoletano (Neapolitan Carousel) (Giannini) (as Sisina); Ci troviamo in Galleria (We’ll Meet in the Gallery) (Bolognini); Tempi nostri (Anatomy of Love) (Blasetti); Due notti con Cleopatra (Two Nights with Cleopatra) (Mattòli) (as Nisa/title role)

1954 Attila flagello di dio (Attila; Attila the Hun) (Francisci) (as Honoria); Un giorno in pretrita (A Day in Court) (Steno) (as Anna); “Pizza on Credit” ep. of L’oro di Napoli (The Gold of Naples; Every Day’s a Holiday) (de Sica) (as the wife); La donna del fiume (Woman of the River) (Soldati) (as Nives Mongolini); *Miseria e nobiltà (Poverty and Sophia Loren with Marcello Mastroianni in Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow

1955 Il segno di Venere (The Sign of Venus) (Risi) (as Agnese); La bella mugnaia (The Miller’s Wife) (Camerini) (as Carmela); Pane, amore, e . . . (Scandal in Sorrento) (Risi) (as Donna Sofia); La fortuna di essere donna (Lucky to Be a Woman) (Blasetti) (as Antoinette)

1955 The Pride and the Passion (Kramer) (as Juana); Boy on a Dolphin (Negulesco) (as Phaedra); Legend of the Lost (Timbuktu) (Hathaway) (as Dita)

1956 Desire under the Elms (Delbert Mann) (as Ana Cabot); Houseboat (Shavelson) (as Cinzia Zaccardi); The Key (Reed) (as Stella)

1957 The Black Orchid (Ritt) (as Rose Bianco); That Kind of Woman (Lumet) (as Kay)

1960 Heller in Pink Tights (Cukor) (as Angela Rossini); It Started in Naples (La baia di Napoli) (Shavelson) (as Lucia Curcio); A Breath of Scandal (Olympia) (Curtiz) (as Princess Olympia); The Millionairess (Asquith) (as Epifania Parerga)

1961 Lo ciociara (Two Women) (de Sica) (as Cesira); El Cid (Anthony Mann) (as Chimene); “La Riffa” ep. of Boccaccio 70 (de Sica) (as Zoe); Madame Sans-Gêne (Madame) (Christian-Jaque) (as Catherine Huebscher/Madame)

1962 Le Couteau dans la plaid (Five Miles to Midnight) (Litvak) (as Lisa Macklin); I sequestrati di Altona (The Condemned of Altona) (de Sica) (as Johanna)

1962 ieri, oggi, e domani (Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow) (de Sica) (as Adelina/Anna/Mara)

1963 The Fall of the Roman Empire (Anthony Mann) (as Lucilla); Matrimonio all’italiana (Marriage Italian Style) (de Sica) (as Filomena Marturano)

1965 Judith (Daniel Mann) (title role); Operation Crossbow (The Great Spy Mission; Operazione Crossbow) (Anderson) (as Nora); Lady L (Ustinov) (title role)

1966 Arabesque (Donen) (as Yasmin Azir); A Countess from Hong Kong (Chaplin) (as Natasha)

1967 C’era una volta (More than a Miracle; Cinderella, Italian Style; Happily Ever After) (Rosi) (as Isabella); Questi fantasmi (Ghosts, Italian Style; Three Ghosts) (Castellani) (as Maria)

1969 I girasoli (Sunflower; Les Fleurs du soleil) (de Sica) (as Giovanna)
1971 La moglie del prete (The Priest’s Wife) (Risi) (as Valeria Billi); Bianco, rosso e . . . (The White Sister; The Sin) (Lattuada) (as Sister Germana)
1972 La mortadella (Lady Liberty) (Monicelli) (as Maddalena Ciarrapico); Man of La Mancha (Hiller) (as Dulcinea/ Aldonza)
1973 Il viaggio (The Voyage; The Journey) (de Sica) (as Adriana De Mauro)
1974 Le testament ( Jury of One; The Verdict) (Cayatte) (as Teresa Leon); Brief Encounter (Bridges—for TV); Poopsie (Gun Moll) (Capitani) (title role)
1977 Una giornata speciale (A Special Day) (Scola) (as Antonietta); The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos) (as Jennifer); Angela (Sagai) (title role)
1978 Brass Target (Hough) (as Mara)
1979 Firepower (Winner) (as Adele Tosca); Revenge (Blood Feud) (Wertmüller) (as Titina Paterno); Shimmy Lugano e tarantelle e vino (Wertmüller)
1980 Oopsie Poopsie (Capitani) (as Poopsie); Sophia Loren: Her Own Story (Stuart—for TV) (as herself)
1981 Tieta d’agresta
1985 Qualcosa di biondo
1981 The Voyage
1981 The Cassandra Crossing
1982 Qualcosa di biondo
1981 Una giornata speciale (A Special Day)
1981 Il viaggio (The Voyage; The Journey)
1985 Le testament ( Jury of One; The Verdict)
1978 One Potato, Two Potato
1980 Oopsie Poopsie
1981 Tieta d’agresta
1985 Qualcosa di biondo
1986 Courage
1988 The Fortunate Pilgrim
1990 Sobato, Domenica e Lunedi
1994 Ready to Wear
1995 Grumpier Old Men
1996 Messages
1997 Soleil (Hanin) (as Madame Titine Lévy)

Publications

By LOREN: books—

In the Kitchen with Love, Garden City, New York, 1972.

By LOREN: articles—

‘‘This Is Your Life: Sophia Loren,’’ interview with Alberto Moravia, in Show (Hollywood), September 1962.
‘‘Sofia Scicolone,’’ interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), October 1993.

On LOREN: books—

Zec, Donald, Sophia, New York, 1975.

Shaw, Sam, Sophia Loren in the Camera Eye, New York, 1980.

On LOREN: articles—

Lane, J. F., ‘‘Neapolitan Gold,’’ in Films and Filming (London), April 1957.
Film-dienst (Cologne), 12 April 1994.
Cahiers du Cinema (Paris), March 1996.

* * *

Screen goddesses are rare enough, but celluloid divinities who can act are a breed apart. Although her impoverished beginnings as beauty pageant hopeful held little promise for success, the former Neapolitan dessert became one of the screen’s glittering superstars. Enjoying a recent comeback in the stuck-on-itself Ready to Wear and the enjoyable but sitcomish Grumpier Old Men, incandescent Loren demonstrates how devalued cinema stars have become in an era rife with computer-programmed box-office lures (Demi Moore, Meg Ryan) and vapid starlets who would have been bit players in the forties (Sandra Bullock, Sarah Jessica Parker). When Loren sashays across the screen, the years slip by and a property’s shortcomings can be overlooked because moviegoers feel they are getting more than their money’s worth. With few exceptions (e.g., Susan Sarandon), the current crop of actresses are fast-food vamps who leave one hungry for something more. That tasty something more is called star quality, and Loren had it from her earliest days as amply endowed sex symbol.

In her de Sica comedies, Sophia seemed amused by her own lusciousness, as if she could not believe the foolishness of men trailing after her oregano-scented splendor. Like all transplants to Tinseltown, Loren was vulgarized for American consumption into an all-purpose earth mother. Unlike the other pneumatic wonders of her day (Bardot, Ekberg, Lollobrigida), Loren could do more than stick out her chest. Although her Hollywood output has been denigrated by critics, such a blanket dismissal overlooks tangy romantic comedy pairings with Cary Grant (Houseboat) and Gable (It Started in Naples) in which she holds her own as shining star, not as imported
LORRE, Peter

Born: Laszlo Loewenstein in Rosenberg, Hungary, 26 June 1904. Education: Studied acting in Vienna. Family: Married 1) Cecilia Lovovsaky, 1934; 2) Kaaren Verne, 1951 (divorced); 3) Anna Marie Brenning. Career: Stage debut in Zurich, and also acted in Breslau and other German-language cities: in Galsworthy’s Society in Zurich, and in Die Pionere von Ingolstadt at the Volksbühne, Berlin, 1928; 1931—played a child murderer in his film debut, M; 1933—left Germany with rise of Nazis, and made English-language film debut The Man Who Knew Too Much 1934; over the next ten years made films in Hollywood for Columbia, 20th Century-Fox (including the Mr. Moto series beginning 1937), and Warner Brothers; free-lance after 1947, often in horror films; 1951—directed and acted in Der Verlorene in Germany. Died: 24 March 1964.

Films as Actor:

1931 M (Fritz Lang) (as Hans Beckert); Die Bomben auf Monte Carlo (The Bombardment of Monte Carlo; Monte Carlo Madness) (Schwarz) (as Pawlitschenk); Die Kobe des Herrn O.F. (The Thirteen Trunks of Mr. O.F.) (Granowsky) (as Stix)
1932 Fünf von der Jazzband (Five of the Jazzband) (Engel); Der weisse Dämon (The White Demon) (Gerron) (as hunch-back); F.P. 1 antwortet nicht (F.P. 1 Doesn’t Answer) (Siodmak) (as Johnny); Schuss im Morgengrauen (A Shot at Dawn) (Zeisler) (as Klotz)
1933 Was Frauen träumen (What Women Dream) (von Bolvary) (as Füssli); Unsichtbare Gegner (Invisible Opponent) (Katscher) (as Heny Pless); De haut à bas (Pabst) (as beggar); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock) (as Abbott)
1935 Mad Love (Freund) (as Dr. Gogol); Crime and Punishment (vorn Sternberg) (as Raskolnikov)
1936 The Secret Agent (Hitchcock) (as General)
1937 Crack-Up (St. Clair) (as Col. Gimpy); Nancy Steele Is Missing (Marshall) (as Prof. Sturm); Think Fast, Mr. Moto (Foster) (as Mr. Moto); Lancer Spy (Ratoff) (as Maj. Sigfried Gruning); Thank You, Mr. Moto (Foster) (as Mr. Moto)
1938 Mr. Moto’s Gamble (Tinling) (as Mr. Moto); Mr. Moto Takes a Chance (Foster) (as Mr. Moto); I’ll Give a Million (Walter Lang) (as Louie); Mysterious Mr. Moto (Foster) (as Mr. Moto)
1939 Danger Island (Leeds) (as Mr. Moto); Mr. Moto’s Last Warning (Foster) (as Mr. Moto); Mr. Moto Takes a Vacation (Foster) (as Mr. Moto)
1940 Strange Cargo (Borzage) (as Cochon/M’sieu Pig); I Was an Adventuress (Ratoff) (as Polo); Island of Doomed Men (Barton) (as Stephen Danel); Stranger on the Third Floor (Ingster) (as Stranger); You’ll Find Out (Butler) (as Fenninger)
1941 The Face behind the Mask (Florey) (as James Szabo); Mr. District Attorney (Morgan) (as Mr. Hyde); They Met in Bombay (Brown) (as Capt. Chang); The Maltese Falcon (Huston) (as Joel Cairo)
1942 All through the Night (Sherman) (as Pepi); Invisible Agent (Marin) (as Baron Kito); The Boogie Man Will Get You (Landers) (as Dr. Lorentz); Casablanca (Curtiz) (as Ugarte)
1943 Background to Danger (Walsh) (as Zalenkoff); The Constant Nymph (Goulding) (as Fritz Becvoy); The Cross of Lorraine (Garnett) (as Sgt. Berger)
1944 Passage to Marseille (Curtiz) (as Marius); The Mask of Dimitrios (Negulesco) (as Cornelius Leyden); Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra) (as Dr. Einstein); The Conspirators (Negulesco) (as Jan Bernazsky); Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as guest)
1945 Hotel Berlin (Godfrey) (as Johannes Koenig); Confidential Agent (Shumlin) (as Contreras)
1946 Three Strangers (Negulesco) (as West); Black Angel (Neill) (as Marko); The Chase (Ripley) (as Gino); The Verdict (Siegel) (as Victor Emmric); The Beast with Five Fingers (Florey) (as Hilary Cummins)
1947 My Favorite Brunette (Nugent) (as Kismet)
1948 Casbah (Berry) (as Slimane)
Peter Lorre (center) in The Man Who Knew Too Much

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
<th>Role(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Rope of Sand (Dieterle)</td>
<td>(as Toady)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Quicksand (Pichel)</td>
<td>(as Nick)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Double Confession (Annakin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Beat the Devil (Huston)</td>
<td>(as O’Hara); Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea (Fleischer) (as Conseil)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Congo Crossing (Pevney)</td>
<td>(as Col. Arragas); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as Japanese Steward); Meet Me in Las Vegas (Rowland) (as guest)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Buster Keaton Story (Sheldon)</td>
<td>(as Kurt Bergner); Silk Stockings (Mamoulian) (as Brankov); The Story of Mankind (Allen) (as Nero); The Sad Sack (Marshall) (as Abdul); Hell Ship Mutiny (Sholem and Williams) (as Lamouet)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>The Big Circus (Newman)</td>
<td>(as Skeeter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Scent of Mystery (Cardiff)</td>
<td>(as Smiley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea (Allen)</td>
<td>(as Emery)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>“The Black Cat” ep. of Tales of Terror (Corman)</td>
<td>(as Montresor); Five Weeks in a Balloon (Allen) (as Ahmed)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>The Raven (Corman)</td>
<td>(as Dr. Bedlo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>The Comedy of Terrors (Tourneur)</td>
<td>(as Felix Gillie); Muscle Beach Party (Asher) (as Mr. Strangdour); The Patsy (Lewis) (as Morgan Heywood)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Film as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Der Verlorene (The Lost One) (+ co-sc, ro as Dr. Karl Rothe)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On LORRE: books—

On LORRE: articles—

- Dyer, P. J., “Fugitive from Murder,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1964.
Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), November 1980.
Cinema (W. Germ), March 1984.
Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), no. 1, 1985.
Film Dope (Nottingham), February 1987.
Smith, J., ‘‘Mad Love!’’ in Filmfax (Evanston), March/April 1989.
Molina Foix, J.A., ‘‘Peter Lorre,’’ in Nosferatu (San Sebastian), January 1996.
Potes, A., ‘‘Peter Lorre,’’ in Nosferatu (San Sebastian), January 1996.

***

‘‘I want to escape . . . to escape from myself! . . . But it’s impossible. I can’t. I can’t escape . . . Who knows what it feels like to be me? How I’m forced to act. . . .’’ Cringing, pathetic, grotesque, a giveaway M (for murderer) still chalked on his back, the cornered child-killer makes his agonized plea to a grim-faced jury of criminals. Peter Lorre’s first film performance (barring an unconfirmed bit part or two), it was also one of his finest, and made him internationally famous. Yet at the same time it trapped him. Hollywood, having seen Lang’s film, waited for Lorre to arrive, slapped an indelible M (for melodrama) on his back, and set him to 30 years of playing sad-eyed psychopaths. Throughout his subsequent career, the lines from M echo in ironic commentary.

But Lorre was also trapped by his own utterly distinctive physique. Squat, stocky, round-faced, at once pitiable and terrifying, he seemed a textbook illustration of schizophrenia: the eyes, liquid and soulful, that could abruptly bulge with murderous rage or ungovernable terror; the voice, a gentle middle-European whisper, pitching itself cast as madmen and murderers.

his first appearance on a Hollywood screen, as Dr. Gogol in Mad Love, gave fair warning of what was to come. Leaning forward from the darkness of a theater box, moon-round face totally bald above a fur collar and neatly bisected by shadow, Lorre gazed with depraved desire at the spectacle of Frances Drake being tortured on a wheel. Although one of his better films, as it turned out, it pushed him over the edge of self-parody, using (as the New York Times remarked of a later movie) ‘‘his tricks but not his talent.’’

Lorre himself, longing to extend his range, always claimed that his true bent lay in comedy, and his most enjoyable roles were certainly those in which comic and sinister were finely balanced. As Joel Cairo in The Maltese Falcon, querulous and frizzy-haired, with his spats and gardenia-scented calling cards, he made one of a memorable gang of villains (along with Greenstreet, Mary Astor, and Elisha Cook), just occasionally allowing the killer to glare through the fop. His two roles for Hitchcock drew on a similar vein of quirky ambiguity: the kindly, soft-spoken nihilist in The Man Who Knew Too Much, so good with children; and the flamboyantly overdressed ‘‘Hairless Mexican’’ in Secret Agent, vain and temperamentally, given to sudden outbursts of irrational fury. Lorre could effect the switch, from genial to chilling, with utmost subtlety—a twitch of the scalp, a spasm briefly contorting the mouth, and his shy, vulnerable face would smooth into an inhuman mask.

After The Maltese Falcon WARNERS teamed him eight more times with Greenstreet. They acted well together, effectively playing off Greenstreet’s vast urbanity against Lorre’s scattering nervousness, even (perhaps especially) when, as in The Mask of Dimitrios or The Verdict, Lorre played hero to the other’s villain. The Mr. Moto series also allowed him a rare escape from evil—routine Fox program-fodder, redeemed by Lorre’s resilient wit. Otherwise it was mostly psychopaths, spies, and sadists, though Lorre could bring individuality to the most hackneyed parts, transforming them (in David Thomson’s words) ‘‘into portraits of delicate, deranged kindness, pushed to the point of frantic malice.’’

Privately, Lorre was known as a charming man, gentle and intelligent. In later life, troubled by ill-health and overweight, and hurt by the undeserved failure of his sole attempt at directing, Der Verlorene, he wandered with resigned sadness through some disastrously bad movies. He was, Peter John Dyer wrote, ‘‘a victim of his own precocious fame . . . too intractably unique in accent, form and expression for producers to reorient their attitude towards him. He was too obviously nearly mad. He was too dangerously sane.’’

—Philip Kemp

LOY, Myrna

Films as Actress:

1923 The Ten Commandments (Cecil B. DeMille) (uncredited)
1925 Pretty Ladies (Bell) (bit role)
1926 Ben-Hur (Niblo) (bit role); Cave Man (Milestone) (as chorus girl); Across the Pacific (Del Ruth); Why Girls Go Back Home (Flood); The Gilded Highway (Blackton); Don Juan (Crosland); The Exquisite Sinner (von Sternberg and Rosen); So This Is Paris (Lubitsch); Finger Prints (Bacon)
1927 Ham and Eggs at the Front (Ham and Eggs) (Del Ruth); Bitter Apples (Hoyt); Heart of Maryland (Bacon) (bit role); The Jazz Singer (Crosland) (as chorus girl); If I Were Single (Del Ruth); The Girl from Chicago (Enright); The Climbers (Stein); Simple Sis (Raymaker); A Sailor’s Sweetheart (Bacon)
1928 What Price Beauty (Buckingham); Beware of Married Men (Mayo); Turn Back the Hours (Bretherton); Crimson City (Mayo); Pay as You Enter (Bacon); State Street Sadie (The Myrna Loy with Tyrone Power in The Rains Came

1929
- Fancy Baggage (Adolfi) (as Myrna); The Desert Song (Del Ruth) (as Azuri); Black Watch (King of the Khyber Rifles) (Ford) (as Yasmini); The Squall (Korda) (as Nubi); Hardboiled Rose (Weight) (as Rose Duhamel); Evidence (Adolfi) (as native girl); Show of Shows (Adolfi)
- Girl from State Street (Mayo) (as “Slinky”)
- Midnight Taxi (Adolfi) (as Mrs. Joe Brant); Noah’s Ark (Curtiz) (as dancer/slave girl)

1930
- The Great Divide (Barker) (as Manuela); Cameo Kirby (Cummings) (as Lea); Isle of Escape (Bretherton) (as Moira); Under a Texas Moon (Curtiz) (as Lolita Romero); Cock o’ the Walk (Lane and Neill) (as Narita)
- Middle of the River (Dillon) (as Sophie); Last of the Duanes (Werker) (as Lola); The Truth about Youth (Seiter) (as Kara the Firefly); Renegades (Fleming) (as Eleanor); Rogue of the Rio Grande (Bennet) (as Carmita); The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice) (as Mary Carlyle); Jazz Cinderella (Love Is Like That) (Pembroke) (as Mildred Vane)

1931
- Naught Flirt (Cline) (as Linda Gregory); Body and Soul (Santell) (as Alice Lester); A Connecticut Yankee (The Yankee at King Arthur’s Court) (Butler) (as Morgan Le Fay); Hash Money (Lanfield) (as Flo Curtis); Transatlantic (William K. Howard) (as Kay Graham); Rebound (Edward H. Griffith) (as Evie Lawrence); Skyline (Taylor) (as Paula Lambert); Consolation Marriage (Sloane) (as Elaine); Arrowsmith (Ford) (as Joyce Lanyon)

1932
- Emma (Brown); The Wet Parade (Fleming); Vanity Fair (Franklin) (as Becky Sharp); The Woman in Room Thirteen (Henry King) (as Sari Loder); New Morals for Old (Brabin) (as Myra); Love Me Tonight (Mamoulian) (as Countess Valentine); Thirteen Women (Archainbaud) (as Ursula Georgi); The Mask of Fu Manchu (Brabin) (as Fah Lo See); The Animal Kingdom (The Woman in His House) (Edward H. Griffith) (as Cecilia Henry)

1933
- Topaze (D’Arrast) (as Coco); The Barbarian (A Night in Cairo) (Wood) (as Diana); The Prizefighter and the Lady (Van Dyke) (as Belle Morgan); When Ladies Meet (Beaumont) (as Mary Howard); Penthouse (Crooks in Clover) (Van Dyke) (as Gertie Waxedt); Night Flight (Brown) (as Brazilian pilot’s wife); Scarlet River (Selznick) (as herself)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Cast Members</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Men in White</td>
<td>Boleslawsky</td>
<td>(Boleslawsky—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Manhattan Melodrama</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(Van Dyke—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>The Thin Man</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Stamboul Quest</td>
<td>Wood</td>
<td>(as Woman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Evelyn Prentice</td>
<td>Howard</td>
<td>(as Evelyn Prentice)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Broadway Bill</td>
<td>Capra</td>
<td>(as Alice)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Wings in the Dark</td>
<td>Flood</td>
<td>(as Laura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Manhattan Melodrama</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Great Ziegfeld</td>
<td>Zeffirelli</td>
<td>(as Billie Burke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>To Mary—with Love</td>
<td>Wyler</td>
<td>(as Mary Wallace)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Libeled Lady</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Connie Allenbury)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>After the Thin Man</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Parnell</td>
<td>Stahl</td>
<td>(as Katie Blandings)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Double Wedding</td>
<td>Thorpe</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Man-Proof</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Test Pilot</td>
<td>Fleming</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Lucky Night</td>
<td>Taurig</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>The Rains Came</td>
<td>Conway</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>I Love You Again</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Kay Wilson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Third Finger</td>
<td>Leonard</td>
<td>(as Margot Sherwood)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Love Crazy</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Shadow of the Thin Man</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Show Business at War</td>
<td>short</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>The Thin Man Goes Home</td>
<td>Thorpe</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>So Goes My Love</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>The Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Song of the Thin Man</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>The Senator Was Indiscreet</td>
<td>Kaufman</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>The Red Pony</td>
<td>Wilson</td>
<td>(as Alice Tiflin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Cheaper by the Dozen</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Mrs. Lillian Gilbreth)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>That Dangerous Age</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Belles on Their Toes</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Ambassador's Daughter</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Lonelyhearts</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>From the Terrace</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The April Fools</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Death Takes a Holiday</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Do Not Fold, Spindle or Mutilate</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>The Couple Takes a Wife</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Indict and Convict</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Airport 1975</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>The Elevator</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>It Happened at Lakewood Manor</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Panic at Lakewood Manor</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Summer Solstice</td>
<td>Van Dyke</td>
<td>(as Nora Charles)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By LOY: book—

By LOY: articles—

“‘Myrna Loy on Comedy,’” interview with Eric Braun in Films and Filming (London), March 1968.

On LOY: books—

On LOY: articles—

Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), April 1982.

* * *

Perhaps no other actress of her refinement has been so encumbered by the star epithets meant to promote her than Myrna Loy. Touted as the perfect wife and crowned Queen to Clark Gable’s virile
LUGOSI, Bela

Born: Bela Ferenc Denzso Blasko in Lugos, Hungary (now Romania), 20 October 1882. Education: Attended State Superior Gymnasium, Lugos, and Academy of Performing Arts, Budapest. Family: Married 1) Ilona Szmik, 1917 (divorced 1920); 2) the actress Ilona von Montagh, 1921 (divorced 1924); 3) Beatrice Woodruff Weeks, 1929 (divorced 1929); 4) Lillian Arch, 1933 (divorced 1953), son: Bela, Jr.; 5) Hope Linniger, 1955. Career: 1902—first stage appearance in Ocsay Brigaderos, Deva, Hungary (under name Bela Lugossy); later acted with Franz Joseph Repertory Theatre, Szeged Repertory Theatre, Hungarian Theatre, 1911–13, and National Theatre, 1913–19; 1917—Hungarian film debut in A Leopard, 1919—left Hungary when leftists were defeated, and appeared in several German films in King, she managed to retain her popular appeal while transcending the stereotypes affixed, but never adhering to her ebullient personality. A laugh always seems fermenting deep within her, the happy product of some distillation of good and high spirits.

Loy began her career as a dancer and bit player (one early “part” cast her as the leg of a human chandelier!) but soon found her singular beauty appropriated to play dark-skinned sirens and Oriental wantons. She exhibited a fiendish glee in such lurid roles as the vindictive half-beauty appropriated to play dark-skinned sirens and Oriental wantons. (as Loy described her) in The Mask of Fu Manchu. A supporting role in Love Me Tonight released the levity in her nature. Her drowsy Valentine, whose narcolepsy results not from lack of sleep, but want of men, immediately revives whenever an eligible male wanders in her vicinity. When asked whether she could go for a doctor, this sleeping beauty responds with an enthusiastic, grateful “Yes!” Loy had a way of reading of her lines, even the monosyllabic ones, that uncovered unexpected reserves of energy and irony ready for use.

Loy’s Valentine, enchanting as she was, could have lived at any time since the sixteenth century—providing she was lodged in a chateau. It was her early films with Woody Van Dyke, such as Penthouse and Manhattan Melodrama, which teamed her with William Powell and Clark Gable, that naturalized Loy as a sophisticated woman very much of her own times. Powell won out over the rough, but generous Gable in the latter film, forming an enduring screen partnership that would have fun making fun of the modern sex relation. In 1934’s The Thin Man Loy literally hurled the modern wife at the feet of an unsuspecting public by executing a three-point landing on a barroom floor. She rose, dignity intact, to assume her place in the popular imagination as the perfect wife who was in every way an equal to her mate—drink for drink, repartee for repartee, but mostly wink for wink. Though never canonized as the perfect husband, Powell knew how to cherish Loy as the most companionable of modern women—witty, unaffectedly but unmistakably intelligent, and remarkably good-natured.

Her rapport with Powell, while unique, nevertheless revealed her untroubled instinct for what her screen mates needed and saw in her. She is not as droll with Gable, who liked his women sassy but not ironic. Her staunch but giving heart so impresses him that he is ready to compromise his macho code and become gentler than he generally feels he can afford to be, a transformation she works on him in the Test Pilot and Too Hot to Handle. Opposite Cary Grant in The Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer and Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House she maintains an imperturbable calm in the face of his frenzied attempts to create order out of chaos, calmly proceeding with her business whatever he thinks his—or hers—might be.

Loy persisted in the national psyche as the womanly ideal after the war. In Wyler’s The Best Years of Our Lives she suggested how the generosity that in her comic roles manifested itself in good-spirited camaraderie also subsisted in the forbearance wife patiently assisting her husband’s readjustment to civilian life. But Loy was no stranger to the dark side of the happy marriages she continued humanizing in films such as Cheaper by the Dozen and Belles on Their Toes. Her wrenching portrait as the alcoholic mother in From the Terrace and the sardonic wife in Lonelyhearts offer a bleak counterface to the festive mien she generally presented to the camera. Her last roles played on the knowledge that the qualities she embodied were fast becoming legendary, so that there is to her performances in April Fools and Just Tell Me What You Want the melancholy suggestion that her wit, womanly tact, and ironic intelligence had indeed transported her to some unreachable, yet still visible realm of perfection.

—Maria DiBattista

Bela Lugosi in Dracula

Films as Actor:

(as Arisztid Olt)

1917 A Leopard (The Leopard) (Deesey); Az acredés (The Colonel) (Kertesz, i.e. Curtiz)
1918 Alarcos-bal (The Masked Ball) (Deesey); Naszadal (Song of Marriage) (Deesey); Kizdelem a letert (A Struggle for Life) (Deesey); 99 (Kertesz, i.e. Curtiz); Tacassi vihar (The Wild Wind of Spring) (Deesey); Az elet kiralya (The King of Life) (Deesey); Lili (Hintner)

(as Bela Lugosi)

1920 Der Fluch der Menschheit (Eichberg); Der Januskopf (Janus-Faced; Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde) (Murnau) (as butler); Die Frau im Delphin, oder 30 Tage auf dem Meeresgrund (Kiekebusch-Brenken; Die Teufelsanbeter; Lederstrumpf (The Deerslayer) (Welling) (as Uncas)
1921 Der Tanz auf dem Vulkan (Daughter of the Night) (Eichberg) (as Andrew Fleurat); Nat Pinkerton; Johann Hopkins der Dritte
1923 The Silent Command (Edwards) (as Hisston)
1924 The Rejected Parker; The Rejected Woman (Parker) (as Jean Gagnon)
1925 The Midnight Girl (Noy) (as Nicholas Harmon); Daughters Who Pay (Terwilliger) (as Sergei Omansky)
1928 How to Handle Women (Craft); The Veiled Woman (Flynn)
1929 Prisoners (Seiter) (as Brottos); The Thirteenth Chair (Brown- ing) (as Insp. Delzante)
1930 Such Men Are Dangerous (Hawks) (as Dr. Goodman); Wild Company (McCarey) (as Felix Brown); Viennese Nights (Crosland) (as Hungarian Ambassador); Renegades (Fleming) (as the Marabout)
1931 Oh, For a Man (MacFadden); Dracula (Browning) (as Count Dracula); Fifty Million Frenchmen (Bacon); Women of All Nations (Walsh) (as Prince Hassan); The Black Camel (MacFadden) (as Tarneverro); Broad Minded (Le Roy) (as Pancho); Murders in the Rue Morgue (Florey) (as Dr. Mirakle)
1932 White Zombie (Halperin) as ‘Murder’ Legendre; Chanda, The Magician (Varnel and Menzies) (as Roxor)
1933 Island of Lost Souls (Kenton) (as Leader of the Apemen); The Death Kiss (Marin) (as Joseph Steiner); International House (Sutherland) (as Gen. Nicholas Petronovich); Night of Terror (Stoloff) (as Degar); The Whispering Shadow (Hermand and Clark—serial) (as Prof. Strang); The Devil’s in Love (Dieterle) (as prosecutor)
1934 The Black Cat (Ulmer) (as Dr. Vitus Werdegast); Gift of Gab (Freund) (as man in closet); The Return of Chandu (Taylor—serial—features The Return of Chandu and Chanda on the Magic Island released 1935) (as Chandu)
1935 The Best Man Wins (Kenton) (as Doc Boehm); Mysterious Mr. Wong (Nigh) (as Mr. Wong); Mark of the Vampire (Browning) (as Count Mora); The Raven (Landers) (as Dr. Richard Volland); Murder by Television (Sanforth) (as Arthur Perry); The Phantom Ship (The Mystery of the Marie Celeste) (Clit) (as Anton Lorenzen)
1936 The Invisible Ray (Hillery) (as Dr. Benet); Postal Inspector (Brower) (as Benez); Shadow of Chinatown (Hill—serial) (as Victor Poten)
1937 S.O.S. Coastguard (Witney and James—serial) (as Boroff)
1939 Son of Frankenstein (Lee) (as Ygor); The Gorilla (Dwan) (as Peters); The Phantom Creeps (Beebe and Goodkind—serial) (as Dr. Alex Zorka); Ninotchka (Lubitsch) (as Razinini); The Human Monster (Dark Eyes of London) (Summers) (as Dr. Orloff)
1940 The Saint’s Double Trouble (Hively) (as Partner); Black Friday (Lubin) (as Eric Marnay); You’ll Find Out (Butler) (as Prince Saliano)
1941 The Devil Bat (Yarborough) (as Dr. Paul Carruthers); The Black Cat (Rol) (as Eduardo); The Invisible Ghost (Lewis) (as Mr. Kessler); Spooks Run Wild (Rosen) (as Nardo the monster); The Wolf Man (Wagener) (as Bela)
1942 Ghost of Frankenstein (Kenton) (as Ygor); Black Dragons (Nigh) (as Dr. Melcher/Colomb); The Corpse Vanishes (Fox) (as Dr. Lorenz); Bowery at Midnight (Fox) (as Prof. Brenner/Karl Wagner); Night Monster (Beebe) (as Rol)
1943 Frankensteen Meets the Wolf Man (Neill) (as monster); The Ape Man (Beaudine) (as Dr. Brewer); Ghosts on the Loose (Beaudine) (as Emil)
1944 The Return of the Vampire (Landers) (as Armand Tesla); Voodoo Man (Beaudine) (as Dr. Marlowe); Return of the Ape Man (Rosen) (as Prof. Dexter); One Body Too Many (McDonald) (as Larchmont)
1945 The Body Snatcher (Hfilme) (as Joseph); Zombies on Broadway (Douglas) (as Prof. Renault)
1946 Genius at Work (Goodwins) (as Stone)
1947 Scared to Death (Cabanne) (as Leonide)
1948 Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein (Barton) (as Count Dracula)
1952 Old Mother Riley Meets the Vampire (Vampire over London; My Son, The Vampire) (Gilling) (as Von Housen); Glen or Glenda? (I Changed My Sex) (Wood); Bela Lugosi Meets a Brooklyn Gorilla (The Boys from Brooklyn; The Monster Meets the Gorilla) (Beaudine) (as Dr. Zabor)
1955 Bride of the Monster (Wood) (as Dr. Eric Vornoff)
1956 The Black Sleep (Le Borg) (as Casimir)
1959 Plan Nine from Outer Space (Grave Robbers from Outer Space) (Wood) (as ghoul man)

Publications

On LUGOSI: books—

Rhodes, Gary D., Lugosi: His Life in Film, on Stage, & in the Hearts of Horror Lovers, Jefferson, 1997.

Lugosi rarely had the opportunity on screen to exhibit his persona’s fatal charm. After he achieved movie stardom in Dracula, neither he nor Hollywood knew how to exploit his success or capitalize properly on his image. His one cinematic reprise of the Count was true to the original’s spirit, but its context, Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein, precluded the possibility for any of the original’s dark passion and sexual suggestion, as did his two Dracula imitations in Return of the Vampire and Mark of the Vampire (a stupid “elaborate hoax” movie, wherein Lugosi is a mute, snarling monster, revealed to be an actor impersonating a vampire; all references to the supposed vampire’s incest were deleted).

Lugosi made one bad career choice after another. He rejected the part of Frankenstein’s monster, but more damaging were the parts he too often accepted: supporting roles or red-herring parts in murder mysteries (when he should have been playing the actual menace), leads in “B” and “C” pictures, often serials. His poor judgment hurt him; each time a horror cycle ended, he was unable, unlike Boris Karloff, to find employment. (His only appearance in an “A” picture after 1933 was a one-scene cameo in Ninotchka.)

In only a handful of films did Lugosi exhibit the passion and obsession that were the mark of his most successful characters. Karloff’s “mad” scientists were usually kindly, misguided, fatherly types whose attempts to aid humanity went awry. Lugosi’s were monomaniacal, driven men who often labored all for love of (or lust for) a woman (for example, in The Raven, The Corpse Vanishes, and Voodoo Man). White Zombie and Murders in the Rue Morgue concern Lugosi’s power over women; the loss of his wife and daughter spurred Lugosi’s revenge in The Black Cat and, for a change, a woman exerts hypnotic power over him in Invisible Ghost.

The equally obsessed Ygor—broken-necked, self-serving companion to Frankenstein’s monster—was his other memorable creation, which displayed Lugosi’s versatility but didn’t help his career. He was more and more frequently cast as servants—either imperious (like his Dracula) or uncouth (like Ygor)—in somebody else’s horror film, usually to lend menace to the production or another recognizable name to the cast.

By the time he played his last butler in The Black Sleep, he was associated with the inept Ed Wood, Jr., who, whatever his shortcomings as a filmmaker, treated Lugosi like a star. Wood cast him as the sage counselor in his very personal Glen or Glenda?, allowed him one last mad-scientist role in Bride of the Monster, and planned to star him as a vampire in the film that eventually became the infamous Plan 9 from Outer Space—built around the few minutes of Lugosi footage shot before his death. Wood’s dim awareness of Lugosi’s power and presence bestowed on the actor’s last works a certain ignominious nobility.

—Anthony Ambrogio

LUKAS, Paul

Born: Pal Lukasz in Budapest, Hungary, 26 May 1895. Education: Attended College of Budapest; National Theatre Actors School. Military Service: Served in the Hungarian army, 1913–15; invalidated out. Family: Married 1) Daisy Benes, 1927 (died 1962); 2) Annette Dreisens. Career: 1916—stage debut with National Theatre; 1917— Hungarian film debut in Sphinx; 1918–27—member of the Comedy Theatre, Budapest; also appeared in Max Reinhardt productions in...
Vienna and Berlin; 1922—German film debut in Samson und Delilah; 1927—invited to Hollywood by Zukor, but U.S. film debut delayed while he learned English: debut in Two Lovers, 1928; also appeared on U.S. stage, most notably in Watch on the Rhine, 1941 (also in film version); also appeared on television, in series The F.B.I. and Hotel Paradis. Awards: Best Actor Academy Award, and Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for Watch on the Rhine, 1943. Died: 15 August 1971.

Films as Actor:

1915 Man of the Earth
1917 Spynx (Sphinx) (Balogh); Udvari levego (Song of the Heart) (Balogh)
1920 Sarga Amnyék (Garas); Little Fox (Garas); Castle without a Name; Masamod (The Milliner) (Markus); Színeszno (The Actress) (Forgacs); Nevtelen vár (Garas); Olavi (Lajthay)
1921 New York expresz kabel (Telegram from New York) (Garas); Hetszázéves szerelem (Garas); Love of the Eighteenth Century
1922 The Lady in Grey; A szarkerahás hölgy (Deesy); Samson und Delilah (Samson and Delilah) (Curtiz); Lady Violette (Geroffy); Eine Versunkene Welt
1923 The Glorious Life; Diadalmas elet (Gaël); Egy fiamnak a fele (von Bolvary); A Girl's Way; Das unbekannte Morgen (Korda)
1928 Two Lovers (Niblo) (as Ramón de Linea); Three Sinners (Lee) (as Count Dietrich Wallentin); Loves of an Actress (Lee) (as Dr. Durande); Hot News (Badger) (as James Clayton); The Night Watch (Korda) (as Captain Corlais); The Woman from Moscow (Berger) (as Vladimir); Manhattan Cocktail (Arzner) (as Renov)
1929 The World of Wall Street (Lee) (as David Tyler); The Shopworn Angel (Wallace) (as Bailey); Illusion (Mendes) (as Count Fortuny); Half-Way to Heaven (Abbott) (as Nick)
1930 Slightly Scarlet (Gasnier and Knopf) (as Malatroff); Behind the Make-Up (Milton) (as Boris); Young Eagles (Wellman) (as Von Baden); Grumpy (Cukor and Gardner) (as Berci); The Benson Murder Case (Tuttle) (as Adolph Mohler); The Devil's Holiday (Goulding) (as Dr. Reynolds); *Anybody's Woman (Arzner) (as Gustav Saxon); The Right to Love (Wallace) (as Eric Helge)

1931 City Street (Mamoulian); Unfaithful (Cromwell); The Vice Squad (Cromwell); Women Love Once (Goodman); Strictly Dishonorable (Stahl); The Beloved Bachelor (Corrigan); Working Girls (Arzner)

1932 No One Man (Corrigan) (as Dr. Karl Bemis); Tomorrow and Tomorrow (Wallace); Thunder Below (Wallace); A Passport to Hell (Lloyd); Rockabye (Cukor); Downstairs (Bell)

1933 Grand Slam (Dieterle); The Kiss before the Mirror (Whale); Sing Sinner Sing (Christy); Captured! (Del Ruth); Secret of the Blue Room (Neumann); Little Women (Cukor) (as Professor Bhaer)

1934 By Candlelight (Whale); Glamour (Wyler); The Countess of Monte Cristo (Frnd); Affairs of a Gentleman (Marin); I Give My Love (Freund); The Fountain (Cromwell); Gift of Gab (Freund)

1935 The Casino Murder Case (Fenton); Father Brown—Detective (Sedgwick) (title role); Age of Indecision (Ludwig); I Found Stella Parish (LeRoy); The Three Musketeers (Lee)

1936 Dodsworth (Wyler); Ladies in Love (Griffith)

1937 Espionage (Neumann); Dinner at the Ritz (Schuster); Brief Ecstasy (Gréville)

1938 The Mutiny on the Elsinore (Lockwood); The Lady Vanishes (Hitchcock) (as Dr. Hartz); Dangerous Secrets (Gréville)

1939 Confessions of a Nazi Spy (Litvak) (as Dr. Kassel); Lady in Distress (Mason); Captain Fury (Roach)

1940 The Ghost Breakers (Marshall); Strange Cargo (Borzage) (as Hessler)

1941 The Monster and the Girl (Heisler); They Dare Not Love (Whale); The Chinese Bungalow (Chinese Den) (G. King) (as Yuan Sing)

1943 Watch on the Rhine (Sherman and Shumlin) (as Kurt Mueller); Hostages (Tuttle)

1944 Uncertain Glory (Walsh); Address Unknown (Menzies); Experiment Perilous (Turner)

1946 Deadline at Dawn (Chapman); Temptation (Pichel)

1947 Whispering City (Ozep)

1948 Berlin Express (Turner)

1950 Kim (Saville)

1954 20,000 Leagues under the Sea (Flesicher) (as Professor Aronnax)

1958 The Roots of Heaven (Huston)

1960 Scent of Mystery (Holiday in Spain) (Todd and Cardiff); Tender Is the Night (King) (as Dr. Dohnler)

1962 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli) (as Karl von Hartrott)

1963 Fifty-Five Days at Peking (Ray) (as Dr. Steinfeldt); Fun in Acapulco (Thorpe) (as Maximillian)

1965 Lord Jim (Brooks) (as Stein)

1968 Sol Madrid (Hutton) (as Capo Riccione)

1970 The Challenge (Smithee)

On LUKAS: articles—

Photoplay (New York), December 1930, June 1931, January 1932, June 1933, November 1934, and September 1940.

Time (New York), 14 April 1941.

New Yorker, 10 May 1941.

* * *

In his more than 40 years in Hollywood, Hungarian-born Paul Lukas enjoyed an active career playing a combination of the suave, continental leading man to some of the screen’s most glamorous actresses—Ruth Chatterton in Anybody’s Woman, Sylvia Sidney in City Streets, Constance Bennett in Rockabye, and Loretta Young in Grand Slam—to the suave, continental villain in numerous Nazi-based war films. Rarely were his roles substantial enough for him to draw upon his extensive theatrical training. However, he did achieve top-ranking star status with his portrayal of Kurt Mueller in Watch on the Rhine in 1943.

Few of his films of the 1930s stand out, but he was particularly memorable as Professor Bhaer in Little Women. He played detective Philo Vance in The Casino Murder Case, Athos in The Three Musketeers, and Arnold Iselin in William Wyler’s excellent Dodsworth. He was appropriately mysterious as the charming Dr. Hartz in Alfred Hitchcock’s The Lady Vanishes, but probably his best 1930s role was as Dr. Kassel, the propaganda chief, in Confessions of a Nazi Spy. This was patriotic wartime melodrama brilliantly acted by Edward G. Robinson, Francis Lederer, and Lukas with swiftly paced direction by Anatole Litvak.

It was the Nazism of World War II that also set the scene for Lukas’s greatest film success, Watch on the Rhine. He had starred in the 1941 New York stage version of this, Lillian Hellman’s most subtly written play. His portrayal of Kurt Mueller, the German émigré with an American wife, was universally lauded by critics. Brooks Atkinson wrote in the New York Times, “As the enemy of fascism, Mr. Lukas’ haggard, loving, resourceful determination becomes heroic by virtue of his sincerity and his superior abilities as an actor.” When Warner Brothers produced the film version, they hired five members of the original Broadway cast, including Lukas, and the director, Herman Schumlin. They enlisted Hellman’s friend Dashiell Hammett to write the screenplay and cast Bette Davis as Mueller’s wife to ensure box-office success. However, it was Lukas’s film, and he received the Academy Award and the New York Film Critics Award for his moving performance.

Despite the success of Watch on the Rhine, Lukas’s career remained one of fairly cardboard leading roles opposite beautiful actresses (for example Hedy Lamarr in Experiment Perilous), and eventually evolved into mature character roles: he was Professor Aronnax in 20,000 Leagues under the Sea and Stein in Lord Jim.

—Ronald Bowers

LUPINO, Ida

School, Hove, Sussex; Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London.
Family: Married 1) the actor Louis Hayward, 1938 (divorced 1945); 2) the writer Collier Young, 1938 (divorced 1945); 3) the actor Howard Duff, 1951 (divorced 1972), daughter: Bridget.
Awards: Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for The Hard Way, 1943. Died: Of cancer, in Burbank, California, 3 August 1995.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Her First Affaire (Dwan)</td>
<td>(as Anne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Money for Speed (Vorhaus)</td>
<td>(as Jane); High Finance (King)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Jill); The Ghost Camera</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Vorhaus) (as Mary Elton); *I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Lived with You* (Elvey) (as Ada</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Wallis); Prince of Arcadia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Schwartz) (as Princess)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Search for Beauty (Kenton)</td>
<td>(as Barbara Hilton); *Come on,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Marines!* (Hathaway) (as Esther</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Cabot); Ready for Love (Gering)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Marigold Tate)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Paris in Spring (Milestone)</td>
<td>(as Mignon De Charelle); *Smart</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Girl* (Scotto) (as Pat Reynolds);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Peter Ibbetson (Hathaway) (as</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Agnes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Anything Goes (Milestone)</td>
<td>(as Hope Harcourt); *One Rainy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Afternoon* (Mattine Scandal)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Rowland V. Lee) (as Monique</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Pelerin); Yours for the Asking</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Hall) (as Gert Malloy); *The Gay</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Desperado* (Mamoulian) (as Jane)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Sea Devils (Stoloff)</td>
<td>(as Doris Malone); *Let’s Get</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Married* (Alfred E. Green) (as</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Paula Quinn); Artists and Models</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Walsh) (as Paula Sewell); *Fight</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>For Your Lady* (Stoloff) (as</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Marietta)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>The Lone Wolf Spy Hunt</td>
<td>(as Val Carson); *The Lady and</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>the Mob* (Stoloff) (as Lila Thorne);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Werker) (as Ann Brandon); *The</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Light That Failed* (Wellman) (as</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Bessie Broke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>They Drive by Night</td>
<td>(Walsh) (as Lana Carlsen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>High Sierra (Walsh)</td>
<td>(as Marie Garson); The Sea Wolf</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Curtiz) (as Ruth Webster); *Out</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>of the Fog* (Litvak) (as Stella</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Goodwin); Ladies in Retirement</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Charles Vidor) (as Ellen Creed)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Moontide (Mayo)</td>
<td>(as Ada); The Hard Way (Sherman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Helen Chernen); *Life Begins at</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>8:30 (The Light of Heart)*</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Pichel) (as Kathi Thomas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Forever and a Day (Clair)</td>
<td>(as Jenny); *Thank Your Lucky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Stars* (David Butler) (appearance)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>In Our Time (Sherman)</td>
<td>(as Jennifer Whittredge); *Hollywood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Canteen* (Daves) (appearance)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Pillow to Post (Sherman)</td>
<td>(as Jean Howard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Devotion (Bernhardt)</td>
<td>(as Emily Bronté); The Man I Love</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Walsh) (as Petey Brown)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Deep Valley (Negulesco)</td>
<td>(as Libby); Escape Me Never</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Godfrey) (as Gemma Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Road House (Negulesco)</td>
<td>(as Lily Stevens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Last for Gold (Simon)</td>
<td>(as Julia Thomas); Woman in Hiding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Gordon) (as Deborah Chandler Clark)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>On Dangerous Ground (Nicholas Ray) (as Mary Marden)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Beware, My Lovely (Horner)</td>
<td>(as Helen Gordon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Jennifer (Newton) (as</td>
<td>Agnes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Private Hell 36 (Siegel)</td>
<td>(as Lilli Marlowe, + co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Women’s Prison (Seiler)</td>
<td>(as Amelia Van Zant); The Big Knife</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Aldrich) (as Marion Castle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>While the City Sleeps</td>
<td>(Fritz Lang) (as Mildred); *Strange</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Intruder* (Rapper) (as Alice)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Backtrack (Bellamy)</td>
<td>(as Mama Delores)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Junior Bonner (Penckinah)</td>
<td>(as Elvira Bonner); Deadhead Miles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Zimmerman) (as herself); *Women in</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Chains* (Kowalski—for TV) (as</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Tyson); The Strangers in 7A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Wendkos—for TV) (as Iris Sawyer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Female Artillery (Chomsky)</td>
<td>(as Martha Lindstrom); *I Love a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Mystery* (Leslie Stevens—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Randolph Cheyne); ‘‘Dear</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Karen’’ ep. of The Letters (Krasny—for TV) (as Mrs. Forrester)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>The Devil’s Rain (Fuest)</td>
<td>(as Mrs. Preston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Food of the Gods (Bert I. Gordon) (as Mrs. Skinner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>My Boys Are Good Boys</td>
<td>(Buckalew)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Not Wanted (co-d with Clifton, + co-pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Never Fear (The Young Lovers) (co-pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Hard, Fast, and Beautiful (as director)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>The Hitch-Hiker (co-pr, co-sc); The Bigamist (as director)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>The Trouble with Angels (as director)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By LUPINO: articles—

- "Who Says Men Are People?,” in Silver Screen, October 1948.
- "I Cannot Be Good,” in Silver Screen, June 1949.
- "Me, Mother Directress,” in Action (Los Angeles), May/June 1967.
- "This Was My Favorite Role,” in Movie Digest, November 1972.

Interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), October 1990.

On LUPINO: books—

On LUPINO: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.
Ida Lupino section of Positif (Paris), March 1986.
“About the Cover,” in DGA Magazine (Los Angeles), no. 6, 1996.

* * *

A heart-shaped face, bowed lips, and large clear eyes gave her a Bo-Peepish quality, but Ida Lupino’s strongest screen characterizations would make any self-respecting nursery-rhyme shepherdess blush! Lupino excelled in playing vixens and society’s cast-offs. After spending six teenaged years appearing in mediocre parts, she attained stardom in the role of the selfish Cockney prostitute who is driven to madness after posing as a model for an obsessive artist (Ronald Colman) in The Light That Failed. She followed that role with an equally strong interpretation of a brazen lowlife in They Drive by Night. In that film, she dazzled critics as a bitch who kills her husband, goes after a man who spurns her, and then goes mad when things do not go her way.

Lupino once allegedly called herself “a poor man’s Bette Davis.” This is a cheapening remark, because Lupino had a screen presence unlike Davis or any other Hollywood leading lady. Like Davis, she was able to show backbone and ingenuity, especially when her character was up against the wall. What made her unique, however, was her ability to utilize soft, refined good looks and delicate mannerisms to play tough, unsympathetic women. In High Sierra, Lupino is at her best as a young thing who latches onto mobster Humphrey Bogart. What might have been no more than a one-dimensional helpless female role becomes a vivid characterization. She is like a stray cat, a rootless little-girl-lost who begs Bogart not to make her go back to the seedy “nightspot” where she used to work. At the same time she is determined and womanly, a warm beacon of sorts for a mobster who craves to retire to home and heart.

In the films that are among the high points of her career, Lupino worked for William Wellman and several times for Raoul Walsh—two directors noted for creating pictures with rough, sometimes gritty brush strokes. When Lupino formed her own production company in 1949, she chose to produce motion pictures dealing with social themes, films reflecting the toughness of Wellman and Walsh. But these films presented social dramas with a new frankness. Lupino may have been influenced by the postwar Italian neorealist films, or perhaps she simply saw the power the genre of social drama could have when it renounced Hollywood glitz. In any case, Not Wanted, Outrage, and The Bigamist deal with, respectively, unwed mothers, rape, and bigamy. These are topics that were considered taboo by the major studios. At a time when no other woman was directing Hollywood feature films, Lupino was directing—and her films were not feminine powder-puff drivel. She paid detailed attention to the miseries women-as-victims were encountering as underdogs in society. Her success in directing these low-budget but effective and durable films is linked to her prior experience of acting troubled female characters. By then, she knew what worked, and what did not.

As a feminist film theory developed, it was ironic that Lupino actually was scoffed at for presenting women as victims rather than aggressors. Then, the tide turned and she was properly lauded as a significant pioneer among women directors.

From the mid-1950s on, Lupino practically disappeared from the screen. Of her scant celluloid roles during her last years, by far the best is Elvira Bonner, the estranged wife of Ace Bonner (Robert Preston), in Junior Bonner. Here she is acting with an intensity reminiscent of her strongest Hollywood roles. Age, however, had added a craggy naturalism to her looks and moves. Once again, critics hailed her acting achievement. Rather than catapult her into another round of first-rate parts, it turned out to be her last important role.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg
MacLAINE, Shirley

Nationality: American. Born: Shirley MacLean Beaty in Richmond, Virginia, 24 April 1934; sister of the actor Warren Beatty. Education: Attended Washington School of Ballet; Washington and Lee High School, Arlington, Virginia, graduated 1952. Family: Married Steve Parker, 1954 (divorced 1977), daughter: Stephanie (known as the actress Sachi Parker). Career: In dancing chorus of Oklahoma, 1950, Me and Juliet, 1952, and understudy to Carol Haney in The Pajama Game, 1954; 1954–61—contract with Hal Wallis; 1955—film debut in The Trouble with Harry; 1971–72—in TV series Shirley’s World; 1974—co-directed film The Other Half of the Sky; 1974—formed nightclub act for Las Vegas, and in 1976 toured with the act in Europe and Latin America. Awards: Best Actress, Berlin Festival, and Best Foreign Actress, British Academy, for Ask Any Girl, 1959; Best Actress, Venice Festival, and Best Foreign Actress, British Academy, for The Apartment, 1960; Best Actress, Berlin Festival, for Desperate Characters, 1971; Best Actress, Academy Award, and Best Actress, New York and Los Angeles Film Critics, for Terms of Endearment, 1983. Agent: c/o MacLaine Enterprises, 25200 Old Malibu Road, Malibu, CA 90262, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

- 1955 The Trouble with Harry (Hitchcock) (as Jennifer Rogers); Artists and Models (Tashlin) (as Bessie Sparrowbush)
- 1956 Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as Princess Aouda)
- 1958 Hot Spell (Daniel Mann) (as Virginia Duval); The Sheepman (George Marshall) (as Dell Payton); The Matchmaker (Anthony) (as Irene Molloy); Some Came Running (Minnelli) (as Ginny Moorehead)
- 1959 Ask Any Girl (Walters) (as Meg Wheeler); Career (Anthony) (as Sharon Kensingston)
- 1960 Can-Can (Walter Lang) (as Simone Pistache); The Apartment (Wilder) (as Fran Kubelik); Ocean’s Eleven (Milestone) (as tipsy girl)
- 1961 All in a Night’s Work (Anthony) (as Katie Robbins); Two Loves (Walters) (as Anna Vorontosov); The Children’s Hour (Wyler) (as Martha Dobie)
- 1962 My Geisha (Cardiff) (as Lucy Dell/Yoko Mori); Two for the Seesaw (Wise) (as Gittel Mosca)
- 1963 Irma La Douce (Wilder) (title role)
- 1964 What a Way to Go! (Thompson) (as Louisa); John Goldfarb, Please Come Home (Thompson) (as Jenny Ericson)
- 1965 The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith) (as Mae Jenkins)
- 1966 Gambit (Neame) (as Nicole Chang)
- 1967 Woman Times Seven (De Sica) (as Paulette)
- 1968 The Bliss of Mrs. Blossom (McGrath) (title role)
- 1969 Sweet Charity (Fosse) (as Charity Hope Valentine)
- 1970 Two Mules for Sister Sara (Siegel) (title role)
- 1971 Desperate Characters (Gilroy) (as Sophie Brentwood)
- 1972 The Possession of Joel Delaney (Hussein) (as Norah Benson)
- 1977 The Turning Point (Ross) (as Deedee Rogers)
- 1979 Being There (Ashby) (as Eve Rand)
- 1980 A Change of Seasons (Richard Lang) (as Karen Evans); Loving Couples (Smight) (as Evelyn)
- 1983 Terms of Endearment (James L. Brooks) (as Aurora Greenway)
- 1984 Cannonball Run II (Needham) (as Veronica)
- 1988 Madame Sousatzka (Schlesinger) (title role)
- 1989 Steel Magnolias (Ross) (as Ouiser Boudreaux)
- 1990 Waiting for the Light (Monger) (as Zena); Postcards from the Edge (Nichols) (as Doris Mann)
- 1991 Defending Your Life (Albert Brooks) (as woman at past lives pavillion)
- 1993 Used People (Kidron) (as Pearl); Wrestling Ernest Hemingway (Haines) (as Helen)
- 1994 Guarding Tess (Wilson) (title role)
1995  West Side Waltz (for TV); The Celluloid Closet (Eptsein and Friedman—doc) (as interviewee)
1996  The Evening Star (as Aurora Greenway); Mrs. Winterbourne (Benjamin) (as Grace Winterbourne)
1997  A Smile Like Yours (Samples) (as Martha—uncredited)
1998  Looking for Lulu (Paris) (as Narrator)
1999  Get Bruce (Kuehn) (as herself); Joan of Arc (Duguay—for TV) (as Madame de Beurevoir); Forever Hollywood (Arnold Glassman and Todd McCarthy) (as herself)

Film as Director:

1974  The Other Half of the Sky: A China Memoir (doc) (co-d, + pr, sc)
2000  Bruno (+ ro)

Film as Writer:

1987  Out on a Limb (Butler—for TV) (as herself +co-sc)
1999  Kingdom Come

Publications

By MacLaine: books—

Don’t Fall Off the Mountain, New York, 1970.
You Can Get There from Here, New York, 1975.

By MacLaine: articles—

‘‘The Two Faces of Shirley,’’ interview with R. Bean, in Films and Filming (London), February 1962.
Interview with L. Farrah, in Films and Filming (London), May 1988.
Interview with Janet Fitch, in American Film (New York), November 1989.

On MacLaine: books—

On MacLaine: articles—

Dowell, Pat, ‘‘Collector’s Choice: Woman of the Year: Coming to Terms with the Career of Shirley MacLaine,’’ in American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1984.
Séquences (Montreal), July 1984.
Haskell, Molly, ‘‘Shirley MacLaine: Still Here,’’ in Film Comment (New York), May-June 1995.
Major, W., ‘‘Star’ Bright,’’ in Boxoffice (Chicago), November 1996.

* * *

Shirley MacLaine’s career has continued to thrive since she won her Academy Award in 1983. Terms of Endearment brought MacLaine full recognition as a performer and it also gave the actress an image for the latter stages of her career. The films that follow Terms of Endearment tend to present her as a combative person who, like Aurora Greenway in Brooks’s film, struggles to set and maintain the ‘‘terms of endearment’’ of her personal relationships. In such films as Madame Sousatzka and Postcards from the Edge MacLaine is demanding, irascible, and generally exasperating; yet, by the film’s resolution, she acknowledges that the relationship in question is at base essential and loving. The films illustrate the actress’s willingness to play a difficult person who is in danger of alienating both the film’s other characters and the viewer. MacLaine seems to delight in testing how far she can go before she pulls back and lets the viewer see that her character is in fact sensitive and capable of tenderness.

MacLaine has been highly successful in combining her status as a major star with that of a character actress; and the films are a testament to MacLaine’s ability to sustain a career at an age when most of her contemporaries are no longer professionally active. Of the more recent films, Madame Sousatzka is perhaps the most outstanding and it provides MacLaine with an acting challenge she fully meets—Madame Sousatzka, a formidable piano teacher, is, in addition to being intelligent and creative, in equal measure bombastic and contemplative, willful and pliable. And John Schlesinger, who surrounds the actress with a group of strong performers, handles the material with insight and assurance. Similarly, Postcards from the Edge, another fine film, allows MacLaine to inject a degree of delicacy into her conception of an overbearing but insecure aging actress. Mike Nichols’s film takes a gentle approach to satirizing Hollywood and tempers the mother-daughter conflict between MacLaine and Meryl Streep with low-key humor and a strong sense of compassion for both of these resilient but highly fragile characters. In these two films MacLaine is given the opportunity to bring depth and dimension to her characterizations; on the other hand, she also appears in Steel Magnolias and Used People, both shrill and crude films, and the bland Guarding Tess.

Besides working regularly as an actor, MacLaine continues to pursue her career as a writer. Her dual identity as actor/author came together most spectacularly with a telefilm dramatization of her book Out on a Limb in which she deals with transcendentalism. Out on a Limb is, aesthetically, undistinguished. The narrative is soap operaish, the performances are merely adequate and the direction is flat. MacLaine, like the film itself, is highly self-conscious and strains to convince that the material is engrossing and deserving of the time... and money spent on the project. Out on a Limb’s primary significance is that it forcefully acknowledges MacLaine’s ongoing desire to control her star image. The film is essentially concerned with verifying that MacLaine is a serious thinker, has a social conscience, and aspires to personal growth.

In the film version of Out on a Limb, MacLaine wonders if the public is going to take her beliefs seriously or think that she is making a fool of herself; by the time of Postcards from the Edge, she manages to make on film a joking reference to her transcendent experiences. Yet, Out on a Limb stands as an extraordinary attempt by an actor to fashion her image and MacLaine’s ambitious effort deserves credit. And, arguably, the project is influenced by a feminist impulse—MacLaine appears to be indicating that she takes sole responsibility for her actions and identity.

There is recent evidence that suggests MacLaine’s screen image is undergoing a modification. Two recent works, Guarding Tess and West Side Waltz, feature a MacLaine that is stately but without sacrificing her humor and prickly nature. The image she projects evokes the latter day Katharine Hepburn for whom, incidentally, West Side Waltz was a star vehicle on Broadway.

Like Terms of Endearment, the MacLaine films that have followed are “women’s films.” In these films, the actress invariably plays an imperfect person. MacLaine does not offer idealized images of women but, instead, she attempts to show that women are complex and very human beings. And, like her cinematic creations, MacLaine herself, is a survivor.

—Richard Lippe

MacMurray, Fred

Nationality: American. Born: Frederick Martin MacMurray in Kankakee, Illinois, 30 August 1908. Education: Attended Shattuck Boys Academy; Beaver Dam High School, Wisconsin; Carroll College, Waukesha, Wisconsin. Family: Married 1) Lillian Lamont, 1936 (died 1953), daughter: Susan; son: Robert; 2) the actress June Haver, 1954, adopted daughters: Katie and Laurie. Career: 1928—singer and saxophone player in The Royal Purples band, Chicago; 1929—film debut as extra in Girls Gone Wild; also joined The California Collegians band, and made Broadway debut with the band in Three’s a Crowd, 1930; 1934—contract with Paramount; 1935—first leading role in Grand Old Girl; 1945—contract with 20th Century-Fox; 1946—produced the film Pardon My Past; 1959—first of many Disney films, The Shaggy Dog; 1960—72—in popular TV series My Three Sons. Died: 5 November 1991.

Films as Actor:

1929 Girls Gone Wild (Seiler) (as extra); Tiger Rose (Fitzmaurice) (as rancher)

1935 Grand Old Girl (Robertson) (as Sandy); The Gilded Lily (Ruggles) (as Peter Dawes); Car Ninety-Nine (Barton) (as Ross Martin); Men without Names (Murphy) (as Richard Hood/Richard “Dick” Grant); Alice Adams (Stevens) (as Arthur Russell); Hands across the Table (Leisen) (as Theodore Drew III); The Bride Comes Home (Ruggles) (as Cyrus Anderson)

1936 The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Hathaway) (as Jack Hale); Thirteen Hours by Air (Leisen) (as Jack Gordon); The Princess Comes Across (Howard) (as King Mantell); The Texas Rangers (King Vidor) (as Jim Hawkins)

1937 Maid of Salem (Lloyd) (as Roger Coverman); Champagne Waltz (Sutherland) (as Buzzy Bellows); Swing High, Swing Low (Leisen) (as Skid Johnson); Exclusive (Hall) (as Ralph True Confession) (Ruggles) (as Kenneth Bartlett)

1938 Coconut Grove (Santell) (as Johnny Prentice); Sing You Sinners (Ruggles) (as Joe Beebe); Men with Wings (Wellman) (as Pat Falconer)

1939 Cafe Society (Griffith) (as Chick O’Bannon); Invitation to Happiness (Ruggles) (as Albert “King” Cole); Honeymoon in Bali (Griffith) (as Bill Burnett)

1940 Remember the Night (Leisen) (as John Sargent); Little Old New York (Henry King) (as Charles Browne); Too Many Husbands (Ruggles) (as Bill Cardew); Rangers of Fortune (Wood) (as Gil Farra)

1941 Virginia (Griffith) (as Stonewall Elliott); One Night in Lisbon (Griffith) (as Dwight Houston); New York Town (Charles Vidor) (as Victor Ballard); Dive Bomber (Curtiz) (as Commander Joe Blake)

1942 The Lady Is Willing (Leisen) (as Dr. Corey McBain); Take a Letter, Darling (Leisen) (as Tom Verney); The Forest Rangers (Marshall) (as Don Stuart); Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall)

1943 Flight for Freedom (Mendes) (as Rand Britton); Above Suspicion (Thorpe) (as Richard Myles)

1944 Standing Room Only (Lanfield) (as Lee Stevens); And the Angels Sing (Binyon) (as Happy Morgan); Double Indemnity (Wilder) (as Walter Neff); Practically Yours (Leisen) (as Lt. Daniel Bellamy)

1945 Murder, He Says (Marshall) (as Pete Marshall); Where Do We Go from Here? (Ratoff) (as Bill); Captain Eddie (Bacon) (as Edward Rickenbacker)

1946 Pardon My Past (Fenton) (as Eddie York/Francis Pemberton); Smoky (Louis King) (as Clint Barkley)

1947 Suddenly It’s Spring (Leisen) (as Dr. Corey McBain); The Egg and I (Erskine) (as Bob MacDonald); Singapore (Brahm) (as Matt Gordon)

1948 On Our Merry Way (A Miracle Can Happen) (King Vidor and Fenton) (as Al); The Miracle of the Bells (Pichel) (as Bill Dunnigan); Don’t Trust Your Husband (An Innocent Affair) (Bacon) (as Vincent Doane); Family Honeymoon (Binyon) (as Grant Jordan)

1949 Father Was a Fullback (Stahl) (as George Cooper)

1950 Borderline (Seiler) (as Johnny Macklin); Never a Dull Moment (Marshall) (as Chris); A Millionaire for Christy (Marshall) (as Peter Lockwood)

1951 Callaway Went Thataway (Panama and Frank) (as Mike Frye)

1953 Fair Wind to Java (Kane) (as Captain Boll); The Moonlighter (Rowland) (as Wes Anderson)

1954 The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk) (as Lt. Tom Keefer); Pushover (Quine) (as Paul Sheridan); Woman’s World (Negulesco) (as Sid)

1955 The Far Horizons (Mate) (as Meriwether Lewis); The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco) (as Tom Ransome); At Gunpoint (Werker) (as Wright)
Fred MacMurray (left) with Errol Flynn and Ralph Bellamy (right) in Dive Bomber

1956 There’s Always Tomorrow (Sirk) (as Clifford Groves)
1957 Gun for a Coward (Biberman) (as Will Keough); Quantez (Keller) (as Gentry/John Coventry)
1958 Day of the Bad Man (Keller) (as Jim Scott); Good Day for a Hanging (Juran) (as Ben Cutler)
1959 The Shaggy Dog (Barton) (as Wilson Daniels); Face of a Fugitive (Wendkos) (as Jim Larsen/Kincaid); The Oregon Trail (Fowler) (as Neal Harris)
1960 The Apartment (Wilder) (as J. D. Sheldrake)
1961 The Absent-Minded Professor (Stevenson) (as Prof. Ned Brainard)
1962 Bon Voyage (Neilson) (as Harry Willard)
1963 Son of Flubber (Stevenson) (as Prof. Ned Brainard)
1964 Kisses for My President (Bernhardt) (as Thad McCloud)
1966 Follow Me, Boys! (Tokar) (as Lemual Siddons)
1967 The Happiest Millionaire (Tokar) (as Anthony J. Drexel Biddle)
1973 Charley and the Angel (McEveety) (as Charley Appleby)
1974 The Chadwick Family (Rich—for TV) (as Ned Chadwick)
1975 Beyond the Bermuda Triangle (Graham—for TV) (as Harry Ballinger)
1978 The Swarm (Allen) (as Clarence)

Publications

By MacMURRAY: article—

On MacMURRAY: book—

On MacMURRAY: articles—

Fred MacMurray enjoyed one of the longest careers in American filmmaking because of his all-purpose (and enduring) good looks and versatility. On the strength of some song and dance experience on Broadway, he was signed to a long-term contract by Paramount at the beginning of the sound era. One of his first films at the studio, The Gilded Lily, marked the beginning of his working relationship with Mitchell Leisen who, during the 1930s and 1940s, was perhaps Hollywood’s most expert director of light farce and comedy. MacMurray did his best comedic work for Leisen in three 1940s films: The Lady Is Willing, No Time for Love, and Take a Letter, Darling. For Leisen he developed the lovable schlemiel persona that served him so well (the character’s apotheosis comes much later in Disney’s The Absent-Minded Professor). At the same time MacMurray did competent work in a number of other genres—notably as a supporting actor in action films such as The Trail of the Lonesome Pine and The Texans.

In dramatic roles, however, he often projected a weakness which undercut the narrative. In Above Suspicion, for example, he quite unsuccessfully impersonates an Oxford don called to work for British Intelligence; in a series of contretemps with blistering Nazis he simply cannot respond with the appropriate American toughness. The weakness of his persona—always, of course, an exploitable resource—in farce and comedy—was occasionally well used in dramatic films, notably by Billy Wilder. As Walter Neff in The apartment MacMurray quite plausibly falls victim to Barbara Stanwyck’s agressive sexuality. Here his indecisiveness becomes an appropriate response to film noir’s inhospitable and uncertain world. In The Apartment MacMurray plays a calculating executive who coldheartedly exploits a series of female employees. As played by MacMurray, however, the character becomes an easily toppled predator, henpecked by an overbearing wife and undone by a jealous secretary, and this reversal admirably suits the film’s debunking of social hierarchies.

Giving his finest screen performance, MacMurray plays a similar character in The Caine Mutiny. His Lieutenant Keefer is a supercilious intellectual, a man who is able to complain about his captain’s inadequacies but who nevertheless lacks moral conviction. MacMurray’s spinelessness perfectly expresses the film’s underlying McCarthyite politics.

—R. Barton Palmer

Films as Actors:

1917 Alexander den store (Alexander the Great) (Madsen only)
1918 Mod Lyset (Holger-Madsen) (Schenstrøm only)
1919 Vaeddeløberen (Lauritzen) (Schenstrøm only); Et sommureventyr (De keder sig pålandet) (Lauritzen) (Schenstrøm only)
1921 Tyvepak; Film, flirt og forlovelse (Lauritzen)
1922 Sol, sommer og studiner (Lauritzen); Landligger-idyl vanfæng (Lauritzen); Han, Hun og Hamlet (Lauritzen); Mellem munter musikanter (Lauritzen); Blandt byens børn (Lauritzen)
1923 Kan kaerlighed kureres? (Lauritzen); Dårskab, dyd og driver (Lauritzen); Vore venners vinter (Lauritzen)
1924 Professor Petersens plejebørn (Lauritzen); Lille Lise Lettpå (Lauritzen); Raske Riviera rejsende (Lauritzen); Ole Opfinders offer (Lauritzen)
1925 Takt, tone og tosser (Lauritzen); Zwei vagabunden in Prater (Lowenstein); Polis Paulus’ Pâskasmâll (Spritsmusglerne) (Molander); Grønkøbings glade gavtyve (Lauritzen)
1926 Dødsbokseren (Lauritzen); Ulvejægerne (Lauritzen); Ebberøds Bank (Ebberød Bank) (Wallén); Don Quixote (Lauritzen); Die Swiegersonnere (Svigersønnerne) (Steinhoff); Lykkelhjulet (Gad)
1927 Kongen af Pelikanien (Andersen); Vestervovov (Lauritzen); Cocktails (For fuld Fart) (Banks); Tordenstenene (Lauritzen)
1928 Kráfi og Skønhed (Lauritzen); Filmins Helte (Lauritzen)
1929 Kys, Klap og Kommers (Lauritzen); Hallo, Afrika foruds (Lauritzen); Højt på en Krist (Lauritzen); Hr. Tell og Søn (Lauritzen); The Rocket Bus (Raketbussen; Alf’s Carpet) (Kellino)
1930 Tausend Worte Deutsch (Taler De tysk?) (Jacoby); Pas på Pigerne (Lauritzen); Lykke og Blod (Lauritzen)
1931 Krudt med Knald (Lauritzen); Lykke og Blod (Lauritzen)
1932 Han, Hun og Hamlet (Lauritzen); Lampenkvalisere (Glade Gøglere) (Boese)
1933 Med fuld musik (Lauritzen) (Schenstrøm only)
1935 Knox und die lustigen Vagabunden (Zirkus Saran) (Emo)
1936 Mædchenräuber (Kinderüber) (Sauer); Blinde Passagiere (Blinde Passagere) (Sauer)
1937 Bleka Greven (Rasse Detektiver) (Roden); Eine Insel wird entdeckt (Pat und Patachon im Paradies; Fy og Bi i Paradis) (Lamác)
1938 Midt i byens hjørte
1940 I de gode gamle Dage (Jacobsen)
1947 Hjältar mot sin vilja (Husberg) (Madsen only)

Publications

On MADSEN and SCHENSTRØM: books—
Engberg, Marguerite, Fy & Bi, Copenhagen, 1980.
On MADSEN and SCHENSTRØM: articles—

* * * *

Harald Madsen and Carl Schenstrøm were established as a comic team in Danish films in 1921 and through 1940 they made 46 films, 13 of them outside Denmark, in Sweden, Germany, Austria, and England. In Denmark they were known as Fyertaarnet & Bivognen (literally the Light Tower and the Trailer), abridged to Fy & Bi. They were the not the first film comedy team, but they were the earliest to gain international recognition, and in the 1920s they were immensely popular all over Europe. In France they were called Doublepatte and Patachon, in England Long & Short, and in the United States, where only a few of their films were distributed and where they never succeeded in attracting an audience, they were called Ole & Axel. Internationally they were best known by their German names Pat and Patachon.

Schenstrøm was a tall, lean man with a melancholy face and a drooping moustache. Madsen was a short and fat little fellow with a sly or sheepish smile on his childlike moon face. There was a drooping moustache. Madsen was a short and fat little fellow with a drooping moustache. Madsen in a circus, and Fyrtaarnet & Bivognen were born. Lauritzen directed 30 of the comedies made in Denmark, and he also wrote Madsen in a circus, and Fyrtaarnet & Bivognen were born. Lauritzen directed 30 of the comedies made in Denmark, and he also wrote many of the films.

The stories were simplistic tales, often about a young man and a young girl in love, but separated because of social barriers. Fy & Bi, the eternal outsiders, were often marginal characters in the story, but they played an important part as the instruments of love’s fulfilment. The films ridiculed the nouveau riches of the time, and were mildly satirical of the upper middle-class establishment. Lauritzen preferred shooting outdoors (the Danish landscape is nicely used as a background), and he also garnished the films with pretty young girls. But as a director Lauritzen was pedestrian and uninvective, the films being loosely structured and slow. The infrequent gags depended on the simple presentation of the two amiable figures. The films represented an idyllic alternative to the highly professional products of the major film-producing countries, and they mirrored the innocent provinciality of a small country. In the 1930s Fy & Bi’s popularity faded in most countries, but they still had a large and loyal audience in Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Austria.

—Ib Monty

MAGNANI, Anna

Films as Actress:

1934 La cieca di Sorrento (Malasomma); Tempo massimo (Mattoli)
1936 Cavalleria (Alessandrini); Trenta secondi d’amore (Trente secondes d’amour) (Bonnard)
1938 Tarakanowa (Ozep)
1940 Una lampada alla finestra (Talamo)
1941 Teresa Venerdì (De Sica); Finalmente soli (Gentilomo); La fuggitiva (Ballerini)
1943 La fortuna viene dal cielo (Rathonyi); L’avventura di Annabella (Menardi); La vita è bella (Bragaglia); Campo dei fiori (Bonnard); L’ultima carrozella (Mattoli); Il fiore sotto gli occhi (Brignone)
1944 Quartetto pazzo (Salvani)
1945 Roma città aperta (Rome, Open City; Open City) (Rossellini) (as Pina); Abbasso la miseria (Righelli)
1946 Devanti a lui tremava tutta Roma (Before Him All Rome Trembled; Tosca) (Gallone); Abbasso la richezza (Righetti); Un uomo ritorna (Neufeld); Il bandito (Lattuada)
1947 La sconosciuto di San Marino (Cottafavi); L’onorevole Angelina (Angelina) (Zampa); Assunta spina (Mattoli); Molti sogni per le strade (Camerini); L’Amore (Woman; Ways of Love) (Rossellini)
1949 Vulcano (Dieterle)
1951 Bellissima (Visconti)
1952 Camicie rosse (Alessandrini)
1953 Le Carrosse d’or (The Golden Coach) (Renoir) (as Camilla/Colombine); “We, the Women” ep. of Stiamo donne (Visconti)
1955  The Rose Tattoo (Daniel Mann)
1956  Suor letizia (Camerini)
1957  Wild Is the Wind (Cukor)
1958  Nella città l'inferno (And the Wild, Wild Women) (Castellani)
1960  The Fugitive Kind (Lumet); Risate di Gioia (The Passionate Thief) (Monicelli)
1962  Mamma Roma (Pasolini)
1963  Le Magot de Joséfa (Autant-Lara)
1965  Made in Italy (Loy)
1969  The Secret of Santa Vittoria (Kramer); Nell’ anno del signore (Magni)
1972  Roma (Fellini Roma) (Fellini)

Publications

On MAGNANI: books—

On MAGNANI: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), March 1992.

* * *
Anna Magnani’s persona was, above all, that of “great actress”; yet, in relation to her career, that description has to be understood in a very particular way. Conventionally, “actor” and “star” have been defined in an opposing manner: the latter is defined in terms of “presence,” of an authentic and immediately recognizable personality, often glamorous and permitting identification on the level of fantasy-fulfillment; the former is defined in terms of the ability to transform the self, to “be” different characters. Magnani was always, irrecusably, Magnani, yet she lacked the most obvious attributes of the female star: though she had a remarkably expressive face, she was by no means conventionally beautiful; neither did she have a body that could be conventionally fetishized; her roles were never of the kind to encourage fantasy-identification. For American audiences, she represented exactly what Hollywood had consistently failed to produce: “reality,” the nonglamorous human being. Hence, she could never be successfully promoted in Hollywood beyond a certain point (soon reached); for audiences conditioned by Hollywood expectations, “reality” is exotic, a striking novelty that swiftly palls.

Magnani’s persona as a great actress is built, not on transformation, but on emotional authenticity (or, more precisely, on the signification of authenticity): she doesn’t portray characters but expresses “genuine” emotions, the guarantee of genuineness being the rejection of glamour. There is clearly a problem here, exemplified but never resolved throughout Magnani’s career. As an “unknown” in Rome, Open City, she was a “real” person, expressing real emotions; yet, overnight, she became a famous actress celebrated for her acting of “real” emotions. One might say that she spent the rest of her career acting authenticity. The problem is readily apparent in the films made with Rossellini. In Rome, Open City she is one of a team of largely nonprofessional players; her performance is extraordinary, but it is fully integrated in the ensemble. In The Miracle she is also extraordinary but in a far more dubious way: the film is so obviously a vehicle for her, and her acting of authenticity is so strenuous that we are impressed not so much by the sense of genuine emotions but by the sheer effort of their expression.

Perhaps her greatest performance is in Renoir’s The Golden Coach, and there are very particular reasons for this (apart from, though not unconnected with, Renoir’s fascination with and sympathy for actors): the entire film plays upon notions of theater and reality, the interaction between them, the relation between roles on stage and roles in real life. Opening and closing with the rise and fall of a theater curtain, it announces itself as “theater” and gives us the commedia dell’arte performances of Magnani’s troupe as theater-within-theater. Every character, except Magnani the actress, is trapped in a social role or stereotype, and each man wants to impose an identity on Magnani who, in the film’s final paradox, retreats back into the theater as the only place where, by consciously acting roles, she can be herself. It is a film that calls into question the very concept of authenticity and asks whether we do not, everywhere and always, act. While the film is centered unequivocally on Magnani, her performance is fully integrated in it, and we never have the sense that the material has been conceived merely as a showcase for her talents.

It is sad but predictable that Hollywood could find nothing more appropriate for her than the spurious pretensions of Tennessee Williams at his worst (The Rose Tattoo, The Fugitive Kindly) and finally wasted her in a thoroughly conventional role in The Secret of Santa Vittoria. (What an amazing Cleopatra she might have made to Charlton Heston’s Antony.) Her most distinguished work in Hollywood was achieved (again, predictably) under the sympathetic guidance of George Cukor, the American cinema’s greatest director of actresses, whose distinction lies more in his ability to draw out the individual essence of a player than in encouraging the externalities of “great acting.” Wild Is the Wind, a project Cukor took over at a very late stage of its development, awkwardly scripted, repeatedly sounding like a stage play, transcends such limitations through Magnani’s sensitive and inward performance.

—Robin Wood

MAKOVETSKI, Sergei

Films as Actor:

1984 The Kids (Mal’va) (short); To Take Alive (Vziat’ zhivym) (for TV) (as agent)
1986 The Meeting (Zaveshchanie) (Gostiev) (as Major Ugarov in his youth)
1987 The Life of Klim Samgin (Zhizn’ Klima Samgina) (for TV) (as Dmitri Samgin)
1989 The Devotee (Posviashchennyi) (Teptsov) (as Lyokha)
1990 Chernov (Iurskii) (as Kostya Shliapin); Mother (Mat’) (Panfilov) (as Gendarme)
1991 The Children of Bitches (Sukiny deti) (Filatov) (as Boria Siniukhayev)
1992 A Patriotic Comedy (Patriotscheskaia komediia) (Khotinenko) (as Ilyin); Moscow Parade (Provva) (Dykhoverhlyu) (as friend); Our American Boris (Nash amerikanskii Boris) (Bushmelev) (as Boris)
1993 Makarov (Khotinenko) (as the poet Makarov); A Child by November (Rebenok k noiabriu) (Pavlovsky) (as Lyoshia); The Little Men from Bolshevik Alley, or I Want Beer (Mal’kie chelovechki bol’shevistskogo pereulka, ili Khochu piva) (Maliukov) (as Gnome); Trotsky (Mariagin) (as Lev Sedov)
1994 Round Dance (Khorovod) (Kuchinsky) (as the director of a local theatre)
1995 The Black Veil (Chernaia vual’) (Proshkin) (as Petr Sinev); A Play for a Passenger (P’es’ dia dia passazhira) (Abrashitov) (as the conductor Oleg); Summer Folk (Letnie liudi) (Ursulik) (as Basov); Rothschild’s Violin (Cozarinsky) (as Shostakovich); “Trofim” (Balabanov) in Arrival of a Train (Pribytie poezda) (as Trofim)
1996 “Boiler House No. 6” (“Kotel’naia No. 6”) in Three Stories (Tri istorii) (Muratova) (as Zhenia)
1997 He Did Not Tie Up His Shoelaces (On ne zaviazival shnurki) (Chernykh) (as Stasik)
Makovetski plays the killer Zhenia who has just murdered his neighbor after some trivial argument and who tries to dispose of the body in a boiler house. While the workers are shocked at the crime, Zhenia himself is unmoved: even his face does not twitch. Yet his capacity for facial expression is superbly demonstrated in the first scene of the film, where Zhenia imitates the grimaces of animals he observes in a zoo. Makovetski’s strength lies in his facial expression, which can hide the most revolting crime while being able to imitate any twitch.

In Balabanov’s Of Freaks and Men Makovetski played the character of Johann, a criminal who, released from prison, exploits his sister and a photographer to produce and sell photos of women being flagellated. Behind a straight face and immaculate behaviour he hides his immorality. Set at the turn of the last century, the film comments on the nature of the camera.

There is no common denominator in the roles chosen by Makovetski; this lies rather in the way in which Makovetski acts: his self is hardly ever present in the role, it is annihilated behind the character. Makovetski is, in the words of the critic Tatiana Moskvina, a ‘‘nobody’’ who can take on any role. His facial mask hides his psychological and emotional experiences and gives the character an enigmatic and mysterious appearance.

—-Birgit Beumers

MALDEN, Karl

Nationality: American. Born: Mladen Sekulovich in Chicago, Illinois, 22 March 1914. Education: Attended Emerson High School, Gary, Indiana; the Art Institute of Chicago, 1933–36; Goodman Theatre Dramatic School, Chicago. Military Service: U.S. Army Air Force, 1943–45. Family: Married the actress Mona Graham, 1938, daughters: Mila and Carla. Career: 1937—Broadway debut in Golden Boy; 1940—film debut in They Knew What They Wanted; 1945—resumed Broadway career following military service; 1947—in Broadway production of A Streetcar Named Desire, and in film version, 1951; 1957—directed the film Time Limit; 1966–69—director, Screen Actors Guild; 1972–77—starring role in TV series The Streets of San Francisco; 1980—in TV series Skag; 1989–93—president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Academy Award, for A Streetcar Named Desire, 1951. Address: 1845 Mandeville Canyon Road, Los Angeles, CA 90049, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

- 1940 They Knew What They Wanted (Kanin) (as Red)
- 1944 Winged Victory (Cukor) (as Adams)
- 1946 13 Rue Madeleine (Hathaway) (as flight sergeant)
- 1947 Boomerang (Kazan) (as Lt. White); Kiss of Death (Hathaway) (as Sgt. William Cullen)
- 1950 Where the Sidewalk Ends (Preminger) (as Lt. Thomas); The Gunfighter (Henry King) (as Mac); Halls of Montezuma (Milestone) (as Doc)
1951  The Sellout (Mayer) (as Buck Maxwell); A Streetcar Named Desire (Kazan) (as Mitch); Decision before Dawn (Litvak)

1952  Diplomatic Courier (Hathaway) (as Ernie); Ruby Gentry (King Vidor) (as Jim Gentry); Operation Secret (Seiler) (as Maj. Latrec)

1953  Take the High Ground (Richard Brooks) (as Sgt. Laverne Holt); I Confess (Hitchcock) (as Larrue)

1954  Phantom of the Rue Morgue (Del Ruth) (as Dr. Marais); On the Waterfront (Kazan) (as Father Barry)

1955  Baby Doll (Kazan) (as Archie Lee)

1957  Fear Strikes Out (Mulligan) (as John Piersall); Bombers B-52 (as Sgt. Chuck Brennan)

1959  The Hanging Tree (Daves) (as Frenchy Plante)

1960  Pollyanna (Swift) (as Rev. Paul Ford); The Great Imposter (Mulligan) (as Father Devlin)

1961  One-Eyed Jacks (Brando) (as Dad Longworth); Parrish (Daves) (as Judd Raie)

1962  All Fall Down (Frankenheimer) (as Ralph Willart); Birdman of Alcatraz (Frankenheimer) (as Harvey Shoemaker); Gypsy (LeRoy) (as Herbie Sommers)

1963  “The Rivers” ep. of How the West Was Won (Hathaway) (as Zebulon Prescott); Come Fly with Me (Levin) (as Walter Lucas)

1964  Dead Ringer (Henreid) (as Sgt. Jim Hobson); Cheyenne Autumn (Ford) (as Capt. Wessels)

1965  The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison) (as Shooter)

1966  Nevada Smith (Hathaway) (as Tom Fitch); Murderers’ Row (Levin) (as Julian Wall)

1967  The Adventures of Bullwhip Griffin (Neilson) (as Judge Higgins); Hotel (Quine) (as Keycase); Billion Dollar Brain (Ken Russell) (as Leo Newbegin)

1968  Blue (Narizzano) (as Doc Morton); Hot Millions (Till) (as Carlton J. Klemper)

1969  Il gatto a nove code (Argento) (as Franco Arno)

1970  Patton (Patton: Lust for Glory) (Schaffner) (as Gen. Omar Bradley)

1971  Wild Rovers (Edwards) (as Walter Buckman)

1972  The Streets of San Francisco (Grauman—for TV) (as Det. Lt. Mike Stone)

1973  Summertime Killer (Isasi) (as John Kiley)
1977 Captains Courageous (Hart—for TV)
1979 Meteor (Neame) (as Harry Sherwood); Beyond the Poseidon Adventure (Irwin Allen) (as Wilbur Hubbard)
1980 The Wildcatters (for TV); Skag (Perry—for TV)
1981 Miracle on Ice (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV); Word of Honor (Damski—for TV)
1983 The Sting II (Kagan) (as Macalinski); Twilight Time (Paskaljevic) (as Marko)
1984 Fatal Vision (David Greene—for TV) (as Freddy Kassab); With Intent to Kill (Robe—for TV) (as Thomas E. Nolan)
1985 Alice in Wonderland (Harry Harris—for TV) (as Walrus)
1986 Billy Galvin (John Gray) (as Jack Galvin)
1987 Nuts (Ritt) (as Arthur Kirk)
1988 My Father, My Son (Bleckner—for TV) (as Adm. Elmo Zumwalt Jr.)
1989 The Hijacking of the Achille Lauro (Collins—for TV) (as Klinghoffer)
1990 Call Me Anna (Cates—for TV) (as Dr. Harold Arlen)
1991 Absolute Strangers (Cates—for TV) (as Fred Zusselman)
1992 Back to the Streets of San Francisco (Damski—for TV) (as Mike Stone)
1993 Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (as voice); They’ve Taken Our Children: The Chowchilla Kidnapping (Gillum—for TV) (as Ed Ray)

Film as Director:

1957 Time Limit

Publications

By MALDEN: books—

By MALDEN: article—

‘‘What the Hell, I’m a Frank Guy,’’ interview in Cinema (Beverly Hills), February/March 1964.

‘‘Guest Speaker: Karl Malden,’’ interview in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1990.

On MALDEN: articles—

Film Dope (London), December 1987.

Stars (Mariembourg), December 1990.

---

Karl Malden was already an established young Broadway character actor when he came to Hollywood to do several minor roles in such films as 13 Rue Madeleine and Kiss of Death. Elia Kazan did not (as is often reported) introduce Malden to films, but he did give the actor’s career a new direction by making available to him roles in which Malden’s dramatic intensity and Method-influenced acting style could be displayed. Malden had returned to Broadway to play Mitch in A Streetcar Named Desire for Kazan, and afterward followed the director to Hollywood to appear in his Boomerang. A few years later he repeated his role in Kazan’s screen version of Streetcar, and won an Oscar as Best Supporting Actor.

His performance in that film revealed an underlying and uneasily repressed well of emotion that was effectively exploited by Kazan. In On the Waterfront, Malden plays the parish priest as a man who cannot refrain from either righteous anger or direct involvement in waterfront politics. His intensity suits Kazan’s social message and contrasts nicely with Brando’s subtle characterization of the ex-prizefighter who turns crusader. More often, however, Malden’s energy was channeled into portrayals of an evil bordering on obsession or neurosis. As a crooked sheriff who cannot control his temper, he is once again effectively contrasted with the coolness and self-possession of Brando’s outlaw in One-Eyed Jacks. Or if not outright evil, his characters were misguided and obsessive. This especially was so when he played weak-willed parents. As the neurotic father who is determined that his son achieve his own frustrated dream of athletic stardom in Fear Strikes Out, Malden is effectively contrasted to the twitchy insecurity of Anthony Perkins’ Jimmy Piersall. As the superficially friendly, semi-alcoholic father of Warren Beatty and Brandon de Wilde in All Fall Down, he is just as equally contrasted to Angela Lansbury’s exasperating, clinging mother.

Malden has repeated these characterizations with only minor variations in a number of films, most notably Birdman of Alcatraz, Cheyenne Autumn, and Nevada Smith, where he played off the cooler styles of Burt Lancaster, Richard Widmark, and Steve McQueen respectively. The self-effacing subordination of Mitch in Streetcar also has been employed successfully in other roles. As Omar Bradley in Patton, for example, he is almost insistently ordinary in a way that contrasts to George C. Scott’s obsessive and self-concerned hero.

But Malden’s best work on screen came in the 1950s, under the guidance of Elia Kazan, a director who has been able to channel and emphasize the subtler qualities of his acting style. His most memorable role is that of Archie Lee in Baby Doll, where his acting meshes beautifully with the ensemble work of Carroll Baker and Eli Wallach. Malden lends the character a sense of repressed sexuality which perfectly suits the erotic subtext of Williams’s story.

In later years, Malden has starred on television in a popular weekly crime drama, The Streets of San Francisco (not to mention a series of credit card commercials). He has appeared in higher-quality made-for-television movies, often playing fathers who have complex relationships with their sons (such as My Father, My Son and Billy Galvin) or leaders of younger men (e.g., Coach Herb Brooks in Miracle on Ice).

---

R. Barton Palmer, updated by Rob Edelman

MALKOVICH, John

Nationality: American. Born: Christopher, Illinois, 9 December 1953. Education: Attended Eastern Illinois State University; Illinois State University. Family: Married the actress Glenn Headly, 1982 (divorced 1990); one daughter, Armandine, and one son, Loewy, with Nicoletta Peyran. Career: 1976—co-founder of Chicago’s Steppenwolf Theatre Group; 1982—New York theatrical debut in True West;

Films as Actor:

1981 American Dream (Damski—for TV) (as Gary); Word of Honor (Damski—for TV)
1982 True West (Sinise and Goldstein—for TV) (as Lee)
1984 Places in the Heart (Benton) (as Mr. Will); The Killing Fields (Joffé) (as Al Rockoff)
1985 Eleni (Yates) (as Nicholas Gage)
1986 Death of a Salesman (Schlondorff—for TV) (as Biff); Rocket to the Moon (John Jacobs—for TV) (as Ben Stark)
1987 Making Mr. Right (Susan Seidelman) (as Dr. Jeff Peters/Ulysses); The Glass Menagerie (Paul Newman) (as Tom); Empire of the Sun (Spielberg) (as Basie)
1988 Miles from Home (Farm of the Year) (Sinise) (as Barry Maxwell); Dangerous Liaisons (Frears) (as Vicomte de Valmont)
1990 Old Times (Simon Curtis—for TV); The Sheltering Sky (Bertolucci) (as Port Moresby)
1991 Queens Logic (Rash) (as Elliot); The Object of Beauty (Lindsay-Hogg) (as Jake)
1992 Shadows and Fog (Woody Allen) (as a clown); Jennifer 8 (Robinson) (as St. Anne); Of Mice and Men (Sinise) (as Lennie)
1993 In the Line of Fire (Petersen) (as Mitch Leary); Alive (Frank Marshall) (as narrator, uncredited); We’re Back! A Dinosaur’s Story (Zondag and others—animation) (as voice)
1994 Heart of Darkness (Roeg—for TV) (as Kurtz)
1995 Par dela les nuages (Al di la delle nuvole; Beyond the Clouds) (Antonioni and Wenders) (as director); O Convento (The Convent; Le Convent) (de Oliveira) (as Michael)
1996 Mary Reilly (Frears) (as Dr. Jekyll/Mr. Hyde); Mulholland Falls (Tamahori) (as Gen. Thomas Timms); Der Unhold (The Ogre; Le Rois des aulnes) (Schlöndorff); Portrait of a Lady (Campion)
1997 Con Air (West) (as Cyrus “the Virus” Grissom)
1998 Rounders (Dahl) (as Teddy KGB); The Man in the Iron Mask (Wallace) (as Athos)
1999 Le Temps retrouvé (Time Regained) (as Charlus); The Messenger: The Story of Joan of Arc (Besson) (Charles VII); Ladies Room (Cristiani) (as Roberto Brizzi); Being John Malkovich (Jonze) (as John Horatio Malkovich); RKO 281 (Ross—for TV) (as Herman Mankiewicz)

2000 Shadow of the Vampire (Merhige) (as F. W. Murnau); Les Misérables (Dayan) (as Javert)

2001 Knockaround Guys (Koppelman and Levien) (as Teddy Deserve)

Other Film:

1988 The Accidental Tourist (Kasdan) (co-exec pr)

Publications

By MALKOVICH: articles—

On MALKOVICH: articles—

* * *

Before he first appeared on movie screens in Robert Benton’s Places in the Heart, John Malkovich had already earned a formidable reputation as a stage actor, a director and as a co-founder of the Steppenwolf Theatre Ensemble in Chicago. In many ways Malkovich is still more identified with the theater than with Hollywood, not only for his considerable successes on the stage, but also for his often disparaging remarks about the film business. (He told Psychology Today he never acts in films for artistic expression, that he does it only “for the money.”) Yet with just a few exceptions, his film work seems passionate, daring, and finely crafted. He works in Hollywood films with nary a trace of movie star vanity, disclosing dark and truly unpleasant aspects of his characters in a way that is almost unknown with other “leading men.” At the same time Malkovich is able to transcend his rebarbative demeanor and make his flawed, angry characters the emotional center of many of the films he appears in. Despite maintaining this precarious balance in his acting for almost a decade, Malkovich’s self-deprecatingly theatrical tendencies have recently shifted him to the place where he has nearly lost his star status to the rank of “character actor” and “heavy”; his recent dual role as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in Mary Reilly only exemplifies the conundrum in his acting persona.

John Malkovich’s first two theatrical film appearances—in Places in the Heart and The Killing Fields—arrived almost back-to-back in the fall of 1984 and he was singled out for praise with both. Malkovich won multiple awards and nominations for Places in the Heart, yet even in Benton’s innocent, rural film—as a gentle, blind World War I veteran—critics noticed something both exciting and troubling in the actor’s work. (Pauline Kael in the New Yorker referred to his “great acting” and almost immediately followed the accolade with the comment “he’s so touching he’s creepy.”) The next year Malkovich had a large film role in Peter Yates’s El en, but was generally considered miscast in a poorly realized production. In that same year, however, he won recognition doing a radically new interpretation of Arthur Miller’s Biff opposite Dustin Hoffman in Death of a Salesman on Broadway. Malkovich’s haunted, soft-spoken performance would be recreated for a television version in 1986 and his reputation as a major American actor was secured.

Not surprisingly, Malkovich would distinguish himself most in the coming years in cinematic adaptations of theatrical productions: first, in 1987, as Tennessee Williams’s autobiographical Tom in Paul Newman’s version of The Glass Menagerie and in 1988 in Stephen Frears’s adaptation of Christopher Hampton’s play Les Liaisons Dangereuses. In the former Malkovich suggests—not for the first time or the last—a subtle but nearly hypnotic homosexual component to the role. In the latter, as Valmont, the actor triumphs over his seeming miscasting as a sexual games-player who finally falls in love with one of the women he has toyed with. Holding his own against Glenn Close, Michelle Pfeiffer, and Uma Thurman, Malkovich made Dangerous Liaisons his greatest (and almost only real) “star turn” in the cinema.

Subsequently Malkovich has had slightly less good fortune in film. His Port Moresby in Bernardo Bertolucci’s problematic The Sheltering Sky was arrestingly smug, self-destructive, and mesmerizing; the film never recovered from the character’s death two-thirds of the way through. In The Object of Beauty Malkovich astonished again, this time with his ability to play a (merely) likable would-be sophisticate. The film was much more suitable to his talents than the earlier comedy, Making Mr. Right, and it raised hopes that the actor might become a postmodern Cary Grant, but few people saw the picture. Malkovich’s role in Woody Allen’s Shadows and Fog in 1992 was nearly a cameo and after all the intelligence and self-loathing he had been showing on-screen up to that point, his Lennie in Of Mice and Men, directed by his Steppenwolf colleague Gary Sinise, rang a bit false.

To date, Malkovich’s one great film performance in the 1990s was in Wolfgang Petersen’s In the Line of Fire. Playing opposite an iconic Clint Eastwood, Malkovich took the clichéd part of a brilliant assassin and created something so frightening and horrifyingly human, that he single-handedly raised the film out of its genre conventions. From there, though, Malkovich was very nearly over the top as Kurtz in Nicolas Roeg’s Heart of Darkness. Oddly, he seemed strangely uninvolved playing Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, working with Frears and Hampton again, in Mary Reilly.

—Daniel Humphrey

MALONE, Dorothy

Films as Actress:

1943 The Falcon and the Co-Eds (Clemens)
1944 One Mysterious Night (Boetticher); Show Business (Marin)
1945 Too Young to Know (de Cordova); Hollywood Canteen (Daves)
1946 Janie Gets Married (Sherman); The Big Sleep (Hawks) (as bookshop clerk); Night and Day (Curtiz)
1948 To the Victor (Daves); Two Guys from Texas (Butler); One Sunday Afternoon (Walsh)
1949 South of St. Louis (Enright); Colorado Territory (Walsh)
1950 The Nevadan (Douglas); Convicted (Levin); The Killer That Stalked New York (McEvory); Law and Order (Juran)
1953 Scared Stiff (Marshall); Jack Slade (Schuster)
1954 Loophole (Schuster); Pushover (Quine); Young at Heart (Douglas); Private Hell 36 (Siegel)
1955 Five Guns West (Corman); Battle Cry (Walsh); Artists and Models (Tashlin); At Gunpoint (Werker)
1956 Pillars of the Sky (Marshall); Tension at Table Rock (Warren); Written on the Wind (Sirk) (as Marylee Hadley)
1957 Quantez (Keller); Man of a Thousand Faces (Pevney); Tip on a Dead Jockey (Thorpe)
1958 The Tarnished Angels (Sirk); Too Much, Too Soon (Napolen) (as Diana Barrymore)
1959 Warlock (Dmytryk)
1960 The Last Voyage (Stone)
1961 The Last Sunset (Aldrich) (as Belle Breckenridge)
1963 Beach Party (Asher) (as Marianne)
1964 Fate Is the Hunter (Nelson) (as Lisa Bond)
1969 Gli insaziabili (de Martino); The Pigeon (Bellamy—for TV)
1975 The Man Who Would Not Die (Target in the Sun) (Chessbro and Taylor—for TV); Abduction (Zito)
1976 The November Plan (Medford)
1977 Little Ladies of the Night (Chomsky—for TV); Murder in Peyton Place (Kessler—for TV); Golden Rendezvous (Lazarus)

1978 Katie: Portrait of a Centerfold (Greenwald—for TV)
1979 Winter Kills (Richert) (as Emma Kegan); Good Luck, Miss Wyckoff (Chomsky) (as Mildred)
1980 The Day Time Ended (Cardos) (as Ana); Condominium (Hyers)
1982 The Being (Kong) (as Marge Smith)
1984 He’s Not Your Son (Taylor—for TV) (as Dr. Sullivan)
1985 Peyton Place—The Next Generation (Elikann—for TV) (as Constance MacKenzie Carson)
1986 Descanse en piezas (Rest in Pieces) (Braunstein)
1992 Basic Instinct (Verhoeven) (as Hazel Dobkins)

Publications

On MALONE: article—

* * *

In the Hollywood of the 1950s and 1960s, with its system of casting by type, Dorothy Malone came to be identified by her luxurious coif of platinum blonde hair and her provocative, sidling walk. Her appearance defined her screen persona of the ignominious woman, which determined the direction of her career.

She began in pictures in minor roles, but soon was getting larger parts in everything from Westerns to musicals to films noir. In one memorable early role, Malone plays the reserved yet sensuous bookshop clerk in The Big Sleep who lets her hair down for private eye Marlowe (Humphrey Bogart). During these years she generally got parts that capitalized on her looks, but did not give her much opportunity for real acting.

If there was a peak in her career it was in the mid-1950s, when, under contract to Universal, she made two films with director Douglas Sirk, whose work set a standard for the genre of American melodrama. Appearing opposite Robert Stack and matinee idol Rock Hudson in Written on the Wind and The Tarnished Angels, she was afforded the chance to explore the full range of her sultry persona. It explodes with full force in the character of Marylee, the rich girl who cannot get enough stimulation in Written on the Wind. She despises her alcoholic brother (Stack) and lustfully pursues their childhood companion (Hudson), who is in love with Stack’s wife (Lauren Bacall). Malone’s exaggerated appearance provides an effective dramatic contrast to Bacall’s reserved, demure beauty.

As a devoted wife and mother in Tarnished Angels, her appearance changes only by degrees, as she is ignored by her husband (Stack), a carnival stunt flier, and must continually fend off the naive advances of the newspaper man played by Hudson. One interesting exception to the pattern of Malone’s 1950s roles is her portrayal of Diana Barrymore in Too Much, Too Soon, a seldomly seen film made in the wake of the success of Written on the Wind.

Despite winning the best supporting actress Oscar for her work in Written on the Wind, Malone found relatively few good parts coming her way—perhaps it was that her physical beauty lent itself most readily to more decorative roles in the studio executives’ eyes. Eventually she shifted to television, where she found success in the mid-1960s in the long-running melodrama Peyton Place. In recent years she has acted in films only occasionally.

—Rob Winning, updated by Frank Uhle

MANGANO, Silvana

Films as Actress:

- 1947 L’elisir d’amore (Costa); Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo (Flesh Will Surrender) (Lattuada)
- 1948 Gli uomini sono nemici (Carrefour de passion) (Giannini); Riso amaro (Bitter Rice) (De Santis)
- 1949 Cagliostro (Black Magic) (Ratoff)
- 1950 Il lupo della Sila (The Lure of the Sila) (Coletti); Brigate Musolino (Fugitive in 6B) (Camerini)
- 1952 Anna (Lattuada)
- 1954 Mambo (Rossen); Ulisse (Ulysses) (Camerini) (as Penelope and Circe)
- 1955 “‘Teresa’” ep. of L’oro di Napoli (The Gold of Naples; Every Day’s a Holiday) (De Sica)
- 1957 Uomini e lumi (De Santis)
- 1958 La Diga sul Pacifico (The Sea Wall; Angry Age) (Clément)
- 1959 La tempesta (Tempest) (Lattuada) (as Nasha); La grande guerra (The Great War) (Monicelli) (as Constantina)
- 1960 Jovanda e le altre (Five Branded Women) (Ritt); Crimen (... And Suddenly It’s Murder!); Killing in Monte Carlo (Camerini) (as Marina Strucchi)
- 1961 Il guidizio universale (The Last Judgment) (De Sica); Barabba (Barabbas) (Fleischer) (as Rachel); Una vita difficile (Risi)
- 1963 Il processo a Verona (The Verona Trial) (Lizzanni)
- 1964 La mia signora (two eps.) (Bolognini and Comencini)
- 1965 Il Disco Volante (The Flying Saucer) (Brass)
- 1966 Io, io, io... e gli altri (I, I, I... and the Others) (Blasetti)
- 1967 Scusi, lei è favorevole o contrario (Excuse Me... ) (Sordi); Edipo Re (Oedipus Rex) (Pasolini) (as Jocasta); La streghe (The Witches) (Visconti, Bolognini, Pasolini, Rossi, and De Sica) (different roles in each ep.)
- 1968 “‘La Bambinala’” ep. of Capriccio all’italiana (Monicelli); Viaggio de lavoro (Zac); Teorema (Theorum) (Pasolini) (as the mother)
- 1969 Medea (Pasolini)
- 1971 Morte a Venezia (Death in Venice) (Visconti) (as Tadzio’s mother); Scipione detto anche l'Africano (Magni); Il Decameron (The Decameron) (Pasolini); Ludwig (Visconti)
- 1972 Lo scopone scientifico (Comencini); D’amore si muore (Carunchio)
- 1975 Gruppo di famiglia in un interno (Conversation Piece) (Visconti)
- 1984 Dune (Lynch)
- 1987 Oci ciorința (Dark Eyes) (Mikhalkov) (as Elisa)

Publications

On MANGANO: articles—

Teunissen, José, “‘Een tableau in beweging,’” in Skrien (Amsterdam), February-March 1991.

* * *

Silvana Mangano was trained as a dancer and worked as a model before winning the Miss Rome beauty contest in 1946 which brought her into the movies. In her first starring role, as a migrant farm worker in Bitter Rice, caught between social awareness and jealousy born of a passionate love affair, she was instantly thrust into the international limelight. American critics called her the Italian Rita Hayworth, with an extra 20 pounds; she was the first of the postwar stars to represent the full-figured, fiery Italian beauty.

Her fame brought her offers from Hollywood and Alexander Korda but she turned them down in favor of marriage to Dino De Laurentiis who produced most of her films. Unlike several of her counterparts, Mangano quickly moved beyond the stereotype of an earthy sex symbol, and developed her skills as a dramatic actress. Her role in The Gold of Naples as the prostitute trapped in a marriage of honor to a rich uncaring man was critically acclaimed. Another role as a prostitute, in The Great War, revealed an ability at satirical comedy, while Crimean displayed her as a sophisticate.

She accepted few film offers and chose her roles carefully, usually preferring to collaborate with directors whose work she admired. Pasolini used her as Jocasta in Oedipus Rex, in The Decameron, and as an upper-middle-class mother whose life is profoundly changed by the visit of a young man to her home in Theorem. Pasolini said that she was practically contemptuous of her great beauty and that she worked hard at constantly improving her dramatic capabilities. She often worked with Luchino Visconti, and in fact played in four of his last six films. She reportedly accepted the role of Tadzio’s mother in Death in Venice for no salary; her portrayal of the impeccably groomed aristocratic woman relied entirely on mime for its effect. At the opposite extreme was her role as a vulgar and pushy nouveau-riche mother in Conversation Piece. She played both the grand sophisticate of the past and the reptilian modern mother with equal conviction.

—Elaine Mancini

MARAIS, Jean

Nationality: French. Born: Jean Alfred Villain-Marais in Cherbourg, 11 December 1913. Education: Attended Collège de Saint-Germain-en-Laye; Lycées Condorcet and Janson-de-Sailly; Saint Nicolas, Buzenal. Military Service: French Army, beginning in 1939; joined Leclerc division of the American Third Army, 1943. Family: One son. Career: 1930—apprenticed to a photographer in Le Vésinet, but soon was painting and studying acting with Charles Dullin; 1933—film debut in L’épervier (also assistant director); also appeared in walk-on roles in Dullin’s productions; 1937—in chorus of Cocteau’s Oedipe on stage in Paris; beginning of a personal and professional relationship with Cocteau; appeared in several plays written for him by Cocteau, and in films written or directed by Cocteau; stage work included roles at the Comédie Française, and acting in and directing Cocteau’s Les Parents terribles in 1977. Awards: Croix de Guerre. Died: of heart attack on 8 November 1998, in Cannes, France.

Films as Actor:

1933 L’épervier (Bird of Prey) (L’Herbier) (+ asst d)
1934 Le Bonheur (L’Herbier); Le Scandale (L’Herbier)
1941 Le Pavillon brûle (de Baroncelli)

1942 Le Lit à Colonne (Tual)
1943 L’Éternal Retour (The Eternal Return) (Delannoy) (as Tristan); Voyage sans espoir (Christian-Jaque); Carmen (Christian-Jaque) (as Don Jose)
1946 La Belle et la bête (Beauty and the Beast) (Cocteau and Clément) (as the Beast/the Prince)
1947 Les Chouans (Cofe); L’Aigle à deux têtes (The Eagle with Two Heads) (Cocteau) (as Stanislas)
1948 Ray Blas (Billon) (title role/Don Cesari); Les Parents terribles (The Storm Within; Intimate Relations) (Cocteau) (as Michel)
1949 Aux yeux du souvenir (Souvenir) (Delannoy); Le Secret de Mayerling (The Secret of Mayerling) (Delannoy) (as Crown Prince Rudolph)
1950 Orphée (Orpheus) (Cocteau) (title role); Le Château de verre (Clément)
1951 Les miracles n’ont lieu qu’une fois (Yves Allégret)
1952 La voce del silenzio (Pabst); Nez de cuir (Yves Allégret)
1953 Julietta (Marc Allégret) (as André Landecourt); Le Comte de Monte-Cristo (Count of Monte Cristo) (Vernay) (as Edmond Dantes); Dortoir des grandes (Inside a Girls’ Dormitory) (Decoin); Si Versailles m’était conte (Affairs in Versailles; Royal Affairs in Versailles) (Guitry) (as Louis XV)
1954 Le Guérisseur (Ciampi); Napoléon (Guitry) (as Count of Montholon)
1955 Futures vedettes (Marc Allégret); Si Paris nous était conté (If Paris Were Told to Us) (Guitry) (as François I)
1956 Élena et les hommes (Paris Does Strange Things; Elena and Her Men) (Renoir) (as Gen. François Rollan); S.O.S. Noronha (Rouquier); Typhon sur Nagasaki (Typhoon over Nagasaki) (Ciampi)
1957 Le notti bianche (White Nights) (Visconti) (as Lodger); Un Amour de poche (Nude in His Pocket; Girl in His Pocket) (Kast) (as Professor Jérôme)
1959 Le Testament d’Orphée (The Testament of Orpheus) (Cocteau) (as Oedipus)
1960 Le Capitain (Hunebelle); Austerlitz (The Battle of Austerlitz) (Gance and Richèbe) (as Carnot)
1961 La Princesse de Clèves (Delannoy); Le Capitain Fracasse (Gaspard-Huit) (Clément) (as the Beast/the Prince)
1962 Ponzo Pilato (Pontius Pilate) (Rapper) (title role); Le Masque de fer (Decoin) (as D’Artagnan)
1964 Patate (Friend of the Family) (Thomas) (as Noel Carradine); Fantômas (Hunebelle) (title role/Fandor)
1965 Fantômas se déchaîne (Fantômas Strikes Back) (Hunebelle) (title role); Le Gentleman de Cocody (Man from Cocody) (Christian-Jaque) (as Jean-Luc Hervé de la Tommeraye)
1966 Le Saint prend l’affât (Christian-Jaque) (title role)
1967 Fantômas contre Scotland Yard (Hunebelle) (title role)
1968 Le paria (Carleiz)
1970 La Provocation (Charpak); Le Jouet Criminel (Thomas); Peau d’âne (The Magic Donkey; Donkey Skin) (Demy) (as Blue King)
1980 Les Parents Terribles (Hubert—for TV)
1982 Ombre et secrets (Delabre)
1985 Parking (Demy) (as the Devil)
1986 Le lien de Parenté (Parental Claim; Next of Kin) (Rameau) (as Victor Blaise)
1988 Johanna D’Arc of Mongolia (Ottinger)
1992 Les Enfants du Naufrageur (Shipwrecked Children) (Foulon)
      (as old man with a limp)
1995 Les Misérables (Lelouch) (as Monsieur Myriel)
1996 Stealing Beauty (Bertolucci) (as M. Guillaume)
1997 Malice, film noir (Ferrari—doc)
1999 Luchino Visconti (Lizzani) (as himself)

Publications

By MARAIS: books—

By MARAIS: articles—

Interview in L’Ecran Fantastique (Paris), no. 21, 1981.

On MARAIS: books—

Cocteau, Jean, Jean Marais, Paris, 1951.

On MARAIS: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), Spring 1993.
Obituary in, Variety (New York), 16 November 1998.

* * *

Few actors have been so lucky as to have their roles tailor-made for them by a writer and director of Jean Cocteau’s stature. As screenwriter, director, and often author of the original stage play on which the film was based, Cocteau developed the characters, the milieu, and even the camera techniques around the personality, physical features, and acting capabilities of his intimate friend Jean Marais. But Cocteau was for his part also very fortunate to find in Marais the perfect embodiment of his archetypal heroes. It is in those films of Cocteau having a clear mythic basis that the collaboration between director and actor reached its height. In L’Eternal Retour, scripted by Cocteau, Marais acts the part of the desperately enamored Tristan in a modernized telling of the medieval legend of love and death. L’Aigle à deux têtes is a legendary view of a stormily romantic 19th-century world, in which Marais plays an anarchistic student who almost becomes a prince consort; here, too, the ending is a Wagnerian one of love in death. That Marais seems a bit old for the part fits perfectly the Hamletesque overtones of the film; the student is a youth old in spirit. Marais’s chiseled features are perfect for this film, for they are strong enough to be those of the peasant’s son he seems to be and noble enough for the prince he should or even might be. In La Belle et la bête Marais’s attractive monster changes into an almost too charming prince.

The actor’s sublime (if certainly not beautiful) facial features are perfect for portraying a mythological Greek figure such as Orpheus; and no less valuable in this and similar roles is Marais’s severe acting style, the result of his classical training as an actor with the Comédie Française. Orphée, second of the director’s three films on the subject, is the culmination of the collaboration between Cocteau and Marais. The actor conveys perfectly the brooding poet-visionary, seeking to escape the unwanted adulation and the criticism of the hostile and cliquish world of modern Paris. Cocteau adapted the role from that of the chatty Orpheus of a stage play, written long before the two met, into a figure of monumental reticence classically embodied by Marais. A similar effect is achieved in an appearance by the actor, this time as Oedipus in Cocteau’s Testament d’Orphée. The role is brief and nonspeaking; the effect is eternal.

The actor’s other films are disappointing; the closer Marais’s roles came to a Cocteauesque poesis—for example, in Visconti’s Le notti bianche—the better they are. As an actor, Marais has been no more and no less than the lyre of an Orpheus.

—Rodney Farnsworth

MARCH, Fredric

Films as Actor:

1928 The Dummy (Milton) (as Trumbull Meredith); The Studio Murder Mystery (Tuttle) (as Richard Hardell)
1929 Paris Bound (Griffith) (as Jim Hutton); Jealousy (De Limur) (as Pierre); Footlights and Fools (Seiter) (as Gregory
1930  Ladies Love Brutes (Lee) (as Dwight Howell); Paramount on Parade (as doughboy); Manslaughter (Abbott) (as Dan O’Bannon); Laughter (D’Arrast) (as Paul Lockridge); The Royal Family of Broadway (Cukor) (as Tony Cavendish); True to the Navy (Tuttle); Honor among Lovers (Arzner) (as Jerry Stafford); The Night Angel (Goulding) (as Rudek Berkem); My Sin (Abbott) (as Dick Grady)

1932  Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian) (title role); Strangers in Love (Mendes) (as Buddy Drake/Arthur Drake); Merrily We Go to Hell (Arzner) (as Jerry Corbett); Make Me a Star (as himself); Smilin’ Through (Franklin) (as Jeremy Wayne/Kenneth Wayne); The Sign of the Cross (DeMille) (as Marcus Superbus)

1933  Tonight Is Ours (Walker) (as Sabien Pastal); The Eagle and the Hawk (Walker) (as Jerry Young); Design for Living (Lubitsch) (as Tom Chambers)

1934  All of Me (Flood) (as Don Ellis); The Affairs of Cellini (La Cava) (as Benvenuto Cellini); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin) (as Robert Browning); Death Takes a Holiday (Leisen); Good Dame (Gering); We Live Again (Mamoulian)

1935  Anna Karenina (Brown) (as Vronsky); The Dark Angel (Franklin) (as Alan Trent); Les Misérables (Boleslawski)

1936  Mary of Scotland (Ford) (as Earl of Bothwell); Anthony Adverse (LeRoy) (title role); The Road to Glory (Hawks)

1937  A Star Is Born (Wellman) (as Norman Maine); Nothing Sacred (Wellman) (as Wally Cook)

1938  The Buccaneer (DeMille) (as Jean Lafitte); There Goes My Heart (McLeod) (as Bill Spencer); Trade Winds (Garnett) (as Sam Wye)

1939  China’s 400,000,000 (doc); Lights Out in Europe (doc)

1940  So Ends Our Night (Cromwell) (as Josef Steiner); Susan and God (Cukor)

1941  One Foot in Heaven (Rapper) (as William Spence); Bedtime Story (Hall) (as Lucius Drake); Victory (Cromwell)

1942  I Married a Witch (Lubitsch) (as Wallace Wooley); Black Sea Fighters (doc)

1944  The Adventures of Mark Twain (Rapper) (title role); Tomorrow the World (Fenton) (as Mike Frame)
1946  The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler) (as Dr. Stephenson)
1948  Another Part of the Forest (Gordon) (as Marcus Hubbard); Live Today for Tomorrow (Gordon) (as Judge Calvin Cooke); An Act of Murder (Gordon)
1949  Christopher Columbus (McDonald) (title role); The Titan-Michaelangelo (doc)
1951  Death of a Salesman (Benedek) (as Willy Loman)
1952  It's a Big Country (Wellman and others) (as Papa Esposito)
1953  Man on a Tightrope (Kazan) (as Karel Cernik)
1954  Executive Suite (Wise) (as Lorne Pineas Snow); The Bridges at Toko-Ri (Robson) (as Adm. George Tarrant)
1955  The Desperate Hours (Wyler) (as Don Hilward); Alexander the Great (Rossen) (as Philip of Macedonia); Albert Schweitzer (doc)
1956  The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson) (as Hopkins)
1959  Middle of the Night (Delbert Mann) (as Jerry Kingsley)
1960  Inherit the Wind (Kramer) (as Matthew Harrison Brady)
1961  The Young Doctors (Karlson) (as Dr. Joseph Pearson)
1963  The Condemned of Altona (De Sica) (as Gerlach); Seven Days in May (Frankenheimer) (as President Jordan Lyman)
1966  Hombre (Ritt) (as Alexander Favor)
1969  . . . Tick . . . Tick . . . Tick . . . (Nelson) (as Mayor Parks)

Publications

On MARCH: books—

Blinka, Deborah C., Fredric March: Craftsman First, Star Second, Westport, 1996.

On MARCH: articles—

Lee, Sonia, “Fredric March Gambled with Death—and Won,” in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), December 1933.
Film Dope (Nottingham), January 1989.
 Edwards, Anne, “Fredric March: Normandy Style for Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde’s Best Actor,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1990.

Atkinson, M., “Fredric March in Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde,” in Movieline (Escondido), October 1994.

Fredric March was one of the most durable Hollywood performers, playing, as a young man, a wide variety of leading roles in different genres, and creating, in middle age, a number of notable characterizations. The longevity of his career and range of his successes are somewhat surprising since he disdained an internal Method approach to acting as well as the building of a distinctive screen persona. Instead March preferred, in Richard Gehman’s interesting formulation, to put on a role “much as a man fits himself into a Grafton street suit.” For both stage and screen performances March would study the role intensely, memorizing the dialogue early, and let the character take shape as a comfortable mask. Thus his screen performances are remarkable for their subtlety, and so are all the more cinematic, while being dependent for their effectiveness on directorial support. In the wrong part March would tend to become stolid and weak; this is especially true of his 1930s work as a romantic lead, where he was often outplayed by the actresses with whom he appeared.

Unlike that of most screen actors, March’s career in films developed simultaneously with his stage career. In the early 1920s he worked as an extra in several films shot in New York and appeared in a number of minor theatrical roles, finally landing a leading part in a light comedy, The Devil in the Cheese. His subsequent impersonation of John Barrymore in The Royal Family brought him to the notice of Hollywood. He was signed to a five-year contract by Paramount, a studio whose glossy and sophisticated romantic comedies suited March’s good looks and slightly cynical demeanor. Most notably, he repeated the role of John Barrymore in The Royal Family of Broadway, where he strikes just the right note of humorous dissolute talent. Even in his light comedy roles, however, March always suggests a repressed anger or dissatisfaction, a quality exploited especially in the Barrymore part. This may explain his somewhat surprising choice for the title role in Rouben Mamoulian’s Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Unlike Spencer Tracy’s later version, March’s performance is a tour de force of impersonation (aided by makeup and directorial touches) rather than characterization. March was awarded the Oscar for his performance.

In the years immediately following, however, he was not afforded another opportunity to play such a complex character. Instead he became involved, now as a freelancer, in a number of costume epics and historical films, casting decisions influenced by the fact that he looked good in period clothes and had a resonant delivery. He was competent, if not convincing, as Browning in The Barretts of Wimpole Street, rather dashing as the picaresque hero of Anthony Adverse, and a powerful Bothwell in Mary of Scotland. He did impressive work, always in an essentially supporting capacity, in a number of films with contemporary settings, most notably Howard Hawks’s The Road to Glory and William Wellman’s A Star Is Born, where once again, he strikes just the right note of dissolute talent.

In these two roles suggestions of a darker, repressed, and perhaps self-destructive energy emerges, a side of March’s persona only previously exploited in his double role as Jekyll and Hyde. He returned to Broadway during the later stages of World War II to appear in an acclaimed production of A Bell for Adano, in which he was a very optimistic (and perhaps one-dimensional) Major Joppollo. In The Best Years of Our Lives, however, William Wyler was able to make better use of March’s persona. The original treatments of the script had made Al Stephenson a returning veteran who cannot fit back into a comfortable civilian niche, and rejects his job at the bank. In the final version, however, Stephenson is a more complex character—a man whose dissatisfactions are revealed in occasional tipping but who represses his anger for the sake of social appearances and convention. March’s embodiment of the role is near perfect, a triumph of casting and effective direction (particularly Wyler’s feel for slowly developed drama). March received the Oscar for his role, which is in a sense a study for his James Tyrone in the stage version of Long Day’s Journey into Night.

In the 1950s March’s career deteriorated, in spite of competent performances as Willy Loman in Benedek’s Death of a Salesman and as a besieged homeowner in Wyler’s The Desperate Hours. Even late in his career, however, March was able to turn in a finely conceived characterization as a villainous Indian agent in Hombre.

—R. Barton Palmer

MARTIN, Dean

Nationality: American. Born: Dino Paul Crocetti in Steubenville, Ohio, 17 June 1917. Education: Left school in 10th grade. Family: Married 1) Elizabeth Ann McDonald, 1940 (divorced 1949), four children; 2) Jeanne Rieggers, 1949 (divorced 1973), three children; 3) Catherine Mae Hawn, 1973 (divorced 1976), adopted daughter: Sasha. Career: Amateur boxer as “Kid Crocket,” then worked in steel mill and as clerk and croupier; singer, as Dino Martino, with Ernie McKay’s Band; then singer and dealer in gambling houses; 1946—booked in Rio Bamba, New York; teamed with Jerry Lewis in double act, and worked in clubs, radio, and television; 1949—film debut in My Friend Irma; 1950–55—host, with Lewis, The Colgate Comedy Hour on television; 1956—broke with Lewis, and became solo performer as singer and actor; 1965–74—star of The Dean Martin Show, on television. Died: Of acute respiratory failure, in Beverly Hills, California, 25 December 1995.

Films as Actor:

1949 My Friend Irma (George Marshall) (as Steve Baird)
1950 My Friend Irma Goes West (Walker) (as Steve Baird); At War with the Army (Walker) (as Sgt. Puccinelli)
1951 That’s My Boy (Walker) (as Bill Baker); Sailor Beware (Walker) (as Al Crowthers)
1952 Jumping Jacks (Taurog) (as Chick Allen); Road to Bali (Walker) (as himself)
1953 The Stooge (Taurog) (as Bill Miller); Scared Stiff (George Marshall) (as Larry Todd); The Caddy (Taurog) (as Joe Anthony); Money from Home (George Marshall) (as Honey Talk Nelson)
1954 Living It Up (Taurog) (as Steve); Three-Ring Circus (Pevney) (as Pete Nelson)
1955 You’re Never Too Young (Taurog) (as Bob Miles); Artists and Models (Tashlin) (as Rick Todd)
1956 Pardners (Taurog) (as Slim Mosely, Jr.); Hollywood or Bust (Tashlin) (as Steve Wiley)
1957 Ten Thousand Bedrooms (Thorpe) (as Ray Hunter)
1958 The Young Lions (Dmytryk) (as Michael Whiteacre); Some Came Running (Minnelli) (as Bama Dillert)
1959 Rio Bravo (Hawks) (as Dude); Career (Anthony) (as Maury Novak)
1960 Who Was That Lady? (Sidney) (as Michael Haney); Bells Are Ringing (Minnelli) (as Jeffrey Moss); Ocean’s Eleven (Milestone) (as Sam Harmon); Pepe (Sidney) (as himself)
1961 All in a Night’s Work (Anthony) (as Andy Ryder); Ada (Daniel Mann) (as Bo Gillis)
1962 Sergeants 3 (John Sturges) (as Sgt. Chip Deal); The Road to Hong Kong (Panama) (as himself); Who’s Got the Action (Daniel Mann) (as Steve Flood)
1963 Come Blow Your Horn (Yorkin) (as the Bum); Toys in the Attic (Hill) (as Julian Berniers); Who’s Been Sleeping in My Bed? (Daniel Mann) (as Jason Steel); Four for Texas (Aldrich) (as Joe Jarrett)
1964 What a Way to Go! (Thompson) (as Leonard Crawley); Robin and the Seven Hoods (Douglas) (as Little John); Kiss Me, Stupid (Wilder) (as Dino)
1965 The Sons of Katie Elder (Hathaway) (as Tom Elder); Marriage on the Rocks (Donohue) (as Ernie Brewer)
1966 The Silencers (Karlson) (as Matt Helm); Texas across the River (Gordon) (as Sam Hollis); Murderer’s Row (Levin) (as Matt Helm)
1967 Rough Night in Jericho (Laven) (as Alex Flood); The Ambushers (Levin) (as Matt Helm)
1968  Bandolero!  (McLagen) (as Dee Bishop); How to Save a Marriage—and Ruin Your Life (Cook) (as David Sloane); Five Card Stud (Hathaway) (as Van Morgan); The Wrecking Crew (Karlson) (as Matt Helm)
1970  Airport (Seaton) (as Vernon Demerest)
1971  Something Big (McLagen) (as Joe Baker)
1973  Showdown (Seaton) (as Billy Massey)
1975  Mr. Rico (Bogart) (as Joe Ricco)
1980  Cannonball Run (Needham) (as Jamie Blake)
1982  Bonjour, Monsieur Lewis (Benayoun—doc)
1984  Cannonball Run II (Needham) (as Jamie Blake)
1985  Half-Nelson (Bilson—for TV)

Publications

On MARTIN: books—

On MARTIN: articles—

Obituary, in Variety (New York), 1 January 1996.
Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), February 1996.
Legrand, Gérard, “‘Dean Martin ou Les surprises du nonchaloir,’” in Positif (Paris), March 1996.
Wolcott, J., “‘When They Were Kings,’” in Vanity Fair (New York), May 1997.

* * *

Like no other act of the late 1940s, Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis burst onto and dominated the American show business scene. An immediate hit in nightclubs, the duo was signed by producer Hal Wallis for Paramount Pictures. With their third film, At War with the Army, released in 1951, Martin and Lewis began a six-year run as major movie stars. In 1952, they moved into first place in the annual Motion Picture Herald listing of top ten ranking stars. Only Artists and Models and Hollywood or Bust (both directed by Frank Tashlin), however, are remembered today except by hardcore Martin and Lewis fans.

In 1956 Martin and Lewis split. Lewis continued in the movies, going on to produce and direct his own pictures, and for a time Martin’s career seemed to flounder. Ironically, in retrospect, it was during this period of the late 1950s in which Martin produced his most significant work as a motion picture actor. He was good in The Young Lions, but superb in Howard Hawks’s Rio Bravo, in which his reforming drunk demonstrated that in the right part Martin could be a great actor.

Also during this period, Martin shifted away from movies toward other media, principally popular music. In 1958, he produced a pair of million-selling singles in “‘Return to Me,’” and “‘Volare.’” At that time he also linked up with Frank Sinatra and became a charter member of the so-called “‘Rat Pack.’” Sinatra-led films followed: Ocean’s Eleven, Sergeant’s 3, and Robin and the Seven Hoods. This work led Martin to a revitalized film career in the mid-1960s and so he reemerged back onto the ranking of top stars because of a dismal but popular spoof of James Bond in The Silencers. Martin again played Matt Helm in the sequel, Murderer’s Row, but at that point moved to television complete with a popular NBC variety show. This led to gigs in Las Vegas and later Atlantic City so that alone Rio Bravo, sadly, will remain the lone monument to an acting talent wasted.

—Douglas Gomery

MARTIN, Steve

Nationality: American. Born: Waco, Texas, 14 August 1945. Education: Attended Long Beach State College and the University of California, Los Angeles. Family: Married the actress Victoria Tennant, 1986 (separated). Career: As a child performer, worked with Wally Boag at Disneyland, then at Birdcage Theatre, Knott’s Berry Farm; 1967—while at University, accepted contract to write for The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour for CBS TV; from 1970—writer and stand-up comic, working on TV through the 1970s, including Saturday Night Live, on tour, and on best-selling records; 1979—feature film debut as writer/performer in The Jerk, 1979; partner in Aspen Film Society (an independent production company) and 40 Share Productions (a television production company). Awards: Best Actor Awards, U.S. National Society of Film Critics, and New York Film Critics, for All of Me, 1984; Best Actor Awards, U.S. National Society of Film Critics, and Los Angeles Film Critics, for Roxanne, 1987. Address: P.O. Box 929, Beverly Hills, CA 90213, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1977  The Absent-Minded Waiter (Gottleib—short) (+ co-sc)
1978  Sergeant Pepper’s Lonely Hearts Club Band (Schultz) (as Maxwell Edison); The Kids Are Alright (Stein)
1979  The Muppet Movie (Frawley); The Jerk (Carl Reiner) (as Navin, + co-sc)
Steve Martin (left) with John Candy in Planes, Trains and Automobiles

1981  Pennies from Heaven (Ross) (as Arthur)
1982  Dead Men Don’t Wear Plaid (Carl Reiner) (as Rigby Reardon, + co-sc)
1983  The Man with Two Brains (Carl Reiner) (as Dr. Michael Hifruhrurr, + co-sc)
1984  The Lonely Guy (Miller) (title role); All of Me (Carl Reiner) (as Roger Cobb, + co-sc)
1985  Movers and Shakers (Asher) (as Fabio Longio)
1986  Little Shop of Horrors (Oz) (as Orin Scivello, D.D.S.); Three Amigos (Landis) (as Lucky Day, + co-sc, exec pr)
1987  Planes, Trains and Automobiles (Hughes) (as Neal Page); Roxanne (Schepisi) (as Charlie “C. D.” Bales, + sc)
1988  Dirty Rotten Scoundrels (Oz) (as Freddy Benson)
1989  Parenthood (Howard) (as Gil Buckman)
1990  My Blue Heaven (Ross) (as Vinnie Antonelli)
1991  L.A. Story (Mick Jackson) (as Harris K. Telemacher, + sc, exec pr); Father of the Bride (Shyer) (as George Banks); Grand Canyon (Kasdan) (as Davis)
1992  Housesitter (Oz) (as Newton Davis); Leap of Faith (Pearce) (as Jonas Nightengale)
1993  The Band Played On (Spottiswoode—for TV) (as Brother)
1994  A Simple Twist of Fate (MacKinnon) (as Michael McMann, + sc, exec pr); Mixed Nuts (Ephron) (as Philip)
1995  Father of the Bride, Part II (Shyer) (as George Banks)
1996  Sgt. Bilko (Lynn) (title role)
1997  The Spanish Prisoner (Mamet) (as Jimmy Dell)
1998  The Price of Egypt (Chapman, Hickner) (as voice of Hotep)
1999  The Venice Project (Dornhelm) (as himself); Joe Gould’s Secret (Tucci) (as Charlie Duell); Out-of-Towners (Weisman) (as Henry Clark); Bowfinger (Oz) (as Bobby Bowfinger +sc)
2000  Novocaine (David Atkins); Fantasia 2000 (Algar and Brizzi) (as himself)

Publications

By MARTIN: books—

Picasso at the Lapin Agile & Other Plays, 1997.
By MARTIN: articles—

Interview with B. Fong-Torres, in American Film (New York), June 1982.

Interview with Jack Barth, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1984.

Interview, in Photoplay (London), March 1985.

Interview with D. Sheff, in Playboy, January 1993.

On MARTIN: books—

On MARTIN: articles—

Allen, Steve, in Funny People, New York, 1981.

* * * *

Steve Martin’s status in the American cinema as one of America’s most versatile comic actors and most sensitive screenwriters seemed to be increasingly secure in the early 1990s. But by the beginning of the new millennium, Martin’s film career seems to have somewhat stalled, a victim, perhaps of the kind of Hollywood myopia that Martin himself lampoons in his most recently produced screenplay, Bowfinger. Martin began as a writer for other comics and television variety shows, but soon developed for himself an incredibly successful career as a stand-up comedian. His routines tended toward the zany, his persona that of the jerky, egocentric comic. There was always a clear philosophical intelligence at work in his routines, even when he performed with an arrow through his head. His comic bit of using a single flashcube to take a photo of his large audience worked as a sly comment on misguided photographers among his typical amphitheater crowds. His use of catchphrases, such as “Excuuuuuuuse me,” and “I’m a wild and crazy guy,” entered popular parlance, although they were as much reflexive ruminations on the concept of the catchphrase, as they were catchphrases. Indeed, his egocentric persona was so self-consciously a put-on that the second level of his routines became structural treatises on the stand-up form: “New Comedy” which was funny because it was sly parody of comedy, rather than comedy. His famous “happy feet” bit, whereby Martin’s feet involuntarily start to dance, introduced the theme that would become a primary hallmark of the comedian’s work: the split between the mind and the body.

In his first feature, The Jerk, a picaresque tale that marked the first of many collaborations with director Carl Reiner, Martin played a black sharecropper’s adopted son who discovers only as an adult that he is white. The Jerk draws heavily on Martin’s stand-up traditions, particularly a sequence in which Martin—in clichéd Mexican bandido drag—engages in dastardly cat juggling. The Man with Two Brains (co-written by Martin) continued to draw upon his traditions. Wearing a white suit and a headband with fluffy bunny ears, Martin acts the part of the self-deluded yet vulnerable jerk, uttering silly phrases like “Into the mud, scum queen!”

A clear, artistic departure took place with the 1981 Pennies from Heaven, directed by Herbert Ross. A very downbeat musical, Martin and co-star Bernadette Peters danced and lip-synced to authentic performances from the Great Depression era. If generally considered a noble failure, Pennies from Heaven distinguished Martin as one of the few American comic actors of his time (along with Woody Allen) willing to take chances on risky material. Risky, too, was his 1982 film Dead Men Don’t Wear Plaid (again with director Reiner), in which Martin—through the magic of special effects and the most sophisticated Kuleshov-inspired editing—performs opposite stars such as Ingrid Bergman, Humphrey Bogart, and Barbara Stanwyck in scenes borrowed from their greatest period vehicles.

With the exception of occasional films that appear designed to appeal to a juvenile audience (for instance, Three Amigos, a disappointing collaboration with John Landis and alumni of the Saturday Night Live television show; the slapstick Planes, Trains and Automobiles, directed by John Hughes; the one-joke TV remake Sgt. Bilko, (directed by Jonathan Lynn), Martin’s film choices have tended to show laudable ambitiousness and fascinating inspiration. Several films in which Martin worked only as performer particularly stand out: In the musical Little Shop of Horrors, directed by Muppet alumnus Frank Oz, Martin turned in an overwhelmingly energetic supporting turn as a sadistic dentist. In All of Me, co-starring Lily Tomlin, Martin’s physical mastery was so impressive that he won a number of film critics’ awards for performance. In Parenthood, directed by Ron Howard, Martin played a more reflective leading man in a decidedly ensemble piece, although his stand-up tradition is nicely exploited in a scene as “Cowboy Gil,” maker of balloon animals. In Father of the Bride and its sequel, Martin showed definitively that he could follow in Spencer Tracy’s footsteps as a totally credible actor, easily capable of exuding warmth and human feeling. And in The Spanish Prisoner, a tense thriller directed by David Mamet, Martin turns in a surprisingly chilly performance in his most striking change-of-pace role.
Many of Martin’s acting projects alternate, it would seem, between safer works of mass appeal which entertain, and ambitious works of more limited appeal which intellectually engage. House sitter, for instance, with Goldie Hawn, is an absolutely charming comedy in the tradition of the Hollywood screwball, with Martin and Hawn exhibiting considerable chemistry in a well-written formula, while Lawrence Kasdan’s Grand Canyon (a key film of the nineties) challenges spectators to question their life choices, with Martin willing to take on a relatively serious role and to potentially undermine his star status by appearing in an ensemble context. The Out-of-Towners, a very loose 1990 remake of the 1970 Neil Simon screenplay, re-unites Martin with Hawn in a series of wonderfully contrived gags and allows Martin to demonstrate both his witty charm and physical skills, while Leap of Faith is much more ambitious and disturbing, with Martin putting his kinetic energy to use as the prancing, dancing, strutting preacher Jonas Nightingale. In Leap of Faith, the insincerity which had always been an integral part of Martin’s stand-up persona is transferred wholesale to the business of the faith healer, and this satirical portrait of the shamans of Christian fundamentalism is surprisingly hard-hitting and unsentimental.

Almost all of Martin’s film work is marked by an incredible physical gracefulness which recalls Keaton and Chaplin; a sweetness and vulnerability which recalls Stan Laurel, but which is often projected through a surface persona of egotism and cloudedness, which recalls Jerry Lewis; and an almost schizophrenic split between the performer’s mind and his body. Indeed, Martin is invariably most memorable in scenes that display the actor-writer’s incredible physical gracefulness in conflict with his mental state. In All of Me, a transmogrified female soul takes control of one side of Martin’s body, and in Roxanne, Martin acts out a balletic fight using his tennis racket as a weapon and later attempts—hilariously—to drink a glass of wine without his huge nose interfering. On a less conflicted note, one thinks of Martin’s triumphant dance with Lily Tomlin in All of Me and his moving dance of joy after his son catches a baseball in a Little League game in Parenthood. In his professional life, Martin has also demonstrated a not inconsiderable ability to collaborate respectfully with a variety of other skillful artists, a canny eye for quality material, an intelligence which emerges in all his performances, and a generosity as actor to his co-stars. Many of these qualities are in marked contrast to many of his contemporaries, such as Chevy Chase or the early Eddie Murphy, whose film work has too often been rather artless, hypocritical, or opportunistic.

Especially impressive about Martin’s development as an artist is his increased activity as screenwriter of his own projects. In Roxanne, directed by Australian Fred Schepisi in 1987 from a screenplay by Martin, Martin plays C. D. Bales, a fire chief with a huge nose. A witty and moving updating which sets Rostand’s Cyrano de Bergerac in a mountain resort community, Roxanne seems Martin’s masterpiece so far. More than merely clever, Martin shows the relevance of Cyrano to contemporary culture, in the process providing himself a dazzling opportunity for his verbal wit and acrobatic grace. Particularly impressive is Martin’s revision of Cyrano’s monologue on nose-insults, which offers some continuity with the actor’s stand-up tradition. Martin the writer even provides some beautiful, romantic, wistful love scenes which Martin the actor interprets with subtlety and expressiveness. L.A. Story, directed by Mick Jackson in 1991, also written by Martin, looks increasingly like a major satirical statement about life in Hollywood: not so bitter as Altman’s The Player, but certainly as insightful, if more whimsical, and definitely possessing a moral vision—which seems a hallmark of Martin as writer. Although A Simple Twist of Fate, directed by Gillies MacKinnon in 1994, was—like Roxanne—written by Martin as a contemporary updating of a literary classic (in this case, George Eliot’s Silas Marner), it was not particularly successful with audiences or critics. As a dramatist, Martin fills his story with feeling (one thinks of Martin dancing with his baby girl while doing a deft Harry Belafonte impression or of father and daughter mugging to music as they look into each other’s eyes), but never to that sentimental point where he forgets the truth: that in the real world, money, alas, always matters. Unfortunately, a fallow period as a screenwriter followed, and it was not until 1999 that another Martin screenplay reached the screen with Bowfinger. Again Martin offered a satirical view of Hollywood, good-naturedly attacking the action-film mentality, actors’ vanity, the world of the Hollywood deal and its attendant amoral ambition, and the recent mania for Scientology among some of Hollywood’s top stars. Although Bowfinger offers an atypical, reflexive performance opportunity for Eddie Murphy in a dual role, the film feels decidedly more mainstream than Martin’s previous screenplays and thus is a bit disappointing. For those who hoped Martin would develop an extensive body of comic screenplays like Preston Sturges or Woody Allen, Martin’s spare output must be disappointing. For those who hoped Martin would develop an extensive body of comic screenplays like Preston Sturges or Woody Allen, Martin’s spare output must be discouraging. One suspects that Martin, who would have profited from the traditional studio system of old, has a variety of sophisticated screenplays stranded in Hollywood turnaround or development-deal-hell; his driving intelligence—informed by great and comprehensive knowledge of contemporary painting, literature, and science—may be precisely what prevents his cinematic success from being greater.

Truthfully, one suspects that Martin’s heart may no longer belong to Hollywood; the fact that he has recently turned to writing plays, most notably his very successful Picasso at the Lapin Agile—which deals with Einstein, cubism, the theory of relativity, the mysteries of love, and the very workings of time itself—suggests that Martin has accepted the necessary limits to his film aspirations imposed by the nature of the industry. Too, Martin has been writing occasional comic ephemera—witty, intellectual, and culturally prescient essays—for The New Yorker, following in the footsteps of humorists like Thurber, Perelman, and Woody Allen. If there remains any other major disappointment from Martin, it is that evidently he has not aspired to direct; for certainly one would welcome films which even more completely were dictated by Martin’s own creative impulses.

—Charles Derry

MARVIN, Lee

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 19 February 1924. Education: Attended a number of schools, including Public School 165, New York, Lakewood High School, Florida, and St. Leo’s Preparatory School, Dade City, Florida. Family: Married 1) Betty Edeling, 1952 (divorced 1965), four children; 2) Pamela Freely, 1970. Career: Quit school to join the U.S. Marine Corps; wounded, 1944, and hospitalized for 13 months; worked at odd jobs, then became a plumber’s apprentice, Woodstock; 1947—stage debut in Roadside at Maverick Theatre, Woodstock; then studied at the American Theatre Wing, New York; 1950—film debut in You’re in the Navy Now; 1951—stage role in Broadway success Billy Budd; 1957–60—in TV series M-Squad; 1979—involved in landmark legal case concerning ‘palimony.’ Awards: Best Actor Academy Award and Best Actor, Berlin Festival, for Cat Ballou, 1965; Best Foreign Actor, British Academy, for The Killers and Cat Ballou, 1965. Died: Of a heart attack in Tucson, Arizona, 29 August 1987.
Lee Marvin (right) with Clint Eastwood in Paint Your Wagon

Films as Actor:

1951 You’re in the Navy Now (Hathaway); Down among the Sheltering Palms (Goulding) (as Snively); Diplomatic Courier (Hathaway) (as an M.P.); The Duel at Silver Creek (Siegel) (as Tinhorn Burgess)
1952 We’re Not Married (Goulding) (as Pinky); Hangman’s Knot (Huggins) (as Ralph Bainter); Seminole (Boetticher) (as Sergeant Magruder); The Glory Brigade (Webb) (as Corporal Bowman); Eight Iron Men (Dmytryk) (as Mooney)
1953 Gun Fury (Walsh) (as Blinky); The Stranger Wore a Gun (De Toth) (as Dan Kurth); The Wild One (Benedek) (as Chino); The Big Heat (Fritz Lang) (as Vince Stone); The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk) (as Meatball); Gorilla at Large (Jones)
1954 The Raid (Fregonese) (as Lt. Keating); A Life in the Balance (Horne) (as the killer); Bad Day at Black Rock (Sturges) (as Hector David); Not as a Stranger (Kramer) (as Brundage)
1955 Violent Saturday (Fleischer) (as Dill); I Died a Thousand Times (Heisler) (as Babe Kossuk); Pete Kelly’s Blues (Webb) (as Al Gannaway); Shack Out on 101 (Dein); Pillars of the Sky (Marshall) (as Sgt. Lloyd Carractart); Seven Men from Now (Boetticher) (as Big Masters); The Rack (Laven) (as Captain John Miller)
1956 Attack! (Aldrich) (as Colonel Bartlett); Raintree County (Dmytryk) (as Orville ‘Flash’ Perkins)
1957 The Missouri Traveler (Hopper) (as Tobias Brown)
1961 The Comancheros (Curtiz) (as Tully Crow); The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance (Ford) (as Liberty Valance)
1962 Donovan’s Reef (Ford) (as Boots Gilhooley)
1963 Sergeant Ryker (Kulik—for TV) (title role); The Killers (Siegel) (as Charlie)
1964 Ship of Fools (Kramer) (as Bill Tenny)
1965 The Professionals (Brooks) (as Fardan); Cat Ballou (Silverstein) (as Tim Strawn/Kid Shelleen)
1966 The Dirty Dozen (Aldrich) (as Major Reisman)
1967  Point Blank (Boorman) (as Walker)
1968  Hell in the Pacific (Boorman) (as the American); Tonight Let's All Make Love in London (Whitehead) (as himself); Paint Your Wagon (Logan) (as Ben Rumson)
1969  Monte Walsh (Fraker) (title role)
1971  Pocket Money (Rosenberg) (as Leonard); Prime Cut (Ritchie) (as Nick Devlin)
1972  The Emperor of the North Pole (Emperor of the North) (Aldrich) (as A Number 1)
1973  The Iceman Cometh (Frankenheimer) (as Hickey); The Spikes Gang (Fleischer) (as Harry Spikes)
1974  The Klansman (Young) (as the sheriff)
1975  Shout at the Devil (Hunt) (as Flynn O'Flynn)
1976  The Great Scout and Cathouse Thursday (Big Sam) (Taylor) (as Sam Longwood)
1978  Avalanche Express (Robson) (as Colonel Harry Wargrave); The Big Red One (Fuller) (as Sgt. Possum)
1980  Death Hunt (Hunt) (as Sgt. Edgar Millen)
1982  Gorky Park (Apted) (as Jack Osborne)
1983  Canicule (Dog Day) (Boisset) (as Jimmy Cobb)
1985  The Dirty Dozen—The Next Mission (McLaglen—for TV)
1986  The Delta Force (Golan) (as Col. Nick Alexander)

Publications

By MARVIN: articles—

Interview, in Playboy (Chicago), January 1969.

On MARVIN: books—

On MARVIN: articles—

* Film Dope* (Nottingham), January 1989.

---

Lee Marvin was one of the greatest practitioners of minimalist American screen acting. He made a memorable appearance in Fritz Lang’s The Big Heat, playing a sadistic gangster who scorches Gloria Grahame’s face with a pot of hot coffee, making Jimmy Cagney’s grapefruit assault on Mae Clarke look like a mere chilly caress. This early, shocking role displayed a vicious side to Marvin’s screen personality which continued to simmer just under the surface, and occasionally to erupt, throughout his career.

Marvin is primarily known for his aggressive action roles, many directed by such stalwarts of the American cinema as John Ford, Don Siegel, Robert Aldrich, and Sam Fuller. His screen persona can be described as cold, but with the capacity for sudden, brutal heat. His pale hair, icy blue-gray eyes, and stony face, in later films cagy but no less cruel, added force to his screen image. Like other minimalist actors (Bronson, Eastwood, Norris), Marvin’s characters are most frequently verbally terse and emotionally recondite. His roles are often the embodiment of an exaggerated “macho” ideal: tough men seemingly devoid of feelings or vulnerability, figures often impenetrable and remote to movie audiences.

He has played villains, as well as heroes, in war films (Hell in the Pacific, The Big Red One), in Westerns (The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance, The Professionals), and in gangster films (The Killers, Prime Cut). Often in these genre films, Marvin is less a full-bodied character than a one-dimensional force projecting the director’s attitude towards violence, revenge, authority, or heroism. In Point Blank he gives a shuddering performance as a man betrayed by his gangster cohorts. As the frozen center of this jumpy, cold, modernist film, Marvin portrays a character so emotionally dead that not even murderous revenge can bring him back to life.

Most critics agree that Marvin’s other great performances are in The Dirty Dozen, as a hard-nosed major unable to conceal his basic decency and fairness, and Cat Ballou, a comic tour de force for which he won his only Academy Award. He received excellent notices for his performance as Hickey in the film of Eugene O’Neill’s The Iceman Cometh, critic Stanley Kaufmann thought it better than Jason Robard’s stage version. More recently, a small but effective performance in Gorky Park (where he gently closes a woman’s eyes before he blows her away) showed he had lost none of his chilly power.

Marvin’s screen and television career prospered in the 1950s. His TV series M-Squad was a hit from 1957–60. The success of M-Squad boosted his stock with film producers, and in the 1960s Marvin’s career hit its stride. He did his best work and achieved his greatest popularity during this period. His career faltered in the 1970s when a younger generation of actors emerged; moviegoers went to see “the new Eastwood film” as they had gone to see his movies a decade earlier. Aside from the powerful screen presence he brought to the movies, Lee Marvin’s career can also be seen as a bridge, the cinematic link between the tough guys of the 1930s and 1940s (Cagney, Bogart) and the minimalist heroes of the 1970s and 1980s.

---

THE MARX BROTHERS

Nationality: American. CHICO. Born: Leonard Marx in New York City, 22 March 1891 (some sources say earlier). Family: Married Betty Harp, 1912; one daughter. HARPO. Born: Adolph (later used the name Arthur) Marx in New York City, 23 November 1893 (some sources say earlier). Family: Married Susan Fleming, 1936, four adopted children. GROUCHO. Born: Julius Marx in New York City, 2 October 1890 (some sources say 1895). Family: Married 1) Ruth Johnson, 1920 (divorced 1942), one daughter and one son; 2) Kay Marvis Gorcey, 1945 (divorced 1951), one daughter; 3) Eden Hartford, 1954 (divorced 1969). ZEppo. Born: Herbert Marx in (Left to right) Harpo Marx, Groucho Marx, and Chico Marx in A Day at the Races

New York City, 25 February 1901. Family: Married 1) Marion Benda, 1927 (divorced), one son; 2) Barbara Blakely, 1959 (divorced 1973). A fifth brother, Gummo, born Milton Marx, was involved in some of the early show business career.

Films as Actors:

1925 Too Many Kisses (Sloane) (Harpo only)
1929 The Cocoanuts (Florey and Santley) (Groucho as Mr. Hammer, Harpo as Harpo, Chico as Chico, and Zeppo as Jamison)
1930 Animal Crackers (Heerman) (Groucho as Capt. Jeffrey T. Spaulding, Harpo as the Professor, Chico as Signor Emanuel Ravelli, and Zeppo as Horatio Jamison)
1931 Monkey Business (McLeod) (as stowaways)
1932 Horse Feathers (McLeod) (Groucho as Prof. Quincy Adams Wagstaff, Harpo as Pinky, Chico as Barovelli, and Zeppo as Frank Wagstaff)
1933 Duck Soup (McCarey) (Groucho as Rufus T. Firefly, Harpo as Pinkie, Chico as Chicolini, and Zeppo as Bob Rolland)

1935 A Night at the Opera (Wood) (Groucho as Otis B. Driftwood, Harpo as Tomasso, and Chico as Fiorello)

1937 A Day at the Races (Wood) (Groucho as Dr. Hugo Z. Hackenbush, Harpo as Stuffy, and Chico as Toni)

1938 Room Service (Weiter) (Groucho as Gordon Miller, Harpo as Faker Englund, and Chico as Harry Binelli)

1939 At the Circus (Buzzell) (Groucho as J. Cheever Loophole, Harpo as Punchy, and Chico as Antonio Pirelli)

1940 Go West (Buzzell) (Groucho as S. Quentin Quale, Harpo as Rusty Pannello, and Chico as Joseph Pannello)

1941 The Big Store (Reisner) (Groucho as Wolf J. Flywheel, Harpo as Wacky, and Chico as Ravelli)

1946 A Night in Casablanca (Mayo) (Groucho as Ronald Komblow, Harpo as Rusty, and Chico as Corbaccio)

1947 Copacabana (Green) (Groucho as Lionel L. Devereaux)

1949 Love Happy (Miller) (Groucho as Sam Grunion, Harpo as Harpo, and Chico as Faustino the Great)

1950 Mr. Music (Haydn) (Groucho as himself)

1951 Double Dynamite (Cummings) (Groucho as Emil J. Kech)

1952 A Girl in Every Port (Erskine) (Groucho as Benny Linn)

1957 Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter? (Oh! For a Man!) (Tashlin) (Groucho as surprise guest; The Story of Mankind (Irwin Allen) (Groucho as Peter Minuit, Harpo as Isaac Newton, and Chico as Monk)

1968 Skidoo (Preminger) (Groucho as “God”)

Publications

By MARX BROTHERS: books—

Bed by Groucho Marx, New York, 1930.

Many Happy Returns by Groucho Marx, New York, 1942.

Groucho and Me by Groucho Marx, New York, 1959.

By MARX BROTHERS: articles—

“Groucho Writes,” in Take One (Montreal), no. 11, 1968.

Interview with Groucho Marx, in Take One (Montreal), January 1970.

On MARX BROTHERS: books—

Chesler, Judd, Toward a Surrealistic Film Aesthetic, with an Investigation into the Elements of Surrealism in the Marx Brothers and Jean Vigo, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1977.

On MARX BROTHERS: articles—

Schippers, K., “‘We Were Brothers Long before Warner!’ Groucho Marx,” in Skoop (Amsterdam), September 1977.

Winokur, Mark, “‘Smile, Stranger’: Aspects of Immigrant Humor in the Marx Brothers’ Humor,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), July 1985.

Jenkins, H. III, “Fifi Was My Mother’s Name!: Anarchistic Comedy, the Vaudeville Aesthetic, and Diplomaniacs,” in Velvet Light Trap (Austin), Fall 1990.

Artaud, A., “‘Artaud on the Marx Brothers,’” in Vertigo (Paris), 1:45 no. 6, 1996.

On MARX BROTHERS: musical—

* * *

The Marx Brothers’ irreverent brand of humor has been described as surrealistic, absurdist, and anarchic. Consistently anti-authoritarian, their films mock serious institutions and professions, figures of authority, and “high art,” with special abuse reserved for anyone deemed pompous, rich, or respectable. For example, Horse Feathers ridicules American colleges, Duck Soup takes jabs at governmental officials and international relations, and A Night at the Opera lambastes opera and its rich patrons. At their best, the Brothers not only run circles around figures of authority, but also undermine Hollywood conventions and the authority of language, from official institutional language with its specialized jargon to everyday language ordinarily taken for granted. They have influenced countless filmmakers, comedians, authors, and playwrights.

The Brothers’ individual comic personas were established early in their careers and remained consistent: Groucho’s sardonic punster, Chico’s immigrant with a phony Italian accent who never comprehends social conventions but creates his own logical alternatives, and Harpo’s devious mischief-maker who never speaks but communicates brilliantly with facial expressions and props. Two other brothers, Zeppo and Gummo, participated in their vaudeville acts, with Zeppo continuing as a straight man in their first five films before quitting to become a Hollywood agent. Margaret Dumont joined their vaudeville act and remained a regular cast member during their film careers, always playing the role of a rich dowager.

Vaudeville provided the Brothers with the opportunity to develop their personas and their unique way of relating to one another. First as solo performers and then as a team, the Brothers perfected their vaudeville skits by improvising in response to the exigencies of each audience. Their first two films were actually vaudeville routines adapted for the screen. Even after relinquishing the vaudeville circuit for film careers, the Brothers continued to improvise around their scripts. For A Night at the Opera and A Day at the Races, they refined their film scenarios by testing them before live audiences. Vaudeville exerted the strongest influence on the Brothers’ comedic styles; its quick pace and reliance on visual combined with verbal gags were integral to their development. Other important influences were silent films (especially Chaplin) and the scriptwriters who worked with them over the years.

Working in the film industry gradually altered the Marx Brothers’ comedy, a process that some commentators have interpreted as one of restraining the more confrontational aspects of their humor. Their earlier films are generally considered to be their best. In Monkey Business, for example, the Brothers are stowaways on an ocean liner, which they terrorize with their pranks before trying to get through Customs with Maurice Chevalier imitations. Duck Soup is considered by many to be their finest, most irreverent film, but it also led to a split from Paramount, their first producer, due to the film’s poor box-office performance and to changes in Paramount’s administration. Set in the fictional country of Freedonia, Duck Soup casts Groucho as the country’s intransigent president, Rufus T. Firefly, who insults everyone, whether friend or foe, and capriciously launches a war that he declines to end because “I’ve paid a month’s rent on the battlefield.”

After their switch to MGM, the Brothers’ films began to soften their barbed wit. A Night at the Opera and A Day at the Races, their first two MGM releases, were their most financially successful films and displayed some memorable zaniness. In A Night at the Opera Harpo and Chico get the orchestra to play “Take Me Out to the Ballgame” during the overture to Il trovatore, Groucho sells popcorn in the aisles, Harpo and Chico join the action on stage while Groucho yells “boogie boogie,” and they raise and lower inappropriate backdrops behind the confused singers. Nevertheless, under the guidance of Irving J. Thalberg, the Brothers were restrained by more rigid plots and by serious romantic subplots involving young lovers faced with obstacles to their happiness. Placed within the confines of having to help the romantic couples, who were spared from mockery, the Brothers’ humor lost some of its all-inclusiveness. Musical interludes became standard elements as well, and while Groucho’s singing, Chico’s piano playing, and Harpo’s harp playing exhibited talented horseplay, other musical performers tended to plop.

Their films following Thalberg’s death in 1936 became increasingly formulaic while still displaying some outstanding comic moments. Hollywood of the 1930s, with its Production Code and Wall Street bosses, was not conductive to unleashed anti-authoritarian humor. Following Love Happy, their last film, the Brothers went their separate ways, but all three continued to perform: Groucho as host of a quiz show, You Bet Your Life, on radio and television, and Chico and Harpo as guests on televised variety shows.

A few elements in the Marx Brothers films are disturbing, such as the ethnic stereotypes and the limited roles for women characters who exist solely as the objects of the Brothers’ jokes and lechery. Ultimately, the Marx Brothers’ humor can be characterized as good satirical fun. Rather than construct a vision of a better society, the Brothers ridicule an immutable society before becoming integrated into the world of success by the happy endings. Their genius lies in casting fresh light on social mores by undermining conventional manifestations of seriousness.

—Claudia Springer

MASINA, Giulietta

Nationality: Italian. Born: Giulia Anna Masina in San Giorgio di Piano, 22 February 1920 (other sources say 1921 or 25 October 1920). Education: Attended the University of Rome. Family: Married the director Federico Fellini, 1943 (died 1993). Career: 1939—professional stage debut in Wilder’s Felice Viaggio, Rome; worked as radio actress; acted with the University of Rome dramatic group; in the university’s production of Angelica, with Marcello Mastroianni, 1948; 1946—film debut in Paisà; 1952—appeared in minor role in her first film directed by Fellini, Lo sceicco bianco; this led to critically acclaimed performances in La strada, 1954, Nights of...
Giulietta Masina in Luci del varietà

Films as Actress:

1946 Paisà (Paisan) (Rossellini) (bit role)
1948 Senza pietà (Without Pity) (Lattuada) (as Marcella)
1951 Luci del varietà (Variety Lights; Lights of Variety) (Lattuada and Fellini) (as Melinda Amour); Persian chaise (Behind Closed Shutters) (Comencini) (as Pippo); Europa ‘51 (The Greatest Love) (Rossellini) (as Passerotto); Cameriera bella presenza offres (Pastina)
1952 Lo sceicco bianco (The White Sheik) (Fellini) (as Cabiria)
1953 Donne proibite (Angels of Darkness; Forbidden Women) (Amato); Cento anni d’amore (De Felice); Ai Margini della Metropoli
1954 La strada (The Road) (Fellini) (as Gelsomina); Via Padova 46 (Lo Scocciatore) (Bianchi)
1955 Il bidone (The Swindle; The Swindlers) (Fellini) (as Iris); Buomanotte . . . avvocato! (Bianchi) (as Carla Santi)
1956 Le notti di Cabiria (Nights of Cabiria; Cabiria) (Fellini) (as Cabiria)
1958 Fortunella (de Filippo); Nella città l’inferno (And the Wild, Wild Women; Hell in the City) (Castellani) (as Lina)
1959 Jons und Erdeine (Käutner)
1960 La Grande Vie (Das kunstseidene Mädchen; La gran vita) (Duvivier)
1965 Giulietta degli spiriti (Juliet of the Spirits) (Fellini) (title role)
1967 Non stuzzicate la zanzara (Don’t Tease the Mosquito) (Wertmuller)
1969 The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes) (as Gabrielle, the Madwoman of Sulpice)
1985 Frau Holle (Jakubisco) (title role); Perinbaba (Jakubisco) (as Perinbaba/Mrs. Winter)
1986  Ginger e Fred (Ginger and Fred) (Fellini) (as Ginger/Amelia Bonetti)
1991  Aujourd’Hui Peut-Être . . . (A Day to Remember)

Publications

By MASINA: books—

By MASINA: article—

Interview with O. Volta, in Positif (Paris), September 1985.

On MASINA: book—

On MASINA: articles—

Wolff, W., “Italy’s Movie Greats,” in Cae, 6 November 1965.
Barabas, K., and others, “Fellinirol,” in Filmkultura (Budapest), vol. 25, no. 6, 1989.
Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1995.

* * *

Although she attained a virtually mythic status during the 1950s and 1960s, as the symbolic center of such films as La strada and Juliet of the Spirits, Giulietta Masina’s performances are seldom discussed apart from the considerable directorial achievements of her noted husband, Federico Fellini.

Before she became the focus of his autobiographical outpourings, she was a highly regarded actress. She made her debut in Roberto Rossellini’s Paisà in 1946 and, two years later, won the Italian film critics’ award for best supporting actress in Senza pietà. Collaborating with Fellini in films of the early 1950s such as Luci del varietà and Lo sceicco bianco, she shaped a gamine screen persona often compared to Chaplin’s little tramp. Some reviewers have criticized her for simply conveying the superficial feelings and sentimentality on which Fellini’s slick and mechanical stories were based, but one need only view her performance in La strada to see a sensitivity and subtlety of expression that are anything but mechanical. Again, in Nights of Cabiria, she delivered a restrained but heartrending interpretation of a naïve prostitute.

During the 1960s her husband elevated her to the status of resident muse in the Fellini household, and her filmic presence in those years cannot be accounted for by her performance alone. Fellini’s films of that decade, particularly the masterpiece Juliet of the Spirits, obsessively examine the relationship of Masina to her husband’s midlife artistic crises and achievements. Unfortunately, because these films so thoroughly established her as the feminine side of Fellini’s psyche, other directors did not offer her the variety of roles deserved by her talent.

As a result, Masina effectively went into semiretirement following 1969’s The Madwoman of Chaillot, appearing only on Italian radio and television for the next decade and a half. She returned to the screen in 1985, but her swansong occurred the following year in Fellini’s nostalgic Ginger and Fred, which paired her with Fellini’s favorite actor, Marcello Mastroianni, in a highly praised performance. Masina and Fellini became more reclusive after the release of Ginger and Fred, both falling into ill health. Fellini died in October 1993, the day after the couple celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary; an increasingly despondent Masina succumbed to cancer less than five months later.

—Stephen L. Hanson, updated by David E. Salamie

MASON, James

Films as Actor:

1935  Late Extra (Parker) (as Jim Martin)
1936  Twice Branded (Rogers) (as Henry Hamilton); Troubled Waters (Parker) (as John Merriman); Prison Breaker (Brunel) (as Bunny Barnes); Blind Man’s Bluff (Parker) (as Stephen Neville); The Secret of Stambov (The Spy in White) (Marton) (as Larry); Fire over England (Howard) (as Ambassador)
1937  The Mill on the Floss (Whelan) (as Tom Tuliver); Catch as Catch Can (Atlantic Episode) (Kellino) (as Robert Leyland); The Return of the Scarlet Pimpernel (Schwartz) (as Jean Tallion)
1939  I Met a Murderer (Kellino) (as Mark Warrack)
James Mason and Lynn Redgrave in Georgy Girl

1941  This Man Is Dangerous (The Patient Vanishes) (Huntington) (as Mick Cardby); Hatter’s Castle (Comfort) (as Dr. Renwick); The Night Has Eyes (Terror House) (Arliss) (as Stephen)

1942  Alibi (Hurst) (as André Laurent); Secret Mission (French) (as Raoul de Carnot); Thunder Rock (Boulting) (as Streeter)

1943  The Bells Go Down (Dearden) (as Ted Robbins); The Man in Grey (Arliss) (as Marquis de Rohan); They Met in the Dark (Lamec) (as Commander Heritage); Candlelight in Algeria (George King) (as Alan Thurston)

1944  Fanny by Gaslight (Man of Evil) (Asquith) (as Lord Manderstoke); Hotel Reserve (Hanbury, Comfort, and Greene) (as Peter Vadassy)

1945  A Place of One’s Own (Knowles) (as Mr. Smedhurst); They Were Sisters (Crabtree) (as Geoffrey); The Seventh Veil (Bennett) (as Nicholas); The Wicked Lady (Arliss) (as Capt. Jackson)

1947  Odd Man Out (Reed) (as Johnny McQueen); The Upturned Glass (Huntington) (as Michael Joyce)

1949  Caught (Ophüls) (as Larry Quinada); Madame Bovary (Minnelli) (as Gustave Flaubert); The Reckless Moment (Ophüls) (as Lord Manderstoke); East Side, West Side (Le-Roy) (as Brandon Bourne)

1950  One Way Street (Fregonese) (as Doc Matson)

1951  Pandora and the Flying Dutchman (Lewin) (as Hendrick van der Zee); The Desert Fox (Hathaway) (as Rommel)

1952  Five Fingers (Mankiewicz) (as Cicero); Lady Possessed (Spier and Kellino) (as Del Palma); The Prisoner of Zenda (Thorne) (as Rupert); “Secret Sharer” ep. of Face to Face (Brahm) (as Captain)

1953  Charade (Kellino—for TV) (as The Murderer, Major Linden, and Jonah Watson, + co-sc); The Man Between (Reed) (as Ivo Kern); The Story of Three Loves (Reinhart) (as Charles Coutray); The Desert Rats (Wise) (as Rommel); Botany Bay (Farrows) (as Capt. Paul Gilbert); Julius Caesar (Mankiewicz) (as Brutus)

1954  Prince Valiant (Hathaway) (as Sir Brack); A Star Is Born (Cukor) (as Norman Maine); 20,000 Leagues under the Sea (Fleischer) (as Capt. Nemo)

1956  Forever Darling (Hall) (as Guardian Angel); Bigger than Life (Ray) (as Ed Avery); Island in the Sun (Rossen) (as Maxwell Fleury)
1958  Cry Terror (Stone) (as Jim Molner); The Decks Ran Red (Stone) (as Capt. Edwin Rummill)
1959  North by Northwest (Hitchcock) (as Phillip Vandamm); Journey to the Center of the Earth (Levin) (as Prof. Oliver Lindenbrook); A Touch of Larceny (Hamilton) (as Comm. Max Easton)
1960  The Trials of Oscar Wilde (The Man with the Green Carnation) (Hughes) (as Sir Edward Carson)
1961  The Marriage-Go-Round (Lang) (as Paul Delville); Escape from Zahrain (Neame) (as Johnson)
1962  Lolita (Kubrick) (as Humbert Humbert); Hero’s Island (Stevens) (as Jacob Webber, + pr); Tiara Tahiti (Kotcheff) (as Capt. Brett Aimsley)
1964  Finché dura la tempesta (Torpedo Bay) (Frend) (as Blayne); The Fall of the Roman Empire (Anthony Mann) (as Timonedes); The Pumpkin Eater (Clayton) (as Bob Conway)
1965  Lord Jim (Brooks) (as Gentleman Brown); Genghis Khan (Levin) (as Kam Ling); Les Pianos mécaniques (The Un inhibited) (Bardem) (as Regnier)
1966  The Blue Max (Guillermin) (as Count von Klugermann); Georgy Girl (Narizzano) (as James Leamington); The Deadly Affair (Lumet) (as Charles Dobbs)
1967  Stranger in the House (Rouve) (as John Lawyer); The London Nobody Knows (Cohen) (as narrator)
1968  Duffy (Parrish) (as Charles Calvert); Mayerling (Young) (as Emperor Franz Josef)
1969  Age of Consent (Powell) (as Bradley Monahan); The Sea Gull (Lumet) (as Trigorin)
1970  Spring and Port Wine (Hammond) (as Rafe Crompton)
1971  L’uomo dalle due ombre (Cold Sweat) (Young) (as Ross)
1972  Bad Man’s River (Martin) (as Montero)
1973  Child’s Play (Lumet) (as Malley); The Last of Sheila (Ross) (as Philip); The Mackintosh Man (Huston) (as Wheeler)
1974  Frankenstein: The True Story (Smight—for TV) (as Dr. Polidari); 11 Harrow House (Avarian) (as Watts); The Manchester Contract (Parrish) (as Brizard)
1975  Great Expectations (Hardy) (as Magwich); Mandingo (Fleischer) (as Maxwell)
1976  Heaven Can Wait (Beatty and Henry) (as Mr. Jordan); The Boys from Brazil (Schaffner) (as Eduard Seibert)
1977  Murder by Decree (Clark) (as Dr. Watson); Salem’s Lot (Hooper—for TV); The Passage (Thompson) (as Professor Bergson)
1980  Fjolkes (North Sea Hijack; Assault Force) (McLagen) (as Admiral Brinsden)
1982  The Verdict (Lumet) (as Ed Concannon); Evil under the Sun (Hamilton) (as Odell Gardener); Ivanhoe (Camfield—for TV)
1983  Yellowbeard (Danski)
1984  The Assisi Underground (Ramatii)
1985  Dr. Fischer of Geneva (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV) (title role); The Shooting Party (Bridges) (as Sir Randolph Nettleby)

Film as Director:

1954  The Child

Publications

By MASON: books—

By MASON: articles—

Interview with I. McAsh, in Films (London), November 1981.
Interview, in Time Out (London), 4 March 1983.
Interview with P. Carcassonne, in Cinémato graphe (Paris), May 1983.
Interview with D. Rabourdin, in Cinéma (Paris), September 1984.

On MASON: books—

On MASON: articles—

Buckley, Michael, “‘James Mason,’” in Films in Review (New York), May 1982; see also issues for June/July and November 1982.
Film Dope (Nottingham), January 1989.
Brock, P., “‘These I Have Known: Memories of James Mason,’” in Classic Images (Muscatine), October 1992.

* * *

James Mason spent a few years on the stage before turning in the late 1930s to the screen. He appeared in a series of quota films in which his dark, somewhat sinister good looks qualified him as a type of ruthless but romantic villain. He was seen in such bravura romances as The Man in Grey, The Seventh Veil, and The Wicked Lady, successful at the box office and distinguished chiefly for his star quality. Apart from a supporting role in Thunder Rock, his first important film was Carol Reed’s Odd Man Out. As Johnny, the Irish partisan being hunted through the streets of Belfast by both the police and by those seeking to aid him, he achieved the feat of playing a leading character who is mute through much of the action, an odyssey of fear and terror spanning some 24 hours.

It was on the strength of this performance that Mason went to Hollywood, embarking on what proved a busy if somewhat directionless career in which his considerable talent and unusual screen personality were too often wasted in indifferent films. Mason’s screen image was of the highly educated English gentleman, with a soft touch of Irish in his speech, and the capacity to reveal a cruel streak, especially in his relations with women. Always an impressive presence, he twice appeared effectively as Field-Marshal Rommel, in The Desert Fox and The Desert Rats, and was a thoughtful but unexciting Brutus in Joseph Mankiewicz’s filming of Julius Caesar. In the early 1950s he also returned to the romantic costume genre in which he had originally made his name, playing Rupert of Hentzau in The Prisoner of Zenda and bringing sinister authority to the part of Captain Nemo in 20,000 Leagues under the Sea.

Mason gave one of his best performances in George Cukor’s 1954 version of A Star Is Born, as husband of the star, Judy Garland. He returned to England to make The Man Between and a three-part television film, Charade, which he co-scripted. Mason’s other notable roles include the charmingly well-bred villain in Hitchcock’s North by Northwest, his appearance in Ken Hughes’s The Trials of Oscar Wilde, and Humbert Humbert in Kubrick’s Lolita, in which Mason is for once the victim. Unfortunately, the censorship of the day required that the eroticism of the relationship between middle-aged man and nymphette be somewhat muted.

—Roger Manvell

MASSEY, Raymond

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>The Speckled Band (Raymond) (as Sherlock Holmes)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>The Old Dark House (Wade) (as Philip Waverton); The Face at the Window (Hiscox) (as Paul le Gros)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Scarlet Pimpernel (Korda) (as Chauvelin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Things to Come (Menzies) (as John and Oswald Cabal); Fire over England (William K. Howard) (as Philip of Spain)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Under the Red Robe (Seastrom) (as Cardinal Richelieu); Dreaming Lips (Czinner) (as Miguel del Vayo); The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell) (as Black Michael); The Hurricane (Ford) (as Gov. Eugene De Laage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>The Drum (Drums) (Zoltan Korda) (as Prince Ghul)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Black Limelight (Stein) (as Peter Charrington)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Abe Lincoln in Illinois (Spirit of the People) (Cromwell) (title role); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz) (as John Brown)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Dangerously They Live (Florye) (as Dr. Ingersoll); 49th Parallel (The Invaders) (Powell) (as Andy Brock)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Desperate Journey (Walsh) (as Maj. Otto Baumeister); Reap the Wild Wind (Cecil B. DeMille) (as King Cutler)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Action in the North Atlantic (Lloyd Bacon) (as Capt. Steve Jarvis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra) (as Jonathan Brewster); The Woman in the Window (Fritz Lang) (as Frank Lalor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>God Is My Co-Pilot (Florye) (as General Chennault); Hotel Berlin (Godfrey) (as Armin Von Dahnwitz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Abraham Farlan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Mourning Becomes Electra (Dudley Nichols) (as Brig. Gen. Ezra Mannan); Possessed (Bernhardt)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>The Fountainhead (King Vidor) (as Gail Wynnand); Roseanna McCoy (Reis) (as Old Randolph McCoy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Barricade (Godfrey) (as Boss Kruger); Challenge—Science against Cancer (Parker) (as Capt. Steve Jarvis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Sugarfoot (Marin) (as Jacob Stint); Come Fill the Cup (Gordon Douglas) (as John Ives); David and Bathsheba (Henry King) (as Nathan the Prophet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Carson City (De Toth) (as ‘‘Big Jack’’ Davis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>The Desert Song (Humberstone) (as Yousseff)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Battle Cry (Walsh) (as Gen. Snipes); Seven Angry Men (Warren) (as John Brown); Prince of Players (Dunne) (as Junius Brutus Booth); East of Eden (Kazan) (as Adam Trask)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The True Story of the Civil War (Stoumen) (as narrator)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Omar Khayyam (The Life, Loves and Adventures of Omar Khayyam) (Freeman) (as the Shah); The Naked Eye (Stoumen) (as narrator); rerelease of 1927 Uncle Tom’s Cabin (as narrator); Mayerling (Litvak—for TV) (as prime minister)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>The Naked and the Dead (Walsh) (as General Cummings)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Great Imposter (Mulligan) (as Abbott Donner) (as Abbott Donner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>The Fiercest Heart (Sherman) (as Willem); The Queen’s Guards (Powell) (as Capt. Fellowes)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Jacqueline Kennedy’s Asian Journey (Seltzer) (as narrator)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>How the West Was Won (Ford) (as Abraham Lincoln); Report on China (as narrator)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Mackenna’s Gold (J. Lee Thompson) (as the Preacher)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The President’s Plane Is Missing (Duke—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

790
1972  All My Darling Daughters (Rich—for TV) (as Matthew Cunningham)
1973  My Darling Daughters’ Anniversary (Pevney—for TV) (as Matthew Cunningham)

Publications

By MASSEY: books—

When I Was Young, Boston, 1976.

On MASSEY: book—

On MASSEY: articles—

Current Biography 1946, New York, 1946.
O’Toole, Lawrence, “A Gentleman of Character,” obituary in Maclean’s (Toronto), 8 August 1983.
Film Dope (Nottingham), January 1989.
Stars (Mariembourg), June 1989.

* * *

The thunder and the lightning became Raymond Massey more than any other screen actor of his day. His booming, authoritative voice, grand manner, and tall, broad-shouldered body were made for command, and Massey exploited them with skill and intelligence.

Prophets and driven men were his meat. He hunted the Scarlet Pimpernel with the full messianic fury of the Terror, and as Black Michael intrigued so ruthlessly for the throne of Zenda that his hatchet man Rupert of Hentzau said admirably, “There are times in the presence of your majesty when I feel myself an amateur.” His monocled arrogance as Black Michael made him a natural to play the patriarch of the acting Booth clan in Father of the Bride, where he played second fiddle to star Robert Young’s harried judge whose four vivacious daughters get married, and subsequently celebrate their first wedding anniversaries, on the same day.

—John Baxter, updated by John McCarty

MASTROIANNI, Marcello

Films as Actor:

1938  Marionette (Gallone)
1940  La colonna di ferro (Blasetti)
1942  Una storie d’amore (Camerini); I bambini ci guardano (De Sica)
1947  I miserabili (Freda)
1950  A Tale of Five Cities (Marcellini); Una domenica d’agosto (Emmer); Vita da cani (A Dog’s Life) (Steno and Monicelli); Cuori sul mare (Bianchi); Contro la legge (Calzavara)
1951  Parigi e sempre Parigi (Emmer); Atto di accusa (Gentilomo)
1952  Sensualità (Barefoot Savage) (Fracassi) (as Carlo); La ragazze di Piazza di Spagna (Three Girls from Rome) (Emmer);
      Tragico ritorno (Faraldo); Penne nere (Biancoli); Gli eroi della domenica (Camerini); Il viale della sperenza (Risi);
      Febbre di vivere (Gora)
1953  Non e mai troppe tardi (Ratti); Lulu (Cerchio)
1954  Cronache di poveri amanti (Lizzani); Giorni d’amore (De Santis);
      Casa Ricordi (House of Ricordi) (Gallone) (as Donizetti); La muta di Portici (Ansoldi); La principessa delle Canarie (Moffa and Serrano de Osma)
1955  Peccato che sia una canaglia (Too Bad She’s Bad) (Blasetti) (as Paolo); La belle mugnaia (The Miller’s Beautiful Wife) (Camerini) (as Luca);
      Tam-Tam Mayumbe (Napolitano)
1956  Il bigamo (The Bigamist) (Emmer); La fortuna di essere donna (Lucky to Be a Woman) (Blasetti) (as Corrado)
1957  Pari e figli (A Tailor’s Maid) (Monicelli); Il momento più bello (The Most Wonderful Moment) (Emmer);
      Le notti bianchi (White Nights) (Visconti) (as Mario); La ragazza della Salina (Cap); Il medico e lo stregone (Monicelli)
1958  I soliti ignoti (Big Deal on Madonna Street) (Monicelli) (as Tiberio); Racconti d’estate (Love on the Riviera; Summer Tales) (Francolini) (as police inspector); Un ettaro di cielo (Casadio); Amore e guai (Dorigo)
1959  Il legge (La Loi; Where the Hot Wind Blows) (Dassin) (as engineer); Il nemico di mia moglie (My Wife’s Enemy) (Puccini) (as Marco); Tutti innamorati (Orlandini); Ferdinando I, re di Napoli (Francolini)
1960  La dolce vita (Fellini) (as Marcello Rubino); Il bell’Antonio (Bolognini) (as Antonio Magnano); Adua e la compagne (Love à la Carte) (Pietrangeli) (as Piero)
1961  La notte (The Night) (Antonioni) (as Giovanni Pontano); Fantasmi a Roma (Ghosts of Rome) (Pietrangeli); L’assassino (The Lady Killer of Rome) (Petri) (as Nello Poletti); Divorzio all’italiana (Divorce, Italian Style) (Germi) (as Ferdinando Cefalu)
1962  La Vie privée (A Very Private Affair) (Malle) (as Fabio); Cronaca familiare (Family Diary) (Zurlini) (as Enrico)
1963  Otto e mezzo (8 1/2) (Fellini) (as Guido Anselmi); I compagni (The Organizer) (Monicelli) (as Prof. Sinigaglia); Il giorno più corto (The Shortest Day) (Corbucci) (as himself); Ieri, oggi, domani (Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow) (De Sica) (as Carmine/Renzo/Augusto Rusconi)
1964 Matrimonio all’italiana (Marriage Italian Style) (De Sica) (as Domenico Soriano)
1965 Casanova ‘70 (Monicelli) (as Maj. Andrea Rossi-Colombetti); La decima vittima (The Tenth Victim) (Petri) (as Marcello Polletti); Oggi, domani, dopodomani (Ferreri, De Filippo, and Salce—eps. released as Kill the Other Sheik and The Man with the Balloons); L’uomo dai cinque palloni (Ferreri—revised version of ep. in previous film)
1966 The Poppy Is Also a Flower (Young) (as Insp. Mosca); Spara forte, piu forte . . . non capisco (Shoot Loud, Louder . . . I Don’t Understand) (De Filippo) (as Alberto Saporito); Io, io, io . . . e gli altri (I, I, I . . . and the Others) (Blasetti)
1967 Questi fantasmi (Ghosts—Italian Style) (Castellani); La straniero (The Stranger) (Visconti) (as Arthur Mursault)
1968 Diamonds for Breakfast (Morahan); Gli amanti (A Place for Lovers) (De Sica) (as Valerio)
1969 I girassoli (Sunflower) (De Sica) (as Antonio); Block-Notes di un regista (A Director’s Notebook) (Fellini—for TV)
1970 Leo the Last (Boorman) (as Leo); Drama della gelosia (The Pizza Triangle) (Scola) (as Oreste); Giochi particolari (Indovina)
1971 La moglie del prete (The Priest’s Wife) (Risi); Permette? Rocco Papaleo (Rocco Papaleo) (Scola); Ca n’arrive qu’aux autres (It Only Happens to Others) (Trintignant); Scipione detto anche l’africano (Magni); Fellini Roma (Fellini)
1972 La cagna (Liza) (Ferreri); Che? (What?), Diary of Forbidden Dreams (Polanski); Mordi e fuggi (Risi)
1973 Rappresaglia (Massacre in Rome) (Cosmatos); Salut l’artiste (Robert); La Grande Bouffe (Blow-Out) (Ferreri); L’Evénement le plus important que l’homme a marché sur la lune (A Slightly Pregnant Man) (Demy)
1974 Touchez pas la femme blanche (Ferreri); Poopsie (Capitani) (as Charlie the Collar); Allo mounts (P. and V. Taviani) (as Fulvio Imbriani)
1975 Per le antiche scale (Down the Ancient Stairs) (Bolognini); C’eravamo tanto amati (We All Loved Each Other So Much) (Scola); La pupa del gangster (Capitani)
1976 La donna della domenica (The Sunday Woman) (Comencini); La divina creatura (The Divine Nymph) (Griffi) (as Michele Barra); Tutto modo (Petri); Calastre nobile veneziano (Mogherini); Signore e signori buonanotte (Comencini and others)
1977 Una giornata speciale (A Special Day) (Scola); Mogliamante (Wifemistress) (Vicario) (as Luigi DeAngelis)
1978 Doppio delitto (Steno); Bye Bye Monkey (Ferreri); Così come sei (Stay as You Are) (Lattuada) (as Giulio); Ciao maschio (Ferreri); Le mani sporche (Scola) (as Oreste)
1979 L’ingorgo (Bottleneck; Traffic Jam) (Comencini); La città delle donne (City of Women) (Fellini) (as Snaporaz); Shiny Lugano e tantarte l vino (Wertmüller); Giallo nazale (Corbucci); La terrazza (Scola) (as Luigi)
1980 Fantasma d’amore (Ghost of Love) (Risi) (as Nino); Oopsie Poopsie (Capitani) (as Charlie the Collar)
1981 La pelle (The Skin) (Cavani) (as Curzio Malaparte); La Nuit de Varennes (That Night in Varennes) (Scola) (as Casanova)
1982 Oltre la porta (Beyond the Door) (Cavani); La Storia di Piera (The Story of Piera) (Ferreri) (as Lorenzo, Piera’s father); Le Général de l’armée morte (Tovoli)
1983 Gabriela (Barreto) (as Nacib Saad)
1984 Enrico IV (Henry IV) (Bellochio) (title role)
1985 Maccheroni (Maccaroni) (Scoppio) (as Antonio Jasiello); La due vita di Mattia Pascal (The Two Lives of Mattia Pascal) (Monicelli) (as Mattia); I soli ignoti vent’anni dopo (Big Deal on Madonna Street . . . Twenty Years Later) (Todini) (as Tiberio)
1986 Ginger e Fred (Ginger and Fred) (Fellini) (as Fred); O Melissokomos (The Beekeeper) (Angelopoulos) (as Spyros); Melissokomos Patheni—O Alles Mythos (A Beekeeper Dies—The Other Tale) (Papilou)
1987 Intervista (The Interview) (Fellini) (as himself); Occi corrientes (Dark Eyes) (Mikhalkov) (as Roman); Globalny Pressing (Boronin)
1988 Miss Arizona (Sandor) (as Rozsnyai); Vacanza (Guillot) (as Samba (Constantini); Il mitico Gianluca (Lazotti)
1989 Splendor (The Last Movie) (Scola) (as Jordan)
1990 Ché ora e’ (What Time Is It?) (Scola) (as Father); Stanno tutti bene (Everybody’s Fine) (Tornatore) (as Matteo Scuro); Verso sera (Archibugi) (as Prof. Bruschi)
1991 To Meteoro Vima tou Pelargou (Le Pas Suspendu de la Cigogne; Suspend Step of the Stork) (Angelopoulos) (as the vanished politician); La Voleur d’enfants (The Children Thief) (as Biguia/the Colonel)
1992 Used People (Kidron) (as Joe); A Fine Romance (Tchin-Tchin) (Saks) (as Cesareo Gramaldi)
1993 Do Éso No Se Habla (I Don’t Want to Talk about It) (Bemberg) (as Ludovico D’Andrea); 1, 2, 3, Soleil (1, 2, 3, Sun) (Blier) (as Constantini); El Ladron de Ninos (De Chalonge)
1994 Ready to Wear (Prêt-a-Porter) (Altman) (as Sergei); La Vera Vita di Antonio H. (The True Life of Antonio H.) (Monteleone) (as himself)
1995 Les Cent et une Nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as the Italian friend); Par dela les nuages (Aldila dalla nuvole; Beyond the Clouds) (Antonioni and Wenders) (as Maestro)
1996 Trois Vies et une Seule Mort (Raul Ruiz); Sostiene Pereira (Afirma Pereira; Pereira Declares) (Roberto Faenza)
1997 Viagem ao Principio do Mundo (Journey to the Beginning of the World) (de Oliveira) (as Manoel); Marcello Mastroianni: mi ricordo, sì, io mi ricordo (Marcello Mastroianni: I Remember, Yes I Remember) (Tatò) (as himself)
1998 Luchino Visconti (Lizzani) (as himself)

Publications

By MASTROIANNI: articles—

Interview with A. Lacombe, in Ecran (Paris), July-August 1975.

On MASTROIANNI: books—

On MASTROIANNI: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1993.

* * *

Since the 1950s, Marcello Mastroianni has been Italy’s favorite leading man, as well as one of his country’s finest actors. Until the emergence of Gérard Depardieu on the international film scene, Mastroianni also was the most famous European actor in America. This renown is symbolized by his earning the astonishing total of three Academy Award nominations (for Divorce, Italian Style, A Special Day, and Dark Eyes), quite an accomplishment for an actor working in non-English-language films.

After World War II, Mastroianni joined Luchino Visconti’s repertory company, which was bringing to Italy a new kind of theater and novel ideas of staging. The young actor played Mitch in A Streetcar Named Desire, Happy in Death of a Salesman, Stanley Kowalski in Visconti’s second staging of Streetcar, and roles in Chekhov’s Three Sisters and Uncle Vanya. At this time, he also was appearing onscreen, with his roles gradually increasing in importance. Mastroianni permanently sealed his stardom in Italy in 1957, playing a timid clerk whose love is not reciprocated, in Visconti’s La dolce vita. Three years later, he graduated to international superstardom with his role as the jaded, world-weary journalist in Fellini’s La dolce vita, a film that changed the look and direction of Italian cinema. Since then, he has remained a major box-office draw around the world.

From the 1960s on, Mastroianni regularly worked with the top Italian and French filmmakers (including Antonioni, Malle, and De Sica, in addition to Fellini and Visconti), in some of the highest profile foreign-language releases (beginning with Il bell’Antonio in 1960 and The Night in 1961). While he was to become known for playing Latin lover roles, his characters often were far more complexly drawn. They were not one-dimensional pretty boys; rather, beneath their handsome exteriors they were lazy, world-weary, and doubt-ridden. But Mastroianni also was adept at spoofing the image of the Casanova, as he did so memorably in Divorce, Italian Style. With waxed moustache and glossy, matted-down hair, he plays a married man who schemes to rid himself of his witless and unattractive wife so that he may marry his sexy young cousin. He further played against his image in A Special Day, cast as a lonely homosexual. Earlier on, he had displayed a light touch for comedy in Big Deal on Madonna Street, playing the exasperated member of an inept group of burglars. His seemingly detached air was perfectly suited to satire as well, as he demonstrated in films as diverse as The Tenth Victim, Alonsanfan, and City of Women. Yet he remained perfectly capable of playing highly dramatic roles, as he did so well in The Organizer, cast as a highborn but now indigent professor who becomes involved in union organizing activities in turn-of-the-twentieth-century Italy.

Mastroianni was the logical choice to star as Fellini’s film director/alter-ego in 8½; one cannot imagine any other actor in this role. But he is perhaps best remembered for his pairings with Sophia Loren, with whom he was cast in the deliciously funny three-part sex farce Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow and the equally amusing sex comedy Marriage Italian Style. In both these films, Mastroianni’s masculinity blends perfectly with Loren’s exuberant earthy personality. After these successes, the two appeared together in the less-successful drama Sunflower, playing a couple separated by war, and A Special Day, in which Mastroianni’s homosexual and Loren’s oppressed wife come together on the day in 1938 when Hitler was cheered on the streets of Rome during his visit to Mussolini.

In the latter stages of his career, Mastroianni continued to take serious dramatic roles. For instance, in The Suspended Step of the Stork, he is quietly poignant as an obscure man who may have once been an important Greek politician who had disappeared years earlier. The actor was especially effective in roles as aging romantics. In Used People, one of his few English-language films, he plays a man who begins courting the woman he has adored from afar for two decades. Sometimes he is romantically entangled with women young enough to be his daughter (or even granddaughter). In I Don’t Want to Talk About It, he is a suave bachelor who becomes involved with two women, a young dwarf and her physically attractive but obnoxiously manipulative mother. In both of these films, Mastroianni is never anything less than charming.

He also played the senior citizen who simply looks back on his past. In Everybody’s Fine, he is an elderly man who is absorbed in his memories, and who travels through Italy to call on his five adult children. In Dark Eyes, he gives a tour-de-force performance as a once young and idealistic aspiring architect, who married a banker’s daughter, fell into a lifestyle of afternoon snoozes and philandering, and proved incapable of holding onto what was important to him. His on-screen presence has also been directly linked to his earlier screen characterizations. In Ready to Wear, he is reunited with Sophia Loren, and at one point in the scenario, she recreates her famous steamy striptease sequence from Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow. Loren is as beguiling as she had been 30 years earlier but Mastroianni is no longer the attentive young lover, so Sophia’s seductive moves only put him to sleep. Mastroianni’s appearance in two of Fellini’s final features is especially sentimental. Ginger and Fred is sweetly nostalgic for its union of Mastroianni and Giulietta Masina, two of the maestro’s then-aging but still vibrant stars of the past. In Intervista, he appears as himself with Anita Ekberg, with whom he had starred decades before in La dolce vita. Mastroianni’s entrance is especially magical; the sequence in which he and Ekberg (who, he remarks, he has not seen since making La dolce vita) observe their younger selves in some famous clips from that film is wonderfully nostalgic.

In his long and prolific career, Mastroianni almost singlehandedly defined the contemporary type of Latin lover, then proceeded to redefine it a dozen times and finally parodied it and played it against type. He remains unsurpassed as one of the most universally popular and beloved of all motion picture personalities.

—Elaine Mancini, updated by Rob Edelman

MATTHAU, Walter

Films as Actor:

1955 The Kentuckian (Lancaster) (as Sam Bodine); The Indian Fighter (De Toth) (as Wes Todd)
1956 Bigger Than Life (Nicholas Ray) (as Wally Gibbs)
1957 A Face in the Crowd (Kazan) (as Mel Miller); Slaughter on Tenth Avenue (Laven) (as Al Dahlke)
1958 King Creole (Curtiz) (as Maxie Fields); Voice in the Mirror (Keller) (as Dr. Leon Barnes); Onionhead (Taurog) (as Red Wildoe); Ride a Crooked Trail (Hibbs) (as Judge Kyle)
1960 Strangers When We Meet (Quine) (as Felix Andrews)
1962 Lonely Are the Brave (Miller) (as Sheriff Johnson); Who’s Got the Action? (Daniel Mann) (as Tony Gagoots)
1963 Island of Love (De Costa) (as Tony Dallas); Charade (Donen) (as Hamilton Bartholomew/Carson Dyle)
1964 Ensign Pulver (Logan) (as Doc); Fail-Safe (Lumet) (as Groeteschele); Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli) (as Sir Leopold Sartori)
1965 Mirage (Dmytryk) (as Ted Caselle)
1966 The Fortune Cookie (Wilders) (as Willie Gingrich)
1967 A Guide for the Married Man (Kelly) (as Paul Manning)
1968 The Odd Couple (Saks) (as Oscar Madison); The Secret Life of an American Wife (Axelrod) (as Movie Star “Charlie”); Candy (Marquand) (as Gen. Smight)
1969 Hello, Dolly! (Kelly) (as Horace Vandergelder); Cactus Flower (Saks) (as Julian Winston)
1971 A New Leaf (May) (as Henry Graham); Plaza Suite (Hiller) (as Sam Noah/Jesse Kiplinger/Roy Hubley); Kotch (Leemmon) (title role)
1972 Pete ‘n’ Tillie (Ritt) (as Pete)
1973 Charlie Varrick (Siegel) (title role); The Laughing Policeman (An Investigation of Murder) (Rosenberg) (as Jake Martin)
1974 The Taking of Pelham One Two Three (Sargent) (as Garber); Earthquake (Robson) (as token drunk); The Front Page (Wilders) (as Walter Burns)
1975 The Sunshine Boys (Ross) (as Willy Clark); The Gentleman Tramp (Patterson—doc) (as narrator)
1976 The Bad News Bears (Ritchie) (as Morris Buttermaker)
1978 House Calls (Zieff) (as Dr. Charley Nichols); Casey’s Shadow (Ritt) (as Lloyd Bourdell); California Suite (Ross) (as Marvin Michaels)
1979 Sunburn (Serafin)
1980 Little Miss Marker (Bernstein) (as Sorrowful Jones); Hopscotch (Neame) (as Miles Kendig); Portrait of a 60% Perfect Man (Trescot—doc) (as himself)
1981 First Monday in October (Neame) (as Dan Snow); Buddy (Wilders) (as Trabucco)
1982 I Ought to Be in Pictures (Ross) (as Herbert Tucker)
1983 The Survivors (Ritchie) (as Sonny Paluso)
1984 Movers and Shakers (Asher) (as Joe Mulholland)
1986 Pirates (Polanski) (as Capt. Thomas Bartholomew Red)
1988 The Couch Trip (Ritchie) (as Donald Becker); Il piccolo diavolo (The Little Devil) (Benigni) (as Maurice)
1990 The Incident (Sargent—for TV) (as Harmon Cobb)
1991 Visitor (Newman); JFK (Stone) (as Sen. Russell Long); Mrs. Lambert Remembers Love (Charles Matthau—for TV) (as Clifford)
1992 Against Her Will: An Incident in Baltimore (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Harmon Cobb)
1993 Dennis the Menace (Castle) (as Mr. Wilson); Grumpy Old Men (Petrie) (as Max Goldman)
1994 Incident in a Small Town (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Harmon Cobb); I.Q. (Schepis) (as Albert Einstein)
1995 The Grass Harp (Charles Matthau) (as Judge Cool); Grumpier Old Men (Deutch) (as Max Goldman)
1996 I’m Not Razzaport (Gardner) (as Nat Moyer)
Walter Matthau (left) with Inger Steven and Robert Morse in A Guide for the Married Man

1997  Out to Sea (Coolidge) (as Charlie Gordon)
1998  The Life and Times of Hank Greenberg (Kempner) (doc) (as himself); The Odd Couple II (Deutch) (as Oscar Madison); The Marriage Fool (Charles Matthau) (as Frank Walsh)
2000  Hanging Up (Keaton) (as Lou Mozell)

Films as Director:

1960  Gangster Story (+ ro as Jack Martin)

Publications

By MATTHAU: articles—

On MATTHAU: book—

On MATTHAU: articles—

Film Dope (London), March 1989.
Walter Matthau was one of the motion picture industry’s solid, respected character actors. He has 70 films to his credit, commencing—after years of acting on the stage, where he honed his craft—with The Kentuckian and The Indian Fighter in 1955. He was at his beloved best playing comically persnickety characters, generally opposite Jack Lemmon, his longtime co-star.

Early in his career, Matthau displayed his versatility in roles as dissimilar as Mel Miller, the astutely perceptive writer who sees through the sham of cynically manipulative television personality Lonesome Rhodes, in A Face in the Crowd; Maxie Fields, the crime boss who menaces Elvis Presley, in King Creole; and Sheriff Johnson, the Western lawmaker who doggedly pursues Kirk Douglas, in Lonely Are the Brave. At this stage of his career, Matthau did some extraordinary work in otherwise slight, forgettable films. In the Audie Murphy Western Ride a Crooked Trail, he offers a spirited performance as a flamboyant, dispomanical judge.

Matthau did not transcend his status as all-purpose character actor until, in an inspired bit of casting, he and Jack Lemmon played opposite each other in The Fortune Cookie. Matthau won an Oscar for his role as a crooked lawyer who fast-talks television cameraman Lemmon into an insurance fraud. In their best pairings, Lemmon and Matthau are cast as opposite character types who are contrasted to comic effect. Perhaps their best film is The Odd Couple, with its humor deriving from the disparate characters of slob-supreme Oscar Madison (a role which Matthau originated on Broadway) and fastidious neatnik Felix Ungar (Lemmon). Over the course of three-plus decades, Matthau and Lemmon became as famous a team as Tracy and Hepburn and Hope and Crosby. A Matthau-Lemmon-like relationship is the basis of the comedy in The Sunshine Boys, in which Matthau and George Burns play two cantankerous former vaudevillians induced into reuniting for a television show.

Matthau was at his funniest playing the gloriously ornery slob whom you might find sitting across a card table, with cigar in one hand and beer can in the other as he hangs out with his cronies. The comedy is derived from his characters’ becoming involved in unlikely situations. In The Odd Couple, Matthau’s Oscar Madison becomes the roommate of Felix Ungar. In The Bad News Bears, Matthau’s Morris Buttermaker, another slob-supreme, is coerced into coaching a team of Little League misfits. In these films, he combines a sort of grinchy surliness with soul, wit, cunning, nonjudgmental forbearance, and obstinate persistence. Later on in his career, he caricatured this persnickety persona in Dennis the Menace, playing the forever-flustered Mr. Wilson.

He was also expert at playing drawing room comedy, cast in roles that in an earlier era would have been tailor-made for Spencer Tracy. In these films, Matthau effectively plays on the tensions between social coexistence and masculine awkwardness. Indeed, in First Monday in October, he and co-star Jill Clayburgh, playing Supreme Court justices with contrasting political philosophies, closely replicate a Tracy-Hepburn relationship. In Plaza Suite, he offers a tour de force playing three disparate roles, teamed with three different actresses: the jaded, adulterous husband of Maureen Stapleton; a Hollywood producer attempting to seduce ex-girlfriend Barbara Harris; and a father of the bride, married to Lee Grant. He also has played the older man who becomes a romantic object. In Hello, Dolly!, he is a brusque self-made man matrimonially targeted by Barbra Streisand. In Cactus Flower, he is a defensively overworked dentist targeted by Ingrid Bergman. In House Calls, he is a widowed doctor targeted by Glenda Jackson.

By the early 1970s, Matthau had become a top ten box-office star, quite an accomplishment for a craggy-faced actor with an unpolished gait and drooping posture, not to mention his trademark New York snarl. Lemmon, feeling that no film had really tapped Matthau’s depths, directed him in Kotch, a humanistic comedy in which he plays an irascible grandfather put to pasture by his family. He also has appeared in several straight dramatic roles, as cops (The Laughing Policeman, The Taking of Pelham One Two Three), a stunt pilot-turned-luckless bank robber (Charley Varrick), and an ex-CIA agent defying official embargoes on his memoirs (Hopscotch).

All-too-often, Matthau’s late-career roles were comedies in which he was prone to self-caricature. In addition to playing Mr. Wilson in Dennis the Menace, he re-teamed with Lemmon in Grumpy Old Men. In the latter, the twosome play endlessly quarreling long-time friends who are senior citizen variations of The Odd Couple’s Oscar and Felix. The film’s success led to their pairing in a ho-hum follow-up, Grumpier Old Men, the idiotic Out to Sea, and the stale and needless Odd Couple II. Then in 2000 Matthau—looking every one of his eighty years—was cast in Hanging Up as the feisty, inconsiderate father of the film’s three heroines.

Matthau’s better late-career parts were roles as sage (rather than self-absorbed) senior citizens. In I.Q., he brought warmth to his role as Albert Einstein, who plays matchmaker for his niece and a garage mechanic. In The Grass Harp, directed by his son Charles—who looks like a younger, leaner, less caggrier version of his dad—he is a wizened, widowed retired judge who idles away his hours sitting in his small town’s barbershop and drugstore. As the scenario progresses, he comes to share a deeply moving relationship with a gentle-souled maiden aunt. Here, Matthau displays his ability to play tender as well as persnickety, as his character talks of his late wife, and the meaning of love and how difficult and elusive it is to find. These sequences seem to be gifts that a devoted director-son would aspire to present to a beloved actor-father.

—Raymond Durgnat, updated by Rob Edelman

---

MAURA, Carmen

Nationality: Spanish. Born: Madrid, 1945; greatniece of the politician Antonio Maura. Education: Attended University of Madrid. Family: Married, 1965 (marriage annulled), two children. Career: From mid-1960s—a little girl in Madrid and on tour, becoming leading actress of the Maria Guerrero Theatre; presenter of TV show Esta noche, 1980s. Awards: National Prize of Cinematography, Spanish Ministry of Culture, 1988; Goya Award for Best Actress, and European Felix Award for Best Actress, for Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown, 1988; European Felix Award for Best Actress, 1990, and Goya Award for Best Lead Actress, 1991, for Ay, Carmela!. Agent: c/o Agence Myriam Bru, 80 avenue Charles de Gaulle, 92200 Neuilly sur Seine, France.
Films as Actress:

1977 Tigres de Papel (Paper Tigers) (Colomo) (as Carmen)
1980 Pepi, Luci, Bom y otras chicas del montón (Pepi, Luci, Bom, and Other Girls on the Heap) (Almodóvar) (as Pepi); Aquella Casa en las Afueras (That House in the Outskirts) (Martin)
1983 Entre Tinieblas (Into the Dark; The Sisters of Darkness) (Almodóvar) (as Sister); Sal Gordo (Garbage) (Colomo); Chi Trova, un Amico, Trova un Tesoro (Who Finds a Friend Finds Treasure) (Corbucci)
1984 ¿Qué he hecho yo para merecer esto? (What Have I Done to Deserve This?) (Almodóvar) (as Gloria)
1985 Extramuros (Picazo); Se infiel y no mires con quien (Trueba)
1986 Matador (Almodóvar) (as Julia); Tata Mia (Nanny Dear) (Borau) (as Elvira)
1987 La Ley del Deseo (Law of Desire) (Almodóvar) (as Tina Quintero)
1988 Mujeres al Borde de un Ataque de Nervios (Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown) (Almodóvar) (as Pepa Marcos); Baton Rouge (Moleon) (as Isabel Harris)
1990 ¡Ay, Carmela! (Saura) (title role)
1991 Como ser Mujer y no morir en el intento (How to Be a Woman and Not Die Trying) (Belen) (as Carmen); Chatarra (as Zabu); Extramuros (The Outskirts) (Picazo) (as Sister Ana)
1992 La Reina Anonima (The Anonymous Queen) (Suarez) (as Ana Luz)
1993 Entre el cielo y la tierra (In Heaven as on Earth; Sur la terre comme au ciel) (Hansel) (as María García); Louis, L’enfant du roi (Louis, the Child King) (Planchon) (as Queen Anne of Austria); Sombras en una Batalla (Shadows in a Conflict) (Mario Camus) (as Ana)
1994 Cómo Ser Infeliz y Disfrutarlo (How to Be Miserable and Enjoy It) (Urbizu) (as Carmen)
1995 El Rey de río (as Carmen Costa); Una Pareja de Tres (Verdaguer) (as Ana); El Paloma Cojo (De Arminan); Amores que matan (Chumilla); Le bonheur est dans le pré (Chatiliez)
1996 Tres Desejos (Luis Galvao Teles)
1997 Tortilla y cinema (Provost) (as Carmen Maura, movie star); Alliance cherche doigt (Mocky) (as Geneviève Lechat); Elles (Women) (Teles) (as Linda); Vivir después (Galettini)
1998 Alice et Martin (Téchiné) (as Jeanoine Sauvagnac); El Enthusiasmo (Enthusiasm) (Larrain) (as Maria); Superlove (Janer) (as Teresa); El Cometa (The Comet) (Buil, Sistach)

1999 Lisboa (Hernández) (as Berta)

2000 Le hareem de Mme. Osmane (The Harem of Madame Osmane) (Moknèche) (as Madame Osmane)

Publications

By MAURA: articles—

Interview, in Films and Filming (London), June 1989.

On MAURA: articles—

* * *

Simply put, Carmen Maura is Spain’s most popular screen actress, and one of her country’s most famous and acclaimed international movie stars. But her career remains inexorably linked to that of the director who cast her in some of her best roles, Pedro Almodóvar. If, cinematically speaking, Almodóvar is the prince of The Movement), a term referring to Spain’s burgeoning pop culture in the post-Franco era, then Maura is its undisputed queen.

Maura began her screen career a decade before she first was directed by Almodóvar. She had roles in various films that barely were seen outside Spain, made by such directors as Javier Aguirre, Pilar Muro, Miguel Angel Diaz, and Jaime Bayarri, who are familiar only to the most ardent aficionado of Spanish cinema. She also appeared on Spanish television, for a year even hosting a weekly talk show, Esta Noche.

Maura’s career was to be inexorably altered upon meeting Almodóvar, then an aspiring director, around the time that both were cast in a stage production of Sartre’s Dirty Hands. Because of her age—Maura was close to 30 at Franco’s demise, and 35 when she first worked with Almodóvar in Pepi, Luci, Bom, and Other Girls on the Heap—the director could not cast her as young, self-assured women reaching their prime in a censorship-free society. Her most typical characters came to maturity in a prefeminist, Franco-influenced era, a time in which passion—especially for women—was considered antisocial. The claws of fascism and chauvinism have entrapped them, causing them to be “on the verge of nervous breakdowns.” But it now is the time of La Movida. Franco is dead. It is the destiny of women to break free from bondage, to defiantly thrust off their shackles, to learn to live for themselves and become their own persons.

While the Maura/Almodóvar heroines struggle with liberation, to the point where they are driven to commit murder or change their sexual preference (or even their sex), they also are deliciously sexy and charmingly off-kilter. And Maura is a perfect presence in Almodóvar’s best black comedies, most especially Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown, in which she plays a desperate actress who responds in a most outrageous manner upon learning, by a message on her telephone answering machine, that she has been abandoned by her lover; and What Have I Done to Deserve This?, cast as an off-the-wall housewife who undergoes various trials and crises in a contemporary Madrid that is depicted as a repressive hell of pavement, bricks and stones, and prisonlike apartment buildings.

Sexuality, and a woman’s reaction to the sexual brutality of men at a time of sexual and political liberation, is at the core of most Maura/Almodóvar characters. In What Have I Done to Deserve This?, the frustrated heroine’s ultimate response to her boorish husband is a murderous whack with the handiest nearby object. In Pepi, Luci, Bom, and Other Girls on the Heap, her character becomes a lesbian after her husband rapes their neighbor. Finally, in Law of Desire, Maura offers a bravura performance as a free-spirited, man-hating transsexual, formerly named Tino but now called Tina.

None of these characters are staunchly political, nor are they dictated by doctrine. They simply respond to their life situations; their ideology manifests itself in their actions. These women have come to feel passion, the only emotion that can give meaning to their existence. And for them, passion quickly transforms itself into anger at the manner in which they have been treated by society, and by men. That anger eventually transforms itself into revenge, as they evolve from repressed, passive victims into autonomous individuals who think and act freely—and, often, outrageously.

While shooting Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown, Maura and Almodóvar had a falling out and did not speak for two years. His most recent film, the well-received The Flower of My Secret, features Almodóvar regulars Marisa Paredes, Rossy de Palma, and Chus Lampreave—but not Maura.

But this did not slow down Maura’s career, as she has been a star presence playing a wide spectrum of roles in her non-Almodóvar-directed films. They include Batón Rouge, in which she plays a wealthy, married middle-aged woman who has an affair with a duplicitous younger man; Extramuros, chronicling the secret endeavors of two nuns, who also are lovers, at the time of the Spanish Inquisition; Louis, L'enfant du roi, as Anne of Austria; Shadows in a Conflict, as a rural woman who becomes lovers with an ex-con; In Heaven as on Earth, playing a globe-trotting television journalist who becomes pregnant and whose unborn child speaks to her, informing her that all fetuses have decided not to be born; and especially ¡Ay, Carmela!, cast as a tempestuous, highly principled—and, ultimately, heroic—vaudevillean who gets lost behind enemy lines while entertaining the partisans during the Spanish Civil War.

—Rob Edelman

McCREAcTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

McCREA, Joel

featured film role in The Silver Horde; followed by a succession of starring roles; later worked with Paramount and Samuel Goldwyn; after 1946—played only in Western films; 1959–60—in TV series Wichita Town. Awards: Life Achievement Award, Los Angeles Film Critics, 1987. Died: In Woodland Hills, California, 20 October 1990.

Films as Actor:

1927 The Fair Co-Ed (Wood); The Enemy (Niblo)
1929 The Jazz Age (Shores) (as Tod Sayles); Single Standard (Robertson); Dynamite (DeMille) (as Marco); So This Is College (Wood)
1930 The Silver Horde (Archainbaud) (as Boyd Enerson); Lightnin’ (King) (as John Marvin)
1931 Once a Sinner (McClintic) (as Tommy Mason); Kept Husbands (Bacon) (as Dick Brunton); Born to Love (Stein) (as Barry Craig); The Common Law (Stein) (as John Neville, Jr.); Girls about Town (Cukor) (as Jim Baker)
1932 Business and Pleasure (Butler) (as Lawrence Ogle); The Last Squadron (Archainbaud) (as Red); Bird of Paradise (Vidor) (as Johnny Baker); The Most Dangerous Game (Fichel and Schoedsack) (as Bob Whitney); Rockabye (Cukor) (as Jacob Van Riker Pell); The Sport Parade (Murphy) (as Sandy Baker)
1933 The Silver Chord (Cromwell) (as David Phelps); Scarlet River (Brower) (as himself); Bed of Roses (La Cava) (as Dan Walters); One Man’s Journey (Robertson) (as Jimmy Watt); Chance at Heaven (Seiter) (as Blacky Gorman)
1934 Gambling Lady (Mayo) (as Garry Madison); Half a Sinner (Alias the Deacon) (Neumann) (as John Adams); The Richest Girl in the World (Seiter) (as Tony Travors)
1935 Private Worlds (La Cava) (as Dr. Alex MacGregor); Our Little Girl (Robertson) (as Dr. Donald Middleton); Woman Wanted (Manhattan Madness) (Seitz) (as Tony Baxter); Barbary Coast (Hawks) (as James Carmichael); Splendor (Nugent) (as Brighton Lorrimore)
1936 These Three (The Loudest Whisper) (Wyler) (as Dr. Joseph Cardin); Two in a Crowd (Green) (as Larry Stevens);
Adventure in Manhattan (Ludwig) (as George Melville); Come and Get It (Wyler and Hawks) (as Richard Glasgow); Banjo on My Knee (Cromwell) (as Ernie Holley)

1937 Interns Can’t Take Money (Santell) (as Dr. Jimmie Kildare); Woman Chases Man (The Woman’s Touch) (Blystone) (as Kenneth Nolan); Dead End (Wyler) (as Dave Connell); Wells Fargo (Lloyd) (as Ramsay MacKay)

1938 Three Blind Mice (Seiter) (as Van Smith); Youth Takes a Fling (Mayo) (as Joe Meadows)

1939 Union Pacific (DeMille) (as Jeff Butler); They Shall Have Music (Melody of Youth) (Mayo) (as Peter McCarthy); Espionage Agent (Bacon) (as Barry Corvall)

1940 He Married His Wife (Del Ruth) (as “Randy” Randall); The Primrose Path (La Cava) (as Ed Wallace); Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock) (as Johnny Jones)

1941 Reaching for the Sun (Wellman) (as Russell Elliott); Sullivan’s Travels (Sturges) (as John Sullivan)

1942 The Great Man’s Lady (Wellman) (as Ethan Hoyt); The Palm Beach Story (Sturges) (as Tom Jeffers)

1943 The More the Merrier (Stevens) (as Joe Carter)

1944 Buffalo Bill (Wellman) (as W. T. G. Morton)

1945 The Unseen (Allen) (as David Fielding)

1946 The Virginian (Gilmore) (as title role); The Great Moment (Sturges)

1947 Ramrod (De Toth) (as Dave Nash)

1948 Four Faces West (Green) (as Ross McEwan)

1949 South of St. Louis (Enright) (as Kip Davis); Colorado Territory (Walsh) (as Wes McQueen)

1950 Stars in My Crown (Tourneur) (as Josiah Doziah Grey); The Outriders (Rowland) (as Will Owens); Saddle Tramp (Fregonese) (as Chuck Conner); Frenchie (King) (as Tom Banning)

1951 Hollywood Story (Castle) (as himself); Cattle Drive (Neumann) (as Dan Matthews)

1952 The San Francisco Story (Parrish) (as Rick Nelson)

1953 Lone Hand (Sherman) (as Zachary Hallock); Shoot First (Rough Shoot) (as Lt. Colonel Robert Tanie)

1954 Border River (Sherman) (as Clete Mattson); Black Horse Canyon (Hibbs) (as Dee Rockwell)

1955 Stranger on Horseback (Tourneur) (as Rick Thorne); Witchita (Tourneur) (as Wyatt Earp)

1956 The First Texan (Haskins) (as Sam Houston)

1957 The Oklahoman (Lyons) (as Dr. John Brightnow); Trooper Hook (Warren) (as Sgt. Hook); Gunsight Ridge (Lyons) (as Mike Ryan); The Tall Stranger (Carr) (as Ned Bannoch)

1958 Cattle Empire (Warren) (as John Cord); Fort Massacre (Newman) (as Vinson)

1959 The Gunfight at Dodge City (Newman) (as Bat Masterson)

1962 Ride the High Country (Guns in the Afternoon) (Peckinpah) (as Steve Judd)

1970 Cry Blood, Apache (Starrett) (as Pitcairn)

1974 The Great American Cowboy (doc—for TV) (as narrator)

1977 Mustang Country (Champion) (as Dan)

1980 The Oklahoma (Lyon)

1990 Preston Sturges: The Rise and Fall of an American Dreamer (Bowser—TV doc)

Publications

By McCrea: article—

On McCrea: books—

Birchard, Robert S., King Cowboy: Tom Mix & the Movies, Burbank, 1993.

On McCrea: articles—

* * *

Of the great American male film stars, Joel McCrea is arguably the most underrated. In a career that lasted over 30 years, his characters ranged from tuxedoed escorts for the likes of Kay Francis and Constance Bennett in Girls about Town and Bed of Roses to adventurers in The Most Dangerous Game and Bird of Paradise, from Western “heroes” in Colorado Territory and Ramrod to comic leading men in The Palm Beach Story and The More the Merrier. But in spite of his extraordinary filmography, it is unlikely that McCrea will ever become a screen icon of the order of a John Wayne or a Gary Cooper, since, among film heroes, he is one of the least prone to self-mythologizing—with the possible exception of his role in Peckinpah’s Ride the High Country; and perhaps not coincidentally, he virtually retired after its completion. His search for adventure is seldom more than that and largely free of any sort of neurotic drives. It is this fundamental sanity of McCrea’s that probably appealed to Gregory La Cava and Preston Sturges, and which forms the emotional center in the extraordinary series of films that McCrea collaborated on with these two directors. The dramatic tone of the La Cava and Sturges films could range from melodrama (Private Worlds) to comedy (The Palm Beach Story), or an audacious mixture of the two (Primrose Path, Sullivan’s Travels), but in most of them McCrea remains an essentially passive male figure surrounded by chaos and insanity. The narratives tend to be controlled by either the female or the subsidiary male characters, and even when they are not, McCrea’s attempts at control (as in Sullivan’s Travels) generally result in total disorder.

While McCrea projects an obvious heterosexuality, it is so relaxed that, in fleeting moments, a film will eroticize him. He becomes the object of an aging widow’s affections in Sullivan’s Travels and she hopefully peers down at him from a second-story window as he chops wood for her, shirtless and sweating. His highly photogenic torso is also featured prominently in The More the Merrier as he takes a shower while beating his arms against his chest and barking like a seal, a primeval mating call that is answered in the film by a sexually unfulfilled Jean Arthur. And Bird of Paradise is one of the most erotic of the pre-Production Code films, in which McCrea and Dolores Del Rio set up an idyllic romance, largely unhampered by dress codes.

McCrea appeared in a few films after Ride the High Country but they are less than memorable and he seems to have done them more as a lark than anything else. Ultimately, these late films emerge as nothing more than postscripts in his career rather than presenting any sort of revisionist portraits of him. For those who traffic in puncturing the “myths” of popular culture, Joel McCrea was given precious little with which to work.

—Joe McElhaney

McDORMAND, Frances

Nationality: American. Born: Illinois, 23 June 1957. Education: Attended Bethany College, West Virginia, and Yale University School of Drama. Family: Married film director Joel Coen, 1984; one adopted son: Pedro McDormand Coen. Career: First acting job was with poet Derek Walcott in Trinidad in the West Indies; successful New York stage career including Tony nomination for the role of Stella in A Streetcar Named Desire, 1988. Awards: National Board of Review Award for Best Supporting Actress, for Mississippi Burning, 1988; Venice Film Festival Volpi Cup for Best Ensemble Cast, for Short Cuts, 1993; Lone Star Film and Television Award for Best Supporting Actress, for Lone Star, 1996; Academy Award for Best Actress, NBR Award for Best Actress, American Comedy Award, Funniest Actress in a Motion Picture (Leading Role), Broadcast Film Critics Association Award for Best Actress, Chicago Film Critics Association Award for Best Actress, Golden Satellite Award for Best Performance by an Actress in a Motion Picture—Drama, Independent Spirit Award for Best Female Lead, London Critics Circle ALFS Award for Actress of the Year, Screen Actors Guild SAG Award for Outstanding Performance by a Female Actor in a Leading Role, and Southeastern Film Critics Association Award for Best Actress, all for Fargo, 1997; Gotham Acting Award, 1998. Agent: William Morris Agency, 1325 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 1009-6026, USA.

Films as Actor:

1984 Blood Simple (Coen) (as Abby)
1985 Scandal Sheet (Rich—for TV); Crimewave (Broken hearts and Noses, The XYZ Murders) (Raimi) (as Nun)
1986 Vengeance: The Story of Tony Cimo (Vengeance) (Daniels—for TV) (as Brigitte)
1987 Raising Arizona (Coen) (as Dot)
1988 Mississippi Burning (Parker) (as Mrs. Pell)
1990 Miller’s Crossing (Coen) (as Secretary [uncredited]); Hidden Agenda (Loach) (as Ingrid); Chattahoochee (Jackson) (as Mae Foley); Darkman (Raimi) (as Julie Hastings)
1991 The Butcher’s Wife (Hughes) (as Grace)
1992 Passed Away (1992) (as Nora Scanlan); Crazy in Love (Coolidge—for TV) (Clare)
1993 Luck, Trust & Ketchup: Robert Altman In Carver Country (Dorr and Kaplan); Short Cuts (Altman) (as Betty Weathers)
1995 The Good Old Boys (Jones—for TV) (as Eve Calloway); Beyond Rangoon (Boorman) (as Andy)
1996 Plain Pleasures (Kalin); Hidden in America (Bell—for TV) (as Gus); Fargo (Coen) (as Marge Gunderson); Primal Fear (Hoblit) (as Dr. Molly Arrington); Lone Star (Sayles) (as Bunny); Palookaville (Taylor) (as June)
1997 Roadhouse (Berenson) (as Dr. Verstak)
1998 Johnny Skidmarks (Raffo) (as Alice); Madeline (Meyer) (as Miss Clavel); Talk of Angels (Hamm) (as Conlon)
2000 Almost Famous (Crowe) (as Elaine); Wonder Boys (Hanson) (as Chancellor Sara Gaskell); Scottsboro: An American Tragedy (Anker and Goodman—doc) (voice)

Publications:

By MCDORMAND: articles—

On MCDORMAND: articles—

McCarthy, Todd, review of Fargo in Premiere, March 1996.

* * *

An accomplished leading character actress who has worked mainly on “indie” projects, Frances McDormand has appeared in nearly thirty films in her seventeen-year film career. Her first step into movies came when actress Holly Hunter, a friend from Yale Drama School, suggested she audition for Blood Simple, the first feature produced and directed by Ethan and Joel Coen. When filming finished she and Joel Coen moved in together and later married, but McDormand has deliberately sought to work on films made by other directors, notably Robert Altman, Alan Parker, John Boorman, and Ken Loach. So determined has she been to work on her own terms that Coen is reputed not to have considered McDormand when he was casting Miller’s Crossing, even though she wanted a part. Despite her many successful appearances, McDormand has preferred to steer clear of high profile Hollywood projects, seeing herself as a working actor rather than a star.

Blood Simple is a dark variation on the story of The Postman Always Rings Twice, involving a bar owner who hires a hit man to kill... his adulterous wife. Taking the plot further in terms of vicious twists than any mere remake, it established Joel and Ethan Coen as exciting new filmmakers. McDormand’s role as the duplicitous wife may have overshadowed her early film career, however: the critical success of the film promised a rapid rise to stardom, but other offers were slow in coming. As a result she spent a few years working in theatre and on TV projects before accepting a small character part in the Coen brothers’ comedy, Raising Arizona. It was in Alan Parker’s Mississippi Burning in 1988 that McDormand made an impact on Hollywood, when her efforts to perfect the accent and mannerisms of the wife of a racist deputy sheriff paid off in the form of an Oscar nomination. Even then, however, she shied away from celebrity, taking parts in a series of small-scale movies such as Ken Loach’s Hidden Agenda, and the bizarre Darkman, by the director of the “Evil Dead” films, Sam Raimi. McDormand had more widespread success as Betty Weathers, an adulterous wife in Robert Altman’s Short Cuts, a series of connected tales adapted from stories by Raymond Carver.

It is in playing strangely offbeat individuals that McDormand excels, and she was able to show her abilities to the full in the character of Marge Gunderson in Fargo, her best-known role. Marge is a kind, understanding woman with an iron core; she embodies the untroubled, sensible toughness that the film lovingly mocks. Set in the snowfields of Minnesota, where its director Joel Coen grew up, Fargo has a complicated plot involving inept thugs hired to kidnap a car dealer’s wife. But its comic strength comes from the contrast between the increasing bloodiness of the thugs’ successive failures, and the steady politeness of the residents of the small Minnesotan town. Marge, the pregnant police chief, takes everything in her stride, from dealing with a series of killings to organizing her unworldly husband: it is exactly this calmness, combined with the bleak, snow-covered landscape, that unravels the evil plots and manic activity of the hit men.

Since the mid-1980s McDormand has had no shortage of work, often having to be persuaded to take parts she is offered. Yet despite winning an Oscar for her performance in Fargo, she remains outside of the Hollywood mainstream, and has no interest in being a star. Although she has not always chosen films wisely—The Butcher’s Wife and Paradise Road, among others, have vanished almost without trace—her own performances are of a consistently high standard. McDormand continues to work in theatre, playing Blanche in Robin Lefevre’s acclaimed 1998 production of Tennessee Williams’s A Streetcar Named Desire. With a reputation as a consummate professional actor, more interested in doing her best for the part she happens to be working on than looking to her career, she told Rebecca Ascher-Walsh in 1996 that being a movie star is “a different job, and it’s not the one I want.”

—Chris Routledge

McDOWALL, Roddy

Films as Actor:

1938 Murder in the Family (Banks) (as Peter Osborne); Scruffy (Faye); Hey! Hey! USA! (Varnel); I See Ice (Kimmins); Convict Ninety-Nine (Varnel); Yellow Sands (Brenon); John Halifax, Gentleman (George King); Sarah Siddons
1939 Just William (Cutts) (as Ginger); Dirt, Dead Men’s Shoes (Bentley); Poison Pen (Stein); Brother’s Keeper; Murder Will Out (Neill)
1940 The Outsider (Stein); Saloon Bar (Forde)
1941 You Will Remember (Raymond) (as young Bob Slater); This England (MacDonald); Man Hunt (Fritz Lang) (as Vaner, the cabin boy); How Green Was My Valley (Ford) (as Huw Morgan); Confirm or Deny (Mayo) (as Alan Perkins)
1942 Son of Fury (Cromwell) (as Benjamin as a boy); The Pied Piper (Pichel) (as Ronny Cavanaugh); On the Sunny Side (Schuster) (as Hugh Aylesworth)
1943 My Friend Flicka (Schuster) (as Ken McLaughlin); Lassie Come Home (Wilcox) (as Joe Carracloough)
1944 The Keys of the Kingdom (Stahl) (as Francis as a boy); The White Cliffs of Dover (Brown) (as John Ashwood II as a boy)
1945 Thunderhead—Son of Flicka (Louis King) (as Ken McLaughlin); Molly and Me (Seiler) (as Jimmy Graham); Hangover Square (Brahm) (as voice)
1946 Holiday in Mexico (Sidney) (as Stanley Owen)
1948 Green Grass of Wyoming (Louis King); Rocky (Barry); Macbeth (Welles) (as Malcolm); Kidnapped (Beaudine) (as David Balfour, + assoc pr)
1949 Tuna Clipper (Beaudine) (as Alec, + assoc pr); Black Midnight (Boetticher) (as Scott Jordan)
1950 Everybody’s Dancing (Berke); Killer Shark (Boetticher) (as Ted); Big Timber (Tall Timber) (Yarbrough) (as Jimmy)
1984  Zany Adventures of Robin Hood (Austin—for TV)
1985  Fright Night (Holland) (as Peter Vincent); Deceptions (Chaenault—for TV)
1986  GoBots: Battle of the Rock Lords (Patterson—animation) (as voice of Nuggit)
1987  Dead of Winter (Arthur Penn) (as Mr. Murray); Overboard (Garry Marshall) (as Andrew, the butler, + exec pr)
1988  Doin’ Time on Planet Earth (Charles Matthau) (as Minister)
1989  Fright Night Part 2 (Wallace) (as Peter Vincent); The Big Picture (Guest) (as the Judge); Cutting Class (Pallenberg) (as Dr. Dante)
1990  Shakma (Parks) (as Sorenson); The Color of Evening (Stafford); Carmilla (Beaumont)
1991  Going Under (Travis) (as secretary of defense/Mr. Neighbor); Earth Angel (Napolitano—for TV) (as Mr. Tatum); Deadly Game (Wright—for TV) (as Dr. Aaron/Osiris); Los Gusanos no Llevan Bufanda (The Naked Target) (Elorrieta) (as Ernest Peabody)
1992  The Magical World of Chuck Jones (Daugherty—doc) (as himself); Double Trouble (Paragon) (as Chamberlain)
1994  Hart to Hart: Home Is Where the Hart Is (Peter R. Hunt—for TV) (as Jeremy Sennet); Mirror Mirror 2: Raven Dance (Lifton); Heads (Shapiro—for TV) (as Fibris Drake); Angel 4: Undercover (Axmith) (as Geoffrey Kagen)
1995  The Alien Within (for TV) (as Dr. Henry Lazarus); Last Summer in the Hamptons (Jaglom) (as Thomas)
1996  It’s My Party (Kleiser) (as Damian Knowles); Dead Man’s Island (as Trevor Dunaway—for TV)
1997  The Second Jungle Book: Mowgli & Baloo (McLachlan) (as King Murphy)
1998  A Bug’s Life (Lasseter, Stanton) (as voice of Mr. Soil); Something to Believe In (Hough); Behind the Planet of the Apes (Burns, Comtois—for TV) (as Host/Narrator)
1999  Keepers of the Frame (McLaughlin) (as himself)

Film as Director:

1971  Tam Lin (The Devil’s Widow)

Publications

By McDOWALL: books—

Double Exposure (photographs), New York, 1966.
Double Exposure Take Two (photographs), New York, 1989.
By McDOWALL: articles—

On McDOWALL: articles—

* * *

Although Roddy McDowall has appeared in more than 100 motion pictures playing a variety of roles and characters (and has an equal number of television credits) he seems to have been plagued by typecasting during much of his career. He began acting in films at the age of nine in Great Britain. His family emigrated to America in 1940 when he was signed to a movie contract by Darryl F. Zanuck at Twentieth Century-Fox. His first major role in an American film was in John Ford’s How Green Was My Valley. Soon afterwards followed My Friend Flicka and Lassie Come Home. These films helped to establish McDowall as a major child star, generally playing the role of sensitive, winsome youngsters. He kept extremely busy making two or three films each year throughout the 1940s. Although McDowall was growing into an adult during this period, producers and audiences continued to think of him as a “child” star. His youthful appearance allowed him to play characters much younger than his actual years (the most outlandish situation coming in 1965 with Lord Love a Duck in which the 35-year-old McDowall played a high school teenager), but it limited the kinds of film roles he was being offered. His initial stardom in America had typecast him into one specific kind of role that he had now outgrown.

Many child stars fade away after this period in their careers, but McDowall was able to continue with his acting by moving to the New York stage. Live television was another medium that enabled McDowall to expand his acting talents with a variety of roles. While he has not been honored by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, McDowall has won both Emmy and Tony awards for his work in these other mediums.

In the early 1960s he cautiously ventured back into motion pictures as an “adult” actor, taking mainly character roles. In 1967 his career took a different turn with Planet of the Apes. McDowall, in Oscar-winning ape makeup, played Cornelius, a chimpanzee scientist sympathetic to human time traveler Charlton Heston in a future world where humans are subservient to apes. The film was extremely popular at the box office, and there were four sequels, plus a short-lived television series. Although he continued to take other film roles during this period, McDowall’s name became synonymous with the ape series. And while it is true that McDowall has appeared in several science-fiction films (such as The Legend of Hell House, Arnold, Embryo, Laserblast, and The Martian Chronicles), he also continued to play many varying roles in other films. A quick glance at his screen credits shows an amazing diversity of films, and McDowall should perhaps be considered more of a character actor than one who has been typecast in any one specific role.

—Linda J. Obalil, updated by Frank Uhle

McDOWELL, Malcolm

Films as Actor:

1967 Poor Cow (Loach) (as Billy, scene was deleted from released film)

1968 If . . . (Lindsay Anderson) (as Mick Travis)

1970 Figures in a Landscape (Losey) (as Ansell)

1971 The Raging Moon (Long Ago Tomorrow) (Forbes) (as Bruce Pritchard); A Clockwork Orange (Kubrick) (as Alex)

1973 O Lucky Man! (Lindsay Anderson) (as Mick Travis)

1975 Royal Flash (Lester) (as Capt. Harry Flashman)

1976 Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg) (as Max Gunter)

1977 Aces High (Gold) (as Gresham)

1978 She Fell among Thieves (Clive Donner—for TV); The Cat from Outer Space (Tokar) (as Mr. Stallwood)

1979 The Passage (J. Lee Thompson) (as Capt. Von Berkow); Time after Time (Meyer) (as H. G. Wells)

1980 Caligula (Brass—produced in 1977) (title role); Look Back in Anger (David Jones)

1981 Britannia Hospital (Lindsay Anderson) (as Mick Travis)

1982 The Compleat Beatles (Montgomery—doc) (as narrator); Cat People (Schrader) (as Paul Gallier); Hardcore (James Kenelm Clark)

1983 Get Crazy (Flip Out) (Arkush) (as Reggie Wanker); Blue Thunder (Badham) (as Col. Cochrane); Cross Creek (Ritt) (as Maxwell Perkins)
Malcolm McDowell in A Clockwork Orange

1985 Arthur the King (Merlin and the Sword) (Clive Donner—for TV, produced in 1983) (as Arthur); Gaia (Roger Young—for TV) (as the Englishman)

1986 Monte Carlo (Page—for TV) (as Christopher Quinn)

1988 Buy & Cell (Boris) (as Warden Tennant); Sunset (Edwards) (as Alfie Alperin)

1989 The Caller (Arthur Allan Seidelman—produced in 1987) (title role); Il Maestro (Hansel) (as Walter Goldberg); The Hateful Dead (Mortacci) (Citti)

1990 Disturbed (Charles Winkler) (as Dr. Derek Russell); Moon 44 (Intruder) (Emmerich) (as Major Lee); Class of 1999 (Mark Lester) (as Dr. Miles Langford); Jezabel’s Kiss (Keith) (as Ben Faberson); Snake Eyes (Reid) (as Major Lee); The Hateful Dead (Mortacci) (Citti)

1991 Tsareubitsu (Assassin of the Tsar) (Shakhnazarov) (as Timofeeff/Yurovsky); The Light in the Jungle (Schweitzer) (Hofmyer) (as Dr. Albert Schweitzer)

1992 The Player (Altman) (as himself)

1993 Chain of Desire (Lopez) (as Hubert Bailey); Bopha! (Freeman) (as De Villiers); Night Train to Venice (Quinterio) (as stranger); Vend d’est (East Wind) (Enrico) (as Gen. Smykowsky); The Second Greatest Story Ever Told (as Gabriel)

1994 Milk Money (Benjamin) (as Waltzer); Star Trek Generations (David Carson) (as Dr. Tolian Soran); Seasons of the Heart (Lee Grant—for TV) (as Alfred McGinnis); Fatal Pursuit (Louzil)

1995 Dangerous Indiscretion (as Roger Everett); Tank Girl (Talalay) (as Kesslee); Exquisite Tenderness (Schenkel) (as Dr. Roger Stein); The Man Who Wouldn’t Die (for TV) (as Bernard Drake); Kids of the Round Table (Tinnell) (as Merlin); Fist of the North Star (Randel)

1996 The Little Riders (Connor) (as Capt. Kesslee); Superman: The Last Son of Krypton (Beda, Jeralds—for TV) (as voice of John Corbin); Captain Simian & The Space Monkeys (Rader, Schwartz—series for TV) (as voice of Rhesus 2); Pearl (Burrows, Chakos—series for TV) (as Professor Stephen Pynchon); Wing Commander Academy (as voice of Commodore Geoffrey Tolwyn—series for TV)

1997 Star Trek: Generations (Flinch, Louie) (Dr. Tolian Soran); 2103: The Deadly Wake (Jackson) (as Captain Sean Murdoch); Lexx: The Dark Zone (Donovan, Matsutani—mini for TV) (as Yottskry); Hugo Pool (Robert Downey Jr.) (as Henry Dugay); Mr. Magoo (Tong) (as Austin Cloquet)

1998 Nazis: The Occult Conspiracy (Atkinson, Barron) (as Narrator); The Gardener (Silent Screams) (Hickox) (as Ben); *The McGREGOR, Ewan

First 9 ½ Weeks (Wright) (as Francois Dubois); Beings (Matthews) (as Ian); Fantasy Island (Adler, Cragg—series for TV) (as Mr. Roarke)

1999 Y2K (Pepin) (as Seward); Southern Cross (Becket) (as Felipe Solano); My Life So Far (Hudson) (as Morris Macintosh); Love Lies Bleeding (Tannen); Can of Worms (Schneider) (as Barnabas)

2000 The David Cassidy Story (Bender) (as Jack Cassidy); St. Patrick: The Irish Legend (Robert Hughes) (as Quentin)

Publications

By McDOWELL: articles—

“O Lucky Man!,” interview in Take One (Montreal), September 1973.

Interview in Photoplay (London), February 1980.

L’Ecran fantastique (Paris), July/August 1983.

Interview with Kitty Bowe Hearty, in Premiere (New York), April 1995.

On McDOWELL: articles—

Photoplay (London), December 1981.

Malcolm McDowell began his film career in the late 1960s and early 1970s in highly regarded and frequently during British films. Later following in the tradition of the “‘working actor,’” McDowell moved often and without apology from highly praised work to less artistically justifiable appearances in mediocre productions. His major collaborative relationship has been with the late director Lindsay Anderson, who discovered him and gave him the role of Mick Travis in If . . . ; a metaphorical examination of conformity and rebellion among young gentlemen in boarding school. McDowell went on to work with Anderson (playing a completely dissimilar Mick Travis) in the satire O Lucky Man!, the script of which was based in part on the actor’s own experiences as a coffee salesman. Subsequently McDowell made his New York stage debut in Anderson’s off-Broadway revival of Look Back in Anger. The two collaborated a final time in 1981 with Britannia Hospital, where—as again as a “‘Mick Travis’”—McDowell had one of the most spectacularly violent and funny death scenes in cinema.

The role McDowell has been most associated with, however, is the raping, murderous gang-leader Alex in Stanley Kubrick’s A Clockwork Orange. Now considered a key performance of seventies cinema, McDowell’s Alex is a character both winsome and appalling, pathetic and high-spirited. Despite the fact that this performance was followed by one as a suddenly sweet Mick in O Lucky Man!, McDowell would never completely avoid the typecasting set in place by his bloodthirsty characters in If . . . and A Clockwork Orange. This reputation for villainy would be cemented by McDowell’s turn as the eponymous Roman Emperor in the ballyhooed Caligula, a pornographic cult film financed by Penthouse magazine.

Although he maintains a reputation for on-screen carnage and sexually explicit material, McDowell has played other types of characters with alacrity. McDowell starred in Long Ago Tomorrow as a gentle paraplegic and had other notable roles during the 1970s in Royal Flash, Voyage of the Damned, and Aces High, in which the actor essayed the role of a disillusioned World War I officer in the Royal Flying Corps.

During the 1980s and 1990s McDowell worked on both sides of the Atlantic, but to sporadic and fading accolades. His last memorable roles were once more at polar extremes. He played H. G. Wells opposite his future wife Mary Steenburgen in the fantasy Time after Time. Here again, McDowell was a master of conflicting qualities; his Wells was both innocent and shrewdly brilliant as he attempted to capture Jack the Ripper in modern day San Francisco. Also arresting was his role as Nastassja Kinski’s disturbed brother in Paul Schrader’s Cat People, where incest was a key motivation behind his character. Unfortunately, McDowell’s luck seemed to run out in the mid-eighties. Blue Thunder was a financial success but gave McDowell only a conventional villain’s role. His other parts in that period were usually as supporting characters or in uninteresting films, many made for television.

McDowell seemed the perfect choice to “‘kill off’” Captain James T. Kirk in Star Trek Generations, but his Soran in that film was a stock character with only McDowell’s piercing eyes to distinguish him in an overcrowded cast. Virtually all of McDowell’s roles since Cat People hint at what he could contribute to the cinema if given an opportunity. His Mick Jagger parody in Get Crazy would have seemed hilarious if given better lines, while the awful Night Train to Venice suggests how good he might have been as Hannibal Lecter in The Silence of the Lambs.

—Daniel Humphrey
Ewan McGregor (right) with Rhys Meyers in Velvet Goldmine

on American television series ER, 1994, for which he was nominated for an Emmy Award. Awards: London Critics Circle ALFS Award for British Actor of the Year, for Trainspotting, 1996. Agent: John Altaras Associates, 13 Shorts Gardens, London WC2H 9AT, United Kingdom.

Films as Actor:

1993 Family Style (for TV) (as Jimmy)
1994 Being Human (Forsyth) (as Alvarez); Shallow Grave (Boyle) (as Alex Law); Doggin' Around (Davis—for TV) (as Tom Clayton)
1995 Blue Juice (Prechezer) (as Dean Raymond)
1996 Trainspotting (Boyle) (as Mark ‘‘Rent-boy’’ Renton); Emma (McGrath) (as Frank Churchill); The Pillow Book (Greenaway) (as Jerome); Brassed Off (Herman) (as Andy)
1997 The Serpent’s Kiss (Le Baiser du Serpent) (Rousellot) (as Meneer Chrome); A Life Less Ordinary (Boyle) (as Robert)
1998 Desserts (Stark) (as Stroller); Nightwatch (Borndal) (as Martin Bells); Velvet Goldmine (Haynes) (as Curt Wild); Little Voice (Herman) (as Billy)
1999 Nora (Murphy) (as James Joyce); Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace (Lucas) (as Obi-Wan Kenobi); Rogue Trader (Dearden) (as Nick Leeson); Eye of the Beholder (Elliott) (as The Eye)
2000 Killing Priscilla (Gardiner—doc) (as himself)
2002 Star Wars: Episode II (Lucas) (as Obi-Wan Kenobi)

Publications:

By MCGREGOR: articles—

Interview with John Naughton, in Empire (London), March 1996.
Interview with Dean Evans and Darren Vaughn, in Total Film (London), November 1997.
Interview with Tom Roston, in Premiere (New York), May 1999.
Interview with Ian Nathan, in Empire (London), August 1999.

On MCGREGOR: books—

Svetkey, Ben, “‘It Had to be Ewan,’” in Entertainment Weekly (New York), 13 June 1997.

---

Now famous for playing the young Obi-Wan Kenobi in Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace, Ewan McGregor made his name in low-budget British films like Shallow Grave and Trainspotting. Although he has appeared in an astonishing variety of films in his short career, his trademark characters are men whose ill-advised bravado takes them out of their depth. But whatever role he is playing, McGregor exudes an enthusiasm for acting and filmmaking that is almost palpable. His versatility means he has been equally successful in small-scale dramas such as Little Voice, art-house films like The Pillow Book, and blockbusters like Star Wars. McGregor first became widely known in the United Kingdom with the menacing comic thriller Shallow Grave, funded by Channel Four, a British television company with a reputation for producing unusual films which often combine dark humour with acute observation. Shallow Grave is a cautionary tale of three Edinburgh flat sharers who find a large amount of money after the death of their mysterious new tenant. The plot centres on the gruesome disposal of the body in a shallow grave, and the friends’ subsequent involvement with local gangsters as they try to keep the money for themselves and double-cross each other.

McGregor’s role as the most greedy and manipulative of the flatmates established him as a major talent in only his third feature, but it was as heroin addict Mark “Rent-boy” Renton in the hit Trainspotting that he emerged as a star in the making. The film itself received mixed reviews from the critics, but its dark humour suited McGregor in the lead role. Supposedly an ironic treatment of the image of heroin and other illegal drugs, McGregor’s high profile among his young audience led to worries that the film contributed to the popularity of a look that, in the 1990s, became known as ‘heroin chic.’

The notoriety of Trainspotting might have damaged the career of a less versatile actor than McGregor, whose next project, playing Frank Churchill in an adaptation of Jane Austen’s novel Emma, introduced him to an entirely new audience, and revealed an English accent comparable with Gwyneth Paltrow’s in the title role. Peter Greenaway’s beautifully photographed The Pillow Book saw McGregor return to controversy playing Jerome, the bisexual lover of a Japanese woman seeking revenge against her father’s publisher, and determined to write a “pillow book” of her own through having her lovers paint calligraphic script on her body. Because of its slow pace, explicit sex scenes, and stylized imagery the film provoked enthusiasm and derision in equal measures, but McGregor’s fourth film of 1996, the sentimental romantic comedy Brassed Off returned him to mainstream cinema audiences.

McGregor’s break into American cinema came with A Life Less Ordinary, Directed by Danny Boyle, the British director responsible for Trainspotting, McGregor starred with Cameron Diaz in a romantic comedy involving a fake kidnap plot that saw him unable to curb Diaz’s little rich girl antics despite his being threatened and eventually shot. He has continued to work in challenging and smaller scale film roles, playing the writer James Joyce in Nora, for example, but in Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace, McGregor became a world wide celebrity.

While his film career has gathered momentum, McGregor has also been successful in television, in Dennis Potter’s dramas Karaoke (1996) and Lipstick On Your Collar (1993), and making an Emmy nominated guest appearance as a convenience store gunman in ER in 1997. He made his debut as a director in 1999 with a segment of the TV film Tube Tales entitled “Bone.” The diversity of McGregor’s career suggests an enthusiasm for the work rather than an interest in any particular type of film. He continues to specialize in likeable rogues, but while his career has not suffered from his making controversial choices in film roles, it seems certain to be affected by his involvement in the Star Wars saga. Should he decide to go that way, one wonders how he will manage the difficult transition from character actor to movie star.

—Chris Routledge

McGUIRE, Dorothy

Born: Dorothy Hackett McGuire in Omaha, Nebraska, 14 June 1918.
On MCGUIRE: books—

* * *

One of Hollywood’s most versatile leading ladies, Dorothy McGuire combined beauty, talent, and temerity to become a star during the twilight of the studio era. Graced with the easy good looks of the girl-next-door, McGuire was nonetheless willing to play against type, portraying real people with real problems in movies that often provided social commentary. As she matured into a beautiful woman with an inner strength that shone through on screen, and she made a seemingly effortless transition from leading lady to respected character actress.

Despite being nominated for an Academy Award, appearing in such screen classics as Gentleman’s Agreement and Friendly Persuasion, and starring opposite such household names as Gregory Peck, Robert Mitchum, and Gary Cooper, Dorothy McGuire’s fame was a steady, but quiet one. In 1931, she made her professional theatrical debut at age 13 opposite Henry Fonda at the Omaha Playhouse. But it would be another seven years of junior college and summer stock productions before McGuire reached Broadway, where she starred as Emily in Thornton Wilder’s Pulitzer Prize-winning play, Our Town. McGuire’s big break came when she won the starring role in Claudia, a part which allowed the young actress to capitalize on both her sex appeal and her toughness of character, to demonstrate her ability to play both drama and comedy, and to express juvenile innocence and nascent maturity.

McGuire’s success as Claudia attracted the notice of Hollywood. Film mogul David O. Selznick signed the 25-year-old actress to a personal contract and brought her to Hollywood. But even as McGuire prepared to recreate the role of Claudia on film, Selznick... engaged in a typical Hollywood ruse. In an attempt to duplicate the press frenzy over the casting of Scarlett O’Hara in Gone with the Wind, Selznick announced that he had no intention of casting McGuire, and proceeded to test many well-known actresses for the role. In the end, McGuire played the part opposite Robert Young. Directed by veteran Edmund Goulding, the 1943 film was well received and McGuire was poised for stardom. But her tenure on Hollywood’s A-list would be filled with diverse and often difficult roles in challenging pictures, as McGuire was often cast against type.

In 1945, McGuire appeared in acclaimed New York director Elia Kazan’s first film, A Tree Grows in Brooklyn. Kazan’s gritty approach brought a raw power and heightened honesty to filmmaking in this rare Hollywood portrayal of the working class. Some critics felt that the pretty McGuire was miscast as the Irish Catholic tenement mother, but Hollywood continued to give the young actress demanding roles in their A-list productions.

During the latter half of the decade, McGuire played a very plain spinster who falls in love with a disfigured Robert Young in The Enchanted Cottage, a deaf-mute servant pursued by a serial killer in The Spiral Staircase, and a troubled war widow in Till the End of Time. But her most famous performance came in her second film for Elia Kazan, Gentleman’s Agreement. The Oscar-winning picture was Hollywood’s groundbreaking attempt to deal with anti-Semitism in America, and McGuire played the fiancé of a magazine writer, played by Gregory Peck, who decides to write an exposé on anti-Semitism by pretending to be Jewish. Her nuanced performance of a society woman caught between her love of Peck and her fear of losing her social standing by marrying a Jew earned McGuire an Oscar nomination for Best Actress.

McGuire’s association with difficult roles in risk-taking films made her popular but never quite as famous as other actresses of her era, who were cast in more glamorous roles. Nonetheless, Dorothy McGuire became one of Hollywood’s top stars during the late 1940s and early 1950s, though she remained a modest figure who generally avoided the glamour that most Hollywood stars adored. McGuire also remained true to her theatrical roots. In 1949 she and fellow artists Gregory Peck and Mel Ferrer enlisted David O. Selznick’s financial backing to start a repertory theatre company in Peck’s hometown of La Jolla.

During the early 1950s McGuire worked consistently, infusing light comedy into her repertoire with Mister 880 while continuing to take on the challenging roles of a wife whose husband is fighting in the Korean War in I Want You, and a woman whose criminal husband comes back to seek his revenge in Make Haste to Live. In the mid-1950s, as McGuire reached her late thirties—an age when many Hollywood leading ladies found themselves no longer in demand—her popularity increased, undoubtedly due to the fact that she had been willing to play against her looks at the height of her beauty. In 1954, McGuire played a secretary who finds romance in Jean Negulesco’s romance, Three Coins in the Fountain; in 1956 she starred as the devout Quaker wife in William Wyler’s Friendly Persuasion, both screen classics.

In the late 1950s and early 1960s, McGuire’s ease in taking on character roles enabled her to make a graceful transition into more mature roles, and she became the perennial understanding mother in such family favorites as Old Yeller and Swiss Family Robinson. As her film career began to wane in the 1970s, McGuire made the transition into television, appearing in the popular miniseries Rich Man, Poor Man, the critically acclaimed special Amos, and the top-rate series Saint Elsewhere. She also returned to the theatre, appearing on Broadway in the highly praised 1976 Circle in the Square production of Night of the Iguana, and on tour in the 1980s with I Never Sang for My Father. In the early 1990s, Dorothy McGuire suffered a hip injury, which finally ended her magnificent sixty-year acting career.

—Victoria Price

McKELLEN, Ian

Nationality: British. Born: Burnley, England, 25 May 1939; grew up in Wigan. Education: B.A. in English, St. Catharine’s College, Cambridge, 1961. Career: Began acting in school plays; after graduation began acting professionally in London; Cameron Mackintosh Professor of Contemporary Theatre, Oxford, 1990; Advisor, Drama and Dance Panel for the British Council, 1991–96; Board of the Royal National Theatre Company, 1998. Awards: Clarence Derwent Award, for A Scent of Flowers, 1964; Plays and Players’ Most Promising Actor, 1966; New York Drama Desk Award, for King Lear and The Wood Demon, 1974; Plays and Players’ London Theatre Critics’ Award for Best Actor, for Macbeth, 1976; Society of West End Theatres (SWET) Award for Comedy Performance of the Year, for The Alchemist, 1977; Society of West End Theatres (SWET) Award for Best Actor of the Year, for Pillars of the Community, 1978; Society of West End Theatres (SWET) Award for Best Actor of the Year (Bent), 1979; Commander of the British Empire, 1979; New York Drama Desk Award, for Amadeus, 1980; New York Drama

---

Ian McKellan (left) with Brendan Fraser in Gods and Monsters
League Delia Austrian Medal for Most Distinguished Performance by an Actor or Actress on the Broadway Stage, for Amadeus, 1980; Outer Critics’ Circle Award, for Amadeus, 1980; Tony Award for Best Actor, for Amadeus, 1980; Royal Television Society Performer of the Year, for Walter and June, 1982; New York Drama Desk Award for Shakespeare acting, 1983; Plays and Players’ Award, for Shakespeare acting, 1983; Society of West End Theatres (SWET) Award for Best Actor in a Revival, for Wild Honey, 1984; Peabody Award for Broadcasting, for Shakespeare Birthday Programme, 1984; Knight- hood of the British Empire for services to the performing arts, 1991; Society of West End Theatres (SWET) Award for Best Actor of the Year, for Richard III, 1992; Cable Ace Best Supporting Actor, for And The Band Played On, 1993; Golden Globe Award Best Supporting Actor, for Rasputin, 1996; Felix Award, for European Actor of the Year, for Richard III, 1996; Golden Quill—the Sir John Gielgud Award for Excellence in the Dramatic Arts, Shakespeare Guild, 1996; Audie Award for Best Solo Performance 1997, for The Odyssey, 1997; Lifetime Achievement Ovation Award, Theatre L.A., 1998; The Independent Spirit Award, National Board of Review, Broadcast Film Critics Association, British Independent Film Awards, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, Chicago Film Critics Association, Florida Film Critics Circle, San Diego Film Critics Society, Toronto Film Critics Association, International Film Festival San Sebastian, The Saturn Award, The Chlotrudis Award, all for Best Actor, for Gods and Monsters, 1998 and 1999.

Films as Actor:

1969  A Touch of Love (The Millstone; Thank You All Very Much) (Hussein) (as George Matthews); Alfred the Great (Donner) (as Roger)
1969  The Promise (Hayes) (as Leonidik)
1981  Priest of Love (Miles) (as D. H. Lawrence)
1983  The Keep (Mann) (as Dr. Theodore Cuza)
1985  Zina (McMullen) (as Professor Kronfeld); Plenty (Schepisi) (as Sir Andrew Charleson); Walter and June (Loving Walter) (Fears) (as Walter)
1989  Scandal (Caton-Jones) (as John Profumo, M.P.)
1993  The Ballad of Little Jo (Greenwald) (as Percy Corcoran); Last Action Hero (McTiernan) (as Death); Six Degrees of Separation (Schepisi) (as Geoffrey); And the Band Played On (Spottiswoode) (as Bill Kraus)
1994  I’ll Do Anything (James L. Brooks) (as John Earl McAlpine); To Die For (Litten) (Quilt Documentary Narrator); The Shadow (Mucalhy) (as Dr. Reinhardt Lane)
1995  Cold Comfort Farm (Schlesinger) (as Amos Starkadder); Restoration (Hoffman) (as Will Gates); Thin Ice (Cunningham-Reid) (as Himself); Jack and Sarah (Sullivan) (as William); Richard III (Loncraine) (as Richard III) (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1997  Surviving Friendly Fire (Nelson) (as Narrator); BENT (Matthew) (as Uncle Freddie); Swept for the Sea (Kidron) (as Dr. James Kennedy)
1998  Apt Pupil (Singer) (as Kurt Dussander); Gods and Monsters (Condon) (as James Whale)
2000  X-Men (Singer) (as Erik Magnus Lehnsherr/Magento)

Publications

On MCKELLEN: articles—

During the 1990s, Sir Ian McKellen emerged as Britain’s preeminent film actor on the strength of his electrifying performances in such films as Richard III and Gods and Monsters. Demonstrating extraordinary versatility—playing classics and contemporary roles, from a fascist dictator to a gay Hollywood director—McKellen raised his long and highly acclaimed acting career to new heights, culminating in a 1999 Oscar nomination for Best Actor.

In his native country, McKellen has long been recognized as one of England’s greatest actors. His mastery of Shakespeare has made him the Bard’s greatest late twentieth-century interpreter. He has played most of the great Shakespearean roles, often in productions set in modern dress. But his film career was slow to take off.

The 27-year-old McKellen made his screen debut in 1966 playing a soldier in the unfinished and unreleased Mirisch Brothers World War I epic, The Bells of Hell Go Ting-A-Ling-A-Ling*, starring Gregory Peck. It would be another two years before McKellen found his way into a film that made it to the theatres. In 1968, McKellen played the far-clad, Viking-fighting Roger the Bandit in Clive Donner’s Alfred the Great, starring David Hemmings and Michael York. That same year, McKellen played a more contemporary role, the small but pivotal part of a gay television host in A Touch of Love, a film about single motherhood in the 1960s. It would be another ten years before the actor was cast in a film role. In the interim, McKellen cemented his reputation on the stage, earning a CBE from Queen Elizabeth for his contributions to the theatre.

In 1979, Ian McKellen finally found a role worthy of his talent—playing D.H. Lawrence in Priest of Love, with Janet Suzman, Ava Gardner, John Gielgud, and Sarah Miles. Looking uncannily like the real Lawrence, McKellen’s performance as the celebratedly sexual author centered on his tempestuous relationship with his wife and his censors. He followed up his film performance with a Tony Award-winning portrayal of Salieri in Broadway’s Amadeus in 1981.

During the 1980s, McKellen appeared in four films, only two of which received any kind of significant theatrical release. In David Hare’s Plenty (1986), McKellen had a supporting role as a British Foreign Service officer, Sir Andrew Charle son. But it was in Scandal that McKellen showed off his range by played John Profumo, M.P. Having just come out as a gay man, McKellen eagerly tackled one of history’s most notorious heterosexuals in an effort to prove that gay actors can convincingly play straight roles.

In 1991, Queen Elizabeth II knighted Ian McKellen—the first openly gay actor to be so honored. Following his knighthood, McKellen’s film career skyrocketed. During the 1990s, he made seventeen films, almost doubling his entire film output of the previous three decades. The highlights from the decade were undeniably Richard III and Gods and Monsters, but McKellen also turned in dazzling performances in a wide range of films such as Swept from the Sea, Restoration, And the Band Played On, and Six Degrees of Separation. In John Schlesinger’s Cold Comfort Farm, McKellen... played the depressive head of the Snakeadder clan turned fire-and-brimstone traveling preacher with a subtle lampooning wit and great good gusto. McKellen had starred as the Max in two productions of Bent, including the world premiere. For Sean Mathias’s film version, McKellen played the supporting role Max’s Uncle Freddie. In the Emmy Award-winning HBO miniseries, Rasputin, McKellen’s nuanced portrayal of the doomed and desperate, yet tyrannical Tsar Nicholas II earned the actor a Golden Globe and an Emmy nomination for Best Supporting Actor.

But it was McKellen’s sizzling performance as Richard III in the 1996 film that finally brought the actor’s world-class Shakespearean talent to the big screen. Based on McKellen’s stage production, Richard III was set in the 1930s, with the famed hunchback monarch transformed into a charismatic yet malcontent fascist dictator whose global ambitions are supported by his black-shirted thugs.

The successful Richard III seemed to open Hollywood’s eyes to the extraordinary possibilities of Ian McKellen, film star, and the 59-year-old actor was cast as Nazi war criminal-in-hiding, Kurt Dussander, in A Girl in Every Port (1957) and he portrayed the aldricic yet unsentimentally portrayed by McKellen, who fascination with his handsome and very heterosexual gardener (Brendan Fraser) is movingly yet unsentimentally portrayed by McKellen, who earned a Best Actor nomination from the Motion Picture Academy.

Now in his sixties, McKellen continues to be a Hollywood darling, slated to star as Gandalf in The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring and he portrayed the Lord of the Rings The Beloved Brute (Blackton) (as Charles Hinges)

---

McLAGLEN, Victor

Nationality: British. Born: Tunbridge Wells, Kent, England, 10 December 1886. Military Service: Boy soldier during the Boer War; served as Captain in Irish Fusiliers during World War I: Provost Marshal of Bagdad. Family: Married 1) Mary Lamont, 1919, son: the director Andrew McLagen, daughter: Sheila; 2) Suzanna Maria Brueggemann, 1943. Career: Prizefighter in Canada, and vaudeville and circus performer; 1920—film debut in The Call of the Road; 1924—U.S. film debut in The Beloved Brute; 1925—appeared in the first of many films of the director John Ford, The Fighting Heart. Awards: Best Actor Academy Award for The Informer, 1935. Died: 7 November 1959.

Films as Actor:

1920 The Call of the Road (Coleby)
1921 The Sport of Kings (Rooney); Carnival (Knobes) (as Baron); Corinthian Jack (Rowden)
1922 The Glorious Adventure (Blackton) (as Bulfinch); A Romance of Old Bagdad (Foss)
1923 In the Blood (West) (as Tony Crabtree); The Romany (Thornton); M’Lord of the White Road (Rooney)
1924 The Beloved Brute (Blackton) (as Charles Hinges)
1925 The Unholy Three (Browning) (as Hercules); The Gay Corinthian (Rooney); Winds of Chance (Lloyd) (as Poleon Doret); The Fighting Heart (Ford) (as Soapy Williams)
1926 The Isle of Retribution (Hogan) (as Domsdorf); Men of Steel (Archainbald) (as Pete Masarick); Beau Geste (Brenon) (as Hank); What Price Glory (Walsh) (as Capt. Flagg)
1927 Loves of Carmen (Walsh) (as Escamilo)
1928 A Girl in Every Port (Hanks) (as Spike Madden); Mother Machree (Ford) (as Terrence O’Dowd); Hangman’s House (Ford) (as Citizen Hogan); The River Pirate (Howard) (as Sailor Fritz)
1931 Captain Lash (Blystone) (role); Strong Boy (Ford) (role); The Black Watch (Ford) (as Capt. Donald Gordon King); The Cock-Eyed World (Walsh) (as Sgt. Flagg); Hot for Paris (Walsh) (as John Patrick Duke)
1932 On the Level (Cummings) (as Biff Williams); A Devil with Women (Cummings) (as Jerry Maxton); Three Rogues (von Sternberg); Women of All Nations (Walsh); Annabelle’s Affairs (Werker); Wicked (Dwan)
1938 The Gay Caballero (Werker); While Paris Sleeps (Dwan); Devil’s Lottery (Taylor); Guilty as Charged (Kenton); Rackety Rax (Werker)
1939 Hot Pepper (Blystone); Laughing at Life (Beebe); Dick Turpin (Stafford and Hanbury) (title role)
1940 No More Women (Rogel); The Last Patrol (Ford); The Wharf Angel (Menzies and Sommes); Murder at the Vanities (Leisen); The Captain Hates the Sea (Milestone)
1941 Under Pressure (Walsh); The Great Hotel Murder (Forde); The Informer (Ford) (as Gypo Nolan)
1946 Professional Soldier (Garrett); Klondike Annie (Walsh); Under Two Flags (Lloyd); The Magnificent Brute (Blystone)
1951 Nancy Steele Is Missing (Marshall); Sea Devils (Stoloff); This Is My Affair (Seiter); Woo Willie Winkie (Ford); Battle of Broadway (Marshall)
1952 The Devil’s Party (McCrey); We’re Going to Be Rich (Banks)
1953 Pacific Liner (Landers); Gunga Din (Stevens); Let Freedom Ring (Conway); Ex-Champ (Rosen); Captain Fury (Rooch); Full Confession (Farrow); Rio (Brahm); The Big Guy (Lubin)
1954 South of Pago-Pago (Green); Diamond Frontier (Schuster)
1955 Broadway Limited (Douglas)
1956 Call Out the Marines (Ryan and Hamilton); Powder Town (Lee)
1957 China Girl (Hathaway)
1958 Tampico (Mendes); Roger Touhy—Gangster (Florey); The Princess and the Pirate (Butler)
1959 Rough, Tough, and Ready (Lloyd)
1960 Whistle Stop (Moguy)
1961 The Foxes of Harrow (Stahl); Calendar Girl (Dwan)
1962 Fort Apache (Ford)
1963 She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (Ford) (as Sgt. Quincannon)
1964 Rio Grande (Ford)
1965 The Quiet Man (Ford) (as “Red” Will Danaher)
1966 Fair Wind to Java (Kane)
1967 Prince Valiant (Hathaway); Trouble in the Glen (Wilcox) (as Parlan)
1968 Many Rivers to Cross (Rowland); City of Shadows (Witney); Lady Godiva (Brahm); Bengazi (Brahm)
1969 Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as Helmsman)
1970 The Abductors (Andrew McLagen)
1971 Sea Fury (Endfield) (as Capt. Bellew)
There is something essentially mindless in the expressionistic style of acting; in it actors are just short of being automatons who express puppet-like the artistic vision of the auteur. In this respect, Victor McLaglen is the perfect lead for the two American filmic masterpieces in this style—John Ford’s The Lost Patrol and The Informer. The frenetic vision of a group of soldiers lost in a patrol in the Mesopotamian desert finds central focus in the sergeant played by McLaglen. His exaggerated gestures seem appropriate when viewed against the otherworldly backdrop of sand dunes and tortuous palms. This realm of heat-induced hallucinations and even insanity provides an excuse for an actor whose body and voice function best at their extremes. One of the reasons that The Informer has fallen out of the high critical esteem in which it was once held is that its pervasive expressionism, above all in McLaglen’s Academy-Award-winning performance, has been overborne by the movement to film outside the studio and the corresponding turn to a self-conscious, indeed intellectual approach inherent in the Stanislavsky method which, since the 1940s and 1950s has come to dominate English-language films.

Given this change in style and given his acting strengths, McLaglen could only continue to flourish as the comic character actor—his oscillation between farce and sentimentality in the role of sergeant in John Ford’s cavalry films such as Fort Apache, She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, and Rio Grande. This role was a continuation of that of the sergeant in Wee Willie Winkie in the 1930s—which was in many ways a parody of his role in The Lost Patrol. It may be a fulsome but not inappropriate analogy to compare McLaglen’s sergeant in the cavalry films and his role of the overbearing squire in The Quiet Man to some of Shakespeare’s clowns, if in no other way than their common exuberance and almost excessive sense of life.

---

Publications

By McLAGLEN: book—

On McLAGLEN: articles—

Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), October 1983.

* * *

Victor McLaglen (second from left) in The Lost Patrol
Outside of John Ford’s realm—when McLaglen is playing neither the acharné role of the 1930s nor the ingratiating buffoon of the later films—he is nothing beyond mere histrionic grimaces and gestures. This fact is a tribute to Ford’s choice of actor for his ensemble pieces—McLaglen’s absence from the director’s vision would be like a Franz Hals low-life canvas without its drunken, wide-mouthed clown.

—Rodney Farnsworth

McQUEEN, Steve

Films as Actor:

1956 Somebody Up There Likes Me ( Wise) (as Fidel)
1957 Never Love a Stranger ( Stevens) (as Martin Cabell)
1958 The Blob ( Yeaworth) (as Steve); The Great St. Louis Bank Robbery ( Guggenheim and Stix) (as George Fowler)
1959 Never So Few ( John Sturges) (as Bill Ringa)
1960 The Magnificent Seven ( John Sturges) (as Vin)
1961 The Honeymoon Machine ( Thorpe) (as Lieutenant Fergie Howard)
1962 Hell Is for Heroes ( Siegel) (as Reese); The War Lover ( Leacock) (as Buzz Rickson)
1963 The Great Escape ( John Sturges) (as Hilt); Love with the Proper Stranger ( Mulligan) (as Rocky Papasano); Soldier in the Rain ( Nelson) (as Sergeant Eustis Clay)
1964 Baby the Rain Must Fall ( Mulligan) (as Henry Thomas)
1965 The Cincinnati Kid ( J ewison) (title role)
1966 Nevada Smith ( Hathaway) (as Max Sand/Nevada Smith); The Sand Pebbles ( Wise) (as Holman)
1968 The Thomas Crown Affair ( J ewison) (title role); Bullitt ( Yates) (as Frank Bullitt)
1969 The Reivers ( R ydell) (as Boon Hogganbeck)
1971 Le Mans ( K atzin) (as Michael Delaney); On Any Sunday ( Brown) (as Doc McCoy)
1972 Junior Bonner ( Peckinpah) (title role); The Getaway ( Peckinpah) (as Doc McCoy)
1973 Papillon ( Schaffner) (title role)

1974 The Towering Inferno ( Guillermin and Irwin Allen) (as Michael O’Hallorhan)
1978 An Enemy of the People ( Schaefer—never released theatrically) (as Dr. Thomas Stockmann)
1980 Tom Horn ( Ward) (title role, + exec pr); The Hunter ( Kulik) (as Ralph “Papa” Thorson)

Publications

On McQUEEN: books—

Campbell, Joan, The Films of Steve McQueen, Farncombe, Surrey, 1977.
Ferrari, Philippe, Steve McQueen, Paris, 1981.
Satchell, Tim, Steve McQueen, London, 1981.
Ragsdale, Grady, Steve McQueen, the Final Chapter, Ventura, California, 1983.
Durant, Philippe, Steve McQueen, Paris, 1984.
Toffel, Neile McQueen, My Husband, My Friend, New York, 1986.
Storr, Robert, Steve McQueen, Phoenix, 1999.

On McQUEEN: articles—

Obituary in Newsweek, 29 December 1980.
Stories of Steve McQueen’s troubled childhood and roustabout adolescence never squared with the fastidiousness of his screen persona, the aristocracy of his best roles. McQueen did not need to act snobbery and elitism; his whole being vibrated with a sense of natural superiority. Only once, in The Thomas Crown Affair, did he play the wealthy and powerful man he was in real life, and then the role fitted him as perfectly as his tailoring.

Even as early as his 1958 role in a cheap sci-fi feature, The Blob, it was possible to see something different about Steve McQueen. This actor could play people who instigated events rather than simply responded to them. Undeterred by civic disbelief and police disapproval, he almost single-handedly rouses the town to the menace from outer space, even emptying the local cinema one step ahead of the flood of red jelly.

His Vin in The Magnificent Seven is one of the great roles of Western cinema, an intricate portrait of youthful professionalism which may draw on McQueen’s early days as a student actor in New York. It is not the callow Horst Buchholz but McQueen who is the real tyro of the group. A Hemingway hero, his experience of life has not caught up with his expertise, and for much of the film he is concerned to define himself by the standards of the job he has been given. The other gunmen either sympathize with the Mexicans or are antagonistic; only McQueen is indifferent to them. But he is enough of a romantic to wonder at the absence of women, and when a cache of them is discovered, hidden by anxious relatives, his response is a touching solicitude. As Buchholz unceremoniously heaves Rosenda Monteros over his saddle McQueen murmurs, “Gently, boy . . . gently."

Repressed loners in search of standards were McQueen’s speciality. His wintry blue eyes, neat movements, and clipped unemotional voice told you everything you needed to know about life on the road, in the trenches, in prison, or on the trail. He did not mind being unsympathetic; audiences knew he was a cut above those around him, and identified with his locked-tongue loneliness, his private obsession—something Peckinpah explored (and exploited) to great effect in The Getaway.

The best McQueens are in the 1960s. His ambitious young professional gambler in The Cincinnati Kid, psychopathic World War II G.I. in Hell Is for Heroes, World War II pilot in The War Lover, itinerant jazz musician in Love with the Proper Stranger, and rootless wanderer in Baby the Rain Must Fall all flirt with villainy, particularly in their callous attitude toward the women who love these driven men. His Frank Bullitt in Bullitt is no better, but when, in the final enigmatic scene, he returns to his apartment after the bloody airport shootout, sees his mistress sleeping, and impassively washes his hands before joining her, the line between hero and clod is decisively drawn.

Yearning for critical respectability as a versatile actor, not just a film star, McQueen grew a beard and took on the change-of-pace role of the whistleblowing title character who earns the enmity of the society he is trying to protect in an ambitious film version of Ibsen’s The Enemy of the People, financed by his own company. No one but McQueen, it seemed, believed the art film had a chance of finding an audience, and it was never released to theaters; it languished on the shelf for several years before being shuttled to television.

McQueen bounced back in a pair of films more in harmony with his traditional image, the Western Tom Horn (ironically a sort of cowboy variation on The Enemy of the People) and the action film The Hunter, in which he played a real-life tracker of crooks who jump bail. Horn was a flop but The Hunter proved the commercial shot in the arm the actor needed to maintain his star status. Unfortunately, he had earlier been diagnosed with cancer and spent the last months of his life seeking miracle cures in Mexico and elsewhere before succumbing to the disease at the young age of 50.

—John Baxter, updated by John McCarty

MEN’SHIKOV, Oleg

Nationality: Russian. Born: Serpukhov, 8 November 1960. Education: Graduated from Shchepkin Theatre School, Moscow, 1982. Career: Film debut, 1980; actor at the Maly Theatre, 1981–82, the Central Theatre of the Soviet Army, 1982–85, the Ermolova Theatre, 1985–89, and in theatres abroad after 1992; director of the theatrical production of Woe from Wit, 1998. Awards: Laurence Olivier Award, for play When She Danced, 1992; State Prize for Burnt by the Sun, 1996; Triumph Award for outstanding contribution to national culture, 1996; State Prize, and NIKA Award for Best Actor, Russian Film Academy, for The Prisoner of the Mountains, 1996. Agent: Valeri Chikhlayev, Teatralnoe tovarishchestvo 814, Strastnoi boulevard 6/2, Moscow, Russia.

Films as Actor:

- 1980 I Am Waiting in Hope (Zhda i nadeius’) (Shakhbazian) (as Shurok)
- 1981 Kinfolk (Rodnia) (Mikhalkov) (as Kirill)
- 1982 Pokrovsky Gates (Pokrovskie vorota) (Kozakov—for TV) (as Kostik); Dream Flights (Polety vo sone i naiava) (Balayan) (as young man)
- 1983 The Kiss (Potsecul) (Balayan) (as young officer)
- 1984 Captain Fracasse (Vladimir Soloviev—for TV) (as Fracasse); An Area of Obstacles (Polosa prepiatstvi) (Tumanishvili) (as Vladimir Mezhirov)
- 1986 Mikhail Lomonosov (Proshkin) (as Dmitri Vinogradov); With the Orchestra along the Main Road (Pil glavnui ulitse s orkestrom) (Petr Todorovsky) (as Korol’kiv); My Favourite Clown (Moi liubimyi kloun) (Kushnerev) (as Sergei Simtysyn); Big Volodia—Small Volodia (Volodia bol’shoi, Volodia malen’kii) (Krishtofovich) (as small Volodia)

Publications

On MEN’SHIKOV: books—

On MEN’SHIKOV: articles—

* * *

Oleg Men’shikov is doubtless one of the very few Russian actors who is a star in his own country and who has performed in a number of international projects.

Men’shikov is a theatre actor by training who worked with some of the most reputable Russian theatre directors early on in his career. He played in two of Valeri Fokin’s productions which marked the advent of glasnost in the arts: Sportive Scenes of 1981, and Speak. Later he worked with Petr Fomenko on a production of Caligula (1991). He performed the part of the poet Sergei Esenin in a London production of When She Danced (1992) alongside Vanessa Redgrave. He devised his own performance of Nijinski (1993) and fully took charge of a production in 1998 when he made his debut as a director with Griboedov’s Woe from Wit, in which he also played Chatsky.

Although Men’shikov has worked in film since the early 1980s, and has been extremely popular with both directors and audiences, his fame did not come until the 1990s, when he won international acclaim for his work in the theatre, received invitations from abroad, and was cast in major parts by Russian film-makers.

In the early 1990s Men’shikov often played characters who need to forge a mask for themselves in order to create, at least artificially, a sense in their lives. The character of Andrei Pletnev in Alexander Khvan’s Diuba-Diuba (1992) offers the potential for playing with the notion of identity. Pletnev is a scriptwriter who devises a plan to help his ex-girlfriend escape from prison, only to realize that she does not love him any longer. However, Pletnev plays to the end the role he has written for himself, a role that turns him into a cold-blooded and calculating killer. In the end, though he has completed his mission, he has lost his girlfriend. He leaves for a scriptwriting course abroad, where he will probably write the next role to fill his otherwise meaningless life. Pletnev is both killer and victim, and these diametrically opposed roles can be found at the basis of a number of roles Men’shikov has created since.

Men’shikov had worked with Nikita Mikhalkov on Kinfolk, but would come to international fame for his part of the secret service officer Dmitri (Mitia) in Mikhalkov’s Oscar-winning Burnt by the Sun (1994). Mitia’s history is that of a White officer who left Russia after the Revolution and who, in order to return to the Soviet Union, has to prove his loyalty to the new system by becoming a secret agent. Mitia returns to the Soviet Union, but his love Marusia is married to another man, the Red Army commander Kotov. Mitia has lost the one important thing in his life: love. The film covers one single day, during which Mitia returns to Marusia’s house, and to the past, before arresting Kotov. The character of Mitia is thus from the outset that of a man with different faces, roles, and identities, whose job does not allow him to tell the truth. Mitia’s only way of returning to the past is by putting on masks, one after the other: he turns from a blind man to a wizard to a teller of fairy-tales that disguise the truth; he is a dancer, singer, and entertainer; and he is also a cold-blooded secret agent who will do his job and arrest Kotov in the end, destroying the happiness of Marusia’s family. Men’shikov’s skill in transforming himself from a clown to a killer, from a disappointed lover to an entertainer, from a suicidal man to a commanding officer is superbly deployed in this film.

In Sergei Bodrov’s The Prisoner of the Mountains (1996) Men’shikov plays the part of the soldier Sasha Kostylin, who falls into captivity along with a younger army recruit, Vania Zhilin (Sergei Bodrov Jr). Whereas Zhilin is hoping for his mother’s assistance to be released, Kostylin has no family to turn to; nevertheless, he endlessly invents stories about his ‘family’, although he has neither family ties nor any ideals to fight for in a senseless war; therefore, he loses his life. Men’shikov may not have been the most obvious actor to be cast as a soldier, yet this part gives him ample room to demonstrate how vain it is to build facades that cover the absence of family ties and national identity.

Men’shikov’s role as the cadet Andrei Tolstoi in Mikhalkov’s The Barber of Siberia (1999) is probably the most controversial part he has played. Critics have persistently argued that Men’shikov, aged almost forty, is simply too old to be cast in the role of an 18-year-old cadet, especially when the other cadets are played by student actors. It may be understandable that Mikhalkov, who had scripted The Barber in the late 1980s, had wanted to stick with the actor he had chosen for this part then. Although Men’shikov performs the naïve conduct of the young cadet extremely well, his real-life experience cannot be wiped from his face. The part of Tolstoi has given Men’shikov scope to explore aspects of a role he had not pursued before, such as the romantic line in his relationship with the American Jane Callaghan. While Callaghan sacrifices her love for the sake of an intrigue designed to procure the Irish inventor McCracken the funds for further work on his invention, Tolstoi defends both Jane and his love with the honor expected in the late 19th century. Men’shikov’s talent, though, really lies in exploring the different facets of a character’s history, in playing with facades, and inventing identities rather than in the romantic tradition of the hero he plays in The Barber. In East-West, Menshikov excels in his portrayal of a Russian emigre who returns with his French wife and his son to Stalin’s Soviet Union. When he realizes that his wife will never be able to live her life to the fullest under the Soviet regime, he sacrifices his love for her and assists her escape to the West, while he himself has to bear the repercussions of her return to her native country.

—Birgit Beumers

MERCOURI, Melina

Nationality: Greek. Born: Maria Amalia Mercouris in Athens, 18 October 1925. Education: Studied acting at the Academy of the National Theatre, Athens, 1943–46. Family: Married 1) Panayiotis Harakopoulos, 1942; 2) the director Jules Dassin, 1966. Career: 1946—stage debut in modern play by Alexis Solomos followed by a series of modern plays on the Greek stage; 1955—film debut in Stella; 1960—international attention in role in Never on Sunday; then appeared in several international productions; 1967—debut on Broadway, in Ilya, Darling; 1977—earlier political activity against the regime of the “colonels” led to being elected to Parliament; 1981—named Minister of Culture and Sciences; 1985—became Minister of Culture, Youth and Sports; 1989—lost post when her party was voted out of office; regained post in 1993 when her party was returned to power. Awards: Best Actress, Cannes Festival, for Never on Sunday, 1960. Died: Of lung cancer, in New York City, 6 March 1994.

Films as Actress:

1955 Stella (Cacoynannis) (title role)
1957 Celui qui doit mourir (He Who Must Die) (Dassin) (as Mary Magdalene)
1958 The Gypsy and the Gentleman (Losey) (as Belle)
1959 La Loi (Where the Hot Wind Blows; Le legge; The Law) (Dassin) (as Donna Lucrezia)
1960 Pote tin kryiaki (Never on Sunday) (Dassin) (as Ilya)
1961 Vive Henri IV, Vive l’amour (Autant-Lara); Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (de Sica)
1962 Phaedra (Dassin) (title role)
1963 The Victors (Foreman) (as Magda)
1964 Topkapi (Dassin) (as Elizabeth Lipp)
1965 Les Pianos mécaniques (The Uninhibited) (Bardem) (as Jenny)
1966 A Man Could Get Killed (Neame and Owen) (as Aurora-Celeste da Costa); 10:30 P.M. Summer (Dassin) (as Maria)
1969 Gaily, Gaily (Chicago, Chicago) (Jewison) (as Queen Lil)

1970 La Promesse de l’aube (Promise at Dawn) (Dassin) (as Nina Kacew)
1975 Once Is Not Enough (Guy Green) (as Karla)
1976 Nasty Habits (The Abbess) (Lindsay-Hogg) (as Sister Gertrude)
1978 A Dream of Passion (Dassin) (as Maya/Medea)
1980 Diving for Roman Plunder: The Cousteau Odyssey (doc) (as commentator)
1984 Keine zufällige Geschichte (Not by Coincidence) (Kerr)

Publications

By MERCOURI: book—

By MERCOURI: article—

On MERCOURI: book—

On MERCOURI: articles—

Reed, Rex, in Do You Sleep in the Nude?, New York, 1968.
Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1982.
Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), March 1992.

* * *

“To be born Greek,” Melina Mercouri once wrote, “is to be magnificently cursed.” The statement is wholly in character; like her acting, it is unashamedly larger than life, and its bearing on literal truth is beside the point. As an actress, Mercouri was a phenomenon, and objecting that she overacted is like pointing out that the Parthenon would make an uncomfortable living room.

With Never on Sunday Mercouri burst upon an undefended world. It was her third film with the expatriate American director Jules Dassin, though their first Greek film together. They had previously teamed for Where the Hot Wind Blows, a neorealist love triangle... drama set in Italy co-starring Yves Montand and Gina Lollobrigida, and the Christ story parable He Who Must Die, based on the novel by her fellow countryman Nikos Kazantzakis. Suggestions that she lured Dassin into pretension may be unjustified, since He Who Must Die was well into preparation before she was cast as the Magdalene figure. There was nothing pretentious about Never on Sunday, though—it was glorious hokum, frank and unabashed, and Mercouri as the tart with a heart was loud, brash, and irresistible. Dassin himself took the part of the sailor who falls for her. Made for $150,000 (and looking it), it raked in $15 million worldwide.

Tawny-haired, green-eyed, with a husky voice extending well down the baritone range, Mercouri could handle melodrama or broad comedy, but hardly high tragedy, as Phaedra, another of her films with Dassin, proved conclusively. Topkapi worked better for both of them. In it, Dassin recycled elements from his earlier classic about a not-so-perfect crime, Rififi, into a comedy about an even more intricate heist of a diamond in an Istanbul museum. The film was a crowd pleaser and critical hit. Mercouri acted up a storm, though Peter Ustinov stole the film and won a Best Supporting Actor Oscar as the bumbling member of the gang.

Mercouri and Dassin’s final collaborations were 10:30 P.M. Summer; Promise at Dawn, from writer Romain Gary’s memoir about his mother; and A Dream of Passion, a modern-day version of the classic Greek tragedy Medea. None fared well with either audiences or critics. Mercouri remained in demand as an international star, however, appearing in a string of high-profile American and European films that did little to satisfy her artistic appetite. She played a soaring Chicagophile chimney sweep in Jewison’s Gaily, Gaily—and was mercifully lost among the slumming ensemble cast of Once Is Not Enough, a jet-set soap opera from the pen of Jacqueline Susann.

Politics were in Mercouri’s blood. Her grandfather had been mayor of Athens, her father minister of the interior, and Dassin, whom she married, was a victim of the Hollywood blacklist—as was director Joseph Losey, with whom she also made a film, The Gypsy and the Gentleman. When the Colonels seized power she quit Greece and, despite threats to her life, campaigned tirelessly against them all over the world. The regime revoked her citizenship, incurring her resplendent scorn: “I was born Greek and I shall die Greek. They were born fascists and they will die fascists.”

After returning to Greece she made only three more films; increasingly, politics took over. Appointed minister of culture in the Socialist government, she temporarily renounced acting, turning her energies to revitalizing the rickety Greek film industry. Mercouri once numbered among her ambitions “to win an Oscar, and become President of Greece.” She died in 1994, both goals having eluded her.

—Philip Kemp, updated by John McCarty

MEREDITH, Burgess

Nationality: American. Born: Cleveland, Ohio, 16 November 1908. Education: Attended Cathedral Choir School, Cleveland; Hooosac Falls Preparatory School, New York; Amherst College, Massachusetts. Military Service: Air Force, 1942–45; then transferred to the Office of War Information and involved in making films for G.I.s. Family: Married 1) Helen Berrian Derby, 1932 (divorced 1935); 2) Margaret Perry, 1936 (divorced 1938); 3) the actress Paulette Goddard, 1944 (divorced 1948); 4) Kaja Sundsten, 1952 (separated 1976), two children. Career: 1930–33—member of Eva Le Gallienne’s Civic Repertory Theatre, debut in Romeo and Juliet; 1933—in Broadway production of The Threepenny Opera; 1934—radio debut in the program Red Davis; 1935—successful role in Winterset, written by Maxwell Anderson with Meredith in mind; made film debut in the film version the following year; 1939—in stage production of Orson Welles’s Five Kings, based on Shakespeare’s history plays; host for radio program Pursuit of Happiness; 1949—directed the film The Man on the Eiffel Tower; 1950—directed and acted in Happy as Larry on television; 1963—on London stage in title role of Hughie; 1964–65—in TV series Mr. Novak, as The Penguin in Batman, 1966–68, Search, 1972–73, host of Those Amazing Animals series, 1980–81, and Gloria, 1982–83. Awards: Emmy, for Tail Gunner Joe, 1977. Died: Of Alzheimer’s disease on 9 September 1997 in Malibu, California.

Films as Actor:

1936 Winterset (Santell) (as Mio)
1937 There Goes the Groom (Santley) (as Dick Mathews)
1938 Spring Madness (Simon) (as the Lippencott)
1939 Idiot’s Delight (Brown) (as Quillery); Of Mice and Men (Milestone) (as George Milton)
1940 Castle on the Hudson (Years without Days) (Litvak) (as Steven Rockford); Second Chorus (Potter) (as Hank Taylor)
1941 San Francisco Docks (Lubin) (as Johnny Barnes); The Forgotten Village (Kline) (as narrator); That Uncertain Feeling (Lubitsch) (as Sebastian); Tom, Dick, and Harry (Kanin) (as Harry)
1942 Street of Chance (Hively) (as Frank Thompson)
1944 Tunisian Victory (doc) (as narrator)
1945 The Story of G.I. Joe (G.I. Joe; War Correspondent) (Wellman) (as Ernie Pyle)
1946 Diary of a Chambermaid (Le Journal d’une femme de chambre) (Renoir) (as Capt. Mauger, + co-pr, sc); Magnificent Doll (Borzage) (as James Madison); Hymn of Nations (doc) (as narrator)
1948 On Our Merry Way (A Miracle Can Happen) (King Vidor and Fenton) (as Oliver Pease, + co-pr); Mine Own Executioner (Kimmins) (as Felix Milne)
1949 Jigsaw (Markle) (as bartender)
1953 Golden Arrow (The Gay Adventure; Three Men and a Girl) (Parry) (as Dick)
1957 Albert Schweitzer (Hill) (as narrator); Joe Butterfly (Hibbs) (title role)
1958 Sorcerer’s Village (doc) (as narrator)
1961 Universe (doc) (as narrator)
1962 Advise and Consent (Preminger) (as Herbert Gelman)
1963 The Cardinal (Preminger) (as Father Ned Halley)
1964 The Kidnappers (Man on the Run) (Romero) (as Louis Halliburton)
1965  In Harm's Way (Preminger) (as Cmdr. Egan Powell)
1966  Crazy Quilt (Korty) (as narrator); A Big Hand for the Little Lady (Cook) (as Doc Scully); Madame X (Rich) (as Dan Sullivan); Batman (Martinson) (as the Penguin)
1967  Discover America (doc) (as narrator); Hurry Sundown (Preminger) (as Judge Purcell); Torture Garden (Francis) (as Dr. Diablo)
1968  Stay Away, Joe (Peter Tewksbury) (as Charlie Lightcloud); Skidoo (Preminger) (as the warden)
1969  MacKenna's Gold (J. Lee Thompson) (as storekeeper); The Reivers (Rydell) (as narrator); Hard Contract (Pogostin) (as Ramsey Williams)
1970  There Was a Crooked Man (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as the Missouri Kid)
1971  Such Good Friends (Preminger) (as Bernard Kalman); Clay Pigeon (Tom Stern and Slate) (as the sculptor); Lock, Stock, and Barrel (Thorpe—for TV); The Strange Monster of Strawberry Cove (Shea—for TV)
1972  The Man (Sargent—for TV but released theatrically) (as Sen. Watson); Probe (Search) (Mayberry—for TV); A Fan's Notes (Till) (as Mr. Blue); Getting Away from It All (Philips—for TV)
1973  Hay que matar a B. (B. Must Die) (Borau)
1974  Golden Needles (Clouse) (as Winters)
1975  The Day of the Locust (Schlesinger) (as Harry); Ninety-Two in the Shade (McGuane) (as Goldsboro); The Hindenburg (Wise) (as Emilio Pajetta)
1976  Rocky (Avildsen) (as Mickey); Burnt Offerings (Dan Curtis) (as Brother)
1977  The Last Hurrah (Sherman—for TV); Johnny, We Hardly Knew Ye (Cates—for TV); Golden Rendezvous (Lazarus) (as Van Heurden); The Great Georgia Bank Hoax (The Great Bank Hoax; Shenanigans) (Jacoby) (as Jack Stutz); SST—Death Flight (SST—Disaster in the Sky; Death Flight) (Rich—for TV); The Manitou (Girdler) (as Dr. Ernest Snow); Tail Gunner Joe (Jud Taylor—for TV) (as Joseph N. Walsh); The Sentinel (Winner) (as Charles Chazen)
1978  Foul Play (Higgins) (as Hennessey); Magic (Attenborough) (as Ben Greene); Kate Bliss and the Ticker Tape Kid (Kennedy—for TV); The Amazing Captain Nemo (March) (as Prof. Waldo Cunningham)
1979  Rocky II (Stallone) (as Mickey)
1980  When Time Ran Out (Earth’s Final Fury) (Goldstone) (as Rene Valdez); Final Assignment (Almond) (as Zak)
1981  True Confessions (Grosbard) (as Seamus Fargo); The Last Chase (Burke) (as Capt. J. G. Williams); Clash of the Titans (Desmond Davis) (as Ammon)
1982  Rocky III (Stallone) (as Mickey)
Burgess Meredith has, for the most part, always played the eccentric on screen; his roles have included everything from Tweedledee in Alice in Wonderland to “The Penguin” in Batman to a ninetiesomething whippersnapper in the Grumpy Old Men films. Nevertheless, his screen career has been an off-and-on affair. He once remarked, ever-so-aptly, “I disappear from the public eye and get rediscovered quite often.”

Meredith made his film debut as the idealistic, revenge-seeking Mio in the highly stylized screen version of Maxwell Anderson's verse-play Winterset, a role he created on Broadway. Some of his best roles came early in his career: George, the migrant worker and protector of the simple-minded, oversized Lennie, in Of Mice and Men; the nonconformist suitor in Tom, Dick, and Harry; the malcontent pianist in That Uncertain Feeling; and the loony neighbor in Renoir’s Diary of a Chambermaid. For Hollywood’s purposes, Meredith’s small frame made him more appropriately cast as the war correspondent, rather than the warrior; he was the personal choice of Ernie Pyle to star as the fabled war reporter in The Story of G.I. Joe.

Still, Meredith never did make a full commitment to film. Between the 1930s and mid-1960s, he often could be found on the stage, appearing in the likes of High Tor, The Threepenny Opera, Liliom, and Candida, and writing and directing Ulysses in Nighttown and A Thurber Carnival.

His most famous screen role—the pugnacious fighter manager in Rocky—came exactly four decades after his screen debut. Meredith then became a major Hollywood personality, and was very much in demand. He gave a masterful performance as attorney Joseph N. Walsh on television in Tail Gunner Joe, although his other screen and television appearances, ranging from hosting Those Amazing Animals to playing a vet on Gloria, a short-lived spin-off of All in the Family, have been less than impressive.

Back in 1937, critic Wolcott Gibbs hailed Meredith, in The New Yorker, as “brilliant, impressive, heartbreaking, vibrant and eloquent.” Gibbs was, of course, talking of Meredith the stage performer. Sadly, there are only a handful of film roles that live up to that estimation.

—Anthony Slide, updated by Audrey E. Kuperberg

MIDLER, Bette

Nationality: American. Born: Honolulu, Hawaii (some sources say Paterson, New Jersey), 1 December 1945. Education: Attended the University of Hawaii; studied acting at the Berghof Studio. Family: Married Martin von Haselberg, 1984, daughter: Sophie. Career:

---

1983 Twilight Zone—The Movie (Landis, Spielberg, and Dante) (as narrator)
1984 Wer Gold (Lowry—for TV) (as Sampson)
1985 Santa Claus: The Movie (Szwarc) (as Ancient Elf)
1986 Outrage! (Grauman—for TV) (as Judge Aaron Klein); Elephant Games (Blumberg—for TV)
1987 King Lear (Goddard) (as Don Learo); Mr. Corbett’s Ghost (Danny Huston)
1988 Full Moon in Blue Water (Masterson) (as the General); Hot to Trot (Dinner) (as voice of Don’s dad, uncredited)
1989 Rocky V (Avildsen) (as Mickey); State of Grace (Joanou) (as Finn)
1990 Oddball Hall (Hunsicker) (as Ingersol); Night of the Hunter (David Greene—for TV) (as Birdy); Preminger: Anatomy of a Filmmaker (Robins—for TV) (as narrator)
1991 Mastergate (for TV) (as Wylie Slaughter); Lincoln (Kunhardt—doc for TV) (as Winfield Scott)
1992 Grumpy Old Men (Petrie) (as Grandpa Gustafson); Jean Renoir (David Thompson—doc)
1994 Camp Nowhere (Prince) (as Fein); Across the Moon (Gottlieb) (as Barney)
1995 Grumpier Old Men (Deutch) (as Grandpa Gustafson); Wild Bill: Hollywood Maverick (Robinson) (as himself)
1996 Ripper (Parmet) (as Hamilton Wofford/Covington Wofford)

Films as Director:

1944 Salute to France (co-d); Welcome to Britain (co-d); Rear Gunner
1947 A Yank Came Back (co-d, + ro as narrator)
1949 The Man on the Eiffel Tower (+ ro as Huertin)
1969 The Third Eye (The Ying and the Yang) (+ ro)

Publications

By MEREDITH: book—

By MEREDITH: articles—

Interview with Henry Cabot Beck, in Interview (New York), January 1996.

On MEREDITH: book—

On MEREDITH: articles—

Current Biography 1940, New York, 1940.
1966—film debut in bit part in Hawaii, then returned to Hollywood with unit; moved to New York, worked off-Broadway (including Salvation, 1969) and in Broadway production of Fiddler on the Roof; 1970—singer/entertainer (with Barry Manilow) at The Continental Bathhouse, Manhattan; 1971—recording contract; 1979—film debut in starring role in The Rose; 1985—signed three-picture contract with Touchstone Pictures (extended 1987); also co-founder, All Girls Productions. Address: c/o Rick Nicita, Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1966 Hawaii (George Roy Hill) (as passenger)
1969 Goodbye, Columbus (Peerce) (bit part)
1974 The Divine Mr. J (Alexander—filmed record of 1969 off-Broadway musical Salvation) (as the Virgin Mary)
1979 The Rose (Rydell) (as Rose)
1980 Divine Madness! (Ritchie—filmed record of a concert)
1982 Jinxed! (Siegel) (as Bonita Friml)
1986 Down and Out in Beverly Hills (Mazursky) (as Barbara Whiteman); Ruthless People (Abrahams) (as Barbara Stone)
1987 Outrageous Fortune (Hiller) (as Sandy Brozinsky)
1988 Big Business (Abrahams) (as Sadie Ratliff/Sadie Shelton); Oliver & Company (Scribner—animation) (as voice of Georgette); Beaches (Garry Marshall) (as C. C. Bloom, + co-mus, co-pr)
1990 Stella (Erman) (as Stella Claire)
1991 For the Boys (Rydell) (as Dixie Leonard, + co-pr); Scenes from a Mall (Mazursky) (as Deborah Fifer)
1993 Hocus Pocus (Ortega) (as Winifred Sanderson); Gypsy (Ardolino—for TV) (as Rose Hovick); Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (voice only)
1995 Get Shorty (Sonnenfeld) (as Doris)
1996 The First Wives Club (Hogan)
1997 Bette Midler in Concert: Diva Las Vegas (Callner) (as herself + ex pr); That Old Feeling (Carl Reiner) (as Lilly Leonard)
1999 Isn't She Great (Bergman) (as Jacqueline Susann); Get Bruce (Kuehn) (as herself); Jackie’s Back (Robert Townsend) (as herself)
2000 What Women Want (Nancy Meyers)
Publications

By MIDLER: books—

A View from a Broad, New York, 1980.

By MIDLER: articles—

Interview in Interview (New York), no. 11, 1974.
Interview in American Film (Washington, D.C.), September 1978.
Interview in Films Illustrated (London), March 1981.
Interview in Photoplay (London), February 1982.
Interview in Radio Times (London), 1 June 1991.
Interview in Radio Times (London), 9 December 1995.
Interview in Premier (New York), September 1996.

On MIDLER: books—

On MIDLER: articles—

* * *

Bette Midler represents one of the best examples of a movie star during the sharply focused business mentality of the “New Hollywood” of the 1980s. Developing a persona based on eight previous years of hit records and sold-out concerts, Midler became one of the major film stars of the late 1980s (in 1986 and 1988 she ranked as the top female box-office attraction).

Before entering the film industry, Midler established a devotion following focused on her singing and an outrageous personality modeled after Mae West, Sophie Tucker, and Rosalind Russell. Known as “The Divine Miss M,” she projected an image of brassy vulgarity, aggressive humor, and bawdy sexuality. Not surprisingly, her film debut as The Rose (constructed as a “fictionalized biography” of Janis Joplin) emphasized these traits. Besides showcasing her well-known talents as a singer/comediennne, the film also demonstrated she could act; she received an Academy Award nomination for Best Actress. After the ironically titled Jinxed! nearly ended her film career, Midler signed an exclusive contract with Disney (Touchstone Pictures) in 1985. While working for Disney, Midler achieved her greatest success, mostly because she also began to modify her image. Her first six Touchstone films tamed and contained her earlier over-the-top persona to fit the Disney mold and appeal to a wider audience.

Midler’s characters begin as vulgar, abrasive, and ego-centric, but end, after contact with characters exhibiting opposing qualities, as genteel, ingratiating, and cooperative. In Down and Out in Beverly Hills she plays a crass, nouveau riche housewife struggling with sexual frigidity. Once “cured” by a homeless man, she softens and contributes to the fight against social inequality. In Ruthless People she starts as an unattractive, ostentatious, spoiled, and loudmouthed heiress whose contact with working-class kidnappers reveals generosity, beauty, and self-asserted independence. In Outrageous Fortune, her vulgarity and overt sexuality become refined and romantic after a series of adventures with an upper-class actress. This interplay between opposites receives its fullest expression in Big Business. Midler plays identical twins separated at birth: one a demure daydreamer and the other a ruthless business executive. Each adopts qualities of the other to produce two well-balanced individuals.

Big Business also signaled Midler’s move away from comedy and into melodrama. Both Beaches and Stella functioned as “Women’s Films,” using a strong, well-known star to address notions of friendship, romance, children, work, self-sacrifice, and death. The synthesis of contradictory personality traits remains however. In Beaches, an independent, extroverted celebrityhood turns into a mature sense of private responsibility when her best friend dies and she adopts the orphaned daughter. The film also featured Midler’s No. 1 Grammy award winning song (“The Wind beneath My Wings”) reinforcing her legacy as a singer. In Stella (the third film adaptation of Olive Higgins Prouty’s Stella Dallas), Midler arranges for her daughter’s upward social mobility by sacrificing their relationship. These two films, with their emphasis on romance, work, and children, occurred soon after the birth of her daughter. To make the point even clearer, Midler also played “Mother Earth” on an Earth Day 1990 television special.

This maternal inflection of her star image manifests itself in her most recent films. In Hocus Pocus, she parodies herself as a witch who must sacrifice children for her own immortality. In Gypsy (a remake of the Rosalind Russell film), she plays the ultimate stage mother whose obsessive nature nearly alienates her daughter; the songs are also tailor-made for Midler’s typical performance style. For the Boys is perhaps the most revealing of her recent films. Produced by her own company (All Girls Productions), the film combines ribald humor, song and dance, and maternal melodrama. Tracing 50 years in the life of a very popular entertainer and her relationship to her husband, son, and partner, the film highlights and synthesizes every facet of Midler’s stardom (and resulted in her second Oscar nomination for Best Actress).

Midler continues to record music, tour, write, and star in films and television specials (her farewell song to Johnny Carson, “Dear Mr. Carson,” was the highlight of Carson’s televised retirement and won her an Emmy). This ability to successfully perform in a number of interrelated media should secure her stardom in the even more business-oriented Hollywood of the twenty-first century.

—Greg S. Faller
MIFUNE, Toshiro

Films as Actor:

1946 Shin baka jidai (The New Age of Fools; These Foolish Times) (Yamamoto) (as Genzaburo Ohno)
1947 Girei no hate (Snow Trail) (Taniguchi) (as Ejima)
1948 Yoidore tenshi (Drunken Angel) (Kurosawa) (as Matsunaga)
1949 Jakokman to Tetsu (Jackoman and Tetsu) (Taniguchi) (as Tetsu); Shizukaranare ketto (The Quiet Duel; A Silent Duel) (Kurosawa) (as Dr. Kyoki Fujisaki); Norainu (Stray Dog) (Kurosawa) (as Det. Murakami)

1949 Datsugoku (Escape from Prison) (Yamamoto) (as Shinkichi); Shubun (Scandal) (Kurosawa) (as Ichiro Aoe); Konyaku yubiwa (Engagement Ring) (Kinoshiita) (as Takeshi Ema); Kaitzoki-sen (Pirates) (Inagaki) (as Tora); Ishinaka-sensei gyojoku datsugoku (Conduct Report on Professor Ishinaka) (Naruse) (as Nagasawa); Rashomon (In the Woods) (Kurosawa) (as Tajomaru)

1950 Ai to nikushimi no kaneta e (Beyond Love and Hate) (Taniguchi) (as Goru Sakata); Hakuchi (The Idiot) (Kurosawa) (as Denkichi Akama); Bakuro ich-dai (Life of a Horse-Trader) (Kimura) (as Yonetaro Katayama); Kanketsu Sasaki Koijro (Koijro Sasaki) (Inagaki) (as Musashi Miyamoto); Onnagokoro dare ga shiru (Who Knows a Woman’s Heart?) (Yamamoto) (as Mizuno); Ereji (Elegy) (Yamamoto); Sengo-ha obake taikai (The Meeting of the Ghost of Après Guerre) (Saeki)

1952 Tokyo no kobito (Jewels in Our Hearts; Tokyo Sweetheart) (Chiba) (as Kurokawa); Sengoku-burai (Sword for Hire) (Inagaki) (as Hayatenosuke Sasa); Saikaku ichidai onna (Life of Oharu; Diary of Oharu) (Mizoguchi) (as Katsunosuke); Ketto kagiya no tsuji (Vendetta of Samurai) (Mori) (as Mataemon Araki); Muteki (Foghorn) (Taniguchi) (as Chiyokichi); Gekiryu (A Swift Current) (Taniguchi) (as Shunsuke Kosugi); Minato e kita otoko (The Man Who Came to the Port) (Honda) (as Goro Shinnuma)

1953 Himawari-musume (Love in a Teacup; Sunflower Girl) (Chiba) (as Ippei Hitachi); Taiheto no washi (Eagle of the Pacific) (Honda) (as Lt. Tomonage); Fukeyo harukaze (My Wonderful Yellow Car) (Chiba) (as Daikichi Risshun); Ichijoji no ketto (Samurai, Part I) (Inagaki) (as Miyamoto Musashi); Otoko arite (No Time for Tears) (Maruyama) (as Mitsuo Yano)

1954 Shichinin no samurai (Seven Samurai) (Kurosawa) (as Kikuchiyoko); Mitsuya-sen (The Black Fury) (Sugie) (as Eiichi Tsuda); Miyamoto Musashi (Samurai) (Inagaki) (as Shinnen Musashi); Shiokai (The Surf) (Taniguchi)

1955 Zoko Miyamoto Musashi (Duel at Ichijoji Temple) (Inagaki) (as Musashi Miyamoto); Dansei No. 1 (A Man among Men) (Yamamoto); Ikimoto no kiroki (I Live in Fear; Record of a Living Being; What the Birds Knew) (Kurosawa) (as Kiichi Nakajima); Tenka taihai (All Is Well) (Sugie) (as Daikichi Risshun); Ichijoji no ketto (Samurai, Part II) (Inagaki) (as Miyamoto Musashi); Otoko arite (No Time for Tears) (Maruyama) (as Mitsuo Yano)

1956 Ketto ganyu-jima (Mushashi and Koijro; Samurai, Part III) (Inagaki) (as Miyamoto Musashi); Kuroobi sangokushi (Rainy Night Duel) (Taniguchi) (as Masahiko Koseki); Ankoku-gai (The Underworld) (Kamamoto) (as Det. Kumada); Aijo no kessan (Settlement of Love; Accounts of Affection) (Saburi) (as Shuntaro Ohira); Tsuna no kokoro (A Wife’s Heart) (Naruse) (as Kenkichi Takemura); Narazumono (Scoundrel; A Rascal) (Aoyagi) (as Kanji); Shujin-sen (Rebels of the High Sea) (Inagaki) (as Tokuzo Matsuo)

1957 Kumonosu-jo (Throne of Blood; Cobweb Castle; The Castle of the Spider’s Web; Macbeth) (Kurosawa) (as Taketori Washizu); Shitamachi (Downtown) (Chiba) (as Yoshio Tsurushi); Donzoko (The Lower Depths) (Kurosawa) (as Sutebichi); Arashi no naka no otoko (The Man in the Storm) (Taniguchi) (as Saburo Wataki); Yagyu bugei-cho (The Yangyu; Secret Scrolls) (Inagaki) (as Tatsaburo; Kono...
1958 Mihomotsu no issho (The Rickshaw Man) (Inagaki) (as Matsugoro Tomishima); Soryu hiken (Ninjutsu; Secret Scrolls, Part II) (Inagaki) (as Tsasaburo); Tokyo no kyujitsu (Holiday in Tokyo) (Yamamoto) (as Jiro); Jinsei gekijo seisun-hen (Theatre of Life) (Sugie) (as Hishakaku); Kakushi toride no san akainin (The Hidden Fortress; Three Bad Men in a Hidden Fortress) (Kurosawa) (as Rokurota Makabe)

1959 Anokugai no kaoyaka (The Big Boss) (Okamoto) (as Daisuke Kashimura); Aru kengo no shogai (Samurai Saga) (Inagaki) (as Heihachiro Komaki); Sengoku gunto-sen (Saga of the Nagabonds) (Sugie) (as Rokuro); Nippon tanjo (The Three Treasures) (Inagaki) (as Prince Yamato Takeru); Dokuritsu gureuta (Desperado Outpost) (Okamoto) (as Capt. Kodama)

1960 Anoku-gai no taiketsu (The Last Gunfight) (Okamoto) (as Saburo Fujioka); Kuniada Chugi (The Gambling Samurai) (Taniguchi) (title role); Otoko tai otoko (Man against Man) (Taniguchi) (as Kaji); Taiheiyō no arashi (The Bombed Pearl Harbor) (Matsubayashi) (as Adm. Yamaguchi); Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru (The Bad Sleep Well) (The Rose in the Mud; The Worse You Are, the Better You Sleep) (Kurosawa) (as Koichi Nishi)

1961 Animas Trajano (The Important Man) (Rodriguez) (title role); Yojimbo (The Bodyguard) (Kurosawa) (as Sanjuro Kuwabatake); Osaka-jo monogatari (Daredevil in the Castle) (Inagaki) (as Mohei); Gen to Fudo-myoh (The Youth and His Amulet) (Inagaki) (as Fudo-myo)

1962 Tsubaki Sanjuro (Sanzu) (Kurosawa) (title role); Toburoku no Tatsu (Tatsu) (Inagaki) (as Tatsu); Chushingura (Loyal 47 Ronin; 47 Samurai) (Inagaki) (as Genban Tawaraboshi)

1963 Taiheiyō no tsubasa (Attack Squadron) (Matsubayashi) (as Commander Senda); Tengoku to-jigoku (High and Low; Heaven and Hell; The Ransom) (Kurosawa) (as Kingo Gondo)

1964 Daitozukara (Samurai Pirate; The Lost World of Sinbad) (Taniguchi) (as Sukazaemon/Luzon); Dai-tatsunuki (Whirlwind) (Inagaki) (as Morishige Niro)

1965 Samurai (Samurai Assassin) (Okamoto) (as Tsuruchiyo Niino); Akahige (Red Beard) (Kurosawa) (as Dr. Niide); Sagata sanshiro (Judo Saga) (Uchikawa) (as Shogoro Yano); Taiheiyō kiseki no sakusen Kiska (The Retreat from Kiska) (Maruyama) (as Adm. Kawashima); Chi to susa (Fort Grayeyard) (Okamoto) (as Sgt. Kosugi)

1966 Abare Goemon (Rise against the Sword) (Inagaki) (title role); Daibosatsu toge (The Sword of Doom) (Okamoto) (as Toranosuke Shimada); Kigen no boken (Adventures of Takla Makan) (Taniguchi) (as Oosumi); Doto ichi man kairi (The Mad Atlantic) (Fukuda) (as Heihachiro Murakami); Grand Prix (Frankenheimer) (as Lzo Yamura)

1967 Joi-uchi (Rebellion) (Kobayashi) (as Isaburo Sasahara); Nippon no ichiban nagai hi (The Emperor and a General) (Maruyama) (as War Minister Anami)

1968 Yamamoto Isoraku (Admiral Yamamoto) (Maruyama) (title role); Gion matsuri (The Day the Sun Rose) (Yamanuchi) (as Kuma); Korobe no tayio (Tunnel to the Sun) (Kuma) (as Kitagawa)

---

Film as Actor and Director:

1963 Goju man-nin no isan (The Legacy of the 500,000) (as Takeichi Matsuo)

---

Publications

By MIFUNE: articles—

Interview with J. Gambol, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), Winter 1967.

On MIFUNE: books—

On MIFUNE: articles—

Grilli, Peter, “Civil Samurai,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1984.

MILLAND, Ray

Films as Actor:

(as Raymond Milland)

1929 The Plaything (Knight) (as Ian); The Informer (Robinson); The Flying Scotsman (Knight) (as Jim Edwards); The Lady from the Sea (Knight) (as Tom Roberts)

1930 Way for a Sailor (Wood) (as ship’s officer); Passion Flower (William DeMille) (bit role)

1931 The Bachelor Father (Leonard); Just a Gigolo (Conway) (as Freddie); Bought (Mayo) (as Charles Carter); Ambassador Bill (Taylor) (as Lothar); Blonde Crazy (Del Ruth) (as Joe Reynolds)

1932 The Man Who Played God (Adolphi) (as Eddie); Polly of the Circus (Santell) (as a rich young man); Payment Deferred (Mendes) (as James Medland)

1933 Orders Is Orders (Forde) (as Dashwood); This Is the Life (de Courville) (as Bob Travers)

1934 Bolero (Ruggles) (as Lord Coray); We’re Not Dressing (Taurog) (as Prince Michael Stefani); Many Happy Returns (McLeod)

An international star since 1966 when he appeared for director John Frankeheimer in the epic racing film Grand Prix, Mifune has acted in numerous films outside his native Japan. They include John Boorman’s World War II epic Hell in the Pacific, opposite Lee Marvin; the Euro-Western Red Sun opposite Charles Bronson; the Kennedy conspiracy thriller Winter Kills; and the epic television mini-series Shogun. More recently he appeared as an Eskimo in the Canadian-French adventure film Shadow of the Wolf. His most recent Japanese film, for director Kayo Hatta, was Picture Bride, a period tale set in the early years of this century, where he had a cameo as a narrator for silent films. Mifune and Kurosawa teamed for the last time as actor and director on Red Beard in 1965, a medical drama not unlike Drunken Angel, the film that brought the two together.

—Vaclav Merhaut, updated by John McCarty
Ray Milland (left) in Dial M for Murder

(as Ted Mabert); Charlie Chan in London (Forde) (as Neil Howard); Menace (Murphy) (as Freddie Bastion)

1935  One Hour Late (Murphy) (as Tony St. John); The Gilded Lily (Ruggles) (as Charles Gray/Granville)

(as Ray Milland)

1935  Four Hours to Kill (Leisen) (as Carl); The Glass Key (Tuttle) (as Taylor Henry); Alias Mary Dow (Neumann) (as Peter Marshall)

1936  Next Time We Love (Edward Griffith) (as Tommy Abbott); The Return of Sophie Lang (Archainbaud) (as Jimmy Lawson); The Big Broadcast of 1937 (Leisen) (as Bob Miller); The Jungle Princess (Thiele) (as Christopher Powell); Three Smart Girls (Koster) (as Lord Michael Stuart)

1937  Bulldog Drummond Escapes (Hogan) (title role); Wings over Honolulu (Potter) (as Lt. Stony Gilchrist); Easy Living (Leisen) (as John Ball, Jr.); Ebb Tide (Hogan) (as Robert Herrick); Wise Girl (Jason) (as John O’Halloran)

1938  Her Jungle Love (Archainbaud) (as Bob Mitchell); Tropic Holiday (Reed) (as Ken Warren); Men with Wings (Wellman) (as Scott Barnes); Say It in French (Stone) (as Richard Carrington, Jr.)

1939  French without Tears (Asquith) (as Alan Howard); Hotel Imperial (Florey) (as Lt. Nemassy); Beau Geste (Wellman) (as John Geste); Everything Happens at Night (Cummings) (as Geoff Thompson)

1940  Irene (Wilcox) (as Don Marshall); The Doctor Takes a Wife (Hall) (as Dr. Timothy Sterling); Untamed (Archainbaud) (as William Crawford); Arise, My Love (Leisen) (as Tom Martin)

1941  I Wanted Wings (Leisen) (as Jeff Young); Skylark (Sandrich) (as Tony Kenyon)

1942  The Lady Has Plans (Lanfield) (as Kenneth Harper); Reap the Wild Wind (Cecil DeMille) (as Stephen Tolliver); Are Husbands Necessary? (Tauraug) (as George Cugat); The Major and the Minor (Wilder) (as Major Kirby); Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall) (as himself)

1943  The Crystal Ball (Nugent) (as Brad Cavanaugh); Forever and a Day (Goulding and others) (as Bill Trimble)

1944  The Uninvited (Allen) (as Roderick Fitzgerald); Lady in the Dark (Leisen) (as Charley Johnson); Till We Meet Again
Milland first appeared in films in 1929 and his easy charm and smooth good looks proved appropriate to many sorts of roles. He revealed a more obvious aspect of Milland's style; he had already built efficiency in the role suggests that nothing much had ever been expected of him. It is now clear, however, that of increasing depth, vitality, variety, and originality.

On MILLAND: articles—

- Harmetz, Aljean, “Ray Milland,” in Film Dope (Nottingham), April 1986.
- Film Dope (Nottingham), January 1990.

On MILLAND: articles—

- Current Biography 1946, New York, 1946.

Publications

By MILLAND: book—

By MILLAND: article—

* * *

Ray Milland had made over 60 feature films by the time he won an Oscar for his role as an alcoholic in Billy Wilder’s The Lost Weekend. The surprise shown by the critical establishment at Milland’s proficieny in the role suggests that nothing much had ever been expected of him. It is now clear, however, that The Lost Weekend simply reveals a more obvious aspect of Milland’s style; he had already built an impressive body of work and was to go on to deliver performances of increasing depth, vitality, variety, and originality.

Milland first appeared in films in 1929 and his easy charm and smooth good looks proved appropriate to many sorts of roles. He regularly turned in competent, sometimes excellent performances in comedies (Easy Living), musicals (Three Smart Girls), adventures (Beau Geste), and exotic romances (The Jungle Princess and its Technicolor remake Her Jungle Love, both with Dorothy Lamour). Milland signed a contract with Paramount in 1934 and the studio kept him continually busy; the actor averaged five features per year throughout the 1930s. He worked with most of Paramount’s top directors—Taurog, Ruggles, Tuttle, Wellman, Florey, Sandrich, Borzage—but the two who would make the films most representative of Milland’s styles were Mitchell Leisen and John Farrow.

Not only did Milland work often with the two directors (six features with Leisen, four with Farrow), his stylistic development can be seen clearest when his roles for them are compared. The quintessential Milland performances of the “leading man” variety are contained in Leisen’s delightful Easy Living and Kitty. The darker, more sinister side of his personality first came to the fore in Farrow’s Alias Nick Beal, a film in which Milland plays the Devil himself. It was, undoubtedly, The Lost Weekend that first suggested the less savory aspects of Milland’s character, but it was Farrow who developed and nurtured the duality of a suave, handsome gentleman who contains within himself the suggestion of blackest evil. In Farrow’s Westerns California and Copper Canyon, Milland portrays an ostensibly hero, but with the suggestion of a cruel and violent past; in The Big Clock, he essay the role of an “innocent” man in the intriguing position of trying to track himself down in a murder investigation.

There had been, throughout his career, a certain element of smugness behind the Milland smile, though earlier it was generally used for comedic effect. As Milland grew older and his value as smugness behind the Milland smile, though earlier it was generally used for comedic effect. As Milland grew older and his value as smugness behind the Milland smile, though earlier it was generally used for comedic effect. As Milland grew older and his value as

In 1955 Milland directed his first film, A Man Alone (in which he also starred) and proved that his increasingly original and iconoclastic style was a personal creation, not simply the result of eccentric interpretations of routine scripts. The five films he signed as director show the influence of personalities as diverse as Farrow, Russell Rouse and (particularly in his handling of Pan in Year Zero) Roger Corman, but all five are ultimately highly personal, subversive expressions of his unique vision. Pan in Year Zero and The Safecracker are marvelously tense, moody and imaginative; Hostile Witness and Lisbon are not as accomplished but are similarly intriguing.

Between directing stints Milland continued to take whatever acting jobs came his way. Two Corman quickies—The Premature Burial and The Man with the X-Ray Eyes—are fascinating, the latter providing Milland with the wittiest, most energetic role of his later career, but he appeared in a cavalcade of terrible films. One of the worst, the inexplicably popular Love Story, temporarily found a wide audience for Milland. One of the best of a bad lot is the surprisingly entertaining Frogs.

Hollywood never quite knew what it had in Ray Milland, but he continuously showed himself to be an adventurous artist, always interested in exposing his established image to radical and surprising lights.

—Frank Thompson

MILLER, Ann

Films as Actress:

1936 The Devil on Horseback (Wilbur)
1937 New Faces of 1937 (Jason); Stage Door (La Cava) (as Annie); The Life of the Party (Seiter) (as Betty)
1938 Radio City Revels (Stoloff) (as Billie Shaw); Having Wonderful Time (Santell) (as Vivian); You Can’t Take It with You (Capra) (as Essie Carmichael); Room Service (Seiter) (as Hilda Manney); Tarnished Angel (Goodwins) (as Violet McMaster)
1940 Too Many Girls (Abbott) (as Pepe); Hit Parade of 1941 (Auer) (as Annabelle Potter)
1941 Melody Ranch (Santley) (as Julie Shelton); Time Out for Rhythm (Salkow) (as Kitty Brown); Go West, Young Lady (Strayer) (as Lola); True to the Army (Rogell) (as Vicki Marlow)
1942 Priorities on Parade (Rogell) (as Donna D’Arcy)
1943 Reveille with Beverly (Barton) (title role); What’s Buzzin’ Cousin? (Barton) (as Ann Crawford)
1944 Jam Session (Barton) (as Terry Baxter); Hey Rookie (Barton) (as Winnie Clark); Carolina Blues (Jason) (as Julia Carver)
1945 Eve Knew Her Apples (Jason) (as Eve Porter); Eadie Was a Lady (Dreifuss) (title role)
1946 The Thrill of Brazil (Simon) (as Linda Lorenz)
1948 The Kissing Bandit (Benedek) (as fiesta dancer); Easter Parade (Walters) (as Nadine Gale)
1949 On the Town (Kelly and Donen) (as Claire Huddesan)
1950 Watch the Birdie (Donohue) (as Miss Lucky Vista)
1951 Two Tickets to Broadway (Kern) (as Joyce Campbell); Texas Carnival (Walters) (as Sunshine Jackson)
1952 Lovely to Look At (LeRoy) (as Bubbles Cassidy)
1953 Small Town Girl (Kardos) (as Lisa Bellmount); Kiss Me Kate (Sidney) (as Bianca)
1954 Deep in My Heart (Donen)
1955 Hit the Deck (Rowland) (as Ginger)
1956 The Opposite Sex (David Miller) (as Gloria Dell); The Great American Pastime (Hoffman) (as Mrs. Doris Patterson)
1976 Won Ton Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (Winner) (cameo)
Ann Miller in Kiss Me Kate

1994  That’s Entertainment! III (Friedgen and Sheridan) (as host)
1999  The Stan Freberg Commercials (Donavan & Stan Freberg) (as wife); Mulholland Drive (Lynch—for TV) (as Coco)

Publications

By MILLER: books—

By MILLER: article—

Interview, in After Dark (New York), November 1979.

On MILLER: books—

On MILLER: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), January 1990.

* * *

Ann Miller’s reputation as Hollywood’s virtuoso female tap dancer is challenged only by Eleanor Powell, whose career was ending as Miller’s was beginning. It is a tribute to Miller’s ability—and her long, shapely legs, and spirited personality—that she is as well known as she is, given that her roles were often second leads in minor musicals. Indeed, in only four of her films (Easter Parade, On the Town, Lovely to Look At, and Kiss Me Kate) did she work with other significant performers of the genre. Nevertheless, she managed to achieve a long and respectable career within the Hollywood studio system and subsequently on stage.

Although Miller’s dancing was limited to tap (she had to learn basic ballet steps to play Essie Carmichael in You Can’t Take It with You), within that form she incorporated almost limitless variations.
Since speed was her particular skill, she was able to include extra heel and toe in standard tap steps. Moreover, the dynamic quality of her dancing was often heightened by the spectacular nature of the routines. Many of her roles, particularly those at Columbia, were as a singer-dancer in nightclubs or vaudeville, and a climactic musical number highlighted Miller’s tapping. “Thumbs Up and V for Victory” in Revelle with Beverly and “No Name Jive” in Jam Session are examples; in each, she is backed by a chorus that, through arrangement of the sets and choreography, makes her dancing the center of attention.

When she worked with major figures of the genre (Fred Astaire and Gene Kelly, for example), Miller’s acting and singing as well as dancing became part of the MGM ensemble approach. Although she shares the screen in On the Town, for instance, she contributes to the whole film; there is at least one number that presents each character through song and dance. In hers, “Prehistoric Man,” she captures the libidinous nature of Claire Huddesen precisely because she dances that character. Without diminishing the air of glamour that Miller had cultivated throughout her career, her roles at MGM also allowed her to contribute to the musical genre while displaying her always stunning tap dancing ability.

Miller’s screen career, for all intents and purposes, ended with the death of the studio system and the decline of the Hollywood musical. This is a shame, because the persona she had established, which mainly won her the parts of comic (albeit attractive) ladies and bitches, might have sustained her well into middle age.

In recent years, she (along with her old MGM cohort, Mickey Rooney) has been touring in the musical revue Sugar Babies, demonstrating that after all these years her natural charm and dancing talents have not failed her.

—Jerome Delamater, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

MILLS, (Sir) John

Films as Actor:

1932 The Midshipmaid (Midshipmaid Gob) (de Courville) (as Golightly)
1933 Britannia of Billingsgate (Hill) (as Fred); The Ghost Camera (Vorhaus) (as Ernes Elton)
1934 A Political Party (Norman Lee) (as Tony Smithers); The River Wolves (Pearson) (as Peter Farrell); The Lash (Henry Edwards) (as Arthur Haughton); Doctor’s Orders (Norman Lee) (as Ronnie Blake); Those Were the Days (Bentley) (as Bobby); Blind Justice (Vorhaus) (as Ralph Summers)
1935 Brown on Resolution (Forever England; Born for Glory; Torpedo Raider) (Forde) (as Able Seaman Albert Brown); Car of Dreams (Melford and Cutts) (as Robert Miller); Royal Cavalcade (Regal Cavalcade) (Bentley and others) (as boy); Charing Cross Road (de Courville) (as Tony)
1936 First Offence (Bad Blood) (Mason) (as Johnnie Penrose); Tudor Rose (Nine Days a Queen; Lady Jane Grey) (Stevenson) (as Lord Guildford Dudley)
1937 O.H.M.S. (You’re in the Army Now) (Walsh) (as Cpl. Bert Dawson); The Green Cockatoo (Four Dark Hours; Race Gang) (Menzies and William K. Howard) (as Jim Connor)
1939 Goodbye Mr. Chips (Wood) (as Peter Colley as a young man)
1940 Old Bill and Son (Dalrymple) (as young Bill Busby); All Hands (Carstairs—short); Dangerous Comment (short); Now You’re Talking (short)
1941 Cottage to Let (Bombsight Stolen) (Asquith) (as Lt. George Perrey); The Black Sheep of Whitehall (Hay and Dearden) (as Bobby)
1942 The Young Mr. Pitt (Reed) (as William Wilberforce); In Which We Serve (Coward and Lean) (as Shorty Blake); The Big Blockade (Frend) (as Tom)
1943 We Dive at Dawn (Asquith) (as Lt. Freddie Taylor)
1944 Victory Wedding (Matthews—short); This Happy Breed (Lean) (as Billy Mitchell); Waterloo Road (Gilliat) (as Jim Colter)
1945 Total War in Britain (Rotha—doc) (as narrator); The Way to the Stars (Johnny in the Clouds) (Asquith) (as Peter Penrose)
1946 Great Expectations (Lean) (as Pip Pirrip); Land of Promise (Rotha—doc) (as voice)
1947 So Well Remembered (Dmytryk) (as George Boswell); The October Man (Baker) (as Jim Ackland)
1948 Scott of the Antarctic (Frend) (as Capt. Robert Falcon Scott)
1949 The History of Mr. Polly (Pelissier) (as Alfred Polly, + pr); Friend of the Family (Hill—doc) (as narrator); The Flying Skyscraper (short) (as narrator)
1950 The Rocking-Horse Winner (Pelissier) (as Bassett, + pr); Morning Departure (Operation Disaster) (Baker) (as Lieut. Comdr. Armstrong)
1951 Mr. Denning Drives North (Kimmins) (as Tom Denning)
1952 The Gentle Gunman (Relph and Dearden) (as Terence Sullivan)
1953 The Long Memory (Hamner) (as Davidson)
1954 Hobson’s Choice (Lean) (as Willie Mossop)
1955 The Colditz Story (Hamilton) (as Pat Reid); The End of the Affair (Dmytryk) (as Albert Parkis); Above Us the Waves (Thomas) (as Commander Frazer); Escapade (Leacock) (as John Hampden)
1956 War and Peace (King Vidor) (as Platon Karatayev); It’s Great to Be Young (Frankel) (as Mr. Dingle); The Baby and the Battleship (Jay Lewis) (as “Puncher” Roberts); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as London cabbie)
1957 Town on Trial (Guillermin) (as Supt. Mike Halloran); The Vicious Circle (Thomas) (as Dr. Howard Latimer)
1958 Denkirk (Norman) (as Corporal Tubby Binns); Ice Cold in Alex (Desert Attack) (J. Lee Thompson) (as Capt. Anson); I Was Monty’s Double (Hell, Heaven or Hoboken) (Guillermin) (as Major Harvey)
1959 Tiger Bay (J. Lee Thompson) (as Superintendent Graham); Season of Passion (Summer of the 17th Doll) (Norman) (as Barney)
1960 Swiss Family Robinson (Annakin) (as Mr. Robinson); Tunes of Glory (Neame) (as Lt. Col. Basil Barrow)
1961 The Singer Not the Song (Baker) (as Father Keogh)
1962 Flame in the Streets (Baker) (as “Jacko” Palmer); The Valiant (Baker) (as Captain Morgan); Tiara Tahiti (Kotcheff) (as Lt. Col. Clifford Southey)
1964 The Chalk Garden (Neame) (as Maitland)
1965 The Truth about Spring (Thorpe) (as Tommy Tyler); King Rat (Forbes) (as Smedley-Taylor); Operation Crossbow (The Great Spy Mission) (Anderson) (as General Boyd)
1966 The Wrong Box (Forbes) (as Masterman Finsbury)
1967 The Family Way (Boulting) (as Ezra Fitton); Chuka (Gordon Douglas) (as Colonel Stuart Valois); Africa—Texas Style! (Marton) (as Wing Commander Howard Hayes)
1969 Run Wild, Run Free (Sarafian) (as Moorman); Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig); Lady Hamilton (Emma Hamilton; The Making of a Lady) (Christian-Jaque) (as Sir William Hamilton); La morte non ha sesso (A Black Veil for Lisa) (Dallamano) (as Insp. Franz Bulov)
1970 Adam’s Woman (Return of the Boomerang) (Leacock) (as Sir Philip); Ryan’s Daughter (Lean) (as Michael)
1971 Delcima (Nesbitt) (as Mr. Parker)
1972 Lady Caroline Lamb (Bolt) (as Canning); Young Winston (Attenborough) (as General Kitchener)
1973 Oklahoma Crude (Kramer) (as Cleon Doyle)
1975 The Human Factor (Dmytryk) (as Mike McCallister)
1976 Dirty Knight’s Work (Trial by Combat; Choice of Weapons) (Connor) (as Bertie Cook)
1977 The Devil’s Advocate (Green) (as Blaise Meredith)
1978 The Big Sleep (Winner) (as Inspector Jim Carson); The Thirty-Nine Steps (Sharp) (as Colonel Scudder); Dr. Strange (De Guere—for TV)
1979 Zulu Dawn (Hickox) (as Sir Henry Bartle Frere); Quatermass Conclusion (Haggard) (as Prof. Bernard Quatermass)
1982 Gandhi (Attenborough) (as Lord Chelmsford)
1983 Sahara (McLaglen) (as Cambridge); A Woman of Substance (Sharp—for TV) (as Henry Rossiter)
1984 Masks of Death (Baker)
1985 Murder with Mirrors (Lowry—for TV) (as Lewis Serrocold); Edge of the Wind (Ives—for TV)
1986 When the Wind Blows (Murukami—animation) (as voice of Jim Bloggs); Hold the Dream (Sharp—for TV) (as Henry Rossiter); Witnesses

1987 Who’s That Girl? (Foley) (as Montgomery Bell)
1989 The Lady and the Highwayman (Hough) (as Sir Lawrence Dobson); A Tale of Two Cities (Monnier)
1990 Ending Up (Sasdy—for TV) (as Bernard)
1991 The Last Straw
1992 Galaxies Are Colliding
1993 Harnessing Peacocks (James Cellan Jones—for TV) (as Bernard); Frankenstein (Wickes—for TV) (as DeLacey)
1994 Deadly Advice (Fletcher) (as Jack the Ripper)
1996 Hamlet (Branagh) (as Old Norway)
1997 Bean (Mel Smith) (as Chairman)
1998 Cats (Mallet—for Video) (as Gus the Theatre Cat)
1999 The Best of British Cinema (as himself—for Video)

Film as Director and Producer:

1966 Sky West and Crooked (Gypsy Girl)

Publications

By MILLS: book—

Up in the Clouds, Gentlemen Please, New Haven, 1981.

By MILLS: article—

Interview in Photoplay (London), July 1980.

On MILLS: book—

On MILLS: articles:

Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), September 1991.

* * *

Whether stuck in the middle of the desert (Ice Cold in Alex) or stuck in the frozen climes of the South Pole (Scott of the Antarctic) or stuck at sea (In Which We Serve) or stuck in a prisoner-of-war camp (The Colditz Story), John Mills is so unfailingly cheerful, brave, and decent one gets the sense that were he to be cast against type, perhaps to play Adolf Hitler or Genghis Khan, we would warm to his performance and have him home to tea nonetheless.
It is surely significant that Mills first came to prominence in the war years, a period of consensus in British politics when decency—as embodied in 1946 by the Attlee government—was briefly fashionable, and where class, privilege, and good looks were not the sole criteria on which the British movie star was judged. As Jeffrey Richards has observed, Mills’s great achievement has been “to show the qualities of English decency operating at every level of society.” In 1947, Mills toppled Gainsborough Studios’ aristocratic “cad and rotter,” James Mason, from his perch at the top of the popularity polls. It is quite inconceivable that Mills would ever have bludgeoned Margaret Lockwood with an iron poker (as Mason did in The Man in Grey). Nor, in later life, would Mills have been happy contributing nymphets (as Mason did in Lolita). Whether as character actor or leading man, Mills maintained morals, principles, and basic humanity. Given the opportunity to follow Granger and Mason to Hollywood, he plumped for Britain.

Sometimes, Mills could exude an irritating sanctimony and smugness. As Pip in David Lean’s Great Expectations, he is dull and bland beside the gallery of Dickensian grotesques (Finlay Currie as the shaven-headed convict, Mr. Jaggers, Miss Havisham, and company); it seems very unlikely that Jean Simmons would ever have fallen for such a lackluster hero. And in Lean’s This Happy Breed, Mills’s decency and loyalty to Nöel Coward’s quaint ideal of the family—Mills’s portrayal of the boy-next-door—as in In Which We Serve, is faintly grating.

In the 1950s, as prosperity set in, and as Churchill and then Macmillan attempted to gnaw away at the “consensual decency” of the previous decade, Mills stood as a totem of the old values. Generally, British 1950s war films are seen as symptomatic of imperial anxiety, of Albion attempting to cope with its loss of significance in the world, with the growing pains of Suez and the disappearing empire. As British world influence dwindles, British filmmakers try to reinvoke martial myths of the recent past. Seen in such a light, Mills, forever dressed in khaki, seems a reactionary figure in such films as Tunes of Glory, which was, of course, that film’s point about his character.

It comes as something of a surprise to discover that Mills, like Cagney (to whom, although gentler with grapefruits, he is in some sense a British parallel), started off his career in musical comedy. Somehow, one does not think of him singing and dancing. In later years, Mills tried to break away from his Mr. Decent type; he played a deformed deaf-mute in Lean’s Ryan’s Daughter, a performance that won him a Best Supporting Actor Oscar, although it borders on the freakish. He marvelously played the stiff-necked dad of newlyweds Hywell Bennett and daughter Hayley in The Family Way. And he has even attempted to play the villain from time to time—as in the serial killer omnibus Deadly Advice, where he played Jack the Ripper. As General Haig, the butcher of the Somme who sent hundreds of thousands of British soldiers to their death, in the earlier Oh! What a Lovely War, he laced his villainy with sympathy to create a realistic human portrait. In all these films, he demonstrated that he is a far more versatile actor than his war-hero persona often allowed. Nonetheless, he will always be remembered as brave Shorty Blake with the stiff upper lip or as Courageous Captain Scott—as the chivalric and conscientious protagonist of a dozen British war movies.

—G. C. Macnab, updated by John McCarty

MINEO, Sal

Films as Actor:

1955 Six Bridges to Cross (Pevney); Rebel without a Cause (Ray) (as Plato); The Private War of Major Benson (Hopper)
1956 Crime in the Street (Siegel); Rock Pretty Baby (Bartlett); Somebody up There Likes Me (Wise); Giant (Stevens)
1957 Dino (Carr); The Young Don’t Cry (Werkher)
1958 Tonka (Foster)
1959 A Private Affair (Walsh); The Gene Krupa Story (Weis) (title role)
1960 Exodus (Preminger) (as Dov Landau)
1962 Escape from Zahrain (Neame) (as Tahar); The Longest Day (Annakin and others) (as Private Martini)
1964 Cheyenne Autumn (Kellogg) (as Red Shirt)
1965 The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens) (as Uriah); Who Killed Teddy Bear? (Cates) (as Lawrence)
Sal Mineo’s career was dominated by a single role that swiftly achieved the status of icon or myth: his Plato in Nicholas Ray’s Rebel without a Cause. Ray’s film, its intense and powerful dramatic inspiration intermittently transcending its “textbook sociology” base, is a striking example of a great opportunity almost seized and then fumbled: it opens up the possibility of constructing an alternative, nonrepressive and nonauthoritarian sexual/familial structure then opts for restoring “normality” at the end. Significantly, the vital move for completing this operation is the elimination of Plato, the character who, far more than Jim (James Dean) and Judy (Natalie Wood), resists assimilation into the norms of bourgeois culture.

Rebel is the only film in which Mineo’s character is clearly coded as gay. Typically, as with the film’s other teenage characters, his “problem” is “explained” in terms of an unsatisfactory family background; nevertheless, during the central sequences in the abandoned mansion, Plato’s gayness achieves a resonance that escapes the film’s glib sociologizing. The three characters move towards becoming an alternative family, mutually caring and protective, Jim as father, Judy as mother, Plato as child. Yet this is disturbed and complicated by the continual threat (produced as much by the sexual ambiguity of the Dean persona as by the presence of Mineo) of a sexual dimension to the men’s relationship: the implications of connecting the familial and the sexual in this way could scarcely be more radical. The strategy by which the film repudiates (rather than resolves) those implications is interesting: Jim becomes preoccupied with Judy at Plato’s expense, subsequently rendering him impotent by removing the bullets from his gun, hence unintentionally abetting in his death at the hands of patriarchal authority (in the form of the police). Thereafter, in the film’s famous last line, the heterosexual couple can be definitively reestablished and reintegrated into bourgeois normality.

Mineo’s persona has two aspects, vulnerability and aggressiveness. If Rebel offers the most complete realization of the former, the latter perhaps received fullest expression in Cheyenne Autumn, where Mineo played a transgressive and intractable Indian brave. It was Preminger who made possible the ideal fusion of the two sides: the young Irgun initiate of Exodus is surely Mineo’s finest performance, though achieved through the explicit repudiation of the persona’s gay connotations. (“They used me as you would use a woman.”) The extraordinary intensity of the interrogation scene is due as much to Mineo’s vulnerable/aggressive dualism as to Preminger’s iron control over editing and mise-en-scène.

—Robin Wood

MINNELLI, Liza

Nationality: American. Born: Liza May Minnelli in Los Angeles, California, 12 March 1946; daughter of the director Vincente Minnelli and the actress Judy Garland; sister of the actress Lorna Luft. Education: Attended public and private schools. Family: Married 1) Peter Allen, 1967 (divorced); 2) Jack Haley Jr., 1974 (divorced 1979); 3) Mark Gero, 1979 (divorced 1992). Career: Appeared as a small child in her mother’s film In the Good Old Summertime, 1949, and on stage with her mother at the Palace Theatre, New York, 1953; 1960—toured with her school production of The Diary of Anne Frank; 1963—in Broadway production of Best Foot Forward; 1964—made first recording, and appeared as singer with her mother at London Palladium; 1965—cabaret debut; 1968—dramatic role in film Charlie Bubbles; 1972—successful television special Liza with a Z; 1978–80—with the Martha Graham Dance Co., New York. Awards: Best Actress, Academy Award and Best Actress, British Academy, for Cabaret, 1972. Agent: c/o PMK Public Relations, 1776 Broadway, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1949 In the Good Old Summertime (Leonard) (as herself)
1968 Charlie Bubbles (Finney) (as Eliza)
1969 The Sterile Cuckoo (Pookie) (Pakula) (as “Pookie” Adams); Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon (Preminger) (title role)
1972 Cabaret (Fosse) (as Sally Bowles)
1974 That’s Entertainment! (Haley Jr.—compilation) (as host); Journey Back to Oz (Sutherland—animation, produced in 1964) (as voice of Dorothy)
1975 Lucky Lady (Donen) (as Claire)
1976 A Matter of Time (Vincente Minnelli) (as Nina); Silent Movie (Mel Brooks) (as herself)
1977 New York, New York (Scorsese) (as Francine Evans)
1981 Arthur (Gordon) (as Linda Marolla)
1983 The King of Comedy (Scorsese) (as herself)
1984 A Great Wind Cometh (Golan); The Muppets Take Manhattan (Oz) (cameo)
Liza Minnelli has not had much of a film career since New York, New York and her output, including the telefilms, is slight. Nevertheless, she has appeared in works that have been important in illustrating that she remains a major talent who continues to evolve. Most striking in this regard is A Time to Live, Minnelli’s first telefilm, in which she plays the role of a middle-class suburban woman whose son has muscular dystrophy. Playing a wife/mother who, in addition to fulfilling the caretaker role, struggles to accept the fact that her son will die young, Minnelli’s role represents a radical departure. While she brings her familiar emotional intensity to the characterization, Minnelli tempers the character’s emotionalism by emphasizing her innate intelligence, determination, and discipline. Minnelli’s performance is deeply felt, she is given strong support by her co-stars and the script has an integrity which lifts it above the inherent melodramatics of the subject matter.

In contrast to the unrelenting dramatics of A Time to Live, Stepping Out is a musical that makes wonderful use of Minnelli’s identity as a dancer, singer, and theatrical personality: an ideal Minnelli project allowing her to integrate her musical talents into a comedy/drama narrative. Unlike her previous musicals, the film has a contemporary setting and gives her a character who interacts with other women. It should have revived Minnelli’s film career but both the critics and the public were indifferent. Perhaps the film lacked sufficient star power and Minnelli, while surrounded by a strong supporting cast, did not have a name co-star; in any case, Stepping Out is Minnelli’s sole theatrical feature of quality and substance since New York, New York.

The low point of the more recent projects is Rent-a-Cop, a film which clumsily tries to combine the genres of the action film and the romantic comedy. Minnelli’s flamboyant performance as a brassy prostitute is a disaster and in great part because the film’s writers and director give her no help whatsoever in integrating the character into what is clearly a Burt Reynolds vehicle.

Aside from their being strong projects and the opportunities they afford Minnelli as an actor, A Time to Live and Stepping Out are of interest in that both films present Minnelli as a person who accepts responsibility and makes a commitment to those who need help. Clearly, Minnelli’s screen persona has grown considerably from the unrelenting dramatics of the subject matter.

At the Deli with Liza Minnelli,” interview with M. Peterson, in Inter/View (New York), May 1972.

On MINNELLl: books—

Spada, James, with Karen Swenson, Judy and Liza, New York, 1983.

On MINNELLl: articles—

Clark, John, filmography in Premiere (New York), May 1991.

“We Try Harder,” in Art Forum, Summer, 1993.

Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1993.

* * *
sensibility which counters the notion that today’s women are in control of their feelings. Also, Minnelli has cultivated, through the ties to her parents, an identity that connects her image to the classical Hollywood cinema. The reference to Hollywood’s past may cause some confusion in the public’s mind as to what era Minnelli’s presence personifies.

Minnelli keeps active doing live performances. She maintains an enthusiasm and energy and has managed not to be locked into playing the diva. In her most recent film project, the telefilm West Side Waltz, she undertakes a character part enacting the role of a naive and insecure middle-aged woman who discovers that she is capable of taking on responsibilities and, in doing so, begins to value herself. While Minnelli provides a charming and distinctive characterization in West Side Waltz, she should not be relegated to older women character parts. Minnelli is a vibrant and attractive woman and what she deserves is the opportunity to fully utilize her talents on-screen and grow as a person and artist.

—Richard Lippe

MIOU-MIOU

Nationality: French.
Born: Sylvette Herry, Paris, 22 February 1950.
Education: French public school until 1966.
Family: Daughters Angel (with Patrick Dewaere) and Jeanne (with Julien Clerc).
Career: Worked as an upholsterer’s apprentice in Paris, 1966; founder and actor, Café de la Gare theater, 1968; film debut in La Cavale, 1971.
Awards: César Award for Best Actress, for La Dérobade (The Getaway), 1979; Institut Lumière Award for Best Actress, for Nettoyage à sec (Dry Cleaning), 1997.
Agent: Artmédia, 10 avenue George V, 75008 Paris, France.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>La Cavale</td>
<td>Mitrani</td>
<td>(as Christian)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Themroc (Falardo)</td>
<td>(as Anita); Elle court, elle court la banlieue (Pirès)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Granges brulées (The Investigator)</td>
<td>Chapot (as Monique); Les Aventures de Rabbi Jacob (Oury) (as Antoinette Pivert)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Les Valseuses (Going Places)</td>
<td>(as Marie-Ange)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Tender Dracula (Grunstein); Pas de problème (No Problem) (Lautner) (as Anita); Un Genio, due compari, un pollo (The Genius) (Damiani)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>On aura tout vu (We Will Have Seen it All)</td>
<td>(as Christian); Jonas qui aura 25 ans en l’an 2000 (Tanner) (as Marie); F comme Fairbanks (Dugowson) (as Marie); Marcia trionfale (Victory March) (Boccaccio)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Dites-lui que je l’aime (This Sweet Sickness)</td>
<td>(as Juliette)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Les Routes du sud (Roads to the South)</td>
<td>(as Luce); L’Ingorgo—Una storia impossibile (Traffic Jam) (Comencini) (as Angela)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>La Dérobade (The Getaway)</td>
<td>(as Marie); Au revoir à lundi (Bye, See You Monday) (Dugowson) (as Nicole); La Femme flic (The Lady Cop) (Boisset)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Josepha (Frank)</td>
<td>(as Gisèle d’Estoc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Coup de foudre (Entre Nous)</td>
<td>(as Madeleine); Attention! Une femme peut en cacher une autre (My Other Husband) (Lautner) (as Alice); Canicule (Dog Day) (Boisset)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Blanche et Marie (Renard)</td>
<td>(as Marie); Le Vol du Sphinx (Flight of the Phoenix) (Ferrier) (as Laura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Une vie comme je veux</td>
<td>(as Laurence)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>L’Argent (Rouffio—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Caroline Hamelin); Tenue de soirée (Ménage) (Blier) (as Monique)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Les Portes tournantes (The Revolving Doors)</td>
<td>(as Lauda); La Lectrice (The Reader) (Deville) (as Constance/Marie)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Milou en mal (May Fools)</td>
<td>(as Camille)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Netchaïev est de retour (Netchaïev Is Back)</td>
<td>(as Brigitte); La Totale (The Jackpot) (Zidi) (as Hélène)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Patrick Dewaere (Esposito); Le Bal des casse-pieds (Robert)</td>
<td>(as Louise Sherry)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Tango</td>
<td>(as Marie); Germinal (Berri) (as Maheude)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Une femme dans la tourmente (Moati); Un Indien dans la ville (Little Indian, Big City) (An Indian in Paris)</td>
<td>(as Patricia); Montparnasse-Pondichéry (Robert) (as Julie)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Ma femme me quitte (My Woman is Leaving Me)</td>
<td>(as Joanna Martin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
In 1974, after six years of stage acting and unremarkable movie parts, Miou-Miou was offered the part of Marie-Ange in Bertrand Blier’s picaresque tale of life in the French suburbs, Les Valseuses (Going Places). The film became a French classic, and Miou-Miou, along with her co-stars Gérard Depardieu and Patrick Dewaere, was on her way to becoming an icon. Pure “gamine” or “waif” in every sense of the word, Miou-Miou (who was given the name by legendary French comedian and former lover Coluche) conveyed body and soul the repressed sexuality of hairdresser Marie-Ange. This sexuality later explodes in the film through Marie Ange’s adventures with wanderers Jean-Claude and Pierrot, and it established the frail and delicate Miou-Miou as an emblem of popular womanhood. French film critic Jean-Michel Frodon wrote that Miou-Miou’s performance in the film is marked by “a disturbing submission, a dead spirit in a heavy body, burdened with vulgarity, all followed by a sublime vitality.” This unlikely combination of grit, fragility, and masked sexuality guaranteed Miou-Miou’s place in French cinematic history.

Following her explosive performance in this landmark film, Miou-Miou went on to make some 16 more films in the 1970s alone, including Dites-lui que je l’aime (This Sweet Sickness) in which she, again, played opposite Depardieu, and La Dérobade (The Getaway), for which she was granted a César for best actress. Yet, despite the award, it was not until 1983 that Miou-Miou was again able to demonstrate her force as an actress. This time, it was in Diane Kurys’s semi autobiographical film, Coup de foudre (Entre Nous). In the film, Miou-Miou plays Madeleine, a submissive housewife in post-war France, who meets Léna (played by Isabelle Huppert), a Jewish woman married to a man she does not love. Over the course of the film, a passionate friendship develops between the two women, as both neglect their children and lie to their husbands in order to be together. Again, Miou-Miou gives a remarkable performance, showing the quiet torment of Madeleine, stuck in the middle-class female role assigned to her by society. As Madeleine evolves, Miou-Miou makes visible not only the resigned sadness, which had marked Madeleine’s married life, but the evolving strength, independence, and even selfishness that the contact between she and Léna ignites. With this performance, Miou-Miou gained a great deal of international attention, and the film itself was nominated for an Academy Award for Best Foreign Film.

In 1988, Miou-Miou gave another highly acclaimed performance as an atypical woman in Michel Deville’s La Lectrice (The Reader). In this film, she plays Constance, a woman reading, and Marie, a character in one of the books that Constance reads. Marie, in the book, is a professional reader, who visits clients and reads to them the book of their choice. This portrayal of two (overlapping) women in the same film, as well as Miou-Miou’s acting out of the act of reading, give the film unusual depth. Also noteworthy is the alternation between Marie’s sizzling sexuality and her intelligence, especially when men attempt to turn this sexuality against her. In a particularly riveting scene, for example, Marie is coerced into reading the Marquis de Sade for men who clearly wish to dominate her through her reading. Through her cold, distant interpretation of these highly pornographic works, Miou-Miou gives a strength and dignity to a character who might otherwise be seen as a prostitute (she has sex with many of her clients). Instead of a sexy type, Miou-Miou creates a female character who overcomes her seeming weakness with an iron will and a determined mind.

In 1993, Miou-Miou played one of the most assexual and gritty roles of her career in Claude Berri’s epic version of Émile Zola’s Germinal. As Maheude, the wife of a coal miner, and a coal miner herself, Miou-Miou goes through the entirety of the film in soot-covered rags. The coal dust, however, is not sufficient to mask the raw courage and latent anger Miou-Miou brings to Maheude. It is clear from her portrayal that the character lies very close to Miou-Miou’s own experience, a fact that she has admitted. Her near complete identification with this misery of Maheude’s existence, and her embodiment of the battered dignity of this nineteenth-century heroine, reveal that her own working class background has not been forgotten.

Miou-Miou’s most recent award winning performance was in 1997 in Anne Fontaine’s Nettoyage à sec (Dry Cleaning). As a different heroine, this time a coal miner herself, Miou-Miou plays the role of Marie Kunster, the wife of a dry-cleaner. In the film, Marie, bored with her marriage and with her life, falls passionately for Loic, a young transvestite. Eventually, Loic moves in with the Kunsters, and steamy affairs begin with both husband and wife. In the film, Miou-Miou gives not only another wildly sexual performance, she again depicts the emotional and psychological complexity of an unhappy woman, who has not allowed herself to recognize or admit her own unhappiness.

Although she is no longer acting in four to five films per year, as she did earlier in her career, and although known as much in recent years for her political activism as for her film career, Miou-Miou, now... in her late forties, still manages to find challenging roles. In 1999, for example, she won acclaim in Luis Galvao Teles’ film Elles (Women) and she is currently featured in Claude Mouriéras film Légères absences. It seems that, despite her age, Miou-Miou, whom director Anne Fontaine once called “the most popular actress of her generation,” has lost none of her force and none of her appeal.

—Dayna Oscherwitz

MIRANDA, Carmen

Nationality: Brazilian. Born: Maria do Carmo Miranda da Cunha in Lisbon, Portugal, 9 February 1909; grew up in Rio de Janeiro. Career: Radio singer and recording star in Brazil from late 1920s; 1939—debut on Broadway in The Streets of Paris; also appeared at the Waldorf-Astoria; 1940—U.S. film debut in Down Argentine Way as featured act; also appeared on television. Died: Of heart attack, in Beverly Hills, California, 5 August 1955.

Films as Actress:

- 1933 A voz do carnaval (Gonzaga and Mauro)
- 1935 Alô, alô, Brasil! (Downey, de Barro, and Ribeiro); Estudantes (Downey)
- 1936 Alô, alô carnaval! (Gonzaga)
- 1939 Banana da terra (de Barro)
- 1940 Down Argentine Way (Cummings) (as herself)
- 1941 That Night in Rio (Cummings) (as Carmen); Weekend in Havana (Walter Lang) (as Rosita Rivas)
- 1942 Springtime in the Rockies (Cummings) (as Rosita Murphy)
- 1943 The Gang’s All Here (The Girls He Left Behind) (Berkeley) (as Chiquita Hart)
- 1944 Four Jills in a Jeep (Seiler) (as herself); Greenwich Village (Walter Lang) (as Princess Querida); Something for the Boys (Seiler) (as Chiquita Hart)
- 1944 Doll Face (Come Back to Me) (Seiler) (as Chita); If I’m Lucky (Seiler) (as Michele O’Toole)
- 1947 Copacabana (Alfred E. Green) (as Carmen Novarro)
- 1948 A Date with Judy (Thorpe) (as Rosita Cochellas)
- 1950 Nancy Goes to Rio (Leonard) (as Marina Rodriguez)
- 1953 Scared Stiff (George Marshall) (as Carmelita Castinha)

Publications

On MIRANDA: books—

On MIRANDA: articles—

- Current Biography 1941, New York, 1941.

On MIRANDA: film—

* * *

Carmen Miranda’s phenomenal but limited success in Hollywood seems closely linked to the United States’s Good Neighbor Policy during World War II and Twentieth Century-Fox’s skill at showcasing musical talent. The Good Neighbor Policy encouraged economic, cultural, and military alliance between the United States and Central and South America. Within this political climate, Miranda would fulfill the role of musical “ambassador” between Latin America and... the United States, giving American audiences a taste of Brazilian culture. This “taste” however, as nurtured by Fox, proved narrow, highly stereotyped, and offensive to Brazilian audiences.

The most popular singer in Brazil during the 1930s, Miranda recorded more than 100 records, appeared in five films, and conducted nine sold-out South American tours. These credentials brought her to New York City in 1939 to appear in The Streets of Paris. Her stereotyping as a Brazilian “bimbo” began with her first American interview. Hoping to impress with her sparse English she exclaimed, “I say money, money, money and I say hot dog! I say yes, no, and I say money, money, money . . . .” When asked why she learned to say money, Miranda answered, through an interpreter, that everyone who comes to the United States must learn to say money. Financially insightful, but probably not the best first impression to make. Nevertheless, after her six-minute performance garnered unanimous rave reviews, she became the toast of the town. Her costumes set a fashion trend and the samba dominated New York City dance floors.

Her return to Brazil after the show closed proved significantly less triumphant. Held responsible for “Americanizing” and betraying Brazilian culture, Miranda’s popularity plummeted. A cruel response from her own people to her Broadway success, but one that became prophetic. When she signed an exclusive contract with Twentieth Century-Fox, she remained essentially a “novelty act” perpetuating her star image as the “Brazilian Bombshell” in film after film.

From Down Argentine Way to Scared Stiff, Miranda was carefully placed as a well-known and tempestuous Latin performer who spoke broken English (her first three films were set in Argentina, Brazil, and Cuba to legitimize her accent) and sang in Portuguese. Her frenetic and incessant gesturing, whether performing or not, suggested a human whirligig. Her clothing copied her Broadway costumes which she brought from South America: Brazilian native dress modeled on the “bahiana,” the African vendors of Bahia, Brazil. Their clothing features many layers of brightly colored and differently textured fabric topped with glittering jewelry and flower/fruit hats. Twentieth Century-Fox modified and exaggerated this folk dress until her exotic millinery became her trademark. Busby Berkeley created the ultimate image of Miranda when he made her “The Lady in the Tutti-Frutti Hat,” in The Gang’s All Here. Standing under a forced-perspective set painting that suggested an impossibly gigantic banana hat, Miranda became the stereotyped embodiment of Brazil people feared.

Even when top-billed, Miranda was never cast as the romantic lead, her non-American mannerisms and sexuality being “unsuitable” for the hero. Miranda’s volatile nature juxtaposed the introverted demeanor (hence cultural “acceptability”) of the romantic female leads with whom she was often paired: Alice Faye and Vivian Blaine. The only time she was cast as the romantic lead, in Copacabana, she played a dual role that demonstrated her typical position, fluctuating between her usual “Brazilian” performing style and a refined French chanteuse.

Remarkably, given the near caricature of her persona, Miranda became a major musical star and the highest-paid female performer in the United States during World War II. Even though she made only 14 Hollywood films, Miranda’s star image is still readily recognized in the United States today. She has been parodied by everyone including Mickey Rooney in Babes on Broadway, Bugs Bunny, Milton Berle, and a number of Gary Larson cartoons. That she should be best remembered for her hats undercuts her talent. Her Brazilian legacy as one of that country’s most popular performers provides a more fitting epithet.

—Greg S. Faller

MIRREN, Helen

Films as Actress:

1967 Hérostratus (Don Levy)
1968 A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Peter Hall) (as Hermia)
1969 Age of Consent (Michael Powell) (as Cora Ryan)
1972 Savage Messiah (Ken Russell) (as Gosh Smith-Boyle); Miss Julie (Phillips and Glenister) (title role)
1973 O Lucky Man! (Lindsay Anderson) (as Patricia)
1976 Hamlet (Coronado)
1978 As You Like It (Basil Coleman—for TV) (as Rosalind); The Collection (for TV)
1979 S.O.S. Titanic (William Hale—for TV) (as Stewardess May Sloan); Blue Remembered Hills (Brian Gibson—for TV)
1980 Caligula (Brass—produced in 1977) (as Cesonia); Hussy (Chapman) (as Beaty Simons); The Fiendish Plot of Dr. Fu Manchu (Haggard) (as Alice Rage); The Long Good Friday (Mackenzie) (as Victoria)
1981 Excalibur (Boorman) (as Morgana); Priest of Love (Christopher Miles); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Mosshinsky—for TV) (as Titania)
1982 Cymbeline (Mosshinsky—for TV) (as Imogen)
1984 Cal (O’Connor) (as Marcella Morton); 2010 (Hyams) (as Tanya Kirbuck); The Little Mermaid (Iscove—for TV)
Helen Mirren

1985 White Nights (Hackford) (as Galina Ivanova); The Gospel According to Vic (Heavenly Pursuits) (Gormley) (as Ruth Chancellor); Coming Through (Barber-Fleming—for TV) (as Frieda von Richtofer Weekly)

1986 The Mosquito Coast (Weir) (as Mother)

1987 Invocation: Maya Deren (doc) (as narrator); Cause Celebre (Gorrie—for TV) (as Alma Rattenbury)

1988 Pascal’s Island (Dearden) (as Lydia Neuman)

1989 When the Whales Came (Rees) (as Clemmie Jenkins); The Cook, the Thief, His Wife & Her Lover (Greenaway) (as Georgina Spica, the Wife); Red Knight, White Knight (Geoff Murphy—for TV) (as Anna)

1990 Bethune: The Making of a Hero (Dr. Bethune) (Borsos—released in U.S. in 1993) (as Frances Penny Bethune)

1991 The Comfort of Strangers (Schrader) (as Caroline); Where Angels Fear to Tread (Sturridge) (as Lilia Herriton); People of the Forest: The Chimps of Gombe (TV doc) (as narrator)

1993 The Hawk (Hayman) (as Annie Marsh)

1994 Prince of Jutland (Axel) (as Queen Geruth); The Madness of King George (Hytner) (as Queen Charlotte)

1996 Prime Suspect: Inner Circles (Sarah Pia Anderson—for TV) (as Supt. Jane Tennison); Losing Chase (Kevin Bacon); Some Mother’s Son (Terry George) (as Kathleen Quigley + assoc. pr); Prime Suspect 5: Errors of Judgment (Philip Davis—mini for TV) (as Supt. Jane Tennison)

1997 Critical Care (Lumet) (as Stella); Painted Lady (Jarrold—mini for TV) (as Maggie Sheridan + assoc. pr)

1998 Sidoglio Smithee (Molina) (as herself)

1999 Teaching Mrs. Tingle (Williamson) (as Mrs. Tingle); Prime Suspect (as DCI Jane Tennison); The Passion of Ayn Rand (Menaal) (as Ayn Rand); Green Fingers (Hershman)

Publications

By MIRREN: articles—

Interview with Amy Rennert, in New Orleans Magazine, April 1994.
On MIRREN: book—

On MIRREN: articles—
Premier (Boulder), January 1997.

Helen Mirren’s career has been a remarkable blend of prestige and trashy roles, befitting an actress who has enjoyed long-term membership in the Royal Shakespeare Company and highly publicized exposés of her Bohemian lifestyle and romantic involvements with, most notably, Liam Neeson and Taylor Hackford (with whom Mirren has lived in Los Angeles since the mid-1980s). In the 1970s, she was known as “the Sex Bomb of the RSC,” once quoted as proudly proclaiming, “I like sex; I’m extremely sensual.” In her first major screen role, in Michael Powell’s Australian feature, Age of Consent, she snorkeled nude along the Great Barrier Reef. She was provocatively naked in Ken Russell’s Savage Messiah, and on stage in the 1971 Royal Shakespeare Company production of Jean Genet’s The Balcony. Mirren was at ease, and superb, in Shakespearean roles, including Hermia and Titania in 1968 (film) and 1982 (stage) productions of A Midsummer Night’s Dream, Lady Macbeth on stage in 1974, and Rosalind in the BBC’s As Your Like It. At the same time, she enjoyed shocking the critics and her fans by performing in Gore Vidal’s Caligula, but not, as she points out, “in the naughty bits.”

Splendid as she was as Queen Charlotte, opposite Nigel Hawthorne, in the film adaptation of Alan Bennett’s play, The Madness of George III, it is in the medium of television in recent years that Helen Mirren has garnered most praise and an international following. She first attracted the attention of American audiences in 1987 in Anglia Television’s adaptation of Terence Rattigan’s Cause Celebre, playing the real-life Alma Rattenbury, who, in 1935, took her 18-year-old chauffeur as her lover and encouraged him to murder her husband. From that performance as a lonely and confused middle-aged woman, Mirren moved on to an entirely different role, that of Detective Chief Inspector Jane Tennison in Lynda La Plante’s Prime Suspect. Here, Mirren is cast as the highest ranking policewoman in the United Kingdom, fighting both sexism and the intrusion of her private life. Mirren’s characterization is of a strong woman, plagued by self doubts and one whose place in the system forces her to display an unpleasant edge. Thanks to Alma Rattenbury and Jane Tennison, Mirren has become, in the words of James Wolcott in the New Yorker, “the heiress to Glenda Jackson as the queen of the quality mini-series.”

From a major British stage performer of the 1970s, Helen Mirren graduated to secondary film roles in the 1980s and starring television performances in the late 1980s and 1990s. In middle age, the actress gives little indication as to what the future holds. The prurient will note that her body, as well displayed as it was in The Cook, the Thief, His Wife & Her Lover, shows no signs of aging, while her facial features have developed from a somewhat vacuous expression to those of a woman who has obviously enjoyed a very interesting life and whose few lines are suggestive of an intellectual interior rather than the aging process.

—Anthony Slide

MITCHUM, Robert

Films as Actor:

(as Bob Mitchum)

1943 Hoppy Serves a Writ (Archainbaud) (as Rigney); The Leather Burners (Henabery) (as Randall); Border Patrol (Selander)
Robert Mitchum and Sally Jane Bruce in The Night of the Hunter (as a henchman); Follow the Band (Yarbrough) (as Tate Winters); Aerial Gunner (Pine) (as Sergeant); Colt Comrades (Selander) (as Bart); Cry Havoc! (Thorpe) (as groaning man); The Human Comedy (Brown) (as Horse); Minesweeper (Berke) (as Chuck); We’ve Never Been Licked (Texas to Tokyo) (Rawlins) (as Panhandle Mitchell); Beyond the Last Frontier (Bretherton) (as Trigger Dolan); Bar Twenty (Selander) (as Richard Adams); Doughboys in Ireland (Landers) (as Earnie Jones)

(as Robert Mitchum)

1943 Corvette K-225 (Rossen) (as Shephard); The Lone Star Trail (Taylor) (as Ben Slocum); False Colors (Archimbault) (as Rip Austin); Dancing Masters (St. Clair) (as Mickey); Riders of the Deadline (Selander) (as Drago); Gung Ho! (Enright) (as Pigiron Matthews)

1944 Johnny Doesn’t Live Here Anymore (And So They Were Married) (Joe May) (as Jeff Daniels); Mr. Winkle Goes to War (Arms and the Woman) (Alfred E. Green) (as corporal); When Strangers Marry (Betrayed) (Castle) (as Fred); Girl Rush (Gordon Douglas) (as Jimmy Smith); Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy) (as Bob Gray); Nevada (Killy) (as Jim “Nevada” Lacy)

1945 West of the Pecos (Killy) (as Pecos Smith); The Story of G.I. Joe (G.I. Joe; War Correspondent) (Wellman) (as Lt. Walker)

1946 Till the End of Time (Dmytryk) (as William Tabeshaw); Undercurrent (Minnelli) (as Michael Garraway); The Locket (Brahm) (as Norman Clyde)

1947 Pursued (Walsh) (as Jeb Rand); Crossfire (Dmytryk) (as Sgt. Peter Keeley); Desire Me (Cukor and LeRoy, both uncredited) (as Paul Albert); Out of the Past (Build My Gallows High) (Jacques Tourneur) (as Jeff Bailey)

1948 Rachel and the Stranger (Norman Foster) (as Jim Fairways); Blood on the Moon (Wise) (as Jimmy Garry)

1949 The Red Pony (Milestone) (as Billy Buck); The Big Steal (Siegel) (as Lt. Duke Halliday); Holiday Affair (Hartman) (as Steve Mason)

1950 Where Danger Lives (Farrow) (as Jeff Cameron)

1951 My Forbidden Past (Stevenson) (as Dr. Mark Lucas); His Kind of Woman (Farrow) (as Dan Miller); The Racket (Cromwell) (as Captain Thomas McQuigg)
1952 Macao (von Sternberg) (as Nick Cochran); One Minute to Zero (Garnett) (as Colonel Steve Janowski); The Last Men (Nicholas Ray) (as Jeff McLoud); Angel Face (Preminger) (as Frank Jessup)

1953 White Witch Doctor (Hathaway) (as Lonnie Douglas); Second Chance (Maté) (as Russ Lambert)

1954 She Couldn’t Say No (Beautiful but Dangerous) (Lloyd Bacon) (as Doc); River of No Return (Preminger) (as Matt Calder); Track of the Cat (Wellman) (as Curt Bridges)

1955 Not as a Stranger (Kramer) (as Lucas Marsh); The Night of the Hunter (Laughton) (as Preacher Harry Powell); Man with the Gun (The Trouble Shooter) (Wilson) (as Clint Tollinger)

1956 Foreign Intrigue (Sheldon Reynolds) (as Dave Bishop); Bandido (Fleischer) (as Richard Wilson)

1957 Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison (Huston) (title role); Fire Down Below (Parrish) (as Felix); The Enemy Below (Powell) (as Captain Murrell)

1958 Thunder Road (Ripley) (as Lucas Doolin, + pr, co-sc); The Hunters (Powell) (as Maj. Cleve Seville)

1959 The Angry Hills (Aldrich) (as Mike Morrison); The Wonderful Country (Parrish) (as Martin Brady)

1960 Home from the Hill (Minnelli) (as Captain Wade Hunnicut); The Night Fighters (A Terrible Beauty) (Garnett) (as Dermot O’Neill); The Grass Is Greener (Donen) (as Charles Delacro); The Sundowners (Zinnemann) (as Paddy Carmony)

1961 The Last Time I Saw Archie (Webb) (as Archie Hall)

1962 Cape Fear (J. Lee Thompson) (as Max Cady); The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Wicki, and Oswald) (as Brig. Gen. Norman Cota); Two for the Seesaw (Wise) (as Jerry Ryan)

1963 The List of Adrian Messenger (Huston) (as Jim Slattery); Rampage (Karlson) (as Harry Stanton)

1964 Man in the Middle (Hamilton) (as L.t. Colonel Barney Adams); What a Way to Go! (J. Lee Thompson) (as Rod Anderson)

1965 Mr. Moses (Neame) (title role)

1966 The Way West (McLaglen) (as Dick Summers); El Dorado (Hawks) (as J. D. Harrah)

1967 Lo sbarco di Anzio (Anzio: The Battle for Anzio) (Dmytryk) (as Dick Ennis); Villa Rides (Kulick) (as Lee Arnold); Five Card Stud (Hathaway) (as Jonathan Rudd)

1968 Secret Ceremony (losey) (as Albert); Young Billy Young (Kennedy) (as Ben Kane); The Good Guys and the Bad Guys (Kennedy) (as James Flagg)

1970 Ryan’s Daughter (Lean) (as Charles Shaughnessy)

1971 Going Home (Leonard) (as Harry K. Graham)

1972 The Wrath of God (Nelson) (as Van Horne)

1973 The Friends of Eddie Coyle (Yates) (as Eddie Coyle)

1974 The Yakuzza (Pollack) (as Harry Kilmer); Farewell, My Lovely (Richards) (as Philip Marlowe)

1976 Midway (Battle of Midway) (Smith) (as Admiral William Halsey); The Last Tycoon (Kazan) (as Pat Brady)

1977 The Amsterdam Kill (Clouse) (as Quinlin)

1978 Matilda (Daniel Mann) (as Duke Parkhurst); The Big Sleep (Winner) (as Philip Marlowe)

1979 Breakthrough (Sargent Steiner) (McLaglen) (as Col. Rogers)

1980 Night Kill (Post—for TV) (as Donner)

1981 Agency (Kaczender) (as Ted)

1982 That Championship Season (Miller) (as Coach Delaney); One Shoe Makes It Murder (Hole—for TV) (as Harold Shillman)

1983 A Killer in the Family (Heffron—for TV) (as Gary Tison)

1984 The Ambassador (J. Lee Thompson) (as Peter Hacker)

1985 Maria’s Lovers (Konchalovsky) (as Ivan’s father); The Hearst and Davies Affair (Rich—for TV) (as William Randolph Hearst); Reunion at Fairborough (Wise—for TV); Promises to Keep (Black)

1986 Thompson’s Last Run (Freedman—for TV)

1988 Mr. North (Danny Huston) (as James McHenry Bosworth); John Huston: The Man, the Movies, the Maverick (Martín—doc) (as narrator); Scrooged (Richard Donner) (as Preston Rhinelander); Jake Spanner, Private Eye (Katzin—for TV)

1989 Brotherhood of the Rose (Chomsky—for TV) (as John Eliot)

1990 Presumé dangereux (Believed Violent) (Lautner) (as Prof. Forrester); A Family for Joe (Melman—for TV) (as Joe)

1991 Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders); Cape Fear (Scorsese) (as Lt. Elgart)

1992 Tombstone (Cosmatos) (as narrator); Midnight Ride (Bralver); Woman of Desire (Ginty) (as Walter J. Hill)

1993 Backfire (A. Dean Bell) (as Marshal Marc Marshall)

1994 Dead Man (Jarmusch) (as John Dickinson); Palein (The Sunset Boys) (Risan); Wild Bill: Hollywood Maverick (Robinson)

1995 James Dean: Race with Destiny (Rustam) (as George Stevens)

Publications

By MITCHUM: articles—

Interview with B. Rehfield, in Esquire (New York), February 1983.
Interview in Films (London), November 1984.
Interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), December 1991.

On MITCHUM: books—

Malcolm, Derek, Robert Mitchum, Tunbridge Wells, Kent, 1984.
On MITCHUM: articles—

Thompson, Frank, “Robert Mitchum: The Original Mr. Attitude Can Act as Well as He Wants,” in American Film (New York), May 1991.

“Do You Want to Write a Screenplay for Robert Mitchum?” in Written By (Los Angeles), December/January 1996/97.

Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1996.

Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), August 1997.

Obituary, in Skrien (Amsterdam), September 1997.

* * *

Whether due to natural modesty or shrewdness, Robert Mitchum has cultivated an image as Hollywood’s I Don’t Care Boy. A self-proclaimed graduate of the I-Just-Show-Up-and-Read-My-Lines School of Acting, Mitchum presents the media and his devotees with a portrait of himself as a no-nonsense underachiever who lucked into his career. For a man whose first minor break came when he volunteered to ride a horse that had just killed another bit player, the truth about his casual attitude might be complex enough for the kind of treatment Kurosawa gave Rashomon.

Brimming with the sort of he-man sexuality that swept away women’s better judgment, Mitchum might have been stuck playing muscle-bound rascals if he had come to prominence sooner, but his ascendency coincided with the postwar turmoil encapsulated in film noir. A man of few words, all of them packed with dynamite, the terse Mitchum was a minimalist actor; since he did not call attention to himself with Oscar-grabbing flourishes, his economical methods make his cleanly delivered performances seem all the more modern today. Winning his first and only Oscar nomination for The Story of G.I. Joe, Mitchum always had the luxury of alternating hero and villain roles as he effortlessly changed his wardrobe from leather chaps to soldier fatigue to P.I. trench coat, with an innate fashion sense of what the well-dressed antihero wore. Never letting up with his official line about not taking his career seriously, Mitchum outlasted his more highly regarded contemporaries until he was the last Golden Age male superstar still billed above the title.

At the time when he was RKO’s resident screwed-over everyman, his notorious drug bust actually enhanced his reputation by jazzing up his social outlaw image. Ingrid Bergman, Tom Neal, Rory Calhoun and many others were not so fortunate in an era when Confidential magazine began invading stars’ homes to look for skeletons in their closets.

Perpetuating his persona as a frontiersman with a past (Rachel and the Stranger, Blood on the Moon), Mitchum brought an equally haunted quality to bear on RKO’s other genre staple, the fatalistic urban thriller in which Mitchum hinted that resignation to corruption was often an antihero’s only recourse. If Out of the Past engraves the tough, soul-sick Mitchum image in stone, his other RKO standouts hint at something more sinister than entrapment in a cycle of crime. What is endlessly fascinating about movies such as Angel Face, The Locket, Where Danger Lives, and My Foolish Past is that the solidly built male star at the center of these whirlpools is primarily a fall guy for women. In the provocative Angel Face, Mitchum is the heterosexual’s worst nightmare, a man of action turned impotent by a controlling beauty. Less perilously paired with Jane Russell in a series of robust adventures, Mitchum’s lighter side received a workout, but he continued adding to his star luster with straightforward leading-man roles opposite Deborah Kerr, Marilyn Monroe, and others, in exciting romantic films that explored his good-natured skepticism while exercising his broad appeal to men and women.

In the course of easing into his own played-down legend, Mitchum broadened his range with subtle turns in sophisticated misfires such as Secret Ceremony, singlehandedly salvaged the epic Ryan’s Daughter with his quiet authority, and brought heartbreaking purity to bear on his portrayal of an Australian sheep farmer cursed with wanderlust but blessed with Deborah Kerr in The Sundowners.

Knocking the socks off even his admirers, Mitchum also made chilled-to-the-marrow moviegoers shudder with his interpretations of rotten villains in Cape Fear and The Night of the Hunter. The former is a taut psycho-thriller about a sadist conversant with legal niceties; Mitchum fashions a stalker monster clearly ahead of his time—an achievement all the more impressive since critics-darling Robert De Niro failed to outdo Mitchum in the dreadful Scorcese remake. Even finer is Mitchum’s venal bible-thumper in The Night of the Hunter, Charles Laughton’s expressionist fairy tale now regarded as a horror classic. If these two performances do not clinch the argument that Mitchum is a great screen actor then the definition of great screen acting needs to be modified.

Late in his career, Mitchum’s seen-it-all wariness and offhanded gallantry redefined forties detective iconography for contemporary times with Farewell, My Lovely. In a fitting career capstone, the mini-series The Winds of War and War and Remembrance consolidated Mitchum’s position as one of Hollywood’s durable icons. It is fortunate that Mitchum endured to receive accolades for a body of work that he consistently undervalued. Somewhere behind those heavy-lidded eyes and are-you-kidding exterior, Mitchum have felt... secretly vindicated. Although filmgoers have enjoyed this late bloomer’s laconic presence for years, the critical and popular consensus has finally caught up with Mitchum’s greatness as a screen star.

—Robert Pardi

MONROE, Marilyn

Films as Actress:

1948 Scudda Hoo! Scudda Hay! (Summer Lightning) (Herbert) (as extra); Dangerous Years (Pierson) (as Evie); Ladies of the Chorus (Karlson) (as Peggy Martin)
1949 Love Happy (Miller) (as extra)
1950 A Ticket to Tomahawk (Sale) (as Clara); The Asphalt Jungle (Huston) (as Angela Phinlay); All about Eve (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Miss Caswell); The Fireball (The Challenge) (Garnett) (as Polly); Right Cross (John Sturges) (as girl at nightclub)
1951 Home Town Story (Pierson) (as Miss Martin); As Young as You Feel (Harmon Jones) (as Harriet); Love Nest (Joseph M. Newman) (as Roberta Stevens); Let’s Make It Legal (Sale) (as Joyce)
1952 Clash by Night (Fritz Lang) (as Peggy); We’re Not Married (Goulding) (as Annabel Norris); Don’t Bother to Knock (Roy Ward Baker) (as Nell); Monkey Business (Hawks) (as Lois Laurel); “The Cop and the Anthem” ep. of O. Henry’s Full House (Full House) (Koster) (as streetwalker)
1953 Niagara (Hathaway) (as Rose Loomis); Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks) (as Lorelei Lee); How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco) (as Lorelei Lee); O. Henry’s Full House (Koster) (as streetwalker)
1954 River of No Return (Preminger) (as Kay Weston); There’s No Business Like Show Business (Walter Lang) (as Vicky)
1955 The Seven Year Itch (Wilder) (as the Girl)
1956 Bus Stop (Logan) (as Cherie)
1957 The Prince and the Showgirl (Olivier) (as Elsie Marina)
1959 Some Like It Hot (Wilder) (as Sugar Kane)
1960 Let’s Make Love (Cukor) (as Amanda Dell)
1961 The Misfits (Huston) (as Roslyn Tabor)

Publications

By MONROE: books—

On MONROE: books—

Maier, Norman, Of Women and Their Elegance, New York, 1981.
Steinem, Gloria, and George Barris, Marilyn, New York, 1986.
Karanikas Harvey, Diana, Marilyn, New York, 1999.
Kidder, Clark, Marilyn Monroe: Cover-To-Cover, Iola, 1999.

On MONROE: articles—

* “Marilyn Monroe Issue” of Cinéma d’aujourd’hui (Paris), March/April 1975.
* Norman, Barry, in Radio Times (London), 11 May 1996.

On MONROE: films—
Marilyn, documentary, narrated by Rock Hudson, 1963.
Marilyn and the Kennedys, documentary for television, 1985.
Marilyn: Say Goodbye to the President, documentary, 1985.
Marilyn and Me, directed for television by John Patterson, 1991.
Norma Jean & Marilyn, television movie, 1996.

* * *
More pages have been written about Marilyn Monroe than any other movie star. She has inspired all sorts of fellow artists, from novelists to painters to rock songwriters. In 1996, 34 years after Monroe’s death (at age 36), HBO brought Oscar winner Mira Sorvino to the small screen in yet another retelling of Monroe’s life. Representations of femininity, sexuality, and American ambition created by and around Monroe continue to fascinate, indicating that tensions among these factors continue to exist.

To some she was a gifted comedienne, to others a sexual joke, but there is no doubt that Marilyn Monroe staked a claim for herself in film history as the quintessential “dumb” blonde, the biggest of the blond bombshells. She had, according to Billy Wilder, “flesh impact.” And her face was her fortune as much as her voluptuous figure (Wilder again): “The luminosity of that face! There has never been a woman with such voltage on the screen, with the exception of Garbo.”

Monroe’s appeal lay in more than her physical attributes. Another director, Joshua Logan, described her as “naive about herself and touching, rather like a little frightened animal.” Lee Strasberg saw “a combination of wistfulness, radiance, yearning [that] set her apart and [made] everyone wish to . . . share in the childish naivete which was at once so shy and yet so vibrant.” Or, in the words given to Cary Grant and Ginger Rogers in Monroe’s film Monkey Business, she was “half child, but not the half that shows.”

Monroe’s triumphs in projecting the woman-as-child arose in part from the traumas of her personal life. Orphaned as a child by her father’s desertion and mother’s insanity, brought up in an orphanage and foster homes, and married at 16 to a boy of 20, she developed, according to critic Molly Haskell, a “painful, naked, and embarrassing need for love.” Moreover, her mother’s insanity, and the fact that both her mother’s parents had also been committed to institutions, may have deepened fears of abandonment instilled by her childhood experiences. Certainly her genetic heritage did nothing to encourage her to envision a future as a responsible adult.

Yet she was adult enough to work throughout her life to develop her control over her psycho-physical actor’s instrument. Most of all, Monroe engaged with Constantin Stanislavski’s ideas—that an actor’s job is to make every physical move meaningful, to embrace and embody the world as it is for her, not for convention—variations of which she studied in the early 1950s with Michael Chekhov and, more famously, in the mid-1950s with Lee and Paula Strasberg. To further clarify for herself ways to physicalize her characters—but she was gradually disintegrating as a person. The ego she had so carefully assembled and around Monroe continue to fascinate, indicating that tensions among these factors continue to exist. The ego she had so carefully assembled and around Monroe continue to fascinate, indicating that tensions among these factors continue to exist.

At the Strasbergs’ prompting, she entered psychoanalysis to negotiate her new self-knowledge. By the end of the year she had more sophisticated tools for exploring her characters—but she was gradually disintegrating as a person. The ego she had so carefully assembled and around Monroe continue to fascinate, indicating that tensions among these factors continue to exist. The ego she had so carefully assembled and around Monroe continue to fascinate, indicating that tensions among these factors continue to exist.

For her biggest role yet, in Don’t Bother to Knock, Monroe received mixed reviews playing a psychotic babysitter obsessed with her dead lover. As Carl Rollyson notes, Monroe in this film builds perhaps too obviously upon what her second acting instructor, Stanislavski’s associate Michael Chekhov, called “the psychological gesture.” Such a keystone gesture—here Monroe’s twisting together of her fingers—not only encapsulates a character’s mental state but allows changes in it to be revealed over time. Throughout her career, as pinup girl, on-stage USO diva in Korea, and movie star, Monroe can be seen carefully framing her own body—using her hands, arms and hips especially—for maximum emotional resonance. Her appeal as a screen actress and archetypal image rests upon this self-composition more than is commonly acknowledged.

Monroe’s first starring role was in Niagara, which elevated her to the ranks of 1953’s top-grossing stars. As a faithless wife, she delivered a credible performance while projecting a great deal of sex appeal. Her undulations across some cobblestones represented the longest walk in cinema history—116 feet of film.

Niagara was followed by other rich roles. As Lorelei in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, she showed she could sing and anchored the first of many delightful production numbers. (These redeemed such lesser films as River of No Return and Let’s Make Love.) How to Marry a Millionaire further proved her comic talents. As the innocent myopic Pola Debevoise, a gold digger reluctant to wear glasses, she walked into walls and read books upside down with comic aplomb.

Monroe’s next big film was The Seven Year Itch, in which she played a lightly parodic media sex goddess with subtle sensitivity. But by then she was disillusioned with her success and bored with her “dumb blond” image. Wanting to continue her artistic growth as a working actress, she left Hollywood for New York and the Actors Studio. Public reaction was unkind. Life magazine called the move “irrational,” and Time found her all wet: “her acting talents, if any, run a needless second” to her truest virtues—“her moist ‘come-on’ look . . . moist, half-closed eyes and moist, half-opened mouth.”

But Monroe spent a year with Lee Strasberg, director of the Actors Studio, learning to tap her own experience to work into her characters. At the Strasbergs’ prompting, she entered psychoanalysis to negotiate her new self-knowledge. By the end of the year she had more sophisticated tools for exploring her characters—but she was gradually disintegrating as a person. The ego she had so carefully assembled and around Monroe continue to fascinate, indicating that tensions among these factors continue to exist.

Still, Bus Stop, her first film upon returning to Hollywood, was a revelation to the critics: “get set for a surprise. Marilyn Monroe has finally proved herself an actress!” (Bosley Crowther, New York Times). Working for the first time with a southern accent, Monroe caught the delicate balance the script sets between her character’s self-image and her limitations, especially in her songs. Critics disagreed over whether Monroe’s modulated, realistic portrayal was due to the Strasbergs’ influence or to the fact that it was her first role of any depth.

Her next film was made by her own company, which she had set up with Milton Greene. Although she and Laurence Olivier, her co-star and director, delivered good performances in The Prince and the Showgirl, problems between them on the set exacerbated Monroe’s growing insecurity and addictions and did little to offset her distress over a troubled third marriage, to playwright Arthur Miller.

Monroe’s sex appeal and comic timing were happily arrayed again in Some Like It Hot. But her next film, Let’s Make Love, was a critical failure that brought her into an unhappy romance with her co-star,
Yves Montand. By the time she did The Misfits (written for her by Miller), although she delivered a multifaceted, poignant performance, her chronic lateness and addiction to alcohol and pills were out of control. These afflictions caused her removal from a subsequent film, Something’s Got to Give, and she died two months later of a drug overdose.

Her death was a tragic conclusion to a promising career. According to director John Huston, something disturbing happened to Monroe between The Asphalt Jungle and The Misfits, but it deepened her responses; now her acting came from inside. As a child, Monroe “used to playact all the time. For one thing, it meant I could live in a more interesting world than the one around me.” But the magnificently gifted woman who brought to the screen finally eluded her in reality.

—Catherine Henry, updated by Susan Knobloch

MONTAND, Yves

Nationality: French. Born: Ivo Livi in Monsummano Alto, Tuscany, Italy, 13 October 1921; raised in Marseilles, France, from age two. Family: Married the actress Simone Signoret, 1951 (died 1985), stepdaughter (adopted following Signoret’s death): the actress Catherine Allégret; son with Carole Amiel: Valentin. Career: Left school at age 11, and worked at a variety of jobs before becoming a singer in Marseilles and Paris; 1945—performed at Moulin Rouge; Edith Piaf helped him in his career; 1946—feature film debut in Étoile sans lumière with Piaf; 1950–51—six-month musical tour of Europe and North Africa; 1953—breakthrough role in Le Salaire de la peur; 1954—appeared with Signoret in stage play The Crucible, and in film version, 1957; 1958—highly publicized and criticized tour of Soviet Union and Eastern-bloc countries, with Signoret; 1959—one-man show on Broadway; 1965—co-starred with Signoret in Compartiment tueurs, first of several films by Costa-Gavras; 1968—acclaimed one-man show in Paris; 1969—released enormously popular album of songs, Montand d’hier à aujourd’hui (Montand, from Yesterday to Today); 1982—became first popular singer to perform solo at New York’s Metropolitan Opera House, followed by U.S. cabaret tour, then tour of Brazil and Japan; 1986—acclaimed performance in pair of international hits, Jean de Florette and Manon des sources; produced and starred in one-man TV special, Montand à la une; 1987—named president, Cannes Film Festival; 1988—long politically active, received serious mention as a possible French presidential candidate, but he declined at time of death, was preparing a singing tour. Awards: Best Actor awards, French Étoile de cristal and New York Film Critics Circle, for La Guerre est finie, 1966; special tribute, Film Society of Lincoln Center, 1988. Died: Of a heart attack, in Senlis, France, 9 November 1991.

Films as Actor:

1945 Silence . . . antenne (Lucot—short) (as singer)
1946 Étoile sans lumière (Star without Light) (Blistène) (as Pierre); Les Portes de la nuit (Gates of the Night) (Carné—released in U.S. in 1950) (as Jean Diego)
1948 L’Idole (The Idol) (Esway) (as Luc Fenton)
1950 Souvenirs perdus (Christian-Jaque) (as singer); Paris chante toujours (Montazel) (as singer); Parigi e sempre Parigi (Emmer) (as singer)
1953 Le Salaire de la peur (The Wages of Fear) (Clouzot) (as Mario); “Mara” ep. of Tempi nostri (Our Time; The Anatomy of Love) (Blasetti)
1954 Napoléon (Guiry) (as Marshal Lefebvre)
1955 Les Heros sont fatigués (Heroes and Sinners) (Ciampi) (as Michel Rivière)
1956 Marguerite de la nuit (Autant-Lara) (as Mephistopheles); Uomini e lupti (De Santis) (as Ricuccio)
1957 Les Sorcières de Salem (The Witches of Salem; The Crucible) (Rouleau) (as John Proctor); Poet Iv Montan (Yves Montand chante en U.S.S.R.) (Sloufky and Yutkevitch)
1958 La langa strada azzura (La Grande Strada Azzura; The Wide Blue Road) (Poncecorvo) (as Sgarancio)
1959 Le Père et l’enfant (Premier Mai) (Saslavsky) (as Jean); La Loi (Where the Hot Wind Blows; Le legge; The Law) (Dassin) (as Matteo Brigante)
1960 Let’s Make Love (The Billionaire; The Millionaire) (Cukor) (as Jean-Marc Clément); Yves Montand Chante (filmed concert/doc)
1961 Sanctuary (Richardson) (as Candy Man); Aimez-vous Brahms? (Goodbye Again) (Litvak) (as Roger Desmarest)
1962 My Geisha (Cardiff) (as Paul Robaix)
1963 Le Joli Mai (Marker—doc) (as narrator)
1965 Compartiment tueurs (The Sleeping Car Murder) (Costa-Gavras) (as Insp. Grazzi)
1966 La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over) (Resnais) (as Diego); Paris-brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Marcel Bizien); Grand Prix (Frankenheimer) (as Jean-Pierre Sarti)
1967 Vivre pour vivre (Live for Life) (Lelouch) (as Robert Colomb)
1968 Un soir, un train (One Night, a Train) (Delvaux) (as Mathias); Le Diable par la queue (The Devil by the Tail) (de Broca) (as Cesar Marconne)
1969 Mister Freedom (Klein) (cameo as Capt. Formidable); Z (Costa-Gavras) (as Deputy Z); Le Deuxième Procès d’Arthur London (Marker—doc); Jour de tournage (Marker and Depouey—doc)
1970 L’Aveu (The Confession) (Costa-Gavras) (as Gerard); On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (Minnelli) (as Dr. Marc Chabot); Le Cercle rouge (The Red Circle) (Melville) (as Jansen)
1971 La Folie des grandseur (Delusions of Grandeur) (Oury) (as Blaze)
1972 César et Rosalie (César and Rosalie) (Sautet) (as César); Le Fils (Granier-Defert) (as Ange Orahona)
1973 Tout va bien (Just Great) (Goddard and Gorin) (as He); Etat de siège (State of Siege) (Costa-Gavras) (as Philip Michael Santore)
1974 Le Hasard et la violence (Labro) (as Laurent Berman); Vincent, Francois, Paul, et les autres (Vincent, Francois, Paul and the Others) (Sautet) (as Vincent); La Solitude du chanteur de fond (The Loneliness of the Long-Distance Singer) (Marker—doc) (as himself); T’es fou, Marcel (Rochefort—doc)
1975 Le Sauvage (The Savage; Lovers Like Us) (Rappeneau) (as Martin Coutances); Section spéciale (Special Section) (Costa-Gavras) (cameo)
1976  Police Python 357 (Corneau) (as Marc Ferrot); La Grand Escogriffe (Pinoteau) (as Emile Morland)
1977  Le Menace (The Threat) (Corneau) (as Henri Savin)
1978  Les Routes du sud (The Roads to the South) (Losey)
1979  Clair de femme (Womanlight) (Costa-Gavras) (as Michel); I comme Icarus (I as in Icarus) (Verneuil)
1980  The Case against Ferro (Corneau) (title role)
1981  Le Choix des armes (Choice of Arms) (Corneau) (as Noel Durieux)
1982  Tout feu tout flamme (All Fired Up) (Rappeneau) (as Victor Valance)
1983  Garçon! (Waiter!) (Sautet) (as Alex)
1986  Jean de Florette (Berri) (as César ‘‘Le Papet’’ Soubeyran); Manon des sources (Jean de Florette 2; Manon of the Spring) (Berri) (as César ‘‘Le Papet’’ Soubeyran)
1988  Trois places pour le 26 (Three Seats for the 26th) (Jacques Demy) (as himself)
1990  Netchaïev est de retour (Netchaïev Is Back) (Deray) (as Pierre Marroux)
1992  IP5: L’île aux Pachydermes (IP5: The Island of Pachyderms) (Beineix) (as Leon Marcel)

Publications

By MONTAND: books—

Tu vois, je n’ai pas oublié, with Hervé Hamon and Patrick Rotman, France, 1990; published as You See, I Haven’t Forgotten, New York, 1992.

By MONTAND: articles—

Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1980.
Interview in Film und Fernsehen (Potsdam), no. 5, 1990.
Interview with Y. Poncelet, in Grand Angle (Mariembourg, Belgium), February 1991.
On MONTAND: books—

On MONTAND: articles—

“Yves Montand,” in Film Dope (Nottingham, England), March 1990.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), November 1991.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), October 1994.

On MONTAND: film—

With his association with the director Costa-Gavras, which began in 1965 with Compartiment tueurs, his acting reached a mid-career peak. His participation in Costa-Gavras’s politically oriented works reflected his own political convictions, about which he was never silent. Z and Etat de siège deal with the restriction of civil rights in Greece and Chile, respectively. In L’Aveu, based on a book by Arthur London, one of the accused in Slansky’s trial in Czechoslovakia, he created with a shocking persuasiveness the character of a man who suffers the monstrous power of a state determined to make good its charges of conspiracy, betrayal, and class and racial hatred.

Montand also made comedies and love stories as well as crime stories. In Le Fils he created the character of a mafioso who returns to Corsica from America and is involved in a vendetta, and in La Chois des armes he played a man in whose house two escaped convicts take shelter. He acted with Catherine Deneuve in Le Sauvage, with Romy Schneider in César et Rosalie and Clair de femme, and with Isabelle Adjani in Tout feu, tout flamme.

Although he had a notable late-career comedic role in 1983’s highly praised light comedy Garçon! playing the waiter, Montand’s film career had hit a valley in the late 1970s and early 1980s. A final climax would come in 1986, however, with his scheming village elder in the wonderful two-part multicontinent smash hit Jean de Florette and Manon des sources. Based on novels by Maurice Pagnol, the films were made back-to-back by director Claude Berri in the costliest production in France up to that time. For his part, Montand drew on his rural Italian roots in perfectly capturing a proud old peasant whose greed leads ultimately to an ending reminiscent of Greek tragedy. In one of his best performances ever, Montand held the central role through both films, even next to Gérard Depardieu’s strong portrayal of Montand’s nemesis in Jean de Florette—a fitting culmination to the career of an actor beloved by his fellow French and unusually popular outside France as well.

—Karel Tabery, updated by David E. Salamie

MONTGOMERY, Robert

Robert Montgomery

Films as Actor:

1926 College Days (Thorpe)
1929 So This Is College (Wood) (as Biff); Untamed (Conway) (as Andy McAllister); Their Own Desire (Hopper) (as Jack Marlett); Three Live Ghosts (Freeland) (as William Foster)
1930 Free and Easy (Sedgwick) (as Larry); The Divorcee (Leonard) (as Don); The Big House (Hill) (as Kent Marlowe); Sins of the Children (Wood) (as Nick Higginson); Our Blushing Brides (Beaumont) (as Tony); Love in the Rough (Reiner) (as Kelly); War Nurse (Selwyn) (as Wally)
1931 Inspiration (Brown) (as Andre Martel); The Easiest Way (Conway) (as Johnny Madison); Strangers May Kiss (Fitzmaurice) (as Steve); Shipmates (Pollard) (as Jonesy); The Man in Possession (Wood) (as Raymond Dabney); Private Lives (Franklin) (as Eloy Chase)
1932 Lovers Courageous (Leonard) (as Willie Smith); But the Flesh Is Weak (Conway) (as Max Clement); Letty Lynott (Brown) (as Hale Darrow); Blondie of the Follies (Goulding) (as Larry Belmont); Faithless (Beaumont) (as William Wade)
1933 Hell Below (Conway) (as Lt. Thomas Knowlton); When Ladies Meet (Beaumont) (as Jimmy Lee); Made on Broadway (The Girl I Made) (Beaumont) (as Jeff Bidwell);

Another Language (Edward Griffith) (as Victor Hallam); Night Flight (Brown) (as Auguste Pellerin); Fugitive Lovers (Boleslawsky) (as Paul Porter)
1934 The Mystery of Mr. X (Selwyn) (as Nicholas Revel); Riptide (Goulding) (as Tommy Trent); Hide-Out (Van Dyke) (as Lucky Wilson); Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke) (as Dill Todd)
1935 Biography of a Bachelor Girl (Griffith) (as Kurt); Vanessa: Her Love Story (Howard) (as Benjie); No More Ladies (Griffith) (as Sherry Warren)
1936 Petticoat Fever (Fitzmaurice) (as Dascom Dinsmore); Trouble for Two (Rubin) (as Prince Florizel); Piccadilly Jim (Leonard) (as Jim Crocker)
1937 The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Boleslawsky) (as Lord Arthur Dilling); Night Must Fall (Thorpe) (as Danny); Ever Since Eve (Bacon) (as Freddy Matthews); Live, Love, and Learn (Fitzmaurice) (as Bob Graham)
1938 The First 100 Years (Thorpe) (as David Conway); Yellow Jack (Seitz) (as John O’Hara); Three Loves Has Nancy (Thorpe) (as Malcolm Niles)
1939 Fast and Loose (Marin) (as Joel Sloane)
1940 The Earl of Chicago (Thorpe) (as Silky Kilmount); Haunted Honeymoon (Woods) (as Lord Peter Winsey)
1941 Mr. and Mrs. Smith (Hitchcock) (as David Smith); Rage in Heaven (Van Dyke) (as Phillip Monrell); Here Comes Mr. Jordan (Hall) (as Joe Pendleton); Unfinished Business (La Cava) (as Tommy Duncan)
1948 The Saxon Charm (Binyon) (as Matt Saxon); The Secret Land (doc) (as narrator); June Bride (Windust) (as Carey Jackson)

Films as Director:

1945 They Were Expendable (co-d with Ford, + ro as Lt. John Brickley)
1946 Lady in the Lake (+ ro as Philip Marlowe)
1947 Ride the Pink Horse (+ ro as Blackie Gamin)
1949 Once More, My Darling (+ ro as Collier Laing)
1950 Your Witness (Eye Witness) (+ ro as Adam Heywood)
1960 The Gallant Hours (+ pr, narrator)

Publications

By MONTGOMERY: book—

On MONTGOMERY: articles—

Reynolds, Quentin, “Man with a Union Card,” in Collier's (New York), 1 April 1939.
Robert Montgomery's career is unique. He achieved success as actor and director in film, television, theater, and radio, and also gained considerable recognition in politics. In addition, he started what might be seen as a media dynasty by fathering a bona fide second generation star, his daughter, Elizabeth.

The arrival of sound to motion pictures brought many young men like Montgomery to Hollywood—men of good looks, polish, and enough stage experience to deliver dialogue well. After being placed under contract to MGM, Montgomery became a "tennis, anyone?" leading man for that studio's stable of beautiful actresses. His apprentice years found him supporting Norma Shearer (The Divorcee, Riptide), Joan Crawford (Our Blushing Brides, Letty Lynon), Marion Davies (Blonde of the Follies), and Greta Garbo (Inspiration), among others. Montgomery, however, was too intelligent and too versatile to be typecast with the limited range such roles afforded him. He undertook such parts as the frightened prison squealer in the key genre film, The Big House, as well as that of a homicidal maniac with a civilized veneer in Night Must Fall, a role which earned him an Oscar nomination. As a result of his own initiative, there were many Robert Montgomerys on screen—the arch comedian, the dapper cad, the crazy killer, the hard-boiled detective, the noble war hero. He was not one persona, but many.

Montgomery with also not content to be an idle screen actor in his private life. Always rebellious, he is said to have told Louis B. Mayer, when refused a deserved salary increase, "If you were a younger man, Mr. Mayer, I'd give you a beating." In 1933 he helped organize the Screen Actors Guild, and served four terms as its president. He proved an effective negotiator for better working conditions, higher pay, and steadier work for bit players. During World War II he saw action in PT boat service, an experience he used in John Ford's steadier work for bit players. During World War II he saw action in PT boat service, an experience he used in John Ford's

After the war Montgomery turned to directing as well as acting. His most famous film is Lady in the Lake, in which he experimented with "first-person camera," allowing the camera to serve as the actual eyes of the leading character, Raymond Chandler's private-eye Philip Marlowe (played by Montgomery himself). This film, an experiment in the subjective point of view, stands as a landmark. Montgomery became executive producer-director-advisor to NBC, and created one of television's first anthology series, Robert Montgomery Presents. On stage, he directed The Desperate Hours, earning a Tony Award. Having been active in politics since his early days with SAG, he undertook the prestigious job as media adviser to President Eisenhower, a man he greatly admired. His book, Open Letter from a Television Viewer, denounced the networks as insisting on "fairy tales for grown-up children," and was ahead of its time in defining the media wasteland.

Montgomery was not only successful in four media, a capable director, an innovative producer, and a versatile actor, he was ahead of his own time in being an actor who understood that politicians would have to become masters of the media to win. He was in many ways a visionary and an experimentalist, but in all ways a man of intelligence.

—Jeanine Basinger

MOORE, Demi

Films as Actress:

1981 Choices (Narizanno)
1982 Young Doctors in Love (Garry Marshall) (cameo); Parasite (Band) (as Patricia Welles)
1984  No Small Affair (Schatzberg) (as Laura Victor); Blame It on Rio (Donen) (as Nicole Hollis)
1985  St. Elmo’s Fire (Schumacher) (as Jules)
1986  Wisdom (Estevez) (as Karen Simmons); One Crazy Summer (Savage Steve Holland) (as Cassandra); About Last Night . . . (Zwick) (as Debbie)
1987  The Seventh Sign (Schultz) (as Abby Quinn)
1989  Lethal Weapon (McG); A Few Good Men (Aykroyd) (as Karen Simmons);
1989a  Nothing but Trouble (Aykroyd) (as Diane Lightston); Mortal Thoughts (Rudolph) (as Cynthia Kellogg, + co-pr); The Butcher’s Wife (Hughes) (as Marina)
1990  A Few Good Men (Reiner) (as Lt. Cmdr. JoAnne Galloway)
1991  Indecent Proposal (Lyne) (as Diana Murphy)
1991a  Nothing but Trouble (Asner) (as Claire); Beavis and Butthead Do America (Judge) (as Dallas Grimes’s uncredited voice)
1992  The Scarlet Letter (Gibson) (as Hester Prynne); Now and Then (Glatter) (as Samantha, + co-pr)
1992a  The Juror (Gibson) (as Annie Laird); Striptease (Andrew Bergman) (as Erin Grant); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Truesdale and Kirk Wise—animation) (as voice of Esmerelda); If These Walls Could Talk (Cher, Savoca—for TV) (+ exec pr) (as Claire); Beavis and Butthead Do America (Judge) (as Dallas Grimes’s uncredited voice)
1993  Passion of Mind (Berliner) (as Marty/Marie)
1997  Road to Avonlea (Ridley Scott) (as Lt. Jordan O’Neill) (+ pr);
1998  The Scarlet Letter (Brian Gibson) (as Hester Prynne); Now and Then (Glatter) (as Samantha, + co-pr)
1998a  The Juror (Brian Gibson) (as Annie Laird); Striptease (Andrew Bergman) (as Erin Grant); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Truesdale and Kirk Wise—animation) (as voice of Esmerelda); If These Walls Could Talk (Cher, Savoca—for TV) (+ exec pr) (as Claire); Beavis and Butthead Do America (Judge) (as Dallas Grimes’s uncredited voice)

Films as Producer:

1991  Mortal Thoughts (co-pr)
1995  Now and Then (Glatter) (as Samantha, + co-pr)
1996  Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery (co-pr)
1998  Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me (co-pr)

Publications

By MOORE: articles—

“Table Talk,” panel discussion with Sally Field, Jodie Foster, and Nancy Griffin, in Premiere (New York), Winter 1993 (Special Issue: Women in Hollywood).

On MOORE: books—

On MOORE: articles—

Park, Jeannie, “‘They Heard It through the Grapevine,’” in People Weekly (New York), 12 November 1990.

Schaefer, Karl-Heinz, in Cinema (Germany), no. 4, 1996.

Greene, R., “‘Demi-goddess,’” in Boxoffice (Chicago), May 1996.

Michiels, Dirk, “‘Durf or Talent?’” in Film en Televisie (Brussels), September 1996.

Schneider, Kevin S. “‘Turning Point,’” in People Weekly, 6 September 1999.

---

Demi Moore’s steady rise to superstar status by the early 1990s may appear surprising when the number of unsuccessful films she had made is compared to the hits, but her great popularity and increased power in Hollywood are undeniable. By 1996’s Striptease, she could command a woman’s-salary-record of $12.5 million, a figure which might look foolish after the box-office disappointments of The Juror and The Scarlet Letter, and especially Striptease itself. Nevertheless, Moore’s potential to deliver hit films still makes her one of the few female stars in contemporary Hollywood to have films custom-tailored to her desires. Her increased activity as a producer has also allowed her to play a significant role behind the scenes.

After an unremarkable film debut, Moore was noticed on the popular television soap opera General Hospital (which led to her cameo in the parody Young Doctors in Love), and then identified as one of Hollywood’s 1980s “brat pack” of young actors, most notably through her role in the Big Chill-imitation St. Elmo’s Fire. She finally achieved widespread recognition in Ghost, a huge hit in which her ability to generate audience sympathy while retaining her independence and strength established her popular image; while her co-stars worked with the special effects, Moore provided realistic emotional grounding for the story at the heart of the film’s supernatural nonsense. Taking advantage of her new on-screen prominence, she began to take greater control of her career behind the scenes, co-producing Mortal Thoughts, in which she co-starred with husband Bruce Willis. A Few Good Men elevated Moore into the company of two male superstars, Jack Nicholson and Tom Cruise, but could not find much to do with her character.

Alongside her early television and film career, Moore’s early marriage and divorce, drug problems, and brief engagement to Emilio Estevez (her co-star and director of the dreadful Wisdom) kept her frequently in the gossip columns. Her marriage to fellow superstar Bruce Willis in 1987, their public appearances at the openings of Planet Hollywood restaurants (of which they are co-owners), and especially her nude portraits on the cover of Vanity Fair—first in the eighth month of pregnancy, later with her figure regained and clothing only painted on—generated even more offscreen attention that continued into the late 1990s with her separation from Bruce Willis. Such activities have allowed Moore to successfully negotiate a range of otherwise contradictory identities: she appears as “the last pinup,” an unapologetically sexy woman in a “postfeminist” age, as well as an ideal mother, supportive spouse, and shrewd businesswoman, whose advice and personal experiences are regularly featured in popular women’s magazines. Indecent Proposal perhaps exploited the fantasies underlying these tensions most explicitly, with Moore playing a loyal wife who might nevertheless be purchased by millionaire Robert Redford for at least one night of sexual play. Her role in Disclosure as an aggressive businesswoman who sexually exploits male colleague Michael Douglas dealt with similar contradictions, but with a more distastefully reactionary twist.

The Scarlet Letter was a much-derided mistake, with Moore justifying the absurd changes in Hawthorne’s classic plot by insisting that most people had not read the book, and Now and Then (her second co-production), while more successful, misled fans somewhat, since Moore and her adult co-stars appear only briefly in a film devoted to flashbacks of their characters as children. Advance publicity for Striptease suggested that Moore’s erotic dancing would be the film’s principal draw, with display of her body once again possibly diverting attention from whatever acting skills her role may demonstrate (yet another nude portrait for the film’s poster created yet another minor controversy). But, in the end, the film did not draw much of an audience for any reason. In the exceptional but commercially successful military drama G. I. Jane, the camera, for a change, emphasized Moore’s impressively muscular body, along with the unusual attraction of her shaved head. Moore also played a small part in a Woody Allen film, but only her distinctive, husky voice, was featured in the Disney animated adaptation of The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and more briefly in an uncredited vocal cameo—along with Bruce Willis—in the MTV-derived Beavis and Butt-head Do America. Following her separation from Willis (and the breakup of the Planet Hollywood chain), Moore has almost disappeared from the public eye, though from time to time her plans to open a doll museum to display her own large collection are reported. However, in an industry that has always rewarded male stars with higher salaries and greater career control, Moore remains in an unusual position to decide her future direction as a performer and producer. Her determination to succeed seems unshakable, but the wisdom of her choices remains to be seen; in any case, there is little question that the rise, fall, or steady continuation of her career will be fully documented by an attentive media.

—Corey K. Creekmur

MOOREHEAD, Agnes

Nationality: American. Born: Agnes Robertson Moorehead in Clinton, Massachusetts, 6 December 1906. Education: Attended school in Reedsburg, Wisconsin; Muskingum College, Ohio; University of Wisconsin, Madison, M.A. in English and public speaking. Family: Married 1) John Griffith Lee, 1930 (divorced 1951); son: Sean; 2) Robert Gust, 1953 (divorced 1958). Career: Taught public speaking at Soldiers Grove High School, Wisconsin; radio singer in St. Louis (stations KSO and KMOX), and appeared as dancer and singer with Municipal Opera, St. Louis, for three seasons; taught dramatics at Dalton School, and studied at American Academy of Dramatic Arts, both in New York; also appeared on Broadway in Marco Millions, 1928, and other plays; 1930s—radio actress; 1937—joined Orson Welles’s Mercury Theater; 1941—film debut in Citizen Kane; contracts with Warner Brothers and MGM during next few years; 1948—on stage with Orson Welles in Macbeth; 1954—toured with one-woman show An Evening with Agnes Moorehead; 1964—TV series Bewitched; 1973—on Broadway in Gigi. Awards: Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for The Magnificent Ambersons, 1942. Died: 30 April 1974.

Films as Actress:

- 1941 Citizen Kane (Welles) (as Mary Kane)
- 1942 The Magnificent Ambersons (Welles) (as Fanny Minafer); The Big Street (Reis) (as Violet); Journey into Fear (Norman Foster) (as Mrs. Mathews)
- 1943 The Youngest Profession (Buzzell) (as Miss Featherstone); Government Girl (Dudley Nichols) (as Mrs. Wright)
- 1944 Jane Eyre (Stevenson) (as Mrs. Reed); Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (as Emily Hawkins); Dragon Seed (Conway) (as cousin’s wife); The Seventh Cross (Zinnemann) (as Mme. Marelli); Mrs. Parkington (Garnett) (as Aspasia Conti); Tomorrow the World (Fenton) (as Jessie)
- 1945 Keep Your Powder Dry (Buzzell) (as Lt. Colonel Spottiswoode); Our Vines Have Tender Grapes (Rowland) (as Ma Jacobson); Her Highness and the Bellboy (Thorpe) (as Countess Zoe)
- 1947 Dark Passage (Daves) (as Madge Rapf); The Lost Moment (Gabel) (as Julliana)
- 1948 Summer Holiday (Mamoulian) (as Cousin Lillic); The Woman in White (Godfrey) (as Countess Fosco); Station West (Lanfield) (as Mrs. Caslon); Johnny Belinda (Negulesco) (as Aggie McDonald)
- 1949 The Stratton Story (Sam Wood) (as Ma Stratton); The Great Sinner (Sidmak) (as Emma Getzel)
1950 Without Honor (Pichel) (as Katherine Williams); Caged (Cromwell) (as Ruth Benton).
1951 Fourteen Hours (Hathaway) (as Mrs. Cosick); Show Boat (Sidney) (as Parthy Hawks); The Blue Veil (Bernhardt) (as Mrs. Palfrey); The Adventures of Captain Fabian (William Marshall) (as Aunt Jezebel); Captain BlackJack (Duvivier) (as Mrs. Birk).
1952 The Blazing Forest (Ludwig) (as Jessie Crane).
1953 ‘The Jealous Lover’ ep. of The Story of Three Loves (Reinhardt) (as Aunt Lydia); Scandal at Scourie (Negulesco) (as Sister Josephine); Those Redheads from Seattle (Lewis R. Foster) (as Mrs. Edmonds); Main Street to Broadway (Garnett) (as Mildred Waterbury).
1954 Magnificent Obsession (Sirk) (as Nancy Ashford).
1955 Untamed (Henry King) (as Aggie); The Left Hand of God (Dmytryk) (as Beryl Sigman); All That Heaven Allows (Sirk) (as Sara Warren).
1956 Meet Me in Las Vegas (Viva Las Vegas) (Rowland) (as Miss Hattie); The Conqueror (Powell) (as Hunlun); The Revolt of Mamie Stover (Walsh) (as Bertha Parchman); The Swan (Charles Vidor) (as Queen Maria Dominika); Partners (Taurog) (as Matilda Kingsley); The Opposite Sex (Miller) (as the Countess).
1957 The True Story of Jesse James (Nicholas Ray) (as Mrs. Samuel); Jeanne Eagels (Sidney) (as Mme. Nielson); Raintree County (Dmytryk) (as Ellen Shawnessy); The Story of Mankind (Irwin Allen) (as Queen Elizabeth).
1958 La tempesta (Tempest) (Lattuada) (as Vassilissa).
1959 Night of the Quarter Moon (Haas) (as Cornelia Nelson); The Bat (Wilbur) (as Cornelia Van Gorder).
1960 Pollyanna (Swift) (as Mrs. Snow).
1961 Twenty Plus Two (Joseph M. Newman) (as Mrs. Delaney); Bachelor in Paradise (Arnold) (as Judge Peterson).
1962 Jessica (Negulesco) (as Maria Lombardo).
1963 How the West Was Won (Ford, Marshall, and Hathaway) (as Rebecca Prescott); Who’s Minding the Store? (Tashlin) (as Mrs. Phoebe Tuttle).
1965 The Singing Nun (Koster) (as Sister Cluny); Alice through the Looking Glass (Handley—for TV) (as the Red Queen).
1966 The Ballad of Andy Crocker (McCowan—for TV).
1971 What’s the Matter with Helen? (Harrington) (as Sister Alma); Marriage: Year One (Graham—for TV); Suddenly Single (Taylor—for TV); The Strange Monster of Strawberry (Swift) (as Mrs. Blair); Charlotte’s Web (Charles A. Nichols and Takamoto—animation) (as voice of the Goose).
1972 Rolling Man (Hyams—for TV); Night of Terror (Szwarc—for TV); Dear, Dead Delilah (Farris) (title role).
1973 Frankenstein—The True Story (Smight—for TV) (as Mrs. Blair); Charlotte’s Web (Charles A. Nichols and Takamoto—animation) (as voice of the Goose).

Publications

By MOOREHEAD: articles—

On MOOREHEAD: books—

On MOOREHEAD: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1955.
Ward, L.E., ‘‘Supporting Actresses in the Golden Age,’’ in Classic Images (Muscatine), February 1990.
Film Dope (Nottingham), September 1990.
Stars (Mariembourg), Spring 1994.
Angulo, J., and A. Potes, in Nosferatu (San Sebastian), January 1996.

* * *

One might define hysteria as the response to the continual and irreversible frustration of the desire for power, authority, or (at least) personal dignity, which is why, within patriarchal culture, it is an ailment predominantly associated with women. Agnes Moorehead was one of Hollywood’s most impressive spokespersons for female hysteria (whether overtly expressed or precariously and agonizingly controlled), linked in many of her most fully characteristic roles to an explicitly sexual frustration, the ignominious condition of the ‘‘spinster.’’

In the definitive role of her career in The Magnificent Ambersons, her Aunt Fanny—sexually repressed, tormented by physicality in all its forms, disappointed in love, her formidable energies permitted no other outlet in a world where power is by definition male—is the cinema’s most eloquent realization of the term ‘‘spinster’’ and its logical accompaniment of hysteria. Deviation from this prototype into heroine’s friend roles (All that Heaven Allows) and even into motherhood (The Stratton Story), Agnes had her share of ignominious parts but intermittently displayed strength and intelligence in roles that position her outside direct male determination (Caged, The Revolt of Mamie Stover). An exemplary character actress, Moorehead received four Academy Award nominations, solidified on histrionically when those she ‘‘supported’’ succumbed to flimsy material, and remained impossible to ignore even when going stratospherically over the top in big-budget flops such as the pseudo-Oriental turkey The Conqueror.

Before her Hollywood employment, the resonant Moorehead voice made her one of radio’s most durable interpreters and the creator of the warhorse, Sorry, Wrong Number. Later as an antidote to the limitations of her contractual characterdom, she toured to great advantage onstage, particularly in Shaw’s Man and Superman, with Boyer, Laughton, and Hardwicke. A Queen of all media, Moorehead tackled a diversity of parts on-screen from her debut as Citizen Kane’s pragmatic mother. Unfettered by a set image, her range extended from melted by an orphan. Although intensity was the keynote of her acting, she could be salt of the earth as in Johnny Belinda or airily upper crust as in Mrs. Parkington, a countess role which prefigured her glamorous resurgence on television’s Bewitched. Fondly remembered for another television role on a Twilight Zone episode as an outer space giantess peevishly crushing U.S. astronauts, she completely conquered television with her stylishly supernatural Endora on Bewitched; her interpretation of the ultimate mother-in-law joke armed with magical powers of reprisal won her the deserved celebrity she had eluded for another television role on a Twilight Zone episode as an outer space giantess peevishly crushing U.S. astronauts, she completely conquered television with her stylishly supernatural Endora on Bewitched; her interpretation of the ultimate mother-in-law joke armed with magical powers of reprisal won her the deserved celebrity she had eluded for another television role on a

857

—Robin Wood, updated by Robert Pardi

MORDYUKOVA, Nonna

Nationality: Russian. Born: Noyabrina Victorovna Mordyukova in Konstantinovsk, Soviet Union (now Russia), 25 November 1925. Awards: FIPRESCI Award, Otto Dibelius Film Award, and Special Jury Prize, all Berlin International Film Festival, and Silver Spur Award, Flanders International Film Festival, for Komissar (1967), 1988.

Films as Actress:

1948 Molodaja gvardia (The Young Guard) (Sergei Gerasimov) (as Uliana Gromova)
1952 Vozvrashchenye Vasiilya Bortnikova (The Return of Vasily Bortnikov) (Vsevolod Pudovkin)
1953 Kalinovaya roshcha (Snowball-Tree Grove) (Timofei Lechuk)
1955 Chuzhaya rodnya (Other People’s Relatives) (Mikhail Shvejtser)
1957 Yekaterina Voronina (1957) (Isidor Amnensky)
1958 Dobrovoltsy (Volunteers) (Yuri Yegorov)
1959 Khmuroye utro (Grey Dawn) (Grigori Chukhrailov); Otchij dom (Parental Home) (Lev Kulidzhianov) (as Stepanida)
1960 Prostaya istoriya (A Simple Story) (Yuri Yegorov); Vsyo nachinaetsya s dorogi (Everything Begins with Hitting the Road) (Vilen Azarov and Nikolai Dostal)
1961 Zhenitba Balzaminova (Balzaminov’s Marriage) (Konstantin Voinov) (as Belotelova); Predsedatel (The Chairman) (Aleksei Saltykov) (as Polina)
1963 Tridtsat tri (Nenauchnaya fantastika) (Thirty Three) (Georgii Danelia)
1964 Voyna i mir II: Natasha Rostova (War and Peace, part II) (Sergei Bondarchuk) (as Anissya Yfodorovna); Dyadyushkin son (Dream of an Uncle) (Konstantin Voinov)
1966 Komissar (The Commissar) (Aleksandr Askoldov) (as Klavdia Vavilova)
1968 Voyna I mir, I (War and Peace, part I) (Sergei Bondarchuk) (as Anissya Yfodorovna); Brilliantovaya ruka (Diamond Arm) (Leonid Gaidai) (as House manager); Zhuravashka (A Little Crane) (Nikolai Moskalenko)
1969 Dvoryanskaya gneyzdo (A Nest of Gentlefolk) (Andrei Konchalovsky) (as Anna Andreyevna Skvoznik-Dmukhanovskaya); Gori, gori, moya zveza (Burn, Burn, My Star) (Aleksandr Mitta)
1970 Ballada o Beringe i ego druzyah (The Ballad of Bering and His Friends) (Yuri Shvyryov); Sluchaj s Polunynym (The Polunin Case) (Aleksei Sakharov)
1971 Molodye (Young People) (Nikolai Moskalenko); Russkoye pole (Russian Field) (Nikolai Moskalenko)
1973 Dva dnya trevogi (Two Days of Anxiety) (Aleksandr Surin); Vozyrata net (No Return) (Aleksei Saltykov)
1974 Lev Gureich Simichkin (Aleksandr Belinsky—for TV)
1975 Oni srazhalis za rodinu (They Fought for the Motherland) (Sergei Bondarchuk); Semya Ivanovykh (The Ivanov Family) (Aleksei Saltykov)
1977 Inkognito iz Peterburga (Incognito from St.Petersburg) (Leonid Gaidai) (as Anna Andreyevna Skvoznik-Dmukhanovskaya)
1978 Tryasina (Quagmire) (Grigori Chukhrailov) (as Matryona)
1979 Veroy i pravdy (With Faith and Truth) (Andrei Smirnov)
1981 Rodnya (Kinfolk) (Nikita Mikhalkov)
1983 Etyud dlya domino s royalem (Etude for Dominos and Piano) (Yevgeniya Golovina); Vokzal dlya dvoikh (A Railway Station for Two) (Eldar Ryazanov)
1986 Ot zarpaloy do zarpaloy (From Pay To Pay) (Aida Manasarova)
1987 Vsyo na brak (Loan for a Marriage) (Konstantin Voynov)
1988 Zapretnaya zona (Forbidden Zone) (Nikolai Gubenko)
1989 Beguschaya mishen (Running Target) (Talgat Temenov)
1992 Luna Park (Pavel Lungin)
1995 Shirli-Myrli (What a Mess!) (Vladimir Menshov)
1999 Mama (Denis Yevstigneyev) (as Polina)

Publications:

On MORDYUKOVA: articles—

* * *

Her sturdy appearance, stout demeanor, and forceful screen presence have made Nonna Mordyukova the quintessential Russian actress. In a career spanning over half a century, this “towering woman” has been cast in a number of heart-breaking war-time dramas, has become a symbol of Russian peasant womenfolk, and has come to be regarded as one of the best female comedians. Her large face, seemingly nondescript but nonetheless able to convey a multitude of feelings and be beautiful at times, makes her equally suited for complex dramatic roles as well as for comedies. Mordyukova has come to be seen as an epitome of “Russianness” whatever multiple meanings the concept may convey. It is no wonder that many of the films she has been cast in were literary adaptations of novels by leading Russian and Soviet authors, such as Leo Tolstoy, Ivan Turgenev, Alexei Tolstoy, Vladimir Tendryakov, Anatoli Rybakov, Yevgeni Dolmatovskiy, and Yuri Nagitin.

Mordyukova, whose first name, Nonna, is a short version of Noyabrina (after the month of her birth, November, but also alluding to a revolutionary legacy), spent her youth during the difficult years of World War Two (1941–1945). She debuted in cinema at the age of 23 in the 1948 screen adaptation of the classical war-time novel by Aleksandr Fadeyev, Molodaya gvardiya (1948), the story of a group of young people who organize an underground resistance against the Nazi invaders. The film was directed by veteran Sergei Gerassimov, and Mordyukova was entrusted with the female lead of Uliana Gromova, a beloved role model for Soviet youth at the time. This role immediately positioned her at the forefront of the younger generation of actors. From early on she attracted attention with her unusual appearance, as if conceived by a modernist sculptor: a sturdy large woman with a rough face able to display a much wider range of feelings than an ordinary good-looking female actress.

Mordyukova has often been cast in films about the war, like Sergei Bondarchuk’s World War Two epic Oni srachalis za rodina (1975), based on Mikhail Sholokhov’s novel, where she played alongside Vassili Shukshin, Vyacheslav Tikhonov, Yevgeni Samoilov, Lidia Fedoseyeva-Shukshina, and Innokenti Smoktunovsky.

Mordyukova’s most regular work is with directors Aleksei Saltykov and Nikolai Moskalenko, in whose dramatic films she has been a regular lead or key supporting actress. Her impressive filmography reveals, however, that while she has had the chance to work with a constellation of the best Soviet directors, it has usually been for one project only. There is no high profile director with whom she has a continuous working relationship. After her work for Gerassimov on Molodaya gvardiya, she was cast in the last movie of veteran Vsevolod Pudovkin The Return of Vasilii Bortnikov (1952). Other one-time collaborations with well-known directors have been with Mikhail Shvejtser for Chuzhaya rodnaya (1955), Lev Kulidzhanov for Ochij dom (1959), with Andrei Konchalovsky for the Turgenev adaptation Dvoryanskoye gnezdo (1969), with Grigori Chukhrai for Tryasina (1978), and with Nikolai Gubenko for Zapretnaya zona (1988). She only played once in a film by Nikita Mikhalkov, who structured his village comedy-drama Kinfolk (1981) entirely around the personality of the actress, who had by that time established herself as an epitome of the Russian peasant woman.

Some of Mordyukova’s one-time collaborations have been with well-known comedy directors who have put her talents to best use. For two of these comedies, the grotesque absurdist sketch Thirty Three (1965, directed by Georgi Danelia), and the romantic revolutionary tale Gori, gori, moya zvezda (1969, directed by Aleksandr Mitta), the big-boned Mordyukova was paired with the short and plump Yevgeni Leonov, another Soviet comedy star. The very discrepancy in their appearances produced a comic effect further strengthened by the ensuing reversal of traditional gender roles.

In her capacity of leading female comedian Mordyukova delivered a great performance as the house-manager, a key supporting role in Leonid Gaidai’s Brilliantovaya raka (1968), believed to be the most popular Soviet comedy of all times. Here she played alongside leading comedy stars Yuri Nikulin, Anatoliy Papanov, and Andrei Mironov. A decade later, Gaidai paired her once again with Papanov for his adaptation of Nikolai Gogol’s comedy Revisor, Incognito from St. Petersburg (1977). Eldar Ryazanov, the other leading Soviet comedy director, also used Mordyukova for a key supporting role. In his bittersweet prison comedy Railway Station for Two (1983), she played alongside Lyudmilla Gurchenko, Oleg Basilashvili, and Nikita Mikhalkov. The film, which was seen by millions across the Soviet Union and is one of the most popular films of the 1980s, was nominated for a Golden Palm at the Cannes Film Festival in 1983.

The role of Klavdia Vavilova in Aleksandr Askoldov’s Komissar (1967) is Mordyukova’s most memorable work. It is difficult to judge, however, to what extent it impacted her career, as the film, shot in 1966, was shelved and was only released in 1988. By that time Mordyukova was over sixty and had starred in over twenty other films. The wide critical acclaim and appreciation for what is probably her best performance came too late to have any definitive effect on her profile as an actor.

Komissar was the impressive first (and only) film by Alexander Askoldov, whose career was ruined by the shelving of this debut work. The screenplay for this avant-gardist project was based on the 1934 short story In the Town of Berdichev by Vassili Grossman, and the music was composed by Alfred Schnittke. The film is set during the civil war (1918–1920), and the music was composed by Alfred Schnittke. The film is set during the civil war (1918–1920). Nonna Mordyukova is Klavdia Vavilova, a robust and boisterous Red Army Commissar who has accidentally become pregnant. She is too busy fighting to even notice her pregnancy, and when she does, it is too late to abort as she would normally do. Compelled to give birth, Klavdia is placed for the last weeks of her pregnancy in the care of a poor Jewish family while the war rages outside. Vavilova’s presence puts Yefim Magazannik’s (Rolan Bykov) large family in immediate danger, and their relations are tense and adverse. As days go by, Vavilova grows fond of the simple joys of family life, and her rough war persona becomes kind and humane. When she gives birth, she is unable to care for the baby, and returns to the front. In a surreal scene Vavilova has a nightmarish premonition of Holocaust, a vision of a group of Jews, including all members of her host family, taken off to a death camp.

During the period of perestroika, Mordyukova appeared in a number of supporting roles in a range of comedy-dramas. Similarly, she has been a highly visible presence throughout the 1990s, with supporting roles in some of the most-popular Russian features, such as Pavel Lungin’s Luna Park (1992) and Vladimir Menshov’s Shirli-Myrtl (1995). In 1999 she played the leading role in Mama (1999), directed by Denis Yevstigneyev (son of respected Russian actor Yevgeni Yevstigneyev), a family saga loosely based on a real story, mixing action, melodrama and comedy elements and spanning several decades. In Mama, Mordyukova is Polina, a single mother of four, whose continuous efforts to keep the family together are doomed as her sons scatter all over the vast Soviet empire, from Vladivostok to Tadjikistan, and from the Far North to Donbas. Critics have celebrated Mordyukova’s return to the spotlight by calling her “a sacred Russian kinozaurus.”

—Dina Iordanova

MOREAU, Jeanne

Jeanne Moreau (right) with Claire Danes in I Love You, I Love You Not debut in Dernier amour, 1952—joined Théâtre National Populaire; 1975—president, Cannes Film Festival; 1976—directed the film Lumière; 1982—co-founder, with Klaus Hellwig, Moreau Productions; 1994—in TV mini-series Catherine the Great; also recorded several albums of songs. Awards: Best Actress, Cannes Festival, for Moderato Cantabile, 1960; Best Foreign Actress, British Academy, for Viva Maria, 1966; Chevalier, Légion d’honneur; Ordre Nationale du Merite et des Arts et Lettres. Agent: Artmédia, 10 av Georges V, 75008 Paris, France.

Films as Actress:

1948 Dernier amour (Stelli)
1950 Meurtres (Three Sinners) (Pottier); Pigalle Sainte-Germain-des-Pres (Berthomieu)
1951 L’Homme de ma vie (Lefranc)
1952 Il est minuit, Docteur Schweitzer (Haguet)
1953 Touchez pas au grisbi (Grisbi; Don’t Touch the Loot) (Jacques Becker) (as Josy); Dortoir des grandes (Inside a Girls’ Dormitory) (Decoin); Julietta (Marc Allégret) (as Rosie Facibey); Les Intriguantes (Decoin); La Reine Margot (Dréville)
1954 Secrets d’alcôve (The Bed; Il Letto) (Decoin, Delannoy, Habib, and Franciolini) (as Mother)
1955 Les Hommes en blanc (The Doctors) (Habib) (as Marianne); Gas-Oil (Grangier); M’sieur la caille (Pergament)
1956 La Salaire du pêché (de la Patellière); Jusqu’au dernier (Billon)
1957 Les Louves (Demoniaque; The She Wolves) (Saslavsky) (as Agnes); L’Etrange Mr. Steve (Vailly); Trois jours à vivre (Grangier); Echec au porteur (Grangier)
1958 Ascenseur pour l’échafaud (Elevator to the Gallows; Frantic) (Malle) (as Florence Carala); Le Dos au mur (Back to the Wall) (Molinaro); Les Amants (The Lovers) (Malle) (as Jeanne Tournier)
1959 Les Liaisons dangereuses (Dangerous Love Affairs; Relazioni Pericolose) (Vadim) (as Juliette de Merteuil); Le Dialogue des Carmélites (Bruckberger); Five Branded Women (Ritt) (as Ljuba); Les Quatre Cents Coups (The 400 Blows) (Truffaut) (as woman with dog)
1960 Moderato Cantabile (Seven Days . . . Seven Nights) (Brook)
(as Ann Desbaredes); La notte (The Night) (Antoniioni)
(as Lidia)
1961 Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Godard)
(as woman in bar)
1962 Jules et Jim (Jules and Jim) (Truffaut) (as Catherine);
Eva (Lossy) (as Eva Olivieri); La Baie des anges (Bay of Angels) (Demy) (as Jackie Damaire); Le Feu follet (The Fire Within)
(Malle) (as Jeanne)
1963 The Victors (Foreman) (as Frenchwoman); Le PROCÈS (The Trial)
(Welles) (as Miss Burstner)
1964 Peau de banane (Banana Peel) (Ophüls) (as Cathy);
Le Journal d’une femme de chambre (Diary of a Chambermaid)
(Bûnuvel) (as Celestine); Le Train (The Train) (Frankenheimer)
(as Christine); The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith)
(as Marchioness Eloise of Frinton)
1965 Viva Maria (Malle) (as Maria I); Mata Hari—Agent H-21
(Richard) (title role)
1966 Mademoiselle (Summer Fires) (Richardson) (title role);
Campanadas a Medianoche (Chimes at Midnight; Fallstaff)
(Welles) (as Doll Tearsheet)
1967 The Sailor from Gibraltar (Richardson) (as Anna);
“Made-moiselle Mimi” ep. of Le Plus Vieux Métier du monde
(The Oldest Profession) (de Broca) (as Mimi)
1968 La Mariée était en noir (The Bride Wore Black) (Truffaut) (as Julie Kohler);
Great Catherine (Flemming) (as Catherine); Une Histoire immortelle
(The Immortal Story) (Welles—for TV) (as Virginie Ducrot)
1969 ‘When Love Dies’ ep. of Le Petit théâtre de Jean Renoir
(The Little Theater of Jean Renoir) (Renoir—for TV) (as the singer);
Le Corps de Diane (Diane’s Body) (Richard)
(title role)
1970 Monte Walsh (Fraker) (as Martine Bernard); Alex in Wonderland
(Mazursky) (as herself); Comptes à rebours (Pigaut)
1971 L’Humeur vagabonde (Luntz)
1972 Chère Louise (de Broca); Nathalie Granger (Duras) (as other woman)
1973 Joanna Francesca (Diegues) (title role); Je t’aime (I Love You)
(Duceppe) (as Elisa Boussac); Les Valseuses (Going Places)
(Blier) (as Jeanne Pirole)
1974 La Race des seigneurs (Granier-Defrance); Hu Man
(Laperrousaz); Le Jardin qui bascule (Gilles)
1975 Souvenirs d’en France (French Provincial) (Teichinen)
1976 Mr. Klein (Losey) (as Florence); The Last Tycoon (Kazan)
(as Didi)
1980 Your Ticket Is No Longer Valid (Kaczender); Plein sud (Heat of Bread) (Beraud) (as Helene)
1981 Lucien chez les barbares (Bernardi); Mille milliards de dollars
(Berneuil)
1982 La Truite (The Trout) (Losey) (as Lou); Querelle (Fassbinder)
(as lysiane); Autour de l’arbre (Dillon)
1983 Der Bauer von Babylon (The Wizard of Babylon)
(Schdor—doc)
1984 Jean-Louis Barrault—Man of the Theatre (Balash—doc)
1985 Le Plus Grande Musée (Lander—for TV); Vicious Circle
(Ives—for TV)
1986 Le Paltoquer (Deville) (as the Proprietress); Sauve-toi Lola (Drach) (as Marie-Aude); Le Tiroir secret (Molinaro—for TV);
François Simon—La présence (Simon—for TV); Last Seance (Wyndham-Davies—for TV)
1987 Le Miraculé (Mocky) (as Sabine); Renoir, les portraits de la beauté
(Shigenobu—doc); Hotel Terminus (Ophüls)
1988 Calling the Shots (Cole and Dale—for TV); La Nuit de l’océan
(Perset)
1989 La Femme fardée (Pinheiro) (as La Doria)
1990 La femme Nékita (Besson) (as Amande); Alberto Express
(Joffé) (as the Baroness)
1991 Suspended Step of the Stork (To Meteoro Vima tou Pelargou) (Angelopoulos) (as the wife); Anna Karamazoff; The Architecture of Doom (as narrator); Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Edith Farber) 1992 The Lover (L’Amant) (Annuad) (as voice of Marguerite Duras); A Demain (as Tete); La Vielle qui marchait dans le mer
(The Old Lady Who Walked in the Sea) (Heynemann)
(as Lady M)
1993 The Absence (Handke) (as wife of the old man); Map of the Human Heart (La carte du tendre) (Ward) (as Sister Banville); Je M’Appelle Victor (My Name Is Victor) (Jacques)
(as Rose); The Summer House (Hussein) (as Lili); A Foreign Field (Sturridge—for TV) (as Angelique)
1995 Les cent et une nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda)
(as actor for a Day); Par delà les nuages (Antoniioni and Wenders)
1996 I Love You, I Love You Not (Hopkins) (as Nana); The Proprieter (Ismail Merchant) (as Adrienne Mark) 1997 Amour et confusions (Love & Confusions) (Braoudé) (as Libra); Un amoure sorcière (Witch Way Love) (Manzor)
(as Eglandine)
1998 Ever-After (Tennant) (as Grande Dame)
1999 Il Manoscrito del principe (Andò) (as Lady Tomasi di Lampedusa); Balzac (Dayan) (as Charlotte-Laure)
2000 Les Misérables (Dayan—for TV)

Films as Director:

1976 Lumière (Light) (+ sc, ro as Sarah Dedieu)
1979 L’adolescente (+ co-sc)
1984 Lillian Gish (co-d, + pr)

Publications

By MOREAU: book—

L’adolescente: d’après un scenario de Henriette Jelinek et Jeanne

By MOREAU: articles—

Interview with M. Lindsay, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), no. 3, 1969.
Interview with E. Decaux and Bruno Villien, in Cinémagraphe
Interview with Michael Buckley, in Films in Review (New York),
December 1983.

“Dialogue on Film: Jeanne Moreau,” in American Film (New York),
July/August 1984.
Interview with M. Cheviré and Serge Toubiana, in *Cahiers du 861

Interview with M. Buruiana, in Séquences (Montreal), January 1989.
Interview with Molly Haskell and Andrea R. Vaucher, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1990.
Interview with Françoise Audé and Michel Ciment and Michel Sineux, in Positif (Paris), May 1995.
Interview with Molly Haskell, in Interview, September 1996.

On MOREAU: books—

Ruscart, Marc, editor, with Chantel Le Sauzel, Jeanne Moreau, une femme, une actrice, Paris, 1986.

On MOREAU: articles—

Jeanne Moreau’s canonization coincided with the assault of the French New Wave on stale professional craftsmanship and conventional movie stardom. Toiling in the theater and forgettable movies for more than a decade, Moreau was no spring chicken when Louis Malle helped mold her image as the femme d’un certain age. At a chronological age when American leading ladies were put out to pasture of television sitcoms and summer stock, Moreau flourished not because she was refreshingly foreign but because, judged particularly against the backdrop of the rotting American studio system, she was unique. Not cast as disposable used goods like Piper Laurie in The Hustler or as a perennial spinster like Geraldine Page in Summer and Smoke, the no-longer fresh-faced Moreau of Jules and Jim and Frantic was a vitally sexy woman far from ready for consignment to a sexist junk heap. Defying bourgeois standards of propriety in Les Amants or deliberately bastardizing social intercourse in Les Liaisons dangereuses for her own pleasure, Moreau excited film buffs because she played by her own rules which were subject to change dictated by her will.

The charting of one’s destiny was a luxury denied most of the actresses working in Hollywood films of this same period. Adopted as a patron saint by Truffaut, Malle, and Godard, and embraced by the intelligentsia as a love goddess who did not insult their IQs, Moreau followed the same course in her career as her characters did in her movies: wherever your heart leads you, never compromise once you reach the destination. By insisting on placing herself in the hands of the top filmmakers of the era, her career span exceeded those who thought they were being clever just by alternating a commercial hit with an Oscar-nominated drama. Not constrained by an image, she became a tabula rasa for innovators. If she was the embodiment of soul-sickness for Antonioni in his unsparring dissection of a marriage in La notte, she could also be perceived as the saucy spirit of plaisir for Demy’s Bay of Angels or the brutally frank spokesperson for the superiority of the serving class in Buñuel’s Diary of a Chambermaid. If her American vehicles reveal her at half-mast, that may have been the consequence of not aligning herself with major Yankee filmmakers (save for Welles, who was by this point an expatriate far out of the Hollywood mainstream). In Europe, however, even intriguing mish-fires by Britishers Richardson and Brook, only enhanced her legend as a femme fatale with the soul of a poet. All the diverse aspects of Moreau’s personality mesh seamlessly in Truffaut’s masterpiece, Jules and Jim, which could be called Moreau’s Camille. Still exhilarating today, this gloriously untidy film presents Moreau’s maddeningly modern Catherine as part unfettered child, part calculating vixen. Bewitching the viewers just as she captivates her lovers, Moreau crystallizes the movie’s romantic tragedy for us by creating a mystery woman who never surrenders to either man the complete abandonment they desire.

Sometimes languidly sensual, sometimes raging with volcanic force, the Empress of Art Cinema capped off the first phase of her stardom with an enchanting rendition of a bittersweet song in Le Petit théâtre de Jean Renoir, a valedictory to him and a tribute to her loveliness which time seemed powerless to dim. As a character actress she continued to spark excitement, notably passing on the New Wave baton from Truffaut to Blier in Going Places and instructing a declasse assassin in social graces in La femme Nikita. Although space defeats anyone trying to summarize all of Moreau’s acting benedictions, one can point out that as of 1993, her histrionic passion could still attain rapturous heights on the evidence of The Summer House. Fittingly for an actress who hitched her star to so many auteurs, she made a graceful transition to directing. Beginning with a contemplation of acting and friendship in the luminous Lumière, progressing through a lovely coming-of-age tale, L’adolescente, and culminating in an inspired documentary about Lillian Gish, Moreau proves that she is still the searching artist no matter where she positions herself on a movie set. The restless drive for self-expression which fueled some of her favorite moviemakers’ greatest works now lives on in her own highly personal and adventurous efforts.

—Robert Pardi

MORGAN, Michèle

1950 (died 1959). Career: 1936—film debut in bit part in Mademoiselle Mozart; also worked on stage; 1937—contract with the director Marc Allégret; 1942—6—made several films in the United States under contract to RKO; 1966—exhibition of her paintings at Galerie Dina Vierny; 1978—80—on stage in Le Tout pour le tout, and in Chéri, 1982–83.

Films as Actress:

1936 Mademoiselle Mozart (Noé) (bit role); La Vie parisienne (Siodmak) (bit role); Mes tantes et moi (Noé) (as Michèle); Le Mieche (Forty Little Mothers) (Moguy) (as student); Une Fille a papa (Guissart) (bit role)

1937 Gigolette (Noé) (bit role); Gribouille (Heart of Paris) (Marc Allégret) (as Natalie Roguin); Orage (Marc Allégret) (as Pascaud)

1938 Quai des Brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné) (as Nelly); Le Récif de corail (Gleize) (as Lilian White)

1940 L’Entraîneuse (Valentin) (as Suzy; Les Musiciens du ciel (Lacombe) (as Lte. Saulnier)

1941 Remorques (Stormy Waters) (Grémillon) (as Catherine)

1942 La Loi du nord (Feyder) (as Jacqueline Bert); Joan of Paris (Stevenson) (title role)

1943 Untel Père et Fils (The Heart of a Nation) (Duvivier—produced in 1939) (as Marie Froment-Léonard); The Heart of Paris (Valentin) (as Lilian White); Stormy Waters (Marin) (as Jeanne); Higher and Higher (Whelan) (as Millie)

1944 Passage to Marseille (Curtiz) (as Paula)

1945 La Symphonie pastorale (Delannoy) (as Gertrude); The Chase (Ripley) (as Lorna Roman)

1946 The Fallen Idol (The Lost Illusion) (Reed) (as Julie); Fabiola (Blasetti) (title role); Aux yeux du souvenir (Souvenir) (Delannoy) (as Claire Magny)

1948 Maria Chapdelaine (The Naked Heart) (Marc Allégret—released in U.S. in 1955) (title role); La Belle que voilà (Le Chanois) (as Jeanne Morel); Le Château de verre (Clément) (as Evelyne Bertal)

1950 L’Etrange Madame X (Grémillon) (as Irène)

1952 “L’Orgueil” (“‘Pride’”) ep. of Les Sept Péchés Capitaux (The Seven Deadly Sins) (Autant-Lara) (as Anne-Marie de Pillières); La Minute de vérité (The Moment of Truth) (Delannoy) (as Madeleine Richard)

1953 Les Orgueilleux (The Proud and the Beautiful) (Yves Allégret) (as Nellie)

1954 “Jeanne” ep. of Destinées (Daughters of Destiny; Love, Soldiers and Women; Lysistrata) (Yves Allégret) (as Jeanne d’Arc); Obsession (Delannoy) (as Helene Giovanni)

1955 Napoléon (Guiry) (as Joséphine); Oasis (Yves Allégret) (as Francoise Lignières); Les Grandes Manoeuvres (The Grand Manoeuer; Summer Manoeuvres) (Clair) (as Marie-Louise Rivière); Si Paris nous était conté (If Paris Were Told to Us) (Guiry) (as Gabrielle d’Estrees)

1956 Marguerite de la nuit (Autant-Lara) (as Marguerite); Marie-Antoinette (Delannoy) (title role)

1957 The Vintage (Hayden) (as Léonne Morel); Retour de Manivelle (There’s Always a Price Tag) (de la Patellière) (as Hélène Freminger)

1958 Le Miroir à deux faces (The Mirror Has Two Faces) (Cayatte) (as Marie-José); Maxime (Verneuil) (as Jacqueline Monneron); Racconti d’estate (Love on the Riviera; Summer Tales; Femmes d’un été) (Francolini) (as Michelle)

1959 Pourquoi viens-tu si tard? (Decoin) (as Catherine Ferrer); Vacanze d’inverno (Mastrocinque) (as Steffia Tardier)

1960 Menschen im Hotel (Grand Hotel) (Reinhardt) (as La Grusinskaya); Les Scélérats (Hossein) (as Thelma Roland); Fortunat (Joffé) (as Juliette Yalecourt)

1961 Le Puits aux trois vérités (Three Faces of Sin) (Villiers) (as Renée Plégés); Les Lions sont lâchés (Verneuil) (as Cecile)

1962 Un Coeur gros comme ça (Reichenbach) (as herself); Rencontres (Agostini) (as Bella Krasner); “The Hugues Case” ep. of Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay; The Gentle Art of Murder) (Oury) (as Jeanne Hugues 2)

1963 Landru (Bluebeard) (Chabrol) (as Célestine Buisson); Méfiez-vous mesdames (Hunebelle) (as Gisèle Duparc)

1964 Il fornaretto di Venezia (Tessari) (as Comtesse Sofia Zeno); Constance aux enfers (Web of Fear) (Villiers) (as Constance Brunel); Les Pas perdus (Robin) (as Yolande Simonnet); Les Yeux cernés (Hossein) (as Florence Vollmer)

1965 Dis-noi qui tuer (Périé) (as Geneviève Monthanhet)

1966 Lost Command (Not for Honor and Glory) (Robson) (as Comtesse Nathalie de Clairefons)

1967 La Bien-aimée (Doniol-Valcroze—for TV) (as Fanny)

1968 Benjamin ou Les mémoires d’un puceau (Benjamin; The Diary of an Innocent Boy) (Deville) (as Comtesse Gabrielle de Valandry)

1975 Le Chat et la souris (Cat and Mouse) (Lelouch) (as Mme. Richard)

1976 Robert et Robert (Lelouch) (as herself)

1978 Chéri (Hubert—for TV)

1980 Un Homme et une femme: vingt ans déjà (A Man and a Woman; 20 Years Later) (Lelouch); Le Tiroir secret (Molinaro—for TV)

1990 Stanno tutti bene (Everybody’s Fine) (Tornatore) (as woman on train)

1995 La Veuve de l’architecte (Monnier—for TV) (as Helena Kramp)

1997 Des gens si bien élevés (Nahum) (as Geneviève)

1998 La Rivale (Nahum) (as Judith)

Publications

By MORGAN: books—

On MORGAN: book—

On MORGAN: articles—

Ecran (Paris), February 1979.

Baker, B., “Michele Morgan,” in Film Dope (Nottingham, England), September 1990.

* * *

After a successful debut in the 1930s as an affecting, ill-fated heroine, Michele Morgan survived a disappointing wartime period in Hollywood to become France’s most acclaimed actress of the 1950s. With her honest expression, serene open face, and fine features, she possessed an almost unworlly beauty which seemed the outward manifestation of untainted virtue and intrinsic moral strength. In the bleak mood of pre-war Europe she came to represent the contemporary romantic heroine doomed through implacable adversity to unhappiness.

Morgan’s first triumph came in Gribouille as the fetchingly innocent Natalie, unjustly accused of murdering her lover. Pathetic, self-sacrificing roles followed. In Organe an impossible affair leads to suicide; in L’Entrainneuse, revelation of her dubious past destroys her happiness, while in La Loi du nord and Les Musiciens du ciel a martyr’s death is her reward for loyalty and devotion. It was with Jean Gabin as a romantic partner, however, that she achieved distinction. If in La Réci de corail misfortune is conquered, in Quai des brumes and Remorques their chance encounter secures only fleeting happiness. As the hapless heroine, Morgan gave outstanding performances, particularly for Carné as Nelly, the precociously mature young woman trapped in a corrupt society and experiencing love with the fugitive Gabin. Her assorted and indifferent Hollywood performances included that of a servant masquerading as a debutante in Whelan’s comedy-musical Higher and Higher, a romanticized Resistance heroine in Joan of Paris, and in Two Tickets to London a widow romantically involved with a serviceman.

Critical acclaim marked Morgan’s return to French cinema in a sensitive and restrained performance as the blind girl Gertrude in La Symphonie pastorale. Reestablishing herself as the romantic heroine, she now assumed professional roles as an air hostess dogged by memories in Aux yeux du souvenir and as a terminally ill ballerina in La Belle que voilà. The postwar era brought co-productions and La Belle que voilà. (two parts); Okusama ni goyojin.

As a traditional star closely identified with established directors such as Yves Allégret and Delannoy, Michele Morgan was all but ignored by the New Wave iconoclasts. Extending over five decades, her largely distinguished, if uneven, film career survived indifferent roles in nonindigenous productions. Eight years after her last screen appearance, as herself in Robert et Robert, she made a triumphant return to the stage in Colette’s Chéri. More recently, she has enjoyed a popular following in the television serial Le Tiroir secret as a psychologist delving into her dead husband’s past. She will be remembered for her exceptional beauty, her discreet, composed acting as the desirable young heroine, and her intelligent, sensitive performances as the sophisticated lady of later years.

—R. F. Cousins

MORI, Masayuki

Education: Attended Imperial University, Kyoto, to 1932. Family: Married Toshie Yoshida, 1946; sons: Takeo and Junkichi.

Films as Actor:

1942 Haha no chizu (Shimazu)
1943 Sasume dokaituru-ki (Kinugasa and Imai)
1944 Dengeki Shutsudo
1945 Zoku Sugata Sanshiro (Sanshiro Sugata; Judu Saga, Part II) (Kurosawa) (as Yoshima Dan); Toro no o fumu otokotachi (Men Who Tread on the Tiger’s Tail) (Kurosawa) (as Kamei)
1946 Asu o tsukuru hitobito (Those Who Make Tomorrow) (Kurosawa, Tamamoto, and Sekigawa)
1947 Anjo-ke no buto-kai (Yoshimura) (as eldest son)
1948 Kofuku no isu; Ware nakinurete; Jutai (Shibuya); Hakai (Apostasy) (Kinosita)
1949 Waga shogai no kagayakuru hit (Yoshimura) (as ex-officer); Kyo ware renai su; Giddobai (Shima); Dai-tokai no ushimitsu-doki; Chijin no ai (Kimura); Yabure-daiko (Kinosita)
1950 Ma no ogon; Kazan-myaku; Rashomon (Kurosawa) (as Takehiro); Senka no hate; Tokyo no hiroin; Re-itzeraburu (two parts); Okusama ni goyojin
1951 Kyujo hiroba (Hisamatsu); Zenma (Kinoshita); Hakachi (The Idiot) (Kurosawa) (as Myshkin); Nusumareita koi; Jumpan no yoru; Musashinojujun (Lady Musashino) (Mizoguchi) (as Tadao Akiyama); Tokyo hika

1952 Joobachi; Taki no Shiraito; Bijo to tozoka (Kimura); Aote konote

1953 Senba-zuru (Yoshimura); Yosei wa hana no nioi ga sura (Hisamatsu); Ugetsu monogatari (Ugetsu) (Mizoguchi) (as Genjuro); Saikai; Ani imoto (Naruse) (as older brother); Kani-ko sen (Yamamura); Asakusa monogatari; Koibumi (Tanaka)

1954 Moeru Shanhai; Aru onna (Toyoda) (as ship’s captain); Ai Midori no nakama; Koku no tanoshisa

1955 Ukimato (Floating Clouds) (Naruse); Yokihi (The Princess Yang Kwei-je) (Mizoguchi) (as Emperor); Kitora (Ichikawa) (as teacher); Yoshima no shiraume (Kinugasa) (as Shujo Sakai); Nyuso yo, eien nare (Tanaka)

1956 Fusen; Izo-zange; Ai wa furu hoshi no kanata ni; Ningen gyorai shutsugeki su

1957 Arakure; Fusen; Otobai (Yoshimura) (as Shuzo Sakai); Ichikawa) (as teacher)

1958 Onna o wakare (Kawashima); Shiryo akuma; Yoru no tsuzumi (Imai) (as drummer)

1959 Suzakake no samponnichi (Horikawa); Dai-san no shikaku; Fabuki to tomo ni keiyakuma; Onna-gokoro; Konan no kuchibue (Naruse); Aru rakujitsu; Kizoku no kaidan; Ygori no koto

1960 Onna ga kaidan o nobura toka (When a Woman Ascends the Stairs) (Naruse) (as Nobuhiko); Musmeisu tsuna haka (Naruse); Gametsui yatsu (This Greedy Old Skin) (Chiba); Otouto (Her Brother) (Tchikawa) (as father); Warai yatsu hodo yoka nemura (The Bad Sleep Well) (Kurosawa) (as Ishibuchi)

1961 Onna wa yoru kesho-suru (Inoue); Tsumo to shite onnato shite (Naruse); Ai to honoo to (Challenge to Live) (Sugawa); Onna no kunsho (Yoshimura); Nyusuro gakkou; Shamiisen to otobai (Shinoda)

1962 Bushido zankoku monogatari (Bushido) (Imai) (as Lord Hori); Kitaro mitoriobuchi (Alone on the Pacific; My Enemy the Sea) (Ichikawa) (as father); Kitera umi (Nakahira)

1963 Otoko-girai; Kikyo

1964 Haru ramman (Chiba); Kano to negi

1965 Midaregumo (Scattered Clouds) (Naruse)

1966 Yamamoto Isoroku (Admiral Yamamoto) (Maruyama); Sogeki (Sun Above, Death Below) (Horikawa) (as Katakurka)

1967 Hi no tsuki (Through Days and Months) (Nakamura) (as father); Aa, kagun (Gateway to Glory) (Murayama)

1970 Zatoichi: Abare Himatsuri (Miumi)

1972 Ken to hana

* * * *

The Shingeki (modern theater) actor Masayuki Mori first impressed the Japanese film audience with his performance as the nihilistic son of an aristocratic family in Yoshimura’s 1947 film, Anjo-ke no buto-kai. His intellectual and sophisticated characterization attracted critical attention, as well as establishing his career as a successful film star. His collaboration with Yoshimura continued through the 1950s: another of their masterpiece is Waga shogai no kagayakera hi, in which Mori played an ex-officer with whom the heroine falls in love without knowing he has assassinated her father. The film vividly conveyed the confusing and disillusioned mood of postwar Japan, emphasized by Mori’s skillful and explosively powerful performance.

He began to work with Kurosawa during the war, and Mori’s international fame came when he played the husband in Rashomon. Despite the rather static acting style demanded by Mori’s role (contrasting with the stormy performances of Mifune and Kyo), he projected an intensity at least equaling that of the more dramatic characters. As Myshkin in Kurosawa’s adaptation of The Idiot, Mori created a character of sublime purity, enriched by his strong theater background. Especially skillful with his sense of timing and subtle expressions which made this almost nonhuman abstract character so convincing.

Of his several roles in Naruse’s films, the most representative is that of the middle-aged man in Ukimato. Mori played a disillusioned intellectual constantly betraying the heroine, who cannot leave him. This fatalistic character became incredibly rich and even sympathetic despite his negative aspects, as Mori created a sort of sincerity of the weak man in him. His achievement elicited an enthusiastic response from the critics and audience. For Mizoguchi, Mori portrayed the potter enchanted by the ghost princess in Ugetsu monogatari and the loving Emperor in Yokihi. The former role portrayed the extreme form of the doomed lover, contrasting with the calm style of the pure lover in the latter film. In both cases, Mori gave solid, well-rounded performances despite the director’s harsh pursuit of realism.

In addition to the role of disillusioned intellectual, Mori was also admired as a romantic lover (Gosho’s Banka), a simple but humanistic laborer (Naruse’s Ani imoto), a poor Ainu man victimized by discrimination (Naruse’s Kotan no kuchibue), and others in a wide range of melodrama, social drama, and comedy.

—Kyoko Hirano

MOZHUKIN, Ivan

Nationality: Russian. Born: Ivan Ilyitch Mozhukin in Penza, 26 September 1887 (some sources give 1889); adopted the spelling Mosjoukine in France. Education: Studied law at the University of Moscow, two years. Family: Married 1) the actress Nathalie Lissenko; 2) Agnes Peterson; illegitimate son: the writer Romain Gary. Career: 1910—actor with stage company in Kiev, also toured in the provinces; 1911—moved to Moscow; became famous for his roles in Dumas’s Kein and Rostand’s L’Aiglon; film debut in The Kreutzer Sonata; then made films for the Khanyonkov studios and for the director Evgeni Bauer; 1915—began long association with the director Yakov Protazanov; formed production company with Protazanov and the producer Joseph Ermoliev; 1917–19—during the revolution, Ermoliev relocated the company in Yalta, then in Istanbul and Paris; company re-formed as Société des Films Ermoliev; 1921—directed the film L’Enfant du carnaval. Died: In Neuilly, France, 17 January 1939.
Films as Actor:

1911 Kreutzer sonata (The Kreutzer Sonata) (Chardynin); Zhizn na Tzarya (A Life for the Czar) (Goncharov); Oborono Sevastopolya (The Defense of Sebastopol) (Goncharov) (as Napoleon III)

1912 Kubok zhizni i smerti (The Cup of Life and Death) (Hansen); Mirele Efros (Gai); Bryata razbotchniki (Brother Brigands) (Goncharov); Strasna pokony (The Redoubtable Deceased) (Yuriev); Snotchak (The Daughter-in-Law) (Gai); Chelevek, drama nachidnya (Man: A Modern Drama) (Chardynin); Bryata (Brothers) (Chardynin); Krestyan'skaya dola (A Peasant's Fate) (Goncharov); Rabotchiaia slobodka (Workers' Quarters) (Goncharov). Voina i mir (War and Peace) (Chardynin); Givio troups (The Living Corpse) (Chardynin); Dournman (Vertigo) (Chardynin); Falchivi kupon (The False Note) (Chardynin)

1913 Tchaz Boulat (Goncharov); Gorre Sarri (The Sorrows of Sarah) (Arkhatov); Pianisto v yevo pozledstvja (Drunkenness and Its Consequences) (Dvoretsky; Obry; The Precipice) (Chardynin); Domok v Kolomna (The Little House in Kolomna) (Chardynin); Vot mchta po trioika potchvovaya (The Troika) (Bauer); Didiououska kvarsitira (In the Maiden's Room) (Bauer); Straschinaia miest (Terrible Vengeance) (Starevich); Notch pered Rozdestvom (Christmas Eve) (Starevich) (as the Devil)

1914 Revnost (Jealousy) (Chardynin); V rukatch bespochtadhnogo roka (In the Hands of a Pitiless Destiny) (as Chardynin); Zhemshina zavtraschevoa dna (Woman of Tomorrow) (Chardynin); Ditya bolchoego goroda (Children of the City) (Bauer); Krisantenem (Chrysanthemums) (Chardynin); Tainstvennem nekto (The Beggar) (Chardynin); Sorvanetch (The Ballad) (Chardynin); Ty pomnis li? (Do You Remember?) (Chardynin); Shazka o spiatche (Sleeping Beauty) (Bauer); V pohnotch na kladobische (At Midnight in the Tomb) (Bauer); Rozdennie polzat utat ne mozet (The Silent Witnesses) (Bauer); Zlatcke notch (The Terrible Night) (Bauer); Zhizn na smerti (Life in Death) (Bauer); Slava nam, smert vragam! (Glory to Me, Death to the Enemy!) (Bauer); Taina Germanovskovo posolstva (The Secrets of the German Ambassador) (Bauer); Ei gerochsky podvig (His Heroic Action; Honor of the Nation) (Bauer)

1915 Ruslan i Ludmila (Ruslan and Ludmila) (Starevich); Natasha Rostova (Chardynin); Vlas tmy (The Powers of Darkness) (Chardynin); Vozrozhdenia (Resurrection) (Chardynin); Potop (The Deluge) (Chardynin); Klub mraevstvennosti (The Suicide Club) (Bauer); Petersburgskaya trushchob (Petersburg Slums) (Protazanov and Gardin); Komedia smerti (The Comedy of Death) (Chardynin); Nikolai Stavrogin (Protazanov); Taina niegorodskoi yamarki (The Mysteries of the Novgorod Fair) (Protazanov); Vot vspynulo utro (The Other Love) (Sabinsky); Vysya zhizn pod maski (Life behind a Mask) (Sabinsky); Deti Vanyousina (The Girl of Vaniousins) (Protazanov); Param gnedych (Diary of a Madman) (Protazanov); Kaitchka (The Seagull) (Protazanov); Smerti doma (The House of Death) (Protazanov); The Silent Bell-Ringer (Protazanov); Yo vlasti gretcha (Under the Yoke of Sin) (Protazanov and Asagarov)

1916 Lyubov silna na strastny potseplyu (The Strange Passion of a Kiss) (Sabinsky); V boynoi slepoy strastei (Blind Passion) (Sabinsky); Zhizn mig iskusstvo vetchno (Life Is Short but Art Is Eternal) (Sabinsky); A shchastia bylo tak vozmoizno (And Happiness Will Be Possible) (Asagarov); Uchveli uzh davno krisantemi v sadu (When the Chrysanthemums Fade) (Arkhatov); Pikovaya dama (The Queen of Spades) (Protazanov); Zhenshchina s kinchalom (Woman with a Dagger) (Protazanov); Sikval (The Squall) (Protazanov); Le Parlementaire (Volkov); Na viershina slavy (The Height of Glory) (Volkov); Kulisssi ekrana (Behind the Screen) (Volkov) (+ sc); Tamety smerti (Danse Macabre) (Protazanov) (+ sc); Ugolok (The Right Sort) (Sabinsky)

1916–17 Grekh (Sin) (Protazanov and Asagarov)—serial (+ co-sc)

1917 Prokuror (Public Prosecutor) (Protazanov) (+ sc); Otets i syn (Father and Son) (Perestiani; Torgyi dom Karski (Karsky and Company) (Sabinsky); Dots Izrika (The Idol; The Daughter of Israel) (Tourjansky); Andrei Kozhukhov (Protazanov); Ni nado krvi (Blood Need Not Be Spilled) (Volkov); Prokliatiye millioni (Cursed Millions) (Protazanov); Satana likuyushchii (Satan Triumphant) (Protazanov) (+ co-sc); Otets Sergii (Father Sergius) (Protazanov)

1918 Taina korolevy (The Queen's Secret) (Protazanov)

1919 Justice d'abord (The Public Prosecutor) (Protazanov) (+ sc); La Nuit du 11 Septembre (Protazanov); L'Anoissaante Aventure (The Agonizing Adventure) (Protazanov)

1920 Tempetes (Boudrioz)

1922 La Maison du mystere (Volkov)—serial

1924 Kean (Edmund Kean—Prince among Lovers) (Volkov); Les Ombres qui passent (Nadejdine and Asagarov); Le Lion des Mogols (Epstein) (+ sc)

1925 Feu Mathias Pascal (The Late Mathias Pascal; The Living Dead Man) (L’Herbier)

1926 Michel Strogoff (Michael Strogoff) (Tourjansky)

1927 Casanova (Volkov); The Surrender (Soman)

1928 Der Präsident (The President) (Righelli); Der geheime Kurier (Le Rouge et le noir) (Righelli)

1929 Adjudant des Zaren (Au service du Tsar) (Striljevsky); Manolescu (Manolesco, roi des voleurs) (Tourjansky)

1930 Der weisse Teufel (The White Devil) (Volkov)

1931 Le Sergent X (Striljevsky)

1932 La Mille et Deuxieme Nuits (Volkov)

1933 Les Amours de Casanova (Barberis)

1934 L'Enfant du carnaval (Volkov) (+ sc)

1936 Nitchevo (de Baroncelli)

Films as Director:

1921 L'Enfant du carnaval (+ sc, ro)

1923 Le Brasier ardent (co-d, + sc, ro)

Publications

By MOZHUKIN: book—

Quand j'étais Michel Strogoff, with Jean Arroy, Paris, n.d.
Ivan Mozukhin was always more than an actor. He was a man of the cinema, a very remarkable actor, scriptwriter, and director. Of his two careers one was as leading star of the Czarist cinema, matinee idol, and focal point of an early Russian film culture. The early Russian cinema was perfunctory, highly emotional, and melodramatic. It also drew on classic Russian writers. Its standards were high, and it produced directors of the caliber of Volkov, Protazanov, Bauer, and Tourjansky. Many of its actors were later to enrich the cinema of Western Europe. When the Ermoliev company emigrated in 1919 with their actors, designers, and cameramen, Mozukhin came with them, adopting the name “Mozjoukine,” by which he is best known.

Mozukhin was born in Penza in 1887 and was intended for a law career. Drawn to the stage, he gained experience in provincial and Moscow theaters and soon drifted into films. In many of these his leading lady was his wife, the talented Nathalie Lissenko. His first film, in 1911, was The Kreutzer Sonata. In 1913 he had the good luck to be directed by Evgeni Bauer, who influenced his acting style, giving it subtlety and depth. In 1915 he joined the Ermoliev company with whose destiny he was to be closely linked. Outstanding films of 1916 were Arkavov’s When the Chrysanthemums Fade, Protazanov’s The Queen of Spades, and Volkov’s Behind the Screen, with a script by Mozukhin. 1917 was a critical year for Russia but Mozukhin registered some of his greatest successes, Public Prosecutor, Satan Triumphant, and Father Sergius. In the last film, based on Tolstoy and directed by Protazanov, Mozukhin gave a virtuoso performance as the young officer who becomes a monk and resists in his old age the temptations of the flesh. His last Russian film was an adaptation of Elinor Glyn’s novel Three Weeks, retitled The Queen’s Secret. The Ermoliev company, having relocated in Yalta, fled from there to France via Istanbul. The film L’angoisante Aventure was made en route and finished in Paris. Mozukhin, Lissenko, and Nicolai Koline were its leading players, and it was directed by Protazanov. It is about a lighthearted young man-about-town who has a run of bad luck and experiences misery and dejection. It gave Mozukhin an opportunity for a versatile performance. The Russians settled in the old studios of Monteul near Paris and Protazanov directed a remake of Public Prosecutor under the title Justice d’abord. In Volkov’s serial La Maison du mystère he established his French reputation and himself directed L’Enfant du carnaval. His most striking work as a director, however, was in the avant-garde Le Brasier ardent, a delightful comedy, dreamlike in its fantasy, in which he played a whole range of characters.

Alexander Kamenka continued the work of Ermoliev with his Albatros company for which many brilliant young French directors worked. In Keen, based on the life of the great English tragedian, Mozukhin had a wonderful opportunity to bring the story of the actor to life and interpret Hamlet and Romeo, even if in silent mime. Jean Epstein directed him in Le Lion des Moguls with designs by Bilinsky. L’Herbier’s Le Feu Mathias Pascal gave him a Pirandello role which he played with memorable skill. Michel Strogoff by Tourjansky introduced him to the world’s screens in a spectacular film widely distributed by Universal. Volkov’s Casa novice, also handled by Universal gave him similar exposure but a visit to Hollywood was not a success, and Edward Sloman’s The Surrender did not enhance his reputation. He now played in several German films. Manolescu, directed by Tourjansky, and Le Rouge et le noir by Righelli, featuring Agnes Peterson whom he married, deserting his old partner Nathalie Lissenko. It is interesting to note that he was first choice for Gance’s Napoléon but chose instead to take the role of Michel Strogoff.

He appeared in Volkov’s sound film Der weisse Teufel (based on Tolstoy’s Hadji Murad) with some success, but from now on his star was in decline. Inferior remakes of past successes and minor roles in French films followed, and the once proud Russian star drifted into poverty and obscurity. He died destitute in the public ward of a Neuilly hospital and is buried with the brother Alexander in the lovely Russian Orthodox graveyard of Ste. Geneviève du Bois just south of Paris. He was a giant among silent screen actors, refined in his playing and dynamic and haunting in his personality. The second title of his great film Keen was Désordre et gentil and that, alas, was true of him. He lived life to the fullest. Everyone I had asked who had known him always said “Mozjoukine, il était fou.”

*Liam O’Leary

MUELLER-STAHLP, Armin

Films as Actor:

1956 Heimliche Ehen (The Secret Marriage) (Wagenheim)
1960 Fünf Patrone in Händen (Beyer) (as the Frenchman)
1962 Königsindien (Beyer); . . . und deine Liebe auch (Vogel)
1963 Nacht unter Wölfen (Naked among the Wolves) (Beyer) (as Höfel); Christine (Dudow)
1964 Alaskafüchse (Wallroth); Preludio 11 (Maetzig)
1967 Ein Herr am Alexander-Platz (Reisch)
1970 Tödlicher Irrtum (Pezoldt)
1972 Der Dritte (The Third; The Blind Man) (Günther) (as the blind man); Januskopf (Maetzig)
1973 Die Hosen des Ritters von Bredow (Petzoldt)
1974 Jakob der Lügner (Kassovitz) (as Barabas); Kit & Co.—Lockruf des Goldes (Brand) (as Mr. Linzer)
1976 Die Hosen des Ritters von Bredow (Pezoldt)
1978 Die Flucht aus Pommern (Wallroth); Ich werde warten (Vogel)
1980 Das Spinnennetz (Brand) (as Conrad Strughold)
1981 Flucht aus Pommern (Wallroth); Ein Lord am Alexander-Platz (Reisch)
1982 Die Sehnsucht der Veronika Voss (Szabó) (as Crown Prince Franz-Josef); Ein Märchen der Gebruder Nimm Schweinegold (C.A.S.H.: A Political Fairy Tale) (as Maxwell); A Hecc (Just for Kicks) (as Marno)
1983 Die Flucht (Gies—for TV) (as SS-Untersturmführer Mayer); Flucht aus Pommern (Wajda) (as SS-Untersturmführer Mayer);
1984 Die Hosen des Ritters von Bredow (Pezoldt)
1985 Der Angriff der Gegenwart auf die Übrige Zeit (The Blind Director) (Klug) (as Blind Movie Director); Zahadnæ na Mozat (Vergesse Mozart; Forget Mozart!) (Luther) (as Count Pergen); Redd Ezredes (Oberst Redl; Colonel Redl) (Szabó) (as Crown Prince Franz-Josef); An uns glaubt Gott nicht mehr (God Doesn’t Believe in Us Anymore) (Corti) (as Gandhí)
1986 Bittere Ernte (Angry Harvest) (Agnieszka Holland) (as Leon); Hautnah (Schulze-Roehr—for TV); Unser Mann im Dschungel (The Jungle Mission) (Steiner and Stripp—for TV) (as Mr. Kehlmann); Momo (Schaaf) (as Chief Grey Man); Der Fall Franz (Franza) (Schwarzenberger—for TV) (as Dr. Jordan/Dr. Korener); Gauner im Paradies (Fant—for TV); Auf den Tag genau (Laehn)

Publications

By MUELLER-STAHL:

- articles—

By MUELLER-STAHL:

- books—

On MUELLER-STAHL:

- book—

On MUELLER-STAHLE articles—

Rother, H.-J., “Drehtage Music Box und Avalon,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt, Germany), July 1991.

Boxoffice (Chicago), June 1997.

* * *

Armin Mueller-Stahl’s acting career began in East Germany with theatrical roles in a romantic vein: Romeo in Romeo and Juliet, the Prince in Lessing’s Emilia Galotti, and Andrei in the stage version of War and Peace. In 1956 he made his cinema debut, and has subsequently had the opportunity to display his rare talent for projecting highly dramatic characters who unite the tragic and the everyday, the romantic and the down-to-earth.

He first attracted notice in the role of the Frenchman in Fünf Patronenhülsen by Frank Beyer (Mueller-Stahl was to appear in many of Beyer’s later films). In the story of a group of soldiers forced to try and make their way out of an ambush during the Spanish Civil War, Mueller-Stahl was praised for the realism of his performance and for the fluidity and at the same time restraint of his dramatic talent. His part in the 1960 television series Flucht aus der Hölle brought him tremendous acclaim. His success was confirmed in the film version of Bruno Apitz’s novel Nacht unter Wölfen in which he once again worked with Beyer as well as Erwin Geschonek. Hefel (Mueller-Stahl) sacrifices himself with dignity in order to save the Jewish child whom the prisoners have hidden in the beech woods.

After having been blacklisted in East Germany for his political activities, Mueller-Stahl was encouraged to emigrate, whereupon he took his family to West Germany. Although virtually unknown in the West, he soon worked with Fassbinder in Lola and Die Sehnsucht der Veronika Voss—films that formed a part of the director’s great fresco in which he attempted to depict the social and spiritual development of Germany from the war years to the present. In Lola Mueller-Stahl laconically traces, almost as if from a distance, the downfall of a city administrator who becomes prey to the seductions of Lola (an obvious allusion to Josef von Sternberg’s The Blue Angel) and the temptations of money and corruption.

In 1983 Mueller-Stahl reached a high point in his dramatic career with the film Glat, which deals with one of the central themes of the Swiss cinema: the wound left behind in the national consciousness by Swiss neutrality during World War II. Mueller-Stahl has a double role as a father, an arms producer actively involved with the Fascists in Germany, and his son, who bears the spiritual ‘‘wound’’ of his childhood. The family seem prosperous and content, but they are not spared the tragedy of war: the grandfather, a colonel in the Swiss Reserves, dies while trying to save a Polish prisoner of war, and the arms factory is shelled by the Allies. The son is made painfully aware of his ‘‘wound’’ when he meets a girl who was taken into a comfortable Swiss home during the war years—a little Polish girl, saved from annihilation in the ghetto and now grown into a beautiful, independent woman (Krystyna Janda). The collapse of a human life is shown here by Mueller-Stahl with great realism, and at the same time with that distancing irony that characterizes his best screen roles.

In the late 1980s, Hollywood discovered Mueller-Stahl, who soon played two astonishingly different characters in two of his first American films, Costa-Gavras’s Music Box and Barry Levinson’s Avalon. In the former he had to learn English and take on a Hungarian accent as a Nazi war criminal who has spent decades as a patriotic immigrant in the United States before his past crimes come to light. In the latter Mueller-Stahl spiced his English with some Yiddish to touchingly capture the patriarch of an extended family of Jewish immigrants to America who is unable to hold the family together against the strong currents of suburbanization and American culture.

After a supporting role as an inspector in Steven Soderbergh’s somewhat disappointing Kafka, Mueller-Stahl had an endearing comic role as the just-off-the-boat immigrant taxi driver who can barely drive or speak English but finds a friendly face in a streetwise Brooklynite fare in the ‘‘New York’’ episode of Jim Jarmusch’s wildly uneven Night on Earth. Of special note is Mueller-Stahl’s deft touch at capturing his character’s amazement at the sights he sees on the way to Brooklyn—it is little wonder that so many of his characters for Hollywood have been immigrants. His best later career role to date, however, is not in any of his Hollywood films, but in the international co-production Utz, directed by George Sluizer and based on the novel by Bruce Chatwin. Here Mueller-Stahl brings to vivid life a very eccentric Czechoslovak baron whose life obsession is collecting porcelain figurines. (The actor’s son Christian also appears, portraying the baron at age 18.)

—Maria Racheva, updated by David E. Salamie

MUNI, Paul

Career: 1908—first stage appearance in Two Corpses at Breakfast, Cleveland; beginning 1910—toured with Samuel Grossman’s theatre troupe; 1914–17—worked with burlesque company, Philadelphia; 1917–18—worked with Molly Picon’s company, Boston; 1918—joined Yiddish Art Theatre in New York; became star of Yiddish theater in 1920s; 1926—Broadway debut in We Americans; 1929—first film appearance in The Valiant; 1932—contract with Warner Brothers; 1939—on Broadway in Key Largo; 1955—stage success in Inherit the Wind. Awards: Best Actor, Academy Award, and Best Actor, Venice Festival, for The Story of Louis Pasteur, 1936; Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for The Life of Emile Zola, 1937. Died: In Santa Barbara, California, 25 August 1967.

Films as Actor:

1929 The Valiant (Howard) (as Dyke); Seven Faces (Viertel) (as Papa Chibou)
1932 Scarface (Hawks) (as Tony Camonte); I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang (LeRoy) (as James Allen)
1933 The World Changes (LeRoy) (as Nordholm)
During the 1930s Paul Muni was one of the most respected names in acting. He was a perfectionist and extremely selective in the scripts he would choose to do. (Muni’s contracts at both Fox and Warner Brothers gave him script approval.) Once a script was agreed upon, Muni required months to research his character and prepare for his performance. If the character was a historical figure, he would read every available book on the subject. If the character required a certain dialect, he would rehearse into a recorder until he was satisfied with his accent. Once filming began he would remain in character between takes and even when he was off the studio lot. Muni would literally become the person in the script, which helped to build his reputation as one of the finest character actors of his time.

Muni began his acting career on the Yiddish stage in New York City. As a teenager he developed an affinity for makeup and often played characters much older than his real years. In 1926 he appeared on Broadway in We Americans which brought him to the attention of Hollywood. He started at Fox, and his first film, The Valiant brought him his first of four Academy nominations. Unfortunately, the film bombed at the box office. His second film, Seven Faces, was also a financial failure. During the production of Scarface the project received a lot of criticism from the censors. Their main objection was the glorification of the gangster, so the studio added a subtitle to the film—“the shame of the nation.” When the film was finally released, it was a huge box-office success, and Muni decided to remain in Hollywood to make more films. (His new contract with Warner Brothers also allowed him to act on the stage between pictures.)

Muni’s next film was I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang, based on the autobiography of Robert E. Burns. The film not only was

On MUNI: books—

Lawrence, Jerome, Actor: The Life and Times of Paul Muni, New York, 1974.
Druzman, Michael B., Paul Muni—His Life and Films, New York, 1974

On MUNI: articles—

Cooley, Donald G., “‘They Tried to Make a Chaney Out of Muni,’” in Movie Classic, April 1935.
Best, Katherine, “‘Danger: Man at Work,’” in Stage, 1 April 1939.
Current Biography 1944, New York, 1944.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1991.
Frank, Michael, “Paul Muni,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1996.
Bagh, Peter von, in Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 1, 1998.

On Muni: film—

* * *

By MUNI: articles—

“Paul Muni Interviews Himself,” in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), December 1933.
“Hollywood Is the World’s Melting Pot,” as told to Gladys Hall, in Movie Classic, November 1936.
a critical and financial success (both the film and Muni received Academy nominations), but also helped bring about public awareness of prison conditions in the south. Needless to say, the southern portion of the country did not take well to the film.

Muni’s next milestone picture was The Story of Louis Pasteur. It took some good arguing on the part of Muni, the producer Henry Blanke, and the director William Dieterle to persuade Warner Brothers to back the film. The studio finally agreed, although they consented with a minimum budget and shooting schedule. The film was the sleeper of the year, and Muni won an Oscar for his role. After this film Muni appeared in several other historical films, such as The Life of Emile Zola and Juarez.

Although Muni did not make many pictures during his career (23 in all), he did appear in several significant films. Scarface was the first (and often considered to be the best) of the major gangster films of the 1930s. Other films, such as I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang and Black Fury dealt with social injustice, while historical films (although often containing more fiction than fact) were promoted as “important” and prestigious pictures. All of these films are based on strong leading characters, and Muni’s ability to give substance to these parts helped to create several memorable roles for the screen.

—Linda J. Obalil

MURPHY, Eddie

Films as Actor:

1982 48 HRS. (Walter Hill) (as Reggie Hammond)
1983 Trading Places (Landis) (as Billy Ray Valentine)
1984 Best Defense (Huyck) (as Landry); Beverly Hills Cop (Brest) (as Axel Foley)
1986 The Golden Child (Ritchie) (as Chandler Jarrell)
1987 Beverly Hills Cop II (Tony Scott) (as Axel Foley, + story); Eddie Murphy Raw (concert performance)
1988 Coming to America (Landis) (as Prince Akeem/Clarence/Saul/Randy Watson, + story)
1990 Another 48 HRS. (Walter Hill) (as Reggie Hammond)
1992 The Distinguished Gentleman (Lynn) (as Thomas Jefferson Johnson); Boomerang (Hudlin) (as Marcus Graham, + story)
1994 Beverly Hills Cop III (Landis) (as Axel Foley)
1995 Vampire in Brooklyn (Craven) (as Maximillian/Preacher Pauley/Guido, + pr, story)
1996 The Nutty Professor (Shadyac) (as Sherman Klump/Buddy Love and the Klump Family)

Film as Actor and Director:

1989 Harlem Nights (as Quick, + exec pr, sc)

Other Film:

1990 The Kid Who Loved Christmas (exec pr)

Publications

By MURPHY: articles—

Young and ambitious, black comedian Eddie Murphy rose from the ranks of stand-up comedy and television to become one of the top box-office film stars of the 1980s only to see his career and popularity take a precipitous nosedive in the 1990s.

While still a teenager, Murphy began haunting the comedy clubs in New York City, honing his craft at night while attending school during the day. After high school, he was selected to join the cast of Saturday Night Live, the late-night television series that had launched the careers of celebrated comic actors John Belushi, Bill Murray, and Dan Aykroyd. The show offered a forum for Murphy to showcase his talent for mimicry as well as to develop a series of memorable characters, including Gumby, Buckwheat, and Mr. Robinson, which were biting takeoffs on television favorites from the past. A starring role opposite Nick Nolte in the action film 48 HRS. helped to construct his distinctive film persona—that of the sassy, self-confident, often abrasive con artist who is fast on his feet.

From 48 HRS. to Harlem Nights, each of Murphy’s roles has made use of this image, even the character of Officer Axel Foley in Beverly Hills Cop (a role originally slated for Sylvester Stallone) and its lackluster sequels, Beverly Hills Cop II and III. Like the fast-talking con-man characters in all of Murphy’s films, Axel easily assumes other identities in order to get past some obstacle. Murphy’s adeptness at mimicry—whether it is a recognizable character such as Buckwheat or a stereotype such as a fastidious government inspector—is his trademark. His roles emphasize this talent, which places most of his films in the category of star vehicles.

Other aspects of Murphy’s comic persona, particularly as displayed in his stand-up routines earlier in his career, include a proclivity toward provocative, masculine humor. His speech is peppered with expletives and street slang, while his self-assured demeanor is assertive. Yet his comedy and his image do not threaten his white audiences. The best of Murphy’s humor and the best of his film roles create a tension between the dangerously provocative and the brashly humorous: he makes a potentially volatile joke but tempers the delivery with a wide grin and a unique belly laugh.

Comparisons to Richard Pryor, the biggest black star of the last generation, are inevitable. Though Murphy claims Pryor as a major influence, profound differences mark their comedy styles and personas. Pryor’s stand-up routines derive from growing up on society’s margins. The characters—winos, junkies, prostitutes—he plays in his routines mirror that society. Murphy grew up in a lower-middle-class neighborhood on Long Island; the primary source for many of his routines and comic impersonations is television. No matter how many four-letter words he uses, Murphy has an immediate bond with mainstream audiences who grew up with the tube.

Toward the end of the 1980s, Murphy experienced a backlash in the media. As occurs to many popular figures who suddenly become superstars, he began to be criticized by a press that had previously been friendly. Reviewers attacked such films as Beverly Hills Cop II and Another 48 HRS. for being uninspired vehicles chosen to cash in on his fame and the success of their forerunners, while stories about his numerous bodyguards, enormous wealth, frequent womanizing, and galloping ego added to the media-based perception that success had gone to his head and altered his personality. This criticism culminated in the beating he took for his vanity production Harlem Nights, an action comedy he wrote, co-produced, directed, and starred in. The film was poorly executed, but reviewers unfairly dismissed Murphy’s interest in working behind the camera as the actions of an ego-driven superstar, conveniently forgetting that he had expressed a desire to produce and direct as far back as 1983. Suddenly,
Murphy’s self-confidence was deemed arrogance; his mainstream appeal was termed “a slick, Hollywood package.”

All this negative press had repercussions at the box office. Murphy rebounded slightly with The Distinguished Gentleman in which he took his con-artist persona of the Beverly Hills Cop I and II, 48 HRS., Another 48 HRS., and other films to Washington, D.C., to cash in on the gravy train as a freelwheeler, wheeler-dealer member of the House of Representatives. The film was warmly received by reviewers for its satiric edge and was a moneymaker at the box office, albeit not in the blockbuster class of earlier Murphy films. Boomerang—a prefeminist if somewhat crass comedy which traded on Murphy’s image as a womanizer who, in the film, sees the error of his ways when he runs up against maneater Robin Givens—inspired neither good reviews nor good box office. A third installment in the popular Beverly Hills Cop series, which seemed like a sure bet, was an unexpected flop with audiences. As was Vampire in Brooklyn, a Wes Craven horror comedy in which Murphy played several roles, including the bloodsucker of the title. But Murphy bounced back big time with his remake of the old Jerry Lewis vehicle The Nutty Professor, a comic spin on the Robert Louis Stevenson tale Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in which Lewis had played dual roles—that of a goofy, childlike professor and his chemically-induced alter ego: smooth talking lounge lizard and sleazeball Buddy Love. A huge critical and audience success for Lewis (it is considered his best film), the remake was just the shot in the arm Murphy needed to regain his crown as the king of comedy. Not to be outdone by Lewis, Murphy not only plays Buddy Love and the socially backward scientist Sherman Klump but Klump’s entire family—who, at one point in the film, appear together (hilariously) in the same scene with the use of clever special effects.

In Life, a comedy-drama about two convicts who grow old together in prison, Murphy plays just one part (Martin Lawrence plays the other), but the part tests his skills (and range) not only as a comedian but as an actor for he is required to age convincingly throughout the film—a trick he brings off adroitly in what many critics consider to be his best screen performance to date.

Murphy was back to playing dual roles again in Bowfinger, a satire about low budget filmmakers on Hollywood’s periphery hoping to catch the brass ring. In it, Murphy plays a black superstar of action films named Kit Ramsey, and Kit’s endearingly unsuccessful brother Jiff—whose resemblance to Kit exploitation producer-director Steve Martin trades on to get his latest poverty row extravaganza off the ground. The film, which Martin scripted, is surprisingly bereft of comic high points. Laughs are infrequent—except when Murphy is on the screen; he steals the movie with his hilarious performances in both parts.

—Susan M. Doll, updated by John McCarty

MURRAY, Bill

Films as Actor:

1975 Shame of the Jungle (Picha and Szulzinger) (as voice)
1977 Things We Did Last Summer (Weis)
1978 All You Need Is Cash (The Rutles) (Idle and Weis—for TV) (as Bill Murray the K)
1979 Meathballs (Reitman) (as Tripper); Mr. Mike’s Mondo Video (O’Donoghue); The Main Event (Zieff) (as Mantilla’s cornerman)
1980 Where the Buffalo Roam (Linson) (as Dr. Hunter S. Thompson); Caddyshack (Ramis) (as Carl Spackler); Loose Shoes (Ira Miller) (as Lefty Schwartz)
1981 Stripes (Reitman) (as John Winger)
1982 Tootsie (Pollack) (as Jeff Slater, unbilled)
1984 Nothing Lasts Forever (Schiller) (as Lunar Cruise Director Ted Breughel); Ghostbusters (Reitman) (as Dr. Peter Venkman); The Razor’s Edge (Byrum) (as Larry Darrell, + co-sc)
1986 Little Shop of Horrors (Oz) (as Arthur Denton)
1988 Scrooged (Richard Donner) (as Frank Cross); She’s Having a Baby (John Hughes) (cameo, uncredited)
1989 Ghostbusters II (Reitman) (as Dr. Peter Venkman)
1991 What about Bob? (Oz) (as Bob Wiley)
1993 Groundhog Day (Ramis) (as Phil Connors); Mad Dog and Glory (McNaughton) (as Frank Milo)
1994 Ed Wood (Tim Burton) (as Bunny Breckinridge)
1996 Kingpin; Space Jam (Kahn, Pytka, and Bruce Smith); Larger than Life (Franklin) (as Jack Corcoran)
1997 The Man Who Knew Too Little (Amiel) (as Wallace Ritchie)
1998 With Friends Like These (Messina) (as Melanie Melnick); Rushmore (Anderson) (as Herman Blume); Wild Things (McNaughton) (as Ken Bowden)
1999 Craddle Will Rock (Robbins) (as Tommy Crickshaw); Scout’s Honor (Leifer) (as Jack Wardell); Company Man (Askin, McGrath)
2000 Michael Jordan to the Max (Kempf and James D. Stern) (as himself)

Film as Director:

1990 Quick Change (co-d with Howard Franklin) (+ ro as Grimm, co-pr)

Publications

By MURRAY: book—

By MURRAY: articles—

Interview with Timothy Crouse, in Rolling Stone (New York), 16 August 1984.

On MURRAY: articles—

* * *

Like the original cast members of Saturday Night Live, whom he joined in 1977, Bill Murray developed his routines in response to the irradiating phoniness of post-World War II suburban culture. The Not Ready for Prime Time Players were expert at parodying the voice of both sententious and commercial fraudulence—the gelatinous precepts learned in home, school, and church (and in the homes, schools, and churches on television and in the movies), the nearly hysterical...
John Belushi flared out fast, while Dan Aykroyd was too manic a parodist for the big screen, and Chevy Chase quickly became another self-satisfied purveyor of low-grade product. Only Murray was able to broaden his counterculture cabaret attitude enough to be a popular movie comedian without becoming smug or another example of what he professed to despise. In the service comedy Stripes he took nothing seriously and still galvanized that scrappy production. In Stripes and the much more expensive Ghostbusters he used the concepts of the movies to goof on the movies themselves, without killing joy. He did his duty by Ghostbusters without getting implicated in the jumbo Hollywood machinations that engineered it.

He served the same function in Tootsie as Dustin Hoffman’s roommate, in which his hilarious deadpan (and reportedly improvised) comments on Hoffman’s scam turned the audience’s disbelief to the movie’s advantage. At the time he seemed oddly cast as an incorruptible, experimental playwright, but this does in fact tie in to Murray’s deeper concerns, which for a while he had trouble bringing to the screen. The head-on approach produced The Razor’s Edge, which Murray tried to enliven and make personal by anachronistic wisecracking in the role of the man shaken to his spiritual foundations. Murray’s 1970s shtick was out of place, and he did not know how to animate Larry Darrell otherwise. But the main problem was that he seemed intellectually susceptible to a middle-brow epic like Maugham’s novel in the first place; wanting to be profound he just got portentous.

Murray did come across in a slapstick turn in character (that is, a character other than his own put-on persona) in the nifty musical Little Shop of Horrors, but it was not until his breakthrough performance as Frank Cross in Scrooged that he found a way to play a fuller character in the kind of comedy that audiences wanted to see him in. He deepened his screen persona not by going around it but by going through it. Murray used this updated Christmas Carol to stage his career redemption—he learned how to play the emotional scenes straight without betraying his 1970s rejection of show biz fakery. He went even further as the burnt-out weatherman Phil Connors in Groundhog Day, allegorically doomed to replay his least favorite day of the year forever. Frank Cross is a hyperbolic monster; Phil’s disgust with himself seems more life-sized, and it makes personal sense for Murray to play a man who has been drained of life in front of rather than behind the camera. Groundhog Day is, if anything, too enjoyable for the good of its reputation. Murray is not just good as the jaded television-caster, he is phenomenal. He knows in his bones how to show us what it is like to be encased in a media image, how remote your own and other people’s responses become. Murray uses the disruption of Phil’s routine to flip his own professional lid and to show us the emotional springs of his comedy, exactly what he always protected with comic cynicism. His performance in Mad Dog and Glory as the ruthless loan shark who wants to be a stand-up comic combines the scary and funny elements of Phil’s remoteness. Murray convincingly integrates the stand-up comic’s aggression as part of the gangster’s hovering threat, but the script never comes together, and once again De Niro kills a teaming by his own kind of remoteness as an actor. But by drilling down to genuine sources of comic redemption in Scrooged, Ghostbuster II, Quick Change, and Groundhog Day, Murray has fulfilled a promise we never expected him to make.

—Alan Dale
NAZIMOVA, Alla

Nationality: American. Born: Yalta, Russia (now Ukraine), 4 June 1879; became U.S. citizen, 1927. Education: Attended private Catholic school, Montreux, Switzerland; studied music at Philharmonic Music Academy, Yalta; Academy of Acting, Moscow. Family: Married Paul Orleneff, 1904; lived with the actor Charles Bryant. Career: Apprenticeship at Stanislavsky’s Moscow Art Theatre; then acted in repertory companies in Kostroma, Kerson, and Vilna; 1903—leading actress at Nemetti Theatre, St. Peters burg; 1904—05—toured Berlin and London with the play The Chosen People, banned in Russia; 1905—presented The Chosen People in Russian in New York, followed by other successful plays in Russian; 1906—studied English with the mother of Richard Barthelmess; debut in first English-speaking role in Hedda Gabler; her fame in New York became so great that a theater was named for her (later renamed the 39th Street Playhouse); 1912—presented Bella Donna in New York and on a year-long tour; 1916—film debut in War Brides; contract with Metro Company, and made several films written by June Mathis; 1922—made the film A Doll’s House with her own money for release by United Artists; 1928—joined Eva Le Gallienne’s Civic Repertory Company, New York, and later the Theatre Guild, 1929. Died: In Los Angeles 13 July 1945.

Films as Actress:

1916 War Brides (Brenon) (as Joan)
1918 Revelation (Baker) (as Joline); Toys of Fate (Baker) (as Hagar and Azah); An Eye for an Eye (Capellani) (as Hassouna)
1919 Out of the Fog (Capellani) (as Faith and Eve); The Red Lantern (Capellani) (as Mahlee and Blanche Sackville); The Brat (Blaché)
1920 Stronger Than Death (Blaché) (as Sigrid Fersen); The Heart of a Child (Smallwood) (as Sally Snape); Madame Peacock (Smallwood) (as mother and daughter) (+ sc); Billions (Smallwood) (as Princess Tirloff)
1921 Camille (Smallwood) (as Marguerite Gauther, + pr)
1922 A Doll’s House (Bryant) (as Nora, + pr, sc)
1923 Salome (Bryant) (title role, + pr, sc)
1924 Madonna of the Streets (Carewe)
1925 The Redeeming Sin (Blackton); My Son (Carewe) (as Ana Silva)
1940 Escape (LeRoy) (as Emmy Ritter)
1941 Blood and Sand (Mamoulian)
1944 The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Lee) (as Marquesa de Montmayor); In Our Time (Sherman) (as Zofya Orvid); Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (as Koslowska)

Film as Consultant and Research Adviser:

1939 Zaza (Cukor)

Publications

By NAZIMOVA: articles—

Hall, Gladys, and Adele Fletcher, “We Interview Camille,” in Motion Picture Magazine, January 1922.

On NAZIMOVA: book—

On NAZIMOVA: articles—

Montanye, Lillian, “A Half Hour with Nazimova,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), July 1917.
Service, Faith, “Memoirs of Madame,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), November 1922.

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1991.

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), March 1995.

* * *

Alla Nazimova, one of the most exotic actresses of the late 1910s and 1920s, had an exotic Russian background to begin with. Born of Jewish parents in Yalta, and educated in a Swiss Catholic convent, she took up the violin and in her school orchestra played under Tchaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakov. Her acting aspirations led her to Moscow and an apprenticeship with Stanislavsky’s Art Theatre. She found leading roles in the provinces and settled in St. Petersburg where she married her theater partner Paul Orleneff. Eventually the pair took the Zionist play The Chosen People on a European tour, and to America in 1905.

She decided to remain in the United States while her husband and the company returned home. Success on the New York stage, after she had learned English, led to a film version of her stage triumph War Brides under the direction of Herbert Brenon. (In the film she introduced Richard Barthelmess, the son of her English coach.) Diminutive, but with a dynamic personality, she struck a new note in American films. The Irish actor Michael MacLiammóir described her quality as “agonized ecstasy.”

Her next film, Revelation, confirmed her talent, and she soared to stardom. Charles Bryant, her lover and leading man in many of her films, helped her to set up a palatial establishment in Hollywood known as the Garden of Allah. She was now known simply as Nazimova, in the way one would speak of Bernhardt or Duse. Three films directed by the talented Paul Capellani, An Eye for an Eye, Out of the Fog, and The Red Lantern, featured some of her finest work, the last being outstanding.

From this point on, her work takes on an eclectic virtuosity. An association with the designer Natacha Rambova led to highly stylized productions of Camille (with Valentino) and Salome with designs based on Beardsley. Salome was made with no concessions whatever to popular taste, and was poorly received, though it is actually a courageous experiment aesthetically, and remains remarkable for Nazimova’s catlike grace.

In the mid-1920s she returned to her first love, the theater, and had a most distinguished career in classic Russian plays at the New York Civic Repertory Company. She played in a few sound films, always in small character parts though they were impeccably done. Her last years were restless and not particularly happy, though she lived to see her nephew Val Lewton make his name in films. Those who remember her stage performance speak of her with respect and love.

—Liam O’Leary

NEAL, Patricia

Patricia Neal in The Day the Earth Stood Still

Films as Actress:

1949 John Loves Mary (David Butler) (as Mary McKinley); The Fountainhead (King Vidor) (as Dominique Francon); It’s a Great Feeling (David Butler) (as herself)

1950 The Hasty Heart (Sherman) (as Sister Margaret Parker); Bright Leaf (Curtiz) (as Margaret Jane Singleton); Three Secrets (Wise) (as Phyllis Horn); The Breaking Point (Curtiz) (as Leona Charles)

1951 Operation Pacific (Waggener) (as Mary Stuart); Raton Pass (Canyon Pass) (Marin) (as Ann); The Day the Earth Stood Still...
Still (Wise) (as Helen Benson); Weekend with Father (Sirk) (as Jean Bowen)

1952 Diplomatic Courier (Hathaway) (as Joan Ross); Something for the Birds (Wise) (as Anne Richards); Washington Story (Target for Scandal) (Pirosh) (as Alice Kingsly)

1954 La tua donna (Paolucci); The Stranger from Venus (Immediate Disaster) (Burt Balaban) (as Susan North)

1957 A Face in the Crowd (Kazan) (as Marcia Jeffries)

1961 Breakfast at Tiffany's (Edwards) (as "2E")

1963 Hud (Ritt) (as Alma Brown)

1964 Psyche '59 (Singer) (as Allison)

1965 In Harm's Way (Preminger) (as Lt. Maggie Haynes)

1968 The Subject Was Roses (Grosbard) (as Nettie Cleary)

1971 The Road Builder (The Night Digger) (Reid) (as Maura Prince); The Homecoming: A Christmas Story (Cook—for TV) (as Olivia Walton)

1973 Baxter (Jeffries) (as Dr. Clemm); Hay que matar a B. (B. Must Die) (Borau) (as Julia); Happy Mother's Day—Love George (Run, Stranger, Run) (McGavin) (as Cara)

1974 Things in Their Season (Goldstone—for TV)

1975 Eric (Goldstone—for TV) (as Lois Swenson)

1977 Widow's Nest (Nido de viudas) (Navarro) (as Lupe); Tail Gunner Joe (Jud Taylor—for TV)

1978 A Love Affair: The Eleanor and Lou Gehrig Story (Cook—for TV) (as Mrs. Gehrig)

1979 The Passage (J. Lee Thompson) (as Ariel Bergson); All Quiet on the Western Front (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Paul's mother)

1981 Ghost Story (Irvin) (as Stella Hawthorne)

1984 Glitter (Beaumont—for TV); Love Leads the Way (Delbert Mann—for TV); Shattered Vows (Bender—for TV) (as Sister Carmelita)

1989 An Unremarkable Life (Chaudri) (as Frances McEllany)

1990 Caroline? (Sargent—for TV) (as the headmistress)

1992 A Mother's Right: The Elizabeth Morgan Story (Otto—for TV) (as Antonia Morgan)

1993 Heidi (Rhodes—for TV) (as Grandmother)

1999 Cookie's Fortune (Altman) (as Jewel Mae "Cookie" Orcutt)

On NEAL: articles—

Buckley, Michael, "Patricia Neal," in Films in Review (New York), April 1983; see also letter in August/September issue.

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1991.

On NEAL: film—

The Patricia Neal Story, directed by Anthony Harvey and Anthony Page for television, 1981.

* * *

As modern teachers of naturalistic acting would ask of her, Patricia Neal personifies true openness: to her characters' impulses both intellectual and sexual, to her fellow players, to all acting media, to the pursuit of work even after deep personal affliction and loss.

Never a major star, she rose to prominence when Hollywood's "classical" period—characterized by the interlocking systems of studio/star/genre—was ending. She is in fact one of the earliest members of an ongoing post-1950s sorority of "working" actresses. These women's mastery of contemporary acting techniques clearly works in their every on-screen moment, but, unless they turn to television, they remain fairly anonymous working actors—nonstars—their film roles usually small or lost in low-quality productions.

The reasons femininity and Hollywood movie stardom became comparatively estranged between the studio era and the recent age of the blockbuster are complex: at the root is a perceived shift in movie viewership by the 1970s to young men, connected to the Hollywood commonplace that only male actors can turn films into megabucks by virtue of their mere presence. But surely also a factor is some resistance to women, like Neal, able to combine practical control and a post-Production Code, expandingly erotic heat: one of her own favorite examples comes in Hud when her character swats a fly—which Neal fortuitously noticed on the set—in response to Paul Newman's kiss.

Neal was well-received on Broadway in the mid-1940s, having worked in local theaters and summer stock through high school and college. She was invited to be a founding member of the Actors Studio, the New York collective which would become the most famous workshop devoted to expanding the ideas of Constantin Stanislavski in the United States—although she writes that she was expelled temporarily when she went to Hollywood. There she met more critical than commercial success between 1949 and 1952, her two most memorable roles coming in The Fountainhead and The Day the Earth Stood Still. She studied screen acting with George Shdanoff and later Shdanoff's teacher Michael Chekhov, Stanislavski's associate.

Neal returned to Broadway in 1952 and spent the mid-1950s dividing her time between New York and England, occupied with a new marriage, children, renewed work at the Actors Studio, and jobs on-stage and in television. Her best run of film work began in 1957 with A Face in the Crowd, as she moved into innocuous, reliable, supportive (and supporting) women's roles, including Breakfast at Tiffany's, In Harm's Way, and Hud, for which she won an Oscar.

Her career was drastically interrupted in the mid-1960s by a series of strokes. Her courageous attempts to reestablish herself across the 1970s and 1980s often found her characters also dealing with illness. Unsurprisingly, given developing industry patterns, her best recent

Publications

By NEAL: articles—

By NEAL: book—

On NEAL: books—

roles have come on television. She brings a motherly, astute depth especially to 1990’s Caroline?, with television star Stephanie Zimbalist and working actress Pamela Reed. Patricia Neal soldiers on, an actress of intelligence and fire never fully exploited by Hollywood film.

—Robin Wood, updated by Susan Knobloch

NEESON, Liam

Films as Actor:

1981 Excalibur (Boorman) (as Sir Gawain)
1983 Krull (Yates) (as Kegan); A Woman of Substance (Sharp—for TV) (as Blackie O’Neil)
1984 The Bounty (Donaldson) (as Churchill); The Innocent (MacKenzie) (as John Carns); Ellis Island (London—for TV) (as Kevin Murray)
1985 Arthur the King (Donner—for TV) (as Grak)
1986 The Mission (Joffe) (as Fielding); Hold the Dream (Sharp—for TV) (as Blackie O’Neil); Duet for One (Konchalovsky) (as Totter); Lamb (Gregg) (as Brother Sebastian); If Tomorrow Comes (London—for TV) (as Inspector Trignant)
1987 Suspect (Yates) (as Carl Wayne Anderson); A Prayer for the Dying (Hodges) (as Liam Docherty); Sworn to Silence (Levin—for TV) (as Vincent Cauley); Sweet As You Are (Pope—for T) (as Martin PerryV)
1988 Satisfaction (Freeman) (as Martin Flacon; The Dead Pool (Van Horn) (as Peter Swan); The Good Mother (Nimoy) (as Leo Cutter); High Spirits (Jordan) (as Martin Brogan)
1989 Next of Kin (Inr) (as Briar)
1990 Darkman (Raimi) (as Peyton Westlake/Darkman); Crossing the Line (Leland) (as Danny Scoular)
1992 Under Suspicion (Moore) (as Tony Aaron); Shining Through (Seltzer) (as Franz-Otto Dietrich); Leap of Faith (Pearce) (as Will); Husbands and Wives (Allen) (as Michael)
1993 Ethan Frome (Madden) (Ethan Frome); Deception (aka Ruby Cairo) (Clifford) (as Fergus Lamb); Schindler’s List (Spielberg) (as Oskar Schindler)
1994 Nell (Apted) (as Jerome Lovell); Out of Ireland (Wagner—for TV) (voice)
1995 Rob Roy (Caton-Jones) (as McGregor)
1996 Michael Collins (Jordon) (as Michael Collins); Before And After (Schroeder) (as Ben Ryan); The Great War (Bykett Goldfarb—for TV) (Narrator); Clark Gable: Tall, Dark and Handsome (Walker—for TV) (Narrator)
1997 Alaska: Spirit of the Wild (Casey—for TV) (Narrator)
1998 Everest (Brashers/Judson—for TV) (Narrator); Les Miserables (August) (as Jean Valjean)

1999 The Haunting (de Bont) (as Dr. David Marlowe); Star Wars: Episode 1: The Phantom Menace (Lucas) (as Qui-Gon Jinn)
2000 Gun Shy (Blakeney) (as Charlie)

Publications

By NEESON: book—

By NEESON: articles—

On NEESON: book—

On NEESON: articles—

Frankel, Martha, “Man of the Year: Mercurial Liam Neeson Can Play a Masked Avenger, a Desperate Boxer, a Lover and a Mute. But What Is He Really Like?,” in American Film (Los Angeles), December 1990.

*   *   *

Irish-born Liam Neeson has the features and presence of a film star of the 1930s or 1940s—a Paul Muni, perhaps, or Robert Mitchum. A laborer before becoming an actor, he cuts a strapping figure that makes him ideal for over-the-top hero roles in the grand tradition of Hollywood’s Golden Age. But there’s a vulnerability about him that makes him equally suitable for today’s sensitive hero types, as well.
Liam Neeson in Darkman

He brought both of these characteristics to his star-making, and Oscar-nominated, performance in Spielberg’s Schindler’s List, a film that accentuated Neeson’s old-style Hollywood looks by being shot in noirish black and white. Neeson’s Schindler, who saves the lives of more than one thousand Jews from the extermination by the Nazis, is shady but honest, pragmatic but altruistic—the quintessential noir hero, a man walking a tightrope down some very dark, very mean streets. He is also a man with a desperate need to feel accepted—the prototypical Spielberg hero.

The real Oskar Schindler was an enigma. History still can’t put a finger on the actual motives that prompted him to save the lives of so many of his Jewish employees. Was he a humanist who saw a terrible wrong and did his best to right it? A charismatic scoundrel? Or a savvy exploiter who saw no profit in sending productive workers to the gas chambers? And does it really matter, for what counts is that he did save lives when others in a position similar to his sat back and did nothing.

For most of the film, Neeson plays Schindler as just such an enigma, a genuine man in the middle—until Spielberg blows the character’s fascinating ambiguity at the conclusion by having him break down in front of the Jews he has saved and despairing at not having been able to save more of them. This behavior is simply inconsistent with the character Neeson, the screenwriter, and Spielberg have created for us up to this point; it strikes such a false note of strained sentimentality (and trademark Spielbergian pathos) that one can almost feel the actor gritting his teeth to get through the scene. Tellingly, it is his only unconvincing moment in the three-hours-plus of the film.

Neeson made his screen debut as one of the knights of the round table among an ensemble cast of (then) largely unknown British and Irish players in John Boorman’s Excalibur, an exquisite recounting of the Arthurian legend; the role required little of him except a hardy build and a sense of physical and moral strength—his trademarks to this day. He is virtually unidentifiable behind beard and armor; one can see the film even now and not realize he’s in it, though his role is not insubstantial.

One year later he was back in Camelot, and identifiable this time, among the ensemble cast of Clive Donner’s TV epic Arthur the King, a decided come-down from the Boorman film that mixed medieval derring-do with Lewis Carroll and sat on the shelf for three years until the network aired it.
This seemed to form the pattern of much of Neeson’s first decade of film work—substantial if not noticeable roles in high-profile action/period pieces (The Bounty, The Mission) and noticeable, high-profile roles in action-filled duds (Next of Kin, A Prayer for the Dying).

Sam Raimi’s cartoonish Darkman changed Neeson’s fortunes. As the gentle giant scientist turned avenging phantom of the title, Neeson revealed that he could not only handle action scenes but register the kind of sensitivity audiences seemed to want in movie heroes of the 1990s. He started getting major parts in major films that stressed this aspect of his talent—the understanding lover who awakens Diane Keaton’s sensuality in The Good Mother; the nice guy local who woos traveling huckster Debra Winger in Leap of Faith; the wily but vulnerable German soldier romanced and (improbably) manipulated by spy Melanie Griffith in Shining Through; the down-on-his-luck private eye accused of murder who must prove his innocence in Under Suspicion; the romantic farmer trapped in a loveless marriage in Ethan Frome; the persecuted bread thief Jean Valjean in Les Miserables; the compassionate small town doctor who nurtures—and is nurtured by—a backwoods wild child in Nell—where Neeson ably supported star Jodie Foster’s (failed) bid for another best actress Oscar.

As the legendary Scottish folk hero Rob Roy who revenges himself on the English who raped his wife (Jessica Lange) and oppresses his people, Neeson returned to the lusty, swashbuckling hero type he’d played early on in his career—yet brought it to many of the same qualities of his later roles. His Scottish chieftain is both a man of action and pillar of integrity, as well as kind and loving husband and father. His duel with villain Tim Roth in one of the best screen swordfights since the halcyon days of Flynn and Rathbone. Apart from Neeson’s charismatic performance, it is also one of the few highlights in this otherwise dull and routine costume adventure, which had the misfortune to be released the same year as Mel Gibson’s similar-themed but more exciting Braveheart, and came in second with both audiences and critics.

Neeson segued from Rob Roy to another period piece, though a more modern one, also about an historical figure. As the title character in Michael Collins, he is again a rebel leader fighting to free his people (here, the Irish) from English oppression, circa 1916. Ness’s charismatic, multi-faceted performance is the glue that holds this very uneven but occasionally quite powerful film about the politics of idealism and destruction together.

Neeson’s next film—The Haunting, a dreadful remake of the 1963 classic of the same title—required little of the actor (or anyone else in the cast) except not getting lost amid the relentless razzle-dazzle of its computer-generated special effects. The same was true of Neeson’s follow-up: the George Lucas money-machine Star Wars: Episode I: The Phantom Menace, a prequel to Lucas’s previous Star Wars adventures and the launch of a new trilogy of Star Wars space operas. Neeson’s character is called upon to do not much more than spout more of Lucas’ “The Force is with you” philosophy, and to wield a mean light saber—both of which the actor handles well.

Perhaps because of the over-reliance of these two films on special effects rather than acting, Neeson chose as his next project the offbeat character-driven crime comedy Gun Shy—in which he turned his back on heroics to play a (very un-Neeson-like) character best described as a dolt. Laugh-free, the film was an embarrassing misfire for all concerned—but especially for Neeson, whose performance in the change-of-pace role was singled out by critics as a squandering of his considerable talents.

—John McCarty

NEGRI, Pola

Nationality: American. Born: Barbara Apollonia Chalupiec in Janowa, Poland, 31 December 1894 (or 1899). Education: Attended the boarding school of Countess Platen, Warsaw; studied at the Imperial Ballet School, St. Petersburg; Philharmonia drama school, Warsaw.

Films as Actress:

1914 Niewolnica Zmyslow (Pawlowski)
1915 Pokoj no. 13 (Hertz); Bestia (Hertz); Czarna Ksi?zka (Hertz)
1916 Jego Ostatni C Zen (Hertz); Zona (Hertz); Studenci (Hertz); Arabella (Hertz)
1917 Kiss, die man in Dunkeln stiehlt (Matull?); Nicht lange t?scht mich das Gl?ck (Matull?); Rosen, die der Sturm entbl?ttet (Matull?); ?sigellos Blut (Gypsy Blood); Die toten Augen (Matull?)
1918 Der gelbe Schein (The Yellow Ticket) (Janson); Wenn das Herz in Hass ergl?ht (Matull?); Mania (Mad Love) (Illes); Die Augen der Mumie Ma (The Eyes of the Mummy) (Lubitsch); Carmen (Lubitsch) (title role)
1919 Das Karussel des Lebens (Jacoby); Kreuzziger sie! (Jacoby); Madame DuBarry (Passion) (Lubitsch) (title role); Camille (The Red Peacock); Comtesse Doddy (Jacoby)
1920 Geschlossene Kette (Stein); Medea (Lubitsch); Das Martyrium (Stein); Die Marchesa d’Arminiani (Halm); Sumurun (One Arabian Night) (Lubitsch); Vendetta (Jacoby)
1921 Die Bergkatze (Lubitsch); Sappho (Buchowetski); Die D?mme in Glashaus (Janson); Arme Violetta (Stein)
1922 Die Flamma (Montmartre) (Lubitsch)
1923 Bella Donna (Fitzmaurice) (title role); The Cheat (Fitzmaurice) (as Carmelita De Córdoba); Hollywood (Cruze) (as guest); The Spanish Dancer (Brenon) (as Maritana)
1924 Shadows of Paris (Brenon) (as Claire); Men (Buchowetski) (as Cleo); Lily of the Dust (Buchowetski) (as Lily Czepanek); Forbidden Paradise (Lubitsch) (as Catherine the Great)
1925 East of Suez (Walsh) (as Daisy Forbes); The Charmer (Olcott) (as Mariposa); Flower of Night (Bern) (as Carlota y Villalon); A Woman of the World (St. Clair) (as Countess Elnora)
1926 The Crown of Lies (Buchowetski) (as Olga Kriga); Good and Naughty (St. Clair) (as Germaine Morris)
1927 Hotel Imperial (Stiller) (as Anna Sedlak); Barbed Wire (Lee) (as Mona); The Woman on Trial (Stiller) (as Julie) 1928 Three Sinners (Lee) (as Baroness Gerda Wallentin); The Secret Hour (Lee) (as Amy); Loves of an Actress (Lee) (as Rachel); The Woman from Moscow (Berger) (as Princess Fedora); Are Women to Blame?
1929 Street of Abandoned Children
1930 The Woman He Scorned (Czinner)
1932 A Woman Commands (Czinner)
1934 Fanatisme (Ravel and LeKain)
1935 Mazurka (Forst)
1936 Moskau-Shanghai (Wegener)
1937 Madame Bovary (Lampecht) (title role)
1938 Rudolph Valentino (short); Die Nacht der Entscheidung (Malasomma); Tango notturno (Kirchhoff); Die fromme Lüge (Malasomma)
1943 Hi Diddle Diddle (Stone)
1964 The Moon-Spinners (Neilson)

Publications

By NEGRI: books—

By NEGRI: articles—

“I Become Converted to the Happy Ending,” in Motion Picture Director, March 1926.

“My Ideal Screen Lover,” in Pictures and Picturegoer, March 1931.

On NEGRI: books—

On NEGRI: articles—

Haskins, Harrison, “Who Is Pola Negri?” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), February 1921.

Howe, Herbert, “The Real Pola Negri,” in Photoplay (New York), November 1922.

Howe, Herbert, “The Loves of Pola Negri,” in Photoplay (New York), November 1923.

Lyon, Ben, “Vampires I Have Known,” in Photoplay (New York), February 1925.

Beinhorn, C. Wyche, “Pola Negri: Tempestuous Temptress,” in Take One (Montreal), September 1978.

Article in Film (Poland), 9 September 1984.

Film Dope (Nottingham), December 1991.

Villecco, T., “Director Andrew Stone,” in Films of the Golden Age (Muscatine), no. 9, Summer 1997.

---

Pola Negri—the very name summons up the exoticism that was her stock-in-trade. This image sometimes got in the way of the undeniable fact that she was one of the silent screen’s more gifted actresses. But drama moved offscreen for Pola Negri, and as her film career in the United States faded, her life kept her in the public eye. As a personality, she was one of those characters that may justifiably be called “the self-enchanted.” This is the part of her reputation that endures today, obscuring the fact that her film career was a long and notable one.

She began performing in Poland as an ingenue with the Rozmaitoczi Theatre, scoring early successes as Hedwig in Ibsen’s Wild Duck, and in the title role of Hauptmann’s Hannele. Her stage work brought her to the attention of Alexandre Hertz, the pioneer Polish film producer, who made several of her earliest films. She was also the star of Max Reinhardt’s pantomime Samurau, first in Poland and then in Berlin. While there, she met a member of Reinhardt’s coterie, the fledgling movie director Ernst Lubitsch. After a series of wonderful comic short films (the best of which is Die Bergkatze, she was featured in one of the early historical spectacles, Passion (Madame DuBarry). Her vital and uninhibited portrayal of the French courtesan won her the admiration of Europe, and also impressed the Hollywood studios. She was soon on her way to America, under contract to Paramount. Unfortunately, the caliber of her work in the United States was nowhere near that of her German pictures.

Negri was an excellent performer when guided by a forceful director such as Lubitsch, but was given to excess when unharnessed. The Americans who directed her 1920s silents were not able to contain her rebellious energy. She gained a reputation for being temperamental, and her pictures never rivaled the success of Passion. There were a few high points though: she was teamed with Lubitsch once more, and produced a brilliant comic character in Forbidden Paradise. Her dramatic performance as a hotel maid in Mauritz Stiller’s Hotel Imperial was a pinnacle of silent-screen dramatics. These occasional triumphs did little to enhance her career, and she retired from the screen in 1928 (ostensibly because of her marriage to Prince Mdivani).

An English picture, Street of Abandoned Children, was made in 1929, and she returned to the United States for her first talkie, A Woman Commands, in which her good performance was wasted on a poor film. No other offers were forthcoming, so she made one film in France, Fanatisme. Her career was given a second life by a long-term contract with ufa in 1935. She was starred in a series of strong films: as the cafe singer in Willi Forst's musical Mazurka, as a cocaine addict in Tango nottorno, and in the title role of Gerhard Lamprecht's Madame Bovary. More comfortable with the German language, she proved herself to be a restrained and tasteful performer, as well as a distinctive cabaret singer. World War II interrupted her career there, and she returned to the United States, working only twice thereafter, in Hi Diddle Diddle and The Moon-Spinners.

—Joseph Arkins

NEILL, Sam

1975 Landfall (Maunder); Ashes (Barclay) (as priest)
1977 Sleeping Dogs (Roger Donaldson) (as Smith)
1979 My Brilliant Career (Gillian Armstrong) (as Harry Beecham); Just Out of Reach (Blagg) (as Mike); The Journalist (Thornhill) (as Rex)
1980 Lucinda Brayford (Gauci—for TV) (as Tony Duff)
1981 Attack Force Z (Burstall) (as Sgt. Danny J. Costello); The Final Conflict (Omen III: The Final Conflict) (Graham Baker) (as Damien Thorn); Z dalekégo kraju (From a Far Country: Pope John Paul II) (Zanussi—for TV) (as Marian); Possession (Zulawski) (as Marc)
1982 Enigma (Szwarc) (as Dimitri Vasilkov); Ivanhoe (Camfield—for TV) (as Brian de Bois-Guilbert)
1983 The Country Girls (Desmond Davis—for TV) (as Mr. Gentleman)
1984 Robbery under Arms (Crombie and Hannam—for TV) (as Captain Starlight); Le Sang des autres (The Blood of Others) (Chabrol—for TV) (as Dieter Bergman)
1985 Plenty (Schepisi) (as Lazar); For Love Alone (Stephen Wallace) (as James Quick)
1986 The Good Wife (The Umbrella Woman) (Ken Cameron) (as Neville Gifford); Strong Medicine (Guy Green—for TV) (as Vince Lord)
1988 A Cry in the Dark (Evil Angels) (Schepisi) (as Michael Chamberlain); Leap of Faith (Question of Faith) (Gyllenhaal—for TV) (as Oscar Ogg)
1989 Dead Calm (Noyce) (as John Ingram); La Révolution Française (The French Revolution) (Enrico and Heffron) (as Lafayette)
1990 The Hunt for Red October (McTiernan) (as Capt. Vasily Borodin)
1991 Death in Brunswick (Nothing to Lose) (Ruane) (as Carl Fitzgerald); Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Eugene Fitzgerald); Fever (Elikann—for TV) (as Elliott Mandel); One against the Wind (Elikann—for TV) (as Capt. James Leggatt); Shadow of China (Yanagimachi) (as TV reporter, credited as John Dermot)
1992 Hostage (Robert Young) (as John Rennie); Memoirs of an Invisible Man (Carpenter) (as David Jenkins)
1993 Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (as Dr. Alan Grant); The Piano (Campion) (as Stewart); Family Pictures (Saville) (as Carl Fitzgerald); Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Eugene Fitzgerald); Fever (Elikann—for TV) (as Elliott Mandel); One against the Wind (Elikann—for TV) (as Capt. James Leggatt); Shadow of China (Yanagimachi) (as TV reporter, credited as John Dermot)
1994 Hostage (Robert Young) (as John Rennie); Memoirs of an Invisible Man (Carpenter) (as David Jenkins)
1995 Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (as Dr. Alan Grant); The Piano (Campion) (as Stewart); Family Pictures (Saville) (as Carl Fitzgerald); Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Eugene Fitzgerald); Fever (Elikann—for TV) (as Elliott Mandel); One against the Wind (Elikann—for TV) (as Capt. James Leggatt); Shadow of China (Yanagimachi) (as TV reporter, credited as John Dermot)
1996 Restoration (Michael Hoffman) (as King Charles II)
1997 Snow White (Cohn) (as Lord Friedrich Hoffman); Event Horizon (Paul Anderson) (as Dr. William Weir)
1998 The Revengers’ Comedies (Mowbray) (as Henry Bell); Merlin (Barron—for TV) (as title role); The Horse Whisperer (Redford) (as Robert MacLean)
1999 My Mother Frank (Lamprell) (as Professor Mortlock); Bicentennial Man (Columbus) (as Sir); Molokai: The Story of Father Damien (Cox) (as Walter Murray Gibson)
2000 Numero Bruno (La Hood) (as himself)

Sam Neill and Ariana Richards in Jurassic Park
Films as Director:

1974 Telephone Etiquette (doc) (+ sc, ed)
1975 Four Shorts on Architecture (doc) (+ sc, ed)
1977 On the Road with Red Mole (doc); Architect Athfield (doc)
1996 Cinema of Unease (A Personal Journey by Sam Neill) (doc) (+ ro as presenter, co-sc)

Publications

By NEILL: articles—

Interview, in Films Illustrated (London), October 1981.

On NEILL: articles—

“Sam Neill,” in Film a Doba (Czech Republic), January 1984.
McDonald, L., “A Road to Erewhon,” in Illusions (Wellington), Winter 1996.

* * *

Self-effacing thinking woman’s sex symbol, Sam Neill is the closest commodity resembling James Mason that we have in contemporary cinema. That is high praise indeed. As a vis-à-vis for magnetic actresses round the world, Neill is in the business of making Meryl Streep, Holly Hunter, and Judy Davis look good; it could be argued that these unshrinking violets have given their finest performances opposite him. Only a few quietly authoritative film actors (such as Neill, Arliss Howard, and David Straithairn) can support female powerhouses without being burned up by their reflecting glory. Whether Neill packs the kind of attention-getting virility that will make him a household name is in doubt; he certainly did not stand out as the heroic centerpiece of Jurassic Park, in which he is dwarfed by state-of-the-art special effects and juvenile thrills befitting a theme park methodology. He does, however, exhibit a charisma that sneaks up on you unlike the bravado of such superstars as Bruce Willis and Mel Gibson; he is sort of the boy next door whom you wish would move back in as a man.

Beginning his cinematic career in the fledgling New Zealand film industry as a documentary filmmaker (a pursuit he has reactivated with 1996’s Cinema of Unease), the boyishly appealing Neill stood out immediately but garnered international attention as the liberal-minded plum that feminist author Judy Davis lets slip through her fingers in My Brilliant Career. In his own neck of the woods, Neill’s unaggressive masculinity was equally at home in the trenches of Attack Force Z and the glorious outback of Robbery under Arms as well as in the boudoirs of For Love Alone and The Good Wife. What is remarkable about these down-under vehicles is that the Australian industry allowed Neill to tackle some robust hero roles, whereas Hollywood second bananas him in his macho free-for-alls such as The Hunt for Red October and The Jungle Book.

If television has typecast him as a generic sensitive type in a slew of mini-series and movies, he can point with peacock pride to the PBS series Reilly, Ace of Spies, which contains his sexiest performance as he fills out evening clothes better than anyone since Cary Grant. Reunited memorably with Judy Davis in the haunting One against the Wind, he subtly underplayes the high-voltage Anjelica Huston right off the television screen in the bitter breast-beating of Family Pictures, as a family man scrambling like Houdini to free himself of domestic chains. Varying his range previously with a villain role in Ivanhoe failed for the simple reason that Neill cannot camouflage his innate decency. Even when his characters disappoint or betray, Neill’s likable persona blunts the impact of the transgression.

On the big screen, Neill always distinguishes himself except in roles requiring over-the-top flamboyance; on the evidence of The Final Conflict, Possession, and In the Mouth of Madness he would be wise to check out of horror venues forever. Because Neill has never disgraced himself with a bad performance, he often gets overlooked in the distribution of kudos in favor of more obvious performers. Not only is he the only actor keeping the audience from snoozing during the ten-ton, asleep-in-the-deep thriller, The Hunt for Red October, he also is so irresistibly bewidered in the pretentious The Piano that one loses all patience with Holly Hunter’s intransigent mute. In Fred Schepisi’s tricky media attack, A Cry in the Dark, Neill brilliantly complements Streep with a heartrending display of stoicism. This portrait of a grieving father vilified by the press and public is his finest performance to date. Lest the misconception persist that Neill is only a stalwart support system for bigger egoed film stars of both sexes, consider his exemplary work in the flawed Death in Brunswick, a searing delineation of an irresponsible man imbibing to drown out a surfeit of self-doubt (an acting turn even more noteworthy because it exists in a vacuum of a black comedy film). In a 360-degree reversal, Neill charmed audiences with his freethinking artist who admires female flesh as religiously as he loathes hypocrisy in the colorful Sirens. In that movie’s hothouse atmosphere, Neill’s sex appeal has its most expansive workout since his womanizer role in The Good Wife. Neither extinct dino-monsters nor formidable female stars can cow this pliable performer who rarely gets his proper due. Neill is one of the rare male stars able to unapologetically make emotional expressiveness not seem like a challenge that real he-men must meet and rise above. In all of his performances, psychological openness and virility go hand in hand. The contemporary cinema is richer for having nurtured a male star who confronts crises with intelligence before resorting to violence and who unabashedly admires women even when he cannot fathom their mysteries.

—Robert Pardi
NEWMAN, Paul

Films as Actor:

1954 The Silver Chalice (Saville) (as Basil the Defender)
1956 The Rack (Laven) (as Capt. Edward Hall Jr.); Somebody Up There Likes Me (Wise) (as Rocky Graziano)
1957 The Helen Morgan Story (Both Ends of the Candle) (Curtiz) (as Larry); Until They Sail (Wise) (as Capt. Jack Harding)
1958 The Long Hot Summer (Ritt) (as Ben Quick); The Left-Handed Gun (Arthur Penn) (as Billy Bonney); Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Richard Brooks) (as Brick); Rally 'round the Flag, Boys! (McCarey) (as Harry Bannerman)
1959 The Young Philadelphians (The City Jungle) (Sherman) (as Tony Lawrence)
1960 From the Terrace (Robson) (as Alfred Eaton); Exodus (Preminger) (as Ari Ben Canaan)
1961 Paris Blues (Ritt) (as Ram Bowen); The Hustler (Rosen) (as “Fast Eddie” Felson)
1962 Hemingway's Adventures of a Young Man (Adventures of a Young Man) (Ritt) (as Ad Francis); Sweet Bird of Youth (Richard Brooks) (as Chance Wayne)
1963 Hud (Ritt) (as Hud Bannon); A New Kind of Love (Shavelson) (as Steve Sherman); The Prize (Robson) (as Andrew Craig)
1964 What a Way to Go! (Thompson) (as Larry Flint); The Outrage (Ritt) (as Juan Carrasco)
1965 Lady L (Ustinov) (as Armand)
1966 Harper (The Moving Target) (Smight) (as Lew Harper); Torn Curtain (Hitchcock) (as Professor Michael Armstrong)
1967 Hombre (Ritt) (as John Russell); Cool Hand Luke (Rosenberg) (as Luke Jackson)

1968 The Secret War of Harry Frigg (Smight) (title role)
1969 Winning (Goldstone) (as Frank Capua); Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Hill) (as Butch Cassidy)
1970 WUSA (Rosenberg) (as Rheinhart)
1972 Pocket Money (Rosenberg) (as Jim Kane); The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean (Huston) (title role)
1973 The Mackintosh Man (Huston) (as Rearden); The Sting (Hill) (as Henry Gondorff)
1974 The Towering Inferno (Guillerman and Irwin Allen) (as Doug Roberts)
1975 The Drowning Pool (Rosenberg) (as Lew Harper)
1976 Buffalo Bill and the Indians, or Sitting Bull’s History Lesson (Altman) (as Buffalo Bill); Silent Movie (Mel Brooks) (cameo)
1977 Slapshot (Hill) (as Reggie Dunlop)
1979 Quintet (Altman) (as Essex)
1981 Absence of Malice (Pollack) (as Gallagher); Fort Apache, the Bronx (Petrie) (as Murphy); When Time Ran Out (Earth’s Final Fury) (Goldstone) (as Hank Anderson)
1982 The Verdict (Lumet) (as Frank Galvin)
1986 The Color of Money (Scorsese) (as Eddie Felson)
1987 Hello Actors Studio (Tresgot—doc)
1989 Fat Man and Little Boy (Schorseze) (as Eddie Felson)
1990 Mr. and Mrs. Bridge (Ivory) (as Walter Bridge)
1991 Why Havel? (as himself)
1994 The Hudsucker Proxy (Coen) (as Sidney J. Mussburger); Nobody’s Fool (Benton) (as Donald “Sully” Sullivan)
1998 Twilight (Benton) (as Harry Ross)
1999 Message in a Bottle (Mandoki) (as Dodge Blake)
2000 Where the Money Is (Kanievská) (as Henry)

Films as Director:

1959 On the Harmfulness of Tobacco
1968 Rachel, Rachel (+ pr)
1971 Sometimes a Great Notion (Never Give an Inch) (+ as Hank Stamper)
1972 The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds (+ pr)
1980 The Shadow Box (for TV)
1984 Harry and Son (+ as Harry, co-pr, co-sc)
1987 The Glass Menagerie

Publications

By NEWMAN: books—

By NEWMAN: articles—

Interview with Brian Baxter, in Films and Filming (London), March 1987.
Interview with Michel Cieutat, in Positif (Paris), March 1987.

On NEWMAN: books—

On NEWMAN: articles—

* * *

Of his movie debut in The Silver Chalice, Paul Newman has been quoted as saying, “to have the honor of being in the worst picture of the fifties and surviving is no mean feat.” Whether it really is the worst film of the 1950s is a matter for some debate; the fact of Newman’s quite remarkable survival is not.

For in spite of a clutch of poor reviews for his role as “Basil the Defender” in that ignoble epic, Newman—fresh from the Actors Studio and some success in a Broadway production of Picnic—was to become one of the most accomplished of film actors. Reversing the customary relation between the sublime and the ridiculous, he went straight from The Silver Chalice to the role of Rocky Graziano in Somebody Up There Likes Me, and from that film until Hud in 1963 Newman did nothing but learn and improve. In his best performances of these years (The Left-Handed Gun, The Hustler, and Hud) rather than the more theatrical material such as Cat on a Hot Tin Roof or Sweet Bird of Youth) he rose to the challenge of movie acting with apparently effortless skill.

Take The Left-Handed Gun. Arthur Penn’s neurotically intense Freudian presents a young man constantly on the very edge of insanity, a Billy the Kid with all the traditional accoutrements but none of the heroicis. Newman, typically, built his performance on detailed physical impressions, his every movement convoluted, his gestures conveying impossible tensions. He really is like a spring ready to snap. This Billy is clearly of the Actors Studio, of a piece with the work of Brando, Steiger, Wallach, and Clift. Expression of character comes from within, “absorbing other people’s personalities and adding some of your own,” as Newman once put it. The difficulty with this approach, the so-called Method, is that it was designed primarily for the stage and therefore all too easily led its exponents into overstatement on screen. It was essential to tone down Method techniques to meet the singular requirements of movie acting.

For Newman, unlike Rod Steiger and to some extent Marlon Brando, that proved no great problem, and by 1961 and The Hustler he had found the perfect balance. Newman’s performance as Fast Eddie Felson, the consummately ambitious pool hustler who ultimately finds self-respect, harnesses the sheer physicality of Method technique to the understatement required of actors playing on the big screen. In The Hustler Newman uses many of the little contrivances on which he was to come to rely: suddenly looking away and turning back with a quizzical expression; restraining that luminous smile then switching it on like a spotlight; furrowing his brow in a way that breathes seriousness into the most trivial exchange. In this film, however, there is much more to his performance than skillful deployment of these techniques.

Partly, of course, that is a product of quality and depth in The Hustler’s writing and direction. Looks and smiles convey much more when writer, director, and cinematographer are as skilled as the actor, and it is likely that Fast Eddie would have been fascinating whoever played the role. But there is also a strong sense of involvement from Newman, an engagement with character which has not been found in many of his performances since. In The Hustler Newman the actor is subjugated to Eddie the character: all his considerable skills are placed in the service of the film. In his later big successes (Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, The Sting, and even the rather better Cool Hand Luke) everything is built upon an already established Newman persona. These films are vehicles. Not in the sense that they are made solely to display him, but that they are movies in which his written character is sufficient of a tabula rasa to allow him to play it by resorting to the now familiar array of Newman techniques and mannerisms. These are roles molded by the requirements of the star system and played by reflex.

This is not to suggest that Newman has not given audiences and filmmakers excellent value. He has probably provided more consistent service than any other actor of the Method generation. It is only when you view his work of the 1970s and 1980s in the light of his best performances that you realize how much was lost when he was transformed from actor into star. Fortunately, it is no longer necessary to return to The Hustler to make that comparison. Since he turned 60 he seems to have found new commitment and energy, graceing several films with impeccable performances. One such is his hugely enjoyable portrait of the extrovert and eccentric Earl K. Long in Blaze. Another, perhaps the biggest delight to long-term admirers, is his recreation of Eddie Felson 25 years on in The Color of Money, for which he finally received the Academy Award that he merited for its prequel, The Hustler. Scorsese’s film may not have the classical narrative qualities of Robert Rossen’s original but it does have Newman giving an object lesson in refined movie acting. And the early 1990s have produced a little run of quality performances in Mr. and Mrs. Bridge, The Hudsucker Proxy, and, best of all, as Sally in Nobody’s Fool, for which he received yet another Oscar nomination.

—Andrew Tudor

NICHOLSON, Jack

Nationality: American. Born: Neptune, New Jersey, 22 April 1937. Education: Attended Manasquan High School in Neptune; studied acting in Los Angeles with Jeff Corey, 1957. Family: Married Sandra Knight, 1961 (divorced 1966), child: Jennifer; two children with actress Rebecca Broussard. Career: 1957—office boy in MGM cartoon department; some television appearances; 1957–58—stage work with Players Ring Theater; 1958—film debut in The Cry Baby Killer, 1963—first screenwriting credit for Thunder Island; 1971—directed first film, Drive, He Said. Awards: Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics, for Easy Rider, 1969; Best Actor, British Academy, for Chinatown and The Last Detail, 1974; Best Actor, Cannes Festival, for The Last Detail, 1974; Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for Chinatown and The Last Detail, 1974; Best Actor, Academy Award, Best Actor, New York Film Critics, Golden Globe Award, and Best Actor, British Academy, for One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest, 1976; Best Supporting Actor, Academy Award, for Terms of Endearment, 1983; Golden Globe Award, for Terms of Endearment, 1984; Golden Globe Award, for Prizzi’s Honor, 1986; Best Actor Awards, New York Film Critics and Los Angeles Film Critics, 1987; American Film Institute Life Achievement Award, 1994; Best Actor, Academy Award, American Comedy Award, Broadcast Film Critics Association Award, Golden Globe Award, for As Good as It Gets, 1998; Cecil B. DeMille Award, for outstanding contribution to the field of entertainment, 1999. Agent: Sandy Bressler and Associates, 15760 Ventura Boulevard, Suite 1730, Encino, CA 91436, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1958 The Cry Baby Killer (Addis) (as Jimmy)
1959 Too Soon to Love (Rush) (as Buddy)
1960 The Wild Ride (Corman) (as Johnny Varron); Studs Lonigan (Lerner) (as Weary Reilly); Little Shop of Horrors (Corman) (as Wilbur Force)
1961 The Broken Land (Bushelman) (as Will Broicous)
1962 The Raven (Corman) (as Roxford Bedlo)
1963 The Terror (Corman) (as Andre Duvalier)
1964 Ensign Pulver (Logan) (as crew member); Back Door to Hell (Hellman) (as Burnett)
1966 The Shooting (Hellman) (as Billy Spear, + co-pr)
1967 Hell’s Angels on Wheels (Rush) (as Poet)
1968 Psych-Out (Rush) (as Stoney)
1969 Easy Rider (Dennis Hopper) (as George Hanson)
1970 On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (Minnelli) (as Tad Pringle); Five Easy Pieces (Rafelson) (as Robert Eroica Dupea)
1971 Carnal Knowledge (Nichols) (as Jonathan); A Safe Place (Jaglom) (as Mitch)
1972 The King of Marvin Gardens (Rafelson) (as David Staebler)
1973 The Last Detail (Ashby) (as Billy Buddusky)
1974 Chinatown (Polanski) (as J. J. Gittes); The Fortune (Nichols) (as Oscar Sullivan)
1975 Professione: Reporter (The Passenger) (Antonioni) (as David Locke); Tommy (Russell) (as Doctor); One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest (Forman) (as Randall P. McMurphy)
1976 The Missouri Breaks (Arthur Penn) (as Tom Logan); The Last Tycoon (Kazan) (as Brimmer)
1980 The Shining (Kubrick) (as Jack Torrance)
1981 The Border (Richardson) (as Charlie Smith); The Postman Always Rings Twice (Rafelson) (as Frank Chambers); Reds (Beatty) (as Eugene O’Neill)
1983 Terms of Endearment (James L. Brooks) (as Garrett Breedlove)
1985 Prizzi’s Honor (Huston) (as Charlie Fontana)
1986 Heartburn (Nichols) (as Mark)
1987 Broadcast News (James L. Brooks) (as Bill Rorich); Ironweed (Babenco) (as Francis Phelan); The Witches of Eastwick (Miller) (as Daryl Van Horne)
1989 Batman (Burton) (as the Joker/Jack Napier)
1992 Hoffa (DeVito) (title role); Man Trouble (Rafelson) (as Harry Bliss); A Few Good Men (Rob Reiner) (as Col. Nathan R. Jessop)
1994 Wolf (Nichols) (as Will Randall)
1995 The Crossing Guard (Sean Penn) (as Freddy Gale)
1996 The Evening Star (as Garrett Breedlove); Mars Attacks! (Tim Burton) (as President James Dale)
1997 As Good As It Gets (Brooks) (as Melvin Udall); Blood and Wine (Rafelson) (as Alex)

Films as Scriptwriter:

1963 Thunder Island (Leewood)
1966 Ride the Whirlwind (Hellman) (+ pr, ro as Wes); Flight to Fury (Hellman) (+ ro as Jay Wickham)
1967 The Trip (Corman)
1968 Head (Rafelson) (co-sc, + co-pr, ro as himself)

Films as Director:

1970 Drive, He Said (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1978 Goin’ South (ro as Henry Moon)
1990 The Two Jakes (+ ro as J. J. Gittes)

Publications

By NICHOLSON: articles—

Interview with B. Walker, in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1985.

On NICHOLSON: books—

On NICHOLSON: articles—

Schraus, Fred, ‘‘The Two Jacks,’’ in Premiere (New York), September 1990.

* * *

It is surprising that an actor of such obvious charisma as Jack Nicholson remained mired for so long in low-budget films made about and for the fringes of American society. During his early years, he appeared in a steady stream of quickies for Roger Corman and others. His masochistic dental patient in Corman’s classic two-day wonder Little Shop of Horrors remains a high point, although it did little to advance Nicholson’s career at the time. Only when the counterculture became a less peripheral force toward the end of the 1960s did Nicholson begin to exert widespread appeal.

Nicholson’s background (a broken home) and intense personality suited him for roles as an alienated, rebellious biker and as a horror film hero always on brink of slipping into psychosis. Significantly, his break came in Easy Rider, where he plays an alcoholic lawyer only too ready to hit the road and leave behind a meaningless settled life. Nicholson’s tour-de-force performance in the role, which he took over at the last minute when the already cast Rip Torn himself hit the road, earned him a supporting Oscar nomination. Like Richard Rush’s Hell’s Angels on Wheels, in which he appeared two years before, Easy Rider presented bikers as the image of nonconformity. The difference was that the ideas of freedom from responsibility and a dedication to self-enjoyment now found a wider audience which Nicholson was at last able to tap.

In subsequent films, Nicholson has made his drifter character more resonant. In Five Easy Pieces his Bobby Dupea is a man caught between the claims of different cultures. At the end, he sets out like Huck Finn for the frontier. But the character will undoubtedly find only another dead end in Alaska, only another correlative of his own incapacities. For demythologizing the character he had so vividly etched the year before in Easy Rider, Nicholson earned his first Oscar nomination as best actor. He has since taken his screen persona in the direction of continuing popular appeal, determined not to find himself for the second time on the outside of mainstream cinema.

In Mike Nichols’s Carnal Knowledge he played a successful, Ivy League-educated lawyer whose youthful joy in sex, poisoned by male chauvinism, becomes a pitiful impotence. For Hal Ashby’s The Last Detail he portrayed a dim-witted military policeman who instinctively grasps the injustices of his world but is only able to stage an ineffective (if heartwarming) protest against them. In Polanski’s Chinatown Nicholson is a jaded detective whose “matrimonial work” is nevertheless an attempt to preserve innocence and indict the guilty (he fails at both). As McMurphy in Forman’s One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest he offers a variation on his character of the unrepresed outsider, who doubles as a healer of psychic wounds (a performance that won him an Oscar). In both The Missouri Breaks (opposite Brando) and Reds (as Eugene O’Neill, receiving another Oscar nomination), he is again an outsider battling or protesting against an unjust system. In Kubrick’s The Shining, he returned to a character much like those he had played for Corman—the potential psychopath who goes over the brink into madness—but pulled out all the stops in a creatively daring performance.

His role in Terms of Endearment further softened the rebel character he had created for the turbulent 1960s and 1970s. As a womanizing, alcoholic former astronaut, he is a comic and not a tragic figure, a man who does his own thing, hurts no one, and can be melodramatically transformed into a sensitive human being. The part won him another supporting actor Oscar. His cameo reprise of the role in Brooks’s even more melodramatic sequel, Evening Star, is a nostalgic gesture toward the bad boy charm that characterized much of his early work in mainstream film. This is an element of his screen persona exploited most successfully by James L. Brooks, who specializes in sentimentalizing quirkiness. Nicholson among contemporary actors could make convincing the inner changes demanded by his—the misanthropic loner, trapped by compulsive behaviors, reaches out to love a young woman, befriend his gay neighbor, and even form an attachment to a hitherto pesky dog. His dedicated semper fi colonel in A Few Good Men, in contrast, restrains his anger at and frustration with confining regulations until prompted into self-revelation by relentless cross-examination.

In recent years, Nicholson has been taking his career in another direction, now conceiving himself more as a character actor. He is absurdly horrific, yet charming and sexy, as the devil in The Witches of Eastwick. The same engaging duality is evident in Batman where, like all the villains in that series, his Joker is a good man twisted toward evil by an unfortunate metamorphosis. In Wolf, a similar transformation is caused by a midlife crisis that is both professional and sexual. In Rafelson’s Blood and Wine, an homage to James M. Cain, Nicholson’s frustrated, unsuccessful businessman is unable to make a new life for himself; his elaborate caper ends in bloody disaster for nearly everyone. The antihero of his earlier career, it seems, can now only be recreated—as thenostic performances in The Two Jakes (a flawed sequel to Chinatown) and Ironweed make clear. His impersonation of the union leader in Hoffa, however, is a mature tour de force, a demonstration of how rebellious dissatisfaction can be directed toward a good end, but then betrayed and squandered. Similarly, Nicholson plays a tragic figure in Sean Penn’s underrated Crossing Guard, a man, undone by grief, who lets his life be ruined by the death of his young daughter; the performance is intense and affecting, a key to the film’s devastating anatomy of love, hate, and deliverance. Nicholson’s recent work shows that even in advanced middle age he continues to be one of the most talented and bankable stars in the American film industry.

—R. Barton Palmer

NIELSEN, Asta

Nationality: Danish. Born: Copenhagen, 11 September 1881. Education: Attended the children’s school of the Royal Theatre, Copenhagen. Family: Married 1) the director Urban Gad, 1910 (divorced); four later marriages. Career: Actress in chorus of the Kongelige Theatre; stage debut at the Dagmar Theatre, then leading lady at the New Theatre; 1910—film debut in Afgrounden, directed by Gad; 1911–36—worked in Germany first with the producer Paul Davidson: directed by Lubitsch, Gerlach, Wiene, Pabst, and others; 1932—only sound film, Umnötigke Liebe; 1936—returned to Denmark. Awards: Deutscher filmpress, 1963. Died: In Copenhagen, 24 May 1972.

Films as Actress:

1910 Afgrounden (Gad); Den sorte Drom (Gad); Ballettdanserinden (Blom); Nachtfalter (Gad); Heissen Blut (Gad); Im grossen Augenblick (Gad); Zigeunerblut (Gad); Der fremde Vogel (Gad)

1912 Die Arme Jenny (Gad); Die Match des Goldes (Gad); Zum Tode gehetzt (Gad); Der Totentanz (Gad); Die Kinder
Asta Nielsen, muse of silence, began her career with Afgrunden, and from 1910 to 1916 (her formative period), carried fully the style of the cultivated Dane in cinema. Contrary to the practice of actors of the time toward excessive and emphatic gestures, Nielsen launched a style more suited to the cinematographic medium, characterized by her strife, by the play of various expressions which she completed with a distant gaze, holding generally to one point of view and then cut away, in contrast to the montage editing of America.

With Afgrunden Asta Nielsen naturally introduced one of the fundamental components of her representational style. Here emerges a sense of dance, and her eroticism, touched with an aura of spirituality, commands a metaphysical fatalism—the marked Nordic presence—which made Nielsen so disturbing. When she created the vamp (preceding Musidora and Theda Bara) she came to be a sorceress and one of the forces of cinema, conveying innermost feelings in her melodramas. Her admirable use (similar to what Lillian Gish began to create much later) of her face and her gaze—a tremor of the eyelids or her immense eyes spoke concisely—made audiences feel a dialogue was transmitted despite the silence of the film.

Her relationship with Urban Gad symbolized a model of identification between actress and director which film history continually reproduces (for example, Stiller-Garbo, Sternberg-Dietrich, and Godard-Karina). Between the acting power of Nielsen and the mastery of mise-en-scène of Gad, a style completely appropriate and self-sustaining emerged. For example, Vordertreppe-Hintertreppe, in particular through the technique of lighting and stylized decor, shows... the contribution of their relationship to the development of a type of worldly drama which foreshadowed what would be seen much later as ‘‘Lubitsch’s touch.’’

Berlin did not delay in summoning her. With the support of the producer Paul Davidson, Nielsen became established as one of the key figures of the German cinema. Especially in the second stage of her career, after cutting away from Gad, Nielsen brought to the German screen the burden of tragic and mystic Scandinavian culture, and one can hear the echo of both Ibsen (not only by chance in the film Hedda Gabler) and Strindberg (by filming Fräulein Julie with Jessner).

This period gave her, consequently, the chance to make her major contributions to the art of cinematic representation. In one case we see her utilizing the slightest expressions of her visage (her “painted face” in front of the mirror in Der Absturz) as she is to receive her lover after ten years in prison. Her deceptively passive attitude toward the scene, in Die freudlose Gasse, of the jeweler making experimental jewels, while Nielsen fails to notice what is really seen, is a sovereign example of multiexpressive mimicry. And she is working not only with her face but also with her hands, which resolutely tumble down on long arms from her body, and which she uses to accent her voluntary mechanized portrayal. These are the same hands which “spoke” in Vanina, in a most typical product of “caligari-ism,” as she waits to escape with her lover.

As others have said about Nielsen, she reminds one of a female Hamlet, a woman who worked with men who had a sense of dynasty, a fragile woman with melancholy ambiguity, reminding us of Mary Magdalene in Wiene’s INRI, with a piousness of dynastic volume, or the Lulu of Jessner’s Erdegeist. In her work with Jessner, Reinhardt’s great rival in the development of German theater, she began her second phase. Nielsen worked with a variety of directors who chose theatrical texts of undeniable quality, from Ibsen and Strindberg to Wedekind and Schnitzler.

In the 1920s Nielsen also developed a persona in characteristic decline, changing from her old passion to the figure of an old dignified prostitute, quoting from Der Absturz in two noted “street films,” Die freudlose Gasse of Pabst and Direnntragödie of Bruno Rahm. Extracting life from the world of myth, Nielsen now herself seems mythic.

—M. S. Fonseca

NIELSEN, Leslie

Nationality: Canadian. Born: Regina, Saskatchewan, 11 February 1926; nephew of Jean Hersholt (an actor). Education: Attended Victoria High School, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada; attended Lorne Greene’s Academy of Radio Arts, Toronto, Ontario, Canada; studied at the Neighborhood Playhouse, New York City. Family: Married 1) Monica Bayar (some sources say Boyer), 1950 (divorced 1955, some sources say 1956); 2) Alisande Ullman, 1958 (divorced 1973); 3) Brooks Oliver, 1981 (divorced 1983); (some sources say he was once married to woman named Maura); 4) Barbara Earl. Career: Worked as a radio announcer in Canada; played General Francis Marion, The Swamp Fox TV series, 1959–60; played Police Lieutenant Price Adams. The New Breed TV Series, 1961–62; played Dr. ant Price Adams.

Films as Actor:

1955 The Battle of Gettysburg (as Narrator)
1956 The Opposite Sex (as Steve Hilliard); Ransom! (as Charlie Telfer); The Vagabond King (as Thibault); Forbidden Planet (as Commander John J. Adams)
1957 Hot Summer Night (as William Joel Partain); Tammy and the Bachelor (as Peter Brent)
1958 The Sheepman (as Colonel Stephen Bedford/Johnny Bledsoe) (Stranger with a Gun)
1964 Night Train to Paris (as Alan Holiday); See How They Run (— for TV) (as Elliott Green)
1965 Dark Intruder (as Brett Kingsford)
1966 The Plainsman (as Colonel George Armstrong Custer); Beau Geste (as Lieutenant De Ruse)

1967 Code Name: Heraclitus (—for TV); Companions in Nightmare (—for TV) (as Dr. Neesden); The Reluctant Astronaut (as Major Fred Gifford); Gunfight in Abilene (as Grant Evers)

1968 Dayton’s Devils (as Frank Dayton); How to Steal the World (as General Maximilian Harmon); Hawaii Five-O (—for TV) (as Brent); Rosie! (as Cabot); Shadow Over Everson (—for TV) (as Sheriff Verne Drover); Counterpoint (—as Victor Rice)

1969 Four Rode Out; How to Commit Marriage (as Phil Fletcher); Change of Mind (as Sheriff Webb); Deadlock (—for TV) (as Lieutenant Sam Danforth); Trial Run (—for TV) (as Jason Harkness)

1970 Night Slaves (—for TV) (as Sheriff Henshaw); Incident in San Francisco (—for TV) (as Lieutenant Brubaker); Hauser’s Memory (—for TV) (as Joseph Slaughter); The Aquarians (—for TV) (as Official); Deep Lab (—for TV)

1971 The Resurrection of Zachary Wheeler (as Harry Walsh); They Call It Murder (—for TV) (as Frank Antrim)

1972 Columbo: Lady in Waiting (—for TV) (as Peter Hamilton); The Poseidon Adventure (as Captain Harrison)

1973 . . . And Millions Die! (And Millions Will Die) (as Gallagher); The Letters (—for TV) (as Derek Childs); Snatched (—for TV) (as Bill Sutter)

1974 Can Ellen Be Saved? (—for TV) (as Arnold Lindsey)

1975 Columbo: Identity Crisis (—for TV) (as Geronimo/A.J. Henderson); Threshold: The Blue Angels Experience (as Narrator); 1976 Brinks: The Great Robbery (—for TV) (as Agent Norman Houston)

1977 Day of the Animals (Something Is Out There) (as Paul Jenson); Viva Knievel! (Seconds to Live) (as Stanley Millard); Grand Jury (as John Williams); Sixth and Main; The Amsterdam Kill (as Riley Knight)

1978 Little Mo (—for TV) (as Nelson Fisher)

1979 Institute for Revenge (—for TV) (as Counselor Hollis Barnes); The Return of Charlie Chan (Happiness Is a Warm Clue) (—for TV) (as Alex Hadrach); City on Fire (as Mayor William Dudley); Rief (as Major Cz ties); Backstairs at the White House (mini—for TV) (as Ike Hoover/Narrator)

1980 Project: Kill (as Jonathan Trevor); The Night the Bridge Fell Down (—for TV); Airplane! (Flying High) (as Doctor Rumack); Prom Night (as Mr. Hammond); OHMS (—for TV) (as Governor)

1981 The Creature Wasn’t Nice (Wrong Space, Spaceship) (as Captain Jamieson)

1982 Foxtfire Light (as Reece Morgan); Wrong Is Right (The Man with the Deadly Lens) (as Mallory); Creepshow (Something to Tide You Over) (as Richard Vickers)

1983 Cave-In! (—for TV) (as Joseph ‘‘Joe’’ Johnson)

1985 Reckless Disregard (—for TV) (as Bob Franklin); Striker’s Mountain (—for TV) (as Jim McKay); Blade in Hong Kong (—for TV) (as Harry Ingersoll)

1986 Race for the Bomb (mini—for TV) (as Lewis Strauss); The Patriot (as Admiral Frazer); Soul Man (as Mr. Dunbar)

1987 Home Is Where the Hart Is; Nightstick (Calhoun) (—for TV) (as Thad Evans); Nuts (as Allen Green); Fatal Confession: A Father Dowling Mystery (—for TV) (as Senator erdain)

1988 Dangerous Curves (as Greg Krevske); The Naked Gun: From the Files of Police Squad! (The Naked Gun) (as Lt. Frank Drebin)

1989 Circus of the Stars #14 (—for TV) (as Ringmaster)

1990 Repossessed (as Father Mayii)

1991 Circus of the Stars #16 (—for TV) (as Ringmaster); Change of a Lifetime (—for TV) (as Lloyd Dixon); All I Want for Christmas (as Santa); The Naked Gun 2 1/2: The Smell of Fear (as Lt. Frank Drebin)

1993 Digger (as Arthur); Leslie Nielsen’s Bad Golf Made Easier (as Himself); The Unknown Marx Brothers (—for TV) (as Narrator); Surf Ninjas (Surf Warriors) (as Colonel Chi)

1994 Bad Golf My Way (Leslie Nielsen’s Bad Golf My Way) (as Himself); Circus of the Stars Goes to Disneyland (—for TV) (as Ringmaster); S.P.Q.R. 2,000 e 1/2 anni fa (S.P.Q.R.: 2,000 and a Half Years Ago) (as Lucio Cinico); Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult (as Lt. Frank Drebin)

1995 Dracula: Dead and Loving It (as Count Dracula); Rent-a-Kid (as Harry Haber); Mr. Willowby’s Christmas Tree (—for TV) (as Willowby’s butler)

1996 Harvey (—for TV) (as Dr. Chumley); Spy Hard (as Dick Steele—Agent WD-40) (+ exec pr)

1997 Family Plan (as Harry Haber); Leslie Nielsen’s Stupid Little Golf Video (as Himself); Mr. Magoo (as Mr. Quincy Magoo)

1998 Wrongfully Accused (as Ryan Harrison); Safety Patrol (—for TV) (as Mr. Penn)

1999 Camouflage (as Jack Potter); Pirates: 3D Show (as Captain Lucky)

2000 2001: A Space Travesty (Goldstein) (as Marshall Dix) (+ sc)

Publications

By NIELSEN: articles—

On NIELSEN: articles—

Heinz, Rainer, ‘‘Ein Kasper auf Verbrecherjagd,’’ in Film-Dienst (Cologne), vol. 49, no. 18, 27 August 1996.

* * *

Leslie Nielsen became a leading comedian with his role in 1980’s Airplane! ‘‘Surely you can’t be serious!’’ a man demanded of Nielsen’s character. ‘‘I am serious. And don’t call me Shirley!’’ a straight-faced Nielsen responded. As Airplane! audiences groaned, one of the unlikeliest career transformations in Hollywood history began, almost equal to that autumn’s election of a cowboy actor to the presidency. Leslie Nielsen, heretofore known as a consummate dramatic leading man and sidekick of three decades’ standing, reinvented himself into a star of over-the-top movie parodies during the 1980s and 1990s.

The Canadian-born Nielsen (whose uncle was screen legend Jean Hersholt) acted in literally hundreds of movies and television programs from the 1950s through the 1970s, invariably in dramatic roles—Commander John J. Adams in the sci-fi classic Forbidden Planet (1956) and as a crewwoman in The Poseidon Adventure (1972)—or as the set-up man in light comedies; he was Debbie Reynolds’ square-jawed beau in Tammy and the Bachelor (1957), and Bob Hope’s romantic rival in How to Commit Marriage (1969). On television, he was best known for dual roles of a doctor and his twin brother on the long-running prime time soap opera Peyton Place. His deep, resonant voice and silvery hair allowed him to play authoritative figures unusually well. Often appearing in low-budget movies, Nielsen was usually the best thing about them; his role as a sleazy drug kingpin lent Viva Knievel! (1977) its sole touch of competence.

Moviegoers were surprised, therefore, to see Nielsen in one of the most uproarious films ever, Airplane! Abrahams and the Zucker brothers consciously wanted this parody of 1970s disaster films to star such actual 1960s and 1970s TV dramatic stars as Nielsen, Robert Stack, Lloyd Bridges and Peter Graves, deadpanning their way through atrocious puns, double entendres and scatological jokes. “It’s like they said to me, ‘Leslie, come out and play,’” Nielsen told the New York Times. “Thank God for them.” The MAD Magazine/National Lampoon style of humor appealed to filmgoers of all ages; against the much-hyped Caddyshack and The Blues Brothers, Airplane! was the sleeper comedy hit of 1980.

Nielsen worked with the Airplane! trio again on Police Squad!, a brilliant 1982 situation comedy spoofing Dragnet ’67 and The FBI. As Lt. Frank Drebin, Nielsen perfectly satirized the genre he’d worked in for so many years; at the end of each episode he’d freeze in mid-laugh while behind (and in front of) him his coworkers (and criminals) went about their work. The series lasted just six episodes, but enjoyed a cult following. Nielsen returned to serious work in Creepshow (1982) and Soul Man (1986), but audiences were beginning to expect irreverence from him.

In 1988 Nielsen reprised his role of Frank Drebin in the first of three Naked Gun: From the Files of Police Squad theatrical movies, produced by Abrahams and the Zucker brothers. Alongside such B-movie stars as Priscilla Presley, George Kennedy and O. J. Simpson, Nielsen skewered the police movie genre and most others as well, proving equally adept in both physical comedy (practicing safe sex with a full body condom) and verbal jousting (Presley: ‘‘Can I interest you in a nightcap?’’ Nielsen: ‘‘No, thank you, I don’t wear them’’). The Naked Gun films were successful in the theaters, and their rapid-fire style held up well on video and TV, one reason why Naked Gun 2 1/2 (1991) actually outgrossed its predecessor.

The comedic success liberated Nielsen, and he played similarly manic roles in other film spoofs during the 1990s, including Dracula: Dead and Loving It (1995), Spy Hard (1996) and Wrongfully Accused (1998). If these films weren’t as successful as Airplane!, it might have been because by the 1990s, Nielsen was overly familiar as a wacky comedic lead. When he appeared in Airplane!, audiences knew him from dramatic work, and were thus surprised to see him doing comedy. By the late 1990s, audiences already expected him to do comedy. The element of surprise was gone, and so were some of the laughs.

At the turn of the century, Nielsen is also in his mid-70s, and the public might not wish to see a man at his age doing excessive physical stunts. He might now be best suited to doing more cerebral, verbally based work. Indeed, Nielsen has, in fact, been performing throughout America a one-man show about one of the more cerebral, less ironic figures of the 20th century—Clarence Darrow. Surely, Leslie Nielsen can be serious.

—Andrew Milner

NIKULIN, Yuri

Films as Actor:

1958 Devushka s gitaryoy (A Girl with a Guitar) (Aleksandr Fajntsimmer)
1959 Nepoddayushchisyeya (The Unnamables) (Yuri Chulyukin and Yuli Raizman) (as Klyachkin)
1961 Sovershenny servozno (Absolutely Seriously) (Leonid Gaidai); Kogda derevya byli bol’shimi (When the Trees Were Tall) (Lev Kulidzhanov) (as Kuzma Kuzmich Iordanov); Drug moy Kolka (My Friend, Kolka!) (Aleksandr MITta and Aleksei Saltvykov); Samogonshchiki (Bootleggers) (Leonid Gaidai) (as Booby)
1962 Bez strakha i upryoka (No Fear, No Blame) (Aleksandr MITta); Molodo-zelyono (Young-Green) (Konstantin Voinov)
1963 Delovye lyudi (Business People) (Leonid Gaidai) (as the Robber)
1964 Dayte zhalobnuyu knigu (Come Me the Complaints Book) (Eldar Ryazanov) (as Booby); Ko mne, Mukhtar! (Come Here, Mukhtar!) (Semyon Tumanov) (as Glaschevy)
1965 Fantazzyry (Fantasizing) (Isaak Magiton); Operatsiya Y i drugiye priklyucheniya Shurika (Operation Y and Other Shurik’s Adventures) (Leonid Gaidai) (as Booby)
1966 Malen’kiy beglets (Little Fugitive) (Chislana tobosha) (Eduard Bocharov and Teinosuke Kinugasa); Kavkazskaya plennitsa, ili Novye priklyucheniya Shurika (Prisoner of the Caucasus, or Shurik’s New Adventures) (Leonid Gaidai) (as Booby)
1968 Brilliantovaya ruka (Diamond Arm) (Leonid Gaidai) (as Semyon Gorbunkov); Novenkaya (The Rookie) (Pavel Lyubimov); Sem starikov i odna devushka (Seven Old Men and a Girl) (Yevgeni Karelov—for TV) (as Booby)
1969 Andrei Rublyov (Andrei Rublev) (Andrei Tarkovsky) (as Monk Patrikey)
1971 12 stulyev (Twelve Chairs) (Leonid Gaidai) (as Dvornik Tikhon); Stariki-razboiniki (Old Men: Robbers) (Eldar Ryazanov); Telegramma (Telegram) (Rolan Bykov)

1972 Tochka, tochka, zapyataya . . . (Point, Point, Comma . . .) (Aleksandr Mitta)

1975 Oni srazhalis za rodinu (They Fought for the Motherland) (Sergei Bondarchuk)

1976 Priklucheniya Travki (The Adventures of Travka) (Arkadi Kordon); Dnevnyy poyezd (Daytime Train) (TV) (Inessa Seleznynova); Dvadtsat dney bez voyny (Twenty Days Without War) (Alexei German) (as Lopatin)

1982 Ne khocha byt vzroslym (I Don’t Want To Be an Adult) (Yuri Chulyukin)

1983 Chuchelo (Scarecrow) (Rolan Bykov)

1985 Poludennyi vor (Midday Thief) (Viktor Turbin—for TV)

1994 Kapitan Krokus (Captain Crocus) (Vladimir Onishchenko)

Publications

By NIKULIN: articles—

On NIKULIN: articles—

Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt-am-Main), vol. 14, no. 10, October 1997.

* * *

Yuri Nikulin was a leading Soviet circus clown who turned a great comic actor and who then went on to become one of the best dramatic actors of Russian cinema. While he retained a life-long commitment to the circus, he knew how to keep the fine balance between the foolish and the bittersweet elements in a cinematic comedy. The scope of his roles and his appearance make him somewhat comparable to French comedy star Fernandel.

Nikulin started his career in circus. For the cinema he debuted in a supporting role in the Lyudmilla Gurchenko vehicle Devushka s gitaroi (1958), a musical comedy, and then starred in a variety of supporting roles in a range of comedies in the early 1960s. It was around this time when one of his main cinematic personas, Booby, came into being. Nikulin appeared as Booby in a series of comedies he made throughout the decade.

His best comedy performances for the cinema were delivered under the direction of Leonid Gaidai. Their collaboration started with smaller roles for Nikulin, who came to the lead only for the comedy-hit Kavkazskaya plennitza (1966), a film which broke all popularity records at the time. A romantic screwball comedy set in the mountains of the Caucasus and revolving around the ancient mountaineer tradition of bride abduction, the humor of the film relied on jokes of the clash of cultures-type.

Gaidai and Nikulin’s next comedy, however, Brilliantovaya ruka (Diamond Arm, 1968) surpassed the success of Kavkazskaya plennitza and is believed to be the most popular Soviet comedy ever made. It is a comedy of errors, where Nikulin’s protagonist Semyon Gorbunkov goes on a cruise, breaks his arm in an accident, and by mistake gets a cast filled up with stolen jewelry and diamonds. From there on the gangsters (played by Anatoliy Papanov and Andrei Mironov, both leading stars on the Soviet comedy scene) try to reclaim their jewels from the arm cast of the naive Gorbunkov. In both Kavkazskaya plennitza and Brilliantovaya ruka Nikulin performed songs by Alexander Zatsepin and Leonid Derbenyov which became classical favorites of Soviet popular music.

A particularly important artistic partnership for Nikulin was his collaboration with Anatoliy Papanov. They were first cast together in a fragment of the film Sovershenno Serieznno (1961) and in the short Samogonschiki (1961), and later on in Dayte zhalobnuyu knigu (1964) and in the musical comedy Sem starikov i odna devushka (1968). Their most popular partnership, however, was in Brilliantovaya ruka (1968).

Beyond his work for Gaidai, Nikulin was also acclaimed for his lead in Stariki-razbojnik (1971), yet another blockbuster by the team Emil Braginsky and Eldar Ryazanov, also starring other Soviet stars such as Yevgeni Yevstigneyev and Andrei Mironov. The story involves an aging detective who stages crimes he can then easily solve. In 1971 Nikulin also appeared in the small but important role of Dvornik Tikhon in one of the many adaptations of Ili and Petrov’s comedy blockbuster Twelve Chairs (1971, directed by Leonid Gaidai).

Nikulin continued to play for the circus and in comedies for another twenty-five years. His last appearance was in the Ukrainian comedy adventure Captain Crokus (1994).

Simultaneously with his comedy roles, Nikulin appeared in dramas. One of his most memorable roles of this type was of the monk Patrikey in Andrei Tarkovsky’s classical Andrei Rublyov (1969), the story of the Russian icon-painter, and believed to be one of the top masterpiece of world cinema.

In 1975 Nikulin was cast in Sergei Bondarchuk’s war epic Oni srazhalis za rodinu (1975). The film, which was nominated for the Golden Palm at Cannes, was based on the well-known war novel by Mikhail Sholokhov and featured an all-star cast including such leading names of Soviet cinema like Vasily Shukshin, Vyacheslav Tikhonov, Nonna Mordykova, Lidiya Fedoseyeva-Shukshina, and Innokenti Smoktunovsky. It was in another war-themed film, however, where Nikulin reached the widest appreciation for his dramatic acting. Aleksei German’s Dvadtsat dney bez voyny (Twenty Days Without War, 1976) was based on Konstantin Simonov’s Lopatin’s Notes, and it was Simonov himself who narrated the film. It is the simple and sad story of weary soldier Lopatin, who spends three weeks in Tashkent far from the trenches, falls in love with a woman he accidentally meets (Lyudmilla Gurchenko), and then has to return to fight in the war. Both lead actors deliver superb performances, and it is this film which brought Nikulin’s dramatic talents to full recognition.

Nikulin was often asked to play in adventure or comedy films for and about children and adolescents. This line of his work culminated in Rolan Bykov’s auteurist film Chuchelo (Scarecrow, 1983). Bykov, an actor who occasionally wrote and directed, and who turned into a culture sponsor in post-communist times, shot Chuchelo in 1983. But the film was not released until several years later due to objections from the teachers’ union. When finally released in 1986, this sensitive coming-of-age drama of adolescence cruelty, occasionally described as the Russian equivalent of Lord of Flies, became the most seen film of the year, a remarkable achievement provided this was the time when many other important perestroikak films were released. The protagonist of Chuchelo is a thirteen-year-old Lena, nicknamed Scarecrow, played remarkably by a pale and fragile Kristina Orbachkaitz, daughter of the Russian pop singer Alla Pugacheva. A new arrival in a small Russian town, Lena only has her grandfather (Yuri Nikulin)—a harmless art-collector of extremely limited means—who often has to endure the disrespect of the townsfolk because of his elevated affection for local artwork. In her new environment, Lena is confronted by a cruel world of teenage power mechanics. Failing to play by the popularity rules, she is soon ostracized and bullied by her classmates. Soon thereafter, a heart broken Lena and her grandfather, having donated his collection of ancestral artwork to an unappreciative city council, leave town. Nikulin delivers a memorable performance as the sensitive grandfather confronting the brutality of children in his subtle ways.

Nikulin’s role in Chuchelo was his last high-profile cinematic appearance. Since the mid-1980s he worked primarily in the circus until his death after a heart operation in 1997.

—Dina Iordanova

NIVEN, David

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>There Goes the Bride (De Courville) (as extra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>All the Winners (Malins) (as extra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd) (as extra); Without Regret (Harold Young) (as Bill Gage); A Feather in Her Hat (Santell) (as Leo Cartwright); Barbary Coast (Hawks) (as sailor); Splendor (Nugent) (as Clancy Lorrimore)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Rose Marie (Van Dyke) (as Teddy); Palm Springs (Palm Springs Affair) (Scotto) (as George Brittell); Dodsworth (Wyler) (as Maj. Clyde Lockert); Thank You, Jeeves (Thank You, Mr. Jeeves) (Arthur Greville Collins) (as Bertie Wooster); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz) (as Capt. James Randall); Beloved Enemy (Potter) (as Gerald Preston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>We Have Our Moments (Werker) (as Joe Gilling); The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell and Van Dyke) (as Capt. Fritz von Tarlenheim); Dinner at the Ritz (Schuster) (as Paul de Brack)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife (Lubitsch) (as Albert de Regnier); Four Men and a Prayer (Ford) (as Christopher Leigh); Three Blind Mice (Seiter) (as Steve Harrington); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding) (as Lt. Scott)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Wuthering Heights (Wyler) (as Edgar Linton); Bachelor Mother (Kanin) (as David Merlin); The Real Glory (Hathaway) (as Lt. McCool); Eternally Yours (Garnett) (as Tony); Raffles (Wood and Wyler) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>The First of the Few (Spitfire) (Leslie Howard) (as Geoffrey Crisp)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>The Way Ahead (The Immortal Battalion) (Reed) (as L.t. Jim Perry)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Squadron Leader Peter D. Carter); Magnificent Doll (Borzage) (as Aaron Burr); The Perfect Marriage (Lewis Allen) (as Dale Williams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>The Other Love (de Toth) (as Dr. Anthony Stanton); The Bishop’s Wife (Koster) (as Henry Brougham)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Bonnie Prince Charlie (Kimmings) (title role); Enchantment (Reis) (as Gen. Sir Roland “Rolle” Dane)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>A Kiss in the Dark (Daves) (as Eric Phillips); A Kiss for Corliss (Almost a Bride) (Wallace) (as Kenneth Marquis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Elusive Pimpernel (The Fighting Pimpernel) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Sir Percy Blakeney); The Toast of New Orleans (Taurgo) (as Jacques Riboudeaux)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Happy Go Lovely (Humberstone) (as B. G. Bruno); Soldiers Three (Garnett) (as Capt. Pindenny); The Lady Says No! (Ross) (as Bill Shelby); Appointment with Venus (Island Rescue) (Thomas) (as Maj. Valentine Moreland)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>The Moon Is Blue (Preminger) (as David Slater); The Love Lottery (Charles Crichton) (as Rex Allerton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Happy Ever After (Tonight’s the Night) (Zampi) (as Jasper O’Leary); Carrington, V.C. (Court Martial) (Asquith) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>The King’s Thief (Leonard) (as Duke of Brampton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Birds and the Bees (Taurgo) (as Col. Harris); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as Phileas Fogg); The Little Hut (Herbert and Robson) (as Henry Brittingham-Brett)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1957  Oh Men! Oh Women! (Nunnally Johnson) (as Dr. Alan Coles); My Man Godfrey (Koster) (title role); The Silken Affair (Kellino) (as Roger Tweakham, new accountant)

1958  Bonjour Tristesse (Preminger) (as Raymond); Separate Tables (Delbert Mann) (as Maj. Pollock); Glamorous Hollywood (Staub—short) (as himself)

1959  Ask Any Girl (Walters) (as Miles Doughton); Happy Anniversary (David Miller) (as Chris Walters)

1960  Please Don’t Eat the Daisies (Walters) (as Laurence Mackay)

1961  The Guns of Navarone (J. Lee Thompson) (as Corporal Miller); I due nemici (The Best of Enemies) (Hamilton) (as Maj. Peter Whitfield)

1962  La citta prigioniera (The Captive City; The Conquered City) (Anthony) (as Maj. Peter Whitfield); The Road to Hong Kong (Panama) (cameo as Tibetan monk); Guns of Darkness (Asquith) (as Tom Jordan)

1963  55 Days at Peking (Nicholas Ray) (as Sir Arthur Robertson); Il giorno più corto (The Shortest Day) (Corbucci) (as himself)

1964  The Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Sir Charles Litton); Bedtime Story (Levy) (as Lawrence Jamieson)

1965  Lady L (Ustinov) (as Lord Lendale [Dicky]); Where the Spies Are (Guest) (as Dr. Jason Love)

1967  Eye of the Devil (J. Lee Thompson—produced in 1966) (as Philippe de Montfaucon); Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as Sir James Bond)

1968  The Extraordinary Seaman (Frankenheimer) (as Lt. Cmdr. Finchhaven, R.N.); Prudence and the Pill (Cook and Neame) (as Gerald Hardcastle); The Impossible Years (Michael Gordon) (as Jonathan Kingsley)

1969  Before Winter Comes (J. Lee Thompson) (as Maj. Giles Burnside); Le Cerveau (The Brain) (Oury) (as Col. Matthews ["The Brain"])”

1970  The Statue (Amateau) (as Alex Bolt)

1972  King, Queen, Knave (Herzbube) (Skolimowski) (as Charles Dreyer)

1974  Vampira (Old Dracula) (Clive Donner) (as Count Dracula); Paper Tiger (Annakin) (as Walter Bradbury)

1976  No Deposit, No Return (Tokar) (as J. W. Osborne); Murder by Death (Robert Moore) (as Dick Charleston)

1978  Candleshoe (Tokar) (as Priory); Death on the Nile (Guillerman) (as Colonel Rice)
1979 Escape to Athena (Cosmatos) (as Professor Blake); A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square (The Biggest Bank Robbery; The Big Scam; The Mayfair Bank Caper) (Thomas) (as Ivan/Gen. Bernard Drew)

1980 Rough Cut (Siegel) (as Chief Inspector Cyril Willis)

1981 The Sea Wolves (McLaglen) (as Col. W. H. Grice)

1982 Better Late than Never (Ménage à Trois; Whose Little Girl Are You?) (Forbes) (as Nicholas “Nick” Cartland); Trail of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Sir Charles Litton)

1983 Curse of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Sir Charles Litton)

Publications

By NIVEN: books—

By NIVEN: articles—

Interview with J. Reid, in Motion Picture, July 1937.

“I’m Always Surprising Myself,” in Saturday Evening Post, July 1958.

Interview in Newsweek (New York), 22 December 1958.

On NIVEN: books—

On NIVEN: articles—

Obituary in Films and Filming (London), September 1983.

Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), Spring 1993.

* * *

Graceful and urbane David Niven excelled at light comedy and playing the gentleman rogue. He possessed considerable charm, not unlike Cary Grant or Errol Flynn, but his sexuality was presented in a more subtle style. Niven could be sexy by just clinking his champagne glass lightly against the tip of his partner’s glass, or by tentatively clearing his throat and then half-smiling with a bright, searching gaze toward his leading lady.

Niven came from a long line of military men, but, after tough years at Sandhurst military academy and a stint in the British army, he chose a life of drifting and adventuring which eventually led him to find work as a $2.50-per-day Hollywood extra in 1934. These early years, as well as his later career, are chronicled in two eloquent, best-selling memoirs.

Niven quickly ingratiated himself with the influential British colony in Hollywood, and it was not long before his social contacts paid off. Samuel Goldwyn put him under contract at $100 per week, and he began working regularly. From an inexperienced and rather stiff bit player, he rose to minor dramatic roles in a variety of films, including quality pictures such as Dodsworth, The Charge of the Light Brigade, and The Prisoner of Zenda. Rapidly, his acting improved, and in The Dawn Patrol Niven played his first truly memorable part as Errol Flynn’s flying buddy. A flair for drawing-room comedy surfaced in Dinner at the Ritz, and peaked in Bachelor Mother, in which his high-toned British dignity was a perfect foil to Ginger Rogers’s working-class American brassiness.

At the onset of World War II, Niven was one of the first film stars to join (or, in his case, reenlist in) the military. Recruited twice for dramatic propaganda films, First of the Few and The Way Ahead, he was otherwise inactive in pictures for almost six years. Discharged as a colonel, he returned to Goldwyn and appeared in a number of forgettable films, with the exception being the silly but heartwarming comedy The Bishop’s Wife, which has become a Christmas classic. His growing dissatisfaction with the studio resulted in a contractual release. Now middle-aged, Niven began his freelancing period without much luck; poor choices of scripts damaged his box-office drawing power.

Two films during the late 1950s reestablished his critical reputation and popularity. As the precise and unflappable Philaeas Fogg, the character most closely associated with him, Niven held together the all-star extravaganza Around the World in Eighty Days. His pathetic bogus major in Separate Tables epitomized grace under pressure and proved that Niven could sustain a dramatic role. For the film, he was awarded a Best Actor Oscar.

At the beginning of the 1960s, he appeared in two very different but memorable motion pictures. In Please Don’t Eat the Daisies, he gave a florid, funny performance as a drama critic with family ties. The part of the dry-witted corporal with an expertise in explosives in The Guns of Navarone catered to Niven’s screen personality while allowing him an opportunity to play in a big-budget, macho story of brave saboteurs on an all-but-impossible endeavor. Unfortunately, however, his last years are littered with too many appearances in second-rate fare.

David Niven’s career stands as credit to his persistence and versatility. He made transitions from decade to decade gracefully, bridging the old Hollywood and the new. He meshed well with any co-star; his effortlessly urbane style and distinctive sense of timing were unforgettable in his good films, and served him well in those that were less than memorable.

—Richard Sater, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

NOIRET, Philippe

Nationality: French. Born: Lille, 1 October 1930. Education: Attended Lycée Janson-de-Sailly, Paris; and Coll. Des oratoriens, Juilly; studied theater under Roger Blin, and at the Dramatic Centre of Attended Lycée Janson-de-Sailly, Paris; and Coll. Des oratoriens, Nationality:

NOIRET ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

Philippe Noiret (right) with Troisi Massimo in Il Postino
1971 Time for Loving (Paris Was Made for Lovers) (Miles) (as Marcel); Les Aveux les plus doux (Molinaro) (as Inspector Muller); Murphy's War (Yates) (as Louis Brézan)

1972 La Vieille Fille (Blanc) (as Gabriel Marcassus); La Mandarine (Molinaro) (as Georges); Le Trèfle à cinq feuilles (Five-Leaf Clover) (Freess) (as Alfred); L'Attentat (Plot; The French Conspiracy) (Boisset) (as Garkin); Siamo tutti im libertà provvisoria (Scarpelli) (as Judge Jannacone)

1973 Poil de carotte (Graziani) (as M. Lepic); Le Jeu avec le feu (Graziani) (as M. Lepic); La Grande Bouffe (Tavernier) (as Michel Descombe); White Women (Perozzi) (for TV)

1974 L' Horloger de Saint-Paul (de Broca) (as Philippe d'Orléans); Les Milles (Grall) (as Le General)

1975 Le Jeu avec le feu (Robbe-Grillet) (as Georges de Saxe); “Les Nobles” ep. of Que la fête commence! (Let Joy Reign Supreme) (Tavernier) (as Philippe d'Orléans); Le Vieux Fusil (The Old Gun) (Enrico) (as Thomas Berthelot)

1976 Amici miei (My Friends) (Monicelli) (as Giorgio Perozzi); Monsieur Albert (Renard) (title role); Le Juge et l'assassin (Tavernier) (as Judge Emile Maj. Dellaplanne); Le Secret (The Secret) (Enrico) (as Alfred)

1977 Le Jeu avec le feu (Robbe-Grillet) (as Georges de Saxe); “Les Nobles” ep. of Que la fête commence! (Let Joy Reign Supreme) (Tavernier) (as Philippe d'Orléans); Le Vieux Fusil (The Old Gun) (Enrico) (as Thomas Berthelot)

1978 La Barricade du point du jour (Richon) (as Eugène Pottier); Tendre poulai (Dear Detective; Dear Inspector) (de Broca) (as Antoine Lemercier); Le Témoin (The Witness; Il Testimone) (Mocky) (as Robert Maurisson); Due pezzi di pane (Citti); Il deserto dei tartari (The Desert of the Tartars) (Zanin) (as ‘‘The General’’); Un Taxi maue (The Purple Taxi) (Boisset) (as Philippe Marchal)

1979 Sala del vuoto (A Leap into the Void) (Bellocchio); La Mort en direct (Deathwatch) (Tavernier)

1980 On a volé la cuisse de Jupiter (Jupiter's Thigh) (de Broca) (as Antoine Lemercier); Une Semaine de vacances (A Week's Vacation) (Tavernier) (as Michel Descombe); Pile ou face (Heads or Tails) (Enrico) (as Baroni)

1981 Tre frattelli (Three Brothers) (Rossi) (as Raffaele Giuranna); Il faut tuer Birgitt Haas (Birgitt Haas Must Be Killed) (Heynemann); Coup de torchon (Clean Slate) (Tavernier) (as Lucien Corder)

1982 L'Étoile du nord (The North Star) (Granier-Deferre) (as Edouard Binet); Amici miei, atto due (Monicelli) (as Giorgio Perozzi)

1983 L'Africain (The African) (de Broca) (as Victor); Un Ami de Vincent (A Friend of Vincent) (Granier-Deferre); Le Grand Carnaval (Arcady) (as Étienne Labrouche)

1984 Aurora (Ponzi—for TV); Fort Saganne (Corneau) (as Dubreuilh); Les Ripoux (My New Partner; Le Cop) (Zidi) (as René); Souventirs, souvenirs (Zeitoun)

1985 Le Quatrième Pouvoir (The Fourth Power) (Leroy) (as Yves Dorget); Speriamo che sia femmina (Let's Hope It's a Girl) (Monicelli) (as Count Leonardo); L'Été prochain (Next Summer) (Trintignant) (as Edouard); Qualcosa di biondo (Aurora) (Ponzi)

1986 La Femme secrète (The Secret Wife) (Grall) (as Pierre Franchin); Masques (Chabrol) (as Christian Legagneur); Twist Again a Moscow (Twist Again in Moscow) (Poure) (as Igor Tatatiev); Autour de minuit (Round Midnight) (Tavernier) (as Redon)

1987 Noyade interdite (Widow’s Walk) (Granier-Deferre) (as Molinat); La famiglia (The Family) (Scola) (as Jean-Luc); Gli occhiali d'oro (The Gold Rimmed Glasses; Les Lunettes d'or) (Montaldo) (as Dr. Fadigati)

1988 Chouans! (de Broca) (as Savinien de Kerfardec); Il Frullo del passero (Mingozzi); Cinema Paradiso (Nuovo Cinema Paradiso) (Tornatore) (as Alfredo)

1989 La Vie et rien d’autre (Life and Nothing But) (Tavernier) (as Maj. Dellaplanne); The Return of the Musketeers (Lester) (as Cardinal Mazarin)

1990 Ripoux contre ripoux (My New Partner II; Le Cop 2) (Zidi) (as René); Faux et l’usage de Faux (Forgery and the Use of Forgeries) (Heynemann) (as Anatole Hirsch)

1991 Uranus (Berri) (as Watrin); Dimenticare Palermo (The Palermo Connection) (Rossi) (as the hotel manager); J’embrasse pas (I Don’t Kiss) (Tchéhine) (as Romain); “‘The Blue Dog’” ep. of La Domenica specialmente (Especially on Sunday) (Tornatore) (as Amleto); Rossini, Rossini (as Gioacchino Rossini)

1992 Nous Deux (The Two of Us) (Graziani) (as Toussaint); Max et Jérémie (Max and Jeremy) (Devers) (as Robert “Max” Maxendre); Contre l’oubli (Against Oblivion) (Akerman and others) (as himself); Zuppa Di Pesce (Fish Soup) (Infascelli) (as Alberto)

1993 Tango (Leconte) (as François, the elegant man)

1994 Il Postino (The Postman) (Radford) (as Pablo Neruda); Veillées d’armes (The Troubles We’ve Seen: A History of Journalism in Wartime) (Marcel Ophuls—doc) (as himself); Grosse Fatigue (Dead Tired) (Blanc) (as himself); La Fille de D’Artagnan (D’Artagnan’s Daughter) (Tavernier) (as D’Artagnan); Les Mullès (Grall) (as Le General)

1995 Le Roi de Paris (The King of Paris) (Maillet) (as Victor Derval); Facciamo paradiso (Monicelli) (as Bertelli)

1996 Les Grands ducs (Leconte) (as Victor Vitalat); Fantôme avec chauffeur (Oury) (as Philippe Bruneau-Tessier); Le Veilleur de nuit (TV) (de Broca) (as Monsieur Philippe le bienheureux) (TV) (as himself); Marianna Ucría (Faenza)

1997 Soleil (Hanin) (as Joseph Lévy); Le Bossu (On Guard) (de Broca) (as Philippe d’Orléans); Les Palmes de Monsieur Schutz (Pinoteau) (as Monsieur Schutz)

1999 Mio figlio ha 70 anni (For TV)

2000 Le Pique-nique de Lulu Kreutz (For TV)

Publications

By NOIRET: articles—

Interview with Joseph Hurley and Bertrand Tavernier, in Films in Review (New York), March and April 1983.
Interview with M. Amiel, in Cinéma (Paris), April 1983.
Interview with J. Zimmer and D. Parra, in Revue du Cinéma (Paris),
April 1987.
Interview with M. Buruiana, in Séquences (Montreal), June 1989.
“La guerre n’est pas finie,” interview with K. Jaehne, in Cineaste
(New York), no 1, 1990.
Interview with G. Midding, in Film bulletin (Winterthur, Switzerland),
no. 4, 1991.
“Max et Jérémi,” interview with Thierry Klifa in Studio Magazine
“Philippe Noiret m’a révélé sa profesi,” interview with Pavla Frydlová, in Film a Doba, Winter 1994.
“Le roi de Paris,” interview with M. Venchiarutti and P. Auvertus, in Grand Angle (Mariembourg), February 1995.

On NOIRET: book—

On NOIRET: articles—

Ecran (Paris), March 1978.
Ciné Revue (Paris), 10 February 1983.
Schupp, P., “Philippe Noiret, la stabilité dans la diversité,” in Séquences (Montreal), April 1984.
Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), March 1990.
Dominicus, M., “Liegen met de oeil van eel uilskuiken,” in Skrien
(Amsterdam, Netherlands), December 1990/January 1991.
Le Film Français (Paris), no. 2540, 6 January 1995.

* * *

A tall, heavily built actor who only established himself in his thirties, Philippe Noiret has no youthful role to his credit and has usually depicted middle-aged, and often middle-class, characters. Though initially cast in fairly predictable secondary roles such as the outsarted property developer in Tout l’or du monde, he gradually made his mark both in comic creations and more serious roles. He excelled as the complacent, sanctimonious husband of Justine, the NATO economist of Topaz, and the timid engineer of Murphy’s War. Now a commercial star, Noiret generously appeared for emerging directors, but despite good performances the films were invariably commercial failures.

It was not until the 1970s that he worked regularly with Italian directors, often in co-productions and initially in outrageous satirical roles. His performances for Ferreri in La Grande Bouffe and Touche pas à la femme blanche were landmarks; in the former as a degenerate oedipal judge hosting a decadent party; in the latter as General Terry in a loose parody of Custer’s last stand. Weightier roles came as the cynical reporter in Pico’s Un Nuage entre les dents, as Judge Jannacone in Scarpelli’s Siamo tutti im libertà provvisoria, or as the magistrate in Rosi’s Tre fratelli. For Enrico in Le Vieux Fusil he gave an intensely moving portrayal of a surgeon dedicated to avenging the murder of his family by the Nazis. Further notable interpretations came as the homosexual professor driven to suicide in Montaldo’s Gli occhiali d’oro and, for Tomatore, two sensitive portrayals of atypical relationships: in Cinema Paradiso as Alfredo, the avuncular projectionist at a failing provincial cinema affectionately sharing his love of film with an adolescent enthusiast, and in La Donnencie specialmente, as Amleto, a dog-hating village barber-cum-cobbler who, eventually won over by a persistent, friendly stray, is devastated at the dog’s cruel death. Now in his sixties, Noiret was cast by other Italian directors in a series of roles reflecting his age. For Monicelli he was the older Rossini in Rossini, Rossini! and as the middle-class father coping with his daughter’s rebellious conduct in Facciamo paradiso; for Infascelli, he was Alberto, a mercurial film producer, again having trouble with his daughter in Zappa di pesce; for Graziani, playing opposite his wife Monique Chaumette, he became Toussant, a former subway worker, enjoying retirement in Corsica (Nous Deux). Minor roles during this period saw him as a traditional Sicilian patriarch in Fenzia’s 18th-century costume drama Marianna Ucria and as the hotel director Gianna Mucci in Rossi’s political thriller Dimenticare Palermo. However, his most commanding Italian role of the decade came in Radford’s touching study of friendship in Il Postino, as the exiled Chilean poet Pablo Neruda, acting as sympathetic confidant and wise counsellor to his dedicated postman, inately gifted for poetry, but too shy to declare himself to his childhood sweetheart.

Over his long career Noiret has worked with a host of French directors, notably with de Broca in highly successful comic roles, Granier-Deferre in darker crime dramas or with Zidi as the charming, cynical and corrupt policeman René of Les Ripoux and the sequel Ripoux contre Ripoux. It has been through Tavernier, however, that Noiret’s depth of talent has been revealed. In L’Horloger de Saint-Paul he was outstanding as Michel Descombes, the quiet widower protecting his criminal son, yet finding friendship with the investigator; in Que la fête commence! he brilliantly conveyed the human complexity of the Regent as a public and private person; in Le Juge et l’assassin he was the domineering and chillingly cruel investigating magistrate; and in Coup de torchon he was masterful as a cunning, authoritarian, and lubricious colonial policeman. There were only minor roles in Une Semaine de vacances (again as Michel Descombes) and as Redon in Autour de minuit, but in La Vie et rien d’autre Noiret again triumphed as the dedicated Major Dellalanne intent on identifying the war-dead, despite official opposition. In a pastiche of the swashbuckling genre, La Fille de D’Artagnan, Noiret resumed his association with Tavernier as a now shabby, out-of-favor D’Artagnan, living as a fencing master.

Memorable roles, both major and minor, have come with other directors: as the nasty, petty crook of Monsieur Albert (Renard); as the child murderer of Le Témoin (Mocky); as the principled journalist in Le Quatrième Pouvoir (Leroy); and as the corrupt television presenter of Chabrol’s Masques. In La Vieille Fille (Blanc), Noiret gave one of his finest performances as the shy Gabriel Marcassus tentatively building a relationship with a withdrawn spinster. Among minor, but masterfully executed, roles he has appeared as an actor in L’Une et l’autre; the headmaster of Souvenirs, souvenirs; and, untypically, as a morbid artist in La Femme secrète.

In the last decade Noiret has worked successfully with well established directors such as Berri and Oury and relative newcomers like Devers, Lecomte and Techiné. In Berri’s Occupation drama Uranus he excelled as Watrin, a shy, humanist teacher suffering in the knowledge of his dead wife’s infidelity, while in a less successful comic role for Oury he played a murdered businessman who, now invisible, returns with his argumentative driver to watch over his family and friends (Fantôme avec chauffeur). For Techiné he played a relatively minor but key role as a gay, sharp-witted TV presenter in J’embrasse pas, while for Lecomte he enjoyed two substantial comic roles: as the eccentric, misogynist judge addicted to porn films and prepared to condone murder (Tango) and as a self-confident, but unsuccessful, boulevard artist, Victor Vialat, on tour with a corrupt manager (Les Grands Ducs). He appeared as himself in Blanc’s film about acting Grosse Fatigue and in the directorial debut of his biographer Dominique Maillet, Le Roi de Paris, as the popular actor Victor Derval, the toast of thirties Parisian society, involved with a stage struck young actress. In Faux et usage de faux (Heynemann) he was the larger than life figure Anatole Hirsch, a cigar-chewing writer successfully publishing under a pseudonym in a reworking of Romain Gary’s career. Further notable roles came as Schutz, a research institute director desperate for recognition in Pinoteau’s Les Palmes de M. Schutz; as Max a sophisticated and meticulous former professional killer who befriends his would-be assassin Jérémie in Devers’ Max et Jérémie, and in Graal’s account of German detainees in France during the Armistice he played the General prepared to hand over refugees to the Nazis. He has also appeared in documentaries about war-reporting. Ophul’s Veillées d’armes and Amnesty International’s film about political detainees, Contre l’oubli. In a career exploring more than 130 disparate roles, Philippe Noiret has, in turn, appalled as the vicious, depraved, or despicable; reassured as the solid, dependable authority figure; disturbed and amused with his subversive presence in comedy, satire, or farce or revealed with consummate delicacy complex facets of human nature in studies of individual relationships. His contribution to European cinema has been outstanding, not only in high performance standards but also in his encouragement of talented newcomers.

—R. F. Cousins

NOLTE, Nick

Films as Actor:

1974 Winter Kill (Taylor—for TV); The California Kid (Heffron—for TV); Death Sentence (Swackhamer—for TV)
1975 Return to Macon County (Compton) (as Bo Hollinger); The Runaway Barge (Sagal—for TV)
1977 The Deep (Yates) (as David Sanders)
1978 Who’ll Stop the Rain (Reisz) (as Ray Hicks); North Dallas Forty (Kotchep) (as Philip Elliott)
1980 Heart Beat (Byrum) (as Neal Cassidy)
1982 48 Hrs. (Walter Hill) (as Jack Cates); Cannery Row (Ward) (as Doc)
1983 Under Fire (Spottiswoode) (as Russell Price)
1984 The Ultimate Solution of Grace Quigley (Grace Quigley) (Harvey) (as Seymour Flint); Teachers (Hiller) (as Alex)
1986 Down and Out in Beverly Hills (Mazursky) (as Jerry Baskin)
1987 Extreme Prejudice (Walter Hill) (as Jack Benteen, Texas Ranger); Weeds (Hancock) (as Lee Umstetter)
Three Fugitives (Veber) (as Daniel Lucas); “Life Lessons” ep. of New York Stories (Scorsese) (as Lionel Dobie); Farewell to the King (Milus) (as Learoyd).

Everybody Wins (Reisz) (as Tom O’Toole); Q & A (Lumet) (as Lieut. Mike Brennan); Another 48 Hrs. (Hill) (as Jack Cates).

Prince of Tides (Streisand) (as Tom Wingo); Cape Fear (Scorsese) (as Sam Bowden).

The Player (Altman); Lorenzo’s Oil (George Miller) (as Augusto Odone).

Gettysburg (Maxwell).

I Love Trouble (Shyer) (as Peter Brackett); Blue Chips (Friedkin) (as Pete Bell); I’ll Do Anything (James L. Brooks) (as Matt Hobbs).

Jefferson in Paris (Ivery) (title role).

Mulholland Falls (Tamahori) (as Max Hoover); Mother Night (Gordon) (as Howard W. Campbell Jr.).

U Turn (Stone) (as Jake McKenna); Afterglow (Rudolph) (as Lucky “Fix-it” Mann); Affliction (Schrader) (as Wade Whitehouse).

The Thin Red Line (Malick) (as Lt. Col. Gordon Tall); Nightwatch (Bornerdal) (as Inspector Thomas Cray).

Trixie (Rudolph) (as Senator Avery); Simpatico (Marchus) (as Vinnie); Breakfast of Champions (Rudolph) (as Harry Le Sabre); The Best of Enemies.

The Golden Bowl (Ivery) (as Adam Verver); Trixie.

Publications

By NOLTE: articles—

On NOLTE: books—

On NOLTE: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1993.

* * *

After his first leading role in The Deep, Nick Nolte resurfaced with an amazing performance in Who’ll Stop the Rain, playing a Marine in Vietnam caught up in a dope scam by his disillusioned intellectual friend, Michael Moriarty. Moriarty’s trafficking is a gesture of disgust; he creates a mess he cannot clean up. Nolte, harking back to a pre-counterculture style of self-reliant heroic alienation, takes responsibility regardless of fault. He is sick of being pushed around, and his taking on of crooked federal agents hits a nerve in audiences. Nolte’s Ray Hicks is not above corruption—we see him take petty revenge on a party of swingers—but we are drawn to him as an action hero whose character is lent a deeper dimension by the film’s morally complex view of the 1970s drug culture—a complexity appreciated and conveyed by the actor.

Nolte followed this with North Dallas Forty, as Phillip Elliott, a pro football receiver with the best hands in the game but unable to play the more important game of kissing the asses of corporate owners and managers. A sports melodrama redolent of 1940s boxing pictures (Elliott even sneaks around with the girls with one of the hostile managers), but Nolte’s relaxed, expansive presence makes a melodramatic bind seem like a naturalistic essay. In Who’ll Stop the Rain the actor starts out reading Nietzsche in Vietnam and ends up dead; in North Dallas Forty he starts out sleepless with pain and ends up unemployed, but unencumbered and in love. Nolte’s simmering magnificence can plausibly move either way.

Some of his finest performances, perhaps surprisingly given his macho image, have been as artists. In Roger Spottiswoode’s Under Fire, about photojournalists in Nicaragua during the Sandinista revolution, Nolte plays a photographer who agrees to aid the leftists by faking a photo but, with his thoroughgoing commitment as a performer, he makes clear the character’s moral dilemma in reaching this decision, both in his dealings with his colleagues, and with the guerrillas and mercenaries. In “Life Lessons,” Martin Scorsese’s segment in New York Stories, Nolte is Lionel Dobie, an abstract-expressionist painter trying to keep his assistant from quitting but inadequate to giving her the necessary reassurance. It’s a gem of a performance, with Nolte’s massive frame housing a nervous, lumberingly foolish, obsessive man, who is at once a palpably inspired artist.

For such a big man and big-guy star, Nolte is extraordinarily versatile, convincing as the bearlike bum who liberates Richard Dreyfuss and Bette Midler’s Beverly Hills household in Paul Mazursky’s Down and Out in Beverly Hills, and as the stolid small-town sheriff in Walter Hill’s Extreme Prejudice. He can play sensitive without playing educated, as in Weeds, without allowing his sensitivity to block the route to effective action. He can also play men who are... outmaneuvered, as he is by Debra Winger in Everybody Wins, without losing his force. And in a big-budget romance such as Prince of Tides, he eloquently combines the characteristics of an overgrown adolescent, baiting his wife, with the sleek, solid romantic wooing Barbra Streisand’s swank Manhattan psychoanalyst, but able later to collapse weeping in her arms.

At times, however, he has played weak men in films whose scripts have disappointed his opportunity to excel. Cape Fear, for example, strings him up to satisfy Scorsese’s meretricious insistence on turning a revenge thriller into a redemption story, and Nolte seems beset less by De Niro’s psycho than by a script that presents him with compromises and failures. Likewise, James L. Brooks’s I’ll Do Anything diminishes Nolte in his role as an out-of-work actor hoping to star in a remake of Mr. Deeds Goes to Town, while the revisionist script for Jefferson in Paris, while forcing Nolte’s Jefferson to confront the contradiction of being both slave owner and freedom fighter leaves him foundering without a rejoinder.

But Nolte, more than any other current star, leaves his bad roles behind him, and the fact that he does not seem overexposed is a tribute to the fundamental honesty of his acting.

Weathered into an aging leonine presence of undiminished animal magnetism, whose appetite for wide-ranging work sees him into the good, the bad and the indifferent, Nolte always gives of his best, contributing noteworthy portrayals to too-little-seen films. There is his libidinous, charming handyman, avoiding unforgiving wife Julie Christie’s emotional devastation in Alan Rudolph’s Afterglow; and his performances in Keith Gordon’s Mother Night and Rudolph’s Breakfast of Champions, both ambitious stabs at adapting Kurt Vonnegut. In the former, Nolte excels as the somber, incarcerated Nazi propagandist/Allied spy withdrawn into reflections on personal responsibility; in the latter, he is hilarious as a closeted cross-dressing car salesman.

Affliction, Paul Schrader’s bleak and painful exploration of men’s violence, is made bearable because of the star’s courageous and selfless performance as a hard-drinking, pot-smoking, small-town sheriff, whose investigation of a suspicious death becomes bound up with the feelings of inadequacy instilled in him by a terrifying father. This weak, wretched man is so disturbingly well-observed that he feels the scars he bears. One might have to seek Nick Nolte out a little, but once found, there are no barriers—he is as generous as nature made him.

—Alan Dale, updated by Robyn Karney

NORTON, Edward

Films as Actor:

1996 Everyone Says I Love You (Allen) (as Holden Spence); The People vs. Larry Flynt (Forman) (as Alan Isaacman); Primal Fear (Hoblit) (as Aaron Stampler)
1998 Out of the Past (doc) (Dupre) (as narrator); American History X (Kaye) (as Derek Vinyard); Rounders (Dahl) (as Lester ‘‘Worm’’ Murphy)
1999 Fight Club (Fincher) (as Narrator/Jack); Forever Hollywood (doc) (Glassman and McCarthy) (as Himself); A Salute to Dustin Hoffman (doc) (Gowers—for TV) (guest)
2000 Keeping the Faith (as Brian Finn, + d, pr)

Publications

By NORTON: articles—

Fuller, Graham, ‘‘Fighting Talk,’’ interview in Interview (New York), November 1999.

On NORTON: articles—

Edward Norton is that extreme rarity among modern actors: someone who actually seems more interested in becoming an actor than becoming a star—though he seems destined for both. Having received two Academy Award nominations in his first six film roles, Norton has reason to believe that stardom can actually detract from an actor’s ability to act, since the more the audience knows about an actor, the harder it is for them to suspend their disbelief.

An excellent example of this is Norton’s first role, in Primal Fear (1996), where nothing stood in the way of the audience’s believing in his Aaron Stampler, the mentally unbalanced Appalachian choirboy accused of killing an archbishop who is defended by a smarmy Richard Gere. Reviewers and friends always pride themselves on not giving away a film’s surprise ending but, by doing so, they are giving away the fact that there is a surprise ending; it’s surprising to be surprised, but it’s even more surprising if you’re not expecting a surprise. Norton is right in saying that the makers of Primal Fear were lucky that this was his first film; if it were his second or third role and people were aware of what a good actor he is, they might be expecting some surprising twist at the end. But because they weren’t expecting anything, the ending—and Norton’s performance—blew them away. “The potency of the revelation about who my character really was in that film was in part reliant on the fact that people had absolutely no prior knowledge of me,” he has said. Leonardo DiCaprio was originally cast as Stampler, but he pulled out fearing the intensity of the material. Over 2,000 actors tried out for the part, and while some were fine at playing one side of the character, no one could play both sides. Director Gregory Hoblit felt the role to be so crucial he was ready to abandon the film if a suitable replacement could not be found. Finally Norton submitted a screen test that was so impressive, it circulated around town and secured him his next two roles—in Woody Allen’s Everyone Says I Love You and Milos Forman’s The People vs. Larry Flynt (both 1996)—even before Primal Fear was released. The role of Stampler earned him a Best Supporting Actor Academy Award nomination.

In Everyone Says I Love You and The People vs. Larry Flynt, Norton moved effortlessly from a backwoods psycho to a singing and dancing boy-next-door, and then on to an idealistic attorney in a performance to which The New York Times said Norton brought “a Jimmy Stewart-like sincerity.” In Rounders (1998), Norton reversed directions again, playing Worm, a fast-talking card shark addicted to the dangerous world of high-stakes poker. While working on his character—whom he saw to be like Bugs Bunny: a merry prankster with a chaotic impulse—he went with a friend to a Rolling Stones concert, and seeing Keith Richards on stage gave Norton that aspect of the role he had been missing: the strutting cowboy.

No role he has undertaken has caused as much controversy as the part of Derek Vinyard in American History X, in which Norton goes from a hate-mongering skinhead with a swastika tattoo to someone who has renounced his past and hopes to save his little brother (Edward Furlong). Norton realized that to be intimidating as a skinhead, he needed to be more of a physical presence, so (a la Robert De Niro) he worked out for three months, toning and sculpting his thin body and gaining 30 pounds of muscle. Meanwhile, he was reading hate literature and visiting on the Internet and in person with current and former skinheads. Most of the film’s controversy centered on the fear that, by portraying a skinhead and making him seem more human, Norton would be glamorizing that lifestyle. The fears were misplaced. While his transformation, as written, may be a little too pat, there is no question that Norton’s performance is frighteningly good and that the filmmakers’ hearts were in the right place. For his work, Norton received a Best Actor Oscar nomination.

_Fight Club_ also had its share of controversy, creating a generalized fear that this macho comedy was advocating anarchy. Norton plays the narrator, who is suffocating in a white-collar job until he meets his alter ego, Tyler Durden (Brad Pitt), and the two form a fight club where men pummel one another just so they can feel something. No longer needing his muscle mass, Norton lost half the weight he had gained for _American History X_. The movie received widely varying reviews; _The New York Times_ reviewer wrote: “The teamwork of Mr. Norton and Mr. Pitt is as provocative and complex as it’s meant to be. Mr. Norton, an ingenious actor, is once again trickier than he looks.”

If Norton keeps playing roles extraordinarily well, he may find it harder and harder to avoid stardom, though few actors have been so eloquent in discussing its dangers. He has no interest in being fodder for the rumor mill because, on a personal level, it “can be corrosive to one another as possible. Every little thing that people know about you as a person impedes your ability to achieve that kind of terrific suspension of disbelief that happens when an audience goes with an actor and character that they’re playing.” His goal is to create characters—like Travis Bickle in _Taxi Driver_ or Ratso Rizzo in _Midnight Cowboy_—who seem to live on in the collective unconscious entirely independent of the actors who played them. If any actor today has a shot at creating such characters, it is probably Edward Norton.

—Bob Sullivan

NOVAK, Kim

Nationality: American. Born: Marilyn Pauline Novak in Chicago, Illinois, 13 February 1933. Education: Attended Farragut High School, Chicago; Wright Junior College, Chicago; Los Angeles City College. Family: Married 1) the actor Richard Johnson, 1965 (divorced 1966); 2) Dr. Robert Malloy, 1977. Career: Model in Chicago, then with the Caroline Leonetti Modeling Agency in Hollywood; 1954—film debut in _The French Line_; Columbia contract led to publicity build-up as a sex symbol; 1961—formation of production company Kimco; 1970—acted and sang her own composition in the TV documentary _This Land Is Mine_; 1986–87—in TV series _Falcon Crest_. Address: c/o William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1954 _The French Line_ (Lloyd Bacon) (as Paris model); _Pushover_ (Quine) (as Lona McLane); _Piffiti!_ (Robson) (as Janis)

1955 _Picnic_ (Logan) (as Madge Owens); _Five against the House_ (Karlson) (as Kay Greylek); _Son of Sinbad (Nights in a Harem)_ (Tetzlaff) (as daughter of the 40 thieves); _The Man with the Golden Arm_ (Preminger) (as Molly)

1956 _The Eddy Duchin Story_ (Sidney) (as Marjorie Oelrichs)

1957 _Jeanne Eagels_ (Sidney) (title role); _Pal Joey_ (Sidney) (as Linda English)

1958 _Vertigo_ (Hitchcock) (as Madeleine Elster/Judy Barton); _Bell, Book and Candle_ (Quine) (as Gillian Holroyd)

1959 _Middle of the Night_ (Delbert Mann) (as Betty Preiss)

1960 _Strangers When We Meet_ (Quine) (as Maggie Gault); _Pepe_ (Sidney) (as herself)

1962 _Boys’ Night Out_ (Michael Gordon) (as Cathy); _The Notorious Landlady_ (Quine) (as Carlye Hardwicke)

1964 _Of Human Bondage_ (Hathaway, Forbes, and Hughes) (as Mildred Rogers); _Kiss Me, Stupid_ (Wildler) (as Polly the Pistol)

1965 _The Amorous Adventures of Moll Flanders_ (Terence Young) (title role)

1968 _The Legend of Lylah Clare_ (Aldrich) (as Elsa Brinkmann/ title role)

1969 _The Great Bank Robbery_ (Averback) (as Lyda Kabanov)

1973 “Luau” ep. of _Tales that Witness Madness_ (Francis) (as Auril Pagaent); _The Third Girl from the Left_ (Medak—for TV)

1974 _The Celebrity Art Portfolio_ (D’Anjolell—short)

1975 _Satan’s Triangle_ (Roley—for TV) (as Eva)

1977 _The White Buffalo_ (Hunt to Kill) (J. Lee Thompson) (as Poker Jenny Schermerhorn)

1979 _Just a Gigolo_ (Hemmings) (as Helga)
1980 The Mirror Crack’d (Hamilton) (as Lola Brewster)
1983 Malibu (Swackhamer—for TV)
1987 Es Hat Mich Sehr Gefreut (as “Musikerinnen”)
1990 The Children (Tony Palmer) (as Rose SELLARS)
1991 Liebestraum (Figgis) (as Mrs. Anderssen)

Publications

By NOVAK: articles—

Interview in Vanity Fair (New York), October 1995.

“Couldn’t You Like Me the Way I Am?,” interview with Gerhard Midding, in Film Bulletin (Winterthur), February 1997.

On NOVAK: books—

On NOVAK: articles—

* * *

Kim Novak has often been disparaged as the last star manufactured by the studio system. In 1953, when Harry Cohn realized that Columbia’s reigning sex goddess, Rita Hayworth, was becoming too rebellious, he supposedly decided to “create” a replacement. He selected Novak and, having her groomed and promoted through a huge publicity campaign, cast her in several films meant to display her sex appeal. Cohn’s investment actually offered Novak an opportunity: she achieved stardom by developing an individualistic screen persona, and through her own accomplishments as an actress.

Whatever Cohn’s intentions may have been, Novak did not conform to the sex goddess concept. This is apparent in her first starring role, in Richard Quine’s Pushover. Cast as a femme fatale, she undermines the implications of the character’s destructive sexual appeal by projecting an extreme vulnerability. In Mark Robson’s Phfft! her unease at playing a Marilyn Monroe-like dumb blond is very apparent. In Picnic and The Man with the Golden Arm she sensitively portrays characters who resist being treated merely as sex objects, and Jeanne Eagels remains interesting, despite George Sidney’s crude direction and a clichéd script, because of Novak’s ability to project the subjective identity of the character.

Although her performance as Madeleine in Hitchcock’s Vertigo was considered perfunctory, it is, in hindsight, a remarkable contribution to what is, arguably, the director’s finest achievement. Novak’s reflective and essentially introverted personality, and undeniable screen presence, are ideally suited to the many nonverbal scenes involving the Madeleine character. Given the film’s conception, Madeleine must convey both aloofness and intimacy to be effective, and Novak manages to sustain the resulting tension. The vulnerability implied by Madeleine’s intimacy is given full expression in the Judy character, lending substance to a characterization crucial for the film’s emotionally devastating climax. Her performance in Vertigo deserves as much acclaim as Jimmy Stewart’s.

Richard Quine’s Bell, Book and Candle and Strangers When We Meet also gave Novak splendid opportunities. To some extent, her work in the former, where she gives a muted performance in counterpart to the film’s comic aspects, is a variation on her Vertigo role. Again there is a contrast between her appearance and identity, and the question of her ability to deceive the hero into falling in love with an image. In Strangers When We Meet Quine uses Novak’s sensitivity to give dimension to a character seeking fulfillment of emotional needs.

Novak’s comic timing is outstanding in Wilder’s Kiss Me, Stupid. To a typical 1950s Marilyn Monroe role Novak adds a self-awareness that makes the character more touching and stronger than Monroe could have managed. This trait is again evident in Novak’s portrayal of an aging chorus girl in the made-for-television movie The Third Girl from the Left.

Novak’s career faltered in the 1960s and by the end of the decade she had decided to be professionally less active. Nevertheless, Novak has not ceased to be serious about her identity as an actor. Several of the projects she has undertaken, including Tales that Witness Madness, Satan’s Triangle, and The White Buffalo, turned out to be inferior works which, aside from giving her exposure, were unworthy of her effort. That Novak undertook these projects suggests that she was having difficulty finding quality material; but, it also may have been that she was uncertain as to what image she wanted to project. In both Tales that Witness Madness and The White Buffalo, Novak’s participation is dependent on her status as a star but the films allow her to play character parts.

Novak’s early 1980s films, The Mirror Crack’d and Just a Gigolo, also reflect this indecision as to what direction her career was taking.
In the former, she is part of an ensemble cast; Elizabeth Taylor and Rock Hudson have bigger parts but Novak and Tony Curtis give better performances. Novak is cast as a vulgar and bitchy 1950s Hollywood star who sees herself as Taylor’s rival. She plays the role to the hilt and is extremely convincing as a totally unlikable person. While her characterization functions to enliven an otherwise bland film and Novak demonstrates an ability to play broad comedy, the role offers her no scope. Just a Gigolo is another film with an intriguing star cast. Novak, in a supporting role, again plays an unsympathetic woman—a predatory widow who seduces David Bowie. As in The Mirror Crack’d, Novak here is sending up the sex goddess image that she had been identified with in the earlier stages of her career. (Just a Gigolo was drastically cut after its initial screening in an attempt to make the film more commercial.)

More recently, The Children and Liebestraum provided Novak with strong parts and the two films contain some of her finest work; in fact, her tour-de-force performance in the remarkable Liebestraum should have garnered her an Academy Award nomination. Unfortunately, neither film has received much exposure: Liebestraum because of its highly demanding nature. On the other hand, The Children, which never received a North American release, was heavily cut and reedited in its video version as the distributor had no faith in the film. In The Children, Novak portrays a cultured, reserved widow who has been courted by a man promising love and a commitment; instead, his attention is diverted and she is abandoned. Although The Children is centered on the Ben Kingsley character, Novak’s role, which utilizes her skill in projecting vulnerability, is equally relevant to the film’s theme of disillusionment and loss. In Liebestraum, Novak plays a bedridden woman dying of cancer who, when reunited with her now adult son, confronts the past in which she killed her husband. In contrast to the demands of The Children, Liebestraum gives her a much more demonstrative character who is physically and emotionally in anguish. Novak, in a series of short, intense scenes, constructs a forceful and compelling characterization. The performance is extremely disciplined; without sentimentalizing the character and her situation, Novak conveys the underlying sadness of this woman’s identity.

Kim Novak has not made a film since Liebestraum. As her work has long shown, she is an intelligent, creative actor who has an extraordinary screen presence. Ideally, Novak will be back on-screen.

—Richard Lippe

NOVARRO, Ramon

Born: Durango, Mexico, 6 February 1899. Career: Emigrated to the United States, and worked as a singing waiter and dancer with the Marion Morgan Dancers on Orpheum Circuit; 1916—extra in film Joan the Woman and many others; 1922—helped by Rex Ingram, and given part in The Prisoner of Zenda; 1930—directed Spanish and French versions of his film Call of the Flesh, and the original film Contra la corriente. 1936; 1935—on stage in the operetta A Royal Exchange in London; continued to act in small parts after World War II. Died: Killed by intruders, 31 October 1968.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>The Hostage; The Little American; Joan the Woman; The Jaguar’s Claws</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>The Goat (Crisp)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Small Town Idol (Kenton); The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Ingram)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Mr. Barnes of New York (Schertzinger) (as Antonio); Trifling Women (Ingram) (as Henri/Ivan de Maupin); The Prisoner of Zenda (Ingram) (as Rupert of Hentzau)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Where the Pavement Ends (Ingram) (as Motauri); Scaramouche (Ingram) (as André-Louis Moreau)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>The Arab (Ingram) (as Jamil Abdullah Azam); Thy Name Is Woman (Niblo) (as Juan Ricardo); The Red Lily (Niblo) (as Jean Leonnee)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>The Midshipman (Cabanne) (as James Randall); A Lover’s Oath (Earle) (as Ben Ali)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Ben-Hur (Niblo) (title role)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Lovers? (Stahl) (as José/Ernesto); The Road to Romance (Robertson) (as José Armando); The Student Prince in Old Heidelberg (Labitsch) (as Prince Karl Heinrich)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Across to Singapore (Nigh) (as Joel Shore); A Certain Young Man (Henley) (as Lord Gerald Brinsley); Forbidden Hours (Beaumont) (as Michael IV)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>The Flying Fleet (Hill) (as Tommy); The Pagan (Van Dyke) (as Henry Shoesmith Jr.)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Devil-May-Care (Franklin) (as Armand); In Gay Madrid (Leonard) (as Ricardo); Call of the Flesh (Brabin) (as Juan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Daybreak (Feyder); Son of India (Feyder); Mata Hari (Fitzmaurice)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Huddle (Wood); Son-Daughter (Brown)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>The Barbarian (Wood)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>The Cat and the Fiddle (Howard); Laughing Boy (Van Dyke); The Night Is Young (Murphy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>The Sheik Steps Out (Pichel)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>A Desperate Adventure (Auer)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>La Comédie du bonheur (L’Herbier)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>La Virgen que forjó una Patria (Bracha)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>We Were Strangers (Huston); The Big Steal (Siegel)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Outriders (Rowland); Criss (Brooks)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Heller in Pink Tights (Cukor)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>La sevillana and Le Chanteur de Seville (Spanish and French versions of Call of the Flesh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Contra la corriente (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By NOVARRO: articles—

“‘Alice Terry,'” in Photoplay (New York), July 1924.
“‘My Eleven Years of Stardom,'” in Pictures and Picturegoer, 1 July 1933.
Ramon Novarro came to fame as a rival to Rudolph Valentino: he was the biggest name in a group of Latin Lovers that also included Antonio Moreno and Ricardo Cortez. He was less pretentious than Valentino and there was a natural style to his acting which to some extent removed Novarro from the “just a pretty face” class of performer. Despite the ease and charm of his performances, however, one is very much aware that he was a decidedly feminine actor, almost too beautiful to be taken seriously. He was a former male model, and his homosexuality was a fairly open secret in Hollywood. Presumably, his sexual preference did have some influence on his acting style, did persuade him to use a little too much facial makeup, and

Ramon Novarro (right) with Francis Xavier Bushman in Ben-Hur

On NOVARRO: books—

On NOVARRO: articles—

Terry, Alice, “Ramon Novarro,” in Photoplay (New York), July 1924.

* * *

Ramon Novarro came to fame as a rival to Rudolph Valentino: he was the biggest name in a group of Latin Lovers that also included Antonio Moreno and Ricardo Cortez. He was less pretentious than Valentino and there was a natural style to his acting which to some extent removed Novarro from the “just a pretty face” class of performer. Despite the ease and charm of his performances, however, one is very much aware that he was a decidedly feminine actor, almost too beautiful to be taken seriously. He was a former male model, and his homosexuality was a fairly open secret in Hollywood. Presumably, his sexual preference did have some influence on his acting style, did persuade him to use a little too much facial makeup, and (most unfortunate of all) did encourage him to indulge in a considerable amount of seminude posing on-screen at a time when he was developing what looked suspiciously like a paunch.

Rex Ingram, who discovered and directed Rudolph Valentino in The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, also discovered Novarro and worked hard to make him a screen idol the equal of Valentino. From the villainous Rupert of Hentzau in The Prisoner of Zenda, Ingram transformed Novarro into the tragic lover of Trifling Women, and co-starred him in a series of romantic pictures with his wife, Alice Terry. With the title role in Ben-Hur, Novarro reached the pinnacle of his career, although he gave a better performance the following year in Ernst Lubitsch’s The Student Prince in Old Heidelberg. Age began to take its toll, and despite Novarro’s trying desperately to look youthful in his early talkies, it was pathetic to see the aging matinee idol playing a parody of himself in such films as The Sheik Steps Out.

—Anthony Slide

NOVELLO, Ivor

Films as Actor:

1920 L’Appel du sang (The Call of the Blood) (Mercanton) (as Maurice Delarey); Miarka, fille l’ours (Miarka, Daughter of the Bear) (Mercanton) (as Ivor)
1921 Carnival (Knoles) (as Count Andrea Scipione)
1922 The Bohemian Girl (Knoles) (as Thaddeus)
1923 The White Rose (Griffith) (as Joseph Beaugarde); Bonnie Prince Charlie (Calvert) (title role)
1925 The Rat (Cutts) (as Pierre Boucheron)
1926 The Triumph of the Rat (Cutts) (as Pierre Boucheron); The Lodger (The Case of Jonathan Drew) (Hitchcock) (as Jonathan Drew)
1927 Downhill (When Boys Leave Home) (Hitchcock) (as Roddy Berwick); The Vortex (Brunel) (as Nicky Lancaster)
1928 The Constant Nymph (Brunel) (as Lewis Dodd); A South Sea Bubble (Hunter) (as Vernon Wilson); The Gallant Hussar (von Bolvary) (as L.t. Alrik); The Return of the Rat (Cutts) (as Pierre Boucheron)
1930 Symphony in Two Flats (Gundry) (as David Kennard)
1931 Once a Lady (McLintic) (as Bennett Cloud)
1932 The Lodger (The Phantom Fiend) (Elvey) (as Angeloff, + co-sc)

1933 Sleeping Car (Litvak) (as Gaston)
1934 Autumn Crocus (Dean) (as Andreas Steiner)

Film as Producer:

1923 The Man without Desire (The Man without a Soul) (Brunel) (+ ro as Vittorio Dandolo)

Film as Scriptwriter:

1933 I Lived with You (Elvey) (+ ro as Prince Felix Lenieff)

Publications

By NOVELLO: books (plays)—

Fresh Fields, New York, 1936.
The Dancing Years, London, 1953.
Perchance to Dream, London, 1953.

On NOVELLO: books—

On NOVELLO: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), July 1992.

* * *

Comparisons between Ivor Novello and Noël Coward are inevitable. Both were virtual one-man shows, equally adept at writing, composing, acting, and directing. Indeed, the story is told of Coward’s asking for complimentary tickets at a suburban theater box. office, explaining that he had written, composed, and directed the production currently playing there, and the woman in the box office responding with “A regular little Ivor Novello, aren’t we.” Of the two, Coward was unquestionably the better composer and writer; his dialogue could be brittle and witty while Novello’s was basically sentimental. Novello was the more handsome, but he was a little too beautiful and fey, almost too handsome to be taken seriously as an actor. The major difference is in the two men’s film careers. While Coward made an easy transition to films as actor, writer, and director, Novello was only a leading man on screen, immensely popular in Britain, but only moderately so in the United States.

Novello’s attitude towards all aspects of show business was very straightforward and unadventurous. In 1949 he commented, “I’m no highbrow. The theater is a place of entertainment, and I’m an entertainer. I don’t believe in using the theater for moralizing lectures on social behavior.” After appearances in a few minor British and French features, Novello made his first major screen appearance under the direction of D. W. Griffith in The White Rose. He was well cast as the weak clergyman who impregnates and then betrays the heroine, Mae Marsh. Perhaps without intending, Novello plays the role with a total lack of spirit, and thus makes the part believable. Aside from his performance in The White Rose, Novello is best remembered as a screen actor for his title role in Alfred Hitchcock’s The Lodger. He gives an extraordinarily languid performance but is not helped by what appears to be an overuse of heavy white makeup.

In Britain, Novello became a popular matinee idol with a series of films built around a French apache, the Rat, who steals from the rich. His love is a homely working-class girl who protects him from harm and is even willing to die for him when he is accused of murder. Novello provided the script for the first film, The Rat, which is notable for Graham Cutts’s direction and Hal Young’s fluid camerawork. In later “Rat” films Novello was paired with Mabel Poulton and Ruth Chatterton, but none of his leading ladies looked as beautiful as the hero.

Novello tried once again for Hollywood stardom in 1931 with Once a Lady, but his part opposite Ruth Chatterton was small and made no impact. He starred in a half-dozen more British features, but decided he was better off in the theater where his fans were unable to come too close to their effete idol.

—Anthony Slide

NOWICKI, Jan

Films as Actor:

1965 Popiol (Ashes) (Wajda)
1966 Bariera (Barrier) (Skolimowski) (as He)
1967 Password: Korn (Podgórski)
1968 Pan Wołodyjowski (Colonel Wołodyjowski) (Hoffman) (as Ketting)
1969 Dziura w ziemi (A Hole in the Ground) (Kondrat),
1970 Doktor Eva (Żulawiński—for TV)
1971 Życie rodzinné (Family Life) (Zulawski); The Third Part of the Night (Zulawski)
1972 Anatomia of Love (Zaluzski); Skorpion, panna, i lucznik (Scorpion, Virgin, and Sagittarius) (Kondrat), Sanatorium pod klespydram (The Hour-Glass Sanatorium) (Has); A Wasted Night (Majewski—for TV)
1973 Story in Scarlet (Kluba)
1974 Hour after Hour (Zaluzski)
1976 Kilenc hónap (Nine Months) (Mészáros); Red Thorns (Dziedzina)
1977 Ok ketten (The Two of Them; Two Women) (Mészáros)
1978 Olyan, mint otthon (Just Like At Home) (Mészáros) (as Andras Novak); Spirála (The Spiral) (Zulawski); Moloch (Szulkin)
1979 Utköszben (On the Move) (Mészáros) (+ co-sc)
1980 Orósseg (The Heiresses) (Mészáros); W. Bialy dzie dzie (In Broad Daylight) (Zebrowski); Golem (Szulkin)
1981 Anya és leánya (Mother and Daughter) (Mészáros); Spokojne lata (Kotkowski)
1982 Napló gyermekémenek (Diary for My Children) (Mészáros) (as Janos/Juli’s father); Kettevált Mennyezet (Pal Gabor)
1983 Wielki Sz (The Great Sz) (Chęciński); Délíbábok országa (The Land of Mirages) (Mészáros)
1984 Spassenieto (Paunchev)
1985 O-bi, O-bi—Koniec cywilizacji (O-bi, The End of Civilization; Ga, Ga—chwala bohaterom) (Szulkin); Hulyeseg nem Akadaly (Xantus) (as Dr. Korosi)
1986 Bilia Wizytowka (Bajon); Zygfryd (Siegfried) (Domalik) (as Waldo, circus owner)
1987 Magnat (The Magnate) (Bajon) (as Księża Hans von Teus); Napló szerelmékeinek (Diary for My Loves) (Mészáros) (as Janos)
1988 Schodami w Gore, Schodami w Dol (Upstairs, Downstairs) (Domalik); Piroska és a farkas (Bye-Bye Red Riding Hood) (Mészáros) (as ornithologist)
1990 Notat ter om Korlighedon (Leth); Lawa
1991 Napló apamanak, anyammnak (Diary for My Father and Mother) (Mészáros) (as Janos); Pottyautasok (as prison boss)
1992 Konvertelen Idol (Sara)
1993 The Great Post Office Robbery (as Bogdan, the cop); A Magzat (Fetus) (Mészáros); Magneto (Kolski) (as Zanik)
1995 Siódmny pokój (The Seventh Room) (Mészáros) (as Heller); Młode Wilki (Zamojda)
1996 Dzieci I ryby (Bromski); Deszczowy zolnierz (Saniewski) (as Miłosz Szymanski)
1997 Sztos (Olaf Linde Lubaszenko); Młode Wilki II (Zamojda)
1998 Historia kina w Popielawach (History of Cinema in Popielawach) (Jan Jakub Kolski)

Publications

On NOWICKI: articles—

Ecran (Paris), September 1979.
Film a Doba (Prague), January 1982.

912
Jan Nowicki first won wide critical acclaim for his portrayal of a member of the “lost generation” in Jerzy Skolimowski’s Bariera. He was labeled the “Polish James Dean” and considered heir to the legacy of Zbigniew Cybulski. In subsequent roles, however, Nowicki demonstrated a range of characterizations that denied this early attempt at classification and cut against the grain of the young Polish film heroes of the time. In Dziura w ziemi he played a well-adjusted, energetic young man who charms people with his love of life. In Życie rodzinne he portrayed a cynical and introspective man plagued by a series of profound doubts. In Spirála his portrait of a man hopelessly awaiting an unheroic and undignified death was accomplished with an economy of gesture and an immobile face in which only the eyes showed animation. After this part, which was difficult for the audience, demanding almost the limit of what a spectator can bear, a number of others followed. It seems there is no character that Nowicki could not play. In Wielki Szu he acts with restraint the part of a confidence trickster whose dubious fame is nearing its bitter end. In three of Piotr Szulkin’s films he adjusted to a future fantasy world. Finally, the figure of a powerful count of a Polish-German house in Filip Bajon’s Magnat represents the culmination of his acting career. Here Nowicki portrays a man who over the course of dozens of years bears witness both to the gradual disappearance of old values and to growing fascism in Europe and in his own family.

A special chapter in Nowicki’s career has been his involvement in several Hungarian films directed by Marta Mészáros, his wife. In Útkösbén he portrays an actor whose obsession is his profession. The role is frequently seen as a personal statement because of the similarity between Nowicki and the character and the fact that Nowicki collaborated on the screenplay.

Nowicki’s list of film credits is rich and without interruption. He creates his characters either with mimicry or a deadpan face, and according to the character he applies irony, cynicism, metaphor, or a grotesque exaggeration. In spite of all this, in all of the characters he portrays he remains himself. Nowicki has also gained official recognition and popularity for his work in television and, more notably, in the theater.

—Blažena Urgošíková
OATES, Warren

Films as Actor:

1958 Up Periscope! (Douglas)
1959 Yellowstone Kelly (Douglas) (as Cavalry corporal); The Rise and Fall of Legs Diamond (Boetticher) (as Eddie Diamond); Private Property (Stevens) (as Boots)
1961 Hero’s Island (The Land We Love) (Stevens) (as Wayne); Ride the High Country (Guns in the Afternoon) (Peckinpah) (as Henry Hammond)
1963 Mail Order Bride (Kennedy) (as Jake)
1964 The Rounders (Kennedy); Major Dundee (Peckinpah) (as O. W. Hadley)
1966 Return of the Seven (Kennedy) (as Colbee); The Shooting (Hellman) (as Willet Gashade); Welcome to Hard Times (Killer on a Horse) (Kennedy) (as Jenks)
1967 In the Heat of the Night (Jewison) (as Sam Wood)
1968 The Split (Flemying) (as Marty Gough); Something for a Lonely Man (Taylor—for TV) (as Angus Duren)
1969 The Wild Bunch (Peckinpah) (as Lyle Gorch); Smith! (O’Herlihy) (as Walter Charlie); Crooks and Coronets (Sophie’s Place) (O’Connolly) (as Marty the Miller)
1970 Barquero (Douglas) (as Jake Remy); There Was a Crooked Man (Mankiewicz) (as Floyd Moon); The Movie Murderer (Fargus—for TV) (as Alfred Fisher)
1971 Two-Lane Blacktop (Hellman) (as “G.T.O.”); The Hired Hand (Fonda) (as Harris); Chandler (Magwood) (title role); The Reluctant Heroes (Day—for TV) (as Corporal Leroy Sprague)
1973 The Thief Who Came to Dinner (Yorkin) (as Dave Reilly); Tom Sawyer (Taylor) (as Muff Potter); Kid Blue (Frawley) (as Reese Ford); Dillinger (Milius) (title role); Badlands (Malick) (as Holly’s father)
1974 The White Dawn (Kauffman) (as Billy); Bring Me the Head of Alfredo Garcia (Peckinpah) (as Bennie); Cockfighter (Hellman) (as Frank Mansfield)
1975 Race with the Devil (Starrett) (as Frank); Ninety-Two in the Shade (McGuane) (as Nichol Dance)

1976 Dixie Dynamite (Frost) (as Mack); Drum (Carver) (as Hammond Maxwell)
1977 Sleeping Dogs (Donaldson) (as Willoughby); Prime Time (American Raspberry) (Swirnoff) (as Celebrity Sportsman); The African Queen (Sarafian—for TV) (as Charlie Allnot)
1978 Amore, piombo, e farore (China 9, Liberty 37) (Hellman) (as Matthew Hellman); The Brink’s Job (Friedkin) (as “Specs” O’Keefe); True Grit (Hepburn—for TV) (as Rooster Cogburn)
1979 1941 (Spielberg) (as Maddox); And Baby Makes Six (Hussein—for TV); My Old Man (Erman—for TV)
1981 Stripes (Reitman) (as Sergeant Hulka)
1982 The Border (Richardson) (as Red)
1983 Blue Thunder (Badham) (as Braddock); Tough Enough (Fleischer) (as James)

Publications

By OATES: articles—

Interview with A. Garel, in Image et Son (Paris), April 1974.
Interview with David Thomson, and others in Film Comment (New York), January-February 1981.

On OATES: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), July 1992.

On OATES: film—

* * *

The character actor Warren Oates has been described by the critic David Thomson as “... on first sight grubby, balding, and unshaven.
You can smell whisky and sweat on him, along with that mixture of bad beds and fallen women. He’s toothy, he’s small . . . and he has a face like prison bread, with eyes that have known too much solitary confinement. But the eyes bulge and shrink in a sweet game of fear and courage. And for some of us Oates is the only human being in pictures.” The essential believability of Oates’s characters is one of the most notable aspects of his film career. Rather than a simple projection of a man-on-the-street identity, however, his believability rests on a more sophisticated use of nuance and unpredictability, which, in combination with his unpolished physical appearance, gives his screen roles a substance that succeeds in suspending the audience’s disbelief.

Whatever his role, Oates always manages to convey a certain degree of familiarity on the screen, as opposed to portraying an impossibly perfect hero. A case in point is his performance in the title role of Dillinger. At a time when roaring twenties desperadoes were being glamorized on film (for example, Warren Beatty’s Clyde Barrow in Bonnie and Clyde), Oates’s conception of “Public Enemy Number One” is neither glamorous nor romanticized. Instead, his swagger is offset by his insecurity, making his eruptions of violence seem the inevitable result of human frustration and frailty.

In an interview, Oates once expressed his feelings of insecurity about playing major figures, particularly in Westerns. In his opinion, John Wayne had become the model for that sort of mythic figure, and he himself possessed none of the requisite visual attributes. This “inadequacy” may be responsible for Oates’s career as a supporting player, but all of Oates’s characters are nonetheless memorable, because each has its idiosyncrasies and quirks. The ability to project such qualities is indispensable for a supporting actor, as his roles are often fragmented and do not evolve over the duration of the film.

A particularly good example is Terrence Malick’s Badlands, in which Oates plays Sissy Spacek’s domineering father, who is brutally murdered by Spacek’s boyfriend, played by Martin Sheen. Oates’s appearance in the film is brief, and his characterization must therefore be drawn quickly. Rather than playing a more standard supporting role, Oates’s character instead actually extends the film’s plot. Just when Oates seems to be the most predictable, he explodes in a fashion which foreshadows the violence of Sheen’s character. Oates’s performance gives the film a cutting edge suggesting that Spacek’s performance gives the film a cutting edge suggesting that Spacek’s relationship with Sheen is not in fact escape, but a continuation of her relationship with her father.

To film enthusiasts, Oates’s signature performances were undoubtedly those in his three films for director Sam Peckinpah. In Ride the High Country, The Wild Bunch, and Bring Me the Head of Alfredo Garcia, Oates got perhaps his widest exposure. These were certainly the only instances in which it could be said that Oates was in big-budget films. In fact, the final shoot-out in The Wild Bunch had a longer shooting schedule (about 25 days) than most of the rest of the films he appeared in. In Alfredo Garcia Oates played what may be his only major role. His character is central to the action and is sustained for the film’s duration. Oates himself cited this as his favorite role for the very reason. Alfredo Garcia typifies Oates’s role as the “bad guy,” yet even his bad guys are charming, and not without a level of humor and humanity. Human, then, is the word for Warren Oates on screen. Not “real,” necessarily, but believable and charming, because his characters possess a range of qualities the viewer can identify as his or her own.

—Rob Winning

---

Films as Actress:

(as Estelle Thompson)

1930 Alf’s Button (Kellino)
1931 Never Trouble Trouble (Lane); Fascination (Mander)
1932 Service for Ladies (Korda); For the Love of Mike (Banks); Ebb Tide (Rosson); Aren’t We All (Lachman); Wedding Rehearsal (Korda) (as Miss Hutchinson); Men of Tomorrow (Sagan) (as Ysobel d’Aunay)

(as Merle Oberon)

1933 The Private Life of Henry VIII (Korda) (as Anne Boleyn)
1934 The Battle (Hara-Kiri; Thunder in the East) (Farkas) (as Marquise Yorisisaka); The Broken Melody (Vagabond Violinist) (Vorhaus) (as Germaine); The Private Life of Don Juan (Korda) (as Antonia)
1935 The Scarlet Pimpernel (Young) (as Marguerite Blakeynay); Beloved Enemy (Potter) (as Helen Drummond); Folies Bergeres (Del Ruth) (as Barones Genevieve Cassini); The Dark Angel (Franklin) (as Kitty Vane)
1936 These Three (Wyler) (as Karen Wright)
1937 Over the Moon (Freeland, Howard) (as June Benson)
1938 The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan) (as Leslie Steel); The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter) (as Mary Smith)
1939 Wuthering Heights (Wyler) (as Cathy Linton); The Lion Has Wings (Powell and Hurst) (as Mrs. Richardson)
1940 ‘Til We Meet Again (Goulding) (as Joan Ames)
1941 That Uncertain Feeling (Lubitsch) (as Jill Baker); Affectionately Yours (Bacon) (as Sue Mayberry); Lydia (Duvivier) (title role)
1943 Forever and a Day (Goulding and others) (as Marjorie); Stage Door Canteen (Borzage) (as herself); First Comes Courage (Azner) (as Nicole Larsen)
1944 The Lodger (Brahm) (as Kitty); Dark Waters (de Toth) (as Leslie Calvin)
Merle Oberon and Laurence Olivier in Wuthering Heights

1945  A Song to Remember (Charles Vidor) (as George Sand); This Love of Ours (Dieterle) (as Karin)
1946  A Night in Paradise (Lubin) (as Delerai); Temptation (Pichel) (as Ruby)
1947  Night Song (Cromwell) (as Cathy)
1948  Berlin Express (Tourneur) (as Lucienne)
1951  Pardon My French (Vorhaus) (as Elizabeth Rockwell)
1952  Twenty-Four Hours in a Woman’s Life (Affair in Monte Carlo) (Saville) (as Linda Venning)
1954  Todo es posible en Granada (de Heredia) (as Margaret Fobson); Desirée (Koster) (as Empress Josephine); Deep in My Heart (Donen) (as Dorothy Donnelly)
1956  The Price of Fear (Biberman) (as Jessica Warren)
1963  Of Love and Desire (Rush) (as Katherine Beckman)
1966  The Oscar (Rouse) (as herself)
1967  Hotel (Quine) (as The Duchess)

Publications

By OBERON: articles—

On OBERON: books—

On OBERON: articles—

Current Biography 1941, New York, 1941.

Obituary in Cinema Papers (Fitzroy), February-March 1980.

Film Dope (Nottingham), July 1992.

On OBERON: film—

** * **

Merle Oberon represents a classical case of the woman whose sheer beauty secured her the kind of attention that eventually brought her into films. Raised in India, she did not come to London until she was 17; she then progressed from cafe hostess (name Queenie O’Brien) to film extra. This in turn led to minor roles in undistinguished British films during 1930–32 (name Estelle Thompson), until she finally caught the eye of the Hungarian-British producer, Alexander Korda.

Korda gave her the opportunity, personal patronage, and training which was to establish her as a beautiful star (name Merle Oberon) and acceptable actress. She was later to become his wife. Her first role of importance was as Anne Boleyn in Korda’s film, The Private Life of Henry VIII, where her dark beauty and svelte grooming made a marked, if short-lived, impression among the King’s succession of wives. Her appearance and panache won her many star roles in both London and Hollywood productions, including those in Korda’s The Private Life of Don Juan, The Scarlet Pimpernel, and The Dark Angel.

Her career seemed threatened when she was in a severe car accident during the shooting of I, Claudius, in which she was to have played Messalina opposite Charles Laughton. (Korda made her accident his reason for closing down this troubled production.) After successful facial surgery, however, she was able to return to the screen, and starred from 1938 through to the 1960s in a range of films, largely American. The more notable, perhaps, are The Divorce of Lady X, Wuthering Heights (with Laurence Olivier), Ernst Lubitsch’s That Uncertain Feeling, René Clair’s Forever and a Day, and as George Sand in the Chopin biographical film A Song to Remember. Daniel Mann directed her last film, Interval, which she produced herself and co-edited, about an older woman who finds happiness with a younger man, played by Robert Wolders. He went on to become her husband in real life.

—Roger Manvell

O’BRIEN, Margaret

Nationality: American. Born: Angela Maxine O’Brien in San Diego, California, 15 January 1937. Education: Attended University High School, Los Angeles. Family: Married 1) Harold R. Allen Jr., 1959 (divorced 1968); 2) Roy T. Thorsen, 1974, daughter: Mary. Career: Child model at age three; 1941—film debut at age four in Babes on Broadway; made some films after 1951, but has worked since mainly on stage and television, including the mini-series Testimony of Two Men, 1977; 1979—civilian aide to Secretary of the Army Clifford Alexander. Awards: Special Academy Award, as “outstanding child actress of 1944,” 1944; Women’s International Center Living Legacy Award, 1996. Address: 1250 La Preresa Drive, Thousand Oaks, CA 91362, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1941 Babes on Broadway (Berkeley)
1942 Journey for Margaret (Van Dyke) (title role)
1943 Dr. Gillespie’s Criminal Case (Goldbeck) (as Margaret); Thousands Cheer (Sidney); Madame Curie (LeRoy) (as Irene at age 5)
1944 Lost Angel (Rowland) (as Alpha); Jane Eyre (Stevenson) (as Adele); The Canterville Ghost (Dassin) (as Lady Jessica de Canterville); Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli) (as Tootie Smith); Music for Millions (Koster) (as Mike)
1945 Our Vines Have Tender Grapes (Rowland) (as Selma Jacobson)
1946 Bad Bascomb (Simon) (as Emmy); Three Wise Fools (Buzzell) (as Sheila O’Monohan)
1947 The Unfinished Dance (Kosier)
1948 Tenth Avenue Angel (Rowland) (as Flavia Mills); Big City (Taurog) (as Midge)
1949 Little Women (LeRoy) (as Beth March); The Secret Garden (Wilcox) (as Mary Lennox)
1951 Her First Romance (Friedman) (as Betty Foster)
1956 Glory (Butler) (as Clarabel Tilbee)
1960 Heller in Pink Tights (Kukor) (as Della Southby)
1968 Split Second to an Epitaph (Horn—for TV)
1971 Diabolical Wedding
1972 Annabelle Lee
1981 Amy (McEveety) (as Hazel Johnson)
1984 Tales from the Darkside (Balaban, Blackburn—series for TV); Murder, She Wrote (Abroms, Allen—for TV) (as Jane)
1996 Sunset After Dark
1998 Hollywood Mortuary (Ford) (as herself)

Publications

By O’BRIEN: articles—

On O’BRIEN: articles—

* * *

Margaret O’Brien received a special Oscar in 1944 for being an “outstanding child actress,” a distinction she shared with Shirley Temple, Jackie Cooper, and others. Unlike most of her contemporaries and subsequent child actors, however, O’Brien was not particularly “cute.” Her success lay in her ability to stir the emotions of her audience in dramatic scenes rather than with childish charm or Margaret O’Brien (right) in Meet Me in St. Louis

Margaret O’Brien (right) in Meet Me in St. Louis

musical talent. Beginning with her first hit, and only her second film, Journey for Margaret, which was made at her home studio, MGM, O’Brien relied on scowls and cynicism as much as her dimples. She invariably wore a pointed cap and usually was deadly serious as she seemed to carry the weight of the world on her little shoulders.

Her two best films, both made in 1944, were The Canterville Ghost and Meet Me in St. Louis. In the former, O’Brien captured the audience, playing the pivotal role of a young duchess whose courage inspires both a 400-years-dead ghost played by Charles Laughton and a brash American G.I. played by Robert Young. In Meet Me in St. Louis O’Brien had a relatively minor role in comparison with star Judy Garland and many well-known members of the MGM stock company, but her big scene in which she hysterically destroys the snowmen on the front lawn on Christmas Eve has become famous, and led to her Oscar.

O’Brien appeared in a number of productions after the war, including Little Women, but her career declined dramatically, like so many other child stars, as she reached puberty. While she was in her prime, O’Brien was considered one of the best child actors on the screen, although in retrospect most of her films show her in a whiny, unattractive light. She has continued to act sporadically over the years, but has never risen above minor featured parts. Her most widely seen role as a adult was that of an overweight housewife in Robert Young’s television series, Marcus Welby, M.D.

—Patricia King Hanson

O’CONNOR, Donald

Donald O'Connor with Francis in Francis in the Navy

the film Francis, followed by five more in the series; 1951–54—star of the TV series The Colgate Comedy Hour, and The Donald O'Connor Show: Here Comes Donald, 1954–55; performed in nightclubs and cabarets; 1956—his first symphony performed by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra; 1981—Broadway debut in musical Bring Back Birdie, 1982—in Show Boat, Houston and New York.

Address: P.O. Box 4524, Valley Village Station, North Hollywood, CA 91607, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1937 Melody for Two (Louis King)
1938 Sing You Sinners (Ruggles) (as Mike Beebe); Sons of the Legion (Hogan) (as Butch Baker); Men with Wings (Wellman) (as Pat Falconer at age 10); Tom Sawyer—Detective (Louis King) (as Huck Finn)
1939 Unmarried (Neumann) (as Ted Streaver at age 12); Night Work (Archainbaud) (as Butch Smiley); Boy Trouble (Archainbaud) (as Butch); Million Dollar Legs (Grinde) (as Sticky Boone); Beau Geste (Wellman) (as Beau as a child); Death of a Champion (Florey) (as Small Fry); On Your Toes (Enright) (as Phil as a boy)
1942 What's Cookin’? (Cline) (as Tommy); Private Buckaroo (Cline) (as Donny); Give Out Sisters (Cline) (as Don); Get Hep to Love (Lamont) (as Jimmy Arnold)
1943 When Johnny Comes Marching Home (Lamont) (as Frankie); It Comes Up Love (Lamont) (as Ricky); Strictly in the Groove (Keays); Mister Big (Lamont) (as Donald); Top Man (Lamont) (as Don Warren)
1944 Chip Off the Old Block (Lamont) (as Donald Corrigan); Follow the Boys (Thorpe); This Is the Life (Feist) (as Jimmy Plum); Bowery to Broadway (Lamont); The Merry Monahans (Lamont) (as Jimmy Monahan)
1945 Patrick the Great (Ryan) (as Pat Donague Jr.)
1947 Something in the Wind (Pichel) (as Charlie Read)
1948 Are You with It? (Hively) (as Milton Haskins); Feudin’, Fussin’, and A-Fightin’ (Sherman) (as Wilbur McMurty)
1949 Yes Sir, that’s My Baby (Sherman) (as William Waldo Winfield); Francis (Francis the Talking Mule) (Lubin) (as Peter Stirling)
1950 Curtain Call at Cactus Creek (Lamont) (as Edward Timmons); The Milkman (Barton) (as Roger Bradley)
1951 Double Crossbones (Barton) (as Dave Crandall); Francis Goes to the Races (Lubin) (as Peter Stirling)
1952 Singin’ in the Rain (Kelly and Donen) (as Cosmo Brown); Francis Goes to West Point (Lubin) (as Peter Stirling)
1953 Call Me Madam (Walter Lang) (as Kenneth); I Love Melvin (Weis) (as Melvin Hoover); Francis Covers the Big Town (Lubin) (as Peter Stirling); Walkin’ My Baby Back Home (Lloyd Bacon) (as Jigger Millard)

1954 Francis Joins the Wacs (Lubin) (as Peter Stirling); There’s No Business Like Show Business (Walter Lang) (as Tim Donahue)

1955 Francis in the Navy (Lubin) (as Peter Stirling/Slicker Donovan)

1956 Anything Goes (Robert Lewis) (as Ted Adams)

1957 The Buster Keaton Story (Sheldon) (title role)

1961 Cry for Happy (George Marshall) (as Murray Prince); Le meraviglie di Aladino (Les Mille et une nuits; The Wonders of Aladdin) (Levin) (as Aladdin)

1965 That Funny Feeling (Thorpe) (as Harvey Granson)

1974 That’s Entertainment! (Haley Jr.—compilation) (as host)

1981 Ragtime (Forman) (as Evelyn’s dance teacher)

1982 Pandemonium (Thursday the 12th) (Sole)

1985 The Last Great Vaudeville Show (Iscove—for TV); Alice in Wonderland (Harry Harris—for TV) (as Lory Bird)

1986 Irving Berlin’s America (Dubose—for TV)

1987 A Mouse, a Mystery and Me (Nichols—for TV)

1990 A Time to Remember (Travers) (as Father Walsh)

1992 Toys (Levinson) (as Kenneth Zevo)

1993 The Building (Bowab, Kreppel—series for TV); Frasier (Ackerman, Beren—series for TV) (as Harlow Stafford); The Nanny (Day, Drescher—series for TV) (as Fred)

1994 That’s Entertainment! III (Friedgen and Sheridan—compilation); Bandit: Bandit’s Silver Angel (Needham—for TV) (as Uncle Cyrus)

1997 Out to Sea (Coolidge) (as Jonathan)

Publications

By O’CONNOR: article—

Interview, in Photoplay (London), November 1982.

On O’CONNOR: book—

On O’CONNOR: articles—

Donald O’Connor’s vaudeville background has been in evidence throughout his film career. Bing Crosby allegedly asked, “Isn’t there anything he can’t do?” Singer, dancer, and comedian, O’Connor played in many low-budget musicals and established his reputation by proving that, indeed, he could do just about everything. Perhaps his most popular role was as the straight man to a talking mule in six films of the Francis series. He was never stereotyped by that role, however, and throughout the several years of production of those films, he appeared in a number of important musicals and continued his vaudeville exploits in two successful television shows. It was fitting that, in one of his later films, he played Buster Keaton, whose multiple physical talents and vaudeville background were similar to O’Connor’s.

During the early 1940s, under contract to Universal, O’Connor was cast in a number of musicals, often directed by Charles Lamont, that exploited his vaudeville talents and teenage charm. In Top Man, Chip Off the Old Block, and The Merry Monahans, for example, he was teamed with Peggy Ryan in films that seemed Universal’s answer to MGM’s Garland-Rooney films. Often called on to assume adult responsibilities, O’Connor’s characters won their way in the world (and the girl’s heart) by show-business expertise. Later, in more mature roles in Singin’ in the Rain, I Love Melvin, and Call Me Madam, he retained some of that youthful quality and spirit of delight in performing.

“Make ‘em Laugh” from Singin’ in the Rain displays all of O’Connor’s inventive vaudeville-based skills. As he sings the song, itself a paean to the virtues of popular entertainment, O’Connor performs a series of body maneuvers and slapstick gags: he gets hit by a plank, walks into a wall, gets his feet entangled and falls, and, finally, runs up a wall and backflips off it. Each of these displays him as the limber-legged and rubber-faced vaudeville comedian. Other numbers show his tapping ability, as well. In I Love Melvin he is required to tap on roller skates and, a frequent O’Connor trademark, to assume a variety of identities with quick costume changes.

Although he brought his trademark panache to the Francis series, O’Connor is more happily remembered partnering peppy Debbie Reynolds than a quadruped. It is regrettable that MGM could not have given O’Connor a permanent home after Singin’ in the Rain; what other dancer stole scenes from Gene Kelly? Of O’Connor’s five major shots at big studio musical comedy immortality, only one (Singin’ in the Rain) is an undisputed masterwork. Whereas I Love Melvin is mere breezy escapism (a sort of upscale version of his Universal Studio romps), Anything Goes is a regrettably garish shortchanging of Cole Porter; yet O’Connor bucked and wings his way through both until their limitations evaporate. Blessed with a partner of equal merit in Vera-Ellen, O’Connor helps Ethel Merman turn Call Me Madam into one of the sunniest transfers of a Broadway hit to the screen. And if nothing in There’s No Business Like Show Business matches his silken dancing to “It’s a Lovely Day Today” in Call Me Madam, Show Business does provide him with ample opportunities to dazzle aficionados. Despite contending with squeaky-clean Johnny Ray and resistibly upbeat Mitzi Gaynor, not to mention the daunting prospect of coming face to face with Monroe’s bosom, O’Connor energetically steals the film by dancing with the exuberance of someone born in a trunk, who could dance before he could walk. If it had been filmed earlier, he would have been the definitive leprechaun in Finian’s Rainbow, but such major roles were sadly not his lot; lending class to vulgarly conceived production numbers was his forte.

Not faring well after the demise of the Hollywood musical, O’Connor failed to storm Broadway in a foolish sequel called Finian’s Rainbow. Nevertheless, he continued to wow his fans in summer stock, embarked on a second career as a composer, and made a graceful all-too-brief comeback as a dance instructor in Ragtime. Watching his clowning around on a standout episode of Francis’s 1995–96 season and struck by his galvanizing routines showcased in That’s Entertainment! III, one can only regret the waste of his talents for the past 30 years. Despite the extinction of the film musical, O’Connor, one of the last movie stars to have trained in vaudeville,
O’HARA: Maureen

Films as Actress:

1938 Kicking the Moon Around (The Playboy; Millionaire Merry-Go-Round) (Ford) (as secretary)
1939 My Irish Molly (Bryce) (as Eileen O’Shea); Jamaica Inn (Hitchcock) (as Mary); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieteler) (as Esmeralda)
1940 A Bill of Divorcement (Farrow) (as Sydney Fairfield); Dance, Girl, Dance (Arzner) (as Judy)
1941 They Met in Argentina (Goodwins and Hively) (as Lolita); How Green Was My Valley (Ford) (as Angharad Morgan)
1942 To the Shores of Tripoli (Humberstone) (as Mary Carter); Ten Gentlemen from West Point (Hathaway) (as Carolyn Bainbridge); The Black Swan (King) (as Margaret Denby)
1943 The Immortal Sergeant (Stahl) (as Valentine); This Land Is Mine (Renoir) (as Louise Martin); The Fallen Sparrow (Wallace) (as Toni Donne)
1944 Buffalo Bill (Wellman) (as Louis Cody)
1945 The Spanish Main (Borzage) (as Francisca)
1946 Sentimental Journey (Lang) (as Julie); Do You Love Me? (Ratoff) (as Katherine Hilliard)
1947 Sinbad the Sailor (Wallace) (as Shireen); The Homestretch (Humberstone) (as Leslie Hale); Miracle on 34th Street (Seaton) (as Doris Walker); The Foxes of Harrow (Stahl) (as Odalie)
1948 Sitting Pretty (Lang) (as Tracey)
1949 The Forbidden Street (Britannia Mews) (Negulesco) (as Adelaide Culver); A Woman’s Secret (Ray) (as Marian Washburn); Father Was a Fullback (Stahl) (as Elizabeth Cooper); Bagdad (Lamont) (as Princess Marjan)
1950 Comanche Territory (Sherman) (as Katie); Tripoli (Price) (as Countess D’Arneau); Rio Grande (Ford) (as Kathleen Yorke)
1951 Flame of Araby (Lamont) (as Princess Tanya)
1952 At Sword’s Point (Allen) (as Claire); Kangaroo (Milestone) (as Dell McGuire); The Quiet Man (Ford) (as Mary Kate Danaher); Against All Flags (Sherman) (as Spitfire Stevens)
1953 The Redhead from Wyoming (Shoel) (as Kate Maxwell)

1954 War Arrow (Sherman) (as Elaine Corwin); Malaga (Fire over Africa) (Benedek) (as Joanna Dane)
1955 The Long Gray Line (Ford) (as Mary O’Donnell); The Magnificent Matador (Boetticher) (as Karen Harrison); Lady Godiva (Lubin) (title role)
1956 Lisbon (Milland) (as Sylvia Merrill); Everything but the Truth (Hopper) (as Joan Madison)
1957 The Wings of Eagles (Ford) (as Minnie Weed)
1959 Our Man in Havana (Reed) (as Beatrice Severn)
1961 The Parent Trap (Swift) (as Maggie McKendrick); The Deadly Companions (Trigger Happy) (Peckinpah) (as Kit Tilden)
1962 Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation (Koster) (as Peggy Hobbs)
1963 Spencer’s Mountain (Daves) (as Olivia Spencer); McLintock! (McLaglen) (as Katherine McLintock)
1965 The Battle of the Villa Fiorita (Daves) (as Moira)
1966 The Rare Breed (McLaglen) (as Martha Price)
1970 How Do I Love Thee? (Gordon) (as Elsie Waltz)
1971 Big Jake (Sherman) (as Martha McCandles)
1973 The Red Pony (Totten—for TV) (as Ruth Tiflin)
1991 Only the Lonely (Columbus) (as Rose Muldoon)
1995 The Christmas Box (for TV)
1998 Cab to Canada (Leitch) (as Katherine Eure)

Publications

By O’HARA: article—

On O’HARA: book—

On O’HARA: articles—

Current Biography 1953, New York, 1953.
Film Dope (Nottingham), June 1993.
Stars (Mariembourg), no. 27, 1996.

The essential screen persona of Maureen O’Hara found its famous, if truncated, embodiment in the films of John Ford. Her persona usually follows the same pattern: she is an explosive Irish lass who rebels against an essentially patriarchally structured society, yet in the end is tamed into a type of submission by the John Wayne character.
Maureen O’Hara with Tyrone Power in Black Swan

But those critics who say there is nothing behind this strong, if only temporarily so, facade are wrong. In Rio Grande, for example, her acting during those scenes where she resists Wayne contain far more effective acting than those where she finally capitulates. In The Quiet Man she again plays the volatile woman who puts up a good fight, but, in the finale, is brought to heel—but it is her intransigence over her dowry that sticks in one’s mind. Only in The Wings of Eagles, with Wayne, and in The Long Gray Line, without him, does Ford allow the Maureen O’Hara personality a certain dignity in something like an adult relationship—perhaps because in both films Ford was bound by the biographical bases of the narratives.

Is it heresy to suggest the most compelling reason to watch a John Ford movie today is the chance to glory in Maureen O’Hara? Much heralded by a hierarchy of male critics, Ford’s cinema boasts undisputed masterpieces such as The Searchers, along with sentimental blarney and wearying sexism that would be unbearable without O’Hara. Long dismissed as the Queen of Technicolor, O’Hara has been undervalued by critics who cannot see the forest for the Titian tresses. A bewitching Esmeralda in Hunchback of Notre Dame, O’Hara displayed a haunted duality as the tragically pragmatic Angharad in How Green Was My Valley, and gave a delicate performance as an artistically inclined ballerina in Dance, Girl, Dance. In O’Hara’s canon of work, however, such showcase dramas took a backseat to rip-roaring escapism.

However much one laments the curve-hugging aesthetic straitjacket O’Hara was forced to model in male-dominated film after film, it is her vitality that outshines all studio era constraints. Whereas other Hollywood wenches were simply mannequins with cleavage, O’Hara heaved her bosom and hitched up her skirts in order to swashbuckle with the best of them (Power, Fairbanks Jr., Cornell Wilde). Nowhere in the action genre arena was she more suitably cast than as D’Artagnan’s daughter in At Sword’s Point, because she got to dress up like a man and raise hell. The essential O’Hara is a free spirit who refuses to behave like a lady. A force of nature born in a shamrock patch, she is a joy to behold even in escapist claptrap; what prevents exotic adventures such as Sinbad the Sailor and Flame of Araby from aging painfully is the tongue-in-cheek relish with which O’Hara attacked these roles.
Maturing gracefully, she played mothers who did not sacrifice their sexuality at the birthing stool in such films as Parent Trap and Battle of the Villa Florita. And then, after years of retirement, O’Hara delivered a deliciously unsympathetic turn in Only the Lonely which should have netted her critics’ prizes and an Oscar. Perhaps it is her fate to be underrated for acting that is naturally graceful and aligned with an ageless beauty. As the controlling matriarch manipulating the apron strings wound around her adult son in Only the Lonely, O’Hara gets a cinematic revenge for all the occasions when male co-stars underestimated her and filmmakers misused her gifts.

—Rodney Farnsworth, updated by Robert Pardi

OLBRYCHSKI, Daniel

Nationality: Polish. Born: Lowicz, 27 February 1945. Education: Attended the School of Drama, Warsaw, graduated 1971. Family: Married, one son: Rafal. Career: 1964—film debut in Ranny v lesie; 1970—in title role of stage production of Hamlet; 1978—appeared in the Peter Handke play Die Unvernünftigen sterben aus in Nanterre, France; 1987—in TV mini-series The Secret of the Sahara. Awards: Bronze Lion of Gdansk, for Potem nastpi cisza (Ozierow) (as Przybyszewski); Zdjęcia próbne (Hol- land, Kędzierski, and Domaradzki) (Sandoy) (as Przybyszewski); Życie rodzinne (Jovita) (Wajda) (as Marc Arens); Przgody pana Michala (Janda) (as Borys); O-bi, O-bi—Koniec cywilizacji O-bi, O-bi—The End of Civilization; Ga, Ga—chwala bohaterom (Szułkin); Mariage blanc (von Trotta) (as Leo Jogiches); Sibirskij tsiryulnik (Mikhalkov) (as Prior Ministry Official); Panny z Wilka (Bajon) (as Fritz); Deir Balle und das Mädchen (Jancso) (as Claudius)

Films as Actor:

1964 Ranny v lesie (The Wounded in the Forest) (Nasfeter) (as Lieutenant)
1965 Popioły (Ashes) (Wajda) (as Rafal)
1966 Potem nastpi císa (The Silence Will Reign) (Morgenstern);
Bokser (The Boxer) (Dziedzina) (title role)
1967 Jowita (Jovita) (Morgenstern) (as Marc Arens); Małżeństwo z rozsądk (Bareja)
1968 Hrabina Cosel (Antczak)
1969 Pan Wołodyjowski (Colonel Wołodyjowski) (Hoffman) (as Azja); Polowanie na muchy (Hunting Flies) (Wajda); Skok (Bank Robbery) (Kutz); Wszystko na sprzedaż (Everything for Sale) (Wajda) (as Daniel); Struktura kryształu (Zanussi); Różaniec z granatow (Rutliewicz)
1970 Brzeczina (The Birch-wood) (Wajda); Egy Barany (Angel of Death) (Jancso); Krajobraz po bitwie (Landscapes after the Battle) (Wajda) (as Tadeusz); La Pacifista (Jancso); Sól ziemi czarnej (The Salt of This Black Earth) (Kutz)
1971 Życie rodzine (Family Life) (Zanussi) (as Wit); Liberation (Ozierow); “Poslednii chturn” ep. of Osvobojdienie (Ozierow)
1973 Wesele (The Wedding) (Wajda) (as bridegroom); Roma riuo Cesare (Rome Wants Another Caesar) (Jancso) (as Claudiau)
1974 Potop (The Deluge) (Hoffman)
1975 Pilatus und andere—ein Film für Karfreitag (Pilate and Others) (Wajda—for TV) (as Matthew the Levite); Ziema obieczana (The Promised Land) (Wajda) (as Karol Borowiecki)
1976 Dagny (Sandoy) (as Przybyszewski); Zdjęcia próbn (Holland, Kędzierski, and Domaradzki)
1978 Ranny z Wilka (The Young Ladies from Wilko) (Wajda) (as Wiktor Ruben); Die Blechtrummel (The Tin Drum) (Schlondorff) (as Jan Bronski)
1980 Kung-Fu (Kijowski); Wizja lokalna 1901 (Inspection of the Crime Scene 1901) (Bajon)
1981 Les Uns et les autres (Bolero) (Lelouch) (as Karl); La Derelitta (Igoux)
1982 Roz (Christofis); Przegody pana Michala (Komerowski)
1983 Si j’avais mille ans (Enkell); La Truite (The Trout) (Losey) (as Saint-Genis)
1984 La Diagonale du fou (Dangerous Moves) (Dembo) (as Tac-Tac); Casablanca, Casablanca (Nüt); Elakoon Isemurchaaja (Jasny); Lieber Karl (Knilli) (as teacher)
1985 Der Balle und das Mädchen (The Cop and the Girl) (Keglevic) (as Fritz); O-bi, O-bi—Koniec cywilizacji O-bi, O-bi—The End of Civilization; Ga, Ga—chwala bohaterom (Szułkin); Mariage blanc (von Trotta) (as Leo Jogiches); Sibirskij tsiryulnik (Mikhalkov) (as Prior Ministry Official); Notturno (Lehner); Dekalog 3 (Kießowski—for TV)
1987 L’Orchestre rouge (Rouffio) (as Giering); Bugiarda (Giraldi); La Boutique de l’orfever (as Adam)
1988 Le Silence d’ailleurs (Zafranovic)
1989 Das Lange Gespräch mit dem Vogel (Zanussi—for TV) (as Angelo)
1990 Ivan and Abraham (as Stepian); Kolejnosc uczuc (Sequence of Feelings) (Piwowarski) (as Rafal Nawrot); Jób Szepnek es Gazdagnak Lenni (Better to Be Pretty and Rich) (Bajon)
1991 Transatlantis (as Neuffer); Bastard (as Geza); Peszka (Janda) (as Borys); Peszka (The Pip) (Janda) (as Borys)
1992 Track Stop (Muschner); Dzieje mistrza Twardowskiego (Gradowski); Dzieci i ryby (Bromski); Hommes, femmes, mode d’emploi (Men, Women: A User’s Manual) (Rahman)
1993 Szokés (Escape) (Gyarmathy)
1994 Sibirskij tsiryulnik (The Barber of Siberia) (Mikhalkov) (as Kopnovsky); Il Figlio di Sandokan (Eastman, Mamolo—mini for TV)
1995 Ogniem i mieczem (With Fire and Sword) (Jery Hoffman) (as Tuhaj-Bej); Pan Tadeusz (Wajda) (as Gerwazy)
1996 Panny z Wilka (Wajda) (as Wiktor Ruben); Die Blechtrummel (The Tin Drum) (Schlondorff) (as Jan Bronski)
1998 Kung-Fu (Kijowski); Wizja lokalna 1901 (Inspection of the Crime Scene 1901) (Bajon)
1999 Les Uns et les autres (Bolero) (Lelouch) (as Karl); La Derelitta (Igoux)
2002 Roz (Christofis); Przegody pana Michala (Komerowski)
2003 Si j’avais mille ans (Enkell); La Truite (The Trout) (Losey) (as Saint-Genis)
2004 La Diagonale du fou (Dangerous Moves) (Dembo) (as Tac-Tac); Casablanca, Casablanca (Nüt); Elakoon Isemurchaaja (Jasny); Lieber Karl (Knilli) (as teacher)
2005 Der Balle und das Mädchen (The Cop and the Girl) (Keglevic) (as Fritz); O-bi, O-bi—Koniec cywilizacji O-bi, O-bi—The End of Civilization; Ga, Ga—chwala bohaterom (Szułkin); Mariage blanc (von Trotta) (as Leo Jogiches); Sibirskij tsiryulnik (Mikhalkov) (as Prior Ministry Official); Notturno (Lehner); Dekalog 3 (Kießowski—for TV)
2006 L’Orchestre rouge (Rouffio) (as Giering); Bugiarda (Giraldi); La Boutique de l’orfever (as Adam)
2007 Le Silence d’ailleurs (Zafranovic)
2008 Das Lange Gespräch mit dem Vogel (Zanussi—for TV) (as Angelo)
2009 Ivan and Abraham (as Stepian); Kolejnosc uczuc (Sequence of Feelings) (Piwowarski) (as Rafal Nawrot); Jób Szepnek es Gazdagnak Lenni (Better to Be Pretty and Rich) (Bajon)
2010 Transatlantis (as Neuffer); Bastard (as Geza); Peszka (Janda) (as Borys); Peszka (The Pip) (Janda) (as Borys)
2011 Track Stop (Muschner); Dzieje mistrza Twardowskiego (Gradowski); Dzieci i ryby (Bromski); Hommes, femmes, mode d’emploi (Men, Women: A User’s Manual) (Rahman)
2012 Szokés (Escape) (Gyarmathy)
2013 Sibirskij tsiryulnik (The Barber of Siberia) (Mikhalkov) (as Kopnovsky); Il Figlio di Sandokan (Eastman, Mamolo—mini for TV)
2014 Ogniem i mieczem (With Fire and Sword) (Jery Hoffman) (as Tuhaj-Bej); Pan Tadeusz (Wajda) (as Gerwazy)

Publications

By OLBRYCHSKI: articles—

Interview with J. Frenais, in Cinéma (Paris), April 1978.
On OLBRYCHSKI: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), June 1993.

* * *

The acting career of Daniel Olbrychski took shape under the influence of the great legend of Polish cinematography—the actor Zbigniew Cybulski. In 1967, Cybulski died in a tragic accident and thus their lives crossed only briefly: once they were acting partners in the same film (Jowita). In spite of this, Olbrychski’s artistic career will be long compared and measured by the value of his older colleague, and rightly so. In spite of all that separates them, they have much in common: above all tremendous popularity, evoked by common aspirations, ideas, opinions, and moods of their generations.

Olbrychski debuted while still a student at the Theatrical University in The Wounded in the Forest, directed by Janusz Nasfeter. Foreshadowing future great performances, he played the role of a young lieutenant, captivating the audience with his appearance—slim, fair-haired, cherubic, and radiating youth, intellect, and emotionality. The destiny of a new acting personality of the Polish film was confirmed and in the next year he replaced Cybulski in the film Ashes. During his studies, Olbrychski acted in some other films while polishing his acting technique. Since then he has contributed a whole series of film characters to the Polish cinema.

Olbrychski does not represent an invariable type; he can convincingly play both contemporary and period roles. His heroes are energetic men of action, rejecting stability and security for a life full of reversals, dynamics, and surprises (there exist, naturally, exceptions). Olbrychski plays them with discipline, without effects, in a concentrated and sometimes even reserved manner. This is one of the most noticeable features of his acting method. His relation to the character played suggests a certain aloofness, reserve, inner inaccessibility, and insubordination. The Polish film critic and historian Krysztof Teodor Toepplitz expressed this aptly: “When Olbrychski plays a boxer, the suspicion arises in us that he is not a real boxer and that what he really is will remain a secret for us.” This approach presents itself in its purest form in Wajda’s Everything for Sale (dedicated to the memory of Cybulski), in which Olbrychski in a complicated way resolves the legend of his predecessor and finds his own way.

In other works this quality is less apparent but still present. In Wajda’s The Wedding he plays the role of a bridegroom which at a glance differs from all his previous roles. The bridegroom in his interpretation is unusually merry and happy; but gradually the actor lets the spectator peer beneath the surface of this happiness. From the merriment, disquiet and alienation emerge, linking him with the heroes from earlier films. Olbrychski’s temperament explodes in The Deluge whose hero is endowed with such vitality that the film was accepted as an excellent study of Polish national character, with all its positive and negative aspects.

In the 1970s a new feature appeared in Olbrychski’s acting that is connected with his artistic and human ripening and with acquiring new experiences. We find it for the first time in Wajda’s The Promised Land where this dynamic, explosive actor metamorphosizes before our eyes into a sober, matter-of-fact man who, after a youth full of inspiration and enthusiasm, accepts in cold blood the cruel rules of play of his milieu. The roles in his subsequent films continue to be marked by this skepticism.

Since the beginning of the 1970s Olbrychski has acted in the films of both well-known and beginning European directors. The number of parts and different characters he has played is impressive: in the historical fresco Die Blechtrommel, based on Günther Grass’s novel, he plays the part of a potential father of an undersized hero, Jan Bronski; in Pad Italia he portrays a partisan commander who because of his love for a girl from a rich family loses the trust of his comrades-in-arms; in Von Trotta’s biographical Rosa Luxemburg he tackles the role of the co-founder of Polish Social Democracy. Even though Olbrychski has tasted success abroad, when offered a part in a Polish film, he never turns his countrymen down. In so doing, he takes on a range of contemporary, historical, dramatic, and even comedic roles.

In his advancing years, he is no longer a youngster with a cherub’s face, nor is he a romantic hero. In his actor’s biography this change is sharply documented by his part in Radoslaw Piwowarski’s Chronology of Sentiments. Olbrychski plays with great charm an aging lady-killer, who in spite of his age charms and sweeps a young girl off her feet. Olbrychski continues to act on the stage and he has received a number of theater and film awards, including the Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres from France. His son Rafał follows in his steps, appearing with him in Pan Twardowski.

—Blażena Urgošíková

OLDMAN, Gary

Gary Oldman is an actor with a chameleon-like quality. From part to part—and a widely varying lot they are—he is utterly convincing; as often as not, he is also unrecognizable. Usually, this spells doom to an actor’s potential for stardom. Audiences cannot follow an actor they cannot find. But Oldman has mysteriously avoided this trap; perhaps because of his versatility and range—both of which not even his closest competitor, fellow Brit Daniel Day Lewis, has matched—he has somehow managed to achieve that stardom. Unlike Day Lewis, however, he has yet to win an Oscar, but this cannot be for long.

1995  Murder in the First (Rocco) (as Associate Warden Glenn); The Scarlet Letter (Joffe) (as the Reverend Arthur Dimmesdale)
1996  Basquiat (Build a Fort, Set It on Fire) (Schnabel) (as Albert Milo)
1997  The Fifth Element (Besson) (as Jean-Baptiste Emmanuel Zorg); Air Force One (Petersen) (as Egor Korshunov)
1998  Lost in Space (Stephen Hopkins) (as Dr. Zachary Smith); Quest for Camelot (Du Chau) (as Ruber)
1999  Jesus (Young—mini for TV) (as Pontius Pilate)
2000  The Contender (Lurie) (as Congressman Sheldon B. Runyon + pr); Anasazi Moon (Seltzer) (role)

Films as Producer

1997  Nil by Mouth (+ dir, sc)
1999  Plunkett & Macleane (Scott) (exec pr)

Publications

By OLDMAN: book —

By OLDMAN: articles—

On OLDMAN: articles—

Steinberg, Robert, “Gary Oldman Turns up the Heat in Hell’s Kitchen,” in American Film (Los Angeles), October 1990.

* * *

Gary Oldman is an actor with a chameleon-like quality. From part to part—and a widely varying lot they are—he is utterly convincing; as often as not, he is also unrecognizable. Usually, this spells doom to an actor’s potential for stardom. Audiences cannot follow an actor they cannot find. But Oldman has mysteriously avoided this trap; perhaps because of his versatility and range—both of which not even his closest competitor, fellow Brit Daniel Day Lewis, has matched—he has somehow managed to achieve that stardom. Unlike Day Lewis, however, he has yet to win an Oscar, but this cannot be for long.
After making his screen debut in Remembrance and then appearing among the cast of Mike Leigh’s “kitchen sink” TV drama Meantime, Oldman shot into the public mind with his lacerating, in-your-face performance as the self-destructive punk rocker Sid Vicious in Alex Cox’s Sid and Nancy, the first of several, disparate biopic roles he would undertake in the years to come.

Vicious’s rebelliousness against society aside, there would seem to be little in the character or Oldman’s uncanny incarnation of it to suggest, “Gee, that’s just the guy to play avant-garde, gay British playwright Joe Orton!” But that is exactly what director Stephen Frears did think and Oldman was cast in Prick Up Your Ears, the film version of John Lahr’s Orton biography which traced the short life of the working-class writer whose meteoric career was cut short when his lover Kenneth Halliwell (Alfred Molina) murdered him in 1967. Oldman’s personification of Orton was so persuasive that even hard-to-please British director/film historian Ken Russell was given to note: “Gary Oldman as the gay genius turned in a remarkable performance, managing the transition from ingenuous provincial lad to glam metropolitan sophisticate with an invisible technique.”

Sporting a variety of convincing regional accents and dialects, Oldman has played an array of thoroughly American characters no less vividly, from lowlife drug running scum (True Romance, The Professional) to noir heroes fixated on the wrong woman (Romeo Is Bleeding). As the Boston defense lawyer who gets psycho Kevin Bacon acquitted then fights to get him behind bars when Bacon kills again, Oldman brought sorely needed dignity to the utterly exploitative Criminal Law, his American film debut. State of Grace, an Irish-American Mean Streets about the Hell’s Kitchen gang known as the Westies, found Oldman on the opposite side of the law (not for the first time or the last) as a none-too-bright gangster killed by his own brother (Ed Harris) as a payoff to the Mob. In Chattahoochee, Oldman himself was behind bars as a Korean war vet suffering post-traumatic stress syndrome who is wrongfully incarcerated in a mental institution that makes Bedlam look like Sunnybrook Farm, and brings some welcome reform to it. In Murder in the First, he squared off once more against Kevin Bacon, a prisoner who goes mad due to the brutal treatment of Oldman’s Alcatraz warden. The latter two films were based on true stories.

JFK on the other hand was based on theory and supposition. Marshaling mountains of information uncovered by Warren Report critics over the years, director Oliver Stone’s provocative docudrama concluded that the Mob served as functionaries in a much broader, government-managed scheme to assassinate Kennedy, a scheme in which Lee Harvey Oswald was just what he said he was, a “patsy.” While the veracity of the film’s conspiracy theories were vigorously challenged by critics, Oldman’s dead-on portrayal of Oswald was roundly applauded as eerily accurate in voice and manner. Oldman even looked the part, without the use of much makeup—another trademark of the actor’s amazing, and seemingly effortless, virtuosity in biopic roles. Two years later, he supplied the voice of Oswald, reading from Oswald’s own diaries, in a PBS Frontline documentary rebutting much of the Stone epic’s conspiracy evidence. Again, the effect was positively eerie.

Since then, Oldman has played everything from the screen’s most passionate yet monstrously otherworldly Dracula to Beethoven (bearing yet another uncanny physical resemblance to the character) to Nathaniel Hawthorne’s guilt-ridden puritan adulterer who gets Demi Moore’s anachronistically feminist Hester Prynne saddled with The Scarlet Letter. And yet his career is still in its prime.

On Hollywood’s A list for roles as the villainous counterpart to screen superheroes like Bruce Willis and Harrison Ford, Oldman has appeared, without fear of being swallowed by the special effects and pyrotechnics, in some of the biggest-budgeted science-fiction spectaculars of recent vintage too—The Fifth Element (almost unrecognizable as the alien evil), and Air Force One (as a terrorist who holds the President and family hostage in the skies). And rather than giving the impression that he’s slumming in such films, he invests his performances with twists that makes the characters he plays in them more rather than less visible amid all the high-tech razzle-dazzle. For example, in Lost in Space, a bloated spin on the old television series of the same name, he studiously underplays his role as the villainous Dr. Smith to stay noticed—in marked contrast to all about him in the film who feel the need to chew the scenery.

Typically, leading men add longevity to their working lives by aging gracefully, and almost imperceptibly, into character roles. Oldman has a strong leg up. He is a charismatic leading man and bravura character actor already—with, like many successful actors of his generation, an eye on moving behind the camera as well. 1997’s Nil by Mouth—a searing, semi-autobiographical portrait of a working-class British family brought low by alcoholism, abuse, and other dysfunctions—marked his debut as a triple-threat auteur. He not only produced the critically well-received and award-winning (but not widely seen) film, he wrote and directed it too. Perhaps it might have found a wider audience if he’d starred in it as well.

—John McCarty

OLIN, Lena

Nationality: Swedish. Born: Stockholm, 22 March 1955; daughter of the actor/director Stig Olin and the actress Britta Olin. Education: Attended Royal Dramatic Theater School of Sweden. Family: Married 1) the director Lasse Hallström, 1994, daughter: Tora; 2) the actor Orjan Ramberg, son: August. Career: Began dramatic school at 20, and three years later was employed at the Royal Dramatic Theater; 1976—film debut in Ingmar Bergman’s Face to Face; 1984—in Bergman’s final directorial project, After the Rehearsal; 1988—established her alliance with passionate characters whose portrayals will pervade her later repertoire with The Unbearable Lightness of Being. Awards: New York Film Critics Circle Award for Best Supporting Actress, Enemies, a Love Story, 1989. Agent: Martha Luttrell, International Creative Management, 8899 Beverly Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90048, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1976 Ansikte mot Ansikte (Face to Face) (Bergman—for TV, originally broadcast in serial form) (as shop assistant)
1978 Picassos aeventyr (The Adventures of Picasso) (Danielsson) (as Dolores) 1980 Karleken (Love)
Lena Olin

1982  Fanny och Alexander (Fanny and Alexander) (Bergman) (as Rosa)
1984  Efter Repetitionen (After the Rehearsal) (Bergman) (as Anna Egerman)
1985  Wallenberg: A Hero’s Story (Lamont Johnson—for TV)
1986  Flucht in den Norden (Escape to the North) (Engström); Pa Liv Och Död (A Matter of Life and Death)
1988  The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kaufman) (as Sabina)
1989  S/Y Glaedjen (S/Y Joy) (Du Rees); Enemies, a Love Story (Mazursky) (as Masha)
1990  Havana (Pollack) (as Bobby Duran)
1993  Romeo Is Bleeding (Medak) (as Mona Demarkov); Mr. Jones (Figgis) (as Dr. Libbie Bowen)
1994  The Night and the Moment (La Nuit et le Moment) (Tato) (as The Marquise)
1996  Night Falls on Manhattan (Lumet) (as Peggy Lindstrom); The Golden Hour (Hallström)
1998  Polish Wedding (Connelly) (as Jadzia Pzoniak); Hamilton (Zwart) (as Tessie)
1999  Mystery Men (Usher) (as Dr. Annabel Leek); The Ninth Gate (Polanski) (as Liana Telfer)

Publications

By OLIN: articles—

On OLIN: articles—

American Film, November 1989.
“‘Hot in Havana,’” in Fame, November 1990.
Born to actor parents, Lena Olin, one of Sweden’s leading actresses and a member of Ingmar Bergman’s famed company, began her career on stage at the Royal Dramatic Theater where she acted in the classical repertoire, including Shakespeare, August Strindberg, and Anton Chekhov. On stage and in film, Olin has taken on classical and modern roles, but usually plays complicated, ambiguous women, such as the heroines of Strindberg and Lars Noren, a contemporary writer, who, like Strindberg, writes about perplexing Swedish women.

Her acting education in Sweden emphasized the minutiae of physical expression, unlike the education of many American actors who are indoctrinated into Method acting and its preoccupation with emotional states. “In school what was important was not how you felt inside, it was how you showed your feelings with your body and the sound of your voice. It was very practical work,” she remarked. She admits this work was at times boring and tedious, but it has given her an unusually broad and precise physical vocabulary and the capacity for displaying contradictory feelings at the same time.

According to Jean Baudrillard, seduction is the process of letting oneself die in reality and become reconstituted in illusion, an idea that lends itself perfectly to Olin’s screen persona. Her true nature is shy, and she claims to be embarrassed to walk down the street as herself rather than in a character. Yet she plays nude scenes unabashedly because she feels it is someone else who is bare, not her; she holds that “nudity is just another costume.” Her seductiveness is the physical manifestation of fantasy, for herself as well as her audience. Sexuality is made visual and the illusion is unmistakably real. But her characters are more complicated than just being sexual, as they also live in worlds plagued by political upheavals such as Prague Spring, the Holocaust, and the Cuban Revolution. Her seductiveness is the product of courage and remarkable skill.

Following her 1976 film debut in a bit role in Bergman’s Face to Face, she appeared in two more Bergman films, Fanny and Alexander, where she has only a minor role as a maid, and the ultracomplex After the Rehearsal, in which she portrays the chastising actress daughter of a womanizing director’s (Erland Josephson) old lover. She was later playing Cordelia in a production of King Lear, directed by Bergman, when the executive producer of The Unbearable Lightness of Being spotted her. The resultant striking role of the hedonistic Sabina was her American film debut and earned her numerous other film offers. None interested her, however, until Enemies, a Love Story, where she plays Masha, the Russian concentration camp survivor, who uses physical passion to escape horrible memories and the future that awaits her. The portrayal also earned Olin her first Oscar nomination, as Best Supporting Actress.

To date, Olin has yet to match her successes of the late 1980s. Committed to art rather than celebrity, Olin’s opportunities in Hollywood have certainly been limited, evidenced by the consecutive failures of Havana, Romeo Is Bleeding, and Mr. Jones. Her outrageous performance as a sexy Mafia hit woman in the second of these three, however, showed that she will simply need to seek out the right roles (and films) to recapture her earlier success.

—Kelly Otter

OLIVIER, (Lord) Laurence

Nationality: British. Born: Laurence Kerr Olivier in Dorking, Surrey, 22 May 1907. Education: Attended Church of All Saints Choir School, London; St. Edward’s School, Oxford, 1921–24; Central School of Speech Training and Dramatic Art, London. Family: Married 1) the actress Jill Esmond, 1930 (divorced 1940), son: Tarquin; 2) the actress Vivien Leigh, 1940 (divorced 1960); 3) the actress Joan Plowright, 1961, son: Richard, daughters: Tamsin and Julie. Career: 1925—assistant stage manager and understudy, St. Christopher Theatre, Letchworth; stage debut in Macbeth; 1926–28—member of Birmingham Repertory Company; 1930—film debut in Too Many Crooks; 1941–44—served in the Fleet Air Arm, mainly in entertainment capacity; 1944–49—director of the Old Vic company; 1945—directed first film, Henry V; 1951—co-starred with Vivien Leigh in Shaw’s Caesar and Cleopatra and Shakespeare’s Antony and Cleopatra on alternate nights, in London and New York; 1961—in mini-series The Power and the Glory; 1962–65—director of Chichester Festival Theatre; 1965–73—director of the emerging National Theatre (one of the auditoria in the new building is named the Olivier Theatre); 1976—produced a series of plays for Granada Television; in TV mini-series Jesus of Nazareth, 1977, Brideshead

!Laurence Olivier in Henry V

Films as Actor:

1930 Too Many Crooks (G. King) (as the Man); The Temporary Widow (Murder for Sale) (Ucicky) (as Peter Billie)
1931 Friends and Lovers (Schartzinger) (as L. Nichols); Potiphar’s Wife (Her Strange Desire) (Elvey) (as Straker); The Yellow Ticket (The Yellow Passport) (Walsh) (as Julian Rolphe)
1932 Westward Passage (Milton) (as Nick Allen)
1933 No Funny Business (Stafford) (as Clive Dering); Perfect Understanding (Gardner) (as Nicholas Randall)
1935 Moscow Nights (I Stand Condemned) (Asquith) (as Captain Ignatoff)
1936 As You Like It (Czinner) (as Orlando); Conquest of the Air (Korda) (as Vincent Lunardi); Fire over England (William K. Howard) (as Michael Ingolby)
1937 21 Days (Twenty-One Days Together; The First and the Last) (Dean) (as Larry Durant)
1938 The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan) (as Logan)
1939 Wuthering Heights (Wyler) (as Heathcliff); Q Planes (Clouds over Europe) (Wheelan) (as Tony McVane)
1940 Pride and Prejudice (Leonard) (as Mr. Darcy); Rebecca (Hitchcock) (as Maxim de Winter)
1941 That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (Korda) (as Admiral Lord Nelson); 49th Parallel (The Invaders) (Powell) (as Johnnie); Words for Battle (Jennings) (as commentator)
1943 The Demi-Paradise (Adventure for Two) (Asquith) (as Ivan Kouzenetsoff)
1944 The Volunteer (Powell and Pressburger—doc)
1951 The Magic Box (Boulting) (as PC 94 B); Carrie (Wyler) (as George Hurstwood)
1959 The Devil’s Disciple (Hamilton) (as General “Gentleman Johnnie” Burgoyne)
1960 Spartacus (Kubrick) (as Crassus); The Entertainer (Richardson) (as Archie Rice)
1962 Term of Trial (Glendive) (as Graham Weir)
1965 Bunny Lake Is Missing (Preminger) (as Supt. Newhouse)
1966 Othello (Burge) (title role); Khartoum (Dearden) (as the Mahdi)
1968 The Shoes of the Fisherman (Anderson) (as Premier Kamenev); Romeo and Juliet (Zeffirelli) (as speaker of the Prologue and the Epilogue)
1969 The Dance of Death (Giles) (as army captain); Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (as Sir Hugh Dowding); Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Sir John French)
1970 David Copperfield (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Mr. Creakle)
1971 Nicholas and Alexandra (Schaffner) (as Prime Minister Witte)
1972 Sleuth (Mankiewicz) (as Andrew Wyke)
1973 Lady Caroline Lamb (Bolt) (as Duke of Wellington); Long Day’s Journey into Night (Blakemore and Wood—for TV) (as James Tyrone); The Merchant of Venice (Miller and Sichel—for TV) (as Shylock)
1975 Love among the Ruins (Cukor—for TV) (as Sir Arthur Granville-Jones)
1976 Marathon Man (Schlesinger) (as Szell); The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (Ross) (as Professor Moriarty); Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Moore—for TV) (as Big Daddy)
1977 Come Back, Little Sheba (Narizziano—for TV) (as Doc); A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as Dr. Spaander)
1978 The Betsy (Petrie) (as Loren Hardeman Sr.); The Boys from Brazil (Schaffner) (as Ezra Lieberman)
1979 A Little Romance (Hill) (as Julius); Dracula (Badham) (as Van Helsing)
1980 The Jazz Singer (Fleischer) (as Cantor Rabinovitch)
1981 Inchon (Terence Young) (as Gen. MacArthur); Clash of the Titans (Desmond Davis) (as Zeus)
1982 A Voyage Round My Father (Rakoff—for TV) (as Father)
1983 Wagner (Palmer—for TV) (as Pfeifer); A Talent for Murder (Rakoff—for TV); Mister Halpen and Mister Johnson (Rakoff—for TV) (as Mr. Halpen); King Lear (Elliott—for TV) (title role)
1984 The Jigsaw Man (Terence Young) (as Adm. Sir Gerald Scraith); The Bounty (Donaldson) (as Adm. Hood); Ebony Tower (Knights—for TV)
1985 Wild Geese II (Hunt) (as Rudolf Hess)
1986 Lost Empires (Grine—for TV); Directed by William Wyler (Slesin—doc) (as himself)
1989 War Requiem (Jarman) (as Old Soldier)

Films as Actor and Director:

1945 Henry V (title role, + pr)
1948 Hamlet (title role, + pr)
1953 The Beggar’s Opera (as MacHeath, pr only)
1955 Richard III (title role, + pr)
1957 The Prince and the Showgirl (as Grand Duke Charles, + pr)
1970 The Three Sisters (released in U.S. in 1974) (as Dr. Chebutikin)

Publications

By OLIVIER: books—

By OLIVIER: article—

On OLIVIER: books—

Lunari, Gigi, Laurence Olivier, Bologna, 1959.
It is not with the play Henry V that the film is immediately and directly concerned, but with the performance of Henry V.
As an accomplished stage actor, his endeavor in film can thus be seen as one that pertains to a language specific to cinema as well as the immediacy of theatricality.

Richard III is Olivier’s triumph as director/star, a performance straight out of Lon Chaney’s The Penalty, dignified by language and stagecraft. Olivier had discovered in his famous stage Coriolanus that sexual magnetism could make even evil glamorous, and his Richard explored that insight in rich detail. The realization seemed to alarm him. It was years before he dared play another outright monster.

His films of the 1950s and 1960s mostly recreated his stage hits The Entertainer, Othello, The Three Sisters, and The Dance of Death, though he did direct and star opposite Marilyn Monroe in the unsuccessful The Prince and the Showgirl, and appeared in some cameos chosen from the range of international film and television productions that could always use an imposing figure with a commanding voice. His Mahdi in Khartoum used the makeup and mime from Othello, and while the generals, air vice marshals, Russian counts, and epicene Roman commanders he played in everything from Spartacus to The Battle of Britain occasionally seemed taken off the peg at some theatrical supplier, they are never less than memorable.

He returned to more abrasive material as declining health accentuated his hawkish profile and raised his voice to a grating rasp. A querulous Moriarty in The Seven-Per-Cent Solution, Nazi hunter Ezra Lieberman in The Boys from Brazil, and the monster of Marathon Man are all effective creations by a man who had little interest in the cinema, but who used it, like the piano learned in childhood, to pick out a few tunes when the mood took him. The craftsmanship, professionalism, practical intelligence and the highest seriousness that Richard Schickel profoundly admires and fondly remembers can be best summed up by the advice Olivier offered Dustin Hoffman during the making of Marathon Man:

‘“Hoffman kept himself awake for two days so that he could look—and above all, feel—properly haggard for one of his scenes with Olivier. ‘You should learn to act, my dear boy,’ his Lordship murmured. ‘Then you wouldn’t have to put yourself through this sort of thing.‘”

—John Baxter, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

OLMOS, Edward James

Education: Attended East Los Angeles City College and California State University, Los Angeles; studied drama at the Lee Strasberg Institute.

Career: Formed a rock band, Eddie James and the Pacific Ocean, to help pay his college tuition, 1960s; began acting in small stage productions in Los Angeles and appearing in bit roles on such TV series as Kojak, Cannon, CHiPs, Medical Center, and Hawaii Five-O, 1970s; starred as El Pachuco in Zoot Suit on the Los Angeles stage, 1978; appeared in the TV mini-series Evening in Byzantium, 1978; played El Pachuco in New York, 1979; had his first important screen role in The Ballad of Gregorio Cortez, 1982; played Lt. Martin Castillo on the TV series Miami Vice, 1984–89; appeared in the TV mini-series Mario Puzo’s The Fortunate Pilgrim, 1988; formed YOY Productions with director Robert M. Young, 1992; named United States Goodwill Ambassador to UNICEF.

Awards: Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Best Actor, for Zoot Suit, 1978; Best Supporting Actor in a Drama Series Emmy Award, for Miami Vice, 1985; Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role in a Series, Mini-Series or Motion Picture Made for TV Golden Globe, for Miami Vice, 1986; Best Male Lead Independent Spirit Award, for Stand and Deliver, 1987; Women in Film Crystal Award, 1989; Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role in a Series, Mini-Series or Motion Picture Made for TV Golden Globe, for The Burning Season, 1994; Lone Star Film and Television Award for Best Supporting Actor, for Selena, 1997.

Agent: Artists Agency, 10000 Santa Monica Boulevard, Suite 305, Los Angeles, CA 90067, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1975 aloha, bobby and rose (Mutrux) (small role)
1977 Alambre! (Robert M. Young) (as drunk)
1980 Fakkatsu no hi (Virus) (Fukasaku) (as Captain López)
1981 Three Hundred Miles for Stephanie (Ware—for TV) (as Art Vela); Zoot Suit (Valdez) (as El Pacheco); Wolfen (Wadleigh) (as Eddie Holt)
1982 The Ballad of Gregorio Cortez (Robert M. Young) (title role, + co-pr, co-mus); Blade Runner (Ridley Scott) (as Gaff); Sequin (Jesús Salvador Treviño—for TV)
1986  Saving Grace (Robert M. Young) (as Ciolino)
1987  Stand and Deliver (Menendez) (as Jaime Escalante)
1989  Triumph of the Spirit (Robert M. Young) (as Gypsy)
1990  Maria’s Story (Wali and Cohen—doc) (as narrator)
1991  Talent for the Game (Robert M. Young) (as Virgil Sweet)
1993  Roosters (Robert M. Young) (as Gallo); A Million to Juan (A Million to One) (Paul Rodríguez) (as the Angel); Menendez: A Killing in Beverly Hills (Elikann—for TV) (as José Menendez)
1994  The Burning Season (Frankenheimer—for TV) (as Wilson Pinheiro)
1995  Mirage (Williams) (as Matteo Juárez); My Family (Mi Familia) (Nava) (as Paco, the narrator); Slave of Dreams (Robert M. Young—for TV) (as Potipher)
1996  Caught (Robert M. Young) (as Joe); Dead Man’s Walk (Simoneau—mini for TV) (as Captain Salazar); The Limbic Region (Pattinson—for TV) (as Luca)
1997  Hollywood Confidential (Villalobos—for TV) (as Stan Navarro); Selena (Nava) (as Abraham Quintanilla); Death in Granada (The Disappearance of Garcia Lorca) (Zurinaga) (as Roberto Lozano); 12 Angry Men (Friedkin—for TV) (as Juror #11)
1998  The Wonderful Ice Cream Suit (Gordon) (as Vamenos); The Taking of Pelham One Two Three (Félix Enriquez Alcalá) (as Det. Anthony Piscotti); The Wall (Sargent)
1999  The Story of Fathers & Sons (Leonard, Ryan—for TV) (as himself); Bonanno: A Godfather’s Story (Poulette—for TV) (as Salvatore Maranzano); The Unfinished Journey (Spielberg—for TV) (short) (as Narrator)
2000  The Road to El Dorado (Bergeron, Finn, Paul, Silverman) (voice of Chief Tannabok); Gossip (Guggenheim) (as Detective Curtis)

Other Films:

1992  American Me (d, co-pr, ro as Santana Montoya)
1999  Americanos: Latino Life in the United States (pt)

Publications

By OLMOS: articles—

Interview with M. Seligson, in Playboy (Chicago), June 1989.
Interview with S. Muzaferija, in Ekran (Ljubljana), vol. 18, no. 1–2, 1993.

On OLMOS: articles—

Aufderheide, Pat, “Reel Life,” in Mother Jones (San Francisco), April 1988.

Edward James Olmos is a savvy, street-smart performer who is one of the rare Hispanic Americans to have found major stardom on stage, screen, and television. After years of knocking around Los Angeles playing theater and television roles, his breakthrough came when he was cast in the Los Angeles stage production of Zoot Suit, a stylized musical drama blending fact with fiction. Zoot Suit details the plight of the leader of a gang of Mexican Americans who are about to do time in San Quentin for their part in the zoot suit riots in 1942 Los Angeles. Olmos’s role was the pivotal one in the scenario: El Pachuco, a mythical character who is the embodiment of the dashing, self-respecting, virile Latino who so disrupted the complacency of Caucasian Californians back in the 1940s. Olmos offered a dynamic, star-making performance as El Pachuco, playing the role for a year-and-a-half on the Los Angeles and New York stages, and again in the less-than-successful screen adaptation.

Olmos soon was to gain his foothold as a screen actor in a film with which he remains extremely proud: The Ballad of Gregorio Cortez, a turn-of-the-twentieth-century drama about a now-legendary Mexican American, unjustly accused of murder, who manages to elude a 600-man Texas posse. The film was directed by veteran independent filmmaker Robert M. Young, who has become the actor’s close friend and colleague. Over the years, they have worked on several projects (from 1977’s Alambrista!, in which Olmos had a small role, to 1996’s Caught).

To date, Olmos’s best screen role has been in Stand and Deliver, a based-on-fact story featuring a most unusual movie hero: Jaime Escalante, a Bolivian-born computer scientist who relinquished a high-paying job to teach math in an East Los Angeles barrio high school. The bespectckled Escalante’s slight paunch and nondescript appearance in no way obscure his intense dedication to his job, as he inspires his young Hispanic charges to pass an Advanced Placement calculus test. Olmos transformed his physical appearance to become Escalante; he gained 40 pounds, and each day endured an excruciating makeup process in order to camouflage his own abundant head of hair. For his efforts, he earned a well-deserved Best Actor Academy Award nomination.

Olmos claims that he often has been offered—and regularly turns down—roles as stereotypical Hispanics, or throwaway parts in mindlessly entertaining Hollywood fare. “If I’d accepted them, I feel
I would be compromising myself,’’ he has declared. ‘‘I’m only interested in making films that I can be proud to take into my community.’’ Not all of Olmos’s films have been of the social-issue variety; he offered sharp performances in Selena, playing the devoted, watchful father of the murdered Tejano singer, and Caught, an atmospheric Postman Always Rings Twice re-working in which he is a long-married fish store proprietor whose life is disrupted when sexual sparks fly between his wife and a drifter. Notwithstanding, many of the actor’s roles have been infused with a political consciousness. This certainly is the case with El Pachuco, Gregorio Cortez, and Jaime Escalante. It is true in the TV movie The Burning Season, in which he plays the Brazilian political activist/union leader Wilson Pinheiro, as well as in My Family, a warmhearted multigenerational chronicle of a Mexican-American clan from the 1920s through 1980s. Given Olmos’s status as an elder statesman of Latino stars, it is appropriate that his role is that of the narrator, the chronicler of the Sánchez family saga.

Most significantly, this also is the case with the film in which Olmos made his directorial debut: the gritty, realistically rendered American Me. Olmos stars as a character who is the polar opposite of Jaime Escalante: Santana, a career felon and ‘‘child of the Pachuco riots of the 1940s.’’ The film opens with a recreation of the zoot suit melee; in this regard, American Me is linked to the time and place depicted in Zoot Suit. Santana becomes immersed in the gang lifestyle while a teenager, and eventually does a lengthy prison stretch. If he starts out as an amateur punk, he earns his professional credentials while incarcerated as he builds his criminal empire from within the California penal system.

American Me does not finger-point at racism as an explanation for the existence of a man such as Santana. Instead, the film offers the character as a by-product of the erosion of society in general. In no way does Olmos idealize his character; the Variety reviewer was on target when he called Santana ‘‘one of the least romanticized film gangsters since Paul Muni’s Scarface.’’ Yet despite its good intentions, American Me has been viewed on two levels: as a cautionary tale about contemporary America, that serves to indent the violence and chaos of society; and as a textbook on how to build a criminal empire from scratch. For this reason, it was and remains highly controversial.

Finally, and most impressively, Edward James Olmos is unlike the many actors and sports stars from modest backgrounds who upon attaining celebrityhood have slammed the door on their roots. Not only is he deeply concerned about the way in which Hispanics are depicted on movie screens, but he remains active in a hands-on manner in the East Los Angeles community in which he came of age.

—Rob Edelman

ORLOVA, Lyubov

Nationality: Russian. Born: Zvenigorod, Russia, 29 January 1902. Education: Studied music at the Moscow Conservatory. Family: Married to Grigoriy Aleksandrov (film director). Career: Stage actress, 1926–1934; worked in cinema and on stage as a member of the Nemirovich-Danchenko musical theater in Moscow. Died: Moscow, Russia, 26 January 1975.

Films as Actress:

1934 Peterburgskaya noch (A Petersburg Night) (Grigori Roshal and Vera Stroyeva); Vesyolye rebyata (Jolly Fellows) (Grigoriy Aleksandrov) (as Anyuta)
1936 Tsirk (Circus) (Aleksandrov) (as Marion Dixon)
1938 Volga-Volga (Aleksandrov) (as “Strelka” Petrova)
1939 Svetlyi put (The Shining Path) (Aleksandrov) (as Tanya Morozova)
1947 Vesna (Spring) (Aleksandrov and Luciano Emmer) (as Irina Nikitina and Vera Shatrova)
1949 Vstrecha na Elbe (Meeting on the Elbe) (Aleksandrov)
1950 Mussorgsky (Grigori Roshal) (as Tatiana Platonova)
1952 Kompozitor Glinka (Man of Music) (Aleksandrov) (as Ludmilla Glinka)
1973 Zvezda and Lyra (Star and Lyra) (Aleksandrov) (as Lira)

Publications

On ORLOVA: books—
Zel’dovich, G., Lyubov’ Orlova, Moscow, 1939.

On ORLOVA: articles—

On ORLOVA: films—
Aleksandrov, Grigoriy, director, Orlova, 1983.

Lyubov Orlova was probably the most glamorous and popular actress of Soviet cinema. In possession of bright eyes and shining teeth, high cheekbones and fine skin, Orlova was a fit and attractive woman radiating exuberant health; when she sang and danced, her smile was irresistible and her charisma unsurpassed. She is believed to be the epitome of the ideal Soviet woman of the 1930s, usually representing a girl of humble origins who attains high position in society due to restless assertiveness, hard work, and optimistic faith in the bright future.

Descending from an old Russian aristocratic family, Orlova even boasted of a childhood photograph alongside old count Leo Tolstoy at his estate in Yasnaya Polyana. After graduating from the Moscow Conservatory in the mid-1920s, she was involved in active stage acting between 1926 and 1934. Until the end of her life she acted in musicals on the stage of Moscow’s Nemirovich-Danchenko musical theater.

Orlova played almost exclusively in films directed by her husband, Grigoriy Aleksandrov. In the early 1930s Aleksandrov had traveled to America in his capacity of an assistant to Sergei Eisenstein, and had worked on the unfinished feature Que Viva Mexico! He was believed to have been particularly impressed with the entertainment quality of the Hollywood studio output, and particularly with the elaborate and lavishly choreographed productions of Busby Berkeley. Back home Aleksandrov set out to develop the specific genre of the Soviet musical, a combination of entertainment and ideology. His wife, the vivacious blonde Lyubov Orlova, became the leading star of these musical comedies, breaking all popularity records in the 1930s. Other more or less permanent members of the team were composer Isaak Dunayevsky, who authored some of the most prominent popular melodies of the time, as well as lyricist Vassili Il’edev-Kumach.

Orlova first starred in Vesolye rebatyta (Jolly Fellows, 1934) where she was relegated a secondary, albeit important role. The lead here was played by vaudeville actor Leonid Utyosov, who appeared as a Crimean shepherd mistakenly taken for a famous musician. The comedy of errors begins at a spa where high-class Muscovites are enchanted by the careless attitudes prevailing in the rustic ambiance. The protagonist in a sheebskin hat plays his pan pipe, and sings and dances joyously amidst animals and cheerful peasants. A series of mix-ups leads Utyosov to the capital where, again by mistake, he ends up on stage of the musical theater and delivers a brilliant performance, with Orlova as a lead star, triumphant in the new stage show.

Orlova came into the spotlight only in Aleksandrov’s next film, Tsirk (Circus, 1936). Here she plays the dazzling Marion Dixon, a blonde American performer. In the opening scenes she is shown barely escaping a crowd of angry white Americans who want to lynch her for having mothered a black baby boy. Next Marion Dixon is seen arriving in Moscow a few years later as a member of a touring circus, working under a German manager, Kneschitz. While in Moscow, she falls in love with a Soviet man, but is blackmailed by Kneschitz who threatens to reveal her secret—the existence of the black child. After a confrontation between the German and the Russian all is resolved happily. In the final scene all people in the circus audience raise and sing in support of Marion Dixon, embracing the black child, who has resurfaced and has found a new home, safe and secure. Besides the memorable music (featuring some of the most popular Soviet songs of all times) and the impressive choreography of some dance numbers, the film disseminates important ideological messages: it proclaims the superiority of communism over capitalism, indicates that the Soviet Union has overcome racism, stresses the antagonism between socialism and fascism, and represents the USSR as a dream shelter for victims of social injustice worldwide.

Volga-Volga (1938) was made at the height of Stalinist repressions; some of the people who worked on the film were exiled, their contribution never credited. Nonetheless, Volga-Volga is said to have been Joseph Stalin’s favorite film and to have been partially made under his personal guidance. Like Jolly Fellows, it is once again a rags-to-riches story, with Orlova (who played here with Soviet cinema star Igor Il’inskiy, a veteran from Meyerhold’s theater) cast as “Strelka” Petrova, a letter carrier from the small town of Melkorechensk who travels up the river to reach the capital and successfully challenge and confront the bureaucrats who have taken charge of amateur theater. A good example of Soviet propaganda, the film has been under critical scrutiny for its exaggerated and idealized representation of small-town life.

The next Alexandrov/Orlova film, the musical Svetlyi put (Shining Path, 1939) is believed to be the epitome of Stalinist glorification. It is yet another socialist Cinderella-type plot: Tanya Morozova is a simple weaver in a textile factory located near Moscow; she becomes a shock worker and ends up in Kremlin where she is awarded the highest Soviet medal, the Order of Lenin; she is then sent by the comrades to train as an engineer; at the top of her ascent she is elected a member of the Supreme Soviet.

World War Two caused a significant interruption in Orlova’s work by imposing an eight year involuntary career-break at a time when she was at her most active. After the war, now over forty, she starred in Vesna (Spring, 1947), alongside the titan of Soviet cinema, Nikolai Cherkassov. In Vesna Orlova played a double role: on the one hand she was the scientist Irina Nikitina, and on the other the actress Vera Shatrova, who is supposed to play a character modeled after Nikitina. Meant to entertain, the film evolves around endless quid-pro-quo’s and is set in luxurious interiors far removed from the drab post-war Soviet reality.

In the 1952 biopic of Russian composer Glinka, a film in which pianist Svyatoslav Richter had a cameo as Franz Liszt, a mature Orlova appeared as the musician’s wife. This was her next to last role for the cinema, for she appeared the previous year in a supporting role in yet another musical biopic, this time of composer Mussorgsky, and in 1949 in the war drama Vstrecha na Elbe (Meeting on the Elbe, 1949).

Several years after Orlova retired from cinema, an attempt was made to replicate and continue her charismatic presence, albeit with a lesser success. Eldar Ryazanov’s early musical comedy, Karnavalnaya noch (Carnival Night, 1956), starred Lyudmilla Gurchenko, who was supposed to succeed Orlova. But while Gurchenko became a leading Soviet star in her own right, she never reached the popularity of Orlova.

Orlova worked in theater until her death in 1975. She was survived by Aleksandrov, who directed a biopic dedicated to her memory shortly before his own death. Her grave at the Moscow Novodevichye cemetery is still frequented by admirers.

—Dina Iordanova

O’SULLIVAN, Maureen

Born: Roscommon, Ireland, 17 May 1911. Education: Attended Roe hampton School, London. Family: Married 1) the director John Farrow, 1936 (died 1963), seven children: Michael, Patrick, the actress Mia Farrow, John, Prudence, Tisa, Stephanie; 2) James E. Cushing, 1983. Career: 1929—film debut in Song o’ My Heart; contract with Fox, followed by short contracts with other studios; 1932–42—contract with MGM; first of six Tarzan films, Tarzan, the Ape Man; 1942–48—off the screen; 1963—on stage in Roomful of Maureen O’Sullivan (left) with Johnny Weismuller and Johnny Sheffield in Tarzan

O’SULLIVAN ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

Films as Actress:

1930 Song o’ My Heart (Borzage) (as Eileen O’Brien); So This Is London (Blystone) (as Elinor Worthing); Just Imagine (David Butler) (as LN-18); The Princess and the Plumber (Korda) (as Princess Louise)

1931 A Connecticut Yankee (David Butler) (as Alisande); Skyline (Taylor) (as Kathleen Kearny); The Silver Lining (Thirty Days) (Crosland) (as Joyce Moore); The Big Shot (The Optimist) (Murphy) (as Doris)

1932 Tarzan, the Ape Man (Van Dyke) (as Jane Parker); Fast Companions (The Information Kid) (Neumann) (as Sally); Skyscraper Souls (Selwyn) (as Lynn Harding); Strange Interlude (Leonard) (as Madeline); Okay America (Penalty of Fame) (Garnett) (as Miss Barton); Payment Deferred (Mendes) (as Winnie Marble)

1933 Robber’s Roost (Louis King) (as Helen); The Cohens and the Kellys in Trouble (Stevens) (as Mollie Kelly); Tugboat Annie (LeRoy) (as Pat Severn); Stage Mother (Brabin) (as Shirley Lorraine)

1934 Tarzan and His Mate (Gibbons and Conway) (as Jane Parker); The Thin Man (Van Dyke) (as Dorothy Wynant); Hide-Out (Van Dyke) (as Pauline); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin) (as Henrietta)

1935 David Copperfield (Cukor) (as Dora); West Point of the Air (Rosson) (as Skip Carter); Cardinal Richelieu (Rowland V. Lee) (as Lenore); The Flame Within (Goulding) (as Lillian Belton); Anna Karenina (Brown) (as Kitty); Woman Wanted (Seitz) (as Ann); The Bishop Misbehaves (Dupont) (as Hester Grantham)

1936 The Voice of Bugle Ann (Thorpe) (as Camden Terry); Tarzan Escapes (Thorpe) (as Jane Parker); The Devil Doll (Browning) (as Lorraine Lavond)

1937 A Day at the Races (Wood) (as Judy); The Emperor’s Candlesticks (Fitzmaurice) (as Maria); Between Two Women (Surrounded by Women) (Seitz) (as Claire Donahue); My Dear Miss Aldrich (Seitz) (as Martha Aldrich)
1938 A Yank at Oxford (Conway) (as Molly Beaumont); Hold That Kiss (Marin) (as June Evans); Port of Seven Seas (Whale) (as Madelon); The Crowd Roars (Thorpe) (as Sheila Carson); Spring Madness (Simon) (as Alexandra Benson)

1939 Let Us Live (Brahm) (as Mary Roberts); Tarzan Finds a Son (Thorpe) (as Jane)

1940 Sporting Blood (Sterling Metal) (Simon) (as Linda Lockwood); Pride and Prejudice (Leonard) (as Jane Bennet)

1941 Maisie Was a Lady (Marin) (as Abigail Rawlston); Tarzan’s Secret Treasure (Thorpe) (as Jane)

1942 Tarzan’s New York Adventure (Thorpe) (as Jane)

1948 The Big Clock (Farrow) (as Georgette Stroud)

1950 Where Danger Lives (Farrow) (as Julie)

1952 Bonzo Goes to College (de Cordova) (as Marion Drew); No Resting Place (Rotha) (as Nan Kyle)

1953 All I Desire (Sirk) (as Sara Harper); Mission over Korea (Sears) (as Nancy Slocum)

1954 Duffy of San Quentin (Men behind Bars) (Doniger) (as Gladys Duffy); The Steel Cage (Doniger) (as Gladys Duffy)

1957 The Tall T (Boetticher) (as Doretta Mims)

1958 Wild Heritage (Haas) (as Emma Breslin)

1965 Never Too Late (Yorkin) (as Edith Lambert)

1970 The Phynx (Katzin) (as herself)

1972 The Crooked Hearts (Sandrich—for TV)

1976 The Great Houdinis (Shavelson—for TV) (as Lady Doyle)

1985 Too Scared to Scream (Lo Bianco) (as Mother)

1986 Hannah and Her Sisters (Woody Allen) (as Norma, Hannah’s mother); Peggy Sue Got Married (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Elizabeth Alvorg)

1987 Stranded (Fuller) (as Grace Clark)

1988 Good Old Boy (for TV) (as Aunt Sue)

1992 The Habituation of Dragons (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV) (as Miss Helen Taylor); With Murder in Mind (With Savage Intent) (Tuchner—for TV) (as Aunt Mildred)

1994 Hart to Hart: Home Is Where the Hart Is (Peter R. Hunt—for TV) (as Eleanor Biddlecomb)

1996 Tarzan: The Legacy of Edgar Rice Burroughs (as interviewee)

Publications

By O’SULLIVAN: article—

“Maureen O’Sullivan,” interview with Kingsley Canham, in Focus on Film (London), Summer 1974.

On O’SULLIVAN: book—

On O’SULLIVAN: articles—

* * *

Maureen O’Sullivan’s place in film history unfortunately has been relegated to that of an animal-skin-clad girl making a home for the king of the jungle. Although not her first film, Tarzan, the Ape Man was her first important role and her recitation of the words “Tarzan” and “Jane” (not “You Tarzan, me Jane” as so often misquoted) made her instantly famous to audiences worldwide. She appeared in several other Tarzan films with Johnny Weissmuller, but her contract at MGM also placed her in a large number of roles, usually playing the star’s sister, best friend, or other secondary leads. She had a lovely speaking voice and a delicate beauty which suggested “well-bred young English lady” roles, such as the flighty Dora in David Copperfield, Henrietta in The Barretts of Wimpole Street, and the oldest sister, Jane, in Pride and Prejudice.

In the 1940s, when O’Sullivan was still in her prime and very active in films, she semiretired from acting to be a mother to her large family and a wife to the writer-director John Farrow, with whom she worked in the 1948 thriller The Big Clock. The marriage lasted until Farrow’s death in 1963 and produced, among its seven children, the actress Mia Farrow. During the 1950s O’Sullivan made a few films and did some television work, but she did not have any important roles until after John Farrow’s death when she went to Broadway and starred in the successful comedy Never Too Late. After the long run of the play, it was turned into a film in which O’Sullivan again played opposite her Broadway co-star, Paul Ford. In the film, a gentle comedy, Ford and O’Sullivan, the middle-aged parents of a married daughter, discover that they are going to have another baby. Although she was well into her fifties, O’Sullivan was still very attractive and displayed a fine sensibility for light comedy, something which she seldom, if ever, was able to do as an ingenue.

In the 1980s, O’Sullivan’s screen career was briefly jump-started in Woody Allen’s Hannah and Her Sisters, cast as the mother of the character played by daughter Mia. Later on, she became a vocal supporter of her daughter (and denouncer of Allen) in the wake of the notorious Soon-Yi affair.

—Patricia King Hanson, updated by Rob Edelman

O’TOOLE, Peter

937
Actor, British Academy, for Lawrence of Arabia, 1962; Best Actor, U.S. National Society of Film Critics, for The Stunt Man, 1980; also several Italian awards. Address: 98 Heath Street, London NW3, England.

Films as Actor:

1960
Kidnapped (Stevenson) (as Robin MacGregor); The Savage Innocents (Ombre Bianche) (Nicholas Ray) (as 1st Trooper); The Day They Robbed the Bank of England (Guillermin) (as Captain Fitch)

1962
Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (title role)

1964
Becket (Glennie) (as King Henry II)

1965
What’s New Pussycat? (Clive Donner) (as Michael James); Lord Jim (Richard Brooks) (title role); The Sandpiper (Minnelli) (as voice)

1966
The Bible . . . in the Beginning (The Bible; La Bibbia) (Huston) (as the Three Angels); How to Steal a Million (Wyler) (as Simon Dermott)

1967
Night of the Generals (Litvak) (as General Tanz); Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as Piper)

1968
Great Catherine (Fleming) (as Captain Charles Edstaston); The Lion in Winter (Harvey) (as Henry II)

1969
Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Wood) (as Arthur Chipping); Country Dance (Brotherly Love) (J. Lee Thompson) (as Sir Charles Henry Arbuthnot Pinkerton Ferguson)

1971
Murphy’s War (Yates) (as Murphy)

1972
The Ruling Class (Medak) (as Jack, 14th Earl of Gurney); Man of La Mancha (Hiller) (as Cervantes/Don Quixote)

1973
Under Milk Wood (Sinclair) (as Captain Cat)

1975
Man Friday (Gold) (as Robinson Crusoe); Rosebud (Preminger) (as Larry Martin); Foxtrot (The Other Side of Paradise) (Ripstein); Rogue Male (Clive Donner—for TV) (as The Earl)

1977
Power Play (Burke) (as Col. Zeller)

1979
Zula Dawn (Hickox) (as Lord Chelmsford)

1980
The Stunt Man (Rush) (as Eli Cross); Caligula (Brass—produced in 1977) (as Tiberius)

1981
My Favorite Year (Benjamin) (as Alan Swann); The Antagonists (Sagal—for TV)

1983
Svengali (Harvey—for TV); Pygmalion (Cooke—for TV) (as Henry Higgins)

1984
Supergirl (Szwarc) (as Zaltar); Sherlock Holmes and the Baskerville Curse (Graham) (as voice); Kim (Davies—for TV)

1985
Creator (Passer) (as Harry)

1986
Club Paradise (Ramis) (as Gov. Anthony Croyden Hayes)

1987
The Last Emperor (Bertolucci) (as Reginald Johnston)
1988  High Spirits (Neil Jordan) (as Peter Plunkett)
1989  In una notta di chiaro di luna (On a Moonlit Night) (Wertmüller); Dark Angel (Hammond—for TV)
1990  Wings of Fame (Votocêk) (as Cesar Valentini); The Rainbow Thief (Jodorowsky) (as Prince Meleagre); Isabelle Eberhardt (Pringle) (as Major Lyautey); The Nutcracker Prince (Schibli) (as voice of Pantaloon); The Pied Piper (Crossing to Freedom) (Norman Stone—for TV) (as John Sidney Howard)
1991  King Ralph (Ward) (as Willingham)
1992  Rebecca’s Daughters (Francis) (as Lord Sarn); The Seventh Coin (Soref) (as Emil Saber)
1996  Gulliver's Travels (Sturridge—for TV) (as Emperor of Lilliput)
1997  Fairy Tale: A True Story (Sturridge) (as Sir Arthur Conan Doyle)
1998  Phantoms (Chappelle) (as Timothy Flyte); Coming Home (Giles Foster) (as Colonel Carey-Lewis)
1999  The Manor (Berris) (as Mr. Ravencroft); Molokai: The Story (Chappelle) (as William Williamson); Joan of Arc (Duguay—for TV) (Bishop Cauchon)

Publications

By O’TOOLE: books—

By O’TOOLE: articles—

On O’TOOLE: books—

On O’TOOLE: articles—

McGillivray, David, “‘Peter O’Toole,’” in Focus on Film (London), Summer 1972.

* * *

Losing themselves in the hollows of Peter O’Toole’s craggy face in piddling television escapism such as Gulliver’s Travels, his fans can flash backward to the more salubrious time when he was a blond god capable of standing astride a David Lean epic. Reduced to appearing in stentorian show-and-tell cameos, O’Toole has become a sort of John Barrymore for the nineties.

A promising light on London’s West End and a potential matinee idol in minor films, O’Toole beat out Brando and Albert Finney for the coveted role of Lawrence of Arabia and breathed magnetic life-force into that enigmatic figure. Burnished by the sun and bundled up smashingly in a burnoose, a star was born. Like a lover with a fixation on piercing blue eyes, the camera could not get enough of him, but the ravishing-looking O’Toole was never interested in stripped-to-the-waist love god stardom.

Despite forays into the fading Hollywood studio system, O’Toole never seemed comfortable twinkling at leading ladies in What’s New Pussycat? or How to Steal a Million. Only when he brought passion to a role did he seem like a star. A shockingly changeable Henry II in Becket was resoundingly more forceful than any of the Anouilh’s stage play interpreters such as Olivier and Anthony Quinn; O’Toole followed this regal triumph with a robust revisit to the same king in The Lion in Winter, even if that stage comedy was misinterpreted on film as a melodrama. Oddly touching in two deteriorative musicals made bearable by his genius (Goodbye, Mr. Chips and Man of La Mancha), he compensated for commonplace flops in the seventies by balancing them with exemplary turns such as his perfectly nuanced hit on vocal tricks and mannerisms; after all, he is a man brave enough to manage bearable by his genius (Goodbye, Mr. Chips and Man of La Mancha), he compensated for commonplace flops in the seventies by balancing them with exemplary turns such as his perfectly nuanced hit on vocal tricks and mannerisms; after all, he is a man brave enough to manage bearable by his genius (Goodbye, Mr. Chips and Man of La Mancha), he compensated for commonplace flops in the seventies by balancing them with exemplary turns such as his perfectly nuanced hit on vocal tricks and mannerisms; after all, he is a man brave enough to manage bearable by his genius (Goodbye, Mr. Chips and Man of La Mancha), he compensated for commonplace flops in the seventies by balancing them with exemplary turns such as his perfectly nuanced hit

---

Robert Pardi
PACINO, Al

Nationality: American. Born: Alfredo James Pacino in New York City, 25 April 1940. Education: Attended High School of the Performing Arts, New York; Herbert Berghof Studio under Charles Laughton; Actors Studio, New York, from 1966. Career: Worked as mail boy, in the offices of Commentary magazine, a movie usher, and building superintendent; then actor off-off-Broadway; 1969—Broadway debut in Does the Tiger Wear a Necktie?; film debut in Me, Natalie; 1970—member of the Lincoln Center repertory theater; director of stage play Rats in Boston; 1977—in stage play The Basic Training of Pavlo Hummel in Boston, and New York; 1982–84—co-artistic director, Actors Studio; 1984—London stage debut in American Buffalo. Awards: Best Supporting Actor, National Board of Review, Best Actor, National Society of Film Critics, for The Godfather, 1972; Best Actor, National Board of Review, Best Motion Picture Actor—Drama, Golden Globe, for Serpico, 1973; Best Actor, British Academy Award, for The Godfather, Part II, 1974; Best Actor, British Academy Award, Best Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, Best Actor, San Sebastian International Film Festival, for Dog Day Afternoon, 1975; Best Actor, Academy Award, Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture—Drama, Golden Globe Award, for Scent of a Woman, 1992; Chevalier dans l’Ordre des Arts et de Lettres, 1995; Outstanding Directorial Achievement in Documentary, Directors Guild of America, Best Actor, Boston Society of Film Critics Awards, for Donnie Brasco, 1997. Agent: c/o CAA 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1969  Me, Natalie (Coe) (as Tony)
1971  Panic in Needle Park (Schatzberg) (as Bobby)
1972  The Godfather (Coppola) (as Michael Corleone)
1973  Scarecrow (Schatzberg) (as Lion); Serpico (Lumet) (as Frank Serpico)
1974  The Godfather, Part II (Coppola) (as Michael Corleone)
1975  Dog Day Afternoon (Lumet) (as Sonny)
1977  Bobby Deerfield (Pollack) (as Bobby Deerfield)
1979  . . . And Justice for All (Jewison) (as Arthur Kirkland)
1980  Cruising (Friedkin) (as Steve Burns)
1982  Author! Author! (Hiller) (as Travalian)
1983  Scarface (De Palma) (as Tony Montana)
1985  Revolution (Hudson) (as Tom Dobb)
1989  Sea of Love (Becker) (as Frank Keller)
1990  Dick Tracy (Beatty) (as Big Boy Caprice); The Godfather, Part III (Coppola) (as Michael Corleone)
1991  Frankie and Johnny (Garry Marshall) (as Johnny)
1992  Scent of a Woman (Brest) (as Lt. Col. Frank Slade); Glengarry Glen Ross (Foley) (as Ricky Roma)
1993  Carlito’s Way (De Palma) (as Carlito Brigante); Jonas in the Desert (as Himself)
1995  Two Bits (A Day to Remember) (James Foley) (as Gitano Sabatoni); Heat (Michael Mann) (as Vincent Hanna)
1996  City Hall (Becker) (as Mayor John Pappas); Donnie Brasco (Newell) (as Lefty Ruggiero)
1997  The Devil’s Advocate (Hackford) (as John Milton)
1999  The Insider (Mann) (as Lowell Bergman); Any Given Sunday (Stone) (as Tony D’Amato)

Film as Director:

1996  Looking for Richard (+ ro as Richard III, pr, co-sc)
1999  Chinese Coffee (+ ro as Harry)

Publications

By PACINO: articles—

On PACINO: books—

On PACINO: articles—

Al Pacino’s career is connected to that of his Italian-American contemporary, Robert De Niro. Both New York City-born, they each became movie stars in the early 1970s, and have more often than not played vividly realized characters who exist (on both sides of the law) within contemporary urban milieus. Pacino’s first major role is Michael Corleone in The Godfather; De Niro played Michael’s father in the sequel, The Godfather, Part II. Two decades later, they were masterly paired in Heat, with Pacino the cop who obsessively tracks De Niro’s hood. Finally, and most importantly, their acting styles clearly derive from the Method school, with Pacino remaining an important force in the continuation and development of New York’s famed Actors Studio.

Pacino’s acting roots are apparent in his earliest performances, which emphasize spontaneity, improvisation, and a flamboyance of manner and expression to a point where acting threatens to become the films’ raison d’être. This is precisely the case in his roles as the young junkie in Panic in Needle Park, the drifter who has abandoned his family in Scarecrow, the honest New York cop single-handedly fighting a corrupt police department in Serpico, and the would-be bankrobber who desires to finance his lover’s sex change operation in Dog Day Afternoon. It is his appearances in these films (as well as The Godfather and The Godfather, Part II) which established Pacino as one of the 1970s’ most important stars. His performances in the first four are tours de force of an almost crazed nervous energy combined with a deep intensity and vulnerability. This energy appears at once a positive trait, infectious and irresistible, and a mask, a defense against the constant threat posed by the other characters or forces at work in the story.

But it was his work in the two Godfather films which required Pacino to create a far more complexly psychological characterization. Here, his acting style changes drastically, as he becomes more restrained and understated. His Michael Corleone starts out a young, all-American war hero, a man with decent instincts and the type of guy one would expect to marry, raise a family, and become a pillar of his community. As time passes and Michael finds himself becoming more deeply and inexorably involved in his family’s “business,” Pacino gradually and ever-so-subtly develops his character into a powerful but nonetheless tragic figure: a man who has allowed himself to be seduced and ultimately corrupted, to the point where he is capable of instigating the most vicious and horribly evil actions (such as ordering the murder of Fredo, his own brother). Unlike his psychotic other brother Sonny, who is primarily ruled by his temper and emotions, Michael is an intelligent man who should know better. So his soul becomes tainted, and he becomes at once emotionally repressed and tragically incapable of altering his fate. He is consumed by a cloak of weariness which haunts him, overriding and defining his character more than any amount of power he has achieved. This aspect of his evolving character plays itself out dramatically in the third Godfather film, made a decade and a half after The Godfather, Part II, in which Michael Corleone suffers through the death of his beloved daughter.

Pacino’s career has not been without its share of miscalculations. Chief among them are Cruising, a distasteful, embarrassing thriller in which his character, a New York City cop, goes undercover and enters a gay netherworld in order to seek out a killer; Bobby Deerfield, an awful soaper in which he plays a race car driver romancing a beautiful but seriously ill woman; Revolution, a preposterous Revolutionary War drama in which he is cast as a trapper; and Scarface, by far his worst screen performance, in which he overacts outrageously as a Cuban drug dealer. But Pacino’s stardom remained intact, and he has endured into the 1990s and beyond as a major movie personality whose casting in a film makes that film an event.

—Robin Wood

He ended the 1980s with a solid star turn as another New York cop in Sea of Love, generating sufficient heat in his love scenes with Ellen Barkin and exhibiting the abundant array of emotions experienced by his character. The same is the case in Carlo’s Way, in which he plays a weary, streetwise Puerto Rican criminal attempting to go straight. He was never more ingratiating as an ex-con who falls for a reluctant waitress in Frankie and Johnny; he effectively reprised Michael Corleone in the otherwise disappointing The Godfather, Part III; he was fun to watch as the vividly menacing Big Boy Caprice in Dick Tracy; and he graduated to senior citizen roles, nicely playing a wise old Italian immigrant grandfather in Two Bits, a Depression-era nostalgia piece.

In two of Pacino’s most important 1990s films, he plays flamboyant characters who are, in their manner, aging extensions of his roles in The Panic in Needle Park, Scarecrow, Dog Day Afternoon, and Serpico. He earned a long-overdue Academy Award for Scent of a Woman, playing a blind, cantankerous, ultimately suicidal ex-Army colonel. But he is even better in Glengarry Glen Ross, adapted by David Mamet from his stage play about the pressures on, and frustrations of, a group of real estate salesmen. Pacino plays Ricky Roma, a character who is tough, hard, and slick. Roma is a hotshot who lays a psychological-metaphysical line on his clients like a master manipulator. Those who have come to Roma to inquire about purchasing property are not so much his clients as his victims. As Roma, Pacino offers an acting tour de force. To watch him here, spouting Mamet’s bristling dialogue—at once vivid and knowing, with brush strokes both subtle and broad—is to see a master actor at the top of his form.

The second half of the decade saw Pacino cast as an old-guard pro football coach/raspy-voiced warhorse (in Any Given Sunday); an aging, tired, low-level wiseguy (in Donnie Brasco, playing a character who, on the gangland food chain, is the antithesis of Michael Corleone); a dedicated television newsmagazine producer who is a Woodward/Bernstein clone, and is Serpico-like in his tenacity (in The Insider); and the devil himself, the charismatic, demonic head of a high-powered law firm (in The Devil’s Advocate). Throughout his career, so many of Pacino’s characters, whether cop or con man, are New York City-based. So it was appropriate, then, that in City Hall he played the Mayor of New York. In all these films, Pacino is a delight to watch—particularly when his characters are pointing, shouting, and allowing their emotions to flow across the screen.

Throughout his career, Pacino often has returned to the stage, where he has played Shakespearean roles, including Richard III and Julius Caesar. He entered the directorial ranks in 1996 with a film that was personal and special to him: Looking for Richard, an ambitious documentary that is an ode to the Bard and a reflection of Pacino’s unending fascination with the character of Richard III. In Looking for Richard, Pacino illustrates how Shakespeare writes “great words” with “great meaning,” and teaches the audience to “feel.” He includes man-and-woman-on-the-street interviews that elicit responses to and feelings about Shakespeare, and points out the fallacy that only English actors can play the Bard. Looking for Richard also is an examination of the character of Richard III, with Pacino mounting and casting a production of the play. Primarily, the film works as a welcome reminder of the manner in which the emotions and conflicts of Shakespeare remain ever-relevant to today’s world.

—updated by Rob Edelman

PAGE, Geraldine

Nationality: American. Born: Kirkville, Missouri, 22 November 1924. Education: Attended the Goodman Theatre Dramatic School, Chicago; also studied acting with Uta Hagen. Family: Married 1) Alexander Schneider, 1956 (divorced); 2) the actor Rip Torn; daughter: Angelica; twin sons: Anthony and Jonathan. Career: Actress in Lake Zurich, Illinois, summer theater, four summers; also with Woodstock, Illinois, repertory company for two years; worked in

Films as Actress:

1947 Out of the Night
1953 Hondo (Farrow) (as Angie Lowe); Taxi (Ratoff) (as Florence Albert)
1961 Summer and Smoke (Glenville) (as Alma Winemiller)
1962 Sweet Bird of Youth (Brooks) (as Alexandra Del Lago)
1963 Toys in the Attic (Hill) (as Carrie Berniers)
1964 Dear Heart (Delbert Mann) (as Elvie Johnson)
1966 Monday’s Child (Nilsson); You’re a Big Boy Now (Coppola) (as Margery Chanticleer)
1967 The Happiest Millionaire (Tokar) (as Mrs. Duke)
1968 What Ever Happened to Aunt Alice? (Katzin) (as Mrs. Clair Marrable)
1969 “A Christmas Memory” ep. of Trilogy (Perry—for TV) (as the Woman)
1971 The Beguiled (Siegel) (as Martha); J. W. Coop (Robertson) (as Mama)
1972 Pete ‘n’ Tillie (Ritt) (as Gertrude)
1973 Happy as the Grass Was Green (Hazel’s People) (Davis) (as Anna Witmer)
1974 Live Again, Die Again (Colla—for TV)
1975 Day of the Locust (Schlesinger) (as Big Sister)
1976 Nasty Habits (Hogg) (as Walburga)
1977 The Rescuers (Reitherman, Lounsbury, and Stevens—animation) (as voice of Mme. Medusa); Something for Joey (Antonio—for TV); The Three Sisters (Bogart) (as Olga)
1978 Interiors (Allen) (as Eve)
1981 Honky Tonk Freeway (Schlesinger) (as Sister Mary Clarise); Harry’s War (Merrill) (as Beverley)
An exponent of the Method style of acting, Geraldine Page was best known as a stage performer, particularly for her work in the plays of Tennessee Williams. Her performances in the film versions of Summer and Smoke, as a shy spinster hopelessly in love with her neighbor, and Sweet Bird of Youth, as an aging movie star suffering from a nervous breakdown, established her as a successful and important actress and indicated the wide range of her acting abilities.

In 1953, Page was brought to Hollywood to play opposite John Wayne in Hondo as Angie Lowe, a homesteader with child, abandoned by her husband. Warner Brothers executives were unimpressed with her despite an Oscar nomination; she was not offered another Hollywood film until the 1960s. After the two Tennessee Williams roles, she became somewhat typecast as a spinster or neurotic, as evidenced by her characters in Toys in the Attic, Dear Heart, and You’re a Big Boy Now. Her eccentric image was pushed to its sinister extreme, epitomizing evil behind a sweet facade, in such films as The Beguiled and Whatever Happened to Aunt Alice?, while her comic abilities were showcased in Pete ‘n’ Tillie (notably her frustration when police demand to know her real age).

Woody Allen used the accumulated resonance of her desperately vulnerable character roles when he cast her as the self-pitying wife and overbearing mother of Interiors, a woman whose well-ordered existence is shattered by her husband’s desire for a divorce. Life becomes a strain: a spilled drop of wine at her birthday celebration provides an exquisite moment for Page to eloquently communicate long suffering.

Her stage career continued to be her prime focus, working both on and off Broadway, and accepting only occasional television parts and movie roles. In 1984, Page was awarded a seventh Oscar nomination for The Pope of Greenwich Village, the record for actresses who had yet to win.

The following year, the losing streak was ended with her glorious performance in The Trip to Bountiful as Mrs. Carrie Watts, an aging widow now living in a two-room Houston apartment with her son and overbearing daughter-in-law. Aware her time is near, Mrs. Watts is anxious to make one last trip to Bountiful, the place of her youth. As a woman coping with the sorrows and frustrations of old age dependency, Page brilliantly communicates Mrs. Watts’ tendency for self-dramatization: she will make it to Bountiful if she has to walk the last 12 miles from Harrison. The emotional journey Mrs. Watts takes on this trip allows Page to use effectively the sense memory skills of her Method background: upon her arrival at the homestead, her simple statement “I’m home” is accompanied by a facial expression that magnificently encompasses both the joy of arrival and a sadness over those not present.

—Doug Tomlinson

PALANCE, Jack

Nationality: American. Born: Walter Jack Palahnuik (or Vladimir Palanuik) in Lattimer, Pennsylvania, 18 February 1920 (some sources give 1919). Education: Attended the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; Stanford University, California. Family: Married 1) Virginia Baker, 1949 (divorced), two daughters and one son; 2) Elaine Rogers, 1987. Career: Worked as coal miner, cook, radio repairman, and boxer; then served in World War II as bomber pilot: shot down and needed plastic surgery; after the war studied at Stanford; 1947—debut on Broadway; 1950—film debut in Panic in the Streets; 1956—acclaimed role in TV play Requiem for a Heavyweight; appeared in TV series The Greatest Show on Earth, 1963–64, and Bronk, 1975–76, and in mini-series Buck Rogers, 1980, The Chisholms, 1980, and Buffalo Girls, 1995. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Award for City Slackers, 1991. Agent: c/o Susan Smith & Associates, 121 North San Vicente Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA, 90211, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

(as Walter Jack Palance)

1950 Panic in the Streets (Kazan) (as Blackie)

(as Jack Palance)

1950 Halls of Montezuma (Milestone) (as Pigeon Lane)
1952 Sudden Fear (Miller) (as Lester Blaine)
1953 Shane (Stevens) (as Stark Wilson); Second Chance (Maté) (as Cappy Gordon); Arrowhead (Warren) (as Toriano); Flight to Tangier (Warren) (as Gil Walker); Man in the Attic (Fregonese) (as Slade)
1954 The Silver Chalice (Saville) (as Simon Magus); Sign of the Pagan (Sirk) (as Attila the Hun)
1955 Kiss of Fire (Joseph M. Newman) (as El Tigre); The Big Knife (Aldrich) (as Charles Castle); I Died a Thousand Times (Heisler) (as Roy Earle)
1956 Attack! (Aldrich) (as Lt. Costa)
1957 The Lonely Man (Levin) (as Jacob Wade); House of Numbers (Rouse) (as twin brothers, Bill and Arne Judlow); Flor de mayo (Beyond All Limits) (Gavaldón) (as Gatsby)
1958 The Man Inside (Gilling) (as Milo March)
1959 Ten Seconds to Hell (Aldrich) (as Eric Koertner)
1960 Austerlitz (The Battle of Austerlitz) (Gance) (as Weirother)
1961 I mongoli (The Mongols) (De Toth, Savona, and Freda) (as Ogota); Rosemunda e Alboino (Sword of the Conqueror) (Campogalliani) (as Alboino); Il guidizio universale (The Last Judgment) (De Sica)
1962 Barabba (Barabbas) (Fleischer) (as Torvald); La guerra continua (Warriors Five) (Savona) (as Jack)
1963 Le Mpris (Contempt) (Godard) (as Jeremy Prokosch)
1965 Les Tueurs de San Francisco (Once a Thief) (Nelson) (as Walter Pedak)
1966 The Professionals (Richard Brooks) (as Captain Jesús Raza); The Spy in the Green Hat (Sargent) (as Louis Strago)
1967 Torture Garden (Francis) (as Ronald Wyatt); Kill a Dragon (Moore) (as Rick)
1968 Las Vegas 500 millones (They Came to Rob Las Vegas) (Isasendi) (as Douglas); Marquis de Sade: Justine and Juliet (De Sica)
1969 Il mercenario (The Mercenary; A Professional Gun) (Corbucci) (as Riccioletti); The Desperados (Levin) (as Parson Josiah Gali); Che! (Fleischer) (as Fidel Castro)
1970 The McMasters (Kjellin) (as Kolby); Monte Walsh (Fraker) (as Chet Rollins); Vamos a matar, compañeros! (Compáñeros) (Corbucci) (as Xantos)
1971 The Horsemen (Frankenheimer) (as Tursen); Si puo fare . . . amigo (The Big and the Bad) (Lucidi) (as gunman)
1972 Chato’s Land (Winner) (as Quincey Whitmore); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Jarrott—for TV)
1973 Oklahoma Crude (Kramer) (as Hellman); Te deum (The Con Men) (Castellani)
1974 Dracula (Curtis—for TV) (title role); Crazee (Francis) (as Neil Mottram); The Godchild (Badham—for TV)
1975 The Hatfields and the McCoys (Ware—for TV); The Four Deuces (Bushnell); Africa Express (Lupo); The Diamond Mercenaries (Killer Force) (Guest)
1976 The Great Adventure (Baldanello)
1977 Welcome to Blood City (Sasdy) (as Sheriff Frendlander); I padroni della città (Mr. Scarface; Rulers of the City) (di Leo); Portrait of a Hit Man (Buckhantz) (as Jim Buck)
1978 One Man Jury (Martin) (as Wade); God’s Gun (Kramer)
1979 Dead on Arrival (Martin); Seven from Heaven (Clark); The Shape of Things to Come (McCown) (as Omus); Cocaine Cowboys (Lommel) (as Raf); Buck Rogers in the 25th Century (Haller—for TV); Angels Brigade (Clark); The Last Ride of the Dalton Gang (Curtis—for TV)
1980 The Ivory Axe (Kotani—for TV); Ladyfingers; Without Warning (It Came . . . without Warning) (Clark); Hawk the Slayer (Marcell) (as Voltan)
1982 Alone in the Dark (Sholder) (as Frank Hawkes)
1987 Bagdad Cafe (Out of Rosenheim) (Adlon) (as Rudy Cox)
1988 Gor (Kiersch) (as Xenos); Young Guns (Cain) (as L. G. Murphy)
1993 Batman (Burton) (as Carl Grissom); Outlaw of Gor (Cardos) (as Xenos); Tango and Cash (Konchalovsky) (as Yves Perret)
1991 City Slickers (Underwood) (as Curly)
1992 Solar Crisis (Sarafian) (as Travis); Keep the Change (Tennant—for TV) (as Overstreet); Salmonberries (Adlon)
1993 Cyborg II: Glass Shadows (Schroeder) (as Mercy)
1994 The Swan Princess (Rich) (as voice of Rothbart); Twilight Zone: Rod Serling’s Lost Classics (for TV) (as Jeremy Wheaton); Cops & Robbersons (Ritchie) (as Jack Stone); City Slickers II: The Legend of Curly’s Gold (Weiland) (as Duke Washburn)
1995 Buffalo Girls (Hardy—for TV) (as Bartle Bone)
1997 Treasure Island (voice of Long John Silver); Ebenecer (Jubenville—for TV) (as Ebenecer/Future Scrooge); I’ll Be Home for Christmas (Jerry London) (as Bob)
1998 Marco Polo
1999 Sarah, Plain and Tall: Winter’s End (Jordan—for TV) (as John Witting)

Publications

By PALANCE: article—

Interview with J. Lovitz, in Movieline (Escondido), May 1994.

On PALANCE: articles—

As much as any other actor, the career of Jack Palance has been determined by his physical appearance. His taut-skinned and somewhat Asian features and the legacy of his Slavic background were rendered even more distinctive by the severe burns and resulting plastic surgery he endured after the crash of a bomber he was piloting during World War II. His resulting look never would allow him to be cast as a romantic hero. In short, Palance seemed destined to be typecast as a sadistic heavy.

After some Broadway experience (notably with Elia Kazan), the actor moved on to Hollywood like so many others associated with the Actors Studio. He started out in movies playing creepy villains in prestige films. In Kazan's Panic in the Streets, he is striking if somewhat hysterical as a trigger-happy, plague-stricken hood. In Shane, he is especially menacing as a gunslinger who is the very image of grim death. In Sudden Fear, his character is more outwardly respectable: Lester Blaine, an actor who woos and wins heiresturned-playwright Joan Crawford. Only what she does not know is that he just may be a fortune hunter and killer. This should not be surprising, as Palance simply is not the romantic type. Given his developing screen image, Palance was in character as Blaine is transformed from attentive suitor to outright heavy. The actor's career was off to a fast start, as evidenced by his two Best Supporting Actor Academy Award nominations (for Sudden Fear and Shane).

During this period, Palance also appeared as a villain in a number of costume epics, playing a very satanic Simon Magus in The Silver Chalice and an energetic Attila the Hun in Sign of the Pagan. But his best screen work was to come in several films directed by Robert Aldrich, who perceptively realized that Palance’s daunting appearance could be made to suggest an inner vulnerability. In The Big Knife, he plays a movie star mired in a corrupt Hollywood that serves as a microcosm of American society. In this role, Palance powerfully conveys a moral decay to which he contributes but which eventually traps him as well. In Attack! and Ten Seconds to Hell he plays similar characters, soldiers who are inevitably (and sadly) doomed by their involvement in the deadly business of war.

From the 1960s on, Palance’s career became run of the mill. He appeared in a seemingly endless number of foreign and domestic costume epics, throwaway melodramas and actioners, and uninspired television movies. Occasionally an interesting credit was thrown into the mix: Godard’s Contempt, the Westerns The Professionals and Monte Walsh, and Percy Adlon’s Bagdad Cafe. But Palance for the most part was earning his mortgage money by appearing in the likes of Kill a Dragon, Africa Express, The Diamond Mercenaries, Dead on Arrival, The Last Ride of the Dalton Gang, Gor, Outlaw of Gor, and so on.

In 1991, Palance was fortunate enough to be cast as Curly, the weather-beaten trail boss who interacts with Billy Crystal, in the popular baby boomer comedy City Slickers. His performance won him the Best Supporting Actor Oscar; that, along with his Oscarcast display of physical dexterity, earned him the kind of notoriety and publicity other faded veteran actors only dream of. Curly is a larger-than-life character if there ever was one, and Palance plays him broadly and with a partial wink at the viewer. He appears to be enjoying himself immensely as he offers a deft parody of all of his macho villain characters.

Still, one wishes that the career of Jack Palance had developed differently and that, over the decades, he had been able to maintain the high level of his earliest screen work.

—R. Barton Palmer, updated by Rob Edelman

PALTROW, Gwyneth

Nationality: American. Born: Gwyneth Kate Paltrow, Los Angeles, California, 28 September 1972 (some sources say 1973). Education: Dropped out of University of California to pursue career in acting. Awards: Academy Award, for Shakespeare in Love, 1998. Address: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212–1825, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1991 Shout (Hornaday) (as Rebecca); Hook (Spielberg) (as Young Wendy)

1992 Cruel Doubt (Simoneau—for TV) (as Angela Pritchard)

---

Gwyneth Paltrow in Emma
1993  Flesh and Bone (Kloves) (as Ginnie); Malice (Becker) (as Paula Bell); Deadly Relations (Condon—for TV) (as Carol Fagot Holland)

1994  Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle (Mrs. Parker and the Round Table) (Rudolph) (as Paula Hunt)

1995  Moonlight and Valentino (Anspaugh) (as Lucy Trager); Se7en (Seven) (Fincher) (as Tracy Mills); Jefferson in Paris (Ivory) (as Patsy Jefferson)

1996  Sydney (Hard Eight) (Anderson) (as Clementine); Emma (McGrath) (as Emma Woodhouse); The Pallbearer (Reeves) (as Julie DeMarco)

1998  Shakespeare in Love (Maddalen) (as Viola De Lesseps); A Perfect Murder (Davis) (as Emily Bradford Taylor); Hash (Darby) (as Helen); Sliding Doors (Howitt) (as Helen Quilley); Great Expectations (Cuarón) (as Estella); Out of the Past (Dupre) (voice of Sarah Ome Jewett)

1999  The Talented Mr. Ripley (Minghella) (as Marge Sherwood)

2000  Duets (Bruce Paltrow) (as Liv); Bounce (Roos) (as Abby); The Intern (Lange) (as Herself)

Publications

On PALTROW: articles—

Interview with Jennifer Beals, in Interview (New York), September 1995.

On PALTROW: articles—

* * *

With her unconventional beauty, mastery of accents, and class, Gwyneth Paltrow has a chance to become her generation’s Meryl Streep, provided either experience or training greatly deepen her ability to lose herself in a role. Though she is not formally trained, her acting has gradually improved over the years. And though she was born and raised in California by her parents, actress Blythe Danner and television producer Bruce Paltrow (St. Elsewhere), she has shown herself to be a master of accents, from Texan (Flesh and Bone) to three distinct varieties of British in her three most notable films: Emma, Sliding Doors, and Shakespeare in Love. Director Steve Kloves was stunned by both Paltrow’s acting ability and her ear for accents when he was casting the role of Ginnie, an amoral grifter from Texas who steals jewelry from corpses, for his film Flesh and Bone (1993). Kloves said, when Paltrow entered the audition room, she was all sweetness and light, “but as soon as she read, a veil came over her and she totally inhabited the character.”

Another director who can attest to the authenticity of her accent is Douglas McGrath. “I grew up in Texas, and my friends and I used to just kill ourselves laughing when movie actors did Texas accents. People always sounded like the Clampetts. But Gwyneth did the most impeccable Texas accent in Flesh and Bone.” This was one reason McGrath gave Paltrow the lead in his film Emma (1996), which proved to be her true breakout role. Emma, based on the Jane Austen novel, tells the story of an overindulged rich girl who is so busy meddling in the lives of others that she neglects her own. As an American, Paltrow was petrified of taking the role of one of England’s most beloved literary characters, in a film to be shot in England and filled with some of England’s finest actors. According to Paltrow, growing up she always had a knack for accents, and would occasionally fool people pretending she was British or some other nationality. But when she was cast as Emma Woodhouse she suddenly realized it would take an enormous amount of work because there’s a huge difference between the fake English accent that sounds good and a real one that reflects growing up in a specific location in England, and that requires changing the placement of your tongue and jaw. She needn’t have worried about tackling the role; her accent and the emotional tone she struck were so right, so light and graceful and witty, that her performance was embraced on both sides of the Atlantic.

She was offered roles in Titanic and The Avengers, but turned down both for the lead in Peter Howitt’s Sliding Doors (1998), in which she plays the lead character in a dual role. Running for a subway train after being fired from her job, Helen Quilley both catches and misses the train, setting up parallel stories showing how something as simple as catching or missing a subway train can lead to widely divergent fates. A great believer in the idea that life experiences really change the way you perceive things from one day to the next, Paltrow found it challenging to play two versions of the same woman, one who has been through something dramatic and traumatic, and one who hasn’t.

But it was in Shakespeare in Love (1998) that Paltrow really came into her own. This cleverly written film is in part a fanciful speculation on how Shakespeare came to write his most famous play, in part a satire of show business, and especially a love story between William Shakespeare (Joseph Fiennes) and Lady Viola de Lesseps (Paltrow). In Shakespeare’s time, women were forbidden to act, but Viola is so eager to work in the theater that she disguises herself as a man in order to appear in Shakespeare’s newest play, the still-in-progress Romeo and Ethel, the Pirate’s Daughter. Shakespeare is suffering from writer’s block, but once he discovers Viola’s secret and their passionate love blooms, he has all the inspiration he needs. The New York Times pointed out that the film could never have as much energy as it does without the right real-life Juliet to dazzle Will, and “Gwyneth Paltrow, in her first great, fully realized starring performance, makes a heroine so breathtaking that she seems utterly plausible as the playwright’s guiding light. In a film steamy enough to start a sonnet craze, her Viola de Lesseps really does seem to warrant the most timeless love poems, and to speak Shakespeare’s own elegant language with astonishing ease.” Paltrow’s performance earned her a well-deserved Best Actress Oscar, and was a major reason the film went on to win Best Picture. One can only hope that she develops greater depth to accompany her grace and facility with accents.

—Bob Sullivan
PAPAS, Irene

Nationality: Greek. Born: Irene Lelekou in Chiliomodion, 9 March 1926. Education: Attended the Royal Drama School, Athens. Family: Married 1) Alkis Papas, 1947 (marriage dissolved 1951); 2) José Kohn, 1957 (marriage annulled). Career: Singer and dancer from her teens in variety shows; 1950—film debut in Nekri Politiea; contract with Lux films (Italy) in early 1950s; made several U.S. films in the mid-1950s, and international productions subsequently; 1967—on Broadway with Jon Voight in That Summer—That Fall. Address: c/o United Film Distribution, 115 Middle Neck Road, Great Neck, NY 11021, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1951 Nekri Politiea (Dead City) (Iliades)
1953 Le infedeli (The Unfaithfuls) (Steno and Monicelli) (as Mrs. Luisa Azzali); Dramma della Casbah (Anton); Vortice (Matarazzo); The Man from Cairo (Enright) (as Yvonne)
1954 Teodora, Imperatrice di Bisanzio (Theodora, Slave and Empress) (Freda); Attila flagello di dio (Attila; Attila the Hun) (Francisci) (as Grune)
1956 Tribute to a Bad Man (Wise) (as Jocasta Constantine); The Power and the Prize (Koster)
1960 Antigone (Rights for the Dead) (Tzavellas) (title role)
1961 The Gans of Navarone (J. Lee Thompson) (as Maria Pappadimos)
1962 Electra (Cacoyannis) (title role)
1964 The Moon-Spinners (Neilson) (as Sophia); Zorba the Greek (Cacoyannis) (as the widow)
1965 Die Zeugin aus der Höhle (Witness Out of Hell; Gorge Trave; Bitter Grass) (Mitrovic) (as Lea Weiss)
1966 Roger la Honte (Feda)
1967 Más allá de las montañas (Beyond the Mountains; The Desperate Ones) (Ranati) (as Ajmi); A ciascuno il suo (We Still Kill the Old Way) (Petri) (as Luisa Roscio)
1968 The Brotherhood (Ritt) (as Ida Ginetta); Ecce Homo (Gaburro); L'Odissea (Rossi—for TV)
1969 Z (Costa-Gavras) (as Hélène); A Dream of Kings (Delbert Mann) (as Caliope); Anne of the Thousand Days (Jarrott) (as Queen Catherine of Aragon)
1971 The Trojan Women (Cacoyannis) (as Helen of Troy); Roma Bene (Lizzani); N.P. (N.P.—The Secret) (Agosti) (as housewife); Un posto ideale per uccidere (Lenzi)
1972 Non si servizia un paperino (Don't Torture the Duckling) (Fulci); Piazza Pulita (1931: Once upon a Time in New York; Pete, Pearl and the Pole) (Vanzì); Satyroska (The Fifth Offensive) (Vanzì)
1974 Le farò da padre (Bambina) (Lattuada)
1975 Mose (Moses; The Lawgiver) (De Bosio—for TV) (as Zipporah)
1976 The Message (Mohammad, Messenger of God; Ad-Risalab) (Akkad) (as Hind); Bodas de sangre (Barka)
1977 L'uomo di Corleone (Coletti); Un ombra nell' ombra (Carpi); Iphigenia (Cacoyannis) (as Clytemnestra)
1979 Bloodline (Terence Young) (as Simonetta Palazza); Cristo si è fermato a Eborà (Christ Stopped at Eborà) (Rossi) (as Giulia)
1981 Lion of the Desert (Omar Mukhtar) (Akkad—produced in 1979) (as Mabrouka)

1982 Erendira (Guerra) (as grandmother); La Ballade de Mamlouk (Bouassida)
1983 Il disertore (The Deserter) (Berlinguer) (as Mariangela); Afghanistan porquó (Masbah)
1984 Steps (Hirschfield); The Assisi Underground (Ramati) (as Mother Giuseppina)
1985 Into the Night (Landis) (as Shaheen Parvizi)
1987 Sweet Country (Cacoyannis) (as Mrs. Araya); High Season (Peplow) (as Penelope)
1988 Cronaca di una morte annunciata (Chronicle of a Death Foretold) (Rosi) (as Angela’s Mother)
1989 Island (Cox) (as Marquise); Octiano (Deodato—for TV)
1990 La Battala de los Tres Reyes (as Lalla Sahaba)
1991 Drums of Fire; Banquet
1992 Lettera da Parigi (The Latest from Paris) (Giordani) (as Gina); Zoe
1993 Pano Kato Ke Plagios (Up, Down and Sideways) (Cacoyannis) (as Maria)
1994 Jacob (Peter Hall—for TV) (as Rebekah)
1996 Party (de Oliveira) (as Irene)
1997 The Odyssey (Konchalovsky—mini for TV) (as Anticlea)
1998 Inquietude (Anxiety) (de Oliveira) (as Mother)
1999 Yerma (Távora)
2000 The Wog Boy (Vellis) (as Old Lady)

Publications

By PAPAS: articles—

On PAPAS: articles—

Ecran (Paris), July 1978.
Ciné Revue (Paris), 16 August 1979.

Some actors and roles seem predestined for each other. From the opening shot of Michael Cacoyannis’s Electra, as the proud, implacable face emerges from encroaching shadows, it becomes impossible to imagine anyone else as Euripides’s heroine. Erect, immutably serene. “I had never thought,” Dilys Powell wrote, “to see the caged Helen, eyes flashing, defying the execrations of The Trojan...
Women; and in Iphigenia, the third in his Euripidean trilogy, as Clytemnestra, terrible in her grief, even more terrible in the cold, vengeful tenacity that succeeds it. He also cast her, memorably, as the widow in Zorba the Greek: cool marble to Lila Kedrova’s raddled plush, yet still conveying a powerful sensuality beneath the impassive surface which rendered wholly credible the final appalling explosion into violence.

So awe-inspiring a presence has often worked to Papas’s detriment, tending to limit her roles—especially in Hollywood, where she has generally been assigned Mother Earth parts, requiring little more than stoical suffering or elemental fury. Yet her range is certainly wider—she started out, after all, in Athenian musical reviews. Italy, her second home during the Colonels’ regime (which she contemptuously termed “the fourth Reich”), has sometimes offered more imaginative scope. Her housekeeper in Rosi’s Cristo si e fermato a Eboli, bathing Gian Maria Volonté in a tin tub and commenting with sly appreciation on his physique, suggests a talent for subtle comedy hitherto unsuspected by international audiences—and which it would be good to see developed.

—Philip Kemp

PATIL, Smita

Films as Actress:

1975  Nishant (Benegal)
1977  Mathan (Churning) (Benegal); Bhumika (The Role) (Benegal)
1978  Gaman (Ali); Anugraham (The Boon) (Benegal)
1980  Akrosh; Naxalitees; Chakra (Vicious Circle) (Dharmaraj)
1981  Albert Pinto ko gussa kyon aati hai (Why Albert Pinto Is Angry) (Mirza); Sadgati (Deliverance) (Ray—for TV); Bhavni bhavai (A Folk Tale) (Mehta) (as Ujjan); Aswa medher ghora (Sacrificial Horse) (Bhattarcharya)
1982 Namak halal; Shakti; Bazaar; Dil e Nadaan
1983 Mandi (Benegal); Subah (Umbertha; Morning; Threshold) (Patel) (as Sulabha); Arth; Ardh Satya; Chaupatee; Ghangroo; Dard ka rishtha; Qayamat; Haadse
1984 Situm; Anand nur Anand; Raawaan; Pet Pyar nur Paap; Tarang (Shahani)
1985 Chidambaram (Aravindan) (as Sivakami)
1986 Debshishu (Chakraborty); Mirch Masala (Spices) (Mehta) (as Sonbai)
1987 Nazrana (Tandon); Sutraddhar (Joshis)
1988 Akarsan; Hum Farishte Nahin; Waris
1989 Oonch Neech Beech; Galiyon Ka Badshah

Publications

By PATIL: article—

On PATIL: articles—

* * *

In India during the 1970s, the New Cinema movement arose as a challenge to mainstream popular cinema. Although it also hoped to alter mainstream cinema, the New Cinema’s main thrust was a greater verisimilitude centered around contemporary social issues. Foremost among its concerns was the representation of an ideal modern woman. Smita Patil was the New Cinema actress most strongly identified with establishing the role model for this new woman.

Smita Patil was discovered by director Shyam Benegal while working as a newscaster for Bombay television. Her face soon appeared on every national magazine cover and she became a star overnight. Wearing little or no makeup and dressed in traditional saris, her “natural looking” image was somewhat antithetical to that of the usual Indian film star. She was increasingly cast in roles that used this image to blur any distinction between her personal and professional life. Originally described as the rural milkmaid “with fire in her eyes and a deep intensity in her soul,” her screen persona was made concrete after appearing in Benegal’s Bhumiika, the story of a famous Marathi stage and screen actress (the Joan Crawford of India) whose life was fraught with drink and painful love affairs during her search for personal freedom in an orthodox society.

Although the art cinema world tended to champion her as a serious actress, Patil began an uneasy crossover towards more commercial films. A recipient of national awards within India, Smita Patil’s talents also attracted attention outside her native land; Costa-Gavras organized a retrospective of her films in France.

—Behroze Gandhy

PECK, Gregory

Films as Actor:

1943 Days of Glory (Jacques Tourneur) (as Vladimir)
1944 Keys of the Kingdom (Stahl) (as Father Francis Chisholm)
1945 Spellbound (Hitchcock) (as John “J. B.” Ballantine); The Valley of Decision (Garnett) (as Paul Scott)
1946 The Yearling (Brown) (as Pa Baxter); Duel in the Sun (King Vidor) (as Lewt McCanes)
1947 The Macomber Affair (Korda) (as Robert Wilson); Gentleman’s Agreement (Kazan) (as Phil Green); The Paradine Case (Hitchcock) (as Anthony Keane)
1948 Yellow Sky (Wellman) (as Stretch)
1949 The Great Sinner (Siodmak) (as Fedja); Twelve O’Clock High (Henry King) (as Gen. Frank Savage)
1950 The Gunfighter (Henry King) (as Johnny Ringo)
1951 Captain Horatio Hornblower (Walsh) (title role); Only the Valiant (Gordon Douglas) (as Capt. Richard Lance)
1952 David and Bathsheba (Henry King) (as David); The World in His Arms (Walsh) (as Jonathan Clark); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (Henry King) (as Harry Street); Pictura (as narrator)
1953 Roman Holiday (Wyler) (as Joe Bradley); Night People (Johnson) (as Col. Steve Van Dyke)
1955 The Purple Plain (Parrish) (as Forrester); The Million Pound Note (Man with a Million) (Nealim) (as Jerry Adams)
1956 The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson) (as Tom Rath); Moby Dick (Huston) (as Capt. Ahab)
1957 Designing Woman (Minnelli) (as Mike Hagen)
1958 The Bravados (Henry King) (as Jim Douglass)
1959 Pork Chop Hill (Milestone) (as Lt. Joe Clemons); Beloved Infidel (Henry King) (as F. Scott Fitzgerald); On the Beach (Kramer) (as Dwight Towers)
1951  The Guns of Navarone (J. Lee Thompson) (as Capt. Mallory)
1962  Cape Fear (J. Lee Thompson) (as Sam Bowden); To Kill a Mockingbird (Mulligan) (as Atticus Finch)
1963  "The Plains" ep. of How the West Was Won (Hathaway) (as Cleve Van Valen); Captain Newman, M.D. (Miller) (title role)
1964  Behold a Pale Horse (Zinnemann) (as Manuel Artiguez)
1965  Mirage (Dmytryk) (as David Stillwell)
1966  Arabesque (Donen) (as David Pollock); John F. Kennedy: Years of Lightning, Day of Drums (Herschensohn) (as narrator)
1968  The Stalking Moon (Mulligan) (as Sam Varner)
1969  MacKenna’s Gold (J. Lee Thompson) (as MacKenna); The Most Dangerous Man in the World (The Chairman) (J. Lee Thompson) (as Dr. John Hathaway); Marooned (John Sturges) (as Charles Keith)
1970  I Walk the Line (Frankenheimer) (as Sheriff Henry Tawes)
1971  Shootout (Hathaway) (as Clay Lomax)
1973  Billy Two Hats (Kotchess) (as Deans)
1978  The Boys from Brazil (Schaffner) (as Dr. Josef Mengele)
1981  The Sea Wolves (McLaglen) (as Col. Lewis Pugh)

Films as Producer:
1958  The Big Country (Wyler) (+ ro as James McKay)
1972  The Trial of the Catonsville Nine (Davidson)
1974  The Dove (Jarrott)
1976  The Omen (Richard Donner) (+ ro as Robert Thorn)
1977  MacArthur (Sargent) (+ title role)

Publications

By PECK: book—

By PECK: articles—

On PECK: books:

On PECK: articles—

Murphy, Kathleen, “The World Is In His Arms,” in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1992.

* * *

When Gregory Peck was designated an enemy of the conservative Nixon establishment, it was as much a recognition of his role within the social symbolism of Hollywood films, as a reaction to his personal involvement with liberal causes. If James Stewart, in his work for Frank Capra, nostalgically embodies the populist image of the small-town good citizen, Peck creates the figure of the decent and fair-minded reformer or the fundamentally good man who rises to the moral demands of the occasion. Only rarely have other qualities of Peck’s persona been explored, particularly the resentment and anger which his intensity suggests. It is in these uncharacteristic roles that he has done some of his most interesting as well as some of his worst acting.

After some experience with New York City’s Neighborhood Playhouse, Peck moved to Hollywood where, classified as 4-F, he worked steadily during the war. In his first role, as an Eastern front guerilla in Jacques Tourneur’s Days of Glory, he demonstrated the requisite qualities of the versatile leading man. By the end of the 1940s Peck had established himself as both a commercial and critical success. He received Oscar nominations for Gentleman’s Agreement—a perfect showcase for his intensity and aroused righteousness, The Yearling, and The Keys of the Kingdom. The acclaim however, was more for the likable persona Peck had created than for any demonstration of acting virtuosity.

In the 1950s and 1960s he played many similar roles, the apotheosis of his reformer character coming in To Kill a Mockingbird, a film in which Peck’s humble and antiracist small-town lawyer is a successful mix of populist goodwill and political commitment. Less impressive versions of the same conscience-stricken character are to be found in Twelve O’Clock High, Captain Horatio Hornblower, and Pork Chop Hill.

Those roles that explore the dark side of his personality indicate both his virtues and limitations as an actor. In the Freudian Western Duel in the Sun he demonstrated early in his career that he could successfully evoke both sexual obsession and sociopathy. Performances in The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit, The Paradine Case, and The Snows of Kilimanjaro exhibited a very human frailty that was only glimpsed in his more optimistic roles. Peck’s failure to portray adequately the complexities of a compulsive figure in such films as Moby Dick, MacArthur, and The Boys from Brazil indicates the limitations of his skill as an actor.

Peck, like many of the characters he played, has a social conscience. He has been involved in charitable, political, and film industry causes. In 1965, he became a member of the National Council on the Arts, then he was elected chairman of the American Cancer Society the following year. From 1967 to 1969, he was on the Board of Trustees of the American Film Institute. He served as president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences. Peck also received the Medal of Freedom and the Academy’s Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award.

—R. Barton Palmer, updated by Linda J. Stewart

PENN, Sean

Nationality: American. Born: Burbank, California, 17 August 1960; son of the actor and television director Leo Penn and the actress Eileen Ryan; brother of the actor Christopher Penn. Family: Married 1) the singer-actress Madonna, 1985 (divorced 1989); 2) the actress
Robin Wright, 1996, two children: Dylan and Hopper. Education: Attended Santa Monica High School. Career: In high school directed and acted in Super-8 movies; two years as backstage technician and assistant to actor/director Pat Hingle with the Los Angeles Group Repertory theater; directed play Terrible Jim Fitch, acted in Earthworms and The Girl on the Via Flaminia; studied acting with Peggy Feury; 1979—guest appearances on TV series Barnaby Jones; made Broadway debut in Heartland, which had a brief run but led to his movie debut in Taps; returned to Broadway in Slab Boys; 1982—breakthrough performance in Fast Times at Ridgemont High. Awards: New Generation Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, 1983; Silver Bear Award, Berlin Film Festival, Independent Spirit Award, for Dead Man Walking, 1996; Best Actor Award, Cannes Film Festival, for She’s So Lovely, 1997; Volpi Cup, Venice Film Festival, for Hurlyburly, 1998. Agent: c/o Brian Gersh, William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1979 The Concrete Cowboys (Burt Kennedy—for TV)
1981 Hellinger’s Law (Leo Penn—for TV); The Killing of Randy Webster (Wanamaker—for TV); Taps (Harold Becker) (as Alex Dwyer)
1982 Fast Times at Ridgemont High (Heckerling) (as Jeff Spicoli)
1983 Bad Boys (Rosenthal) (as Mick O’Brien); Summerspell (Shanklin) (as Buddy)
1984 Crackers (Malle) (as Dillard); Racing with the Moon (Richard Benjamin) (as Henry “Hopper” Nash)
1985 The Falcon and the Snowman (Schlesinger) (as Andrew Daulton Lee)
1986 At Close Range (Foley) (as Bradford Whitewood Jr.); Shanghai Surprise (Goddard) (as Glendon Wasey)
1987 Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam (Couturie—doc) (as voice only)
1988 Colors (Dennis Hopper) (as Danny McGavin); Judgment in Berlin (Leo Penn) (as Gunther X); Cool Blue (Mullins and Shepard) (as Phil the plumber, uncredited)
1989 Casualties of War (De Palma) (as Sergeant Meserve); We’re No Angels (Neil Jordan) (as Jimmy)
1990 State of Grace (Joanou) (as Terry Noonan)
1991 Schneeweissrosenrot (SnowwhiteRosered) (Langhans and Ritter)
1993 Carlito’s Way (De Palma) (as David Kleinfeld); The Last Party (Mark Benjamin and Marc Levin—doc) (as himself)
1995 Dead Man Walking (Tim Robbins) (as Matthew Poncelet)
1997 U Turn (Stone) (as Bobby Cooper); She’s So Lovely (Cassavetes) (as Eddie Quinn + exec pr); Loved (Dignam) (as Man on the

Sean Penn (right) with Anna Paquin and Kevin Spacey in Hurly Burly Hill +pr); The Game (Fincher) (as Conrad); Hugo Pool (Robert Downey Sr.) (as Strange Hitchhiker)

1998 The Thin Red Line (Malick) (as First Sgt. Edward Welsh); Hurlyburly (Drazan) (as Eddie)
1999 Sweet and Lowdown (Allen) (as Emmett Ray); Being John Malkovich (Jonze) (as himself)
2000 Up at the Villa (Haas) (as Rowley Flint); The Weight of Water

Films as Writer and Director:

1991 The Indian Runner
1995 The Crossing Guard
2000 The Pledge

Publications

By PENN: articles—

Interview with Julian Schnabel and Dennis Hopper, in Interview (New York), September 1991.
“Sean Penn at Close Range,” interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), September 1991.
“Sean Penn,” interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), October 1995.

On PENN: articles—

* * *

Sean Penn stood out in his first big-screen appearance as the calm eye of the melodramatic Taps, and raced on to create a notable gallery of outsiders and rebels, both violently delinquent as in Bad Boys and humorous as in Fast Times at Ridgemont High. It was as Spicoli, the stoned high-school student-cum-surfer in the latter that he revealed the nerve to play a character in a stylized manner, and it was this performance that brought him notice as well as popularity: it was clear that here was an off-beat young actor of considerable skill, something of a prodigy as both straight performer and character cartoonist. This was recognized by the Los Angeles Film Critics Association which voted him winner of the 1983 New Generation Award. His self-conscious style, however, got the better of him in his overly mannered performance as Daulton Lee in The Falcon and the Snowman, betraying all too obviously his debt to Dustin Hoffman (Midnight Cowboy) and Robert De Niro (The King of Comedy), and substituting imitation for experience. However, in his next film, At Close Range, he evidenced the maturing of his approach, giving a complex and sympathetic portrayal of an aimless, damaged youth coming to terms with his betrayal by a psychopathically criminal father (Christopher Walken).

Over the next four years, although Penn appeared in a few films—a mixed bag that included the fairly disastrous Shanghai Surprise with his then wife Madonna, and Dennis Hopper’s Colors—he was more in the public eye as Madonna’s consort, brawling in the glare of tabloid flashbulbs, than as an actor of stature. That changed with his towering performance in Brian De Palma’s controversial Casualties of War. As Sergeant Meserve, the American soldier in Vietnam who avenges the death of a buddy by kidnapping and raping a forlorn Vietnamese girl, Penn gives a considered and uncompromising portrayal of confusion, rage and brutality, evoking an elemental man caught in a war where only individual temperament and character separate courage (as represented by Michael J. Fox) from sadism. The actor is fearsome to behold, employing his full armory—body, face, and voice—to express the full range of organized male aggression, both that which protects and that which violates. Arguably, he had become the first in his generation of actors to absorb and reveal the influence of De Niro, and, if you like, by that osmosis, Marlon Brando.

Penn subsequently claimed that he did not like acting and accepted roles only in order to pay bills unless tempted to work with certain directors on exceptional scripts. One such was De Palma’s Carlito’s Way with Al Pacino, in which Penn gives a masterly character performance as Kleinfeld, the corrupt, self-serving, amoral, drug-taking lawyer who sells Pacino down the river. Combining whining villainy with a rancid smack of his comic style, comedy, he makes of Kleinfeld a sleazy creature, at once caricatural and sinister, snickering at his own fbs and stunts under De Palma’s super-sophisticated direction of the material. The actor, meanwhile, had become preoccupied with the idea of writing and directing his own films, beginning with The Indian Runner, straightforwardly reflecting the era of his own experience in its somewhat overheated treatment of a blue-collar misfit wreaking havoc on his family. His next, The Crossing Guard four years later, was an altogether more ambitious and opaque, but entertaining affair, but both are steeped in lugubrious visuals, a “workshop” approach and a too-studied search for effect. Nevertheless, both were impressively committed and intense demonstrations of his talent, which made all the more pointed and lamentable the loss to movies of the performances he was not giving.

Then, as if he had worked something out of his system he returned to acting with more apparent relish and lean confidence, sliding smoothly into difficult, confused characters such as the weaselly condemned killer Matthew Poncelet in Dead Man Walking, the errant, disturbed husband in She’s So Lovely (for which he received the best actor award at the 1997 Cannes Film festival) and the heartsick Eddie in Hurlyburly. In smaller character roles—the sophisticated prankster in The Game, a tough sergeant in The Thin Red Line—his effortless presence left a dominant memory of the picture. His choice tragi-comic performance for Woody Allen as Sweet and Lowdown's Emmet Ray, a fictitious but classically self-destructive jazz musician of monstrousness and pathos, rang with understanding and truth, compelling in his recklessness but invested with vulnerable and comedic undertones which elicit sympathy and make Emmet unexpectedly endearing. By now Penn was an established actors’ actor, essaying a pre-World War II comedy of manners as a rich idler in Italy in Up at the Villa, and embarking as producer, writer and director, on The Pledge with a distinguished cast headed by Jack Nicholson and including Vanessa Redgrave. But, with the maturity and focus to realize his ambitions, it seemed unlikely that an actor as inventive as Sean Penn, equally good whether serious or funny, would ever abandon what he does so well.

—Alan Dale, updated by Robyn Karney

PERKINS, Anthony

Nationality: American.
Born: New York City, 4 April 1932.
Education: Attended Browne and Nichols School, Cambridge, Massachusetts; Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida; Columbia University, New York.
Family: Married Berinthia (Berry) Berenson, 1973, children: Osgood, Elvis.
Awards: Best Actor, Cannes Festival, for Goodbye Again, 1961.
Died: 12 September 1992.

Films as Actor:

1953 The Actress (Cukor) (as Fred Whitmarsh)
1956 Friendly Persuasion (Wyler) (as Josh Birdwell)
1957 Fear Strikes Out (Mulligan) (as Jimmy Piersall); The Lonely Man (Levin) (as Riley Wade); The Tin Star (Anthony Mann) (as Sheriff Ben Owens)
1958 Desire under the Elms (Delbert Mann) (as Eben Cabot); Barrage contre le Pacifique (This Angry Age; The Sea Wall) (Clément) (as Joseph Dufresne); The Matchmaker (Anthony) (as Cornelius)
1959 Green Mansions (Ferrer) (as Abel); On the Beach (Kramer) (as Peter Holmes)
1960 Tall Story (Logan) (as Ray Blent); Psycho (Hitchcock) (as Norman Bates)
1961 Goodbye Again (Aimez-vous Brahms?) (Litvak) (as Philip Van Der Besh); Phaedra (Dassin) (as Alexis)
1962 Le Procès (The Trial) (Welles) (as Inspector Javert)
1963 La Glaise et la balance (Two Are Guilty) (Cayatte) (as Johnny)
1964 Une Ravissante Idiote (A Ravishing Idiot) (Molinaro) (as Harry Compton/Nicholas Maukouline)
1965 The Fool Killer (González) (as Milo Bogardus)
1966 Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Sgt. Warren)
1967 Le Scandale (The Champagne Murders) (Chabrol) (as Christopher Balling)
1968 Pretty Poison (Black) (as Dennis Pitt)
1970 How Awful about Allan (Harrington—for TV); WUSA (Rosenburg) (as Rainey); Catch-22 (Mike Nichols) (as Chaplain Tappman)
1971 Quelqu’un derrière la porte (Someone behind the Door; Two Minds for Murder) (Gessner) (as Laurence Jeffries)
1972 The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean (Huston); Play It as It Lays (Perry) (as B. Z.); La Décade prodigieuse (Ten Days’ Wonder) (Chabrol) (as Charles Van Horn)
1974 Lovin’ Molly (Lumet) (as Gid); Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Hector McQueen)
1975 Mahogany (Gordy) (as Sean)
1978 First, You Cry (Schaefer—for TV); Remember My Name (Rudolph) (as Neil Curry); Les Misérables (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Inspector Javert)
1979 Winter Kills (Richert); The Black Hole (Gary Nelson) (as Dr. Alex Durant); The Horror Show (Schickel)
1980 Double Negative (Bloomfield) (as Lawrence Miles); Twee vrouwen (Twice a Woman) (Sluizer) (as Alfred); ffolkes (North Sea Hijack; Assault Force) (McLaglen) (as Kramer)
1983  Psycho II (Franklin) (as Norman Bates); Sins of Dorian Gray (Maylam—for TV)
1984  Crimes of Passion (China Blue) (Russell) (as the Rev. Peter Shayne); Glory Boys (Ferguson—for TV) (as Jimmy)
1988  Destroyer (Kirk) (as Robert Edwards)
1989  Edge of Sanity (Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde) (Kikoine) (as Dr. Henry Jekyll/Jack Hyde)
1990  Psycho IV: The Beginning (Garris—for TV) (as Norman Bates); I’m Dangerous Tonight (Tobe Hooper—for TV) (as Buchanan); Daughter of Darkness (Stuart Gordon—for TV)
1991  Los Gusanos no Llevan Bufanda (The Naked Target) (Elorrieta) (as mechanical man); Der Mann nebenan (A Demon in My View) (Haffter) (as Arthur Johnson)
1992  In the Deep Woods (Correll—for TV) (as Paul)

Other Films:

1973  The Last of Sheila (Ross) (co-sc)
1986  Psycho III (d, ro as Norman Bates)
1988  Lucky Stiff (d)

Publications

By PERKINS: articles—

On PERKINS: books—

On PERKINS: articles—

Gow, Gordon, “‘Closer to Life,’’ in Films and Filming (London), April 1975.

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1993.

* * *

Looking back from Crimes of Passion through Psycho to Anthony Perkins’s early career, it comes as something of a shock to realize that Hollywood initially fashioned his persona to signify healthy boy-next-door normality. His first two roles immediately established the opposing comic and serious sides of his image. He portrayed, on the one hand, an enthusiastic but callow and unimaginative suitor in The Actress, and, on the other hand, an earnest and sensitive Quaker boy reluctantly learning what it means to kill in Friendly Persuasion. Perkins was instantly perceived as immensely attractive, and the nature of the attractiveness posed a problem for a cinema dedicated overall to the preservation and reinforcement of clear-cut gender identity. Perkins’s charm was centered on an abundance of qualities traditionally associated with femininity—sensitivity, vulnerability, diffidence, and a physical and emotional delicacy and frailty—a combination that might tend to arouse sexual feelings not only in women, but disturbingly and dangerously, in men.

Given a potential new star then, Hollywood was somewhat at a loss as to what he might star in. During the next few years several solutions were attempted: eccentric roles in eccentric comedy (The Matchmaker, Tall Story); a boy learning to become a man under the guidance of an older role model (The Tin Star); and roles in which vulnerability could be justified by an unbearable situation (On the Beach). But the pre-Psycho film that most closely suggests the solution that was finally adopted was Fear Strikes Out. Perkins’s feminine characteristics could be at once contained and explained if they were associated with neurotic disorder. The Norman Bates of Psycho, clearly Perkins’s greatest performance, is also the definitive one in which the solution is perfected, and Perkins was never able to live it down. Norman gives all those attractive Perkins qualities their most complete embodiment and expression and is then revealed as hopelessly insane. There have been many attempts to define the fascination of Hitchcock’s extraordinary film, but most of them miss its core, the very basis of its power to disturb: the extremely complex formulation of the solution that was finally adopted is Psycho.

After Psycho, Perkins’s career became problematic, although he never gave a phoned-in performance and he reaffirmed his acting credentials by replacing Anthony Hopkins in Broadway’s Equus. After his misguided flight to Europe to find opportunities for “serious” acting he felt Hollywood had denied him, there were halfhearted attempts to reestablish him as a romantic lead. Instead Perkins eventually came to terms with the stigma of being everybody’s favorite mama’s boy although it is a bit disheartening to witness the deterioration of his youthful persona into a breeding ground for psychoses from Psycho onward. Within the limits imposed by typecasting, Perkins triumphed especially in Pretty Poison, as a garden variety mental case outclassed by a diabolically twisted high school honor student acted by Tuesday Weld in a parody of her Thalia Meninger role from television’s Dobie Gillis. As the mask of fresh-faced good looks faded, Perkins seemed positively ferretlike, his eyes burning with secrets he had been hiding from movie audiences. If he is disproportionately jittery in the all-star company of Murder on the Orient Express, and so transparently dysfunctional in Mahogany and Play It as It Lays as to seem certifiable, he is haunting as the target of revenge in Remember My Name and eerily vindictive as unyielding Inspector Javert in a splendid television adaptation of Les Misérables.

After meshing with the blackly comic ironies of Winter Kills and lampooning his image as all-purpose nutcase in Ken Russell’s florid Crimes of Passion, Perkins made peace with the person responsible for his stifled stardom: Norman Bates. Resurrecting that character’s tragic flaws for campy effect in Psycho II, Perkins gives a moving performance as if finally reconciled with the cinema’s most popular transvestite slasher. Directing himself in Psycho III brought the reward of teaming with another idiosyncratic presence, Diana Scarwid, but Psycho IV explained the unexplainable in overly explicit Freudian terms. The horror flicks that followed were cheapie exercises that incorporated Perkins shouting boo! as if his mere presence were so scary, decent scripts were unnecessary. An extremely gifted actor who inadvertently created his own Frankenstein monster, Perkins could point with pride to his singularly brilliant creation, even if an argument could be advanced that the saddest casualty of Norman Bates’s murder spree was Perkins’s career.

—Robin Wood, updated by Robert Pardi

PESCI, Joe

Nationality: American. Born: Newark, New Jersey, 9 February 1943. Family: Married and divorced three times; one daughter, Tiffany, from first marriage. Career: Began performing on stage as a child and became a regular on the TV variety show Startime Kids, 1953; made his screen debut as a back-up guitarist with Joey Dee and The Starlighters in Hey, Let’s Twist, 1961; worked as a lounge singer and stand-up comedian under the names “Jonathan Marcus,” “Joey Primar,” and “Joey Cannon,” and recorded a record album under the name “Joe Ritchie,” titled “Little Joe Sure Can Sing,” 1960s; teamed with Frank Vincent in a nightclub act, early 1970s; had his initial screen acting role in Death Collector, 1975; earned acclaim for his first important role in Raging Bull, 1980; starred in the short-lived TV sitcom, Half Nelson, 1985; appeared as “Mr. Big” in the Michael Jackson music video Moonwalker, 1988. Awards: Best Newcomer to Film British Academy Award, New York Film Critics Circle Best Supporting Actor, National Society of Film Critics Best Supporting Actor, National Board of Review Best Supporting Actor, for Raging Bull, 1980; Best Supporting Actor Academy Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Supporting Actor, National Board of Review Best Supporting Actor, for GoodFellas, 1990; Funniest Actor in a Motion Picture (Leading Role) American Comedy Award, for My Cousin Vinny, 1992. Agent: Contemporary Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212–1825, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1961 Hey, Let’s Twist (Garrison) (extra)
1975 Death Collector (Family Enforcer) (De Vito) (billed as Joseph Pesci)
1980 Raging Bull (Scorsese) (as Joey LaMotta); Don’t Go in the House (Ellison) (billed as Joey Pesci)
1982 I’m Dancing as Fast as I Can (Hofsis) (as Roger); Dear Mr. Wonderful (Ruby’s Dream) (Lilenthal) (as Ruby Dennis)
1983 Easy Money (Signorelli) (as Nicky); Eureka (Roeg) (as Mayakofsky)
1984 Once upon a Time in America (Leone) (as Frankie Malnoldi); Tutti dentro (Put ‘Em All In Jail, Everybody in Jail) (Sordi) (as Corrado Emilio Parisi)
1987 Man on Fire (Chouraqui) (as David)
1989 Lethal Weapon 2 (Richard Donner) (as Leo Getz); Backtrack (Catchfire) (Dennis Hopper—released in U.S. in 1991) (as Leo Carelli)
1990 GoodFellas (Scorsese) (as Tommy De Vito); Betsy’s Wedding (Alda) (as Oscar Henner); Home Alone (Columbus) (as Harry)
1991 The Super (Daniel) (as Louie Kritski); JFK (Oliver Stone) (as David Ferrie)
1992 My Cousin Vinny (Lynn) (as Vincent La Guardia Gambino); The Public Eye (Franklin) (as Leonard “The Great Bernini” Bernstein); Home Alone 2: Lost in New York (Columbus) (as Harry); Lethal Weapon 3 (Richard Donner) (as Leo Getz)
1993 A Bronx Tale (De Niro) (as Carmine)
1994 With Honors (Keshishian) (as Simon Wilder); Jimmy Hollywood (Levinson) (as Jimmy Alto)
1995 Casino (Scorsese) (as Nicky Santoro); 8 Heads in a Duffel Bag (Schulman) (as Tommy Spinelli)
1997 Gone Fishin’ (Cain) (as Joe Waters)
1998 Lethal Weapon 4 (Donner) (as Leo Getz)

Publications

By PESCI: articles—

On PESCI: articles—

“Interview Dear Mr. Wonderful; Peter Lilienthal on the Star of His Picture, Joe Pesci,” in Kino (Berlin), no. 4, 1982.

* * *

To date, two roles have defined Joe Pesci’s screen career. Both came in films directed by Martin Scorsese, and in each he plays variations of the same character: a pint-sized New Yorker who is hilariously foul-mouthed and invariably in-your-face.

The first is Raging Bull, in which he earned celluloid stardom and a Best Supporting Actor Oscar nomination. For years, Pesci had been struggling to establish himself in the entertainment industry as an actor, stand-up comic, and singer. Prior to Raging Bull, his sole previous screen acting had been in Death Collector, a low-budget crime melodrama in which he is billed as “Joseph” Pesci. When Scorsese cast him, he had retired from show business and was managing a restaurant in the Bronx. Pesci plays Joey, the ill-bred brother-manager of boxer Jake LaMotta (Robert De Niro). The latter is an inarticulate, irrationally jealous man, who throughout the course of the story self-destructively alienates himself from his loved ones, including his brother. Pesci proved himself more than up to the challenge of playing an important role in a high-powered movie which became an instant classic among biopics and boxing dramas. If Scorsese and De Niro won the lion’s share of credit for the success of Raging Bull, Pesci (along with Cathy Moriarty, cast as LaMotta’s wife) earned an entree into the celluloid main arena.

Nevertheless, in the decade between Raging Bull and GoodFellas, his second film with Scorsese, Pesci’s screen career floundered. None of his roles during this period was memorable; his best was in the little-seen Dear Mr. Wonderful, playing a character not unlike the pre-Raging Bull Joe Pesci: Ruby Dennis, a man who has show business aspirations but finds himself operating a bowling alley-nightclub in New Jersey.

Pesci had failed to fulfill the potential he exhibited in Raging Bull. But he was back in full force in GoodFellas—again with De Niro—and his work here not only thrust him into starring roles but earned him the Best Supporting Actor Oscar. GoodFellas is a tough, knowling, based-on-fact gangster epic, depicting the evolution of life in the New York Mafia for a quarter-century beginning in the mid-1950s. The primary character is Ray Liotta’s Henry Hill, a young guy “from the neighborhood” who yearns to be a wise guy, with De Niro playing James Conway, Hill’s mentor. Pesci’s role is strictly a supporting one, on hand to inject the film with a vivid dose of local color. He offers a graphic, scene-stealing performance as Tommy De Vito, a quick-tempered hoodlum. Tommy is no by-the-numbers mob executioner. He is a psychopath who savors being a gangster, and is obsessed with his machismo; he sticks a switchblade in the gut of a rival with the same emotion he would invest in sticking a carving knife in a Thanksgiving turkey. GoodFellas differs from Raging Bull in that Pesci is not overshadowed by De Niro, perhaps because the latter’s role is neither the showiest nor the most important in the film.

Pesci was to prove equally adept at playing urban types who are comical rather than sinister. This certainly is the case in the Home Alone films, in which he is cast as Harry, one of a pair of street slime who tangle in cartoon-violent fashion with a young, resourceful boy (Macauley Culkin); and in Lethal Weapon 2, Lethal Weapon 3, and Lethal Weapon 4, in which he plays annoying but likable Leo Getz, a profanity-spewing runt who is perfectly described by the character played by Mel Gibson as having “a B.S. in h.s.” Here, according to a Variety critic, Pesci is allowed to showcase “his unique ability to go absolutely ballistic in rat-a-tat fashion.” The actor gave what was perhaps his best post-GoodFellas performance in My Cousin Vinny, cast in a role he was born to play: Brooklyn “lawyer” Vincent La Guardia Gambino, who heads way out of his element—to the Deep South—to defend his cousin and a friend who have been falsely accused of murder. If you grew up in an Italian-American neighborhood in Brooklyn you knew guys like Gambino, a hopelessly uncouth but nonetheless persistent and thoroughly engaging character who wears his accent on his sleeve.

Pesci also brought a creepy presence to JFK, cast as alleged Kennedy assassination conspirator David Ferrie, and had one of his most sympathetic roles in The Public Eye, playing a Weegee-like 1940s tabloid newspaper photographer. In Casino, his third film with Scorsese, he virtually repeats his GoodFellas characterization, playing Nicky Santoro, another ballys mobster who is as short-fused as he is short in stature. Nicky’s turf is Las Vegas, rather than New York. He is sent there by the “bosses” back east to be the muscle behind Robert De Niro’s casino manager, and he eventually builds himself into the town’s most powerful enforcer. Nicky relishes being a gangster. No matter how big a guy is, Nicky will fearlessly take him on and beat him up. Pesci’s acting is letter-perfect, but one cannot escape the fact that Nicky Santoro is a virtual clone of Tommy De Vito.

Playing Tommy De Vito may have earned Pesci star stature, but more often than not his starring films—The Super (playing a New York City slumlord), With Honors (a homeless man), Jimmy Hollywood (a Tinseltown wannabe), 8 Heads in a Duffel Bag (a mob hit man), and Gone Fishin’ (a vacationing fisherman)—have been undistinguished. Will he ever find a third (or fourth, or fifth) great role to rival the ones he played in Raging Bull and GoodFellas?

—Rob Edelman

PFEIFFER, Michelle

Nationality: American. Born: Santa Ana, California, 29 April 1957 (some sources say 1959); sister of the actress Dedee Pfeiffer. Education: Attended Fountain Valley High School. Family: Married 1) the actor Peter Horton, 1982 (divorced 1987); adopted daughter, Claudia Rose, 1993; 2) producer/writer David E. Kelley, 1993, one child. Career: Worked as supermarket cashier; won Miss Orange County Beauty Pageant, 1977; TV debut in Delta House series, 1979; in TV series B.A.D. Cats 1980; film debut in The Hollywood Knights; stage debut in Twelfth Night, 1989. Awards: Best Supporting Actress, British Academy, for Dangerous Liaisons, 1988; Best Actress Awards, Los Angeles Film Critics, New York Film Critics, National Society of Film Critics, National Board of Review, and Golden Globe for The Fabulous Baker Boys, 1989; Silver Bear at Berlin for Love Field, 1992. Agent: Ed Limato, William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

- 1979 The Solitary Man (Moxey—for TV)
- 1980 The Hollywood Knights (Mutrux) (as Suzi Q); Falling in Love Again (Paul) (as Sue Wellington)
- 1981 Charlie Chan and the Curse of the Dragon Queen (Clive Donner) (as Cordelia Farrington); Splendor in the Grass (Sarafian—for TV); The Children Nobody Wanted (Richard Michaels—for TV); Callie & Son (Hussein—for TV)
- 1982 Grease II (Birch) (as Stephanie Zinone)
- 1983 Scarface (De Palma) (as Elvira)
- 1985 Into the Night (Landis) (as Diana); Ladyhawke (Richard Donner) (as Isabeau)
- 1986 Sweet Liberty (Alda) (as Faith Healy)
- 1987 Amazon Women on the Moon (Dante) (as Brenda); The Witches of Eastwick (Miller) (as Sukie Ridgemont)
- 1988 Married to the Mob (Jonathan Demme) (as Angela De Marco); Tequila Sunrise (Towne) (as Jo Ann Vallenari); Dangerous Liaisons (Frears) (as Madame de Tourvel)

Michelle Pfeiffer in Dangerous Minds
1989  The Fabulous Baker Boys (Kloves) (as Susie Diamond)
1990  The Russia House (Schepisi) (as Katya)
1991  Frankie and Johnny (Garry Marshall) (as Frankie)
1992  Love Field (Kaplan) (as Lucrene Hallett); Batman Returns (Burton) (as Catwoman/Selina Kyle)
1993  The Age of Innocence (Scorsese) (as Countess Ellen Olenska)
1994  Wolf (Nichols) (as Laura Alden)
1995  Dangerous Minds (John N. Smith) (as LouAnne Johnson)
1996  Up Close and Personal (Avnet); To Gillian on Her 37th Birthday; One Fine Day (Hoffman) (as Melanie Parker +exec pr)
1997  A Thousand Acres (Moorhouse) (as Rose Cook Lewis)
1998  The Prince of Egypt (Chapman, Hickner) (as voice of Tzipporah +singer)
1999  The Story of Us (Reiner) (as Katie Jordan); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Hoffman) (as Titania); The Deep End of the Ocean (Grosbard) (as Beth Cappadora)
2000  What Lies Beneath (Zemeckis) (as Claire Spencer)

Publications

By PFEIFFER: articles—

Interview, in Cinéma (Paris), September 1982.
‘‘Michelle Pfeiffer as Work in Progress,’’ interview with Hal Hinson, in Esquire (New York), December 1990.
Interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), July 1994.

On PFEIFFER: books—

On PFEIFFER: articles—

Thomson, D., ‘‘Class of 1985,’’ in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1985.
Premiere (New York), March 1990.

Wolcott, J., ‘‘Closeup,’’ in New Yorker, 19 February 1996.
Greene, R., ‘‘Personal Best,’’ in Boxoffice (Chicago), 10 March 1996.

* * *

Michelle Pfeiffer made her entry in Hollywood’s 1980s intake of attractive, blue-eyed blondes that included Meg Ryan, Kim Basinger, Rebecca de Mornay, Tess Harper, and Jennifer Jason Leigh. Of them all (and there were others), Pfeiffer seemed the most precisely cut from the cloth of a long Hollywood tradition—a sexy, beautiful, intelligent, modern answer to, say, Carole Lombard, blessed with a sophisticated gift for witty one-liners, an ability to cross class barriers, and to bring conviction to a range of contrasting characters across a spectrum from wild comedy through forgettable formula gloss to serious drama.

After a conventional Californian upbringing, during which she displayed little interest in her education, Pfeiffer won the 1977 Miss Orange County beauty contest and began directing her former aimlessness toward modeling, acting classes, and auditions for commercials. This well-trodden route led her to playing a succession of bit-part bimbos on television before she drifted onto the big screen in 1980, gaining some notice in her fourth film, Grease 2, which allowed her an opportunity to reveal her budding talents and hinted at her erotic qualities, if not yet the depths and widths of her range. It was to Brian De Palma’s fine instinct for detecting new talent and taking a chance on it that she owed her first real chance to show what she was capable of. Cast as Elvira, the gangster’s moll who becomes Al Pacino’s wife in Scarface, she gave a sharply observed, hard-edged portrayal of a woman who takes refuge in cocaine from the hopelessness of her situation. Elvira’s graphically distressing descent into addiction and destruction owed as much to the young actress’s performance as to De Palma’s operatic eye for the material. Having given notice of her dramatic potential, she next evinced a seductive mix of mystery, kookiness, and vulnerability, racing through an escalating series of bizarre situations with Jeff Goldblum in John Landis’ comedy crime caper, Into the Night, a movie now almost forgotten but which brought the relative newcomer to wider attention and doubtless encouraged Jonathan Demme to cast her in his inspired and anarchic genre spoof, Married to the Mob. As the gum-chewing, Italian-American gangster’s wife, a crazy kook bent on escape, replete with authentic accent and wild hairdo, Pfeiffer was both touching and hilarious.

Before Married to the Mob, Pfeiffer had made Richard Donner’s awful medieval fantasy legend Ladyhawke and Alan Alda’s tedious attempted satire on film-making Sweet Liberty, neither of which advanced her standing with the general public, but the industry seemed to sense what they were holding and teamed her with Susan Sarandon and Cher as one of the three Witches of Eastwick in thrall to Jack Nicholson. Now established as a thoroughgoing “modern”—drop-dead beautiful and with a talent to amuse—it came as something of a surprise to find her cast as the ill-fated 18th-century religieuse Madame de Tourvel, preyed upon by John Malkovich’s Valmont in...
Dangerous Liaisons. Although essentially miscast, her serious stab at this tragic role was not without honor and, indeed, not only elevated her to the ranks of actresses who are taken seriously by serious critics, but also brought her an Academy Award nomination. The superficial formula romance thriller, Tequila Sunrise, that followed, kept watchable by Pfeiffer’s cool restaurateur caught between the attractive competing forces of Mel Gibson and Kurt Russell, was a forgettable blip before first-rank leading lady stardom came, nine years after her inauspicious Hollywood debut, with The Fabulous Baker Boys.

As Susie Diamond, the small-time whore-turned-nightclub-singer whose presence disturbs the long-time partnership of two piano-playing brothers (Jeff and Beau Bridges), Pfeiffer set the screen alight with unbridled sensuality, while displaying the full sum of her now experienced parts: cool wit, tough-minded independence, and vulnerability. Garlanded with awards for her performance, she moved into that bracket of stars who could almost command their own price, but the movie itself failed to fulfill its own best ideas, leaving its popularity to rest on its leading lady’s seductive, multi-layered presence. And therein lies the rub of Michelle Pfeiffer’s career through its second decade. A glance at her filmography shows, on the credit side, a really remarkable range, from the defensive, worn-downOlenska of The Age of Innocence, hiding her pain, her yearning and her isolation beneath her surface of controlled independence. Contrast, too, her athletic Cat Woman of Batman Returns, in which she effortlessly segues back and forth between the wild extremes of bad girl comedy and the confusions of her alter ego, the frumpy, intimidated secretary, with Lurene in Love Field. Jonathan Kaplan’s too-little seen film showcases Pfeiffer as a lonely Dallas housewife, all beehive hair and false eyelashes, who buries her frustrations in a fantasy of empathy with Jackie Kennedy, and blithely crosses the racial divide she doesn’t know exists. This performance, much-lauded by those who saw it, by the critics and by the Academy, moved Hal Hinson of the Washington Post to extol Pfeiffer as ‘‘a performer who allows us direct access to her character’s thoughts and feelings. This character [Lurene] is simply another in her wide-ranging gallery of vivid, complex women. She’s fully alive up there on the screen: a grounded angel, tarnished, funny and exquisitely soulful, even when the movie is dead.’’

That is as accurate an appreciation of this actress’s screen persona as one could wish for but, alas, despite the maturing of her gifts, Pfeiffer, as the 1990s wore on, began to look increasingly like an actress in search of an author, her superior gifts more often than not as accurate an appreciation of this actress’s screen persona as one could wish for but, alas, despite the maturing of her gifts, Pfeiffer, as the 1990s wore on, began to look increasingly like an actress in search of an author, her superior gifts more often than not inadequately matched by the material in which she appeared. This, alas, is very much a sign of the Hollywood times, with celebrity taking precedence over substance, and substance itself—as the eminences grises of the profession, Meryl Streep and Glenn Close have publicly complained—in short supply for women. But Pfeiffer herself has sometimes sacrificed her judgment, wasting her gifts on specious disposable pap such as Up Close and Personal (though her eminent co-star, Robert Redford, was equally guilty), while her appearance alongside Jessica Lange and Jennifer Jason Leigh (doubtless suffering similar problems of choice) in the catastrophic adaptation of Jane Smiley’s ‘‘King Lear’’ novel, A Thousand Acres, smacks of desperation in the search for heavyweight material.

While it is difficult to fault the actress herself in films such as Dangerous Minds, a simplistic, rose-colored view of how a feisty, dedicated teacher (Pfeiffer) overcomes the resistance of kids in an underprivileged ghetto school; or in One Fine Day, a minor, romantic, latter-day ‘‘woman’s picture’’ no better than a TV movie, which trades on a dream team in Pfeiffer and heart-throb George Clooney, such films only serve to emphasize that the course of Pfeiffer’s career, like that of several of her gifted contemporaries, has been dictated by the era from which she sprang. It is a sad but unassailable truth that the great female movie star of the Golden Age is no more. Only Julia Roberts seems to hold the drawing power that would have been familiar to a whole host of yesteryear’s stars and the discerning moviegoer can only hope that approaching middle-age will bring fresh and worthy challenges to Michelle Pfeiffer, an actress of whom Jonathan Demme once said, ‘‘she can do anything. We will be moved by her in a variety of ways over the years.’’

—Robyn Karney

PHILIPE, Gérard

Films as Actor:

1944 La Boîte aux rêves (Yves Allégret); Les Petites du Quai aux Fleurs (Marc Allégret)
1945 Schéma d’une identification (Resnais—short)
1946 Le Pays sans étoiles (Lacombe) (as Simon Frédéric); L’Idiot (Lampin) (as Prince Mychkin)
1947 Le Diable au corps (Devil in the Flesh) (Autant-Lara) (as François Jaubert)
1948 La Chartreuse de Parme (Christian-Jaque) (as Fabrice Del Dongo)
1949 Une si jolie petite plage (Yves Allégret) (as Pierre); Tous les chemins mènent à Rome (Boyer) (as M. Pégase)
1950 La Beauté du Diable (Clair) (as Henri, Faust, and Mephisto); La Ronde (Ophuls) (as Count); Souvenirs perdu (Christian-Jaque); Saint-Louis ou l’ange de la paix (Duréno—short) (as narrator); Avec André Gide (Marc Allégret—doc) (as narrator); Forêt sacrée (Gaisseau—doc) (as narrator)
1951 Juliette ou la clef des songes (Carné) (as Michel); Avignon, bastion de la provence (Guenet—short)
1952 Fanfan-la-tulipe (Christian-Jaque) (title role); Les Sept Pêchés capitaux (Lancombe); Les Belles de nuit (Clair) (as Claude)
1953 Les Orgueilleux (Yves Allégret) (as Georges)
1954  Si Versailles m'était conté (Guitry) (as D’Artagnan); Monsieur Ripois (Clément) (title role); Les Amants de la Villa Borghese (Franciolini); Le Rouge et le noir (Autant-Lara) (as Julien Sorel)

1955  Les Grandes Manoeuvres (Clair) (as Armand); Si Paris m'était conté (Guitry); La Meilleure part (Yves Allégret) (as Perrin)

1956  Le Théâtre national populaire (Franju—short)

1957  Montparnasse 19 (Becker) (as Amedeo Modigliani); Pot-Bouille (Duvivier) (as Octave Mouret)

1958  La Vie à deux (Duhour) (as Désiré); Le Joueur (Autant-Lara) (as Alexei de Dostoievsky)

1959  Les Liaisons dangereuses 1960 (Vadim) (as Vilmont)

1960  La Fièvre monte à El Pao (Buñuel)

Film as Co-Director:

1956  Les Aventures de Till L’Espiègle (+ title role)

Publications

By PHILIPE: articles—

“In the Margin,” in Sequence (London), Spring 1949.

Les Nouvelles Littéraires (Paris), 30 May 1957.

On PHILIPE: books—

Périsset, Maurice, Gérard Philipe, ou la jeunesse du monde, Nice, 1979.

On PHILIPE: articles—

Ecran (Paris), December 1978.

Cousins, R. F., “Recasting Zola: Gérard Philipe’s Influence on Duvivier’s Adaptation of Pot-Bouille,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), July 1989.

Stars (Mariembourg), no. 27, 1996.

* * *

In a brilliant but sadly brief career, Gérard Philipe was celebrated as the most talented and most loved screen and stage actor of his generation. An enormously gifted, intelligent, and committed professional, he possessed a fine voice, a handsome, youthful appearance, and a charming freshness which suggested both residual innocence and emotional intensity. Encouraged by Marc Allégret, he trained under Jean Huret and later Jean Wall before making a promising stage debut at Cannes.

Philipe’s film career was launched by Marc and Yves Allégret in their romantic comedies La Boîte aux rêves and Les Petites du Quai aux Fleurs, but his first leading role came in Le Pays sans étoiles as a dreaming clerk uncannily acting out a crime of passion. A more demanding part, executed with discerning subtlety, followed as the reforming, idealistic, and deranged Prince Myshkin in L’Idiot. However, in Le Diable au corps, as the adolescent passionately and perhaps irresponsibly involved with a nurse who, although engaged to a soldier, bears his child, he triumphed with a public deeply conscious of the personal moral dilemmas posed by wartime separations. The successful partnership with Micheline Presle led to a laborious romantic farce, Tous les chemins mènent à Rome and a later lesser variation on the adulterous couple relationship in Les Amants de la Villa Borghese.

Though Hollywood beckoned, Philipe preferred to remain within the European film tradition, working in France or Italy, and in co-productions. He resisted typecasting but invariably, though with considerable versatility, he played the romantic hero. He could epitomize the tragic hero as in Une si jolie petite plage, sensitively depicting the corrosive self-absorption of the spurned, suicidal adolescent, or in the later Montparnasse 19 powerfully rendering the suffering and despair of the doomed alcoholic artist Modigliani. But he could also be the ebullient, swashbuckling romantic hero of Fanfan-la-Tulipe or in Les Aventures de Till L’Espiègle (co-directed with Joris Ivens) the sharp-witted, high-spirited Flemish folk hero.

The postwar tendency to film literary classics brought Philipe roles in adaptations of Stendhal and Zola, where his star presence determined the focus of the screen version. As Fabrice Del Dongo in La Chartreuse de Parme and Julien Sorel in Le Rouge et le noir he gave perceptive performances as the insecure, self-absorbed, yet immensely appealing and energetic Stendhalian heroes, while in Duvivier’s reworking of Zola’s Pot-Bouille he effortlessly portrayed the seducer Octave Mouret. Sacha Guitry exploited his image in period dramas as D’Artagnan in Si Versailles m’était conté and in Si
Paris m'était conté as a troubadour linking the historical tableaux. Films by René Clair in this period reveal his typical range. In La Beauté du Diable he was the pleasure-seeking young Faust; in Les Belles de nuit a dreamer privileged with amorous partners across the centuries; and in Les Grandes Manoeuvres with Michèle Morgan, he excelled as the cavalry officer frivolously bent on conquering a sophisticated divorcée, but falling deeply in love. He was again the unrequited, dreaming lover in Carné’s Juliette ou la clef des songes, the rejected suitor turning to gambling in Le Joueur, but in La Vie à deux his love triumphs over social disparity.

Although predominantly the disarming screen lover, Philipe also appeared as less attractive characters: as a foolish, cynical count in La Ronde; a callous, calculating Valmont in Les Liaisons dangereuses, 1960; the master of ceremonies and eventual participant in Les Sept Péchés capitaux; the homicidal maniac in Souvenirs per dus; and in Monsieur Ripois as an impressively ruthless Don Juan of London society tragically blind to genuinely felt emotion. More serious dramatic roles for Yves Allégret revealed him as a disillusioned hard-drinking doctor rediscovering his purpose in Les Orgueilleux, and as the dedicated engineer heroically rescuing trapped workers in La Meilleure Part, while for Buñuel in La Fièvre monte à El Pao he was a reforming prison governor opposed to the fascist dictatorship.

In a remarkable career, Gérard Philipe worked with the leading directors and actresses of his day and was never less than accomplished. With his handsome looks, seductive voice, and engaging personality he endeared himself to audiences as the noble but often humble romantic hero. Through his dedicated craftmanship, he won the respect of his fellow professionals to become one of the legendary figures of French cinema.

—R. F. Cousins

PHOENIX, River

Films as Actor:

1984 Backwards: The Riddle of Dyslexia (Heinemann—for TV)
1985 Robert Kennedy and His Times (Chomsky—for TV) (as Robert Kennedy Jr.); Surviving (Surviving: A Family In Crisis) (Hussein—for TV) (as Philip Brogan); Explorers (Dante) (as Wolfgang Muller)
1986 Circle of Violence: A Family Drama (Greene—for TV) (as Chris Benfield); The Mosquito Coast (Weir) (as Charlie Fox); Stand by Me (Reiner) (as Chris Chambers)
1988 Little Nikita (The Sleepers) (Benjamin) (as Jeff Grant); A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon (Richter) (as Jimmy Reardon); Running on Empty (Lumet) (as Danny Pope)
1989 Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg) (as Young Indy)
1990 I Love You to Death (Kasdan) (as Devo Nod)
1991 My Own Private Idaho (Van Sant) (as Mike Waters); Teen Vid II (as himself)
1992 Sneakers (Robinson) (as Carl Arbogast); Dogfight (Savoca) (as Eddie Birdlace)
1993 Silent Tongue (Shepard) (as Talbot Roe); The Thing Called Love (Bogdanovich) (as James Wright); Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (Van Sant) (as Pilgrim [uncredited])

Publications

By PHOENIX: articles—

On PHOENIX: books—

On PHOENIX: articles—

Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade may transform into Hollywood schlock one of Western culture’s most sacred secular myths, but it is no doubt a fascinating study of masculine styles across the generations. The film’s bravura opening sequence features River Phoenix as the young Indy battling a ruthless gang intent on robbing an archaeological site of its treasures. The encounter features the athletic derring do and hijinx which is such a conventional part of the series, with Indy eluding the gang on a moving train through his verve, determination, and sheer guts. The renegade archaeologist regains his treasure through bribing the sheriff, in whom Indy, who is a Boy Scout after all, naively trusts. But he acknowledges the young man’s talents and character by giving him his safari hat as a badge of honor in an Oedipal rite of passage that is played out later in detail in the relationship between the adult Indy and his father. Phoenix’s performance is engaging and charismatic, just the right mixture of exuberant disobedience and respectful dedication to his father’s professional values. If this part of the film is about a hero in the making, at the same time it reveals a star in the making.
Because he died young, the victim of a dramatic drug overdose, Phoenix never became the star that his riveting performance in Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade establishes that he was destined to be. The films in which he did appear, mostly as a supporting player, certainly attest to his acting talents and star quality. In Sneakers, he holds his own as part of a powerful ensemble—including Robert Redford and Sidney Poitier—in a caper film that takes good advantage of his physical energy. Somewhat less prominent in I Love You to Death, he nevertheless plays an important character, a 1960s throwback named Devo who is only slightly more connected to contemporary reality than either the main characters—a woman eager to murder her unfaithful husband—and the other supporting kooks, including a pair of dopehead cousins played by William Hurt and Keanu Reeves, whom hipster wannabe Phoenix engages as killers for hire. In both Running on Empty and The Mosquito Coast, he plays characters much like the young Indy, strong adolescents who have to assume adult responsibilities when their parents prove weak. Both films offer him strong parts: the first as an adolescent desperate to grow up and mature despite the fact that his 1960s radical parents, guilty of murder, must stay on the run; the second as a loving son who stands by his father even when the somewhat deranged environmentalist moves them suddenly to a dangerous and primitive part of Honduras. In Little Nikita, Phoenix offers an effective variant of the same character. Here he is in effect cut loose from family ties, since the premise of this thriller is that his parents are actually Russian agents. Phoenix makes much of what could be an implausible and unaffectionate storyline as he learns to trust the FBI agent, played by Sidney Poitier, who helps him come to an understanding of who he is. Unfortunately, Phoenix is somewhat lost in a similar role in Sam Shepard’s quirky and obscure western, Silent Tongue, where identity and ethos are likewise at stake, but then so is everyone else in the talented cast, including veterans Richard Harris and Alan Bates.

Like James Dean, Phoenix may be most remembered for his nicely controlled performance in a coming of age drama, Stand by Me, where he is a standout in a talented ensemble of young actors, including Wil Wheaton and Corey Feldman. Phoenix is the emotional center of an unabashedly nostalgic and old-fashioned film, directed by the modern master of such tearjerkers, Rob Reiner. The underappreciated A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon offers Phoenix a different kind of role that he also makes a success. A creepy hipster, eager to sleep with every girl he comes across, Jimmy Reardon does have true feelings for a young beauty; only apparently aimless and self-gratifying, Jimmy is also a kind of intellectual idealist who defies his father’s wishes and wants to attend a small college, where he thinks he can excel. Selfish but not unfeeling, Jimmy is a difficult character to like in this American Graffiti drama, but Phoenix succeeds in making him interesting and sympathetic in spite of himself. It’s a complicated, layered performance in a film that offers more than meets the eye.
Phoenix demonstrates here and elsewhere that he was more than just a good-looking kid with energy; he was also an actor of not inconsiderable talent.

—R. Barton Palmer

PICCOLI, Michel

Films as Actor:

1944 Sortilèges (Christian-Jaque)
1949 Le Point du jour (Daquin); Le Parfum de la dame en noir (Daquin)
1950 Sans laisser d’adresse (Chanois)
1951 Terreur en Oklahoma (Paviot—short)
1952 Chicago Digest (Paviot—short); Torticola contre Frankenksberg (Paviot—short); Saint-Tropez, devoir de vacances (Paviot—short); ‘‘Jeanne d’Arc’’ ep. of Destinées (Delannoy)
1953 Interdit de séjour (de Canon)
1954 Tout chante autour de moi (Gout)
1955 French Cancan (Only the French Can) (Renoir) (as Valorgueil); Les Mauvaises Rencontres (Astruc); Ernst Thälman Führer seiner Klasse (Maetzig)
1956 La Mort en ce jardin (Death in the Garden); Evil Eden; Gina (Buñuel) (as Father Lazzardi); Les Sorcières de Salem (Witches of Salem; The Crucible) (Rouleau); Marie-Antoinette (Delannoy); Les Copains du dimanche (Aisner)
1957 Nathalie (The Foxiest Girl in Paris) (Christian-Jaque) (as Frank Marchal, policeman); Tabarin (Pottier)
1958 Rafles sur la ville (Sinners of Paris) (Chenal)
1959 La Bête à l’affût (Chenal); La Dragée haute (Kerchner)
1960 Le bal des espions (Clément)
1961 Le vergini di Roma (Amazons of Rome) (Bragaglia and Cottafavi); Le Rendez-vous (Delannoy); La Chevelure (Kyrou—short); Le Rendez-vous de Nöel (Michel—short)
1962 Climats (Lorenzi); Fumée, histoire et fantaisie (Villiers and Berne—short)
1963 Le Doulos (The Fingerman); Doulos—the Fingerman (Melville) (as Nuthheccio); Le Jour et l’heure (The Day and the Hour) (Clément) (as Antoine); Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard) (as Paul Javal)
1964 Le Journal d’une femme de chambre (Diary of a Chambermaid) (Buñuel) (as Monsieur Monteil); La Chance et l’amour (Bitsch); Marie-Soleil (Bourseiller); Pararazzi (Rozier—short); De l’amour (Aurel) (as Raoul)
1965 Masquerade (Dearden) (as Sarrassin); Lady L (Ustinov) (as Lecoeur); Le Coup de grâce (Gayrol); Compartiment tueurs (The Sleeping Car Murder) (Costa-Gavras) (as Cabourg); Les Ruses du Diable (Vecchiali); Café tabac (Guillemot—short)
1966 Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Edgar Pisani); La Curée (The Game Is Over) (Vadim) (as Alexandre Saccard); La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over; Krigetar Slit) (Resnais) (as customs inspector); Les Créatures (Varelserna) (Varda) (as Edgar); La Voleuse (Chapot)
1967 Un Homme de trop (Shock Troops) (Costa-Gavras) (as Extra Man); Les Demoiselles de Rochefort (The Young Girls of Rochefort) (Demy) (as Simon Dame); Belle de jour (Buñuel) (as Henri Husson); Mon amour, mon amour (Trintignant)
1968 Benjamin ou Les mémoires d’un puceau (Benjamin; The Diary of an Innocent Boy) (Deville) (as Count Philippe de Saint-Germain); Danger: Diabolik (Diabolik) (Bava) (as Inspector Ginco); La Chamade (Cavalier) (as Charles); La Prisonnière (The Female Prisoner, La Prigioniera) (Clouzot); Dillinger è morto (Dillinger Is Dead) (Ferreri) (as Glauco)
1969 La Voie lactée (The Milky Way; La Via lattea) (Buñuel) (as the Marquis); Topaz (Hitchcock) (as Jacques Granville); L’invitata (de Seta)
1970 Les Choses de la vie (The Things of Life) (Sautet) (as Pierre); L’Invasion (Yves Allégret); Max et les ferraillleurs (Sautet) (title role)
1971 La Poudre d’escampette (Touch and Go; French Leave) (de Broca) (as Valentin)
1972 La Décade prodigieuse (Ten Days’ Wonder) (Chabrol) (as Paul Regis); Le Charme discret de la bourgeoisie (The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie) (Buñuel) (as Home Secretary); L’audience (The Audience; The Papal Audience) (Ferreri); La cagna (Lisa) (Ferreri); La Femme en bleu (Deville); César et Rosalie (Cesar and Rosalie) (Sautet) (as narrator); L’Attentat (The Plot; The French Conspiracy) (Boisset) (as Colonel Kassar)
1973 Themroc (Faraldo) (title role, + co-pr); Les Noces rouges (Wedding in Blood; Red Wedding) (Chabrol); La Grande Bouffe ( Blow-Out) (Ferreri) (as Michel, the TV producer); Le Far-West (Brel); Grandeur nature (Life Size; Love Doll) (Berlanga); Touche pas à la femme blanche (Don’t Touch White Women) (Ferreri) (as Buffalo Bill)
1974 Le Trio infernal (Girod); Le Fantôme de la liberté (The Phantom of Liberty; The Specter of Freedom) (Buñuel) (as 2nd prefect); La Fille (Fleischmann); Léonor (Juan Buñuel) (as Richard)
1975 Vincent, François, Paul, et les autres (Vincent, Paul, and the Others) (Sautet); Sept morts sur ordonnance (Rouffio) (as Dr. Losseray)
1976 Mado (Sautet) (as Simon Leotard); F comme Fairbanks (Dugowson); Todo modo (Petri); L’ultimata donna (The Last Woman; La Dernière femme) (Ferreri)
1977 L’Imprécauteur (Bertucelli); René la Canne (Girod); Des Enfants gâtés (Spoiled Children) (Tavernier) (as Bernardi); La Part du feu (Périer)
1978 L’Etat sauvage (The Savage State) (Girod) (as Orlaville); Strauberg ist Da (Gallé); La Petite Fille en velours bleu (Bridges); Le Sucre (Rouffio)
1979 Giallo napoletano (Neapolitan Thriller) (Corbucci); Der Preis für Überleben (Le Prix de la survie) (Noever); Le Mors aux...
Mauvais Sang (Malle) (as Joseph); Une Etrange Affaire (Granier-Deferre) (as Bertrand Maler); Espion, lève toi (Boisset); La Passante du Sans-Souci (La Passante) (Rouffio and Kirsner) (as Max Baumbtein); La Nuit de Varennes (That Night in Varennes; The New World) (Scola) (as King Louis XVI)
1982
Passion (Godard); Une Chambre en ville (A Room in Town) (Demy) (as Edmond Leroyer); Le Prix du danger (Boisset); Oltre la porta (Beyond the Door) (Cavani); Que les gros salaires lèvent le doigt!! (Granier-Deferre) (as José Viss); Le Général de l’armée morte (Il generale dell’armata morta) (Tovoli) (+ co-sc); Gli occhi, la bocca (The Eyes, the Mouth) (Belloccio) (as Uncle Nigi) 1983
Viva la vie (Lelouch)
1984
La Diagonale du fou (Dangerous Moves) (Dembo) (as Akiva Liebskind); Adieu Bonaparte (Wedan Bonapart) (Chahine) (as Louis Caffarelli du Flaga); Péris en la demeure (Peril; Death in a French Garden) (Deville) (as Graham Tombshay); Le Matelot 512 (Allio); Success Is the Best Revenge (Skolimowski) (as French official) 1985
Partir, revenir (Going and Coming Back) (Lelouch) (as Simon Lerner)
1986
Mauvais Sang (Bad Blood; The Night Is Young) (Carax) (as Marc); Mon beau-frère a tué ma soeur (Rouffio) (as Étienne); Le Paltoquet (Deville) (as The Nonentity); La Puritaine (Doillon) (as Pierre)
1987
Maladie d’amour (Deray) (as Raoul Bergeron); La Terre étrangère (Bondy); L’Homme voilé (The Veiled Man) (Bagdadi) (as Kassar); La Rumba (Hanin) (as Malleville)
1988
Blanc de chine (Granier-Deferre); Y’a Bon les blancs (Ferreri)
1989
Actor (Angelucci)
1990
Milou en mai (May Fools) (Malle) (as Milou); Martha and Ich (Martha and I) (Jiri Weiss) (as Uncle Ernst); La Belle Noiseuse (The BeautifulTroublemaker; Divertimento) (Rivette) (as Edouard Frenhofer)
1991
L’Equilibriste (Walking a Tightrope) (Papatakis) (as Marcel Spadice); Das Schicksal des Freiherrn von Leisensboh (Molinaro); El Ladrón del Ninos (The Children Thief; Le Voleur d’enfant) (De Chalonge) (as M. Armand); Contre l’oubli (Against Oblivion; Ecrire contre l’oubli) (Ackerman and others)
1992
Archipelago (Granier-Deferre) (as Leonard Wilde); Le Bal des casse-pieds (Yves Robert) (as Desire); From Time to Time (Blyth) (as Jules Verre); Le Souper (The Supper) (Molinaro) (as voice of Chateauaubriand); La Vie crevée (Punctured Life) (Nicloux) (as Raymond)
1993
La Cavale des Fous (Loonies at Large) (Pico) (as Henri Toussaissant); Ruptures (Citti) (as Paul) 1994
Bête de scène; L’Ange noir (The Black Angel) (Brisseau) (as Georges Feuvrier); Al Mohager (The Emigrant) (Chahine) (as Adam) 1995
Les Cent et une nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Simon Cinema)
1996
Tykho Moon (Bilal); Compagna di viaggio (Del Monte); Beaumarchais, l’insolent (Molinaro) (as the Prince Conti)
1997
Généalogies d’un crime (as Georges Didier)
1998
Simoom: A Passion in the Desert (Currier) (as Jean-Michel Venture de Paradis)
1999
Rien sur Robert (Bonitzer) (as Lord Ariel Chatwick-West); Libero Burro (Castellitto) (as Uncle Tony); Paris Tombuctú (Luís García Berlanga) (as Michel des Assantes)
2000
Les Acteurs (Blier) (as himself)

Film as Actor and Director:
1982
Il Generale dell’armata morte
1994
Train de nuit (+ co-sc)
1997
Alors voilà

Publications
By PICCOLI: book—

Dialogues égoïstes, with Alain Lacombe, Paris, 1976.

By PICCOLI: articles—

On PICCOLI: book—

On PICCOLI: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 1 March 1985.

* * *

In a career spanning six decades and encompassing more than 130 films by major European directors, Michel Piccoli deservedly enjoys an international reputation as an accomplished, versatile actor. His repertoire extends from anodyne comic roles to those stamped by ferocious black humor, from the gentle and compassionate to the cynical and sadistic, from the respectable to the deliberately outrageous.

A powerful screen presence, he has constantly served his character creations. His dark, gaunt appearance in his mid-thirties lent conviction to tough, sinister roles in crime thrillers, particularly as Nutheccio, the successful gangster of Le Doulou. Later physically imposing roles include that of Max the vice-squad detective in Max et les ferrailleurs and the ruthless Colonel Kassar in L’Attentat. The sexual charge in Piccoli’s acting was regularly exploited by Luis Buñuel. After study, he became the eager womanizer Husson of Paul Javal, in Les Demoiselles de Rochefort; the elegant opera-loving croupier Joseph of Atlantic City and in Paris brûle-t-il? the Gaullist politician Edgar Pisaní. A more disturbing moral detachment is witnessed as the cynical businessman of La Curée, as the calculating and unfeeling manipulator of Benjamin, or as the callous, corrupt, and lustful lawyer of Le Trio infernal. Yet he has also played sensitive or insecure males: in Le Mépris he excelled as the self-doubting writer Paul Javal, in Les Choses de la vie he portrayed an architect torn between his mistress and family life, and in Compartment tueurs he played the neurotic victim Cabourg.

In roles reflecting the sardonic, self-critical mood of the 1960s and 1970s Piccoli risked his established image by appearing in fiercely satirical and often scandalous films exposing the materialism, authoritarianism, gluttony, sexual depravity, and cupidity of contemporary society. His humanistic concerns are further reflected in later films by Buñuel, Godard, Tavernier, and Tozoli.

For emerging directors he extended his canon of tough characters, while in parodies of the genre he was the burly barman in Deville’s Le Paltoquet indulging in murder fantasies about his clients, and in Rouffio’s Mon beau-frère a tué ma soeur he was successfully teamed with Michel Serrault as an unworlly academic. Unusually cast as the victim, he was murdered by his duplicitous wife in Deville’s compelling Péril en la demeure.

In studies of the jealous male losing a mistress he was impressive in Demy’s Une Chambre en ville and in Derray’s Maladie d’amour. Among Piccoli’s most successful depictions of human complexity must rank his role in Bellochio’s Salto nel vuoto as the apparently balanced, humane judge who in private is withdrawn, depressive, and despotically. With age he has increasingly come to play the role of the father, particularly in explorations of the father/daughter relationship. In Cavani’s Oltre la porta he convinced as the distraught parent of a prostitute daughter, but his most notable performances came for Doillon: as the tragic father nearing death in La Fille prodigule, and, in the emotionally intense performance of La Puritaine, as a stage director working out in dramatic terms his feelings for his wayward daughter.

Whether as gangster, glutton, sardonic observer, lustful womanizer, reflective intellectual, cynical manipulator, or the mature compassionate male, Michel Piccoli carries conviction in his accomplished variations on his powerful screen personality.

—R. F. Cousins

PICKFORD, Mary

Born: Gladys Mary Smith in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, 8 April 1893.

Family: Married 1) the actor Owen Moore, 1911 (divorced 1920); 2) the actor Douglas Fairbanks, 1920 (divorced 1936); 3) the actor Buddy Rogers, 1937, two adopted children. Career: 1898—debut as child actress in stage play Boote’s Baby; played other roles in Valentine Stock Company, and toured with other companies; 1907—Broadway debut in The Warrens of Virginia; 1909—film debut as extra in Her First Biscuits; leading role in D. W. Griffith’s The Violin Maker of Cremona: became known as “The Biograph Girl with the Curls”; 1913–18—contract with Zukor; 1918—indipendent producer; 1919—co-founder, with Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, and D. W. Griffith, of United Artists; 1923–24—roles in Rosita and Dorothy Vernor of Haddon Hall attempted to break her “little girl” image; 1929—first sound film, Coquette; 1937—formed Mary Pickford Cosmetic Company; 1956—sold the last of her United Artists stock. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award for Coquette, 1928/29.

 Died: In Santa Monica, California, 29 May 1979.

Films as Actress:

(all films directed by Griffith unless noted)

1909  Her First Biscuits; The Violin Maker of Cremona; The Lonely Villa; The Son’s Return; The Faded Lilies; The Peach Basket Hat; The Way of Man; The Necklace; The Mexican Sweethearts; The Country Doctor; The Cardinal’s Conspiracy; The Renunciation; The Seventh Day; A Strange Meeting; Sweet and Twenty; The Slave; They Would Elope; The Indian Runner’s Romance; His Wife’s Visitor; Oh Uncle; The Sealed Room; 1776, or The Hessian Renegades; The Little Darling; In Old Kentucky; Getting Even; The Broken Locker; What’s Your Hurry; The Awakening; The Little Teacher; The Gibson Goddess; In The Watches of the Night; His Lost Love; The Restoration; The Light That Came; A Midnight Adventure; The Mountaineer’s Honor; The Trick That Failed; The Test; To Save Her Soul

1910  All on Account of the Milk (Powell); The Woman from Mellon’s; The Englishman and the Girl; The Newlyweds; The Thread of Destiny; The Twisted Trail; The Smoker; As It Is in Life; A Rich Revenge; A Romance of the Western Hills; May and December; Never Again!; The Unchanging Sea; Love among the Roses; The Two Brothers; Romona; In the Season of Buds; A Victim of Jealousy; A Child’s Impulse; Muggsy’s First Sweetheart; What the Daisy Said; The Call to Arms; An Arcadian Maid; Muggsy Becomes a Hero; The Sorrows of the Unfaithful; When We Were in Our Teens; Wilful Peggy; Examination Day at School; A Gold Necklace; A Lucky Toothache; Waiter No. 5; Simple Charity; The Masher; The Song of the Wildwood Flute; A Plain Song

1911  White Roses; When a Man Loves; The Italian Barber; Three Sisters; A Decree of Destiny; The First Misunderstanding (Ince and Tucker); The Dream (Ince and Tucker) (+ sc); Maid or Man (Ince); At the Duke’s Command; The Mirror; While the Cat’s Away; Her Darkest Hour (Ince); Artful
Mary Pickford (center) with Gustave von Seyffertitz (left) and Spec O'Donnell in Sparrows

Kate (Ince); A Manly Man (Ince); The Message in the Bottle (Ince); The Fisher-maid (Ince); In Old Madrid (Ince); Sweet Memories of Yesterday (Ince); The Stampede; Second Sight; The Fair Dentist; For Her Brother's Sake (Ince and Tucker); Back to the Soil; In the Sultan's Garden (Ince); The Master and the Man; The Lighthouse Keeper; For the Queen's Honor; A Gasoline Engagement; At a Quarter to Two; Science; The Skating Bug; The Call of the Song; A Toss of the Coin; The Sentinel Asleep; The Better Way; His Dress Shirt; 'Tween Two Loves (The Stronger Love); The Rose's Story; From the Bottom of the Sea; The Courting of Mary (Tucker); Love Heeds Not the Showers (Moore); Little Red Riding Hood (Moore); The Caddy's Dream (Moore)

1912
Honor Thy Father (Moore); The Mender of Nets; Iola's Promise; Fate's Inception; The Female of the Species; Just Like a Woman; Won by a Fish (Sennett); The Old Actor; A Lodging for the Night; A Beast at Bay; Home Folks; Lena and the Grease (+ sc); The School Teacher and the Wolf; An Indian Summer; A Pueblo Legend; The Narrow Road; The Inner Circle; With the Enemy's Help; Friends; So Near, Yet

So Far; A Feast in the Kentucky Hills; The One She Loved; My Baby; The Informer; The Unwelcome Guest; The New York Hat

1913
In the Bishop's Carriage (Porter); Caprice (Dawley)

1914
A Good Little Devil (Porter); Hearts Adrift (Porter); Tess of the Storm Country (Porter); The Eagle's Mate (Kirkwood); Such a Little Queen (Hugh Ford); Behind the Scenes (Kirkwood); Cinderella (Kirkwood)

1915
Mistress Nell (Kirkwood); Fanchon, the Cricket (Kirkwood); The Dawn of Tomorrow (Kirkwood); Little Pal (Kirkwood); Rags (Kirkwood); Esmerelda (Kirkwood); A Girl of Yesterday (Dwan); Madame Butterfly (Olcott)

1916
The Foundling (O'Brien); Poor Little Peppina (Olcott); The Eternal Grind (O'Brien); Hilda from Holland (O'Brien); Less Than Dust (Emerson)

1917
The Pride of the Clan (Tourneur); The Poor Little Rich Girl (Tourneur); A Romance of the Redwoods (De Mille); Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (Neilan) (title role); A Little Princess (Neilan)

1918
Stella Maris (Neilan) (title role/Unity Blake); Amurility of Clothes-Line Alley (Neilan); M'Liss (Neilan); How Could
You, Jean? (Taylor); Johanna Enlists (Taylor); One Hundred Percent American (Rosser)
1919 Captain Kidd, Jr. (Taylor)
1927 The Madonna in the Gaucho (Jones)

Films as Producer:
1919 Daddy Long-Legs (+ ro); The Hoodlum (+ ro); The Heart o’ the Hills (+ ro)
1920 Pollyanna (+ title role); Suds (+ ro)
1921 The Love Light (Marion) (+ ro as Angela); Through the Back Door (Green and Jack Pickford) (+ ro as Jeanne Budamere); Little Lord Fauntleroy (Green and Jack Pickford) (+ title role)
1922 Tess of the Storm Country (Robertson) (+ title role)
1923 Rosita (Lubitsch) (+ title role); Garrison’s Finish (Rosson) (co-sc titles only)
1924 Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall (Neilan) (+ title role)
1925 Little Annie Rooney (Beaudine) (+ title role)
1926 Sparrows (Beaudine) (+ ro as Mama Mollie)
1927 My Best Girl (Sam Taylor) (+ ro as Maggie Johnson)
1929 Coquette (Sam Taylor) (+ ro as Norma Besant); The Taming of the Shrew (Sam Taylor) (+ ro as Katherine)
1931 Kiki (Sam Taylor) (+ title role)
1933 Secrets (Borzage) (+ roles as Mary Marlow/Mary Carlton)

Publications

By PICKFORD: books—

Pickfordisms for Success, Los Angeles, 1922.
Little Liar (novel), New York, 1934.
The Demi-Widow (novel), Indianapolis, 1935.

By PICKFORD: articles—

“Greatest Business in the World,” in Chaplin (Stockholm), 10 June 1922.
“Mary Pickford Awards,” in Photoplay (New York), October 1925.

On PICKFORD: books—

Niver, Kemp, Mary Pickford: Comédienne, Los Angeles, 1970.

On PICKFORD: articles—

Cheatham, Maude, “On Location with Mary Pickford,” in Motion Picture Magazine, June 1919.
Birwell, Russell, “When I Am Old, as Told by Mary Pickford,” in Photoplay (New York), February 1925.
Harriman, M. C., “Mary Pickford,” in New Yorker, 7 April 1934.
Current Biography 1945, New York, 1945.
Bakewell, W., “Hollywood Be Thy Name,” in Filmfax (Evanson), March 1990.
Classic Images (Muscatine), May 1990.
Classic Images (Muscatine), October 1995.

* * *

It is hard to imagine the impact and popularity of Mary Pickford during the height of her career since she retired from the screen in 1933 and refused to let her films be rereleased or shown on television. She sensed that the image she established of innocence, diligence, and uncomplicatedness was historically specific. Her embodiment of idealized, rural American values was essentially meaningless past the demise of the silent film era. She belonged in short to a different world, a world of rapidly expanding technology, star idolatry, and fantastic power. Fortunately, she donated most of her films to the American Film Institute, establishing the Mary Pickford Collection, and her third husband, Buddy Rogers, organized a small theater in her honor at the Library of Congress. These are the only two places where one can see the majority of her works.

Judging from her first one-reelers at Biograph, Pickford possessed a natural screen presence and mastery of mime technique that far exceeded her fellow performers. By the time she left Biograph, she had effectively redefined film acting. She later claimed, “I refused to exaggerate in my performance. . . . Nobody ever directed me, not even Mr. Griffith.” She demonstrated intelligence, wit, grace, and ambition in quickly learning every detail of the film industry. She was fully aware of her popularity as “Little Mary” and “America’s Sweetheart,” and pressed the studios to pay her accordingly. By 1916 Pickford was earning $10,000 a week and choosing her scripts, cameraman, and director.

Her place in the pantheon of stars was secured by her performance in the title role of Tess of the Storm Country. This was followed by a string of brilliant roles that repeated the winning formula of innocence and pathos in such films as Poor Little Rich Girl, Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, Pollyanna, Little Lord Fauntleroy, and one of cinema’s first split-screen double roles in Stella Maris. The public adored her long golden curls and her embodiment of the eternal child/woman: lovable, spirited, whimsical, and pure. Behind the scenes she was an accomplished businesswoman. Pickford, along with Charles Chaplin, D. W. Griffith, and her second husband, Douglas Fairbanks, founded United Artists to control the production and distribution of their films.

In the 1920s Pickford’s career did not diminish. She graduated from “America’s Sweetheart” to “World’s Sweetheart”; hundreds of thousands lined the streets of Moscow to see her when she and Fairbanks visited the Soviet Union in 1926. She could play any role, as her performances in Sparrows, Stella Maris, The Hoodlum, and The Taming of the Shrew demonstrate. But the public wanted “Little Mary” and Pickford enjoyed the wealth and fame too much to attempt more than a few departures from her established image. Pickford explained, “My career was planned, there was never anything accidental about it. It was planned, it was painful, it was purposeful.”

Unable completely to escape her stereotype, she was forced to quit filmmaking as its popularity waned. One of the figures who shaped the Hollywood aesthetic, she lived as a virtual recluse in her mansion, Pickfair, until her death. She said of her filmgoing audience, “Make them laugh, make them cry, and back to laughter. What do people go to the theater for? An emotional exercise. . . . I am a servant of the people. I have never forgotten that.” Mary Pickford, although unseen for many years, cannot be forgotten.

—Elaine Mancini

PITT, Brad

Films as Actor:

1987 Less than Zero (Kanievskova) (extra)
1988 A Stoning in Fulham County (Elkann—for TV)
1989 Cutting Class (Pallenberg) (as Dwight Ingalls); Happy Together (Damski) (as Brian); The Image (Werner—for TV)
1990 Too Young to Die? (Markowitz—for TV) (as Billy Canton)
1991 Across the Tracks (Tung) (as Joe Maloney); Thelma & Louise (Ridley Scott) (as J. D.)
1992 Contact (short); Cool World (Bakshi) (as Frank Harris); Johnny Suede (DiCillo) (title role); A River Runs through It (Redford) (as Paul Maclean)
1993 Kalifornia (Sena) (as Early Grayce); True Romance (Tony Scott) (as Floyd)
1994 The Favor (Potier—produced in 1991) (as Elliott); Interview with the Vampire (Neil Jordan) (as Louis); Legends of the Fall (Zwick) (as Tristan Ludlow)
1995  Seven (Fincher) (as David Mills); 12 Monkeys (Gilliam) (as Jeffrey Goines)
1996  Devil’s Own (Pakula); Seven Years in Tibet (Annaud); Sleepers (Levinson); David 1997  The Dark Side of the Sun (Nikolic) (as Rick)
1998  Meet Joe Black (Brest, Smithee) (as Joe Black)
1999  Fight Club (Fincher) (as Tyler Durden); Being John Malkovich (Jonze) (as himself)
2000  Snatch (Ritchie) (as One Punch Mickey)

“Slippin’ Around on the Road with Brad Pitt,” interview with Chris Mundy, in Rolling Stone (New York), 1 December 1994.
“Pitt and the Pendulum,” interview with Tony Earnshaw, in Scarlet Street, Summer 1995.

Publications

By PITT: articles—

Interview with Alison Powell, in Interview (New York), February 1992.

On PITT: books—

Brad Pitt, Boston, 1997.
With seven leading feature film roles, four of them in blockbusters, over the four years 1992–95, Brad Pitt has proved himself a movie star for the “alternative” generation. That is, like the “alternative” rock bands who achieved mainstream success in the 1990s by revisiting rock traditions with a vaguely troubled nonchalance—rather than either a knowing distance or a fully immersed sincerity—Pitt walks in the footsteps of James Dean and all the screen’s subsequent good-looking rebel males, but with a certain low-key looseness to his torque, an extravagance to his toughness, a calculation to both his blankness and his brains. If Dean and Marlon Brando are filled with angst, Steve McQueen and Paul Newman’s personas seem emptier, both more entrenched in their out-of-step positions and more lost in them. Robert Redford’s image appears emptier still, but preoccupied with a lack of concern about it, personifying anomie or perhaps protesting it by embracing its extreme. Pitt’s characters typically accept a core of emptiness as a given, too, but they do not let it get in the way of their good times. Often they or those they care most about wind up dead or otherwise destroyed, but their movies are all about the queasy fun they have on the way.

Across a prolific string of guest appearances on television soap operas, sitcoms, drama series, and movies of the week, Pitt found his type—confused but charming all-American boy—and worked two sides of it as the size of his roles quickly increased. In four key pre-stardom performances he divided his time equally between playing good boys trying to get to up in the world (the short-lived television series Glory Days, the low-budget feature Across the Tracks), and bad boys trying to get back at it (the episode of the anthology horror series Tales from the Crypt called “King of the Road,” the television film Too Young to Die?).

It was a character from the latter category—J. D., an outlaw who steals the bankroll in Ridley Scott’s Thelma & Louise—which opened the doors to stardom for Pitt. But the pattern of his career as a leading man suggests that, in the 1990s, the lines separating conventionally striving young man, rebel, psychopath, and victim are hardly cut. Not only does Pitt play all four types in separate instances, he usually combines elements of all four at once. J. D. himself gets a free ride with the film’s heroines by pretending to be an earnest collegian—and by feigning nonaggression, giving up his plea for their help as soon as one expresses disapproval. Later, the freewheeling vigor of the exploitative sexuality and criminality J. D. unleashes for (and against) Geena Davis’ Thelma is situated by the film as just a cover for his weakness and guilt, when the cop played by Harvey Keitel takes out his anger at the women’s impossible situation by blaming and humiliating J. D.

In each of the four big-budget (and big box-office) vehicles that Pitt has carried after Thelma—A River Runs through It, Interview with the Vampire, Legends of the Fall, and Seven—his character similarly rides a crosscurrent of mutually canceling traits: iconoclastic but family-centered, wounded but destructive, unstable but brave. Pitt’s choice of projects has shaped his overall persona along similar lines: for every ambivalent leading character there is both a tame supporting role (a too-comfortable boyfriend in The Favor) and a wild one (a drug-dazed roommate in True Romance). The supporting character whose portrayal earned Pitt his first Academy Award nomination, Jeffrey Goines in 12 Monkeys, is another perfect encapsulation of the incongruity gathered around Pitt as his generation’s angry young man. Jeffrey seems insane at the beginning of the film, in his obsessive, evidently terroristic rebellion against his father—but by the end, Jeffrey’s good reasons and intentions are revealed, albeit along with his powerlessness.

Pitt has demonstrated his interest in art as well as commerce with several offbeat leading roles, all of which ask him to delve even more deeply than his mainstream hits into the essences of strongly desiring but perversely flawed men. He plays a never-will-be rock star/criminal/worthy lover in the low-budget Johnny Suede; a detective stranded across lines of being from his true love as the only human in the cartoon Cool World; and a committed lover and friend but casual killer in Kalifornia. The last film saw a lot of weight and facial hair added to the form which won him People magazine’s acclamation as the “sexiest man alive” in January 1995. Clearly Brad Pitt has become something of a flashpoint for his social moment’s ideas about, and conflicts over, masculinity. The impressively wide-ranging devotion to his craft he has shown thus far should keep him at the on-screen epicenter of such conflicts for a long time to come.

—Susan Knobloch

PLEASENCE, Donald

Donald Pleasence in Halloween II

Films as Actor:

1954  The Beachcomber (Box) (as Tromp); Orders Are Orders (Paltenghi) (as Corporal Martin)
1955  Value for Money (Annakin) (as Limp)
1956  1984 (Anderson) (as Parsons); The Black Tent (Hurst) (as Ali)
1957  The Man in the Sky (Deception against Time) (Crichton) (as Crabtree); Manuela (Stowaway Girl) (Hamilton) (as Evans); Barnacle Bill (Freud) (as bankkeller)
1958  A Tale of Two Cities (Thomas) (as Barsad); Heart of a Child (Clive Donner) (as Speil); The Wind Cannot Read (Thomas) (as doctor); The Man Inside (Gilling) (as organ grinder); The Two Headed Spy (de Toth) (as General Hardt)
1959  Look Back in Anger (Richardson) (as Hurst); Killers of Kilimanjaro (Thorpe) (as Captain); The Battle of the Sexes (Crichton) (as Irwin Hoffman)
1960  The Shakedown (Leumont) (as Jessel); The Flesh and the Fiends (Mania) (Gilling) (as William Hare); Hell Is a City (Guest) (as Gus Hawkins); Circus of Horrors (Hayers) (as Vanet); Sons and Lovers (Cardiff) (as Papplewhor); The Big Day (Scott) (as Victor Partridge); Suspsect (The Risk) (Boultling) (as Brown); The Hands of Orlac (Les Mains d’Orlac) (Gréville) (as Coates); A Story of David (McNaught) (as Nabal)
1961  No Love for Johnnie (Thomas) (as Roger Renfrew); The Wind of Change (Sewell) (as Pop); Spare the Rod (Norman) (as Jenkins); The Horsemasters (Fairchild) (as Major Pinksy); What a Carve Up! (Jackson) (as Everett Sloane); The Inspector (Lisa) (Dunne) (as Sergeant Walters)
1962  Dr. Crippen (Lynn) (title role)
1963  The Caretaker (The Guest) (Clive Donner) (as Davis); The Great Escape (John Sturges) (as Blythe)
1965  The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens) (as the Dark Hermit); The Hallelujah Trail (John Sturges) (as Oracle Jones)
1966  Cul-de-Sac (Polanski) (as George); Matchless (Lattuada) (as Andreanu); Eye of the Devil (Thompson) (as Pere Dominic); The Night of the Generals (Litvak) (as General Kahlenberge); Fantastic Voyage (Fleischer) (as Dr. Michaels)
1967  William Penny (Gries) (as Preacher Quint); You Only Live Twice (Gilbert) (as Blofeld)
1969  The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes) (as prospector); Arthur (Arthur) (Gallo) (cameo role)
1970  THX 1138 (Lucas) (as SEN 5241); Soldier Blue (Nelson) (as Isaac Cumber); Mister Freedom (Klein) (as Dr. Freedom)
1971  The Pied Piper (Demy) (as Baron)
1972  Kidnapped (Delbert Mann) (as Ebenezer Balfour); Innocent Bystanders (Collinson) (as Loomis); Henry VIII and His Six Wives (Hussein) (as Thomas Cromwell); The Jerusalem File (Flynn) (as Maj. Samuels); Death Live (Raw Meat) (Sherman) (as Inspector Colquhoun)
1973  Wedding in White (Fruet) (as Jim); From beyond the Grave (Connor) (as peddler); Tales That Witness Madness (Francis) (as Tremayne)
1974  The Black Windmill (Siegel) (as Cedric Harper); The Mutations (Cardiff) (as Nolter); Barry Mackenzie Holds His Own (Beresford) (as Erich, Count Plasma); Journey into Fear (Daniel Mann) (as Kuveti)
1975  The Count of Monte Cristo (Greene—for TV) (as Danglars); Heart of the West (Hollywood Cowboy) (Zieff) (as A. J. Nietzsche); I Don’t Want to Be Born (The Devil within Her) (Sagsy) (as Dr. Finch); Escape to Witch Mountain (Hough) (as Deramian)
1976  The Devil’s Men (Land of the Minotaur) (Carayannis) (as Father Roche); The Last Tycoon (Kazan) (as Boxley); The Passover Plot (Campus) (as Pontius Pilate); Dirty Knights’ Work (Trial by Combat; A Choice of Weapons) (Connor) (as Sir Giles Marley)
1977  The Eagle Has Landed (John Sturges) (as Heinrich Himmler); Telefon (Siegel) (as Nicolai Dalchimsky); The Uncanny (Heroux) (as Valentine De’Ath); Oh, God! (Carl Reiner) (as Dr. Harmon); Night Creature (Madden); Goldenrod (Hart—for TV)
1978  Sergeant Pepper’s Lonely Hearts Club Band (Schultz) (as B. D. Brockhearts); Halloween (Carpenter) (as Loomis); Power Play (Burke) (as Blair); The Dark Secret of Harvest
Home (Leo Penn—for TV) (as narrator); L’Ordre et la sécurité du monde (d’Anna); The Defection of Simas Kurdirkia (Rich—for TV)

1979 Gold of the Amazon Women (Lester—for TV); Tomorrow Never Comes (Collinson) (as Dr. Todd); All Quiet on the Western Front (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Kantoreck); Les Liens du sang (Blood Relatives) (Chabrol) (as Doniac); Dracula (Badham) (as Seward); Better Late Than Never (Crenna—for TV); Good Luck, Miss Wyckoff (Chomsky) (as Steiner); Jaguar Lives (Pintoff) (as General Villanova); L’Homme en colère (The Angry Man; Jigsaw) (Pinoteau) (as France)

1980 Halloween II (Rosenthal) (as Loomis)

1981 Escape from New York (Carpenter) (as President of the U.S.); The Monster Club (Baker) (as Pickering); The Thing (Carpenter)

1982 Alone in the Dark (Sholder); Witness for the Prosecution (Gibson—for TV); Race for the Yankee Zephyr (Treasure of the Yankee Zephyr) (Hemmings); To Kill a Stranger (Moczuma) (as Col. Kostik)

1983 The Devonsville Terror (Lommel)

1984 Warrior of the Lost Word (Worth); A Breed Apart (Mora); Where Is Parsifal? (Helman); The Ambassador (Peacemaker) (Thompson) (as Minister Eretz)

1985 The Corsican Brothers (Sharp—for TV); Terror in the Aisles (Kuehn—compilation film) (as narrator); Arch of Triumph (Hussein—for TV) (as Haake); Franklinstein’s Great Aunt Tillie (Gold); Phenomena (Creepers) (Argento) (as John McGregor); Sotto il vestito niente (Nothing Underneath) (Vanzina) (as Inspector); Treasure of the Amazon (Cardona) (as Klaus)

1986 Cobra Mission (The Rainbow Professional) (Ludman)

1987 Scoop (Millar—for TV); Spectre (Specters) (Avallone) (as Prof. Lasky, Archaeologist); Warrior Queen (Pompeii) (Vincent) (as Claudius); Il grande ritorno di Django (Django Strikes Again) (Ted Archer); Prince of Darkness (Carpenter) (as Priest); Ground Zero (Pattinson and Myles) (as Prosper Gaffney)

1988 Commander (Dawson); The Great Escape II: The Untold Story (Taylor—for TV); Halloween IV: The Return of Michael Myers (Little) (as Dr. Loomis); Hanna’s War (Golan) (as Rosza); Pagamini Horror (Coates); Phantom of Death (Deodato); The House of Usher (Birkshaw) (as Clive Usher)

1989 The Room (Altman); Halloween V: The Revenge of Michael Myers (Otherin-Girard) (as Dr. Loomis); Ten Little Indians (Birkshaw) (as Justice Wargrave); River of Death (Carver) (as Heinrich Spaatz)

1990 I, Charles de Gaulle (Granier-Defere); Miliardi (Billions) (Vanzina) (as Ripa); Buried Alive (Kikone) (as Dr. Schaeffer)

1991 Dien Bien phu (Schoendoerffer) (as Howard Simpson); American Rickshaw (Martino) (as the Reverend Morton)

1992 Shadows and Fog (Woody Allen) (as Doctor)

1994 Hour of the Pig (Megahey) (as Pincheon); Femme Fatale (Prasad) (as Victor Hardy)

1995 Merlin (for TV); Halloween VI: The Curse of Michael Myers (Chapelle) (as Dr. Loomis)

Publications

By PLEASENCE: articles—

‘‘Taking the Pick,’’ in Films and Filming (London), August 1962.
Interview with Tim Pulleine, in Films and Filming (London), April 1985.

On PLEASENCE: articles—

‘‘Never to Be Forgotten,’’ in Psychotropic Video (Narrowsburg), no. 20, 1995.

* * *

His distinctive bald pate, a slightly otherworldly glint in his pale blue eyes, and an unnerving fixated manner combined to make Donald Pleasence an arresting character actor. Most often cast as a Milquetoast or unctuous schemer in his early career, he absorbed the same traits into the predominantly villainous roles that became the trademark of his later screen career.

Pleasence made his film debut in Muriel Box’s The Beachcomber, a remake of the 1938 Charles Laughton vehicle, opposite Robert Newton as the title character. Turns as the real-life murderer and body snatcher William Hare in John Gilling’s The Flesh and the Fiends and the hempecked title character (his only starring role) in Dr. Crippen, a vivid recounting of the legendary case of the British wife murderer of that name, anticipated numerous horror roles to come.

Pleasence drew critical raves for his central role in the dark, absurdist comedy The Guest, based on Harold Pinter’s play The Caretaker. The performance attracted the attention of Roman Polanski, who cast Pleasence in his own dark, absurdist comedy Cal-de-Sac, the Polish director’s second English-language film. Pleasence played George, the quintessential Polanski protagonist, a man whose life comes undone when his insular world is intruded upon by outsiders, in this case a pair of fleeing gangsters.

The Great Escape, in which Pleasence appeared among a large international cast, opened the door to Hollywood, where he enjoyed a busy career on the big and small screens (appearing in such hit television series as The Twilight Zone and The Outer Limits). He made the transition to horror film staple for an entire generation when John Carpenter cast him as the obsessed doctor on the trail of the ‘‘ultimate evil,’’ a mass-murdering former patient named Michael Myers, in Halloween. Pleasence’s character was named Sam Loomis after the part played by John Gavin in Hitchcock’s classic Psycho.
Pleasence reappeared as Loomis in five Halloween sequels, the last of which, Halloween VI: The Curse of Michael Myers, was released after Pleasence’s death in 1995.

—Bill Wine, updated by John McCarty
POITIER, Sidney

Films as Actor:

1949 From Whom Cometh My Help (Signal Corps doc)
1950 No Way Out (Mankiewicz) (as Dr. Luther Brooks)
1952 Cry, the Beloved Country (Korda) (as Reverend Msimangu);
   Red Ball Express (Boetticher) (as Corporal Andrew Robertson)
1954 Go, Man, Go! (Howe) (as Inman Jackson)
1955 Blackboard Jungle (Richard Brooks) (as Gregory Miller)
1956 Goodbye, My Lady (Wellman) (as Gates)
1958 Edge of the City (Ritt) (as Tommy Tyler); Something of Value
   (Richard Brooks) (as Kimani); Band of Angels (Walsh)
   (as Rau-ru)
1958 Mark of the Hawk (Audley) (as Obam); The Defiant Ones
   (Kramer) (as Noah Cullen); The Virgin Island (Jackson)
   (as Marcus)
1959 Porgy and Bess (Preminger) (as Porgy)
1960 All the Young Men (Bartlett) (as Towler)
1961 A Raisin in the Sun (Petrie) (as Walter Lee Younger); Paris Blue
   (Ritt) (as Eddie Cook)
1962 Pressure Point (Cornfield) (as Doctor)
1963 Lilies of the Field (Nelson) (as Homer Smith)
1964 The Long Ships (Cardiff) (as Ali Mansuh)
1965 The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens) (as Simon of Cyrene);
   The Bedford Incident (Harris) (as Ben Munceford); A Patch of Blue (Green) (as Gordon Ralfe)
1966 The Slender Thread (Pollack) (as Alan Newell); Duel at Diablo
   (Nelson) (as Toller)
1967 To Sir with Love (Clavell) (as Mark Thackeray); In the Heat of the Night (Jewison) (as Virgil Tibbs); Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner (Kramer) (as John Prentice)

1968 For Love of Ivy (Daniel Mann) (as Jack Parks)
1969 The Lost Man (Arthur) (as Jason Higgs)
1970 They Call Me Mister Tibbs! (Douglas) (title role)
1971 The Organization (Medford) (as Virgil Tibbs); Brother John (Goldstone) (as John Kane)
1975 The Wilby Conspiracy (Nelson) (as Shack Twala)
1981 Shoot to Kill (Deadly Pursuit) (Spottiswoode) (as Warren
   Stantin); Little Nikita (The Sleeper) (Benjamin) (as Roy Parmenter)
1991 Separate but Equal (Stevens Jr.—for TV) (as Thurgood Marshall); Children of the Dust (David Greene—for TV) (as Gypsy Smith)
1992 Sneakers (Robinson) (as Donald Crease)
1996 Wild Bill: Hollywood Maverick (Robinson); To Sir With Love
   2 (Bogdanovich—for TV) (as Mark Thackeray)
1997 Mandela and de Klerk (Sargent—for TV) (as Nelson Mandela);
   The Jackal (Caton-Jones) (as Preston)
1998 David and Lisa (Kramer?—for TV) (as Dr. Jack Miller)
1999 Free of Eden (Ichaso) (as Will Cleamons + exec pr); The Simple Life of Noah Dearborn (Champion—for TV) (as Noah Dearborn)

Publications

By POITIER: books—

This Life, New York, 1980.

By POITIER: articles—

“They Call Me a Do-It-Yourself Man,” in Films and Filming
(London), September 1959.
“Entertainment, Politics, and the Movie Business,” interview with Sidney Poitier and Lilia Skalia in Lilies of the Field

On POITIER: books—

On POITIER: articles—

American Film, September-October 1991.

Cinéma and TV, New York, 1967.
As the Hollywood film industry ended the twentieth century, Eddie Murphy, Danny Glover, and Denzel Washington could be counted as major movie stars. But they owe a major part of their success to Sidney Poitier’s pioneering efforts three decades earlier. In the late 1950s and through the 1960s Poitier singlehandedly transformed the Hollywood movie’s image of the black man from the racist “coon” to the positive hero.

Poitier was the symbol of the liberal Hollywood, a black actor with dignity. But he had not been achieved “overnight,” without struggle. During the early 1950s he took what parts he could land. From Joseph Mankiewicz’s No Way Out, where he played an educated, bright, and dedicated doctor caught in a heated racial situation, to James Wong Howe’s sole credit as a director, the creaky portrait of the Harlem Globetrotters’ basketball enterprise, Go, Man, Go! Richard Brooks’s somewhat sanitized portrait of inner-city America, Blackboard Jungle, made Poitier a star. Thereafter his presence became a symbol to the rising consciousness about racial segregation in the United States. Noted producers cast him in roles designed for his new image. Most self-conscious was Stanley Kramer’s The Defiant Ones, with black and white chained together trying to escape from a brutal Southern prison camp. Otto Preminger’s Porgy and Bess was the director’s homage to black life in the South, while in Lilies of the Field Poitier assisted a group of nuns, a “feel good” classic.

During this period he was much honored, winning many awards, from prizes from the Venice and Berlin Film Festivals to a New York Film Critics Award for best actor to the William J. German Human Relations Award from the American Jewish Congress. He won a much-deserved Oscar for Lilies of the Field, and so became a top box-office draw for A Patch of Blue, To Sir, with Love, In the Heat of the Night, and Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner? In 1967 Poitier was rated number seven on a list of top moneymaking stars; the following year he ranked first.

By 1969 he had done so well he was able, with Paul Newman, Barbra Streisand, Steve McQueen, and Dustin Hoffman to create the First Artists Film Production Company. He had decided then to work within the Hollywood system and become a director, but Buck and the Preacher, A Warm December, and Uptown Saturday Night made precious little money. He returned to acting, with little success. Little Nikita ended his career as a leading man.

Poitier had become a member of the establishment, penning a celebrated autobiography in 1980. His black detective from the North made so famous with In the Heat of the Night was considered radical in the late 1960s. Two decades later no one commented on his roles as an FBI agent. In 1989 he was elected to the Board of Trustees for the American Museum of the Moving Image. In 1992 he was honored with the American Film Institute Life Achievement Award, in 1994 he earned the National Board of Review Career Achievement Award, and in 1995 he was honored with the Kennedy Center Honors Lifetime Achievement Award.

—Douglas Gomery

POSTLETHWAITE, Pete

Nationality: British. Born: Lancashire, (some sources say Warrington, Cheshire) 7 February 1945. Education: began drama school at age 24. Family: longtime relationship; one son. Career: Teacher; began acting, 1970; theater acting credits include performances at the Manchester Royal Exchange, the Bristol Old Vic, and the Liverpool Everyman; member of the Royal Shakespeare Company from (?) until 1987; played Paula’s father, Needle TV series, 1990; appeared as guest on several television programs. Address: 4 Windmill Street, London W1P 1HF, United Kingdom.

Films as Actor:
1977 The Duellists (Scott) (credited as Peter Postlethwaite)
1978 Doris and Doreen (Six Plays by Alan Bennett: Doris and Doreen) (Frequars—for TV)
1979 Afternoon Off (Six Plays by Alan Bennett: Afternoon Off) (Frequencies—for TV)
1985 Cyrano de Bergerac (Hands, Simpson—for TV) (as Ragueneau); A Private Function (Mowbray) (as Nuttoll)
1987 Coast to Coast (Johnson—for TV) (as Keeks McGuinness)
1988 Distant Voices, Still Lives (Davies) (as Father); The Dressmaker (O’Brien) (credited as Peter Postlethwaite) (as Jack); Number 27 (Powell) (as Becket); To Kill a Priest (Complot, Le, Popieluszko, Zabic ksiedza) (Holland) (as Josef)
1989 Tumbledown (Eyre—for TV) (as Major—Rehabilitation Center)
1990 Hamlet (Zeffirelli) (as Player King); They Never Slept (Prasad) (as Panter); Treasure Island (Heston—for TV) (as Peter Postlethwaite) (as George Merry)
1991 A Child From the South (Rezende—for TV) (as Harry); The Grass Arena (MacKinnon)
1992 Split Second (Maylam) (as Paulsen); Waterland (Gyllenhaal) (as Henry Crick); The Last of the Mohicans (Mann) (as Captain Beams); Alien3 (Fincher) (as David)
1994 Anchoress (Newby) (as William Carpenter); In the Name of the Father (Sheridan) (as Giuseppe Conlon)
1994 Martin Chuzzlewit (James) (mini—for TV) (as Montague Tigg/Tigg Montague); Sharpe’s Enemy (Clegg—for TV) (as Hakeswill); Sharpe’s Company (Clegg—for TV) (as Hakeswill)
1995 Suite 16 (Deruddere) (as Glover); The Usual Suspects (Singer) (as Kobayashi)
1996 Crime-time (Sluizer) (as Sidney); Brassed Off (Herman) (as Danny); William Shakespeare’s Romeo + Juliet (Romeo + Juliet) (Luhrmann) (as Father Laurence); Dragonheart (Cohen) (as Gilbert); James and the Giant Peach (Selick) (as Old Man); When Saturday Comes (Giese) (as Ken Jackson)
1997 Bandita (Bastard, Brute) (Deficzer) (as Sincai); Amistad (Spielberg) (as Holabird); The Lost World: Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (as Roland Tembo); The Serpent’s Kiss (Le
Pete Postlethwaite (right) with Daniel Day-Lewis in In the Name of the Father

Baiser du serpent, Der Schlangenkuss (Rousselot) (as Thomas Smithers)
1998 Lost for Words (Bell—for TV) (as Deric Longden); Among Giants (Miller) (as Ray)
1999 The Divine Ryans (Reynolds) (as Uncle Reg); Animal Farm (Stephenson—for TV) (as voice of Benjamin, Jones); Wayward Son (Harris) (as Ben Alexander); Rat (Barron); When the Sky Falls (Mackenzie) (as The Commandant); Ring of Fire (Koller)
2000 Baiser du serpent, Der Schlangenkuss (Rousselot) (as Thomas Smithers)

Publications

On POSTLETHWAITE: articles—

* * *

Pete Postlethwaite’s face offers an irresistible field for similes. At the Bristol Old Vic, where he trained, the Principal told him he had a face “like a stone archway.” His craggy features have since been likened to “a bag of spanners” and “a smashed-up wall,” and one critic was moved to write of Postlethwaite’s cheekbones “boiling out of his head like swollen knuckles.” In the film world of perfect teeth, plastic surgery, and flawless complexions, Postlethwaite is the most improbable of movie stars. Yet he’s rarely had a day out of work since he took up acting in 1970, his screen presence commands attention, stealing scenes without visible effort, and his range is impressive and still actively extending. He is, in Steven Spielberg’s opinion, “probably the best actor in the world today.”

Inevitably, given his raw-hewn looks and down-to-earth name and background, Postlethwaite has collected his fair share of working-class roles, several of them among his best. His strong facial structure can readily suggest menace; but also a wistful vulnerability, equally convincing as the harsh domestic tyrant of Terence Davies’ Distant.
Voices, Still Lives and as the dedicated bandmaster, doggedly fighting off terminal cancer, in Brassed Off. In Among Giants he played his first romantic lead (at age 53) with all the wary delight of a man finding love long after he’s ceased looking for it; the love scenes between his unemployed Yorkshire Tabourer and Aussie backpacker Rachel Griffiths felt touchingly tentative, neither one quite sure what they were getting into.

For his Oscar-nominated performance as the unjustly jailed Guiseppe Conlon in Jim Sheridan’s political drama In the Name of the Father, Postlethwaite drew powerfully on his Lancashire roots, basing the character on his own father, “an extraordinary man . . . simple, unaffected, sweet, straightforward.” Achieving the notoriously difficult feat of playing good without seeming sanctimonious or smug, he portrayed Conlon as a man with a quiet, unflinching sense of moral rightness who attains tragic stature in adversity. His long, expressive face conveyed sadness and bewilderment at the injustice inflicted on him, but also an unbreakable, instinctive dignity.

Postlethwaite’s range extends far beyond working-class heroes (or villains), taking in light comedy, action movies, horror, noirish thrillers, and Shakespeare. He actively seeks diversity, relishing the challenge. “There’s no delight in doing what I know I can do. . . . The danger ensures you remain alive. All these different parts keep me fresh and still loving what I do.” As Friar Lawrence in Baz Luhrmann’s exhilarating revisionist Romeo + Juliet he kept his performance tuned into the film’s fizzing Latino-punk rhythms while anchoring it in the bedrock of his solid stage-Shakespeare grounding. For Spielberg’s second dinosaur romp, The Lost World, he played the big-game hunter Roland Tembo with clipped upper-class tones and a wry hint of seen-it-all self-mockery.

But perhaps Postlethwaite’s most relishably unpredictable performance to date was as Kobayashi, soft-spoken enforcer for the mysterious Keyzer Soze in Bryan Singer’s labyrinthine thriller The Usual Suspects. Faced with the task of playing a blatantly non-Japanese lawyer with a Japanese name, Postlethwaite elected to give his character a remote, fastidious spin, an air of Zen-like calm and the faintest hint of an Indian accent, that positioned him midway between the Dalai Lama and an English butler. His multi-layered rendition added further to the enigmas of a film in which nobody and nothing could be taken at face value, and proved conclusively that Pete Postlethwaite’s ability to confound audience expectations is as yet far from being exhausted.

—Philip Kemp

POWELL, Dick

Nationality: American. Born: Richard Ewing Powell in Mountain View, Arkansas, 14 November 1904. Education: Attended high school in Little Rock, Arkansas, Little Rock College, one year. Family: Married 1) M. Maund; 2) the actress Joan Blondell, 1936 (divorced 1945), daughter: Ellen, adopted son: Norman; 3) the actress June Allyson, 1945, adopted daughter. Career: Singer with his own band from age 17; also played baritone horn; toured with the Royal Peacock Band, then with Charlie Davis’s orchestra, Indianapolis; 1930—singer, comedian, and master of ceremonies at Stanley Theatre, Pittsburgh; also sang on radio; 1932—film debut in Blessed Event; contract with Warner Brothers; also sang on radio series...
POWELL

1937  On the Avenue (Del Ruth); The Singing Marine (Enright);
     Varsity Show (Berkeley); Hollywood Hotel (Berkeley)
1938  Cowboy from Brooklyn (Bacon); Hard to Get (Enright);
     Going Places (Enright)
1939  Naughty but Nice (Enright)
1940  Christmas in July (Preston Sturges); I Want a Divorce (Murphy)
1941  Model Wife (Jason); In the Navy (Lubin)
1942  Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall) (as himself); Happy Go Lucky (Bernhardt)
1943  True to Life (Marshall); Riding High (Marshall)
1944  It Happened Tomorrow (Clair); Meet the People (Reiser);
     Murder, My Sweet (Dmytryk) (as Philip Marlowe)
1945  Cornered (Dmytryk)
1947  Johnny O’Clock (Rossen)
1948  To the Ends of the Earth (Stephenson); The Pitfalls (de Toth); Station West (Lanfield); Rogue’s Regiment (Flory)
1949  Mrs. Mike
1950  The Reformer and the Redhead (Panama); Right Cross (John Sturges)
1951  Cry Danger (Parrish); The Tall Target (Anthony Mann);
     You Never Can Tell (Breslow)
1952  The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli)
1954  Susan Slept Here (Tashlin)

Films as Director:

1953  Split Second
1956  The Conqueror (+pr)
1957  You Can’t Run Away from It (+ pr); The Enemy Below (+ pr)
1958  The Hunters (+ pr)

Publications

On POWELL: books—

On POWELL: articles—

May 1961.
Corneau, E., “The Crooner Who Turned Tough Guy,” in Classic
Film Collector, Fall 1972.
Landrot, Marine, “Plu$ business que show,” in Télérama (Paris), 27
October 1993.
Classic Images (Muscatine), November 1993.

Dick Powell was a rare performer in the motion picture business.
While other, more talented performers came and went, Dick Powell managed to hang on as a star for more than two decades, evolving from boy crooner in the 1930s to tough guy in the 1940s. By the 1950s he was able to move directly into television and became a top producer. Powell understood his own limitations: “I started out with two assets: a voice that didn’t drive audiences into the streets, and a determination to make money.”

During the 1930s, beginning with 42nd Street, Powell functioned as the leading man in innumerable Warner Brothers musicals. Churu-ically smiling, he chased Ruby Keeler through such films as The Gold Diggers of 1933, Dames, and Footlight Parade. Powell’s performances were workmanlike, and helped boost him into the Motion Picture Herald’s list of top stars in 1935 (seventh place) and 1936 (sixth place).

From 1939 on, Dick Powell strove to break his image of adolescent singer. He moved to Paramount and took on different roles, including comedies for Preston Sturges (Christmas in July) and René
Clair (It Happened Tomorrow). But only another move to RKO gave Powell the chance to develop an altogether new screen image. In Murder, My Sweet he became an active participant in the film noir cycle of the 1940s. Other films of this genre that starred Dick Powell include Cornered, Johnny O’Clock, and Pitfall. For the 1940s there was a “new, rough tough Dick Powell,” popular but never reaching the fame of the boy crooner of the 1930s.

In the 1950s, Powell began to direct and produce television. He formed Four Star Television with David Niven, Ida Lupino, and Charles Boyer, but it was Powell who ran the corporation, producing such hits as The Rifleman, Wanted—Dead or Alive, and The Detectives.

—Douglas Gomery

POWELL, Eleanor

Nationality: American. Born: Springfield, Massachusetts, 21 November 1912. Family: Married the actor Glenn Ford, 1943 (divorced 1959), son: Peter. Career: Began studying ballet at age 6; appeared in Atlantic City clubs as a child; 1928—dance debut with Co-Optimists troupe in New York; then learned tap dancing; 1929—Broadway debüt in Follow Through; 1935—film debut in George White’s Scandals; 1936—lead role in film Broadway Melody of 1936; contract with MGM, and made series of successful musicals until 1940;
1953–56—created and acted in TV series Faith of Our Children;
1960–64—in musical revues in Las Vegas and New York. Awards:
Five Emmys for Faith of Our Children TV series. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 11 February 1982.

Films as Actress:

1935  George White’s Scandals (George White’s 1935 Scandals)
     (White) (as Marilyn Collins); Broadway Melody of 1936
     (Del Ruth) (as Irene Foster/Mlle. Arlette)
1936  Born to Dance (Del Ruth) (as Nora Paige)
1937  Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth) (as Sally Lee); Rosalie
     (Van Dyke) (title role)
1939  Honolulu (Buzzell) (as Dorothy March)
1940  Broadway Melody of 1940 (Taurog) (as Clare Bennett)
1941  Lady Be Good (McLeod) (as Marilyn Marsh)
1942  Ship Ahoy (Buzzell) (as Tallulah Winters)
1943  I Dood It (By Hook or by Crook) (Minnelli) (as Constance Shaw); Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (as featured performer)
Eleanor Powell assumed the mantle of Hollywood’s top female tap dancer from Ruby Keeler. But where one might question Keeler’s dancing ability, Powell’s films provide clear evidence that she danced without peer. This view seems confirmed by the Dance Masters of America who awarded her the title of world’s greatest tap dancer and by MGM’s willingness to showcase an unknown in her second film. MGM banked on America’s tap-dancing craze during the 1930s to catapult Powell to immediate stardom; a gamble which paid off handsomely. Her weak acting and singing (she was usually dubbed by Marjorie Lane) failed to detract and she became a box-office smash. In 11 films from Broadway Melody of 1936 to Sensations of 1945 Powell remained the premier female tap dancer. Arturo Toscanini once said that the three things he would remember most about his trip to the West Coast were the sunset, the Grand Canyon, and Eleanor Powell’s dancing. As she retired, Ann Miller literally followed in her footsteps to dominate tap during the late 1940s and early 1950s.

Powell incorporated acrobatics and ballet (which she studied first) into tap, creating a unique dance style that emphasized high kicks, rapid ‘‘grands pirouettes,’’ ‘‘chain turns,’’ and gymnastics. She also employed steps, positions, and movements usually reserved for men. Her aggressive and powerful technique ultimately classified her as a solo performer. As Fred Astaire said in Steps in Time, ‘‘She ‘put ‘em down’ like a man, no ricky-ticky-sissy stuff with Ellie. She really knocked out a tap dance in a class by herself.’’ The consistency of her dancing also offers sufficient evidence that she worked as her own choreographer.

All Powell’s films, except Broadway Melody of 1940, move to opulent finales which she dances without a partner; she does however dance with a chorus. In Broadway Melody of 1936 she performs in a glittering tuxedo surrounded by 30 male dancers in top hat and tails. In Born to Dance, Powell commands a battleship (set), its ‘‘crew,’’ two military bands, and a battalion of women. In Rosalie, she dances with 34 West Point cadets and 500 extras. This solo emphasis created an obvious problem for MGM when casting romantic musical comedies. In fact, MGM could not find her a suitable dancing partner. No male dancer with whom she teamed could match her tap virtuosity; only Fred Astaire in Broadway Melody of 1940 proved an equal partner. (Their ‘‘Begin the Beguine’’ routine remains one of the most sublime performances in Hollywood musical history.) Consequently, MGM usually paired her with nondancing male stars such as Jimmy Stewart, Robert Taylor, and Nelson Eddie. Powell eventually courted seven leading men in nine films over an eight-year span, and even danced with Buttons the Dog in Lady Be Good and a horse in Sensations of 1945. Powell always portrayed a self-assured, intelligent, and independent woman, with strong and supportive female friends, interested in romance but not as an exclusive goal. Her idealized placement was reinforced by her comparison to other women in the films who ranged from gold-diggers to the freakish to the vain. This characterization reflected her dance routines which, as already mentioned, also upset the romantic comedy formula of female to male capitulation. During the late 1930s and early 1940s, such a persona undoubtedly added to her popularity.

—Greg S. Faller
POWELL, William

Films as Actor:

1922 Spanish Love; Sherlock Holmes (Parker) (as Forman Wells); When Knighthood Was in Flower (Vignola) (as Francis I); Outcast (Withey) (as DeValle)
1923 The Bright Shawl (Robertson)
1924 Under the Red Robe (Crosland) (as Duke of Orleans); Romola (King) (as Tito Melema); Dangerous Money (Tuttle)
1925 Too Many Kisses (Sloane); Faint Perftime (Gastier); My Lady’s Lips (Hogan); The Beautiful City (Webb)
1926 White Mice (Edward Griffith); Sea Horses (Dwan); Desert Gold (Seitz); The Runaway (William DeMille); Aloma of the South Seas (Tourneur); Beau Geste (Brenon) (as Boldoni); Tin Gods (Dwan); The Great Gatsby (Brenon) (as George Wilson)
1927 New York (Reed); Love’s Greatest Mistake (Sutherland); Special Delivery (Goodrich); Senorita (Badger); Paid to Love (Hawks); Time for Love (Tuttle); Nevada (Waters); She’s a Sheik (Badger); Feel My Pulse (La Cava)
1928 Beau Sabreur (Waters); Partners in Crime (Strayer); The Last Command (von Sternberg); The Dragnet (von Sternberg); The Vanishing Pioneer (Waters); Forgotten Faces (Schertzinger)
1929 Interference (Mendez); The Canary Murder Case (St. Clair) (as Philo Vance); The Green Murder Case (Tuttle) (as Philo Vance); Charming Sinners (Milton); Four Feathers (Schoedsack and Mendez); Pointed Heels (Sutherland)
1930 The Benson Murder Case (Tuttle) (as Philo Vance); Paramount on Parade (as himself/Philo Vance); Shadow of the Law (Gastier); Behind the Makeup (Milton); Street of Chance (Cromwell); For the Defense (Cromwell)
1931 Man of the World (Wallace); Ladies Man (Mendez); The Road to Singapore (Green)
1932 High Pressure (Le Roy); Jewel Robbery (Dieterle); One Way Passage (Garnett); Lawyer Man (Dieterle)
1933 Double Harness (Cromwell); Private Detective 62 (Curtiz); The Kennel Murder Case (Curtiz) (as Philo Vance)

1934 Fashions of 1934 (Dieterle); The Key (Curtiz); Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke); The Thin Man (Van Dyke) (as Nick Charles); Evelyn Prentice (Howard)
1935 Reckless (Fleming); Star of Midnight (Roberts); Escapade (LeRoy); Rendezvous (Howard)
1936 The Great Ziegfeld (Leonard) (title role); The Ex-Mrs. Bradford (Roberts); Libeled Lady (Conway); My Man Godfrey (La Cava) (title role); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke) (as Nick Charles)
1937 The Last of Mrs. Cheynne (Boleslawsky); The Emperor’s Candlesticks (Fitzmaurice); Double Wedding (Thorpe)
1938 The Baroness and the Butler (Walter Lang)
1939 Another Thin Man (Van Dyke) (as Nick Charles)
1940 I Love You Again (Van Dyke)
1941 Love Crazy (Conway); Shadow of the Thin Man (Van Dyke) (as Nick Charles)
1942 Crossroads (Conway)
1943 The Youngest Profession (Buzzell) (as himself)
1944 The Heavenly Body (Hall); The Thin Man Goes Home (Thorpe) (as Nick Charles)
1946 Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli) (as Florenz Ziegfeld); The Hoodlum Saint (Taurog)
1947 Song of the Thin Man (Buzzell) (as Nick Charles); Life with Father (Curtiz) (as Clarence Day); The Senator Was Indiscreet (Kaufman)
1948 Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid (Pichel) (as Mr. Peabody)
1949 Take One False Step (Erskine); Dancing in the Dark (Reis)
1951 The Treasure of the Last Canyon (Tetzlaff); It’s a Big Country (Wellman and others)
1953 The Girl Who Had Everything (Thorpe); How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco)
1955 Mister Roberts (Ford and LeRoy) (as Doc)

Publications

On POWELL: books—

On POWELL: articles—

William Powell specialized in urbane cynicism, signifying unflappable, upper-class charm with the smallest gesture. A dependable actor at the MGM stable in the late 1930s and the 1940s, Powell, whether romantic, comic, or sinister, kept his edge of witty sophistication invariably intact.

Brief stage training in the early 1920s led to film work. His features—trim moustache, expressive eyes, close haircut—were ideal for silent picture villainy. He remained a busy supporting actor during that decade. Powell easily bridged the transition to sound, which utilized his talents fully. With the addition of his persuasive, carnival-barker voice, Powell was roguishly slick rather than suspicious, suitable for lawyer and detective parts as well as smooth criminals. One of his earliest talkie assignments, as the private eye Philo Vance in The Canary Murder Case, served as a preliminary for the role most closely associated with him: Nick Charles to Myrna Loy’s Nora in the screen adaptation of Dashiell Hammett’s The Thin Man. Powell and Loy generated a rare, extraordinary chemistry on-screen, pioneering a concept that would become a staple in screwball comedy—marriage could be fun, a partnership. The stars paired in 13 films altogether, including five additional Thin Man outings.

His subsequent screen roles were variations on the Charles theme, igniting a succession of classic comedies—Libeled Lady, My Man Godfrey, Double Wedding. Health problems led to relative inaction in the 1940s and after, but by choosing his roles with care and accuracy, he eased into genial character parts. In Life with Father, as the irascible Clarence Day, Powell reached another career peak. He chose to retire after his warmly received portrait of Doc in Mister Roberts.

Talent and fortunate material contributed to Powell’s success. He ranks among the best sophisticated comedy stars, and his work remains eminently entertaining.

—Richard Sater
POWER, Tyrone

Nationality: American. Born: Tyrone Edmund Power in Cincinnati, Ohio, 5 May 1913; son of the actor Tyrone Power Sr. Education: Attended Sisters of Mercy Academy and St. Xavier Academy, both in Cincinnati; Preparatory School of the University of Dayton, 1928–29; Purcell High School, 1929–31. Family: Married 1) the actress Annabella, 1939 (divorced 1948); 2) the actress Linda Christian, 1949 (divorced 1955); daughters: the actresses: Romina and Taryn; 3) Deborah Ann Minardos, 1958, son: Tyrone Jr. Career: 1931—short season in minor roles with Shakespearean repertory company in Chicago; then worked at Santa Barbara Community Theatre for two years, at the Circuit Theatre in Chicago, and in summer stock in West Falmouth, Massachusetts; 1932—film debut in Tom Brown of Culver; 1936—contract with 20th Century-Fox; 1942–46—served in the U.S. Marine Corps as pilot: discharged as First Lieutenant; 1953—toured with Charles Laughton’s group in John Brown’s Body; later toured the United Kingdom in the stage play The Devil’s Disciple. Died: 15 November 1958.

Films as Actor:

- 1932 Tom Brown of Culver (Wyler) (as John)
- 1934 Flirtation Walk (Borzage) (as cadet)
- 1936 Girl’s Dormitory (Cummings) (as Count Vallais); Ladies in Love (Edward Griffith) (as Karl Lanyi); Lloyd’s of London (King) (as Jonathan Blake)
- 1937 Love Is News (Garnett) (as Steve Layton); Café Metropole (Edward Griffith) (as Alexis Penavey/Alexander Brown); Thin Ice (Lanfield) (as Prince Rudolph); Second Honeymoon (Walter Lang) (as Raoul)
- 1938 In Old Chicago (King) (as Dion O’Leary); Alexander’s Ragtime Band (King) (as Alexander/Rofer Grant); Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke) (as Count Axel de Fersen); Suez (Dwan) (as Ferdinand de Lesseps)
- 1939 Jesse James (King) (title role); Rose of Washington Square (Ratoff) (as Bart Clinton); Second Fiddle (Lanfield) (as Jimmy Sutton); The Rains Came (Brown) (as Major Rama Safti); Daytime Wife (Ratoff) (as Ken Norton)
- 1940 Johnny Apollo (Hathaway) (as Bob Cain); Brigham Young—Frontiersman (Hathaway) (as Jonathan Kent); The Mark of Zorro (Mamoulian) (as Don Diego Vega/Zorro)
- 1941 Blood and Sand (Mamoulian) (as Juan Gallardo); A Yank in the R.A.F. (as Tim Baker)
- 1942 Son of Fury (Cromwell) (as Benjamin Blake); This above All (Litvak) (as Clive Briggs); The Black Swan (King) (as Jamie Waring)
- 1943 Crash Dive (Mayo) (as Lt. Ward Stewart)
- 1946 The Razor’s Edge (Goulding) (as Larry Darrell)
- 1947 Nightmare Alley (Goulding) (as Stan Carlisle); Captain from Castile (King) (as Pedro de Vargas)
- 1948 The Luck of the Irish (Koster) (as Stephen Fitzgerald); That Wonderful Urge (Sinclair) (as Thomas Jefferson Tyler)
- 1949 Prince of Foxes (King) (as Andrea Orsini)
- 1950 The Black Rose (Hathaway) (as Walter of Gurnie); American Guerrilla in the Philippines (Guerrillas) (Fritz Lang) (as Ensign Chuck Palmer)
- 1951 Rawhide (Hathaway) (as Tom Owens); I’ll Never Forget You (Baker) (as Peter Standish)
- 1952 Diplomatic Encounter (Hathaway) (as Mike Kells); Pony Soldier (Newman) (as Duncan MacDonald)
- 1953 The Mississippi Gambler (Maté) (as Mark Fallon)
- 1955 The Long Gray Line (Ford) (as Marty Mahar); Untamed (King) (as Paul Van Riebeck)
- 1956 The Eddie Duchin Story (Sidney) (title role)
- 1957 Abandon Ship (Sale) (as Alec Holmes); The Sun Also Rises (King) (as Jake Barnes)
- 1958 Witness for the Prosecution (Wilder) (as Leonard Vole)

Publications

On POWER: books—

On POWER: articles—

*   *   *

Descended from a long line of actors, and the namesake of a distinguished stage father, Tyrone Power learned his craft on Broadway. Blessed with sweet-faced good looks and an insouciant manner, he was signed by Twentieth Century-Fox as an answer to MGM’s Robert Taylor. Along with his close friend and frequent co-star Don Ameche, he became the mainstay of Darryl Zanuck’s star roster.

Most often cast as the romantic lead in period pictures such as Lloyds of London, Marie Antoinette, Suez, and In Old Chicago, Power also proved adept at light comedy, especially in the much underrated farce Love Is News. Frequently directed by Henry King or Henry Hathaway, and usually appearing opposite Loretta Young or Alice Faye, he became one of Hollywood’s reigning heartthrobs.

Power enjoyed his best parts during the period from 1939 to 1941. He enlisted in the Marines during World War II and emerged from combat a harder, tougher man, his baby-face countenance gone forever. Even though he succeeded in highly dramatic roles such as The Razor’s Edge and Nightmare Alley, Zanuck insisted on bringing back the Tyrone Power audiences loved before the war. He appeared in a number of comedies, including a remake of Love Is News entitled That Wonderful Urge, and a series of lavish costume epics: Captain from Castile, The Black Rose, King of the Khyber Rifles, and Rawhide. Unlike many stars, he continued to get good parts as he grew older. Tyrone Power died an untimely death at the age of 45 while filming King Vidor’s Solomon and Sheba in Madrid.

—John A. Gallagher

PRESLE, Micheline

Nationality: French. Born: Micheline Chassagne in Paris, 22 August 1922; known in the United States as Micheline Prelle. Education: Attended a convent school. Family: Married the actor William Marshall. Career: 1938—film debut in Je chante; successful leading roles followed; 1946—international success with Gérard Philipe in Le Diable au corps; 1950–51—made several American films; also acted on stage and television. Address: 6 rue Antoine-Dubois, Paris 75006, France.

Films as Actress:

(as Micheline Michel)

1938 Je chante (Stengel); Petite peste (de Limur); Sais seule que j’aime (Fescourt)

(as Micheline Presle)

1939 Jeunes filles en détresse (Pabst) (as Jacqueline Presle)
1940 Le Paradis perdu (Four Flights to Love) (Gance) (as mother and daughter); Fausse alerte (The French Way) (de Baroncelli) (as Claire Ancolot); Elles étaient 12 femmes (Lacombe) (as Lucie); Parade en 7 nuits (Marc Allégret)
1941 Histoire de rire (Foolish Husbands) (L’Herbier) (as Adélaïde Barbier); Le Soleil a toujours raison (Billon) (as Micheline)
1942  La Comédie du bonheur (L’Herbier) (as Lydia); La Nuit fantastique (Fantastic Night) (L’Herbier) (as Irène); Félicie Nanteuil (Histoire comique) (Marc Allégret) (title role); La Belle Aventure (Twilight) (Marc Allégret) (as Françoise Pinbrache)
1943  Un Seul Amour (Blanchard) (as Clara Biondii)
1944  Falbalas (Paris Frillo) (Becker) (as Micheline Lafaurie)
1945  Boule de suif (Angel and Sinner) (Christian-Jaque) (as Elisabeth Rouset)
1946  Le Diable au corps (Devil in the Flesh) (Autant-Lara) (as Marthe Graingier)
1947  Les Jeux sont faits (The Chips Are Down) (Delannoy) (as Eve Charlier)
1948  Les Derniers Jours de Pompeï (Sins of Pompeii) (L’Herbier) (as Hélène); Tous les chemins mènent à Rome (Boyer) (as Laura)
1950  Under My Skin (La Belle de Paris) (Negulesco) (as Paule Manet); American Guerilla in the Philippines (I Shall Return; Guerillas) (Fritz Lang) (as Jeanne Martinez)
1951  The Adventures of Captain Fabian (New Orleans Adventure) (William Marshall) (as Léa Mariotte)
1952  La Dame aux camélias (Bernard) (as Marguerite Gautier)
1953  L’Amour d’une femme (Grémillon) (as Marie Prieur); Si Versailles m’était conté (Affairs in Versailles; Royal Affairs in Versailles) (Guiry) (as Madame de Pompadour); Villa Borghese (Les Amants de villa Borghese; It Happened in the Park) (Franciolini)
1954  Casa Ricordi (House of Ricordi; La Maison du souvenir) (Gallone) (as Virginia Marchi); Les Impures (Chevalier) (as Michelle); Napoléon (Guiry) (as Hortense de Beauharnais)
1955  Treize à table (Hunebelle) (as Madeleine Villardier)
1956  Beatrice Cenci (Le Château des amants maudits) (Freda) (as Lucrezia Cenci); La Mariée est trop belle (The Bride Is Much Too Beautiful) (Gaspard-Huit) (as Judith)
1957  Les Louves (Demoniaque; The She Wolves) (Saslavsky) (as Hélène); Les Femmes sont marrantes (Hunebelle) (as Nicole)
1958  Christine (Gaspard-Huit) (as Lena Eggersdorf); Bobosse (Périer) (as Régine) (Surin)
1959  Blind Date (Chance Meeting; L’Enquête de l’inspecteur Morgan) (Lossy) (as Jacqueline Cousseau); Une Fille pour l’été (A Mistress for the Summer) (Molinaro) (as Paule); Le Baron de l’Ecluse (Delannoy) (as Perle); Herrin der Welt (Mistress of the World) (Dieterle) (as Mme. Latour)
1960  L’Amant de cinq jours (The Five Day Lover; Infidelity) (de Broca) (as Madeleine)
1961  Les Grandes Personnes (Time Out for Love) (Valère) (as Michèle); L’Assassin (The Lady Killer of Rome; The Assassin) (Péri) (as Adalgisa de Matteis); I briganti italiani (Les Guerrilleros) (Camerini) (as La Marquise)
1962  La Luxure (as Lust) ep. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (Demy) (as Mother); La Loi des hommes (Gérard) (as Sophie Olivier); Ifa Man Answers (Un Mari en laisse) (Levin) (as Germaine Stacey); Le Diable et les dix commandements (The Devil and the Ten Commandments) (Duvivier) (as Micheline); Venere imperiale (Vénus impériale; Imperial Venus) (Delannoy) (as Josephine de Beauharnais)
1963  Coup de bambou (Boyer) (as Angèle Brissac); The Prize (Robson) (as Denise Marceau)
1964  Dark Purpose (L’Intrigue) (George Marshall) (as Monique); La Chasse à l’homme (The Gentle Art of Seduction; Male Hunt) (Molinaro) (as Isabelle Gauthier); Les Pieds nickelés (Chambon) (as Lady Van der Mèche)
1965  Je vous salue, maïa (Hail, Maïa) (Lévy) (as Daisy); La Religieuse (The Nun) (Rivette) (as Mme. de Moni)
1966  Le Roi de coeur (King of Hearts) (de Broca) (as Mme. Eglantine)
1969  La Bal du Comte d’Orgel (Marc Allégret) (as Mme. de Séryeuse); Le Clair de terre (Gilles) (as L’Antiquaire)
1970  Peau d’ane (The Magic Donkey; Donkey Skin) (Demy) (as La Deuxième Reine (Red Queen))
1971  Les Péroleuses (The Legend of Frenchie King) (Christian-Jaque) (as Tante Amélie); Il Diavolo nel Cervello (Sollima) (as La commtesse Claudia)
1973  L’oiseau rare (Brialy); L’Evénement le plus important depuis que l’homme a marché sur la lune (A Slightly Pregnant Man) (Demy) (as Dr. Delavigne); Le Boucher, la star, et l’orpheline (Savary) (as Madeleine Villardier) (as Belladonna); La Guêule de l’emploi (Rouland) (as herself)
1974  Deux grandes filles dans un pyjama (Girault) (as Laurence); La préda (Paoella) (as Bessie Lester); Tromp-l’œil (D’Anna) (as Laure Deschanel)
1975  Mords pas, on t’aime (La Fête des pères) (Yves Allégret)
1976  Nea (Nea: A New Woman) (Kaplan) (as Helen Ashby); Le Diable dans la boîte (Lary) (as Mme. Aubert); Certaines nouvelles (Davila) (as Hélène)
1977  Va voir maman, papa travaille (Your Turn, My Turn) (Leterrier) (as Vava)
1978  On efface tout (Vidal) (as Mme. Cœurdévey); Démon de midi (La couleur de temps) (Pauvreilhe) (as Rose); S’il vous plaît . . . la mer? (Lancelot) (as mother); Je te tiens, tu me tiens par la barbichette (Yanne) (as La femme d’argent)
1979  Rien ne va plus (Ribes) (as Carmen); Tout dépend des filles (Fabre) (as Betty)
1981  Remueménage (Davila) (as mother)
1983  Archipel des amours (Treilhou); En haut des marches (Vecchiali); Lili Lamont (Logereau); Thieves After Dark (Voleurs de la nuit) (Fuller) (as Genevieve); Le Sang des autres (The Blood of Others) (Chabrol) (as Denise)
1984  Le Chien (Gallotte); Les Fausses confidences (Marivaux) (as Mme. Argante)
1986  Beau temps, mais orageux en fin de journée (Frot-Coutaz) (as Jacqueline)
1988  Alouette, je te plumerai (Zucca) (as lady with jewels)
1989  Je veux rentrer à la maison (I Want to Go Home) (Resnais) (as Isabelle Gauthier); La Fête des pères (Fleury) (as Mireille)
1990  Après-demain (Frot-Coutaz) (as the neighbor)
1991  Der Andere Blick (The Other Eve) (Heer and Schmiedel)
1993  Je m’appelle Victor (My Name Is Victor) (Jacques) (as Luce); Fanfan (Fanfan & Alexandre) (Jardin) (as Maude)
1994  Pas tres Catholique (Something Fishy) (Tonié Marshall) (as Mme. Loussine); Casque Bleu (Blue Helmet) (Jugnot) (as Gisèle)
1995  Le Journal du Seducateur (Seducer’s Diary) (Du Broux) (as Diane); Les Misérables (Lelouche) (as Mother Superior)
1996  Les Mille et une recettes du cuisinier amoureux (A Chef in Love/A Cook in Love) (Dzhordžadze) (as Marcellle Ichak); Fallait pas! (Jugnot) (as Gisèle); Le Journal du seducteur (Diary of a Seducer) (Dubroux) (as Diane); Enfants de salaud (Bastard Brood) (as Mère de sophie)
1997 Cannes . . . les 400 coups (Nadeau—for TV) (as herself)
1998 Grève party (Grève party); Le Comte de Monte Cristo (The Count of Monte Cristo) (Dayan—mini for TV) (as Madame de Saint-Méran)
1999 Vénus beauté (Venus Beauty Salon) (Marshall) (Tante Maryse); Le Voyage à Paris (Dufresne); Mauvaises fréquentations (Amérès); Le Coeur à l’ouvrage (Dussaux) (as Madeleine)

Publications

By PRESLE: book—

By PRESLE: articles—
Interview in Cinémagraphe (Paris), May 1982.
Interview in Film Français (Paris), 31 August 1984.
Interview in 24 Images (Montreal), Summer 1996.

On PRESLE: articles—
Ciné Revue (Paris), 21 April 1983.

* * *

After training for the stage under Raymond Rouleau, Micheline Presle made her screen debut with Charles Trenet in Je chante. An international career of more than a hundred films has followed with a variety of directors including Marc Allégret, Autant-Lara, Demy, Gance, L’Herbier, Losey, and her husband William Marshall. Her early appearances were in character as a mischievous adolescent, but she quickly graduated to more demanding roles and achieved critical recognition as Jacqueline in Jeunes filles en détresse and for her dual role as mother and daughter in Le Paradis perdu.

During the Occupation she appeared as the desirable young female in lighthearted romantic comedies directed by L’Herbier: La Comédie du bonheur, Histoire de rire, La Nuit fantastique. In the last two she played opposite Fernand Gravey whom she was later to partner in the acclaimed situation comedy Treize à table. Films with Marc Allégret consolidated her reputation; she played Françoise Pinbrache in the comic success La Belle Aventure and starred as the ambitious young actress of Félicie Nanteuil. In the immediate postwar years came more weighty parts, now as the mature, and often sophisticated, woman of the world. Faiblas, in which she was joined by her early mentor Raymond Rouleau, initiated this transition: here brilliantly rendering the unpredictable Micheline Lafaurie, the inspiration behind a celebrated courtier. Three consecutive tragic roles in literary adaptations followed: she played the exploited and shunned prostitute of Maupassant’s Boule de suif, was Eve Charlier in Sartre’s Les Jeux sont faits, and in Radiguet’s Le Diable au corps she played Marthe, the unfaithful wife of a serving soldier, in a memorable partnership with Gérard Philipe.

Popular success took Presle to Hollywood where she was teamed with established American stars: with John Garfield in Under My Skin she was a cabaret singer; with Tyrone Power in American Guerilla in the Philippines the seductive Jeanne Martinez; and with Errol Flynn in New Orleans Adventure, directed by her husband William Marshall and filmed in France, she was the irresistible Léa Mariotte. None of these parts extended her acting skills.

As Marguerite Gautier in Dumas’s La Dame aux camélias, however, she reaffirmed her French roots, and for Sacha Guitry she appeared in lavish historical costume dramas. If these parts simply confirmed her versatility, more challenging roles as a professional woman came in the 1950s and 1960s, reflecting social changes of the period. After her engaging portrayal of a dedicated young doctor facing the sexual prejudices of a small community in L’Amour d’une femme, she was, in lighter vein, the director of a woman’s magazine in La Mariée est trop belle, a successful businesswoman in Les Grandes Personnes, a busy reporter in La Loi des hommes, and a psychologist in Mords pas, on t’aime. Her comic gifts have also seen her cast as the socially outrageous or endearingly scatterbrained character. More sinister roles have included the sleazy cabaret singer in Les Impures, the atrocious Hélène of Les Louves, the alcoholic Bessie Lester of La Préda, and for Losey the deceptively genteel Jacqueline Cousteau of Blind Date.

With age Presle has been increasingly cast as the mother, good or bad, rather than the wife, faithful or unfaithful. There have been memorable performances as Laure Deschanel, the possessive mother of Trompette l’œil, or as Helen Ashby, the lesbian mother of Néo, or as the clinically depressive mother of Beau temps, mais orages en fin de journée, while in Resnais’s I Want to Go Home she gave a delightfully measured performance as the cultured Mme. Gauthier.

Presle’s links with the theater have remained strong and she has often excelled in screen versions of plays, as, for example, in the role of Mme. Argante in Marivaux’s Les Fauxse confidences. In more than one film she has played the performer, either as cabaret singer or as actress. Her work for television has also met with acclaim, particularly as the star of the long-running series Les Saintes Chéries.

As an actress who enjoys her work immensely, Presle has responded readily to a variety of roles for the stage, the cinema, and television. Her range is impressive, extending from early comic and romantic parts through roles in thrillers, costume pieces, and social dramas, into darker, more tragic character studies. Her talents have been in demand by French, English, American, and Italian directors alike, and in her long career she has worked with the most famous names of the cinema and those who have quickly faded. Vitality, versatility, and an enduring commitment to her profession have ensured Presle a permanent place in the annals of the cinema.

—R. F. Cousins
PRESLEY, Elvis

Films as Actor:

1956 Love Me Tender (Webb)
1957 Loving You (Kanter); Jailhouse Rock (Thorpe)
1958 King Creole (Curtiz)
1960 G.I. Blues (Taurog); Flaming Star (Siegel)
1961 Wild in the Country (Dunne); Blue Hawaii (Taurog)
1962 Follow That Dream (Douglas); Kid Galahad (Karlson); Girls! Girls! Girls! (Taurog)
1963 It Happened at the World’s Fair (Taurog); Fun in Acapulco (Thorpe)
1964 Kissin’ Cousins (Nelson); Viva Las Vegas (Sidney); Roustabout (Rich)
1965 Girl Happy (Sagal); Tickle Me (Taurog); Harum Scarum (Nelson)
1966 Frankie and Johnny (de Cordova); Paradise, Hawaiian Style (Moore); Spinout (Taurog)
1967 Easy Come, Easy Go (Rich); Double Trouble (Taurog); Clambake (Nadel)
1968 Stay Away Joe (Tewksbury); Speedway (Taurog); Live a Little, Love a Little (Taurog)
1969 Charro! (Warren); The Trouble with Girls (Tewksbury); Change of Habit (Moore)
1970 Elvis—That’s the Way It Is (Sanders—doc)
1972 Elvis on Tour (Adidge and Abel—doc)

Publications

On PRESLEY: books—

Bartel, Pauline C., Reel Elvis: The Ultimate Trivia Guide to the King’s Movies, Dallas, 1994.
Esposito, Joe, Good Rockin’ Tonight: Twenty Years on the Road and on the Town with Elvis, New York, 1994.

On PRESLEY: articles—

No major star suffered through more bad movies than Elvis Presley. Of the 31 he made in his decade-and-a-half as a movie star, arguably only Don Siegel’s Flaming Star, in which he played Pacer, a half-breed torn between loyalty to his Kiowa mother and his white father and stepbrother—a nonsinging role for Presley—has any redeeming value beyond the star’s appearance. That he continued to make films for 13 years is testament to the durability of his star quality.

In 1956 Presley rose from obscurity to become a national figure as rock and roll’s first superstar. Within months of his first national recording success Presley began making films; Love Me Tender, released before the year’s end, recouped its $1 million cost in the first three days of release.

Presley’s next three films featured some of his best work as both singer and actor. In Loving You, he played Deke Rivers, a sensitive, small town teenager who makes a rapid rise to national prominence as... a rock 'n' roll singer. Among the many great performance pieces is the finale, "Got a Lot of Living to Do," which features Elvis in a thigh-slapping, hip-shaking performance. In his next film, Jailhouse Rock, Elvis was shown at his singular rockin' best: as inmate Vince Everett, he leads his fellow prisoners through a volcanic, snarling rendition of the title song. This film, like Elvis's other early movies, allowed him to create a more well-rounded character than in his later efforts. The final scene where he faces the possibility of losing his voice and realizes the importance of his friends is touching.

As with Loving You and Jailhouse Rock, Elvis's next film, King Creole, was a narrative about the complications of a rapid rise to stardom. Set in New Orleans, Presley played high school student Danny Fisher, an insolent punk who is "discovered" and becomes the toast of Bourbon Street. Similar to Loving You, King Creole contained autobiographical overtones: like Elvis, Danny Fisher's music was based in black culture—in the film's opening, Elvis and several black street vendors sing "Crawfish," while at the King Creole, Danny rocks in a Dixieland style with a call/response format.

In Loving You, Presley had paid homage to his other major musical influence—country music—with his performance of "Lonesome Cowboy."

Considering his substantial following, it is curious that he was continually saddled with mediocre scripts and second-rate directors, particularly after his 1960 return from Army service. It was as if Hollywood knew he would bring in the customers despite the narratives. Loyal fans continued to see his films and eventually contributed in excess of $180 million to the Hollywood coffers. In addition they gave gold status to nine soundtrack albums.

While the early films featured Presley as a rock star, many of his 1960s vehicles had him in any number of improbable guises from which he broke into improbable song: as the rebellious Glen Tyler in Wild in the Country, he develops a relationship with a psychiatric counselor (Hope Lange) who encourages his flair for writing and arranges for him to receive a scholarship to college; as race car driver Lucky Jackson in Viva Las Vegas he uses his singing talents to woo a swimming instructor played by Ann-Margret; as American movie star Johnny Tyrone in Harum Scarum, he is kidnapped in the Middle East, escapes, and falls in love with Princess Shalimar (played by Miss America, Mary Ann Mobley). Of the 1960s films, Roustabout is arguably the most interesting. Here Elvis plays Charlie Rogers, an insolent, parentless entertainer who finds a new home with a carnival show operated by Barbara Stanwyck. His performances light up the midway and save the carnival from bankruptcy. The experience of working with the pop idol was a positive one for the screen veteran; as Stanwyck stated, "The idea of working with Mr. Presley intrigued me . . . Mr. Wallis said he was a wonderful person to work with . . . and he is. His manners are impeccable, he is on time, he knows his lines, he asks for nothing outside of what any other actor or actress wants."
Throughout the 1960s Presley avoided the concert and public appearance route, opting for visibility through films. By the end of the decade this strategy had begun to fail, neither movies nor records selling at previous high levels. With the failure of Change of Habit—with Mary Tyler Moore as a nun—Elvis stopped making films. No one seemed interested in Presley, who at the height of his film career was earning $1 million per movie plus a substantial percentage of the gross.

Presley was able to break out of the confines of his now-dated image by leaving the silver screen for the small screen. In a 1968 television special that combined the hokey musical numbers familiar from his movies with leather-clad, bare-bones rocking and rolling (in front of a live audience), Elvis reintroduced himself to the public. His career was reinvigorated, with a return to concert tours and rootsier, bluesier recordings (his records of the 1960s generally consisting of substandard movie soundtrack songs, which bore little resemblance to his seminal 1950s rockabilly style). To capitalize on Presley’s change of direction, a movie was again considered, but this time it was to be a documentary of an Elvis concert tour. Elvis, That’s the Way It Is brought forth Presley’s charisma and musical talent far better than the mundane, studio-concocted fluff he had been forced to wade through for the previous decade. In typical Presley fashion, however, once was not enough. Two years later Elvis on Tour gave us another look at “the King” on- and off-stage, but the magic was wearing thin for both Elvis and his audiences. It was to be Elvis’s last movie.

Presley’s importance to film history is less for his continued popularity than for the trend he set within the musical genre. With the success of his vehicles, other recording stars were signed to movie contracts for the long-term future. With no more than a hint of the movie-plot backdrop, film songs were recorded, with the emphasis upon the musical number. Elvis’s change of direction, a movie was again considered, but this time it was to be a documentary of an Elvis concert tour. Elvis, That’s the Way It Is brought forth Presley’s charisma and musical talent far better than the mundane, studio-concocted fluff he had been forced to wade through for the previous decade. In typical Presley fashion, however, once was not enough. Two years later Elvis on Tour gave us another look at “the King” on- and off-stage, but the magic was wearing thin for both Elvis and his audiences. It was to be Elvis’s last movie.

In the first scene of his movie debut, Elvis was seen deep in the frame laboriously dragging a plow. In retrospect we can only marvel at how prophetic that shot was considering the material he was made to work with. In studio after studio, Presley’s vehicles became more and more predictable, with the emphasis upon Elvis’s attractive image and personality. The musical numbers were usually substandard, with the rock and roll hero once again singing the bluesier recordings (his records of the 1960s generally having consisted of substandard movie soundtrack songs, which bore little resemblance to his seminal 1950s rockabilly style). To capitalize on Presley’s change of direction, a movie was again considered, but this time it was to be a documentary of an Elvis concert tour. Elvis, That’s the Way It Is brought forth Presley’s charisma and musical talent far better than the mundane, studio-concocted fluff he had been forced to wade through for the previous decade. In typical Presley fashion, however, once was not enough. Two years later Elvis on Tour gave us another look at “the King” on- and off-stage, but the magic was wearing thin for both Elvis and his audiences. It was to be Elvis’s last movie.

In the first scene of his movie debut, Elvis was seen deep in the frame laboriously dragging a plow. In retrospect we can only marvel at how prophetic that shot was considering the material he was made to work with. In studio after studio, Presley’s vehicles became more and more predictable, with the emphasis upon Elvis’s attractive image and personality. The musical numbers were usually substandard, with the rock and roll hero once again singing the bluesier recordings (his records of the 1960s generally having consisted of substandard movie soundtrack songs, which bore little resemblance to his seminal 1950s rockabilly style). To capitalize on Presley’s change of direction, a movie was again considered, but this time it was to be a documentary of an Elvis concert tour. Elvis, That’s the Way It Is brought forth Presley’s charisma and musical talent far better than the mundane, studio-concocted fluff he had been forced to wade through for the previous decade. In typical Presley fashion, however, once was not enough. Two years later Elvis on Tour gave us another look at “the King” on- and off-stage, but the magic was wearing thin for both Elvis and his audiences. It was to be Elvis’s last movie.

In the first scene of his movie debut, Elvis was seen deep in the frame laboriously dragging a plow. In retrospect we can only marvel at how prophetic that shot was considering the material he was made to work with. In studio after studio, Presley’s vehicles became more and more predictable, with the emphasis upon Elvis’s attractive image and personality. The musical numbers were usually substandard, with the rock and roll hero once again singing the bluesier recordings (his records of the 1960s generally having consisted of substandard movie soundtrack songs, which bore little resemblance to his seminal 1950s rockabilly style). To capitalize on Presley’s change of direction, a movie was again considered, but this time it was to be a documentary of an Elvis concert tour. Elvis, That’s the Way It Is brought forth Presley’s charisma and musical talent far better than the mundane, studio-concocted fluff he had been forced to wade through for the previous decade. In typical Presley fashion, however, once was not enough. Two years later Elvis on Tour gave us another look at “the King” on- and off-stage, but the magic was wearing thin for both Elvis and his audiences. It was to be Elvis’s last movie.

—Doug Tomlinson, updated by Frank Uhle

PRESTON, Robert

Films as Actor:
1938 King of Alcatraz (Florey) (as Robert MacArthur); Illegal Traffic (Louis King) (as Bent Martin
1939 Disbarred (Florey) (as Bradley Kent); Union Pacific (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Dick Allen); Beau Geste (Wellman) (as Digby Geste 1940 Typhoon (Louis King) (as Johnny Porter); Moon over Burma (Louis King) (as Chuck Lane); Northwest Mounted Police (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Constable Ronnie Logan 1941 New York Town (Charles Vidor) (as Paul Bryson Jr.); Lady from Cheyenne (Lloyd) (as Steve); Night of January 16th (Clements) (as Steve Van Royle); Parachute Battalion (Goodwins) (as Donald Morse 1942 Pacific Blackout (Midnight Angel) (Murphy) (as Robert Draper); Reap the Wild Wind (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Dan Cutler); This Gun for Hire (Tuttle) (as Michael Crane); Wake Island (Farrow) (as Joe Doyle); Star Spangled Rhythm (George Marshall) (cameo role 1943 Night Plane from Chung-King (Murphy) (as Capt. Nick Stanton 1947 Wild Harvest (Garnett) (as Jim Davis); The Macomber Affair (Zoltan Korda) (as Francis Macomber); Variety Girl (George Marshall) (cameo role 1948 Whispering Smith (Fenton) (as Murray Sinclaire); Blood on the Moon (Wise) (as Tate Biling 1949 The Big City (Taurog) (as the Reverend Phillip A. Andrews); The Lady Gambles (Gordon) (as David Boothe); Tulsa (Heisler) (as Brad Brady
1950 The Sundowners (Templeton) (as Wichita Kid
1951 My Outlaw Brother (Nugent) (as Joe Warnder); When I Grow Up (Kanin) (as Father Reed); The Best of the Badmen (Russell) (as Matthew Fowler 1952 Face to Face (Windust) (as Sheriff); Cloudburst (Searle) (as John 1955 The Last Frontier (Anthony Mann) (as Col. Frank Marston 1960 The Dark at the Top of the Stairs (Delbert Mann) (as Rubin 1962 The Music Man (Da Costa) (as Professor Howard Hill 1963 How the West Was Won (Hathaway) (as Roger Morgan); Island of Love (Da Costa) (as Steve Blair); All the Way Home (Segal) (as Jay 1972 Junior Bonner (Peckinpah) (as Ace Bonner); Child’s Play (Lumet) (as Joseph Dobbs 1974 Mame (Saks) (as Beauregard
1975 My Father’s House (Segal—for TV
1977 Semi-Tough (Ritchie) (as Big Ed Bookman
1980 The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg (Rosenblum—for TV) (as Mr. Stranger 1981 S.O.B. (Edwards) (as Dr. Irving Finegarten 1982 Victor/Victoria (Edwards) (as Toddy); Rehearsal for Murder (Greene—for TV 1984 The Last Starfighter (Castle) (as Centauri); The September Gun (Taylor—for TV

991
1985  Finnegan, Begin Again (Joan Micklin Silver—for TV) (as Mike Finnegan)

1986  Outrage! (Grauman—for TV) (as Dennis Riordan)

Publications

By PRESTON: article—

Interview in American Classic Screen (Shawnee Mission, Kansas), September-October 1982.

On PRESTON: articles—

* * *

Robert Preston is best known for his stage and screen performances as “Professor” Harold Hill in The Music Man. His portrayal of the disarming confidence man underscores the paradox that informs his work: here and elsewhere, Preston’s feather-light grace and sense of comedic timing belie his rugged and sturdy visage.

Preston was signed by Paramount in 1938, and first gained wide approval in Union Pacific. After serving in World War II, he was a success in The Macomber Affair. Tired of playing leads in only smaller pictures, Preston accepted an offer in 1951 to appear on Broadway, and he soon became known as a stage actor. In 1957, Preston arrived as “the music man,” and won his first of two Tony Awards. Preston’s success on Broadway renewed Hollywood’s interest in him; he became known as one of the ablest character actors in Hollywood, and continued work on both coasts. In the 1980s, work with Blake Edwards brought Preston renewed acclaim. His performance as Toddy in Victor/Victoria brought Preston an Academy Award nomination.

There is always a touch of fraud about Preston’s characters. They gain sympathy in direct proportion to the degree they acknowledge their own facade. Preston frequently emphasizes the function of acting in his roles, adding to his fraudulent image an element that colors and shades each performance. Preston’s paradoxical image has been used in a variety of ways. Though often serving a humorous purpose, his double-sided quality can generate a deep tragic resonance: he dies playing a practical joke in Beau Geste, his whimsical attitude foreshadows his death in All the Way Home, and his delusions about aging impair his relationship with his wife and son in Junior Bonner.

Preston’s persona has proved to be uncommonly malleable: witty and dashing in Beau Geste, devil-may-care in Northwest Mounted Police, romantic and rough-hewn in Reap the Wild Wind, heroic in Wake Island, stiff-backed and humorless in The Last Frontier, and explosively charming in The Music Man. The quality of his work ennobles even his contractual obligations and gives a sense of history to his career. When he gives a “Viking’s Funeral” to Richard Mulligan in S.O.B. it reminds one of the funeral Preston gave Gary Cooper in Beau Geste. The difference between the two deny simple repetition; they represent significant variations of Preston’s image and his incessant vitality.

—Frank Thompson, updated by Cynthia Baron

PRICE, Vincent

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Service de Luxe (Rowland V. Lee) (as Robert Wade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (as Sir Walter Raleigh); Tower of London (Rowland V. Lee) (as the Duke of Clarence)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Vincent Price in The Abominable Dr. Phibes
1952 Las Vegas Story (Stevenson) (as Lloyd Rollins)
1953 House of Wax (de Toth) (as Prof. Henry Jarrod); Pictura (as narrator)
1954 Dangerous Mission (Louis King) (as Paul Adams); The Mad Magician (Brahmi) (as Gallico); Casanova’s Big Night (McLeod) (title role)
1955 The Story of Colonel Drake (Pierson—short) (title role); Son of Sinbad ( Nights in a Harem ) (Tetzlaff) (as Omar Khayyam)
1956 Serenade (Anthony Mann) (as Charles Winthrop); While the City Sleeps (Fritz Lang) (as Walter Kyne); The Ten Commandments (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Baka); The Vagabond King (Curitz) (as narrator)
1957 The Story of Mankind (Irwin Allen) (as the Devil)
1958 The Fly (Neumann) (as Francois)
1959 The House on Haunted Hill (Castle) (as Frederick Loren); The Big Circus (Joseph M. Newman) (as Hans Hagenfeld); The Bat (Wilbur) (as Dr. Malcolm Wells); The Return of the Fly (Bernds) (as Francois Delambre)
1960 The Tingler (Castle) (as Dr. Richard Chapin); The House of Usher (The Fall of the House of Usher) (Corman) (as Roderick Usher)
1961 Master of the World (Witney) (as Robur); The Pit and the Pendulum (Corman) (as Nicholas Medina); Neferite—Regina del Nilo (Queen of the Nile) (Cechio); Gordon, il Pirato Nero (Rage of the Buccaneer, The Black Buccaneer) (Costa) (as Romero); Naked Terror (Brenner—doc) (as narrator)
1962 Confessions of an Opium Eater (Zugsmit) (as DeQuincey); Convicts Four (Kaufman) (as Carl Carmer); Tower of London (Corman) (as Richard of Gloucester); Tales of Terror (Corman) (as Locke/Fortunato/Valdemar)
1963 The Raven (Corman) (as Dr. Erasmus Craven); Chagall (Venturi—short) (as narrator); Twice-Told Tales (Salkow) (as Simon Cordier); Comedy of Terrors (The Graveside Story) (Jacques Tourneur); Beach Party (Asher)
1964 The Haunted Palace (Corman) (as Charles Dexter Ward/Joseph Curwen); The Masque of the Red Death (Corman) (as Prince Prospero); L’ultimo uomo della terra (The Last Man on Earth) (Salkow)
1965 The Tomb of Ligeia (Corman); City under the Sea (War Gods of the Deep) (Jacques Tourneur); I tabù (Taboos of the World) (Marcellini—doc) (as narrator); Dr. Goldfoot and the Bikini Machine (Taurog) (as Dr. Goldfoot)
1966 Dr. Goldfoot and the Girl Bombs (Bava) (as Dr. Goldfoot)
1967 Das Haus der tausend Freuden (House of a Thousand Dolls) (Summers) (as Felix Manderville); The Jackals (Webb)
1968 Witchfinder General (The Conqueror Worm, Matthew Hopkins—Witchfinder General) (Reeves) (as Matthew Hopkins); More Dead Than Alive (Spar) (as Dan Ruffalo); Histoires extraordinaires (Spirits of the Dead) (Fellini and others) (as narrator)
1969 The Trouble with Girls (Tewksbury) (as Mr. Morality); The Oblong Box (Hessler) (as Julian Markham)
1970 Cry of the Banshee (Hessler); Scream and Scream Again (Hessler) (as Lord Edward Whitman)
1971 The Abominable Dr. Phibes (Fuest) (title role); What’s a Girl Like You . . . ? (Paris—for TV)
1972 Dr. Phibes Rises Again (Fuest) (title role)
1973 Theatre of Blood (Hickox) (as Edward Lionheart)
1974 Madhouse (Clark) (as Paul Toombes); The Devil’s Triangle (TV doc); Percy’s Progress (It’s Not the Size That Counts) (Thomas) (as Stavos Mammonian); Journey into Fear (Daniel Mann) (as Dervos)
1976 The Butterfly Ball (Klinger) (as narrator)
1978 Days of Fury (as narrator)
1980 The Monster Club (Baker) (as Erasmus); Romance in the Jugular Vein
1981 The Thief and the Cobbler (Williams) (as voice)
1983 House of the Long Shadows (Walker) (as Lionel); Bloodbath at the House of Death (Cameron); Vincent (Burton) (as voice)
1984 Michael Jackson’s Thriller (Landis—short) (as narrator)
1986 The Great Mouse Detective (Basil the Great Mouse Detective) (Mattinson) (as voice of Professor Ratigan); From a Whisper to a Scream (The Offspring) (Burr) (as Julian White)
1987 The Whales of August (Anderson) (as Mr. Nikolai Maranov); The Little Troll Prince (Paterson) (as voice); Escapes (Steenland) (as Mailman)
1988 Dead Heat (Goldblatt) (as Arthur P. Loundermilk)
1989 Backtrack (Catchfire) (Smithee [Dennis Hopper]) (as Lino Avoca)
1990 Edward Scissorhands (Burton) (as the Inventor); Once . . . (Williams) (as voice)
1993 The Heart of Justice (Barreto—for TV) (cameo)
1995 Arabian Knight (Richard Williams) (voice of Zigzag)

Publications

By PRICE: books—
I Like What I Know, New York, 1959.

By PRICE: articles—
“Mean, Moody, and Magnificent,” interview in Films and Filming (London), March 1965.

On PRICE: books—

On PRICE: articles—

L’Ecran Fantastique (Paris), no. 17 and no. 18, 1981.

* * *

Like Boris Karloff, his predecessor as the American cinema’s best-loved horror star, Vincent Price never disdained the genre slot into which he had been typecast. In fact, he relished it, a relish that came through clearly on screen, and turned his back on the genre only when the FX masters took over and bloodletting rather than barnstorming became the order of the day.

Throughout his career, Price’s calling card had been the raised eyebrow and the sardonic smile, either sinister or ironic, and frequently both at the same time. Before House of Wax introduced him to his horror métier, he had been used in a variety of secondary leads, taking feckless noir roles that would have done for George Sanders if they had been any meatier (The Long Night, The Bribe), as the drug-addicted patron in Dragonwyck, as an early (for him) mad scientist in the cheap Shock, or as the megalomaniac schemer trying to steal a large portion of the United States in The Baron of Arizona. In other roles (Curtain Call at Cactus Creek, Champagne for Caesar, His Kind of Woman), he demonstrated a facility for crazed, hammy comedy that would feature prominently in his horror roles. A spell as a Twentieth Century-Fox contract player in the 1940s had dropped him a few plums—the gutless playboy in Laura—but mainly stranded him amid the glossy, stilted “quality” of Brigham Young, The Song of Bernadette, The Keys of the Kingdom, and The Eve of St. Mark, so he entered the 1950s with an interesting, but somewhat spotty, curriculum vitae.

Price’s casting as the kindly sculptor concealing his hideous scars behind a mask in House of Wax, a 3-D remake of Mystery of the Wax Museum, changed all that. He followed it up with a stereoscopic variation, The Mad Magician, and was stuck with the role of the Devil in the unbelievable Story of Mankind before landing in three horror films whose seminal popularity did much to bring the waning horror genre back, and Price with it. The Fly, widescreen sci-fi, plays more like a Universal picture of the 1930s with its hooded mutant, the victim of a mistimed experiment in teleportation. Price did not take the lead, but the concerned, Lionel Atwill-type secondary figure (a situation that was rectified in the sequel, The Return of the Fly). The House on Haunted Hill and The Tingler, both directed by gimmick master William Castle, virtually created a modern American horror tradition with contemporary settings, cynical murder-twist storylines (courtesy of Clouzot’s Les Diaboliques), jokey revivals of old horror clichés, and dead-straight grue. They set the pace for Price for years to come.

The House of Usher brought Price together with Roger Corman, Edgar Allan Poe, and American-International Pictures. Corman and AIP were looking to move away from the grade-B, black-and-white shockers that made them a small fortune toward something with a touch of class in the vein of the Gothic horrors being turned out by their British counterparts at Hammer Films. In Poe they found a bankable, homegrown source of Gothic material, and in Price they found an American actor on a par with Hammer stalwarts Peter Cushing and Christopher Lee. Price’s neurasthenic Roderick Usher in the team’s first effort is as colorful and decayed as his house, and he relishes his over-the-top dialogue and puffy-sleeved outfits, cringing perfectly when the whole edifice collapses on his head in the finale.

The Price-Corman-Poe-AIP combo would continue for most of the 1960s (The Pit and the Pendulum, The Raven, Tales of Terror, Masque of the Red Death, Tomb of Ligeia, and others) and make Price a top-of-the-line horror star, allowing him to branch out in such imitation efforts as the Hawthorne-derived Twice-Told Tales, the de Maupassant-derived Diary of a Madman, the Verne-derived Master of the World, such international oddities as The Last Man on Earth (unclassically adapted from Richard Matheson’s classic vampire novel I Am Legend) and The House of a Thousand Dolls, and self-parodying vehicles like Dr. Goldfoot and the Bikini Machine.

Price eventually left the Poe series to appear in Michael Reeves’s Matthew Hopkins—Witchfinder General, retitled The Conqueror Worm in the United States to make it appear Poe-like. Reeves demanded that Price play it thoroughly straight for a change, and he added a chilling touch of mercy to the pitiless monster at the center of the icy period piece. In the Dr. Phibes pictures, director Robert Fuest demanded that he play the ultimate incarnation of a comic-horror tradition, a mad vaudeville organist who favors unwieldy slapstick deathtraps to dispose of his victims, and again Price rose to the challenge. Dr. Phibes was a dry run for Price’s bravura comic-horror performance in Theatre of Blood, where he is a crazed Shakespearean who slaughters his unsympathetic critics using disgusting methods of murder derived from the Bard’s plays.

Price curbed his frenzied film schedule from 1977 through 1982 to go on the road for a 200-city tour of his one-man show Diversions and Delights (written by John Gay) in which he played the dying Oscar Wilde. He returned to the screen with several feeble monster rallies (The Monster Club, From a Whisper to a Scream, Dead Heat) and one gem, House of the Long Shadows, in which he joined forces, memorably, with fellow horror icons Peter Cushing, Christopher Lee, and John Carradine. His lone "serious" credits before his death were Lindsay Anderson's octogenarian mood piece The Whales of August (appearing opposite Lillian Gish and Bette Davis) and the superior made-for-cable drama The Heart of Justice, where he provided a noteworthy cameo in the film’s opening scene.

Price’s unbilled bit as “Big Daddy” in AIP’s Beach Party confirmed another aspect of his persona—his status as an honorary kid, a mod parent figure, either benevolent or malevolent, whose interests are aligned with the juveniles in the pictures and the audiences. This led to his becoming a minor hero to the younger generation, even appearing on the Batman show as Egghead, with Elvis Presley in The Trouble with Girls, and with Michael Jackson on his Thriller album. The culmination of this eventually came in an oddly touching association with Tim Burton, first in the short cartoon Vincent, about a boy who wants to be Vincent Price when he grows up, and then, in an extremely moving flashback, as the inventor in Edward Scissorhands, teaching his creation etiquette, poetry, and love of art (Price’s great passion in real life).

—Kim Newman, updated by John McCarty
QUAID, Dennis

Nationality: American
Born: Houston, Texas, 9 April 1954; younger brother of the actor Randy Quaid.
Education: Attended public school in Houston; and the University of Houston, which he left before graduating.
Family: Married 1) the actress P. J. Soles (divorced); 2) the actress Meg Ryan, 1991; son: Jack Henry.
Career: 1975—film debut in Crazy Mama; 1983—stage debut, Off-Broadway, The Last of the Knucklemen, followed by stage work in both New York and Los Angeles (including True West, 1984); has also written songs; played piano and guitar, and sung with his band, the Eclectics; 1989—formed Summers/Quaid Productions with Cathleen Summers.
Agent: International Creative Management, 8942 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1975 Crazy Mama (Jonathan Demme) (as extra)
1977 I Never Promised You a Rose Garden (Page); 9/30/55 (September 30, 1955; 24 Hours of the Rebel) (Bridges) (as Frank)
1978 Are You in the House Alone? (Grauman—for TV); The Seniors (Amateur) (as Alan); Our Winning Season (Ruben) (as Paul Morelli)
1979 Amateur Night at the Dixie Bar and Grill (Schumacher—for TV); Breaking Away (Yates) (as Mike)
1980 Gorp (Ruben) (as Mad Grossman); The Long Riders (Walter Hill) (as Ed Miller)
1981 All Night Long (Tramont) (as Freddie Dupler); Caveman (Gottlieb) (as Lary); The Night the Lights Went Out in Georgia (Maxwell) (as Travis Child); Bill (Page—for TV) (as Barry Morrow)
1982 Johnny Belinda (Harvey—for TV) (as Kyle)
1983 Bill: On His Own (Page—for TV) (as Barry Morrow); Jaws 3-D (Jaws III) (Alves) (as Mike Brody); The Right Stuff (Kaufman) (as Gordon “Gordo” Cooper); Tough Enough (Fleischer) (as Art Long)
1984 Dreamscape (Ruben) (as Alex Gardner)
1985 Enemy Mine (Petersen) (as Davidge)
1987 The Big Easy (McBride) (as Remy McSwain); Innerspace (Dante) (as Lt. Tuck Pendleton); Suspect (Yates) (as Eddie Sanger)
1988 D.O.A. (Morton and Jankel) (as Dexter Cornell); Everybody’s All-American (Hackford) (as Gavin Grey)
1989 Great Balls of Fire! (McBride) (as Jerry Lee Lewis)
1990 Come See the Paradise (Alan Parker) (as Jack McGurn); Postcards from the Edge (Mike Nichols) (as Jack Falkner)
1993 Flesh and Bone (Kloves) (as Arlis Sweeney); Undercover Blues (Ross) (as Jeff Blue); Wilder Napalm (Caron) (as Wallace Foudroyant)
1994 Wyatt Earp (Kasdan) (as Doc Holliday)

1995 Something to Talk About (Hallström) (as Eddie Bichon)
1996 Dragonheart (Cohen) (as Bowen)
1997 Gang Related (Kouf) (as William); Switchback (Stuart) (as Frank LaCrosse)
1998 The Parent Trap (Nancy Meyers) (as Nick Parker); Panama Canal: The Eighth Wonder of the World (Vink—for TV) (as Narrator); Savior (Antonijevic) (as Joshua Rose/Guy); Everything That Rises (as Jim Clay + dir, exec prod—for TV)
1999 Any Given Sunday (Stone) (as Jack “Cap” Rooney)
2000 Frequency (Hoblit) (as Jack “Cap” Rooney)

Publications

By QUAID: articles—

“Dennis the Menaced,” interview with Steve Grant, in Time Out (London), 9 October 1996.

On QUAID: book—

On QUAID: articles—

* * *

997
Dennis Quaid (third from right) in The Right Stuff

Dennis Quaid is consummately a genre actor. His career alternates comedies, musicals, and Westerns with sci-fi films, neo-films noir, and melodramas. He thus works in a frame of Hollywood tradition: twice over, in that his physical form—tall, well-muscled yet lithe, with a trademark grin—echoes not his immediate ‘‘New Hollywood’’ predecessors but much earlier Hollywood leading men. Connecting to an even older tradition, Quaid specializes in men on quests. But he brings a responsiveness and humor to his adventurers which marks them as products of his feminist-influenced times.

His acting style itself injects a contemporary note. He works avidly to make his characters’ contours and capacities part of his body: he learned to fly to play an astronaut, pounded a piano hours a day to play a rock star, gained 40 pounds for one role, lost 40 for another. In this Quaid is a quintessential ‘‘post-Method’’ actor. Whatever his personal take on Lee Strasberg’s Method (which the New York Times Magazine reports he ‘‘will mention’’ but not ‘‘intellectualize’’), his devotion, first, to ‘‘living’’ his parts, and, second, to transforming conventions demonstrates his embrace of the Method’s two central precepts—which have exceeded their roots in the teachings of Stanislavski and Strasberg and permeated Hollywood since the 1950s.

The conjunction of new techniques in acting—and in filmmaking overall—with established story structures makes Dennis Quaid’s movies entertaining. Unfortunately, in Hollywood at a time when stars are defined by their ability to carry blockbuster franchises, usually through many sequels, Quaid’s versatility may have kept him from becoming the superstar he seemed primed to become in the late 1980s. Nonetheless he has worked quite steadily since the late 1970s.

The first phase of Quaid’s career found him moving from bit parts to large supporting roles in a string of youth sex comedies and melodramas; in 1979, he got his first real notice as the angriest young man in Breaking Away. Over the next four years he worked at a middle level in television films and features, in some well-received projects (The Long Riders, Bill) and some misses (Caveman, Jaws 3-D).

In 1983 he found the wellspring of the adventurer type he would come to embody, with the role of cocky, intense but relaxed space traveler ‘‘Gordo’’ Cooper in The Right Stuff (one of three biopics in Quaid’s catalog). Between 1984 and 1990 Quaid became a full-fledged leading man, playing the searcher in cycles of sci-fi films (Dreamscape, Enemy Mine, Innerspace), and perverse crime stories (The Big Easy, Suspect, D.O.A.). Easy made him a heartthrob of the moment, as his corrupt but charming police detective set out on a quest across the landscape of uptight female sexuality in the person of Ellen Barkin. Quaid’s next two films also grapple with harsh romance. The aging athlete of Everybody’s All-American seems a later chapter in the coming-of-age sports melodramas Quaid had done in his early days. Playing Jerry Lee Lewis in Great Balls of Fire! similarly followed from Quaid’s previous, lesser-known country-rock musicals (Amateur Night at the Dixie Bar and Grill, The Night the Lights Went Out in Georgia, Tough Enough), bringing on-screen his talents for singing and songwriting.

But neither All-American nor Fire! were huge hits, perhaps in part because they both concern pioneering heroes who fail as much as they succeed. Come See the Paradise resembled some of Quaid’s previous work with its theme of cross-racial inclusivity (Enemy Mine)—but its questioning of U.S. wartime policies did not match the tenor of the Gulf War. After taking two years off to kick cocaine, get married, and have a son, Quaid returned with three leading roles in 1993, the most well-reviewed being the country noir Flesh and Bone which co-starred his wife, Meg Ryan. Quaid turned to supporting roles for two years (it was to play tubercular Doc Holliday in Wyatt Earp that he lost 40 pounds). Dragonheart put him back at center stage, literalizing Quaid’s affinity for his cardinal genre, the knight’s quest, as revved up with state-of-the-art special effects, in an attempt to reunite a fine actor with box-office success.

—Susan Knobloch

QUINN, Anthony

Anthony Quinn (right) with Alan Bates in Zorba the Greek

Films as Actor:

1936 Parole (Landers) (as Browning); Sworn Enemy (Marin) (as gangster); Night Waitress (Landers) (as hood); The Plainsman (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Cheyenne Indian); The Milky Way (Carey) (as extra)
1937 Swing High, Swing Low (Leisen) (as the Don); Waikiki Wedding (Tuttle) (as Kimo); The Last Train from Madrid (Hogan) (as Capt. Ricardo Alvarez); Partners in Crime (Murphy) (as Nicholas Mazaney); Daughter of Shanghai (Florey) (as Harry Morgan)
1938 The Buccaneer (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Beluche); Dangerous to Know (Florey) (as Nicholas Keisnoff); Tip-Off Girls (Louis King) (as Marty); Hunted Men (Louis King) (as Legs); Bulldog Drummond in Africa (Louis King) (as Deane Fordline); King of Alcatraz (Florey) (as Lou Gadney)

1939 King of Chinatown (Grinde) (as Mike Gordon); Union Pacific (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Jack Cordray); Island of Lost Men (Neumann) (as Chang Tai); Television Spy (Dmytryk) (as Forbes)

1940 Emergency Squad (Dmytryk) (as Nick Buller); Road to Singapore (Schertzinger) (as Caesar); Parole Fixer (Florey) (as Francis Bradmore); The Ghost Breakers (George Marshall) (as Ramon); City for Conquest (Litvak) (as Murray Bruno); Texas Rangers Ride Again (Hogan) (as Joe Yuma)

1941 Blood and Sand (Mamoulian) (as Manolo de Palma); Knockout (Clemens) (as Trego); Thieves Fall Out (Wright) (as Chic Collins); They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh) (as Crazy Horse); The Perfect Snob (McCarey) (as Alex Morens); Bullets for O'Hara (William K. Howard) (as Tony Van Dyne)

1942 Larceny, Inc. (Lloyd Bacon) (as Leo Dexter); Road to Morocco (David Butler) (as Mullay Kasim); The Black Swan (Henry King) (as Wogan); The Ox-Bow Incident (Wellman) (as the Mexican)
1943 Guadalcanal Diary (Seiler)
1944 Buffalo Bill (Wellman) (as Yellow Hand); Roger Touhy, Gangster (The Last Gangster) (Florey) (as George Carroll); Ladies of Washington (Louis King) (as Michael Romanesque); Irish Eyes Are Smiling (Ratoff) (as Al Jackson)
1945 Where Do We Go from Here? (Ratoff) (as Indian Chief); China Sky (Enright) (as Chen Ta); Back to Bataan (Dmytryk) (as Capt. Andres Bonifacio)

1946 California (Farrow) (as Don Louis Rivera y Hernandez)
1947 Behold a Pale Horse

1948

1953 City beneath the Sea (Boetticher) (as Tony Bartlett); Seminole (Boetticher) (as Osceola); Ride Vaquero! (Farrow) (as José Esqueda); East of Sumatra (Boetticher) (as Kiang); Blowing Wild (Fregonesi) (as Ward Conway); Cavalleria Rusticana (Fellini) (as Alfio); Donne Proibite (Angels of Darkness; Forbidden Women) (Amato) (as Francesco Caserto)
1954 Ulisse (Lamins) (Camerini) (as Antinous); La strada (Fellini) (as Zampano); The Long Wait (Saville) (as Johnny McBride); Attila flagello di dio (Attila); Attila the Hun (Francisci) (as Altarini)

1955 Lust for Life (Minnelli) (as Paul Gauguin); Man from Del Rio (Horne) (as Dave Robles); The Wild Party (Horne) (as Big Tom Kapfen); Notre Dame de Paris (The Hunchback of Notre Dame) (Delannoy) (as Quasimodo)

1956 The River’s Edge (Dwan) (as Ben Cameron); The Ride Back (Miner) (as Bob Kallen); Wild Is the Wind (Cukor) (as Gino)

1957 Hot Spell (Daniel Mann) (as Jack Duval)
1958 The Black Orchid (Ritt) (as Frank Valentine); Warlock (Dmytryk) (as Tom Morgan); Last Train from Gun Hill (John Sturges) (as Craig Belden)
1959 Heller in Pink Tights (Cukor) (as Tom Healy); Portrait in Black (Gordon) (as Dr. David Rivera); The Savage Innocents (Ombre Bianche) (Nicholas Ray) (as Inok)

1960 The Guns of Navarone (J. Lee Thompson) (as Col. Andrea Stavros)
1961 Barabbas (Flesicher) (as Judas); Requiem for a Heavyweight (Nelson) (as Mountain Rivera); Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (as Auda Abu Tayi)

1962 Behold a Pale Horse (Zinnemann) (as Capt. Vinolas); Der Besuch (The Visit) (Wicki) (as Serge Miller); Zorba the Greek (Cacoyannis) (as Zorba)
1963 La Fabuleuse Aventure de Marco Polo (Marco the Magnificent) (de la Patelliere and Noel Howard) (as Kublai Khan); A High Wind in Jamaica (MacKendrick) (as Juan Chavez)

1964 Lost Command (Not for Honor and Glory) (Robson) (as Lt. Col. Pierre Raspeugy)
1965 La 25e Heure (La Vingt-cinquième Heure; The 25th Hour) (Venneuil) (as Johann Moritz); The Happening (Silverstein) (as Dan Murray); The Rover (L’Avventuriero) (Terence Young) (as Peyrol)

1967 Guns for San Sebastian (Verneuil) (as Leon Alastrey); The Shoes of the Fisherman (Anderson) (as Kirlil Lakota); The Magus (Guy Green) (as Maurice Conchis)

1968 The Secret of Santa Vittoria (Kramer) (as Stalo Bambolini); A Dream of Kings (Daniel Mann) (as Matsverkas)

1970 A Walk in the Spring Rain (Guy Green) (as Will Cade); R.P.M. (Kramer) (as Paco); Flap (The Last Warrior) (Reed) (as Flapping Eagle); King: A Filmed Record . . . Montgomery to Memphis (Lumet and Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as George Montgomery)

1971 The City (Petrie—for TV) (as Thomas Jefferson Alcala); Aroza (Boetticher) (as narrator)

1972 Across 110th Street (Shear) (as Capt. Frank Mattelli, + exec pr); The Voice of La Raza (Greaves) (as narrator)

1973 Deaf Smith and Johnny Ears (Cavara) (as Erastus “Deaf” Smith); The Don Is Dead (Fleischer) (as Deaf Smith)

1974 The Marseilles Contract (The Destructors) (Parris) (as Steve Ventura)

1975 L’eredità Ferramonti (The Inheritance) (Bolognini) (as Gregorio Ferramonti); Bluff (High Rollers); The Message (Mohammad, Messenger of God) (Akkad) (as Hazima); Tigers Don’t Cry (Collinson)

1976 The Greek Tycoon (J. Lee Thompson) (as Theo Tomassi); Caravans (Fargo) (as Zulfigar); The Children of Sanchez (Bartlett)

1977 The Passage (J. Lee Thompson) (as the Basque)

1978 High Risk (Raffill) (as Mariano); Lion of the Desert (Omar Mukhtar) (Akkad—produced in 1979) (as Omar Mukhtar); The Con Artists (Corbucci) (as Bang); The Salamander (Zinner) (as Bruno Manzini)

1979 Regina (Roma) (Prate)

1980 Valentina (Betancor) (as Mosen Joaquín)

1981 Ingrid (Feldman); The Last Days of Pompeii (Hunt—for TV)

1982 Isola del tesoro (Dawson)

1983 A Man of Passion (Pasion de hombre) (Loma); Actor (Angelucci)

1984 Ghosts Can’t Do It (Derek); A Star for Two (Kaufman); Revenge (Tony Scott) (as Tiburon Mendez); The Old Man and the Sea (Stork—Tv) (as Santiago)

1985 Only the Lonely (Columbus) (as Nick); Jungle Fever (Spike Lee) (as Lou Carbone); Mobsters (Karbenioff) (as Don Masseria)

1986 Last Action Hero (McTiernan) (as Tony Vivaldi)

1987 Somebody to Love (Rockwell) (as Emilio); Hercules in the Underworld (Bill L. Norton—for TV) (as Zeus); Hercules in the Maze of the Minotaur (Bender—for TV) (as Zeus); Hercules and the Lost Kingdom (Cokliss—for TV) (as Zeus); Hercules and the Circle of Fire (Doug Leffler—for TV) (as Zeus); Hercules and the Amazon Women (Bill L. Norton—for TV) (as Zeus); This Can’t Be Love (Harvey—for TV) (as Michael Reymann)

1988 A Walk in the Clouds (Arrau) (as Don Pedro Aragon)

1989 II Sindaco (Ugo Fabrizio Giordani); Gotti (Harmon—for TV) (as Neil Deltacroce)

1990 Ringside (Norman Mailer); Camino Santiago (mini for TV); Oriundi (Bernstein) (as Giuseppe Padovani)
Film as Director:

1958 The Buccaneer

Publications

By QUINN: books—

The Original Sin, a Self-Portrait (autobiography), New York, 1972.

By QUINN: articles—

On QUINN: books—

Amdur, Melissa, Anthony Quinn, New York, 1993.

On QUINN: articles—

* * *

Pounding on his beefy chest and rolling his exotic eyes, Anthony Quinn is easily disparaged as an all-purpose Ethnic, but his vibrant approach to acting can be riveting. In the 1990s, in smaller doses, as in the macho shenanigans of Last Action Hero, the formulaic but diverting comedy of Only the Lonely, and especially the swooning lyricism of A Walk in the Clouds, Quinn seems looser and less pointedly vociferous. Maybe time has purified him of some of that much talked-about Life Force, that so memorably defined the spirit of Zorba the Greek. That was before it degenerated into meaninglessness when applied across the board to all the international characterizations that nipped at Zorba’s heels. In his post-1964 heyday, Quinn was as overexposed as the cast of television’s Friends are today.

Born in poverty in Mexico, Anthony Quinn served a long contractual apprenticeship in the movies as lummox-in-loincloth or scourge-with-scimitar. If menace of a foreign extraction was required, casting agents made a beeline to Tony. But small monotonous parts were as galling to Quinn as being dismissed as Cecil B. DeMille’s son-in-law. Graduating from leads in B movies, Quinn remained the same stone-faced heavy in A pictures; the performance in Viva Zapata! that won him his first Oscar hardly seemed more challenging than dozens of scenery-chewing turns that preceded it.

Instead of turning his frustration at being typecast inward, Quinn started thesping his heart out more and more; the Quinn style was born—earthly, hearty, and above all, voluble. You could outright Quinn but never outshout him. Several savvy breaks from the Hollywood rut paid off by building (maybe overbuilding) Quinn’s confidence. After donning the Brando T-shirt as a replacement Stanley Kowalski, he also shared glory with Olivier himself as they switched lead roles in Becket, and then his career rose phoenixlike out of a past-his-prime graveyard with Fellini’s La strada. Taken seriously by Hollywood thanks to his art-house circuit success as the brutal strongman, Zampano, Quinn snagged a second supporting Oscar for Lust for Life and then began stamping all his roles with the same lust for overacting.

Whether certain directors could handle him with more authority or whether he simply responded to simpatico material, Quinn got delightfully high on his own ego-puffery in Cukor’s colorful Heller in Pink Tights, presented a memorably noncondescending portrayal of an Eskimo in Ray’s The Savage Innocents, then shadow-boxed beautifully with despair in Requiem for a Heavyweight, a much subtler and affecting portrait of brute force than his La strada stint. Throughout the 1950s and early 1960s, whether top-billed as he gave us Barabbas or camedao in Lawrence of Arabia, Quinn broke no new ground until the soulmate role of Zorba the Greek liberated him. After 1964, however, Tony the Quinn became Zorba the Greek, and it is difficult to rebut the prevailing wisdom that dubbed him a one-man UN. He could play Italian, Native American, Greek, or Basque—just go round the globe; Quinn acted there. This was thesping by way of Berlitz. Still, if there were many occasions when you wished he had moved on from Esperanto-translated populism, there was no denying this peacock actor’s energy. If every performer seeks to improve upon reality, then Quinn is the Great Embellisher. Refusing to play in sotto voce, the man is a one-tenor opera. The feverish, life-forced quality of his performances (good and bad) sing out with the overabundant grace notes of a man whose love of acting is boundless.

—Robert Pardi
RAFT, George

Nationality: American. Born: George Ranft in New York City, 26 September 1895. Family: Married Grayce Mulrooney, 1923 (separated 1923, died 1970). Career: From age 13, worked as boxer, pool player, dancer; 1919—dancer in vaudeville, in the next few years touring on the Orpheum and Keith Circuits; also dancer at Jimmy Durante’s Club Durante and Texas Guinan’s El Fey Club; 1925—Broadway debut in The City Chap; 1929—film debut in Queen of the Nightclubs with Texas Guinan; early 1930s—several roles as gangsters in films, with much publicity concerning his friendship with nonfictional gangsters; 1932—classical role in Scarface, contract with Paramount, then in 1939 contract with Warner Brothers, and freelance after 1942; organized sports show for entertaining the troops during World War II; 1953—in TV series I’m the Law; early 1960s—public relations director for Consumer Marts stores; 1966–67—host of Colony Club casino, London, but banned from England as persona non grata because of alleged gangster connections. Died: In Los Angeles, 24 November 1980.

Films as Actor:

1929 Queen of the Nightclubs (Foy) (as gigolo)
1931 Quick Millions (Brown) (as Jimmy Kirk)
1932 Hash Money (Lanfield) (as Maxie); Palmy Days (Sutherland) (as Joe the Frog); Taxi! (Del Ruth) (as Willie Kenny); Scarface (Hawks) (as Guido Rinaldi); Night Court (Van Dyke); Night World (Hensley) (as Ed Powell); Love Is a Racket (Wellman) (as Stinky); Dancers in the Dark (Burton) (Louie Brooks); Madame Racketeer (Hall) (Jack Houston); Night after Night (Mayo) (Joe Anton); If I Had a Million (Lubitsch and others) (as Eddie Jackson)
1933 Under-Cover Man (Flood) (as Nick Darrow); Pick-Up (Gering) (Harry Glynn); The Midnight Club (Halling) (Nick Mason); The Bowery (Walsh) (Steve Brodi); All of Me (Walsh) (as Joe Laurik); She Couldn’t Take It (Garnett) (Spot Ricardi)
1934 It Had to Happen (Del Ruth) (Enrico Scaffa); Yours for the Asking (Hall) (Johnny Lamb)
1935 Souls at Sea (Hathaway) (Rowdah)
1936 You and Me (Lang) (Joe Dennis); Spawn of the North (Hathaway) (Tyler Dawson)
1937 The Lady’s from Kentucky (Hall) (Marty Black); I Stole a Million (Tuttle) (Joe Laurik); Invisible Stripes (Bacon) (Cliff Taylor); Each Dawn I Die (Keighley) (Hood Stacey)
1938 The House across the Bay (Mayo) (Steve Larwitt); They Drive by Night (Walsh) (Joe Fabrini)
1939 Manpower (Walsh) (Johnny Marshall)
1940 Broadway (Seiter) (George)
1941 Background to Danger (Walsh) (Joe Barton); Stage Door Canteen (Borzage) (as himself)
1942 Follow the Boys (Sutherland) (Tony West)
1943 Nob Hill (Hathaway) (Johnny Angelo); Johnny Angelo (Marin) (title role)
1944 Whistle Stop (Moguy) (Kenny); Mr. Ace (Marin) (Eddie Ace); Nocturne (Marin) (Lt. Joe Warne)
1945 Christmas Eve (Marin) (Mario Torio)
1946 Intrigue (Marin) (Brad Dunham); Race Street (Marin) (Dan Gannin)
1949 Outpost in Morocco (Florey) (Capt. Paul Garard); Johnny Allegro (Tetzlaff) (title role); Red Light (Del Ruth) (John Torno); A Dangerous Profession (Tetzlaff) (Vince Kane); Nous irons à Paris (Boyer) (guest)
1951  Lucky Nick Cain (Newman) (title role); I'll Get You (Freidman) (as Steve Rossi)
1952  Loan Shark (Freidman) (as Joe Gargen); Adventure in Algiers
(Secret of the Casbah)
1953  The Man from Cairo (Enright) (as Mike Cannelli)
1954  Black Widow (Johnson) (as Det. Bruce); Rogue Cop (Rowland)
(as Dan Beaumonte)
1955  A Bullet for Joey (Allen) (as Joe Victor)
1956  Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as bouncer)
1959  Some Like It Hot (Wilders) (as Spats Columbo); Jet over the Atlantic (Haskin) (as Stafford)
1960  Ocean's Eleven (Milestone) (cameo role)
1961  The Ladies Man (Lewis) (as himself); Two Guys Abroad (Sharp)
1964  For Those Who Think Young (Martinson) (as detective); The Patsy (Lewis) (as himself)
1965  Du Rififi à Paname (de la Patellière) (as Charles Binnaggio)
1966  Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as himself)
1968  Five Golden Dragons (Summers) (as Golden Dragon); Skádo!
(Preminger) (as Capt. Garbaldo)
1972  Hammersmith Is Out (Ustinov) (as Guido Scartucci); Deadhead Miles (Zimmermann) (cameo role)
1978  Sextette (Hughes) (as himself); The Man with Bogart's Face
(Fenady) (as Petey Cane)

Publications

By RAFT: articles—

“’You’ve Got to Be Tough in Hollywood,’” in Films and Filming
(London), July 1962.

On RAFT: books—

Neibaur, James L., Tough Guy: The American Movie Macho, Jeffer-

On RAFT: articles—

Sikov, E., “‘George Raft’,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles),
April 1996.

George Raft was instrumental in the development of the character of the hardboiled gangster, a character that became a standard of the American cinema for decades. In fact, he fit the type so well that his rather shady background became the object of endless speculation, and both the public and the studio refused to accept him in any but the most indistinguishable tough-guy parts. Perhaps he filled these parts even too well, for he never became as popular or sympathetic as James Cagney or Humphrey Bogart, and, in his apparent effort to overcome the image, he rejected several roles that turned Bogart into a major star: The Maltese Falcon, Casablanca, and High Sierra.

Raft began his career as a dancer in clubs and on the stage, and although his physical grace was evident in even the most undignified roles and the most violent situations, his musical talent was exploited in very few of his films. Once his part as Paul Muni’s coin-tossing sidekick in Howard Hawks’s Scarfase had established his career and his image, Raft played variations on that role as a Paramount contract player throughout the 1930s and then in a series of increasingly minor melodramas for less prestigious studios. Finally, when advancing age and the changing demands of the audience ended his leading roles once and for all, he turned to self-caricature, often appearing as himself in minuscule cameo parts.

In Hollywood, a strong personal image is usually seen as a lack of versatility, and George Raft’s career is illustrative of this tendency which has limited many actors even at the height of their popularity. While few of his films were successful in any way, either with audiences or with the critics, Raft’s real failure was in his inability to outgrow the character that he helped to create.

—Richard Wilson

RAIMU

Nationality: French. Born: Jules Auguste César Muraire in Toulon, 17 December 1883. Military Service: French Army, 1914–15: discharged for health reasons. Family: Married in 1936, daughter, Paulette. Career: Began performing as singer and actor in café-concerts in Toulon; changed name to Raimu for engagement at Casino de Toulon, 1899–1900, and toured in southern France and North Africa for the next few years; 1905—worked as croupier in Aix-les-Bains; 1910—in Felix Mayol’s performing group in Paris, and became successful performer at the Folies-Bergère and other clubs; 1915—first legitimate theater role in Feydeau’s Monsieur Chasse, followed by roles in other stage plays; 1929—created the famous role of César in Pagnol’s Marius, later recreated in film version; 1931—sound film debut in Le Blanc et le noir, 1944–45—member of the Comédie Française. Died: In Neuilly, France, 20
September 1946.

Films as Actor:

1912–14 L’Homme nu (Desfontaines); L’Agence Cacahuète (Lion)
1931 Le Blanc et le noir (Florey); Mam’zelle Nitouche (Marc Allégret) (as Célestin-Floridor); Marius (Korda) (as César Olivier)
1932 La Petite Chocolatière (Marc Allégret) (as Félicien Bédarrides); Fanny (Marc Allégret) (as César Olivier); Les Gaîtés de l’escadron (Tourneur) (as Capitaine Hurluret)
Raimu (left) and Andre Fouche in Caesar

1933 Theodore et Cie (Colombier) (as Clodomir); Charlemagne (Colombier) (title role)
1934 Ces Messieurs de la santé (Colombier) (as Tafard); Tartarin de Tarascon (Bernard) (title role); J’ai un idée (Richebé) (as Aubrey)
1935 Minuit, Place Pigalle (Richebé); Les Jumeaux de Brighton (Heymann) (three roles); César (Pagnol) (title role)
1936 Le Secret de Polichinelle (Berthomieu); Le Roi (Colombier) (as Bourdier); Les Jumeaux de Brighton (Heymann) (three roles); César (Pagnol) (title role)
1937 Vous n’avez rien à déclarer? (Confessions of a Newlywed; Have You Nothing to Declare?) (Joannon) (as the Professor); Les Perles de la couronne (The Pearls of the Crown) (Guitry and Christian-Jaque) (cameo); La Chaste Suzanne (Berthomieu) (as M. des Aubrais); Les Rois du sport (Colombier); Le Fauteuil 47 (Rivers); Gribouille (Heart of Paris) (Marc Allégret) (as Camille); Un Carnet de bal (Life Dances On, Christine) (Duvivier) (as Francois Patusset)
1938 Le Héros de la Marne (Hugon); L’Étrange Monsieur Victor (Grémillon) (as Victor Agardanne); Les Nouveaux riches (Berthomieu) (as Legendre); La Femme du boulanger (The Baker’s Wife) (Pagnol) (as Aimable Castenet, the Baker)
1939 Monsieur Brotonneau (Esway) (as Loulou); Dernière jeunesse (Last Desire) (Musso) (as Georges); L’Homme qui cherche la vérité (The Man Who Seeks the Truth) (Esway) (as Vernet)
1941 Le Duel ( Fresnay); Parade en sept nuits (Marc Allégret); Les Petits Riens (Leboursier) (as Charpillon); Monsieur la Souris (Midnight in Paris) (Lacombe); Le Bienfaiteur (Decoin) (as Moulinet)
1942 L’Arlésienne (Allégret) (as Marc)
1943 Le Colonel Chabert (Le Hénaff) (title role); Untel Père et fils (The Heart of a Nation) (Duvivier) (as Jules Froment)
1946 La Fille du puits dater (The Well-Digger’s Daughter) (Pagnol—produced in 1940); Les Gueux au paradis (Hoboes in Paradise) (Le Hénaff); L’Homme au chapeau rond (The Eternal Husband) (Billon) (as Nicolas Pavlovitch)
1948 La Vie de Raimu (Toe—doc)
1949 Les Inconnus dans la maison (Strangers in the House) (Decoin—produced in 1942) (as Hector Loursat)
1957 Les Étoiles ne meurent jamais (de Vaucorbeil—doc)
Publications

By RAIMU: articles—

“Raimu m’a parle,” interview with Chantal, in Cinémonde (Paris), 6 November 1930.

“Pourquoi l’acteur et le metteur en scène doivent étroitement collaborer?,” in Pour vous (Paris), 24 December 1931.

“J’aime toujours le théâtre, mais . . . ,” in J’aime toujours le théâtre, mais . . . , (series of ten articles), in Cinémonde (Paris), 21 September 1946.

On RAIMU: books—

On RAIMU: articles—

“Raimu” issue of Visages (Paris), December 1938.

Jeanson, Henri, “Quand M. Raimu joue rétrospectivement les héros de la Marne,” in La Flèche (Paris), 16 December 1938 (also see Raimu’s response in La Flèche, 23 December 1938).

Cocteau, Jean, “M. Raimu à la Comédie-Française,” in Comœdia (Paris), 1 April 1944.

Between 1931 and 1936 the playwright Marcel Pagnol, turned screenwriter and then director, brought to the screen a trilogy, Marius, Fanny, and César, starring one of the best-loved French comedians, Raimu, who proved that a simple, natural comic style would work best in the contemporary French cinema. As César, the father of the wronged Fanny, he depicted the dignity of a poor man in a waterfront world trying to get along in a difficult situation. Raimu’s attempt to preserve the honor and happiness of his abandoned, pregnant daughter ran the gamut of humor with a grace in acting seldom seen on the screen.

In the early 1940s director Pagnol would rework the same theme in La Fille du puisatier with an effective pairing of Raimu as the father and Fernandel as the suitor whose marriage to the daughter would solve the delicate situation of having an unwed mother. An earlier film, The Baker’s Wife, created in the late 1930s by Pagnol, was probably Raimu’s most humorous film. The touch of sympathy he elicited for the character prompted some critics to compare Raimu’s technique with Chaplin’s method of combining pathos and humor. Raimu played the baker whose wife had run away with a younger man, depicting a mild-mannered soul who gives up his trade because of his sorrow over his unfaithful wife.

These works with Raimu as the star represent some of the best comedy made during the golden period of French film in the 1930s and early 1940s. The writing and directing genius of Marcel Pagnol merged and complemented the acting genius of Raimu to produce these comic masterpieces.

—Donald McCaffrey

RAINER, Luise

Luise Rainer (left) with Paul Muni in The Good Earth

Films as Actress:

1930  Ja, der Himmel über Wien (short)
1932  Sehnsucht, 202 (Neufeld)
1933  Heat' kommt's drauf an (Gerron)
1935  Escapade (Masquerade) (Leonard) (as Leopoldine)
1936  The Great Ziegfeld (Leonard) (as Anna Held)
1937  The Good Earth (Franklin) (as O-Lan); The Emperor’s Candelsticks (Fitzmaurice) (as Countess Olga Muranova); Big City (Skyscraper Wilderness) (Borzage) (as Anna Benton)
1938  The Toy Wife (Thorpe) (as Gilberta Brigard); The Great Waltz: (Toute la ville danse) (Duvivier) (as Poldi Vogelhuber); Dramatic School (Sinclair) (as Louise)
1943  Hostages (Tuttle) (as Milada Pressinger)
1988  A Dancer (Chase—video for TV)
1997  The Gambler (Játékos) (Makk) (as Grandmother)

Publications

By RAINER: article—

On RAINER: articles—

Luise Rainer’s career withered under the curse of the Oscar, of two Oscars in fact. Reminiscent of Elisabeth Bergner, an exponent of the laughter and tears school of acting, Rainer made an immediate impact with her hyperemotional style. Showing her changing moods with an arsenal of vocal and facial expressions, eyes darting, hands fluttering, Rainer’s nervous energy was distinctively European, but also dissimilar to the slower rhythms of Garbo and Dietrich, the reigning European actresses in Hollywood. Portraying Anna Held, a less-than-starring role in the musical extravaganza The Great Ziegfeld, Rainer so impressed audiences with one highly emotional scene that she was rewarded with an Oscar. Her Anna is speaking on the phone to her ex-husband, Flo Ziegfeld. Still in love with him, she gallantly congratulates him on his marriage to Billie Burke. The camera records her agitation; Ziegfeld hears a voice that hovers between false gaiety and despair; when she hangs up she dissolves into tears.

In her next film, The Good Earth, Rainer played a role meant to be diametrically opposed to the vivacious Anna Held. Here she portrayed a humble Chinese peasant, utterly subservient to her husband, perpetually huddled in submission, barely speaking a word of dialogue or raising her eyes to the camera. The contrast (and perhaps MGM’s strength among Academy members) allowed her to win her second Oscar in successive years.

At this point, Hollywood turned its back on Luise Rainer just as abruptly as it had celebrated her. Having gained the reputation of being ‘‘difficult,’’ she was cast in a few unimportant or disappointing films, her whole Hollywood career having lasted three years (with the exception of Hostages, produced during World War II). Adding to her decline was the poor career advice given her by then-husband Clifford Odets. Her record of two successive Oscars stood, however, until Katharine Hepburn equaled it in 1967 and 1968.

Rainer came back to Hollywood in the early 1980s, and even appeared on an episode of television’s The Love Boat. And in 1988 she starred in A Dancer, a 28-minute-long dramatic piece directed by independent video artist Doris Chase. Her role was that of an ex-dancer who currently teaches, choreographs, and runs her own ballet school, and who is reunited with a former lover after a 30-year separation. Rainer’s mature, carefully crafted performance offers evidence that, had her career been charted on a different course, she might have flourished as a screen star.

—Charles Affron, updated by Rob Edelman

RAINS, Claude

Nationality: American. Born: William Claude Rains in London, England, 10 November 1889; son of the actor and film director Frederick William Rains; became U.S. citizen, 1938. Family: Married 1) the actress Isabel Jeans, 1913 (divorced); 2) the actress Marie Hemingway, 1920 (divorced 1920); 3) Beatrix Thomson, 1924 (divorced 1935); 4) Francis Propper, 1935 (divorced 1956), daughter:
Claude Rains (center) with Humphrey Bogart (right) Paul Henreid and Ingrid Bergman in Casablanca

Films as Actor:

1920 Build Thy House (Goodwins) (as Clarkis)
1933 The Invisible Man (Whale) (as Dr. Jack Griffin)

1934 Crime without Passion (Hecht and MacArthur) (as Lee Gentry)
1935 The Man Who Reclaimed His Head (Ludwig) (as Paul Verin); The Clairvoyant (Elvey) (as Maximus); The Mystery of Edwin Drood (Walker) (as John Jasper); The Last Outpost (Barton) (as John Stevenson)
1936 Anthony Adverse (LeRoy) (as Don Luis); Hearts Divided (Borzage) (as Napoleon Bonaparte); Stolen Holiday (Curtiz) (as Stefan Orloff)
1937 The Prince and the Pauper (Keighley) (as Earl of Hertford); They Won’t Forget (LeRoy) (as District Attorney Griffin)
1938 Gold Is Where You Find It (Curtiz) (as Col. Ferris); The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley) (as Prince John); White Banners (Goulding) (as Paul Ward); Four Daughters (Curtiz) (as Adam Lemp)
1939 They Made Me a Criminal (Berkeley) (as Detective Phelan); Juarez (Dieterle) (as Napoleon III); Sons of Liberty (Curtiz) (as Haym Solomon); Daughters Courageous (Curtiz) (as Jim Masters); Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra) (as Senator Joseph Harrison Payne); Four Wives (Curtiz) (as Adam Lemp)

* * *

One of the greatest advantages of the Hollywood studio system was the chance it afforded actors to develop their careers through steady employment and carefully developed roles over a long number of years. This was particularly true for those performers who excelled in character parts and supporting roles, as audiences came to recognize their faces and appreciate their work in a way that is no longer possible today. Of this group, Claude Rains enjoyed one of Hollywood’s most successful careers, bringing his combination of sophistication, subtlety, and dry wit to a remarkably varied selection of roles. Rains also achieved a distinction rare among supporting players—sufficient individual popularity to allow him occasional starring roles as well. His ability to transcend the supporting category placed him in an unusual position among his contemporaries as one of the few character actors who was also a star.

Rains had reached middleage and established himself as an accomplished stage actor in London and New York before his distinguished speaking voice won him the leading role in The Invisible Man. Rain’s face appears only briefly in the film, after the character’s death renders him visible again, but the strength of his vocal performance alone launched the actor’s career in Hollywood. His work in films over the next three decades would win him four Academy Award nominations and include performances in such classic features as The Adventures of Robin Hood, Casablanca, and Notorious.

Rains followed The Invisible Man with a starring role in Crime without Passion, in which he portrays a man driven to the brink of madness by an unhappy love affair. Rains would play similar characters in subsequent films, as his reserved, ironic manner proved an ideal mask for slowly crumbling sanity. Yet his range as an actor was extraordinary, and he portrayed villains and sympathetic heroes with equal ease, a facility which was put to frequent use during his years under contract to Warner Brothers. In 1938 he portrayed the dasharily King John in The Adventures of Robin Hood back to back with his warmhearted performance as the father of a family of girls in Four Daughters. The following year brought his first Oscar nomination, as best supporting actor, for his role as the corrupt senator who retains steady employment and carefully developed roles over a long number of years. This was particularly true for those performers who excelled in character parts and supporting roles, as audiences came to recognize their faces and appreciate their work in a way that is no longer possible today. Of this group, Claude Rains enjoyed one of Hollywood’s most successful careers, bringing his combination of sophistication, subtlety, and dry wit to a remarkably varied selection of roles. Rains also achieved a distinction rare among supporting players—sufficient individual popularity to allow him occasional starring roles as well. His ability to transcend the supporting category placed him in an unusual position among his contemporaries as one of the few character actors who was also a star.

Rains had reached middleage and established himself as an accomplished stage actor in London and New York before his distinguished speaking voice won him the leading role in The Invisible Man. Rain’s face appears only briefly in the film, after the character’s death renders him visible again, but the strength of his vocal performance alone launched the actor’s career in Hollywood. His work in films over the next three decades would win him four Academy Award nominations and include performances in such classic features as The Adventures of Robin Hood, Casablanca, and Notorious.

Rains followed The Invisible Man with a starring role in Crime without Passion, in which he portrays a man driven to the brink of madness by an unhappy love affair. Rains would play similar characters in subsequent films, as his reserved, ironic manner proved an ideal mask for slowly crumbling sanity. Yet his range as an actor was extraordinary, and he portrayed villains and sympathetic heroes with equal ease, a facility which was put to frequent use during his years under contract to Warner Brothers. In 1938 he portrayed the dasharily King John in The Adventures of Robin Hood back to back with his warmhearted performance as the father of a family of girls in Four Daughters. The following year brought his first Oscar nomination, as best supporting actor, for his role as the corrupt senator who retains a spark of decency in Capra’s Mr. Smith Goes to Washington.

His performance in the Capra film exemplifies Rains’s ability to portray characters who remain charming—and sometimes sympathetic—in spite of their actions. As Louis Renault, the sardonic French police captain who collaborates with the Germans in Casablanca, Rains remains an engaging figure throughout the film, and his eventual decision to join Humphrey Bogart in the Resistance comes as no great surprise. In Alfred Hitchcock’s Notorious, Rains gives one of his finest performances as the Nazi sympathizer whose obsessive love for American agent Ingrid Bergman makes him a complex, pathetic figure and causes his final downfall.

Rains also appeared in several films opposite Bette Davis, then at the height of her Hollywood career. In Now, Voyager, one of the classic “women’s films” of the 1940s, he portrays Davis’s wise, understanding psychiatrist, while his performance as her adoring, long-suffering husband in Mr. Skeffington brought him another Oscar nomination. The pairing of Davis’s electric screen presence with Rains’s precise, assured style lends a particular chemistry to their films together.

Rains’s work in later years included roles in Lawrence of Arabia, Twilight of Honor, and The Greatest Story Ever Told, and he remained, until the end of his career, an actor of consummate professionalism and skill.

—Janet E. Lorenz

RATHBONE, Basil

Born: Johannesburg, South Africa, of British parents, 13 June 1892.

Films as Actor:

1921 Innocent (Elvey) (as Amadis de Jocelyn); The Fruitful Vine (Elvey) (as Don Cesare Carelli)
1923 The School for Scandal (Phillips) (as Joseph Surface)
1924 Treaping with Ellen (Hunter) (as Tony Winterslip)
1925 The Masked Bride (Cabanne) (as Antoine)
1926 The Great Deception (Higgin) (as Rizzio)
1929 The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Franklin) (as Lord Arthur Dilling)
1930 The Bishop Murder Case (Grinde and Burton) (as Philo Vance); A Notorious Affair (Bacon) (as Paul Gherardi); The Lady of Scandal (Franklin) (as Edward); This Mad World (W. DeMille) (as Paul); The Flirting Widow (Seiter) (as Col. Smith); A Lady Surrenders (Stahl) (as Carl Vaudry); Sin Takes a Holiday (Stein) (as Durant)
1932 A Woman Commands (Stein) (as Capt. Alex Pastisch)
1933 One Precious Year (Edwards) (as Derek Nagel); Loyalties (Dean) (as Ferdinand de Levis)
1935 David Copperfield (Cukor) (as Mr. Murdstone); Anna Karenina (Brown) (as Karenin); The Last Days of Pompeii (Schoedsack) (as Pontius); A Feather in Her Hat (Santell) (as Capt. Courtney); A Tale of Two Cities (Conway) (as Marquis St. Evremonde); Captain Blood (Curtiz) (as Capt. Levasseur); Kind Lady (Seitz) (as Henry Abbott)
1936 Private Number (Del Ruth) (as Wroxton); Romeo and Juliet (Cukor) (as Tybalt); The Garden of Allah (Boleslawsky) (as Count Anteoni)
1937 Confession (May) (as Michael Michailow); Love from a Stranger (Lee) (as Gerald Lovell); Make a Wish (Neumann) (as Selden); Tovarich (Litvak) (as Gorotchkenko)
1938 The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo) (as Ahmed); The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley) (as Sir Guy de Gisbourne); If I Were King (Lloyd) (as Louis XI); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding) (as Maj. Brand)
1939 Son of Frankenstein (Lee) (as Baron Frankenstein); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Lanfield) (as Sherlock Holmes); The Sun Never Sets (Lee) (as Clive Randolph); The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes (Weker) (as Sherlock Holmes); Rio (Braun) (as Paul Reynard); Tower of London (Lee) (as Richard III)
1940 Rhythm on the River (Schertzinger) (as Oliver Courtyn); The Mark of Zorro (Mamoulian) (as Capt. Esteban Pasquale)
1941 The Mad Doctor (Whelan) (as Dr. George Sebastian); The Black Cat (Rogell) (as Hartley); International Lady (Whelan) (as Reggie Oliver); Paris Calling (Marin) (as Benoit)
1942 Fingers at the Window (Lederer) (as Dr. Santelle); Crossroads (Conway) (as Henri Sarrou); Sherlock Holmes and the Voice of Terror (Rawlins) (as Sherlock Holmes); Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes)
1943 Sherlock Holmes in Washington (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); Above Suspicion (Thorpe) (as Sig von Aschenhausen); Sherlock Holmes Faces Death (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); Crazy House (Cline) (as guest)
1944 The Spider Woman (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); The Scarlet Clav (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); Bathing Beauty (Sidney) (as George Adams); The Pearl of Death (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); Frenchman’s Creek (Leisen) (as Lord Rockingham)
1945 The House of Fear (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); The Woman in Green (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); Passage to Algiers (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes)
1946 Terror by Night (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes); Heartbeat (Wood) (as Prof. Aristide); Dressed to Kill (Neill) (as Sherlock Holmes)
1949 Ichabod and Mr. Toad (Kinney, Geronimi, and Algar) (as voice of Mr. Toad)
1954 Casanova’s Bad Night (McLeod) (as Lucio)
1955 We’re No Angels (Curtiz) (as Andre Trochard)
1956 The Court Jester (Panama and Frank) (as Sir Ravenhurst); The Black Sleep (LeBorg) (as Sir Joel Cadman)
1958 The Last Hurrah (Ford) (as Norman Cass)
1962 The Magic Sword (Gordon) (as Lodac); “The Case of M. Valdemar” ep. of Tales of Terror (Corman) (as Carmichael); Two Before Zero (Faralla—doc) (as narrator)
1963 The Comedy of Terrors (Tourneur) (as John F. Black)
1964 Pontius Pilate (Rapper) (as Caiaphas)
1966 Queen of Blood (Harrington) (as Dr. Farraday); Guilt in the Invisible Bikini (Weis) (as Reginald Ripper)
1967 Voyage to a Prehistoric Planet (Sebastian, i.e. Harrington) (as Prof. Hartman); Autopsy of a Ghost (Rodríguez) (as Canuto Perez); Hillbillies in a Haunted House (Yarbrough) (as Gregor)
Basil Rathbone (left) and Errol Flynn (right) in The Adventures of Robin Hood

Publications

By RATHBONE: articles—

Interview by L. Soule, in Motion Picture Magazine, July 1936.

By RATHBONE: book—

On RATHBONE: books—

On RATHBONE: articles—

Current Biography 1951, New York, 1951.

* * *
Basil Rathbone’s film career is a lengthy one, spanning 45 years. During this time he played a variety of roles, both on the screen and stage, and he prided himself on his versatility. Nevertheless, Rathbone often found himself at the mercy of producers who typecast him within a limited range of characters.

In the earliest part of his film career, Rathbone was generally cast as a romantic lead. He certainly fitted the traditional description of tall, dark, and handsome, but these roles did little to advance his career. Then in 1935 Rathbone’s cold portrayal of Murdstone in David Copperfield caught the attention of producers, who subsequently cast him as the heavy in such films as Anna Karenina, A Tale of Two Cities and Captain Blood. Perhaps his most famous villainous role was Sir Guy de Gisbourne in The Adventures of Robin Hood. For this role (and similar ones) Rathbone studied fencing and became quite an excellent swordsman, which made his portrayals still more convincing.

Although being typecast as a villain brought Rathbone a great deal of work and success, he felt the need to break out of that mold. In 1939 Rathbone changed his image when he portrayed Sherlock Holmes in The Hound of the Baskervilles. In many ways Basil Rathbone was the definitive Sherlock Holmes—he not only fit Conan Doyle’s description of the character, but also played the part with precision and sincerity. Rathbone portrayed Holmes in 14 films (he also played the part on radio and on the stage). Although the series was very successful, Rathbone soon discovered that his association with the Sherlock Holmes character was even more constricting than his earlier identity as a villain. Finding it increasingly difficult to get acceptable film roles, in 1946 Rathbone acted on the New York stage in an attempt to escape his typecasting problems. He returned to Hollywood eight years later, only to discover that he had not quite escaped being typecast, continuing to play villains in such films as We’re No Angels and The Last Hurrah. One especially memorable film from this period was The Court Jester in which Rathbone combined all the best elements from his earlier dastardly roles to create the consummate adversary for Danny Kaye.

Rathbone’s final few roles were in mainly low-budget horror films. While two of these, Tales of Terror and The Comedy of Terrors, have become cult favorites, others are best forgotten. It is a pity that Rathbone’s career should end on such a note, for the actor was capable of so much more. His earlier films showed great versatility when he was allowed the opportunity to play varied and challenging roles. Nevertheless, it is a tribute to his acting ability that he is so strongly associated with two quite opposite roles, both the classical screen villain and the ultimate proponent of law and justice, Sherlock Holmes.

—Linda J. Obalil

REDFORD, Robert

Nationality: American. Born: Charles Robert Redford, Jr. in Santa Monica, California, 18 August 1937. Education: Attended Van Nuys High School, California; University of Colorado, Boulder; Pratt Institute, New York; American Academy of Dramatic Arts, New York. Family: Married Lola Jean Van Wagenen, 1958 (divorced), children: Shauna, David James, Amy Hart. Career: Made his Broadway debut in Tall Story, 1959; made guest appearances on numerous TV series, including Hallmark Hall of Fame, Maverick, The Virginian, The Defenders, Twilight Zone, Alfred Hitchcock Presents, Route 66, The Untouchables, Naked City, Perry Mason, Playhouse 90, and The Deputy, 1960–64; made his film debut in War Hunt, 1962; appeared on Broadway in Barefoot in the Park, 1963, and in the film version, 1967; directed the film Ordinary People, 1980; set up Sundance Institute for young filmmakers, 1980; also owner of the Sundance ski resort in Provo, Utah; and is a dedicated conservationist. Awards: Most Promising Newcomer-Male Golden Globe, for Inside Daisy Clover, 1965; Best Actor British Academy Award, for Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here, Downhill Racer, and Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, 1970; World Film Favorite-Male Golden Globe, 1975; World Film Favorite-Male Golden Globe, 1977; World Film Favorite-Male Golden Globe, 1978; Best Director Academy Award, Directors Guild of America Outstanding Directorial Achievement in Motion Pictures, National Board of Review Best Director, Best Director-Motion Picture Golden Globe, for Ordinary People, 1980; Cecil B. DeMille Award-Golden Globe, 1994; Screen Actors Guild Lifetime Achievement Award, 1996. Address: 1223 Wilshire Boulevard #412, Santa Monica, CA 90403, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1962 War Hunt (Sanders) (as Private Ray Loomis)
1965 Situation Hopeless, but Not Serious (Reinhardt) (as Hank); Inside Daisy Clover (Pakula) (as Wade Lewis)
1966 The Chase (Arthur Penn) (as Eubber Reeves); This Property Is Condemned (Pollack) (as Owen Legate)
1967 Barefoot in the Park (Saks) (as Paul Bratter)
1969 Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Hill) (as Sundance Kid); Downhill Racer (Ritchie) (as David Chappellet); Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here (Polonsky) (as Cooper)
1970 Little Fauqs and Big Halsys (Furie) (as Big Halsy)
1972 The Hot Rock (Yates) (as Dortmunder); The Candidate (Ritchie) (as Bill McKay); Jeremiah Johnson (Pollack) (title role)
1973 The Way We Were (Pollack) (as Hubbel Gardiner); The Sting (Hill) (as Johnny Hooker)
1974 The Great Gatsby (Clayton) (title role)
1975 The Great Waldo Pepper (Hill) (title role); Three Days of the Condor (Pollack) (as Turner)
1976 All the President’s Men (Pakula) (as Bob Woodward, + co-pr)
1977 A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as Maj. Cook)
1979 The Electric Horseman (Pollack) (as Sonny)
1980 Brubaker (Rosenberg) (title role)
1984 The Natural (Levin) (as Roy Hobbs)
1985 Out of Africa (Pollack) (as Denys Finch-Hatton)
1986 Legal Eagles (Reitman) (as Tom Logan)
1987 Do You Mean There Are Still Real Cowboys? (Blair—for TV) (as narrator)
1989 Yosemite: The Fate of Heaven (doc) (as narrator); To Protect Mother Earth (doc) (as narrator)
1990 Havana (Pollack) (as Jack Weil)
1992 Incident at Oglala (Apted—doc) (as narrator, + exec pr); Sneakers (Robinson) (as Martin Bishop/Martin Brice)
1993 Indecent Proposal (Lyne) (as John Gage)
1996 Up Close & Personal (Avnet) (as Warren Justice); Wild Bill: Hollywood Maverick (Robinson—doc) (as himself)
1997 Anthem (Gabel, Hahn—doc) (as himself)
Robert Redford in The Horse Whisperer

1988 Enredando sombras (Aray, Birri—doc) (as himself); Independent’s Day (Zenovich—for TV) (as himself)
1999 Forever Hollywood (Glassman, McCarthy—doc) (as himself)

Films as Director:

1980 Ordinary People
1988 The Milagro Beanfield War (+ co-pr)
1992 A River Runs through It (+ ro as narrator, co-pr)
1994 Quiz Show (+ pr)
1998 The Horse Whisperer (+ ro as Tom Booker, pr)
2000 The Legend of Bagger Vance (+ co-pr)

Other Films:

1988 Promised Land (Hoffman) (co-exec pr)
1989 Some Girls (Sisters) (Hoffman) (exec pr); 84 Charlie Mopic (Duncan) (“thanks to”)
1991 The Dark Wind (Morris) (co-exec pr)
1993 King of the Hill (Soderbergh) (exec pr)
1995 The American President (Rob Reiner) (co-pr); The Brothers McMullen (Burns) (“special thanks”)
1998 Grand Avenue (Sackheim—for TV) (exec pr); She’s the One (Burns) (exec pr)
1998 Slums of Beverly Hills (Jenkins) (exec pr); A Civil Action (Zaillian) (pr); No Looking Back (Burns) (exec pr)
2000 How to Kill Your Neighbor’s Dog (Kalesniko) (exec pr)

Publications

By REDFORD: book—

By REDFORD: articles—

Interview with Jill Kearney, in American Film (New York), March 1988.

Interview with Hal Rubenstein, in Interview (New York), September 1994.

Scenario (Rockville), Summer 1995.

On REDFORD: books—

Crowther, Bruce, Robert Redford, Tunbridge Wells, Kent, 1985.

On REDFORD: articles—

* * *

The price of popularity with the moviegoing public often is diminished stature with the critics. Such is the case with Robert Redford, whose exquisite all-American handsomeness has decorated movie screens since the early 1960s. After several years working on stage and as a guest actor in television series episodes, he debuted in War Hunt, a little-seen, low-budget war film. He slowly built up his career throughout that decade, earning his first commercial success by recreating his Broadway role as the stuffy lawyer in the Neil Simon comedy Barefoot in the Park. At the end of the 1960s, he became one of the world’s top movie stars and box-office attractions with his fame-solidifying appearance opposite Paul Newman in Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. Newman and Redford are similar in that both are among the beautiful people whose fortunes are in their faces. But Newman, unlike Redford, has chosen not just to play ornaments in glossy Hollywood star vehicles. From Somebody Up There Likes Me in 1956 through Twilight in 1998, Newman has played a wide range of interesting, challenging, deeply complicated characters. Meanwhile, Redford’s characters have been confined to a fairly narrow spectrum. He rarely has played unsympathetic types, two exceptions being the arrogant opportunists in Downhill Racer and Little Fauss and Big Halsy. Instead, nearly all of his roles have been charming heroes, or handsome icons who rarely display emotional fireworks. Extremes of anger or romantic ardor are uncommon in his work. Rather, his characters remain dispassionate as they become involved in the dynamics of the story. They are like athletes who look good on the playing field, and are admired by the fans as they play their games, but whose inner workings remain known only to their coaches or fellow players. Even when his character is flawed (the idealistic, naïvely deluded candidate who compromises his integrity in The Candidate) or victimized (the tragedy-tainted baseball phenom in The Natural), Redford’s overriding image is that of a Golden Boy. For this reason, recognition as a truly great actor (as opposed to truly great movie star) always has eluded him. The quintessential Redford-as-handsome-icon performance is found in The Way We Were. Here, his character is not so much a person as an object, a larger-than-life divine blond... being to be admired by Barbra Streisand. Streisand has the meaty role, that of the ethnic, committed political activist who undergoes the bulk of the character development. Redford is essentially a male Bo Derek—a shallow Joe College who is called upon to do little more than be beautiful.

In all fairness to the actor, however, it must be noted that he came to stardom in an era in which more and more major male movie stars were essentially character actors whose charisma compensated for their lack of classic good looks. By maintaining his stardom, Redford almost singlehandedly kept alive the image of the movie star as a diamond-bright alloy of glamour, celebrity, and erotic allure. He was able to accomplish this by exercising firm control over his career. Since Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, Redford has selected parts that he feels are compatible with his established screen persona, thus ensuring his popularity with movie audiences. He also has chosen to work with such directors as Michael Ritchie, George Roy Hill, and Sidney Pollack, who seem to best understand that persona, chosen to work with such directors as Michael Ritchie, George Roy Hill, and Sidney Pollack, who seem to best understand that persona.

Perhaps Redford has been at his best playing opposite Newman, in Butch Cassidy and The Sting. Newman’s presence seems to loosen up Redford, and their on-screen chemistry is the key ingredient which makes both films such satisfying entertainments. In these films, Redford adds a pleasingly wry wit to his characterizations. And in his better screen moments, he is effectively able to hint, via subtle nuance, at a more complex psychology hidden beneath his surface presence.

In recent years, Redford has transcended his identity as an actor. In the 1980s, he established the Sundance Institute for young filmmakers, with his Sundance Film Festival, a showcase for the year’s newest independent films, evolving into one of the motion picture industry’s higher-profile events. He also entered the directing arena in 1980, winning an Academy Award for his maiden effort, Ordinary People. It remains an impressive drama examining the brittle reality beneath the veneer of an outwardly typical upper-middle-class American family that has been torn apart by tragedy.

Unfortunately, none of Redford’s subsequent directorial efforts have matched Ordinary People. The Milagro Beanfield War is set in a picturesque New Mexico town, mostly populated by poor and powerless Hispanics, that is about to be swallowed up by “progress” in the form of a fat-cat land developer. The result is at best pleasant and entertaining, enhanced by lyrical, wryly humorous moments, and at worst unnecessarily melodramatic. A River Runs through It is a much-too-tacturn drama about the relationships and opposing forces within another American family, this one an outdoors Montana household. Despite its wide acclaim, Quiz Show, an allegorical drama about the television quiz show scandals of the late 1950s, is wrought with oversimplifications and misstatements of fact.

The Horse Whisperer is perhaps Redford’s best post-Ordinary People film, a sound, sensible drama about a young teenage girl and her horse, both of whom are traumatized after a horrific accident. The girl’s mother, a worldly but never-quite-satisfied New York magazine editor, brings the two out west for the down-home therapy dispensed by the title character, a sage, weathered Montana rancher (played by Redford). At its core, The Horse Whisperer may be linked to Ordinary People and A River Runs through It as a story of the invisible walls that separate and alienate the members of an American family, with a spotlight on young people whose innocence is tainted by fate. In The Horse Whisperer, the antidote to this rift involves embracing a lifestyle that is simple, direct, and no-nonsense—one that, in fact, reflects on Redford’s own passion for the American West.

A sense of social responsibility exists within Redford’s more recent cinematic projects, from the subjects he has chosen for the films he has directed to his involvement with the Sundance Institute and his narrating and executive producing Michael Apted’s Incident at Oglala. The latter is a potent documentary presenting evidence of the railroading of Leonard Peltier, the American Indian Movement activist convicted of killing a pair of FBI agents in 1975 at South Dakota’s Pine Ridge Reservation. A number of Redford’s earlier films work as examinations or exposes of inequities within the American system. The Candidate and All the President’s Men deal with the seamy side of American politics. Brubaker uncovers corruption within the penal system. The Electric Horseman is a tract against crass commercialism and the exploitation of nature.

As one school of thought maintains, Redford’s looks have been his albatross, limiting the directions in which a sizable talent might otherwise have taken him. Meanwhile, others argue that he is merely a competent actor with exceptional physical appeal. What remains indisputable is that, unlike hundreds (if not thousands) of other pretty boy actors, Redford has been no flavor of the month, a hot item one day and a has-been (or never-was) the next. He has maintained his stardom over several decades, which in and of itself is quite an accomplishment.

—Fiona Valentine, updated by Rob Edelman

REDGRAVE, (Sir) Michael

Films as Actor:

1938 The Lady Vanishes (Hitchcock) (as Gilbert)
1939 Stolen Life (Czinner) (as Alan MacKenzie); Climbing High (Reed) (as Nicholas Brooke)
1940 The Stars Look Down (Reed) (as David Fenwick); A Window in London (Mason) (as Peter)
1941 Kipps (Reed) (title role); Atlantic Ferry (Forde) (as Charles MacIver); Jeannie (French) (as Stanley Smith)
1942 The Big Blockade (Frend) (as the Russian)
1943 Thunder Rock (Boulting) (as Charleston)
1945 The Way to the Stars (Asquith) (as Flight Lt. Archdale); Dead of Night (ep. dir by Cavalcanti) (as Maxwell Frere); A Diary for Timothy (Jennings) (as narrator)
1946 The Captive Heart (Dearden) (as Karel Hasek); The Years Between (Bennett) (as Michael Wentworth)
1947 The Man Within (Bennett) (as Carlyon); Mourning Becomes Electra (Nichols) (as Orin Mannon)
1948 Secret behind the Door (Fritz Lang) (as Mark Lamphere)
1951 The Browning Version (Asquith) (as Andrew Crocker-Harris)
1952 The Importance of Being Earnest (Asquith) (as John Worthington)
1954 The Green Scarf (O’Ferrall) (as Maitre Deliot)
1955 The Sea Shall Not Have Them (Gilbert) (as Air Commodore Walty); Oh, Rosalinda! (Powell and Pressburger) (as Col. Eisenstien); The Night My Number Came Up (Norman) (as Air Marshal); The Dam Busters (Anderson) (as Barnes Wallis); Confidential Report (Welles) (as Trebitsch)
1956 1984 (Anderson) (as O’Connor)
1957 Time without Pity (Losey) (as David Graham); The Happy Road (Kelly) (as Gen. Medworth)
1958 Vanishing Cornwall (Browning—doc) (as narrator); The Quiet American (Mankiewicz) (as Fowler); Law and Disorder (Crichton) (as Percy); The Immortal Land (Wright—doc) (as narrator); Behind the Mask (Hurst) (as Sir Anthony Benson Gray)
1959 Shake Hands with the Devil (Anderson) (as Michael Collins); The Wreck of the Mary Deare (Anderson) (as Mr. Nyland)
1961 No, My Darling Daughter (Box and Thomas) (as Sir Matthew Carr); The Innocents (Clayton) (as the Uncle)
1962 The Loneliness of the Long-Distance Runner (Richardson) (as Governor)
1965 Young Cassidy (Cardiff) (as W. B. Yeats); The Heroes of Telemark (Anthony Mann) (as Uncle); The Hill (Lumet) (as the M.O.)
1968 Assignment K (Gielgud) (as Harris); Heidi (Delbert Mann—for TV)
1969  Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Gen. Wilson); Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Ross) (as Headmaster)

1970  David Copperfield (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Peggotty); Goodbye Gemini (Gibson) (as the MP)

1971  Connecting Rooms (Gollings) (as James Wallraven); The Go-Between (Losey) (as Leo as adult)

1972  Nicholas and Alexandra (Schaffner) (as Grand Duke); The Last Target (Spenton-Foster) (as Erik Fritsch)

Publications

By REDGRAVE: books—

By REDGRAVE: article—

On REDGRAVE: books—

On REDGRAVE: articles—

Classic Images (Muscatine), September 1996.

* * *

Although he often gave the impression that he was only appearing on the screen under sufferance and would far rather have been treading the boards of the Old Vic, perhaps playing King Lear for Tyrone Guthrie or consorting in the dressing rooms with Dame Edith Evans, Sir Michael Redgrave had a long and varied career as a film actor, proving himself a plausible, if reluctant, leading man in his debut, the Hitchcock caper, The Lady Vanishes; displaying a stiff upper lip in a succession of war films, notably Basil Dearden’s The Captive Heart and Michael Anderson’s The Dam Busters; and even showing a knack for comedy as Jack Worthington in The Importance of Being Earnest.

“Earnest” Redgrave most certainly was: he generally acted briskly, with a bookish, schoolmasterly air, and was expert at conveying a sense of pained idealism. He was rather too intense to be classified with the “chaps,” the tweed jacketed, pipe smoking squares/stars of 1950s British cinema, such as Jack Hawkins and Kenneth More. With Redgrave in front of the cameras, there is always the sense of a ferocious nervous energy ready to rip through the outward reserve. In Cavalcanti’s segment of Dead of Night, for example, he plays the ventriloquist who becomes possessed by his own Charlie McCarthy of a dummy. Watching this performance is like seeing Mr. Chips give way to Hannibal Lecter. There is his brooding cameo as the Uncle in The Innocents, Jack Clayton’s reworking of The Turn of the Screw; there is his crusading reformer of the mines in The Stars Look Down, his cuckolded husband in The Browning Version, or his political zealot of Fame Is the Spur: these are all parts that confirm that a Redgrave fueled by a sense of moral righteousness is a terrifying thing.

Basil Wright and Humphrey Jennings, doyens of the culturally respectable Documentary Movement, were his contemporaries at Cambridge, where Redgrave edited a magazine, Venture, and was film critic for Granta. His academic/high culture background perhaps goes some way to explaining his disdain for the medium that brought him popular success: “I, who believed that in good acting there must be a continual stream of improvisation, began to think that this business of hitting chalk marks, adjusting one’s gaze . . . and all the rest of the paraphernalia . . . was a very mechanical, second-best thing indeed.”

As a dissenting British film actor, he is in good company. James Mason, Stewart Granger, and Dirk Bogarde have also used their autobiographies to denigrate the British pictures they “graced.” Nevertheless, it is surprising that Redgrave, who worked with Fritz Lang and Orson Welles, Carol Reed and Anthony Asquith among others, should still contrive to scoff at the bastard celluloid muse. Yet the key to Redgrave’s acting is his quite palpable sense of discomfort: he always seems ill at ease. He was never accepted by either the theater or the film “establishment.” He did not scale the heights of the holy triumvirate, Olivier/Richardson/Gielgud, on the stage. Nor was he a fully fledged film star. A quintessential Redgrave screen performance is his depiction of Barnes Wallis, builder of the bouncing bomb, in The Dam Busters. Here, he plays a nervous, stooped inventor in a mackintosh, clearly uncomfortable in a world of hearty RAF officers and their Labradors. Just as Redgrave the actor never received his due, Barnes Wallis finds that his schemes run aground on the rocks of Home Office and Bomber Command indifference. He is the boffin as outsider, the serious Stanislavskian caught in a world of West End farce. In the end, his perversity and unshakable self-belief see him triumph against the odds.

It used to be commonplace to say that British film actors were “emotionally frozen” and/or “sexually repressed.” Unlike their Methodist American counterparts, they did not “explode”: it is hard to think of Redgrave or Trevor Howard sweating it out à la Brando in A Streetcar Named Desire. What these consummate British stars can do is to hint at the seething turmoil of social, sexual, and political anxiety behind the carapace. They are expert at “imploding.” And few manage better to convey the anguish engendered by having strong feelings but being denied the outlet to express them than Redgrave senior. In his bristling, schoolmasterly awkwardness, he remains an infinitely more interesting actor than either his children or grandchildren.

—G. C. Macnab

REDGRAVE, Vanessa

Films as Actress:

1958 Behind the Mask (Hurst) (as Pamela Gray)
1966 Morgan! A Suitable Case for Treatment (Reisz) (as Leonie Delt); Blow-Up (Antonioni) (as Jane)
1967 Red and Blue (Richardson) (as Jacky); Camelot (Logan) (as Guinevere); A Man for All Seasons (Zinnemann) (as Anne Boleyn); The Sailor from Gibraltar (Richardson) (as Sheila); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Richardson) (as Clarissa)
1968 Isadora (Reisz) (as Isadora Duncan); The Sea Gull (Lumet) (as Nina); Un tranquillo posto di campagna (A Quiet Place in the Country) (Petri) (as Flavia); Tonight Let’s All Make Love in London (Whitehead) (as guest)
1969 Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Sylvia Pankhurst); La vacanza (The Vacation; Dropout) (Brass) (as Immacolata)
1971 The Trojan Women (Cacoyannis) (as Andromache); The Devils (Russell) (as Sister Jeanne); Mary; Queen of Scots (Jarrott) (title role)
1974 Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Mary Debenham)
1975 Out of Season (Alan Bridges) (as Ann)
1976 The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (Ross) (as Lola Deveraux)
1977 Julia (Zinnemann) (title role); Agatha (Apted) (as Agatha Christie); The Palestinian (Battersby) (+ pr)
1979 Yanks (Schlesinger) (as Helen); Bear Island (Sharp) (as Hedi Lindquist)
1980 Playing for Time (Daniel Mann—for TV) (as Fania Fenelon)
1982 My Body, My Child (Chomsky—for TV) (as Leenie Cabrezi)
1983 Wagner (Palmer—for TV) (as Cosima)
1984 The Bostonians (Ivory) (as Olive Chancellur)
1985 Wetherby (Hare) (as Jean Travers); Steaming (Losey) (as Nancy); Three Sovereigns for Sarah (Leacock—for TV) (as Sarah Cloyce)
1986 Second Serve (Page—for TV) (as Renee Richards); Comrades (Douglas) (as Mrs. Carlyle)
1987 Prick Up Your Ears (Fears) (as Peggy Ramsay)
1988 Consuming Passions (Foster) (as Mrs. Garza); A Man for All Seasons (Charlton Heston—for TV) (as Alice More)
1990 Diceria dell’untore (The Plague Sowers) (Cino) (as Sister Crucifix); Romeo-Juliet (Acosta) (voice of Mother Capulet); A Breath of Life (Cino) (as Sister Crocifissa); Orpheus Descending (Hall—for TV) (as Lady Torrance)
1991 Stalin’s Funeral (Yevtuschenko); The Ballad of the Sad Café (Callow) (as Miss Amelia Evans); What Ever Happened to Baby Jane? (Greene—for TV) (as Blanche Hudson); Behind the Mask (doc)
1992 Howards End (Ivory) (as Ruth Wilcox)
1993 Storia di una Capinera (Sparrow) (Zeffirelli) (as Sister Agata); The House of the Spirits (August) (as Nivea); Crime and Disappointing is the first word that comes to mind with regard to Vanessa Redgrave’s film career. But that perhaps says more about our expectations than her achievements. Being part of one of Britain’s great theatrical families may have been more of a burden than an asset, so it is a credit to her persistence and intelligence that she has not given up on acting entirely, or sunk to the depths of a Hayley or Juliet Mills. Yet in virtually all of her films there remains a lingering sense of something great, of a performer of truly passionate intensity going to waste.

In some cases, this can be squarely blamed on the directors with whom she worked. During her marriage to Tony Richardson, enduring The Sailor from Gibraltar and The Charge of the Light Brigade can only have hastened the divorce proceedings. And how could any performer communicate through the chaotic gore of The Devils? Redgrave almost succeeds in giving a startling performance, but is constantly thwarted by director Ken Russell’s selfish grandiosity. Even her Academy Award-winning role in Playing for Time, lovingly embalmed by Sidney Lumet, and does what she can in the international stew of The Trojan Women. In Mary, Queen of Scots she succumbs to the tedious early 1970s vogue for Tudor costume drama, halfheartedly sparring with Glenda Jackson when they should be asking each other how they got into such a dull film in the first place.

In the 1960s Redgrave played female lead in two films central to the inflated ego of that decade—Blow-Up and Morgan. In both, she had to contend with a smothering male presence (Antonioni and David Warner respectively), but very nearly captures the hearts of the two films. Her Guinevere in Camelot is suitably beautiful but, not surprisingly, her intelligence rarely seems engaged by the text. Isadora at least put her in the epicenter of a film, giving Redgrave her best early career leading role as Isadora Duncan and offering her a substantial dramatic showcase.

It took considerable courage, given the hysterical misinterpretation of her political views in certain quarters of the United States, to take the lead role in the made-for-television drama Playing for Time, and her success in it is heartening. She is never less than moving in her role as concentration camp prisoner Fania Fenelon. But perhaps her finest film performance, though less celebrated than many, came in Yanks. It is one of the only straightforwardly romantic films she has

---

Publications

By REDGRAVE: book—

By REDGRAVE: articles—

Interview with B. Lewis, in Films and Filming (London), October 1986.

On REDGRAVE: books—

Redgrave, Deirdre, with Danaë Brook, To Be a Redgrave, London, 1982.

On REDGRAVE: articles—

Ivory, James, ‘‘The Trouble with Olive,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1985.

Raymond, Gerard, ‘‘Redgrave on Redgrave,’’ in Advocate, 12 February 1991. appeared in, but it never equates romanticism with sloppiness. Redgrave’s acting, free of the responsibilities of a crushing classical role or of the need to punch home political points, is the strong, subtle, emotional center of the text.

As she has aged, Redgrave has taken on an assortment of supporting character roles. She was a solid presence in two films in which her characters are at once dissimilar and alike: they come from opposite classes, yet the fact that each is dying is a key element in the story. In Howards End, she is a highborn matriarch who wills her cherished estate to the character played by Emma Thompson; in Little Odessa, she is a nondescript Russian-Jewish woman whose husband has been unfaithful and whose oldest son has become a hitman. During the second half of the 1990s, Redgrave’s highest-profile films have featured her in roles that virtually are cameos. In Girl, Interrupted, for example, she plays a very proper psychiatrist; in Cradle Will Rock, she is a wealthy, dizzy countess. She even appeared in a pair of mega-budget Hollywood actioners, adding a bit of humanity and depth to Deep Impact as the rejected mother of heroine Tea Leoni and quite a bit of pizzazz to Mission Impossible as a greedy, sexy information broker.

Meanwhile, Redgrave gave attractive star performances in two films that were far-less publicized. In A Month by the Lake, she is an amiable British woman who comes to Italy’s Lake Como for a vacation prior to World War II and becomes intrigued by the idea of a romance with a stylish but impulsive, ultimately enigmatic middle-aged businessman. In Mrs. Dalloway, based on a novel by Virginia Woolf, Redgrave is especially fine as the title character, a moneymaking middle-aged woman who comes off as stodgy and self-satisfied as she prepares to host an elegant party. She is contrasted to her youthful self in a series of flashbacks and, at this point in her life, it is noted that the vibrant young woman “could do so much, be so much.” The story would be one-dimensional and predictable if the plight of its heroine made her nothing more than a victim of cruel sexism. What makes it so effective is that it is layered with emotion and nuance, and the fact that Clarissa Dalloway, as portrayed by Redgrave, is such a complex, fully developed character.

Her performances in films from Yanks through A Month by the Lake and Mrs. Dalloway are clear proof that if Redgrave’s political commitments ever put an end to her acting career, it will be a significant loss. Yet even her political views, liked by few people and understood by fewer, seem somehow linked to the tenacity and conviction she has displayed in her films.

—Andry Medhurst, updated by Rob Edelman

REED, Oliver

Nationality: British. Born: Robert Oliver Reed in Wimbledon, Surrey, 13 February 1938; the nephew of the director Carol Reed. Family: Married 1) Kate Byrne, two children; 2) Josephine Burge, 1985. Career: Worked as nightclub bouncer, boxer, and cab driver; military service in the Medical Corps; 1960—film debut in The Angry Silence; 1968–69—roles in Oliver! and Women in Love brought critical attention; 1993—in TV mini-series Return to Lonesome Dove. Died: 2 May 1999 in Valletta, Malta, of heart attack.

Films as Actor:

1960  The Angry Silence (Green) (as Mick); The League of Gentlemen (Dearden); The Bulldog Breed (Asher); Beat Girl (Wild for Kicks) (Greville) (as Plaid Shirt); Sword of Sherwood Forest (Fisher) (as Melton); The Two Faces of Dr. Jekyll (House of Fright) (Fisher)

1961  His and Hers (Hurst) (as Poet); The Curse of the Werewolf (Fisher) (as Leon); The Rebel (Call Me Genius) (Day); No Love for Johnnie (Thomas)

1962  The Damned (These Are the Damned) (Losey) (as King); The Pirates of Blood River (Gilling) (as Brocaire); Captain Clegg (Night Creatures) (Scott) (as Harry Crabtree)

1963  Paramoac (Francis) (as Simon Ashby); The Scarlet Blade (Gilling) (as Capt. Sylvester); The Party’s Over (Hamilton) (as Moise)

1964  The System (The Girl Getters) (Winner) (as Tinker)

1965  The Brigand of Kandahar (Gilling) (as Eli Khan)

1966  The Trap (Hayers) (as Jean La Bete); The Jokers (Winner)

1967  The Shuttered Room (Greene) (as Ethan); Dante’s Inferno: The Life of Dante Gabriel Rossetti (Russell—for TV) (title role); I’ll Never Forget What’s in Name (Winner) (as Andrew Quint)

1968  Oliver! (Carol Reed) (as Bill Sykes)

1969  The Assassination Bureau (Dearden) (as Ivan Dragomiloff); Hannibal Brooks (Winner) (as Brooks); Women in Love (Russell) (as Geral Crich)

1970  La Dame dans l’auto avec des lunettes et un fusil (The Lady in the Car with Glasses and a Gun) (Litvak) (as Michael Caldwell); Take a Girl Like You (Miller) (Patrick)

1971  The Devils (Russell) (as Father Grandier); The Hunting Party (Medford) (as Frank Calder)

1972  Z.P.G. (Campus) (as Russ McNeil); Sitting Target (Hickox) (as Harry Lamart); Mordi e fuggi (Dirty Weekend; Bite and Run) (Risi) (as Fabrizio)

1973  Blue Blood (Sinclair); Triple Echo (Apted) (as Sergeant); Il giorno del furora (Days of Fury; One Russian Summer) (Calenda)

1974  The Three Musketeers (Lester) (as Athos)

1975  The Four Musketeers (Lester) (as Athos); Tommy (Russell) (as Frank Hobbs); Ten Little Indians (Collinson) (as Hugh Lombard); Royal Flash (Lester) (as Bismark)

1976  The Great Scout and Cathouse Thursday (Taylor) (as Joe Knox); Burnt Offerings (Curtis) (as Ben); Blood in the Streets (The Revolver) (Sollima) (as Vito Caprini); The Sell Out (Collinson) (as Gabriel Lee)

1978  The Big Sleep (Winner) (as Eddie Mars); Crossed Swords (The Prince and the Pauper) (Fleischer) (as Miles Hender-son); Tomorrow Never Comes (Collinson) (as Wilson); Maniac (Assault on Paradise; The Town That Cried Terror) (Compton) (as Nick McCormick)

1979  The Class of Miss MacMichael (Narizzano) (as Terence Sutton); The Brood (Cronenberg) (as Dr. Hal Raglan)
1980  Dr. Heckyl and Mr. Hype (Griffith) (title role)
1981  Condoman (Jarrott) (as Krokov); Lion of the Desert (Akkad) (as Gen. Rodolfo Graziani)
1982  Venom (Huggard) (as Dave); Death Bite (Spasms) (Fruet) (as Jason Kincaid)
1983  Two of a Kind (Herzfeld) (as Beazley); The Sting II (Kagan) (as Lonnegan); Fanny Hill (O’Hara); The Great Question (Al Mas à la Al Kubra) (Jameel)
1986  Captive (Mayerberg) (as Gregory Le Vay); Castaway (Roeg) (as Gerald Kingsland)
1987  Wheels of Terror (Hessler) (as the General)
1988  Dragonard (Master of Dragonard Hill) (Kikoine); Captive Rage (Sundstrom) (as Gen. Belmondo); Skeleton Coast (Cardos) (as Capt. Simpson); The House of Usher (Birkinshaw) (as Roderick Usher)
1989  The Adventures of Baron Münchausen (Gilliam) (as Vulcan); Rage to Kill (Winters); The Return of the Musketeers (Lester) (as Athos); A Ghost in Monte Carlo (Hough—for TV); Gor (Kiersch) (as Sarm)
1990  Treasure Island (Fraser C. Heston—for TV) (as Captain Billy Bones); Panama Sugar and the Dog Thief (Avallone)
1991  Army (Santostefano); The Pit and the Pendulum (Gordon) (as Cardinal); Prisoner of Honor (Russell—for TV) (as Gen. Boisdeffre); Hired to Kill (Mastorakis) (as Michael Bartos)
1992  Severed Ties (Santostefano and Roberts) (as Dr. Hans Vaughan)
1995  Funny Bones (Chelsom) (as Dolly Hopkins)
1996  The Bruce (as Bishop Robert Wishart)
1998  Parting Shots (Winner) (as Jamie Campbell-Stewart); Marco Polo (Erschbamer); The Incredible Adventures of Marco Polo; Jeremiah (Winer—for TV) (General Safan)
2000  Gladiator (Scott) (Proximo)

Publications

By REED: book—

Read All about Me (autobiography), London, 1979.

By REED: article—

On REED: book—

On REED: articles—

“Rogue Trip: Boisterous and Bibulous to the Very End, Actor Oliver Reed Enjoyed a Famously Spirited Life,” in People Weekly, vol. 51, no. 18, 17 May 1999.

* * *

Time and more than his fair share of bad films have tended to relegate Oliver Reed to the status of a washed-up middle-aged actor whose early promise has expired under a morass of inferior work. Certainly his appearances in the grisly, post-Wild Bunch splatter Western The Hunting Party, the snake-on-the-loom horror thriller Venom, and the comic book Condorman offered little opportunity for him to reveal either talent or screen presence. Yet there is nothing to be gained from merely pointing to Reed’s long list of bad films and dismissing him on this basis. Nor would it be justified. From his first starring role in Terence Fisher’s The Curse of the Werewolf to collaborations with Richard Lester and, especially, Ken Russell, with whom Reed’s tempestuous nature formed an ideal match, Oliver Reed exhibits at his best a powerful screen persona which bad films have tarnished but not destroyed completely.

Cast early on as a thug or teddy boy in several British kitchen sink and juvenile delinquency dramas, Reed had his first major role as the title character in Curse for Hammer Films (he had had a small part as a bouncer in the same studio’s The Two Faces of Dr. Jekyll, also directed by Terence Fisher, released the previous year). Parts in other of the studio’s horror and action thrillers quickly followed, most notably the scenery-chewing psycho in Paranoiac. His career advanced considerably when he met Ken Russell, for whom he starred as the poet Dante Gabriel Rossetti in Russell’s BBC biopic Dante’s Inferno. Their association continued with Russell’s breakthrough film, Women in Love, in which Reed co-starred, through several other Russell extravaganzas (Mahler, Litztomania) in which the actor took cameos. Reed had his biggest success as the murderous Bill Sikes in Oliver!, the film adaptation of the hit musical based on Charles Dickens’s Oliver Twist. The director, Carol Reed, was his uncle, who, detesting nepotism, declined considering his nephew for the part; the latter won it entirely on his own by auditioning. He has worked steadily since, but has never quite achieved the star status Oliver! so auspiciously hinted at.

A comparison of several of Reed’s major roles apart from Sikes, but certainly not excluding it—Leon in Curse, Grandier in The Devils, and Athos in The Three Musketeers/The Four Musketeers*—provides some insight into his success. In the case of the first, we have a man torn between a desire for love and a destructive animal rage which eventually overcomes and destroys him. Romance in the form of Christina (Catherine Feller) can conquer his werewolf side but circumstances tear them apart. Grandier is a priest who sees no contradiction between his clerical vows and the pursuit of physical pleasure. This “immoral” man becomes the most moral of all when he takes a lone and fatal stand against the government figures who wish to destroy the independence of the city of Loudon. Athos, who drinks and fights with no regard for public opinion or his own safety, is also a nobleman whose genuine love for a harlot, Milady (Faye Dunaway), lost him his honor. In all three cases Reed skillfully conveys the contradictions inherent in the characters—quiet introspection alternating with harsh violence.

It is true that Reed cannot on his own redeem a mediocre film, but then it is difficult to think of any actor who could have salvaged anything from Z.P.G., Tomorrow Never Comes, or Sting II (where Reed took the part created by Robert Shaw). He often seems uncarrying in his choice of roles. But he clearly knows a good project when it comes along (he told David Cronenberg that The Brood was the best script he had read since The Devils).

It is encouraging, however, that recent supporting roles such as Vulcan in Gilliam’s The Adventures of Baron Münchausen, Billy Bones in Fraser Heston’s version of Treasure Island, and the wry, drunken priest in Stuart Gordon’s Russell homage, The Pit and the Pendulum, have brought him the praise he often deserves.

—Daniel O’Brien, updated by John McCarty

REEVE, Christopher

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 25 September 1952.

Education: Graduated from Princeton Day School, 1970; graduated from Cornell University, 1974; attended Julliard School.

Family: Began domestic partnership with the advertising executive Gae Exton, 1977 (partnership ended 1987); married the singer-actress Dana Morosini, 1992, sons: Matthew and Will, daughter: Alexandra.

Career: First appeared on television in the soap opera Love of Life, 1974–76; made his Broadway debut in A Matter of Gravity, 1976; founded Christopher Reeve Foundation, 1996 (merged with the American Paralysis Association in 1999 to become the Christopher Reeve Paralysis Foundation); named Vice President, National Organization on Disability, 1997. Awards: British Academy of Film and Television Arts, Best Newcomer Award, 1979; special Obie Award “for his courageous work on behalf of Chilean artists,” 1988; Walter BrieblH Human Rights Foundation Award, 1988; Emmy, Outstanding Informational Special, for Without Pity: A Film about Abilities, 1996; Screen Actors Guild Award, Outstanding Performance by a Male Actor in a TV Movie or Miniseries, for Rear Window, 1998. Agent: Betsy Berg, William Morris Agency, 1325 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A. Address: Christopher Reeve Paralysis Foundation, 500 Morris Ave., Springfield, NJ 07081, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1978  Gray Lady Down (Greene) (as Phillips); Superman (Donner) (title role)
1980  Superman II (Lester) (title role); Somewhere in Time (Szwarc) (as Richard Collier)
Christopher Reeve in Superman: The Movie

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Role Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Deathtrap (Lumet)</td>
<td>(as Flaherty)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Superman III (Lester)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Bostonians (Ivory)</td>
<td>(as Basil Ransome)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>The Aviator (Miller)</td>
<td>(as Edgar Anscombe); Anna Karenina (Langton—for TV) (as Count Vronsky)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Street Smart (Schatzberg)</td>
<td>(as Jonathan Fisher); The Grand Knockout Tournament (Hughes—for TV) (as himself); Superman IV: The Quest for Peace (Furie) (title role) (+ co-story, second-unit direction)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Switching Channels (Kotcheff)</td>
<td>(as Blaine Bingham); The Great Escape II: The Untold Story (Nader—for TV) (as Major John Dodge)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>The Rose and the Jackal (Gold—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Allan Pinkerton); Fear and the Muse: The Story of Anna Akhmatova (Janows) (Narrator)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Bump in the Night (Arthur—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Lawrence Muller); Death Dreams (Donovan—for TV) (as George Westfield)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Noises Off (Bogdanovich)</td>
<td>(as Frederick Dallas and Philip Brent); Mortal Sins (May—for TV) (as Father Thomas Cusack); Nightmare in the Daylight (for TV) (as Sean)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Morning Glory (Stern)</td>
<td>(as Will Parker); The Sea Wolf (Anderson—for TV) (as Humphrey Van Weyden); The Remains of the Day (Ivory) (as Lewis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Speechless (Underwood)</td>
<td>(as Bob “Bagdad” Freely); Black Fox: The Price of Peace (Stern—for TV) (as Alan Johnson); Black Fox: Blood Horse (Stern—for TV) (as Alan Johnson); Black Fox: Good Men and Bad (Stern—for TV) (as Alan Johnson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Village of the Damned (Carpenter)</td>
<td>(as Alan Chaffee); Above Suspicion (Schachter) (as Dempsey Cain)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Without Pity: A Film about Abilities (Mierendorf—for TV) (doc) (Narrator); Nine (Hays) (anim) (as Thurston Last); A Step toward Tomorrow (Reinisch) (as Denny Gabriel); The Toughest Break (for TV) (doc) (Narrator)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>Rear Window (Bleckner—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Jason Kemp) (+ exec)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>In the Gloaming (for TV)</td>
<td>(d); Christopher Reeve: A Celebration of Hope (for TV) (exec)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1023
Publications

By REEVE: book—

By REEVE: articles—

“In Step with Christopher Reeve,” interview with James Brady, in Parade, 22 November 1998.

On REEVE: books—

Havill, Adrian, Man of Steel: The Career and Courage of Christopher Reeve, New York, 1996.

Reeve, Dana, Care Packages: Letters to Christopher Reeve from Strangers and Other Friends, New York, 1999.

On REEVE: articles—

Jenish, D’Arcy, “Man of Steely Determination,” Maclean’s (Toronto), 7 June 1999.

* * * *

When a tall and gangly 15-year-old named Christopher Reeve joined a summer stock company in Williamstown, Massachusetts, thereby embarking on a professional acting career, he had no idea that he would become world famous for two very different reasons: enacting a comic book character in the movies, and dedicating his formidable energies to finding a cure for spinal cord injuries. Despite Reeve’s varied career on stage and the large and small screens, two images—simultaneously contradictory and complementary—will forever define him in the public imagination: Reeve in the familiar blue-and-red costume of Superman, and Reeve seated in a wheelchair.

Reeve’s early experiences at the Williamstown Theater Festival quickly led to other professional acting opportunities. He took time off after high school to join a national touring company and performed opposite Celeste Holm in the Hugh and Margaret Williams comedy The Irregular Verb to Love. He enrolled as an English major at Cornell shortly after the tour and continued to act in professional plays as his schedule permitted. He studied at the famed Juilliard School in New York City during his final collegiate year and, to help his bills, landed a recurring role in the TV soap opera Love of Life. He debuted on Broadway opposite Katharine Hepburn in A Matter of Gravity in 1976, and soon thereafter traveled to Hollywood and secured a minor role in his first film: the Charlton Heston vehicle, Gray Lady Down. Reeve’s acting experiences before the camera were thus relatively limited when he auditioned for the role that would catapult him into worldwide stardom: Clark Kent of the Superman movies. As Tom Mankiewicz, the co-writer of the first two Superman movies remembered, “Chris was tall, good looking and nervous. He was perspiring and, well, that doesn’t go over real well if you’re supposed to be Superman. Then he hopped up on the edge of a balcony, looked at Margot Kidder and said, ‘Good evening, Miss Lane.’ Geoffrey Unsworth, the cinematographer, turned to me in that moment and whispered, ‘Oh, thank god!’ It was just one of those fits. We had our Superman.” “At 6’4’,” Reeve weighed only 189 pounds at the time of his audition, but a rigorous program of exercise and diet enabled him to add thirty pounds before the cameras rolled. He explained why he was chosen for the role in typical self-deprecating fashion: “Ninety percent of why I have the part is because, when the makeup is done, I look like I walked right out of the comic book. The other ten percent, I hope, is my acting ability.”

Internationally famous as a result of his Superman role in four films, the handsome and athletic Reeve insisted on maintaining a stage acting career and alternated his movie schedule with frequent appearances in Williamstown productions and other shows. His post-Superman stage work has included roles in Fifth of July (1980), The Aspern Papers (London, 1984), The Marriage of Figaro (New York, 1985), Summer and Smoke (Los Angeles, 1988), and A Winter’s Tale (New York, 1989). He has also been a frequent guest on television, often playing himself on such programs as The Muppet Show in 1979, The Carol Burnett Show in 1991, and The Unpleasant World of Penn and Teller in 1994.

Despite the pressure to keep playing “good guy” movie roles, Reeve began playing characters far removed from Clark Kent, with his performances as Basil Ransome in The Bostonians, Jonathan Fisher in Street Smart, and Lewis in Remains of the Day among his best. Sidney Lumet, who directed him in Deathtrap, said Reeve “was always an arresting talent and did first-class work from the beginning. . . . There was real courage evident in him as an actor. What was always startling to me is this assumption that people who play serial parts—Superman or James Bond—can only play those parts. Chris Reeve is the perfect example of the antidote to that assumption.”
Though he never again hit the heights of popularity that he achieved with the Superman movies, Reeve was pursuing a solid movie and stage career when an accident changed his life forever. On 27 May 1995, he was thrown head first from a horse during a competition near Charlottesville, Virginia, and the accident instantly rendered him a quadriplegic. With commentators writing endlessly about the ironies, the actor best known for playing the virtually invulnerable "Man of Steel" in the movies soon became the most famous disabled person on the planet.

Reeve refused to let his profound injury stop his movie and television career. "I would say I'm making the best of a bad situation," he said in 1997. "Much has been lost. But it doesn't serve any purpose to dwell on it." His post-injury successes have included his first stint as a director (for the HBO film In the Gloaming, which won four Cable/ACE awards including Best Dramatic or Theatrical Special) and the role of Jason Kemp in the television remake of the Hitchcock classic, Rear Window. He also caused considerable controversy in early 2000 when he performed in a Nuveen Investments television commercial in which, through special effects wizardry, he appeared to walk.

In the years since his accident, Reeve has worked tirelessly to raise funds for spinal cord injury research. "Now that I'm in the club," he said with reference to his own injury, "my job is to increase awareness and funding for research." An expert lobbyist and longtime social activist, he averages more than 40 speaking engagements a year and has raised millions for his nonprofit organization, the Christopher Reeve Paralysis Foundation. Though his ceaseless quest for a cure has alienated some disability-rights activists (who see the goal as quixotic and completely unrelated to the day-to-day realities of disabled people), Reeve has remained adamant in his belief that a cure will be found: "Curing paralysis—which will happen, it's just a question of time—will be one of the greatest achievements in the history of science. It will even dwarf the landing on the moon."

—Martin F. Norden

SEEVES, Keanu

Films as Actor:

1986 Dream to Believe (Flying) (Paul Lynch) (as Tommy); Youngblood (Markle) (as Hooover); Act of Vengeance (Mackenzie—for TV) (as Buddy Martin); Under the Influence (Thomas Carter—for TV) (as Eddie Talbot); Babes in Toyland (Clive Donner—for TV) (as Alex/Jack Be Nimble); Brotherhood of Justice (Braverman—for TV) (as Derek); Young Again (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV) (as Michael Riley, age 17)

1987 River's Edge (Hunter) (as Matt)

1988 The Night Before (Eberhardt) (as Winston Connelly); The Prince of Pennsylvania (Nyswander) (as Rupert Marshetta); Permanent Record (Marisa Silver) (as Chris Townsend); Dangerous Liaisons (Fears) (as the Chevalier Danceny)

1989 Parenthood (Ron Howard) (as Tod); Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventure (Herek) (as Ted "Theodore" Logan)

1990 Tune in Tomorrow . . . (Aunt Julia and the Scriptwriter) (Amiel) (as Martin Loader); I Love You to Death (Kasdan) (as Marlon James)

1991 Bill & Ted's Bogus Journey (Hewitt) (as Ted "Theodore" Logan); My Own Private Idaho (Van Sant) (as Scott Favor); Point Break (Bigelow) (as Johnny Utah)

1992 Bram Stoker's Dracula (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Jonathan Harker)

1993 Much Ado about Nothing (Branagh) (as Don John); Little Buddha (Bertolucci) (as Siddhartha Gautama); Freaked (Hideous Mutant Freaks) (Winter and Tom Stern) (as Ortiz the Dog Boy, uncredited)

1994 Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (Van Sant) (as Julian Glitch); Speed (De Bont) (as Jack Traven)

1995 Johnny Mnemonic (Longo) (title character); A Walk in the Clouds (Arau) (as Paul Sutton); Children Remember the Holocaust (doc) (as host)

1996 Feeling Minnesota (Baigleman) (as Jjaks Clayton); Chain Reaction (A. Davis) (as Eddie)

1997 The Last Time I Committed Suicide (Ray) (as Harry); The Devil's Advocate (Hackford) (as Kevin Lomax)

1998 Me and Willie (Behr and Rose) (cameo)

1999 The Matrix (Wachowski brothers) (as Thomas Anderson/Neo)

2000 Sweet November (O'Connor) (as Nelson Moss); The Replacements (Deutch) (as Shane Falco); The Watcher (Charbanic) (as Griffin)

Publications

On REEVES: books—

On REEVES: articles—

For someone whose acting talents have been judged slight by a number of critics, Keanu Reeves has nonetheless attracted the interest of several distinguished film directors, from Bernardo Bertolucci to Stephen Frears, along with younger independents like Gus Van Sant, who have cast him in important roles. And for someone who might have sustained a major career in nothing but light comedies and action-adventure films, Reeves has often chosen parts that are far from standard Hollywood fare, from a bisexual street hustler who is also a modern-day Prince Hal to a very different prince, Siddhartha the Buddha. Since his great success as an action hero in Speed his roles have, to be sure, been more frequently mainstream, and in The Matrix, as a hero in virtual mode most of the time (not to mention his cool black trenchcoat in the climax), he has come closer to being a pure iconographic figure than almost any star before him.

Largely a Torontoan in upbringing and theatrical training, Reeves retained a youthful demeanor long enough to allow him to play troubled or airheaded teenagers well into his twenties. In one of his earliest starring roles, in The Prince of Pennsylvania, a film that veers uneasily between family melodrama and farce, Reeves typically has little vocal range: often he sounds as if he has a head cold, and for the most part looks rather blank. All the same, he seems perfectly cast as a disaffected youth of the 1980s, guarded and unrevealing of inner feelings, yet with occasional surprisingly playful or sarcastic moments. It is very far from a Method performance, as we can see most clearly by comparing him with his costar in a later film, My Own Private Idaho: here, every flicker of River Phoenix’s face registers some dream or torment, while Reeves, as the unforthcoming “Prince Hal,” the supposed best friend of Phoenix’s narcolept, remains masked. Is it Reeves or the character who is masked, we may ask, and in either case is there anything behind the facade? This may be either good acting or astute casting on Van Sant’s part for the role of a seemingly affectless modern youth.

In the case of Little Buddha, the question of acting ability seems almost irrelevant. Bertolucci too made an inspired choice in casting Reeves as Prince Siddhartha, if only for his sheer screen presence: he has the bearing of an Indian prince (or a movie star), with the handsomeness of an undefined nationality along with a seeming inwardness, to make the pageantlike historical segments of the film work brilliantly.

Playing livelier, more impetuous characters, Reeves makes more use of a boyish intensity, whether he is the hippie lover of Parenthood or a more aristocratic swain in Dangerous Liaisons. In the Bill and Ted comedies, Reeves shows far greater animation in his jovial goofiness than his truly blank costar, Alex Winter. Yet in certain roles where he must be a stock leading man (Bram Stoker’s Dracula) or where the director seems incapable of getting anything interesting out of the character (Johnny Mnemonic), Reeves is a virtual cipher. In A Walk in the Clouds his extremely reserved demeanor does work, even though the role calls for an old-fashioned heart-on-sleeve romantic warmth; perhaps because his performance is a striking contrast to the heated ones of his Hispanic and Italian costars, perhaps because the camera registers him as a genuine movie star, “the true prince,” the way Falstaff recognizes Hal by “instinct.”

In Speed Reeves gives a more nuanced performance, despite the formula role. Still exhibiting traces of his Valley Boy persona while playing a heroic cop, he brings a deliciously comic note to moments of suspense, as when Jack tries to calm a gunman who cannot recognize the larger peril of the boobytrapped bus: “I don’t know you, man. I’m not here for you. Let’s not do this. . . . I don’t care about your crime. Whatever you did, I’m sure (pause) that you’re sorry. So it’s cool now.” Most important, he also brings a combination of physical energy and enough animation of face and voice to suggest possibilities of true range in future film roles.

The promise remains to be fulfilled, though in The Devil’s Advocate he does give an unusually forceful performance as—quite literally—the title character, a smooth and confident Southern lawyer (sporting a mild Elvis accent) hired by the Prince of Darkness himself (Al Pacino) to work at a high-powered New York firm. Reeves succeeds in some courtroom speeches that call for an aggressiveness held in check, with an underlay of doubt or guilt, and he rises to moments of furious anger and horror as his character’s life comes apart, while always serving as a model of relative normality against Pacino in a flamboyant, wickedly comic performance.

Reeves has continued to support low-budget independent projects, such as The Last Time I Committed Suicide, in which he appears pale and puffy-faced in a supporting role as proto-beatnik Neal Cassady’s loser of a drinking buddy. Feeling Minnesota (a black comedy that rather pales in comparison to another saga of the Upper Midwest, Fargo) offers him an essentially passive role as an ex-con embroiled in a murderous plot involving his brother’s wife. Shy, wary, puzzled, his character does little but react to the more extreme behavior of others, notably Vincent d’Onofrio.

Passivity and wariness are the keywords too for what may well turn out to be his most defining role, as the Chosen One/Neo, in The Matrix. Neo is, of course, ultimately an action figure, with the classic American hero’s perfect blend of modesty and grim determination; but all the same, scene after scene calls for him simply to be astonished, while all the other characters speak in archly knowing, portentous tones. What is perhaps most significant about the role is not only that Reeves plays a character who leads a computer-enhanced life, but that Reeves’ own body is frequently computer-enhanced, most memorably as he dodges bullets and goes through “‘heightened’ martial arts movements. Theorists who have written about the absorption of the post-human body into the machine in films like the Robocop and Terminator series should have much to say about the virtual Keanu in The Matrix, a film in which a star’s riveting screen presence is not just partially a result of makeup and lighting (as has always been the case) but frequently a design on a computer grid.

—Joseph Milicia

REMICK, Lee

Los Angeles; 1982—signed for three-month Broadway run of Agnes of God, but was replaced by Elizabeth Ashley in dispute over creative differences; 1988—formed production company with James Garner and Peter Duchow; 1989—diagnosed with kidney and lung cancer.

Awards: Best Actress, Golden Globe Award, for Days of Wine and Roses, 1962; Golden Globe Award, for The Blue Knight, 1973; Best Actress, British Academy of Film and Television Arts, and Golden Globe Award, for Jennie: Lady Randolph Churchill, 1974; Prix Genie Award (Canada), for Tribute, 1980. Died: Of cancer, 2 July 1991.

Films as Actress:

1957 A Face in the Crowd (Kazan) (as Betty Lou Fleckum)
1958 The Long Hot Summer (Ritt) (as Eula Varner)
1959 These Thousand Hills (Fleischer) (as Callie); Anatomy of a Murder (Preminger) (as Laura Manion)
1960 Wild River (Kazan) (as Carol Baldwin)
1961 Sanctuary (Richardson) (as Temple Drake)
1962 Experiment in Terror (Kazan) (as Stella Black); The Europeans (Hustling) (as Maggie Stratton);
1963 The Running Man (Reed) (as Stella Black); The Wheeler Dealers (Hiller) (as Molly Thatcher)
1965 Baby the Rain Must Fall (Mulligan) (as Georgette Thomas); The Hallelujah Trail (Sherrwood) (as Kirsten)
1968 No Way to Treat a Lady (Smight) (as Kate Palmer); The Detective (Gordon Douglas) (as Karen Leland);
1969 Hard Contract (Pogostin) (as Sheila)
1971 A Severed Head (Dick Clement) (as Antonia Lynch-Gibson); Loot (Narizzano) (as Fay); Sometimes a Great Notion (Richardson) (as Julia); Touch Me Not (Swenson) (as Antonia Lynch-Gibson); And No One Could Save Her (Swenson) (as Francis Appleton)
1973 A Delicate Balance (Richardson) (as Julia); Theme (Hustling) (as Katherine Thorn)
1977 Telephone (Siegel) (as Barbara); The Ambassadors (Mulligan) (as Antonia Lynch-Gibson)
1978 The Medusa Touch (Gold) (as Dr. Zonfeld); Breaking Up (Mulligan) (as Maria Gostrey)
1979 The Europeans (Ivory) (as Eugenia); Torn between Two Lovers (Mulligan) (as Maria Gostrey)
1980 The Competition (Oliansky) (as Greta Vandemann); Tribute (Clint) (as Maggie Stratton); The Women’s Room (Clint) (as Mira Adams); Hawwire (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Frail)
1982 The Letter (Erman—for TV) (as Leslie Crobie)
1983 Montgomery Clift (Lynn—for TV) (as Montgomery Clift (Masenza—doc) (as interviewee)); A Gift of Love: A Christmas Story (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Janet Broderick)
1984 A Good Sport (Antonio—for TV) (as Michelle Tenney); Rearview Mirror (Antonio—for TV) (as Terry Seton)
1985 Toughlove (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Jan Charters)
1986 Of Pure Blood (Sargent—for TV) (as Alicia Browning); Emma’s War (Jessop) (as Anne Grange)

1988 The Vision (Norman Stone—for TV); Jesse (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Jesse Maloney)
1989 Bridge to Silence (Arthur—for TV) (as Marge); Dark Holiday (Passport to Terror) (Antonio—for TV) (as Gene LePere)

Publications

By REMICK: articles—

Interview in Films Illustrated (London), December 1975.

On REMICK: book—

On REMICK: articles—

* * *

Central to Lee Remick’s complex and fascinating screen presence during the first phase of her career is a sense of erotic warmth, an irreducible sensuality, capable (when combined with her remarkable gifts as an actress) of the most diverse inflections, depending on the degree to which it is allowed or denied free expression. Consider two of her finest performances, in the two finest films in which she appeared, made within a year of each other: Anatomy of a Murder and Wild River. The former is built upon the character’s sexual knowingness, seductiveness, promiscuity, the latter on the character’s sexual deprivation and subsequent reawakening. Preminger uses Remick’s sensuality as one aspect of his detailed, multifaceted exercise in sustained ambiguity: she plays a woman ready deliberately to exploit her attractiveness as a means of manipulation, yet the erotic charge she communicates is so strong that its genuineness is never in question. The character’s uninhibited sensuality, which might have been presented as merely degenerate (the Hollywood stereotype of the ‘‘nymphyomaniac’’), becomes in Remick’s performance engaging, oddly touching. Wild River seems easily Kazan’s best film, the only one in which his self-conscious pretensions to social significance are completely assimilated into a fully realized dramatic texture, and Remick’s performance as the young, uneducated, widowed mother is crucial to its success. In her earlier scenes, she movingly communicates a potential for life stifled by calamity and deprivation, above all by erotic starvation. She then beautifully realizes the gradual transition to rebirth, a rebirth at once sexual and spiritual, made possible by erotic starvation. She then beautifully realizes the gradual transition to rebirth, a rebirth at once sexual and spiritual, made possible by erotic starvation.

A similar opposition can be found in her two films for Blake Edwards. Her character in Experiment in Terror is relatively sketchy and conventional, but (as the object of terrorization by a psychopath) it is built upon the necessity for self-control. Days of Wine and Roses plays on the converse of this, and on the corollary of the overt, flamboyant sensuality of Anatomy of a Murder: the character’s surrender to alcoholic dissolution as an escape from the tensions and constraints of contemporary urban life.

Beginning particularly around the time of Remick’s 1970 move to London following her marriage to the British director William ‘‘Kip’’ Gowans, Remick faced the bane of so many ingenues turned mature women—a death of lead roles in major motion pictures. Over the next 21 years until her premature death in 1991 from cancer, the second phase of her career took her down the now-familiar path into television films and mini-series. Two of Remick’s best performances during this period were in mini-series that offered her challenging roles: 1974’s Jennie: Lady Randolph Churchill and 1987’s Nutcracker: Money, Madness, Murder. In the former, Remick fulfilled a long-time ambition by playing the title role, the American-born mother of Winston Churchill, and was triumphant in capturing the woman’s flamboyance and in portraying her from age 18 to 67. Remick (and the series) won universal critical praise, but especially in England where she earned an award from the British Academy. The based-on-fact Nutcracker provided Remick with another memorable role—Frances Schreuder, a narcissistic socialite who plots, with her eldest son, the murder of her father fearing he plans to cut her out of his multimillion dollar fortune. Remick perfectly embodies the cold-blooded Schreuder, never once showing her in a sympathetic light.

Remick certainly made the most of the dwindling opportunities presented to her in the 1970s and 1980s, almost always elevating the not-always top-notch material she was presented with, but her real-life portrayal of cancer patient was perhaps the most inspiring role of her career. Following her 1989 diagnosis, she not only faced the dread disease with courage but also spoke publicly and without hesitation about her illness, trying to impart hope to others similarly afflicted and earning a Cancervive Victory award in the process. Her death in July 1991 at age 55 cut short the career of one of classiest and most-respected actresses of her time.

—Robin Wood, updated by David E. Salamie

REY, Fernando

Films as Actor:

1936  Nuestra Natacha (Perojo) (extra)
1940  La gitana; Los cuatro Robinsons (The Four Robinsons) (Maroto)
1944  Eugenia de Montijo (Rubio); El rey que rabió
1945  Los últimos de Filipinas (Román); Misión blanca; Tierra sedienta (Gil)
1946  La Próvida (Gil) (as José)
1947  Reina Santa (Gil) (as Infante Alfonso); La Princesa de los Ursinos; Don Quixote de la Mancha (Gil) (as Sanson Carrasco); Fuentovejuna (Román); Noche de Reyes (Lucía)
1948  Locura de amor (The Mad Queen) (Orduña) (as Don Felipe el Hermoso); Si te hubieses casado con migo (Tourjansky)
1949  Las aventuras de Juan Lucas (Gil)
1950  Augustine de Aragón (Orduña); Mare nostrum (Gil) (as Ulises)
1951  Cielo negro (Mur-Oti); La Señora de Fátima (Gili) (as Eusebio); Esa pareja feliz (That Happy Pair) (Bardem and García Berlanga)
1952  ¡Bienvenido, Mr. Marshall! (Welcome, Mr. Marshall!) (Bardem and García Berlanga) (as narrator); Cómicos (Comedians) (Bardem); La laguna negra (Castillo)
1953  Rebeldía (Conde); El Alcalde de Zalamea (Maesso); Aeropuerto (Lucía); Cabaret (Manzanos)
1954  Marcelino, pan y vino (The Miracle of Marcelino) (Vajda); Tangier Assignment (Leversuch) (as inspector)
1955  Un marido de ída y vuelta (Lucía)
1956  Faustina (de Heredia); El amor de Don Juan (Berry) (title role); Una aventura de Gil Blas (Jolivet); Marcelino (Vajda) (as Brother Moderno); Pantaloon (Berry) (as Don Inigo)
1957  La venganza (Vengeance) (Bardem) (as Forastero); Les Bijoutiers au clair de lune (The Night Heaven Fell; Heaven Fell That Night) (Vadim)
1958  Culpables (Castillo); Les habitantes de la casa deshabitada (Ramirez); Parque de Madrid (Salaberry)
1959  Sonatas (Las aventuras del Marques de Bradomin) (Bardem) (as Capt. Casares); Operación Relampage; Las dos y media
1960  Fabiola (Blasetti); Los últimos días de Pompeya (The Last Days of Pompeii) (Bonnard) (as High Priest); Don Lucio y el harmano pío (Conde); A las cinco de la tarde (Bardem); Teresa de Jesús (Orduña); La rivolta degli schiavi (The Revolt of the Slaves; Die Sklaven Roms) (Malasomma) (as Valerio)

1961  Viridiana (Buñuel) (as Don Jaime); Goliat contra los gigantes (Goliath against the Giants) (Malatesta) (as Bokan)

1962  Schéhérazade (La Schiava di Bagdād) (Gaspard-Huit and Bourdon); Rogelia (Gil); La cara del terror (Face of Terror; Face of Fear) (Ferry) (as Dr. Charles Taylor); Tierra brutal (The Savage Guns) (Carreras) (as Don Hernán)

1963  El espontánes (Grau) (as Painter); Dios eligió sus viajeros (Ozones); The Ceremony (Harvey) (as Sanchez); The Running Man (Reed) (as police official); El valle de las espadas (The Castilian; Valley of the Swords) (Setó) (as Ramiro II)

1964  Los palomas (Gomes); El señor de la salle (Amadorí); La nueva cenicienta (Sherman); Echappement libre (Backfire; Scappamento aperto) (Jean Becker)

1965  España insolita; Misión Lisboa (Demicheli); Zampó y yo (Lucía); Cartas boca arriba (Cards on the Table) (Franco); The Amazing Dr. G (Simonelli); Totó de Arabia (Totó d’Arabia) (de la Loma); Due mafiosi contra Goldginger (Dos de la Mafia) (Simonelli); Cartes sur table (Attack of the Robots) (Franco)

1966  Don Quixote (Rim); Dulcinea del Toboso; Das Vermachtnis des Inka (El Ultimo Rey de los Incas; Viva Gringo; Zevetut na Inkata) (Marischka) (as President Castillo); Campanadas a medianoche (Chimes at Midnight; Falstaff) (Welles) (as Worcester); Los jueces de la Biblia (Dolz and Baldí); El hijo del Pistolero (Son of a Gunfighter) (Landres) (as Don Fortuna); Return of the Seven (Kennedy) (as priest); El Greco (Salce) (as King Philip II)

1967  Un dollaro a testa (Navajo Joe) (Corbucci) (as Parson Rattigan); Robo de diamantes (Run Like a Thief) (Glasser) (as Col. Romero); Le Vicomte règle ses comptes (The Viscount) (Cloche) (as Marco Demoigne); Más allá de las montañas (Beyond the Mountains; The Desperate Ones) (Ramati) (as Ibram); Amor en el aire (Amadorí) (as Saldíez)

1968  Villa Rides (Kulik) (as Col. Fuentes); Le Avventure e gliamorni di Miguel Cervantes (The Young Rebel; Cervantes; Les
Aventures extraordinaires de Cervantes (Sherman) (as Philip II); I Grande condottieri (Gideon and Sampson) (Baldi) (as the stranger); Une Histoire immortelle (The Immortal Story) (Welles—for TV) (as merchant)

1969 Candidato per un assassino (Un sadario a la medida; Candidate for a Killing) (Elorrieta); Guns of the Magnificent Seven (Wendkos) (as Quintero); Fellini Satyricon (Fellini); Il Prezzo del potere (The Price of Power) (Valerii) (as Pinkerton); El libro del buen amor (Marcos) (as voice)

1970 Land Raiders (Day of the Landgrabbers) (Juran) (as priest); ¡Vamos a matar, compañeros! (Compatriots) (Corbucci) (as Prof. Xantos); The Adventurers (Lewis Gilbert) (as Jaime Xenos); Tristan (Buñuel) (as Don Lope); Muerte de un presidente (Valerii); Los frios ojos miedo (Castellari); Historia de una tración (Conde); Courtada en disco rojo (I due volti della paura) (Demicheli)

1971 La cólera del viene (Camus and Colizzi) (as Don Antonio); La Lac del fin del mondo (The Light at the Edge of the World) (Billington) (as Capt. Moriz); The French Connection (Friedkin) (as Alain Charnier); A Town Called Hell (A Town Called Bastard) (Parrish) (as blind farmer); Bianco, rosso e . . . (The White Sister; The Sin) (Lattuada) (as chief physician)

1972 La ducha (Gil); Chicas de club (Grau); Le Charme discret de la bourgeoisie (The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie) (Buñuel) (as Ambassador Raphael Acosta); Questa specie d’amore (Bevilacqua)

1973 Antony and Cleopatra (Charlton Heston) (as Lapidus); La Chute d’un corps (Palac); Senso unico (One Way) (Mauceri); Zanna bianca (White Fang) (Fulci); La polizia incrinrma, la legge assolve (High Crime) (Castellari); Tarot (Forqué); Pena de muerte (Grau); El mejor alcalde, el Rey (Gil)

1974 Dites-le avec des fleurs (Grimblat) (as Jacques); La Femme aux bottes rouges (The Lady with the Red Boots; The Women with the Red Boots) (Juan Buñuel) (as Perrot); Fatti di gente perbene (La Grande Bourgeoisie; The Murri Affair; Drama of the Rich) (Bolognini) (as Augusto Murri); Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia (Aliprandi)

1975 Cadaveri eccellenti (Illustrious Corpses) (Rosi) (as Minister of Security); French Connection II (Frankenheimer) (as Alain Charnier); Pasqualeino Settebelleze (Seven Beauties; Pasqualino: Seven Beauties) (Wertmüller) (as Pedro); Il Contesto; Existio Otra Humanidad? (Marcos—doc)

1976 Le désert des Tartares (Il deserto dei Tartari; The Desert of the Tartars) (Zurlini) (as Nathanson); Strip-Tease (Lorente); A Matter of Time (Minnelli) (as Charles van Maar); Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg) (as Cuban president)

1977 Elisa, Vida mia (Elisa, My Love) (Saura) (as Elisa’s father); Cet obscur objet de désir (That Obscure Object of Desire) (Buñuel) (as Mathieu)

1978 Uppdragnet (The Assignment) (Arehn) (as Roberto Bidara); Dulce Piel de Mujer (Honey) (Angelucci)

1979 Quinet (Altman) (as Grigor); Le Dernier amant romantique (The Last Romantic Lover) (Jaeckin) (as Max); L’Ingorgo (Traffic Jam; Bottleneck) (Comencini) (as Carlo); Caboblanco (J. Lee Thompson) (as Tereda)

1980 El Crimen de Cuenca (Miro)

1981 Tragala, pervo (Artero); La vera storia della signora delle Camelle (Bolognini); Casta e para (Sampieri)

1982 Cercasi Gesù (Comencini) (as Don Filippo); Estrangeira (Grilo); Monsignor (Perry) (as Santoni); Pablo Picasso Pintor (Rossi) (as voice); Bekenntnisse des Hochstaplers Felix Krull (Sink— for TV)

1983 Bearn a la Sala de Munecas (Chavarri)

1984 The Hit (Frears) (as Chief Inspector); Un Amour interdit (Dougnac); Elogia della pazzia di desiderio erasmo (Aquare)

1985 Padre Nuestro (Our Father) (Regueiro) (as Cardinal); Rustler’s Rhapsody (Wilson) (as railroad colonel); El Caballero del dragon (Colomo) (as Fray Lupo); Black Arrow (John Hough—for TV)

1986 Saving Grace (Robert M. Young) (as Cardinal Stefano Biondi); Tiempo de silencio (Aranda); Hotel du paradis (Bokova) (as Joseph); Mi General (My General) (de Arminian) (as Adm. Comesana)

1987 El Bosque encantado (The Enchanted Forest) (Cuerda) (as Mr. d’Abondo)

1988 Captain James Cook (Clark—for TV); Diario de invierno (Requeiro) (as Father); Moon over Parador (Mazursky) (as Alejandro); Pasdobole (Sanchez) (as Don Nuno); El Tunel (The Tunnel) (Drove) (as Allende); El aire de un crimen (Isasi-Issasmendi); Esmeralda Bay (Franco) (as Ramos)

1989 La bataille des trois rois (The Battle of Three Kings; Tambores de fuego; Drums of Fire) (Barka) (as Papa)

1990 Diceria dell’intore (The Plague Sowers; A Breath of Life) (Cino) (as doctor); Naked Tango (Schrader) (as Judge Torres); A Breath of Life (Cino)

1991 La Vida Luctve (The Milky Life) (Esterlich)

1992 1492: The Conquest of Paradise (Ridley Scott) (as Friar); One Way (Mauceri) (as chief)

1993 Al Otro Lado del Tunel (At the Other End of the Tunnel; The Other Side of the Tunnel) (de Arminian); Madregilda (Regueiro)

Publications

By REY: articles—

“Fernando Rey y la generosidad de los actores,” interview with F. Sánchez, in Cine (Mexico), March 1979.

On REY: book—

Cebollada, Pascual, Biografia y peliculas de Fernando Rey, Barcelona, 1992.

On REY: articles—

The cinema has produced a number of distinguished collaborations in which one senses a very special relationship between director, actor, and character: one thinks of Fellini and Mastroianni in La dolce vita and 8½, of Bergman and von Sydow in the period from The Seventh Seal to Shame, of Ozu and Chishu Ryu through a long sequence of films. Such a relationship clearly existed between Luis Buñuel and Fernando Rey, and it is for his work with Buñuel that Rey is justly celebrated.

The precise nature of the director/actor/character relationship needs to be defined with care and delicacy: it is clearly different from case to case, and seldom a simple matter of the actor ‘representing’ the director within the narrative. That description is perhaps closest to the truth in the case of Fellini and Mastroianni, and furthest from it in that of Buñuel and Rey. Superficially, it might even appear that Buñuel used Rey to depict precisely the kind of character toward which he has always been antagonistic—the wealthy bourgeois-capitalist patriarch. Yet for all his attacks on the bourgeoisie, Buñuel always had the honesty to acknowledge his own membership in it, and as he entered old age (the precise point where Rey enters his work) the acerbity of his films became increasingly mellowed by compassion and generosity. Rey’s characters are always presented critically, they are always ‘wrong’; but Buñuel’s point about them is that they cannot be right, that their entrapment in social structures and social conditioning is irreversible. So, while they are treated ironically and without sentimentality, Buñuel’s love for them, rooted in a fellow feeling that derives doubtless from their age, is beyond dispute.

Rey’s conservative Don Jaime in Viridiana, complexly associated with sexual repression, classical music, and emotional depth, commits suicide, making way for his illegitimate son, ‘progressive,’ promiscuous, opportunistic, and shallow. Both Tristana and Cet obscur objet de désir develop, painfully and sympathetically, a theme established in Viridiana, the elderly man’s erotic and masochistic obsession with a beautiful young woman. Paradoxically, Le Charme discret de la bourgeoisie gives him the most monstrous characteristics yet extends to him the most explicit forgiveness: he, of all the characters, at the end of the film is allowed to enjoy a meal undisturbed. The forgiveness entails three conditions: he eats because he is hungry, not to enact a reassuring bourgeois ritual; he sends his servant to bed and gets the food himself; he has just dreamed of the hungry, not to enact a reassuring bourgeois ritual; he sends his servant to bed and gets the food himself; he has just dreamed of the

In addition to his seminal work with Buñuel, Rey also had a number of fine performances for other noteworthy directors: Juan Antonio Bardem and Luis García Berlanga (Bienvenido, Mr. Marshall! and Esa pareja feliz), Orson Welles (Chimes at Midnight), Lina Wertmüller (Seven Beauties), and Carlos Saura (Elisa, My Love, for which Rey won a best actor award at Cannes). But the role for which he is best known in the United States was his smooth French drug kingpin, Alain Charmier, in William Friedkin’s worldwide smash The French Connection. Unfortunately, aside from his reappearance as Charner in John Frankenheimer’s excellent sequel French Connection II, Hollywood rarely handed Rey such juicy roles in which he could showcase his talent. The last two decades of his career until his death in 1994 pushed his number of film appearances over 150 but did not generate much of note. Rey did, however, in 1992 have a very well received lead role as Don Quixote in a critically acclaimed Spanish television series.

—Robin Wood, updated by David E. Salamie

REYNOLDS, Burt

Nationality: American. Born: Waycross, Georgia, 11 February 1936. Education: Attended Florida State College; Palm Beach Junior College. Family: Married 1) the actress Judy Carne, 1963 (divorced 1965); 2) the actress Loni Anderson, 1988 (divorced 1994), one adopted son. Career: Football player with the Baltimore Colts; 1958—actor at Hyde Park Playhouse, New York; 1959–60—in TV series Riverboat; 1961—on Broadway in Look, We’ve Come Through; film debut in Angel Baby; 1962–65—in TV series Gunsmoke, and in Hawk series, 1966, and Dan August series, 1970–71; 1976—directed first film, Gator; 1990–94—in TV series Evening Shade. Awards: Outstanding Lead Actor in a Comedy Series Emmy Award, 1991, for Evening Shade; Best Supporting Actor, Online Film Critics Society, 1997; Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics Circle, Best Supporting Actor, National Society of Film Critics, Best Supporting Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, all 1997, and Best Supporting Actor, Golden Satellite Awards, Best Supporting Actor, Golden Globes, and Best Supporting Actor, Chicago Film Critics Association, all 1998, all for Boogie Nights.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Angel Baby</td>
<td>(Wendkos) (as Hoke Adams); Armored Command (Haskin) (as Skee)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Operation C.I.A.</td>
<td>(Nyby) (as Mark Andrews)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Un dollaro a testa</td>
<td>(Navajo Joe) (Corbucci) (as Joe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Fade-In</td>
<td>(Iron Cowboy) (Taylor) (as Rob)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Impasse</td>
<td>(Pat Morrison); 100 Rifles (Gries) (as Yaqui Joe); Sam Whiskey (Laven) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Hunters Are for Killing</td>
<td>(Girard—for TV); Run, Simón, Run (McGowan—for TV) (title role); Skulduggery (Gordon Douglas) (as Douglas Temple); Shark (Maneater; Un Arma de dos filos) (Fuller) (as Caine)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Fuzz</td>
<td>(Colla) (as Det. Steve Carella); Deliverance (Boorman) (as Lewis); Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Sex but Were Afraid to Ask (Wooden Allen) (as Switchboard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Shamus</td>
<td>(McCoy); White Lightning (Sargent) (as Gator McClusky); The Man Who Loved Cat Dancing (Sarafian) (as Jay Grobart)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Longest Yard</td>
<td>(Aldrich) (as Paul Crewe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>W. W. and the Dixie Dancekings</td>
<td>(Avildsen) (as W. W. Bright); At Long Last Love (Bogdanovich) (as Michael Oliver Pritchard III); Hustle (Aldrich) (as Lt. Phil Gaines); Lucky Lady (Donen) (as Walker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Silent Movie</td>
<td>(Mel Brooks) (as himself); Nickelodeon (Bogdanovich) (as Buck Greenaway)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Smokes and the Bandit</td>
<td>(Needham) (as Bandit); Semi-Tough (Ritchie) (as Billy Clyde Puckett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Hooper</td>
<td>(Needham) (as Sonny Hooper)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1979
Starting Over (Pakula) (as Phil Potter)
Rough Cut (Siegel) (as Jack Rhodes); Smokey and the Bandit II (Needham) (as Bandit)

1980
The Cannonball Run (Needham) (as J. J. McClure); Paternity (Steinberg) (as Buddy Evans)

1981
The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas (Higgins) (as Sheriff); Best Friends (Jewison) (as Richard Babson)

1982
The Man Who Loved Women (Edwards) (as David); Stroker Ace (Needham) (title role); Smokey and the Bandit III (Lowry) (as the real Bandit)

1983
The Cannonball Run II (Needham) (as J. J. McClure); City Heat (Richard Benjamin) (as Mike Murphy)

1986
Uphill All the Way (Dobbs) (as poker player)

1987
Heat (Richards) (as Nick “Mex” Escalante); Malone (Cokliss) (as Richard Malone)

1988
Switching Channels (Kotcheff) (as John L. Sullivan IV); Rent-a-Cap (London) (as Tony Church); The Story of Hollywood (Gosling—for TV) (as narrator)

1989
Physical Evidence (Michael Crichton) (as Joe Paris); Breaking In (Forsyth) (as Ernie Mullins); All Dogs Go to Heaven (Bluth—animation) (as voice of Charlie)

1990
Modern Love (Benson) (as Col. Parker); A Day in the Life of Wood Newton (Thomason)

1992
The Player (Altman) (as himself)

1993
Cop and a Half (Henry Winkler) (as Nick McKenna)

1995
The Maddening (Danny Huston)

1996
Precious; Striptease (Andrew Bergman) (as Congressman Dilbeck); Trigger Happy (Bishop) (as “Wacky” Jacky Jackson); Frankenstein and Me (Tinell) (as Les Williams); Cherokee Kid (Barclay for TV) (as Otter Bob)

1997
Meet Wally Sparks (Baldwin) (as Lenny Spencer); Raven (Solberg) (as Jerome Katz, a.k.a. Raven); Bean (Mel Smith) (as Gen. Newton); The Story of Bean (Edwards for TV) (as himself); Boogie Nights (Anderson) (as Jack Horner)

1998
Crazy Six (Pyun) (as Dakota); AFI’s 100 Years . . . 100 Movies (doc—for TV) (as himself); Universal Soldier II: Brothers in Arms (Woolnough for TV) (as Mentor/CIA Director); Universal Soldier III: Unfinished Business (Woolnough for TV) (as Mentor/GR88)

1999
The Hunter’s Moon (Weinman) (as Clayton Samuels); Big City Blues (Fleury) (as Connor); Hard Time: The Premonition (Cass, Sr. for TV) (as Det. Logan McQueen); Hard
Films as Actor and Director:

1976  Gator (as Gator McLusky)
1978  The End (as Sonny Lawson)
1982  Sharky’s Machine (as Sharky)
1985  Stick (title role)
1993  The Man from Left Field (for TV) (as Jack)
1998  Hard Time (for TV) (as Det. Logan McQueen)

Publications

By REYNOLDS: books—

Seminole Seasons: Florida State’s Rise to the National Title, with Bruce Chadwick, Dallas, Texas, 1994.

By REYNOLDS: articles—

On REYNOLDS: books—

On REYNOLDS: articles—

Hanson, Steve, Patricia King Hanson, and Pat H. Broeske, “Ruling Stars,” in Stills (London), June/July 1985.

Quipster Burt Reynolds was a wise guy stud whose sexy insolence snowballed into box-office magic. For a film star who sprangboarded to fame via talk show appearances (independent of the merits of his screen work), Reynolds was a true media sensation whose celebrity now rests on off-guard sightings on tabloid-television programs. Cocksure on the surface, but inwardly peeved about the failure of several television series, the young Reynolds was a product of the waning days of Hollywood studio training programs. What he mainly learned as a contract actor was that on-the-job acting lessons were good but that playing a half-breed on Gunsmoke was bad. His gridiron days as football star, ending with a crippling knee injury, stood him in good stead when he became the prime symbol of macho knockabout in the American cinema of the 1970s. What set Reynolds apart (as he must have sensed when he posed nude for Cosmopolitan magazine), was a teasing sexuality that endeared him to ladies just as his quick-tempered brawling made him a hit with men.

A long time in coming, stardom hit Reynolds when he was already the darling of late night television shows. Concurrently sending critics in search of superlatives, Deliverance brought him the best notices of his career for his well-rounded exploration of destructive machismo, but this was not the Burt the public hankered for. Consolidated by the boffo business registered by an unheralded road picture, Reynolds’s stardom made him the first good ol’ boy megastar. After Smokey and the Bandit, Reynolds reigned as King of the Road in a parallel universe of CB radios, monster trucks, and trailer lifestyles. Admirably never downgrading his shit-kickin’ fans, Reynolds tried to broaden his range beyond the drive-in set but never courageously or farsightedly enough. Escalating his antics as a loose cannon and slapstick humorist, he proved himself as a comedy lead in slapped-together enterprises such as The Cannonball Run, Reynolds rode the crest of the box office but seemed trapped in a country-western ghetto. His bad boy image never seemed mature enough to fit comfortably with traditional private eye role models; his cynicism seemed like a pose not an existential outcry. By the time he foisted Heat, Malone, and Physical Evidence on an unwaiting world, the tough-as-nails detective demeanor seemed more soft than hard-boiled.

For some reason, the off-the-cuff wit and bedroom eyes-flirting that delighted insomniacs during his talk show interviews did not translate to big-screen appeal in a series of lightweight but strained romantic comedies: Paternity, Switching Channels, and Best Friends. For a time, the razor-sharp satire, Semi-Tough, and the slick caper flick, Rough Cut, showed glimmers of Reynolds’s bantering sexiness but his Manly Folk Hero of the Movies and his Class Cut-Up on television never comfortably coexisted. Perhaps he had a longer ride at the top than his talent deserved. On television, career resuscitation arrived in the form of the ‘gosh-darnin’ Evening Shade, but a series of on-set tantrums rocked his world followed by news of ugly irreconcilable differences stemming from his divorce from Velveta Cheesecake, Loni Anderson. Having given him his start, the vast television wasteland reclaimed him.

Unlike his studio contract buddy, Clint Eastwood, who aged gracefully and sexily into the love interest of Bridges of Madison County, Reynolds has toupéed and plastic surgeried himself almost beyond recognition. (Not since Robert Taylor dyed his hair jet black has a famous leading man failed so totally at stopping the clock.) No doubt, his touted comeback opposite Demi Moore in Striptease can only be considered a stopgap measure. Perhaps comedies may bring respite but Reynolds no longer has the self-possessed good looks to unseat Schwarzenegger, Stallone, and dozens of up-and-comers who have usurped his place in the overcrowded action-movie meat market. The truth is that Reynolds has always been a television star; that hillbilly hero film career now seems like an aberration.

—Robert Pardi

REYNOLDS, Debbie

Films as Actress:

1948 June Bride (Windust) (as Boo’s girl friend)
1950 The Daughter of Rosie O’Grady (Butler) (as Maureen O’Grady); Three Little Words (Thorpe) (as Helen Kane); Two Weeks with Love (Rowland) (as Melba Robinson)
1951 Mr. Imperium (Hartman) (as Gwen)
1952 Singin’ in the Rain (Donen and Kelly) (as Kathy Selden); Skirts Ahoy! (Lanfield) (as herself)
1953 I Love Melvin (Weis) (as Judy Leroy); The Affairs of Dobie Gillis (Weis) (as Pansy Hammer); Give a Girl a Break (Donen) (as Suzy Doolittle)
1954 Susan Slept Here (Tashlin) (as Susan); Athena (Thorpe) (as Minerva Mulvain)
1955 Hit the Deck (Rowland) (as Carol Pace); The Tender Trap (Walters) (as Julie Gillis)
1956 The Catered Affair (Richard Brooks) (as Jane Hurley); Bundle of Joy (Taurog) (as Polly Parrish); Meet Me in Las Vegas (Viva Las Vegas) (Rowland)
1957 Tammy and the Bachelor (Pevney) (as Tammy)
1958 This Happy Feeling (Edwards) (as Janet Blake)
1959 The Mating Game (George Marshall) (as Marietta Larkin); Say One for Me (Tashlin) (as Holly); It Started with a Kiss (George Marshall) (as Maggie); The Gazebo (George Marshall) (as Nell Nash)
1960 The Rat Race (Mulligan) (as Peggy Brown); Pepe (Sidney) (as guest)
1961 The Pleasure of His Company (Seaton) (as Jessica Poole); The Second Time Around (Sherman) (as Lucretia)
1963 How the West Was Won (Hathaway, Ford, and Marshall) (as Lilith Prescott); My Six Loves (Champion) (as Janice Courtney); Mary, Mary (LeRoy) (title role)
1964 The Unsinkable Molly Brown (Walters) (title role); Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli) (as George)
1966 The Singing Nun (Koster) (as Sister Ann)
1967 Divorce American Style (Yorkin) (as Barbara Harmon)
1968 How Sweet It Is! (Paris) (as Jenny)
1971 What’s the Matter with Helen? (Harrington) (as Adelle Bruckner)
1972 Charlotte’s Web (Nichols and Takamoto) (as voice of Charlotte)
1974 That’s Entertainment! (Haley Jr.) (as narrator)
1975 Sadie and Jon (Moxey—for TV)
1989 Perry Mason: The Case of the Musical Murder (Nyby—for TV) (as Amanda Cady)
1992 The Bodyguard (Jackson) (as herself); Battling for Baby (Art Wolff—for TV)
1993 Heaven and Earth (Stone) (as Eugenia); Jack L. Warner: The Last Mogul (Gregory Orr—doc)
1994 That’s Entertainment! III (Friedgen and Sheridan) (as host)
1996 Mother (Albert Brooks)
1997 Wedding Bell Blues (Lustig) (as herself); In & Out (Oz) (as Bernice Brackett)
1998 Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas (Gilliam) (as voice of herself); Zack and Reba (Bettauer) (as B. Blanton); Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer: The Movie (Kowalchuk) (as voice of Mrs. Santa Claus); Halloweentown (Dunham—for TV) (as Aggie Cromwell); The Christmas Wish (Barry—for TV) (as Ruth) 1999 Keepers of the Frame (McLaughlin) (as herself); A Gift of Love: The Daniel Huffman Story (Korty) (as Shirlee Allison)

Publications

By REYNOLDS: books—

On REYNOLDS: books—

On REYNOLDS: articles—

“‘The Reynolds Rap,’” in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), no. 8, February 1993.
Debbie Reynolds may have been crowned Miss Burbank of 1948, but the qualities she brought to her movie debut that same year were more those of the cheerleader than the beauty queen. Her ebullient girlishness hit exactly the right note in the musicals and comedies which became her staple, and her popularity was so immediate that she was given starring roles while still a novice. Her early parts did not vary much, but her charm was so effortless that she could nudge a movie into the next higher notch of entertainment by the sheer force of enthusiasm. Her singing and dancing were no more than competent yet she was repeatedly cast in musicals, perhaps because her sprightly and buoyant character so readily lent itself to the musical’s unreal milieu.

Her gifts as a mimic, mined more thoroughly in the nightclub acts of her later career, are already in evidence in the delightful I Love Melvin, as is her inherent sense of comedy timing. She shows precocious skills as a farceur in such films as The Affairs of Dobie Gillis and Susan Slept Here, when the script requires only that she be adorable.

Her zeal began to seem a bit forced in The Tender Trap, The Catered Affair, and A Bundle of Joy. A slurpy sentimentality crept into her vehicles, beginning with Tammy and the Bachelor. She could be theatrical and obvious in The Gazebo, How the West Was Won, and Mary, Mary. Still, her talents remain formidable. Witness her popular star turn as The Unsinkable Molly Brown, a role she played on screen and stage. And when she allows herself an offbeat role, as in the witty What’s the Matter with Helen?, the results can be agreeably loopy.

Reynolds’s career of late has not focused on feature filmmaking. Since the 1970s, she has led a crusade to restore and preserve the objects and real estate of Hollywood history, including buildings, costumes, posters, and props. She also has assembled an impressive collection of vintage movie memorabilia. These activities have made her one of the most respected citizens of Hollywood. Professionally, her career has been relegated almost exclusively to the stage and club dates, and to her appearances in two aerobic exercise videotapes. She also wrote an autobiography, Debbie: My Life.

Still, her beauty and exuberance merely await the right screen role. Having acquitted herself so admirably with Gene Kelly in Singin’ in the Rain when she was no more than 19, what might she be capable of now?

—Frank Thompson, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

RICHARDSON, Miranda

Nationality: British. Born: Lancashire, England, 3 March 1958. Education: Studied acting at the Bristol Old Vic Drama School. Family: Married to and divorced from the actor Rowan Atkinson. Career: Began her career appearing with a small theater in Manchester, England, late 1970s; toured in repertory, then moved to London and began appearing in stage and TV productions, early 1980s; earned raves for her debut screen role in Dance with a Stranger, 1985; appeared as Queen Elizabeth I on the popular BBC series The Black Adder, 1986; furthered her reputation as a world-class actress by giving three award-caliber performances, in Damage, The Crying Game, and Enchanted April, 1992. Awards: Royal Television Society Best Actress Award, for Sweet as You Are, 1987; Best Supporting Actress British Academy Award, for Damage, 1992; Best Performance by an Actress in a Motion Picture-Comedy/Musical Golden Globe, for Enchanted April, 1992; New York Film Critics Circle Best Supporting Actress, for Damage, Enchanted April, and The Crying Game, 1992; National Board of Review Best Actress, for Tom & Viv, 1994; Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role in a Series, Mini-Series or Motion Picture Made for TV Golden Globe, for Fatherland, 1994. Agent: Kerry Gardner, 15 Kensington High Street, London W8 5NP, England.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>A Woman of Substance (Sharp—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Paula)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Dance with a Stranger (Newell)</td>
<td>(as Ruth Ellis); The Innocent (Mackenzie) (as Mary Turner); Underworld (Transmutations) (Pavlou) (as Oriel); The Death of the Heart (Hammond—for TV) (as Daphne Hecomb)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Empire of the Sun (Spielberg)</td>
<td>(as Mrs. Victor); Eat the Rich (Peter Richardson) (as DHSS Blond); After Pilkington (Morahan—for TV) (as Penny); Sweet as You Are (Angela Pope—for TV) (as Julia Perry)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Black Adder’s Christmas Carol (Boden—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Queen Elizabeth/ Asphyxia)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>El Sueno del Mono Loco (The Mad Monkey; Twisted Obsession) (Trueba) (as Marilyn); Ball-Trap on the Cote Sauvage (Jack Gold—for TV) (as Early Bird)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Mio Caro Dr. Graessler (The Bachelor) (Faenza) (as Frederica/The Widow)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Enchanted April (Newell) (as Rose Arbuthnot); The Crying Game (Neil Jordan) (as Jude); Damage (Malle) (as Ingrid)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Century (Poliaxoff) (as Clara); The Line, the Cross, and the Curve (Kate Bush—short) (as mysterious woman); Old Times (for TV) (as Anna)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>The Night and the Moment (Tato) (as Julie); Tom &amp; Viv (Gilbert) (as Vivienne Haigh-Wood); Fatherland (Menaul—for TV) (as Charlie Maguire)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Kansas City (Altman) (as Carolyn Stilton); Evening Star (Harling) (as Patsy Carpenter); Swann (Gyles) (as Sarah Maloney)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Saint-Ex (Tucker) (as Consuelo de Saint-Exupery); The Designated Mourner (Hare) (as Judy); The Apostle (Duvall) (as Tootsie); A Dance to the Music of Time (Morahan, Rakoff—for TV mini-series) (as Pamela Fliton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>St. Ives (Hook) (as Miss Gilchrist); The Scold’s Bride (Thacker) (as Dr. Sarah Blakeney); Merlin (Barron—for TV) (as Queen Mab, Lady of the Lake); Ted &amp; Ralph (Geron— for TV) (as Henrietta Blough-Pendleton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>The Miracle Maker (Hayes, Sokolov—for TV) (as Mary Magdelene); Johnny Hit and Run Pauline (Lellos); The James Bond Story (for TV) (doc) (as Narrator); Alice in Wonderland (Willing—for TV) (as Queen of Hearts); The King and I (I) (as voice of Anna Leonowens); Jacob Two Two Meets the Hooded Fang (Bloomfield) (as Miss Fowl); The Big Brass Ring (Hickenlooper) (as Dinah Pellarin); Sleepy Hollow (Burton) (as Lady Van Tassle)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Blackadder Back and Forth (Weiland) (as Lady Elizabeth/Queen Elizabeth); Chicken Run (Lord, Peck) (as voice of Mrs. Tweedy); Get Carter (Kay)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By RICHARDSON: article—

On RICHARDSON: articles—

Nineteen ninety-two certainly was Miranda Richardson’s year. She dazzled movie audiences by giving eye-popping performances as three very different characters. Any actress would have been delighted to earn attention for any one of these roles. The fact that she scored a trifecta is especially impressive.

Richardson is blessed with the chameleon-like ability to completely transform her appearance from role to role; if you look at stills from her various films, you will find it hard to connect all of the characters depicted in each as being played by the same person. Richardson can play characters out of different eras, characters who are victims and victimizers, characters who are soft or tough, all with equal aplomb. Her three 1992 releases are Neil Jordan’s The Crying Game, in which she plays a cold-blooded Irish Republican Army terrorist; Mike Newell’s Enchanted April, in which she is an emotionally repressed Englishwoman who is one of a quartet who rents a picturesque Italian villa for a month; and Louis Malle’s Tom & Viv, in which she is the wife of a high-powered member of Parliament, who is betrayed when he enters into a liaison with their son’s girlfriend. Richardson might have earned Oscar nominations for any one of these roles but she was cited for Damage, in the Best Supporting Actress category. In this film, she has never been better as her character reacts upon realizing the full extent of her husband’s infidelity.

Prior to 1992, Richardson was best-known to moviegoers for her star-making performance in Newell’s Dance with a Stranger. This based-on-fact melodrama is set during the 1950s, with the actress playing Ruth Ellis, a divorcee and prostitute turned nightclub manager who was found guilty of murdering her lover and became the last woman ever to be hanged in England. And she has offered fine performances in films not nearly as hyped as her 1992 releases. In The Bachelor, a subtle, thoughtful story of repressed emotion, Richardson even plays two roles. The first is Frederica, the unmarried longtime companion of her staider, middle-aged doctor-brother (Keith Carradine). As the film opens, Frederica seems bored, even disturbed. It is no surprise, then, that she promptly commits suicide. Richardson reappears later in the story as the last of several women with whom the doctor comes in contact. She is The Widow, a tacitless, gossipy woman with the brattiest of daughters this side of The Children’s Hour—and a character totally unlike Frederica.

Richardson was to further her standing as an actress willing to play fiercely complicated characters, picking up another Oscar nomination, this one as Best Actress, for Tom & Viv. The film is an austere, up-close-and-personal drama detailing the relationship between two deeply intertwined personalities: the writer-poet T. S. Eliot (Willem Dafoe) and his deeply troubled wife, Vivienne Haigh-Wood (Richardson). The two meet in 1914, and court in what seems like record time. But none of Viv’s relatives informs Tom that she suffers from what her concerned brother calls “women’s troubles . . . a shameful family secret.” She is a fragile, delicate soul who actually is afflicted with a hormonal imbalance. Tom & Viv may love each other passionately, but end up being akin to two trains speeding down two vastly different tracks.

The second half of the 1990s found Richardson busily appearing in television and theatrical films. Among her highest-profile roles was the kidnapped socialite in Robert Altman’s Kansas City; this easily was her best part of the period. She made an all-too-brief appearance as a radio station receptionist in Robert Duvall’s The Apostle, and was a wealthy Texas divorcée in Robert Harling’s The Evening Star, an ill-advised sequel to Terms of Endearment. She played Lady Van Tassel in Tim Burton’s Sleepy Hollow, and was one of three characters in David Hare’s The Designated Mourner, more a filmed reading of Wallace Shawn’s play than a full-blown screen adaptation. While a welcome presence in all these films, none of her parts matched those she played earlier in the decade.

All of Richardson’s best roles have been united in that they are psychologically complex. She is at her strongest when playing individuals who, either because of their own inner demons or the manner in which they have been treated by others, are forced to deal with deep, unrelenting emotion. One hopes that, in the future, she will find similar parts that fully utilize her considerable talent.

—Rob Edelman

RICHARDSON, (Sir) Ralph

Films as Actor:

1933 The Ghoul (Hunter) (as Nigel Hartley); Friday the Thirteenth (Saville) (as schoolmaster); Java Head (Ruben) (as William Ammond)
1934 The Return of Bulldog Drummond (Summers) (as Hugh Drummond); The King of Paris (Raymond) (as Paul)
1935 Bulldog Jack (Forde) (as Morell)
1936 Things to Come (Menzies) (as the Boss)
1937 The Man Who Could Work Miracles (Mendes) (as Col. Winstanley); Thunder in the City (Gering) (as Manningdale); South Riding (Saville) (as Robert Carne)
1938 The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan) (as Lord Mere); The Citadel (King Vidor) (as Denny)
1939 Q Planes (Clouds over Europe) (Whelan) (as Maj. Hammond); Smith (Browne); The Four Feathers (Korda) (as Capt. John Durance); The Lion Has Wings (Powell, Hurst, and Brunel) (as Wing Commander)
1940 Health for the Nation (doc) (as narrator); On the Night of the Fire (Hurst) (as Will Kobling)
1942 The Day Will Dawn (The Avengers) (French) (as Lockwood)
1943 The Silver Fleet (Wellesley and Sewell) (as Jaap Van Leyden)
1944 The Volunteer (Powell and Pressburger—doc) (as himself)
1946 School for Secrets (Ustinov) (as Prof. Heatherville)
1948 Anna Karenina (Duuvier) (as Alexei Karenin); The Fallen Idol (Reed) (as Baines)
1949 The Heiress (Wyler) (as Dr. Austin Sloper)
1951 Outcast of the Islands (Reed) (as Capt. Lingard)
1952 The Sound Barrier (Breaking the Sound Barrier) (Lean) (as John Richfield); The Holly and the Ivy (O’Ferrall) (as the Rev. Martin Gregory)
1955 Richard III (Olivier) (as Duke of Buckingham)
1956 Smiley (Kimmins) (as Rev. Lambeth); The Passionate Stranger (Box) (as Roger Wynter/Sir Clement)
1960 Our Man in Havana (Lean) (as “C”); Oscar Wilde (Ratoff) (as Sir Edward Carson); Exodus (Preminger) (as Gen. Sutherland)
1961 The 300 Spartans (Maté) (as Themistocles)
1962 Long Day’s Journey into Night (Lumet) (as James Tyrone)
1964 Woman of Straw (Dearden) (as Charles Richmond)
1965 Dr. Zhivago (Lean) (as Alexander Gromeko)
1966 Khartoum (Dearden) (as Gladstone); The Wrong Box (Forbes) (as Joseph Finsbury)
1967 Chimes at Midnight (Campanadas a medianoche; Falstaff) (Welles) (as narrator)
1969 Midas Run (A Run on Gold) (Kjellin) (as Henshaw); The Bed Sitting Room (Lester) (as Lord Fortnum of Alamein); Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Sir Edward Grey); The Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (as Minister); The Looking Glass War (Piercy) (as Leclerc)
1970 Eagle in a Cage (Cook) (as Sir Hudson Lowe); David Copperfield (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Mr. Micawber)
1971 Who Slew Auntie Roo? (Harrington) (as Mr. Benton)
1972 Tales from the Crypt (Francis) (as Crypt Keeper); Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland (Miller—for TV) (as Caterpillar); Lady Caroline Lamb (Bolt) (as George III)
1973 Frankenstein—The True Story (Smight—for TV) (as Lacey); O Lucky Man! (Anderson) (as Sir James Burgess/Monty); A Doll’s House (Losey) (as Dr. Rank)
1975 Rollerball (Jewison) (as Senator)
1976 The Man in the Iron Mask (Newell—for TV) (as Cardinal Richelieu)
1978 Watership Down (Rosen—as voice); No Man’s Land (Hall—for TV) (as Hirst)
1981 Time Bandits (Gilliam) (as The Supreme Being); Early Days (Page—for TV) (as Kitchen); Dragonslayer (Robbins) (as Ulrich); Witness for the Prosecution (Gibson—for TV)
1982 Wagner (Palmer—for TV) (as Pfi)
1984 Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan (Hudson); Give My Regards to Broad Street (Webb)
1985 Invitation to the Wedding (Brooks) (as Uncle Willie)

Film as Director:

1952 Home at Seven (+ ro as David Preston)

Publications

On RICHARDSON: books—

On RICHARDSON: articles—

* * *

Of the triumvirate of great British twentieth-century actors—John Gielgud, Laurence Olivier, and Ralph Richardson—only Richardson has enjoyed a screen career as long and as prolific as any film personality. As actress Barbara Jefford has commented, “He was always a wonderfully flexible film performer—better in many ways than Gielgud or Olivier.” Thanks to a long-term contract he became a familiar figure in British films—“my film career had always been in the hands of Korda,” Richardson said after the producer’s death. “Korda looked after me.” Yet the majority of Richardson’s films are instantly forgettable. He began his screen career in an atrocious Boris Karloff vehicle, The Ghoul, which did nothing to enhance either actor’s reputation, and did not obtain a decent screen role until Things to Come some three years later.

Things to Come features Richardson as the Hitler-Mussolini style Boss of a futuristic world crippled by wars. It was followed by The Man Who Could Work Miracles, in which the actor played an eccentric judge, and The Citadel, in which Richardson again played an eccentric, this time drunken Dr. Denny. He was rapidly becoming a major young British character actor, and at the same time getting a reputation for eccentricity in which he delighted. In later years he would ride around London on a motorbike with a parrot on his shoulder, and keep a pet ferret which he washed each week in Lux soap suds.

With South Riding, Richardson graduated from character actor to leading man, a position enhanced by his performances in The Four Feathers and Anna Karenina. But he was aging fast, and by the time Richardson made his Hollywood debut in The Heiress, he was old enough to play Olivia de Havilland’s father, Dr. Austin Sloper, in this adaptation of the Henry James classic. Elegant and refined, Richardson destroys his daughter’s one chance at love in a performance that is, unquestionably, the first of his two great American screen roles.

Because Richardson accepted so many film roles, the bulk of his work seems minor and unimpressive. One can only ponder why he took parts in such unimportant features as The 300 Spartans, Woman of Straw, Midas Run, Tales from the Crypt, or Rollerball. Perhaps Korda’s death in 1959 robbed the actor of the guidance he needed in his screen work. Only one other Hollywood feature gives Richardson a role equal to his talent, that of James Tyrone in Long Day’s Journey into Night, a part to which he brings a strength of character and a sorrow strangely lacking from Laurence Olivier’s highly regarded stage performance.

From the late 1950s onwards, Richardson’s film roles were small, and yet each production was enhanced by his appearance, described by Kenneth Tynan as a “unique physical presence, at once rakish and stately, as of a pirate turned prelate.” Richardson’s eccentricity spilled over into his screen work, notably in The Time Bandits, in which, as the Supreme Being, he wears a three-piece suit and looks as if he had just wandered on to the set directly from the street, mumbling his lines and appearing totally confused.

—Anthony Slide

ROBARDS, Jason

Films as Actor:

1959 The Journey (Litvak) (as Paul Kedes)
1961 By Love Possessed (John Sturges) (as Julius Penrose); Tender Is the Night (Henry King) (as Dick Diver)
1962 Long Day’s Journey into Night (Lumet) (as James Tyrone)
1963 Act One (Schnary) (as George S. Kaufman)
1965 A Thousand Clowns (Coe) (as Murray Burns)
1966 A Big Hand for the Little Lady (Big Deal at Dodge City) (Cook) (as Henry Drummond); Any Wednesday (Miller) (as John Cleaves)
1967 Divorce American Style (Yorkin) (as Nelson Downes); Hour of the Gun (John Sturges) (as Doc Holliday); The St. Valentine’s Day Massacre (Corman) (as Al Capone)
1968 The Night They Raided Minsky’s (Friedkin) (as Raymond Paine); Isadora (The Loves of Isadora) (Reisz) (as Paris Singer); C’era una volta il West (Once upon a Time in the West) ( Leone) (as Cheyenne)
1970 Tora! Tora! Tora! (Fleischer) (as Gen. Walter C. Short); Julius Caesar (Burge) (as Brutus); Fools (Gries) (as Matthew South); The Ballad of Cable Hogue (Peckinpah) (as Cable Hogue); Operation Snafu (Situation Normal All Fouled Up; Rosolino paterno, soldato . . .) (Loy)
1971 Murders in the Rue Morgue (Hessler) (as Cesar Charron); Johnny Got His Gun (Trumbo) (as Joe’s father)
1972 The War between Men and Women (Shavelson) (as Stephen Kozlenko); The Execution (Badiyi); The House without a Christmas Tree (Bogart—for TV)
1973 Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid (Peckinpah) (as Lew Wallace)
1975 Mr. Sycamore (Kohner) (as John Gwilt); A Boy and His Dog (L. Q. Jones) (as Lew Craddock); Die Hinrichtung (Badiyi); A Moon for the Misbegotten (for TV)
1976 All the President’s Men (Pakula) (as Ben Bradlee)
1977 Julia (Zinnemann) (as Dashiell Hammett)
1978 Comes a Horseman (Pakula) (as Ewing); A Christmas to Remember (Englund—for TV) (as Daniel Larson)
1979 Hurricane (Troell) (as Capt. Bruckner); Caboblanco (J. Lee Thompson) (as Gunther Berkdorff)
1980 Raise the Titanic! (Jameson) (as Admiral James Sandecker); Melvin and Howard (Jonathan Demme) (as Howard Hughes); Haywire (Tuchner—for TV) (as Leland Hayward)
1981 The Legend of the Lone Ranger (Fraker) (as President Grant)
1982 Burden of Dreams (Blank—doc)
1983 Max Dugan Returns (Ross) (title role); Something Wicked This Way Comes (Clayton) (as Charles Halloway); The Day After (Meyer—for TV) (as Dr. Russell Oakes)
1984 Sakharov (Gold—for TV) (title role); America and Lewis Hine (Rosenblum—doc)
1985 The Long Hot Summer (Cooper—for TV) (as Will Varner); The Atlanta Child Murders (Ermann—for TV)
1986 Johnny Bull (Weill—for TV); The Last Frontier (Wincer—for TV) (as Ed Stennig)
1987 Laguna Heat (Langton) (as Wade Shepard); Square Dance (Home Is Where the Heart Is) (Petrie) (as Dillard)
1988 The Good Mother (Nimoy) (as Muth); Bright Lights, Big City (Bridges) (as Alex Hardy, uncredited); L’Ami Retrouvé (Reunion) (Schatzberg) (as Henry Strauss); The Christmas Wife (David Hugh Jones—for TV); Breaking Home Ties (Wild—forg TV); Inherit the Wind (David Greene—for TV) (as Henry Drummond)
1989 Dream a Little Dream (Rocco) (as Coleman Ettinger); Parenthood (Ron Howard) (as Frank Buckman); Black Rainbow (Hodges) (as Walter Travis)
1990 Quick Change (Franklin and Bill Murray) (as Chief Rotzinger)
1991 The Perfect Tribute (Bender—for TV) (as Abraham Lincoln); Chernobyl: The Final Warning (Final Warning) (Page—for TV) (as Dr. Armand Hammer); Mark Twain and Me (Petrie—for TV) (as Mark Twain)
1992 Storyville (Frost) (as Clifford Fowler)
1993 The Trial (David Hugh Jones) (as Dr. Huld); Philadelphia (Jonathan Demme) (as Charles Wheeler); The Adventures of Huck Finn (Sommers) (as the King); Heidi (Rhodes—for TV) (as Grandfather)
1994 The Paper (Ron Howard) (as Graham Keighley); Little Big League (Scheinman) (as Thomas Heywood); The Enemy Within (Darby—for TV) (as Gen. R. Pendleton Lloyd)
1995 Journey (for TV) (as Marcus); My Antonia (Sargent—for TV); Crimson Tide (Tony Scott) (Admiral)
1996 The Great American West (Smoot) (as Narrator); A Thousand Acres (Moorehouse) (as Larry Cook)
1998 Heartwood (Cotler) (as Logan Reester); The Irish in America: Long Journey Home (Lennon and Zonwinder—mini for TV) (as voice); The Real Macaw (Andreacchio) (as Grandpa Ben Girdis); Beloved (Demme) (as Mr. Bodwin); Enemy of the State (Tony Scott) (as Congressman Philip Hammersley)
1999 Magnolia (Paul Thomas Anderson) (as Earl Partridge)
2000 Going Home (Barry—for TV) (as Charles Barton)

On ROBARDS: articles—

* * *

Jason Robards’s acting career began in the 1950s on the New York stage, where he was quickly hailed as the definitive interpreter of the playwright Eugene O’Neill. His triumphant success in a 1956 revival of O’Neill’s The Iceman Cometh prompted the playwright’s widow Oona to allow her husband’s autobiographical Long Day’s Journey into Night, which the author had refused to let be staged during his lifetime, to receive its Broadway premiere in 1959, with Robards as star.

To the general public, however, Robards is known more for his films roles—and for his highly publicized 1961 marriage to the actress Lauren Bacall following the death of her first husband, the legendary Humphrey Bogart. The two were divorced in 1973.

Anatole Litvak’s The Journey, with Deborah Kerr and Yul Brynner, launched Robards’s film career, which, unlike his stage career, has often brought him more criticism than acclaim. In films such as John Sturges’s Hour of the Gun, as Doc Holliday, and Sergio Leone’s Once upon a Time in the West, as a mercenary gunslinger, Robards’s character is treacherous, unattached, and inaccessible; his minimal dialogue subtly conceals his violent nature. Just as often, however, Robards has a tendency to invest his film performances with a too-broad theatricality. His wildly over-the-top Al Capone in The St. Valentine’s Day Massacre is a good case in point. The role, for which the slim, WASPish Robards was also physically miscast, was originally slated for Orson Welles.

In interviews, Robards often refers to his role as the loner symbol of America’s pioneer and entrepreneurial spirit in Sam Peckinpah’s The Ballad of Cable Hogue as one of his favorites. The highly anticipated film, following on the heels of Peckinpah’s groundbreaking The Wild Bunch, was not a commercial success, largely due to Robards’s gruff and grating interpretation of the character, who keeps losing our sympathy when he is most trying to gain it. The actor gave a much more human, and sympathetic, performance for Peckinpah as the doomed protagonist of the writer-director’s * Noon Wine*, a television adaptation of Katherine Anne Porter’s haunting short story.
Robards is at his best on screen when either he, the director, or both keeps his scenery chewing in check. As evidence of this, he won Academy Awards for Best Supporting Actor in 1976 and again in 1977 for two of his most restrained screen performances—as Washington Post editor Ben Bradlee in Alan J. Pakula’s All the President’s Men and as the writer Dashiell Hammett in Fred Zinneman’s Julia. Given the alcoholic Hammett’s brooding, self-destructive nature, the latter role gave Robards plenty of opportunities to engage in extravagan histrionics, but the tight rein he held on himself resulted in a Hammett that is both warm and likable. Robards received his last Academy Award nomination (so far) for his whimsical portrayal of billionaire-recluse Howard Hughes in Jonathan Demme’s Melvin and Howard.

Though now in his seventies, Robards maintains a busy schedule on stage, television, and in the movies—his most notable recent role that of the villain in Jonathan Demme’s AIDS drama Philadelphia.

—Rob Winning, updated by John McCarty

ROBBINS, Tim

Nationality: American. Born: Timothy Francis Robbins in West Covina, California, 16 October 1958; son of the folksinger Gil Robbins, of The Highwaymen. Family: Longtime companion of the actress Susan Sarandon, sons: Jack Henry, Miles Guthrie. Education: Attended State University of New York at Plattsburgh; University of California, Los Angeles, graduated 1981; studied French with the actor George Bigot of the Theatre du Soleil. Career: Began acting with the Theatre for the New City, an avant-garde theater, 1970; co-founded The Actor’s Gang, an avant-garde theater company, later becoming its artistic director, 1981; made short film for TV’s Saturday Night Live, which was later to serve as the inspiration for Bob Roberts, 1986; with Adam Simon, wrote the play Carnage, performed at Actor’s Gang, Tiffany Theater, California; established his own independent company, HAVOC Productions, 1988. Awards: Best Actor at Cannes Festival, British Academy Award nomination for Best Actor, Golden Globe Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture-Comedy/Musical, for The Player, 1992; Bronze Award at the Tokyo International Film Festival, and Golden Globe nomination for Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture-Comedy/Musical, for Bob Roberts, 1992; Volpi Award for Best Ensemble Cast, Venice Film Festival, for Short Cuts, 1993; Screen Actors Guild Award nomination, Outstanding Performance by a Male Actor in a Leading Role, for The Shawshank Redemption, 1994; Academy Award nomination for Best Director, Golden Globe nomination for Best Screenplay-Motion Picture, Humanitas Prize from the Human Family Educational & Cultural Institute, Golden Bear nomination and Prize of the Ecumenical Jury, Prize of the Guild of German Art House Cinemas, and Reader Jury of the ‘Berliner Morgenpost,’ for Dead Man Walking, 1995. Agent: William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1992 Bob Roberts (+ title ro, sc, mus)
1995 Dead Man Walking (+ sc, pr)
1999 Cradle Will Rock (+ sc, co-pr)

Other Films:

1996 The Typewriter, the Rifle & the Movie Camera (Simon) (doc) (as Himself)

Publications

By ROBBINS: books—

By ROBBINS: articles—

Tim Robbins

Interview in Playboy (Chicago), February 1995.
``Between Ethics and Politics: An Interview with Tim Robbins,'' interview with R. Grundmann and C. Lucia, in Cineaste (New ``Unser Justizsystem ist unfair,’’ interview with M. Kohler, in *Film &
TV Kameramann* (Munich), April 1996.
``‘Cradle’ Robbins,’’ interview with Annalee Ellingson, in *Box Office

On ROBBINS: articles—

Silberg, J., “Close-up: Tim Robbins,’” in American Film (Los Angesles), November 1988.
Kroll, Jack, “Two Coast Man,’’ in Newsweek (New York), 12
November 1990.
Maslin, Janet, “Critic’s Notebook: At Cannes, Tim Robbins Proves Ansen, David, “The Man of the Moment,’’ in Newsweek (New Kopkind, Andrew, “A Player Ups the Ante,’’ in Premiere (New Frankel, M., “The Cutest Serious Person in Showbiz,’’ in *Movieline
(Los Angeles), October 1992.
Kelleher, E., “Robbins’ ‘Dead Man Walking’ Probes Death Row,’’ in Film Journal (New York), January 1996.
Pede, R., and P. Frans, “Dead Man Walking.’’ In Film en Televise + Video (Brussels), March 1996.
Calderale, M., “Filmografie,” in Segnocinema (Vincenza, Italy), May/June 1996.
Kirkland, Bruce, “‘All Hands Off Robbins’ Cradle,’” in Toronto Sun, 19 May 1999.

* * *

Tim Robbins took two giant steps forward in 1992. Not only did he have the primary role in one of the year’s most talked-about films, Robert Altman’s The Player—a film featuring a who’s who of Hollywood royalty in cameo appearances—but he also wrote, directed, and starred in Bob Roberts, a pungent political satire structured as a mockodocumentary.

Before the release of The Player and Bob Roberts, Robbins had been appearing on-screen for almost a decade. After playing small roles in several films and even surviving the debacle of Howard the Duck, he came to critical attention in Five Corners, playing the pacificist, socially committed Harry Fitzgerald—a character who closely mirrors the actor’s offscreen concerns—and Bull Durham, cast as Ebby Calvin “Nuke” LaLoosh, fireballing minor league hurler with “a million-dollar arm, but a five-cent head.” Robbins effectively adds a devilish but ultimately mindless frat-boy air to pacifistic, socially committed Harry Fitzgerald—a character who has discovered that Broken Dove, Roberts’s organization, has been connected with failed savings and loans, drug smuggling, and more. Indeed, one of the messages in Bob Roberts, telegraphed by Robbins, is simple and clear: Think before you vote. The film—which came to movie houses during a presidential election year—is a cautionary tale about the need for substance and candor in American politics, and political campaigns. It reflects the progressive political concerns of Robbins and his longtime companion, Susan Sarandon (who appears in the film in a cameo role).

Robbins went on to direct two additional films during the 1990s. The first, Dead Man Walking, was one of the decade’s most thoughtful and sensitive Hollywood films. The last, Cradle Will Rock, was something else altogether. Dead Man Walking is the riveting account of Sister Helen Prejean (Sarandon, in an Oscar-winning performance), a Catholic nun who ministers to Matthew Poncelet (Sean Penn), a convicted murderer on death row. It is to the film’s great credit that both sides of the issue of capital punishment are soberly presented. Poncelet may be a brutal killer, but he still is a human being, and Robbins asks a question that is worth contemplating: Will justice truly be served if a killer is put to death? Yet at the same time, Robbins ponders the plight of the killer’s victims and their loved ones, whose lives have been irrevocably shattered. The very real anguish endured by the victims’ families is an integral part of the story, as much a facet of the film as the complex, evolving relationship between Sister Helen and Poncelet. Indeed, in an era in which casual on-screen violence is omnipresent, Dead Man Walking is one of the rare few films that spotlight the aftermath of violence, and its effects on individuals.

Cradle Will Rock, meanwhile, is not so much a film as a political pamphlet. It is set in the New York of the mid-1930s and focuses on a series of fact-based events, from Nelson Rockefeller’s commissioning Mexican artist Diego Rivera to paint a mural in Rockefeller Center to Orson Welles’s staging the Federal Theater Project production of The Cradle Will Rock, Marc Blitzstein’s agitprop musical. Robbins recreates a time when federal financing of the arts allowed for the creation of probing, vital, politically relevant artworks. In Cradle Will Rock, the Orson Welles character talks of the “church of the theater” and declares, “I want angry, lust-filled theatergoers.” Yet this fervent period was short-lived. Robbins offers the point of view that the “cultural elite” pays for art, so the “cultural elite” feels it has the right to control the content of art. Furthermore, the government will not support works of art that are thinly veiled attacks on corporate and personal greed, or depict the rich as decadent capitalists and the blue collar masses as their victims. In Cradle Will Rock, the wealthy are stuff-shirts and right-wing hypocrites obsessed with weeding out communists in the Federal Theater Project, while at the same time supplying Hitler and Mussolini with the raw materials that scant years later would be used to kill American soldiers on Europe’s battlefields. At the finale, spirited theater workers perform an impromptu version of Blitzstein’s play, while in a parallel sequence the rich attend a fancy costume ball, acting as if they are intimates of Marie Antoinette in 18th-century France.

Cradle Will Rock fails not because it is unabashedly pro-union, pro-worker, or pro-artistic freedom. At first it is dramatically flat and uninvolving, with oodles of characters frenetically parading across the screen. Then it becomes a drawn-out affair, with the events in its story painted in broad, obvious strokes. Ultimately, the film is all artifice, with its issues and characters presented in a clichéd manner. Those to the right—as embodied by a prim, holier-than-thou anti-Communist named Hazel, who agrees to snitch on her fellow theater workers—are unhappy and sexually repressed. Conversely, those to the left are portrayed as members of a lusty peasant proletariat who revel in their sexuality and constantly dance, sing, and celebrate “life.”

While establishing himself as a director, Robbins continues to accept acting roles, and is not incapable of playing sympathetic characters. He is especially good in Jacob’s Ladder, acting the role of a psychologically scarred Vietnam veteran; I.Q., as a garage mechanic who falls in love with the niece of Albert Einstein; and The Shawshank Redemption, cast as a soft-spoken banker-accountant locked up in jail for decades after being falsely convicted of murdering his wife and her lover. He also can play the wide-eyed innocent. In The Hudsucker Proxy, a wicked satire of corporate greed and bureaucracy, he is bright-eyed Norville Barnes—the name of a character right out of a Preston Sturges satire. Norville, fresh out of the Muncie College of Business Administration, comes to New York to work in the mailroom of a fabulously successful conglomerate and promptly becomes a pawn in a scheme concocted by the company founder-and-president’s venal right-hand man.

Now that Robbins’s stature in the industry allows him to handpick his roles, his most interesting parts have been in films with a social conscience at their core. These films either depict individuals wronged by a viciously unfair bureaucracy (The Shawshank Redemption), or individuals who will use and abuse power within political, social, or economic systems that have gone sour (The Player, Bob Roberts, The Hudsucker Proxy).

In the latter half of the 1990s, Robbins appeared on screen in a comedy—Nothing to Lose, playing a stressed-out, cuckolded yuppie—and a conspiracy thriller—Arlington Road, cast as a straight-arrow suburbanite who might be a terrorist. Yet continues to be more defined by his work behind the camera.

—Rob Edelman

ROBERTS, Julia

Films as Actress:

1988 Blood Red (Masterson—produced in 1986) (as Maria Collogero); Satisfaction (Girls of Summer) (Freeman) (as Daryle Shane); Baja Oklahoma (Roth—for TV); Mystic Pizza (Petrie) (as Daisy Arujo)
1989 Steel Magnolias (Ross) (as Shelby Eatenton Latcherie)
1990 Pretty Woman (Garry Marshall) (as Vivian Ward); Flatliners (Schumacher) (as Rachel Mannus)
1991 Dying Young (Schumacher) (as Hillary O’Neil); Hook (Spielberg) (as Tinkerbell); Sleeping with the Enemy (Ruben) (as Sara Waters/Laura Burney)
1992 The Player (Altman) (cameo)
1993 The Pelican Brief (Pakula) (as Darby Shaw)
1994 I Love Trouble (Shyer) (as Sabrina Peterson); Ready to Wear (Prêt-à-Porter) (Altman) (as Anne Eisenhower)
1995 Something to Talk About (Hallstrom) (as Grace)
1996 Mary Reilly (Fears) (title role); Michael Collins (Neil Jordan) (as Kitty Kiernan); Everyone Says I Love You (Allen) (as Vonnie “Von” Seidel)
1997 My Best Friend’s Wedding (Hogan) (as Julianne ‘‘Jules’’ Potter); Conspiracy Theory (Donner) (as Alice Sutton)
1998 In the Wild (Cole—for TV) (as herself); Stepmom (Columbus) (as Isabel Kelly)
1999 Notting Hill (Michell) (as Anna Scott); Runaway Bride (Marshall) (as Maggie Carpenter)
2000 Erin Brockovich (Soderbergh) (title role)
A meteoric rise to fame is the classic Hollywood dream and one to which many young and talented actors still aspire. Despite the fact that the American film industry no longer has the studio star system of Dream Factory days, the phenomenal success of a star such as Julia Roberts is testimony to the enduring importance of film stardom for audiences and as an organizing factor for the film industry economy. It is, however, an oversimplification to describe Roberts’s stardom as a case of name recognition followed by commercial success, taking $70 million within its first six weeks, was greeted by only mediocre reviews by the critics. Another moral tale celebrating traditional values and highlighting Roberts’s image of youthful and wholesome vitality combined with vulnerability and sexual allure, this film secured Roberts’s positioning as one of the leading stars of the 1990s.

With a rumored $10 million per movie in 1991, Roberts really seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. “As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.

Roberts is certainly not the first Hollywood star to find the pressure of fame too much to cope with. Comparisons were quickly made with the likes of Monroe and Taylor—sometimes with sympathy and sometimes with an unkind relish. Roberts and the ideals she stood for seemed, if only temporarily, too perfect, too real, too young. “As everyone had it, she seemed to look like the girl who had it all—looks, talent, success, and money. Such an early success, however, also seems to warrant the enormous pressure of coming to fame too quickly and too young. As we begin talking, it’s abundantly clear that Julia Roberts distrusts journalists,” wrote Robert Palmer in 1990. This inherent tension with media would continue to worsen when her last-minute cancellation of the wedding to actor Kiefer Sutherland in 1991 was widely exploited by reporters all over the world. Her sudden marriage to and subsequent divorce from singer Lyle Lovett proved to be equally sensational for the press.
Runaway Bride) into mega-hits, while burnishing the careers of her male co-stars with her own glow. What made these romantic comedies fascinating was that Roberts didn’t shy away from lending these sketchy characters a touch of the emasculator. Unlike her earlier hit, Something to Talk About, in which she’s a victim redressing wrongs, Roberts’ recent roles comprised screwed-up screwballs, who harked back to Claudette Colbert and her wicked teasing of Gary Cooper in Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife. In My Best Friend’s Wedding, her vacillating careerist tried to win back an ex-fiancé as if he were a luxury item she coveted; in Notting Hill, her movie goddess wreaked havoc on a bookseller by expecting him to treat her as an ordinary gal-pal while exhibiting diva-like behavior; in The Runaway Bride she jilted grooms on a regular basis. Underlying Hollywood comedies’ usual behavioral text (about the regrouping of mismatched lovers) was a subtext of willfulness that only Roberts could make palatable. In all these and in the true-life saga, Erin Brockovich, she was never less than radiant. As a comic force, she’s less daffy than merely hard-headed. Like a modern-day Goldilocks, Roberts’ screen persona fussily keeps searching for the bed that’s just right.

In the expansive role of Erin Brockovich, Roberts illuminated the unflappable spirit of a hard-pressed working mom, whose flashy clothes cue the wrong responses from selfish men and jealous women. Watching this tailor-made vehicle, one could see why she became the first female to earn 20 million per picture. Unfazed by a venal power company, unimpressed by arrogant lawyers, and unapologetic about fulfilling herself through her work, her crusading character rode roughshod over anyone who stood in the way of justice. Although her character refused to kowtow to conventional notions of propriety, Roberts emerged as likeable as ever.

Balancing serious roles with crowd-pleasing farces, Roberts has chosen wisely, yet one senses untapped depths. A superb TV guest spot as a villainess on Law and Order showcased the self-absorbed side of her personality. She remains Hollywood’s most bankable female star; in 2000, Forbes Magazine listed her as the most powerful woman in show business.

—Margaret O’Connor, updated by Guo-Jun Hong, further updated by Robert J. Pardi

ROBERTSON, Cliff

Films as Actor:

1943 We’ve Never Been Licked (Fighting Command) (Rawlins) (as Adams); Corvette K-225 (Rosson)
1955 Picnic (Logan) (as Alan)
1956 Autumn Leaves (Aldrich) (as Burt Hanson)
1957 The Girl Most Likely (Leisen) (as Pete)
1958 The Naked and the Dead (Walsh) (as Hearn)
1959 Gidget (Wendkos) (as Kahoona); Battle of the Coral Sea (Wendkos) (as Lt. Cmdr. Jeff Conway)
1960 As the Sea Rages (Haechler) (as Clements)
1961 All in a Night’s Work (Anthony) (as Warren Kingsley Jr.); Underworld, U.S.A. (Fuller) (as Tolly Devlin); The Big Show (Clark) (as Josef Everard)
1962 The Interns (Swift) (as Dr. John Paul Otis)
1963 My Six Loves (Champion) (as the Rev. Jim Larkin); PT 109 (Martinson) (as John F. Kennedy); Sunday in New York (Tewksbury) (as Adam Tyler)
1964 The Best Man (Schaffner) (as Joe Cantwell); 633 Squadron (Grauman) (as Wing Cmdr. Roy Grant)
1965  Masquerade (Dearden) (as David Frazer); Up from the Beach (Parrish) (as Sgt. Edward Baxter); Love Has Many Faces (Singer) (as Pete Jordan)

1967  The Honey Pot (Mankiewicz) (as William McFly)

1968  The Devil’s Brigade (Mclaglen) (as Maj. Alan Crown); Charly (Nelson) (title role); The Sunshine Patriots (Sargent—for TV)

1970  Too Late the Hero (Aldrich) (as Lt. Lawson)

1971  The Great Northfield Minnesota Raid (Kaufman) (as Cole Younger)

1973  The Man without a Country (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Philip Nolan); Ace Eli and Rodger of the Skies (Sampsom) (as Eli)

1974  Man on a Swing (Perry) (as Lee Tucker); A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Hardy—for TV)

1975  Out of Season (Bridges) (as Joe); Three Days of the Condor (Pollack) (as Higgins); My Father’s House (Segal—for TV)

1976  Return to Earth (Taylor—for TV) (as Buzz Aldrin); Obsession (De Palma) (as Michael Courtland); Midway (Smight) (as Cmdr. Carl Jessop); Shoot (Hart) (as Maj. Rex Jeanette)

1977  Fraternity Row (Tobin) (as narrator)

1978  Overboard (Newland—for TV); Dominique (Anderson) (as David Ballard)

1982  Two of a Kind (Roger Young—for TV) (as Frank Minor)

1983  Class (Carlino) (as Burroughs); Brainstorm (Trumbull) (as Alex Terson); Star 80 (Fosse) (as Jack Durman)

1985  Shaker Run (Morrison); The Key to Rebecca (Hemmings—for TV)

1986  Dreams of Gold: The Mel Fisher Story (Goldstone—for TV)

1987  Malone (Cokliss) (as Charles Delaney); Ford: The Man and the Machine (Eastman—for TV) (title role)

1990  Dead Reckoning (Robert Lewis—for TV) (as Dr. Daniel Barnard)

1991  Wild Hearts Can’t Be Broken (Miner) (as Dr. Carver)

1992  Wind (Ballard) (as Morgan Weld)

1995  Pakten (Risan)

1996  Escape from L.A. (John Carpenter); “With God On Our Side: The Rise of the Religious Right in America” (Skaggs and Van Taylor—mini for TV) (as Narrator)

1997  Melting Pot (Musca) (as Jack Durman)

1998  Assignment Berlin (Randel) (as Cliff Garret)

1999  Family Tree (Clark)

2000  March 2 (Hour of Valor) (Ray)

Films as Director:

1971  J. W. Coop (+ title role)

1979  The Pilot (+ co-sc, ro)

Publications

On ROBERTSON: articles—

* * *

A sturdy, interesting leading man and moderately versatile character actor/villain, Cliff Robertson played his most dramatic scenes thus far offscreen when he blew the whistle on Columbia president David Begelman for embezzlement. Although this led to his three-year blacklisting by the movie studios, Robertson weathered that particular storm, and is currently embarked on what is virtually a second movie career.

Initially, Joshua Logan, who had directed Robertson in the stage version of his Mister Roberts, provided him with his feature movie debut role in the film version of William Inge’s play, Picnic. Robertson plays the Kansan who loses Kim Novak to drifter William Holden. After appearing in a number of films of varying quality, Robertson attracted considerable attention when he was chosen by President John F. Kennedy to portray him in Leslie Martinson’s straightforward PT 109.

The group of films that followed were mostly routine, although his ruthless presidential candidate in Gore Vidal’s political melodrama, The Best Man, is both effective and memorable. Ralph Nelson’s Charly, however, in which Robertson portrays a retarded man whom a scientific experiment transforms to a genius and back again, gained him the Academy Award as Best Actor. Robertson had played the role on television in 1961 and purchased the rights to the material (Daniel Keyes’s novel Flowers for Algernon), ensuring his appearance in the film version. He also directed, scripted, produced and starred in the well-received 1972 film J. W. Coop, a character study of a dumb but cocky ex-convict rodeo cowboy. Despite this success, Robertson has only directed one other film, The Pilot, in which he also starred.

After a number of other films in the early 1970s, including supporting performances in two solid box-office hits, Midway and...
Three Days of the Condor, Robertson had few jobs for more than three years during his blacklisting. He resumed his career in the 1980s, however, with supporting roles in Douglas Trumbull’s Brainstorm and Bob Fosse’s Star 80 (portraying Playboy founder Hugh Hefner), among other film and television assignments. Robertson now seems well on his way back toward starring roles which call for quiet determination, evident authority, and understated intensity.

—Bill Wine, updated by Frank Uhle

ROBESON, Paul

Films as Actor:

1925 Body and Soul (Micheaux); Borderline (MacPherson)
1933 The Emperor Jones (Dudley Murphy) (as Brutus Jones)
1935 Sanders of the River (Bosambo) (Z. Korda) (as Bosambo)
1936 Song of Freedom (Wills) (as John Zinga); Show Boat (Whale) (as Joe)
1937 King Solomon’s Mines (Stevenson) (as Umbopa); Jericho (Dark Sands) (Freeland) (as Jericho Jackson); Big Fella (Wills) (as Joe)
1940 The Proud Valley (Tennyson) (as David Goliath)
1942 Native Land (Hurwitz and Strand—doc) (as narrator); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier) (as Luke) 1954 Das Lied der Ströme (Song of the Rivers) (Ivens—doc) (singing voice only)

Publications

By ROBESON: books—

Here I Stand, New York, 1958.
Paul Robeson, Tributes, Selected Writings, edited by Roberta Yancy Dent, New York, 1976.

By ROBESON: article—

‘‘The Culture of the Negro,’’ in Spectator, 15 June 1934.

On ROBESON: books—

On ROBESON: articles—

Rowan, Carl T., "Has Paul Robeson Betrayed the Negro?," in Ebony (Chicago), October 1957.
Fishman, George, "Paul Robeson's Student Days and the Fight against Racism at Rutgers," in Freedomways, Summer 1969.

* * *

Paul Robeson’s life story, of which his film career was a small and sadly underdeveloped component, is one of the great inspirations and tragedies of modern American history. An actor and singer of great presence and power, Robeson tried, often in vain, to find dignified roles for a black man in both American and British studios. With the exceptions of the African-American pioneer director Oscar Micheaux’s Body and Soul, the avant-garde Borderline, and the British Big Fella he was cast as either a subhuman or a super-leader with whom no one could identify. Nevertheless, Robeson was America’s Twentieth-Century Renaissance man: All-American athlete at Rutgers, Columbia law school graduate, political activist, bass-baritone, public intellectual, linguist, and actor. Born in 1898, he became famous in the mid-1920s for his roles in two Eugene O’Neill plays, All God’s Chillun Got Wings and The Emperor Jones. He repeated the latter role in the 1933 independently produced film version, and the play itself anticipates Robeson’s film career in several ways.

Like Robeson himself, Brutus Jones embarks on a journey of self-discovery. This southern black laborer becomes first a criminal and then the despot of a Caribbean Island. The transformation repeats itself through Robeson’s film career: severing ties with one world, he must adopt a new persona in another. Two years after making The Emperor Jones, in the Korda-produced Sanders of the River, Robeson played a petty thief who has left Liberia and, by kowtowing to the British imperialists, becomes an African chief. In Song of Freedom he portrays an English dockworker who, after becoming a famous singer, retracts his ancestry in an African village. Another transformation occurs in King Solomon’s Mines, in which Robeson’s Umbopa, after traveling with white fortune-hunters to his native land, reveals himself as the rightful chief. He plays the mythical David Goliath in Pen Tennyson’s The Proud Valley. After arriving in a Welsh coal-mining town as a vagabond who has jumped his American ship, David becomes the pride of the men’s chorus and a miner who martyrs himself to save the less noble white miners. (Although Robeson’s characters obviously represent moral choices, more recent critics have also openly acknowledged their frequent eroticism.)

The Emperor Jones contains gratuitous songs for Robeson which were not in the stage productions, again setting a precedent. In Show Boat, recreating his stage role as Joe, he sings “Oh! Man River” (which he would later reinvent in concert as a protest song) in a stunning expressionistic sequence, and later performs a comic duet with Hattie McDaniel written especially for the film once Robeson was cast. His songs in Sanders of the River (“On to Battle”) and King Solomon’s Mines (“Song of the Mountains”) contain embarrassingly childish lyrics, and in both Song of Freedom and The Proud Valley Robeson’s obtrusive lyrics can be best described as anglicized Socialist Realism. Robeson’s singing is perhaps best experienced through his many recordings of spirituals and international folk songs, which often suggest the legendary power of his live concerts.

Robeson’s life was as superhuman as David Goliath’s in The Proud Valley: the Spanish Civil War stopped for a day for his concert; his Othello was the longest-running Shakespearean play in American theatrical history; he was as outspokenly pro-African liberation as he was anti-imperialist. He championed communism even when government pressure destroyed his health and career. That he accomplished so much in so many public arenas is still awe-inspiring, while his life continues to inspire debate and discussion; that the American and British film industries, not to mention the U.S. government, so consistently devalued and hampered his talents remains a major shame.

—Howard Feinstein, updated by Corey K. Creekmur
ROBINSON, Edward G.

Films as Actor:

1923 The Bright Shawl (Robertson) (as Domingo Escobar)
1929 The Hole in the Wall (Flory) (as the Fox); Night Ride (Robertson) (as Tony Garotta)
1930 A Lady to Love (Seastrom) (as Tony); Outside the Law (Browning) (as Cobra Collins); East Is West (Bell) (as Charlie Young); Thunder in the City (Gering) (as Dan Armstrong); The Widow from Chicago (Cline) (as Dominio)
1931 Little Caesar (LeRoy) (as Rico Bandello); Smart Money (Green) (as Nick ‘’The Barber’’ Venizelos); Five Star Final (LeRoy) (as Joseph Randall)
1932 The Hatcher Man (Wellman) (as Wong Low Get); Two Seconds (LeRoy) (as John Allen); Tiger Shark (Hawks) (as Mike Mascarena); Silver Dollar (Green) (as Yates Martin)
1933 The Little Giant (Del Ruth) (as James Francis Ahearn); I Loved a Woman (Green) (as John Hayden)
1934 Dark Hazard (Green) (as Jim ‘’Buck’’ Turner); The Man with Two Faces (Mayo) (as Damon Wells)
1935 The Whole Town’s Talking (Ford) (as Arthur Ferguson Jones); Barbary Coast (Hawks) (as Louis Chamacis)
1936 Bullets or Ballots (Keighley) (as Johnny Blake)
1937 Kid Galahad (Curtiz) (as Nick Donati); The Last Gangster (Ludwig) (as Joe Krozac)
1938 A Slight Case of Murder (Bacon) (as Remy Marco); The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak) (title role); I Am the Law (Hall) (as John Lindsay)
1939 Confessions of a Nazi Spy (Litvak) (as Ed Reward); Blackmail (Potter) (as John Ingram)
1940 Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet (Dieterle) (title role); Brother Orchid (Bacon) (as Little John Sarto); A Dispatch from Reuters (Dieterle) (as Julius Reuter)
1941 The Sea Wolf (Curtiz) (as Wolf Carsen); Unholy Partner (LeRoy) (as Bruce Corey); Manpower (Walsh) (as Hawk McHenry)

1942 Larceny, Inc. (Lloyd Bacon) (as Pressure Maxwell); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier) (as Browne)
1943 Destroyer (Seiter) (as Steve Boleslauski); Flesh and Fantasy (Duvivier) (as Marshall Tyler)
1944 Tampico (Mendes) (as Capt. Bart Manson); Mr. Wrinkle Goes to War (Green) (title role); Double Indemnity (Wilder) (as Barton Keyes)
1945 The Woman in the Window (Fritz Lang) (as Prof. Richard Whanley); Our Vines Have Tender Grapes (Rowland) (as Martinus Jacobson)
1946 Scarlet Street (Fritz Lang) (as Christopher Cross); Journey Together (Bouling) (as Dean McWilliams); The Stranger (Dynes) (as Wilson)
1947 The Red House (Daves) (as Peter Morgan)
1948 All My Sons (Reis) (as Joe Keller); Key Largo (Huston) (as Johnny Rocco); The Night Has a Thousand Eyes (Farrow) (as John Triton)
1949 It’s a Great Feeling (Butler) (as himself)
1950 My Daughter Joy (Operation X) (Ratoff) (as George Constantin
1952 Actors and Sin (Hecht) (as Maurice Tillayou)
1953 Vice Squad (Caven) (as Captain Barnaby); Big Leauger (Aldrich) (as John ‘’Hans’’ Lobart); The Glass Web (Arnold) (as Henry Hayes)
1954 Black Tuesday (Fregonese) (as Vincent Cavelli)
1955 The Violent Men (Maté) (as Lew Wilkison); Tight Spot (Karsen) (as Lloyd Hallet); A Bullet for Joey (Lewis Allen) (as Inspector Raoul Leduc)
1956 Hell on Frisco Bay (Tuttle) (as Victor Amato); Nightmare (Shane) (as Rene); The Ten Commandments (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Dathan)
1959 A Hole in the Head (Capra) (as Mario Manetta)
1960 Seven Thieves (Hathaway) (as Theo Wilkins); Pepe (Sidney) (as himself)
1961 My Geisha (Cardiff) (as Sam Lewis)
1962 Two Weeks in Another Town (Minnelli) (as Maurice Kruger)
1964 The Prize (Robson) (as Dr. Max Stratman); Good Neighbor Sam (Swift) (as Simon Nurdlinger); Robin and the Seven Hoods (Douglas) (as Big Jim); The Outrage (Ritt) (as Cow Man); Cheyenne Autumn (Ford) (as Carl Schurr)
1965 A Boy Ten Feet Tall (Mackendrick) (as Cocky Wainwright); The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison) (as Cancey Howard)
1968 La Blode de Pekin (The Blonde from Peking) (Gassner) (as Douglas); Ad ogni costo (Grand Slam) (Montaldo) (as Prof. James Anders); Uno scacco tutto matto (Mad Checkmate) (Fiz) (as MacDowell); Operation St. Peter’s (Fucci) (as Joe); Never a Dull Moment (Paris) (as Leo Joseph Smooth)
1969 MacKenna’s Gold (Thompson) (as Old Adams); U.M.C. (Operation Heartbeat) (Sagal—for TV)
1970 The Old Man Who Cried Wolf (Grauman—for TV); Song of Norway (Stone) (as Krogstad)
1973 Solest Green (Fleischer) (as Sol Roth); Neither by Day nor Night (Stern) (as Father)
1979 Arthur Miller on Home Ground (Rasky)—doc

Publications

By ROBINSON: book—
His craggy frog-face, squat, stocky figure, and whine/growl of a voice made Edward G. Robinson the permanent property of generations of impressionists and caricaturists. That his acting never descended into the masochistic self-parody of many another distinctive talent is due to Robinson’s skill and humor. He became famous... through his startling and vivid portrayal of Rico Bandello in Little Caesar. This and other roles of the same vintage and mood (The Hole in the Wall and Outside the Law, to name but two) swiftly typified Robinson as a conscienceless, snarling thug. He was never trapped by this menacing persona. Instead, he played with it, using it as a foundation and weaving skillful variations on the public’s perception of his range. Like Cagney he transcended typecasting; rather, he used it to his own ends. No matter with what preconceptions one approaches a Robinson characterization, the actor is able to bring to his work a freshness, an element of the unexpected.

Robinson’s roles were sometimes thinly scripted but they inevitably emerged as full-bodied and emotionally shaded on the screen. Even the toughest of his maniacal killers is capable of moments of whimsy or unguarded pleasure. This often points to an essential weakness in the character which leads to his inevitable downfall. This is the key to Robinson’s screen gangsters and bad guys, and what separates them from those of his fellow kings of the celluloid underworld, Cagney and Bogart. Robinson’s characters are killers, but they are not clever, homicidal crazies (like Cagney’s) or desperate loners looking for a way out (like Bogart’s). They are fools guided by stupidity—essentially comic figures. This may be why many of Robinson’s best gangster films following Little Caesar were, in fact, outright comedies in which he not only poked fun at the distinctive tough guy character he had created but further defined that character in ways that some of his dramas failed to do. In these comic films, such as The Little Giant, The Whole Town’s Talking, A Slight Case of Murder, Brother Orchid, and so on, his cruel face softened and relaxed until it resembled that of an amiable, if unfortunate, baby.

In Robinson’s best performances, he was able to walk the line between reason and rage. Flesh and Fantasy and The Night Has a Thousand Eyes show his vulnerability and susceptibility to madness; he is a hard-edged thug with a soft spot in The Last Gangster, a cuckold in Manpower, noble and tenacious in Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet, shrewd and bemused in Double Indemnity, benevolent and fatherly in Our Vines Have Tender Grapes.

Robinson worked with some of the best directors in Hollywood—Brown, LeRoy, Wellman, Ford, Hawks, Farrow, Curtiz, Huston—but the archetypical Robinson roles are contained in Fritz Lang’s Scarlet Street and The Woman in the Window. In the former, he is an easily manipulated artist driven to madness by his wife’s infidelity. In the latter, he portrays a cultured and intelligent professor who becomes embroiled in the seamy side of life by his obsession with the beautiful subject of a portrait. In both films, Lang’s themes seem tailor-made to display the disparate facets of Robinson’s personality: paranoia, impending insanity, and violence versus taste, trust, and an innate, if fragile, amiability.

—Frank Thompson, updated by John McCarty

ROGERS, Ginger

Films as Actress:

1929 A Night in a Dormitory (Delmar—short); A Day of a Man of Affairs (Basil Smith—short)
1930 Office Blues (Blumenstock—short) (as secretary); Campus Sweethearts (Meehan—short); Young Man of Manhattan (Bell) (as Puff Randolph); Queen High (Newmeyer) (as Polly Rockwell); The Sap from Syracuse (The Sap from Abroad) (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Ellen Saunders); Follow the Leader (Taurgo) (as Mary Brennan)
1931 Honor among Lovers (Arzner) (as Doris Blake); The Tip-Off (Looking for Trouble) (Rogell) (as Baby Face); Suicide Fleet (Rogell) (as Sally)
1932 Screen Snapshots (short); Hollywood on Parade (Oakie—short); Carnival Boat (Rogell) (as Honey); The Tenderfoot (Enright) (as Ruth); The Thirteenth Guest (Landau) (as Albert Ray) (as Mary Morgan/Lela); Hat Check Girl (Lanfield) (as Jessie King); You Said a Mouthful (Lloyd Bacon) (as Alice Brandon)
1933 Hollywood on Parade, No. 9 (short); 42nd Street (Lloyd Bacon) (as Ann Lowell, “Anytime Annie”); Broadway Bad (Her Reputation) (Lanfield) (as Flip Daly); Gold Diggers of 1933 (LeRoy) (as Fay Fortune); Professional Sweetheart (Imaginary Sweetheart) (Seiter) (as Glory Eden); A Shriek in the Night (Albert Ray) (as Patricia Morgan); Don’t Bet on Love (Roth) (as Molly Gilbert); Sitting Pretty (Harry Joe Brown) (as Dorothy); Flying Down to Rio (Freeland) (as Honey Hale); Chance at Heaven (Seiter) (as Marje Harris)
1934 Rafter Romance (Seiter) (as Mary Carroll); Finishing School (Tuchock and Nicholls Jr.) (as Cecelia “Pony” Ferris); Twenty Million Sweethearts (Enright) (as Peggy Cornell); Change of Heart (Blustone) (as Madge Roundtree); Upperworld (Del Ruth) (as Lily Linder); The Gay Divorcee (Sandrich) (as Mimi Glossop); Romance in Manhattan (Roberts) (as Sylvia Dennis)
1935 Roberta (Seiter) (as Countess Scharwenka/Lizzie Gatz); Star of Midnight (Roberts) (as Donna Martin); Top Hat (Sandrich) (as Dick Tremont); In Person (Seiter) (as Carol Corliss)
1936 Follow the Fleet (Sandrich) (as Sherry Martin); Swing Time (Stevens) (as Penelope “Penny” Carrol)
Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire in Carefree

1937 Shall We Dance (Sandrich) (as Linda Keene); Stage Door (La Cava) (as Joan Maitland)

1938 Having Wonderful Time (Santell) (as Thelma “Teddy” Shaw); Vivacious Lady (Stevens) (as Frances “Francey” Brent); Carefree (Sandrich) (as Amanda Cooper)

1939 The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle (Potter) (as Irene Foote Castle); Bachelor Mother (Kanin) (as Polly Parrish); Fifth Avenue Girl (La Cava) (as Mary Grey)

1940 Primrose Path (La Cava) (as Ellie May Adams); Lucky Partners (Milestone) (as Jean Newton); Kitty Foyle (Wood) (title role)

1941 Tom, Dick, and Harry (Kanin) (as Janie)

1942 Roxie Hart (Wellman) (title role); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier) (as Diane); The Major and the Minor (Wilder) (as Susan Applegate); Once upon a Honeymoon (McCarey) (as Katie O’Hara/Katharine Butte-Smith)

1943 Show Business at War (March of Times series) (short); Tender Comrade (Dmytryk) (as Jo Jones)

1944 Lady in the Dark (Leisen) (as Liza Elliott); Safeguarding Military Information (WWII training film); Battle Stations (as narrator); I’ll Be Seeing You (Dieterle) (as Mary Marshall)

1945 Weekend at the Waldorf (Leonard) (as Irene Malvern)

1946 Heartbeat (Wood) (as Arlette Lafon); Magnificent Doll (Borzage) (as Dolley Paine Madison)

1947 It Had to Be You (Hartman and Mate) (as Victoria Stafford)

1949 The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters) (as Dinah Barkley)

1950 Perfect Strangers (Too Dangerous to Love) (Windust) (as Terry Scott)

1951 Storm Warning (Heisler) (as Marsha Mitchell); The Groom Wore Spurs (Whorf) (as Abigail J. Furnival)

1952 We’re Not Married (Edmund Goulding) (as Ramona); Monkey Business (Hawks) (as Edwina Fulton); Dreamboat (Binyon) (as Gloria)

1954 Forever Female (Rapper) (as Beatrice Page); Black Widow (Nunnally Johnson) (as Lottie); Twist of Fate (Beautiful Stranger) (Miller) (as Johnny Victor)

1955 Tight Spot (Karlson) (as Sherry Conley)

1956 The First Traveling Saleslady (Lubin) (as Rose Gillray); Teenage Rebel (Edmund Goulding) (as Nancy Fallon); Oh, Men! Oh, Women! (Nunnally Johnson) (as Mildred Turner)

1964 The Confession (Seven Different Ways; Quick, Let’s Get Married) (Dieterle) (as Mme. Rinaldi)
1965  Harlow (Segal) (as Mama Jean); Cinderella (Dubin—for TV) (as the Queen)
1984  George Stevens: A Filmmaker's Journey (Stevens Jr.—doc)
1994  That's Entertainment! III (Friedgen and Sheridan—compilation)

Publications

By ROGERS: book—

By ROGERS: articles—

“‘How I Got My First Job,’” in Dance, December 1931.

On ROGERS: books—

Smith, Milburn, editor, Astaire and Rogers, New York, 1972.
Topper, Susanne, Astaire and Rogers, New York, 1976.
Baxt, George, Fred Astaire & Ginger Rogers Murder Case, (fiction), New York, 1997.

On ROGERS: articles—

“Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers” issue of Visages (Paris), January 1939.

One of the longest successful Hollywood film careers belongs to Ginger Rogers, a fact frequently overlooked. When fans and historians list those women who survived as stars despite age and changing styles and times, the names usually cited include Joan Crawford, Bette Davis, Katharine Hepburn, and Myrna Loy, but Rogers is rarely mentioned. It is perhaps a tribute to her lasting youthfulness that, although there is no question that she is a major star with a lengthy career, she is not thought of as someone who survived or kept her career going after great setbacks. Instead, she is a star who never had to make a comeback because she never left the limelight.

The best-known aspect of the Rogers career is her membership in the most beloved and celebrated dance team in the history of the American musical cinema—the Fred Astaire/Ginger Rogers combination which was paired in ten dance musicals. Together, from 1933 to 1939, they made nine films for RKO, managing to keep the financially unstable studio afloat for several years. Because many film scholars consider the Astaire/Rogers films to be the greatest dance musicals produced by Hollywood, they have been the subject of extensive analysis. Most of the research concerns the revolutionary aesthetic contributions that have been attributed to Fred Astaire; the integration of musical numbers and choreography with plot and story line, sound recording methods, and the use of camera work to maintain the integrity of the dance numbers.

Historically, the other half of the team, Rogers, has been continually overlooked. As film scholar Robin Wood so aptly states, “One habitually thinks of Rogers as Astaire’s partner, rather than the other way around.” Some have argued that Astaire, in fact, needed Rogers more than she him.

After Astaire’s sister broke up the Broadway dance team of Fred and Adele Astaire in 1932, Astaire found his career in musical comedy faltering and embarked on a career in the motion picture industry. It was a risky undertaking. Already 33 and thin, balding, and not-classically handsome, Astaire did not possess the qualities of the typical Hollywood leading man. Rogers, however, was already well-established in the American film industry. Before being matched with Astaire, she appeared in 19 feature films, including 2 of Warner’s Busby Berkeley musicals, 42nd Street and Goldiggers of 1933. During the years in which she and Astaire were a team, Rogers made several films, both dramatic and comedic, without him. According to Croce, “By the end of 1939, RKO considered Rogers its No. 1 star and began laying plans for a straight dramatic career, while Astaire ran out his contract.”

In their filmed musical pairings, Astaire and Rogers seemed wrong for one another, gloriously mismatched physically, intellectually, and stylistically. Rogers was down-to-earth, athletic—very much the “‘all-American’ type. In the exaggerated manner of film stars, she represented the ordinary. Astaire was the elegant, European in grace, and so exceptional that he has never been equaled. Yet together, they personified the idiosyncrasy of romance—two people that friends would never match up, but who have been brought together by an inexplicable attraction. This attraction was physicalized and eloquently expressed through their dances. The best explanation of the Astaire/Rogers chemistry is a quote attributed to Katharine Hepburn: “She gave him sex, and he gave her class.”

Had Rogers not been so ambitious, she might have settled for lasting fame as Astaire’s most popular dance partner. But she wanted more for herself, and knew from her years in films before Astaire that friends would never match up, but who have been brought together by an inexplicable attraction. This attraction was physicalized and eloquently expressed through their dances. The best explanation of the Astaire/Rogers chemistry is a quote attributed to Katharine Hepburn: “She gave him sex, and he gave her class.”

Had Rogers not been so ambitious, she might have settled for lasting fame as Astaire’s most popular dance partner. But she wanted more for herself, and knew from her years in films before Astaire that she could play comedy and drama well. She broke off the partnership, a courageous career move for which she is seldom given credit.

Her first major success as a dramatic actress was Kitty Foyle, for which she won the 1940 Oscar for Best Actress. Having thus established herself as a solo performer, Rogers continued to pursue an active career in comedy as well as drama, occasionally returning to the musical format. Her screen image became that of a wise, tough-minded, humorous, hard-working, real-life American woman, an image built to last as it accommodated her advancing age and afforded her the versatility to play in different film genres. In later years, Rogers made a successful transition from films to television, and found equal acclaim in big Broadway musicals such as Mame and Hello, Dolly! Any discussion of the career of Ginger Rogers must give credit to her mother, Leila Rogers, who managed her daughter with determination and intelligence. Together, the two women made the most of all opportunities they had, beginning with young Ginger’s first triumph in a Charleston contest. Rogers was not considered the most beautiful woman in Hollywood, nor the best actress, singer, comedienne, or even dancer. But she was an attractive woman who could be glamorous or wholesome, depending on what the role required. She could sing and dance well, and she was versatile, with excellent comedic timing, and ability to mimic, and real dramatic skill. Putting it all together gave her the edge she needed which, supplemented by the Rogers family business acumen, and her own professionalism, made her a top star and kept her there.

Ginger Rogers and her mother represent pioneer career women. Active in politics, shrewd in business, and maintaining control of their careers in the difficult, frequently male-dominated world of Hollywood, they may be thought of as feminists in deed if not by label or self-definition.

—Jeanine Basinger, updated by Frances Gateward

ROONEY, Mickey

Nationality: American. Born: Joe Yule Jr., in Brooklyn, New York, 23 September 1920. Education: Attended Dayton Heights and Vine Street elementary schools and Fairfax High School, Hollywood; Pacific Military Academy, Culver City, California; also attended a studio school at MGM. Military Service: U.S. Army, 1944–46. Family: Married 1) the actress Ava Gardner, 1942 (divorced 1943); 2) Betty Jane Rase, 1944 (divorced 1949), sons: Mickey Jr. and Timothy; 3) the actress Martha Vickers, 1949 (divorced 1951), son: Teddy; 4) Elaine Mahnken, 1951 (divorced 1958); 5) Barbara Ann Thomsen, 1958 (divorced), sons: Kerry and Kyle: daughters: Kelly Ann and Kimmy Sue; 6) Margie Lang, 1966 (divorced 1967); 7) Carolyn Hocket (divorced), two children; 8) the singer Jan Chamberlain, 1978. Career: Stage debut in his parents’ vaudeville act at age 15 months as a midget; 1926—film debut as a midget in Not to Be Trusted; 1927–34—in series of short films about Mickey McGuire; 1937—first of the Andy Hardy films, A Family Affair; 1951—directed the film My True Story; 1963—in summer stock in the play The Tunnel of Love; 1964–65—in TV series Mickey, and a regular in TV series NBC Follies, 1973; 1964—toured nightclub circuit with dancer Bobby Van; has since toured in other plays; 1979—in theatrical revue Sugar Babies with Ann Miller, first in Los Angeles, then in long Broadway run, and touring (until 1985); 1992–94—in TV series The Black Stallion. Awards: Special Academy Award (with Deanna Durbin), “for their significant contribution in bringing to the screen the spirit and personification of youth and as juvenile players setting a high standard of ability and achievement,” 1938; Best Actor César Award (France), for Baby Face Nelson, 1957; Special Academy Award, “in recognition of his 60 years of versatility in a variety of memorable film performances,” 1982. Address: 7500 Devista Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90046, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1926 Not to Be Trusted (Buckingham—short)
1927 Orchids and Ermine (Santell)
1932 Emma (Brown); The Beast of the City (Brabin) (as Mickey Fitzpatrick); Sin's Pay Day (Seitz) (as Mickey McGuire); High Speed (Lederman) (as Mickey McGuire); Officer 13 (Melford); Fast Companions (The Information Kid) (Neumann) (as Midge); My Pal, the King (Neumann) (as King Charles V)
1933 The Big Cage (Neumann) (as Jimmy); The Life of Jimmy Dolan (The Kid’s Last Flight) (Mayo) (as Freckles); The 1934
Beloved (Schertzinger); I Like It that Way (Lachman) (as messenger boy); Love Birds (Seiter) (as Gladwyn Tootle); Half a Sinner (Neumann) (as Willie); The Lost Jungle (Schaefer and David Howard) (as Mickey); Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke) (as Blackie as a boy); Upperworld (Del Ruth) (as Jerry); The Hide-Out (Van Dyke) (as Willie); Chained (Brown) (as boy swimmer); Blind Date (Neill) (as Freddy); Death on the Diamond (Sedgwick) (as Mickey)

1935
The County Chairman (Blystone) (as Freckles); Reckless (Fleming); The Healer (Little Pal) (Barker); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Dieterle) (as Puck); Ah, Wilderness (Brown) (as Tommy Miller); Rifffraff (Ruben)

1936
Little Lord Fauntleroy (Cromwell) (as Dick); The Devil Is a Sissy (The Devil Takes the Count) (Van Dyke) (as “Gig” Stevens); Down the Stretch (Clemens) (as Snapper Sinclair)

1937
Captains Courageous (Fleming) (as Dan); Slave Ship (Garnell) (as Swifty); A Family Affair (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Hoosier Schoolboy (Nigh) (as Shockey); Live, Love, and Learn (Fitzmaurice) (as Jerry Crump); Thoroughbreds Don’t Cry (Alred E. Green) (as Tim Donahue)

1938
Out West with the Hardys (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); You’re Only Young Once (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Love Is a Headache (Thorpe) (as Mike); Judge Hardy’s Children (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Hold That Kiss (Marin) (as Chick Evans); Lord Jeff (The Boy from Bernardos) (Wood) (as Terry O’Mulvaney); Love Finds Andy Hardy (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Boys Town (Taurog) (as Whitey Marsh); Stablemates (Wood) (as Mickey)

1939
The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Thorpe) (title role); The Hardys Ride High (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever (Van Dyke) (as Andy Hardy); Judge Hardy and Son (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Babes in Arms (Berkeley) (as Mickey Moran)

1940
Young Tom Edison (Taurog) (title role); Andy Hardy Meets Debutante (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Strike Up the Band (Berkeley) (as Jimmy Connors)

1941
Andy Hardy’s Private Secretary (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Men of Boys Town (Taurog) (as Whitey Marsh); Life Begins for Andy Hardy (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); Babes on Broadway (Berkeley) (as Tommy Williams)

1942 The Courtship of Andy Hardy (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); A Yank at Eton (Taurog) (as Timothy Dennis); Andy Hardy’s Double Life (Andy Hardy Steps Out) (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy)

1943 The Human Comedy (Brown) (as Homer Macauley); Girl Crazy (When the Girls Meet the Boys) (Taurog) (as Danny Churchill Jr.); Thousands Cheer (Taurog)

1944 Andy Hardy’s Blonde Trouble (Seitz) (as Andy Hardy); National Velvet (Brown) (as Mi Taylor)

1946 Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli); Love Laughs at Andy Hardy (Goldbeck) (as Andy Hardy)

1947 Killer McCoy (Rowland) (as Tommy McCoy)

1948 Summer Holiday (Mamoulian) (as Richard Miller); Words and Music (Taurog) (as Lorenz “Larry” Hart)

1949 The Big Wheel (Ludwig) (as Billy Coy)

1950 Quicksand (Pichel) (as Dan Brady, auto mechanic); He’s a Cockeyed Wonder (Grodrey) (as Freddie Frisby); The Fireball (Garnett) (as Johnny Casar)

1951 My Outlaw Brother (My Brother, the Outlaw) (Nugent) (as Denny O’More); The Strip (Kardos) (as Stanley Maxton)

1952 Sound Off (Quine) (Mike Donnelly)

1953 All Ashore (Quine) (as Francis “Moby” Dickerson); Mickey Rooney, Then and Now (Staub); Off Limits (Military Policemen) (George Marshall) (as Herbert Tuttle); A Slight Case of Larceny (Weis) (as Augustus “Geech” Cheever)

1954 Drive a Crooked Road (Quine) (as Eddie Shannon); The Atomic Kid (Martinson) (as Bix Waterberry); The Bridges at Toko-Ri (Robson) (as Mike Forney)

1955 The Twinkle in God’s Eye (Blair) (as the rev. Macklin)

1956 The Bold and the Brave (Lewis R. Foster) (as Dooley); Francis in the Haunted House (Lamont) (as David Prescott); Magnificent Obscurenesses (Rose) (as Frank Sommers)

1957 Operation Mad Ball (Quine) (as M/Sgt. Yancy Skibo); Baby Face Nelson (Siegel) (title role)

1958 Andy Hardy Comes Home (Koch) (as Andy Hardy); A Nice Little Bank that Should Be Robbed (How to Rob a Bank) (Levin) (as Gus Harris)

1959 The Last Mile (Koch) (as “Killer” John Mears); The Big Operator (Haas) (as Little Joe Braun)

1960 Platinum High School (Rich, Young, and Deadly) (Haas) (as Steven Conway)

1961 Breakfast at Tiffany’s (Edwards) (as Mr. Yunioshi); King of the Roaring Twenties (The Big Bankroll) (Joseph M. Newman) (as Johnny Burke); Everything’s Ducky (Taylor) (as Beetle McKay)

1962 Requiem for a Heavyweight (Nelson) (as Army)

1963 It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (as Ding Bell)

1964 Secret Invasion (Corman) (as Terrence Scanlon)

1965 Twenty-Four Hours to Kill (Bezenecenet) (as Norman Jones); How to Stuff a Wild Bikini (Asher) (as Peachy Keane)

1966 Il diavolo innamorato (The Devil in Love; L’arcidiavolo) (Scola); Ambush Bay (Winston) (as Sgt. Ernest Wartell)

1968 The Extraordinary Seaman (Frankenheimer) (as W.W.J. Ogilthorpe); Skidoo (Preminger) (as “Blue Chips” Packard)

1969 The Comic (Carl Reiner) (as Cockeye); Eighty Steps to Jonah (Oswald) (as Wilfred Bashford)

1970 The Cockeyed Cowboys of Calico County (Leader) (as Indian Tom); Hollywood Blue (Osco)

1971 B. J. Lang Presents (Yablonsky)

1972 Evil Roy Slade (Parish—for TV); Richard (Yerby and Hurwitz) (as Guardian Angel); Pulp (Hodges)

1973 The Godmothers (Greffe) (+ co-sc)

1974 Az de corazon (Ace of Hearts) (Demichelli); Thunder County (Cell Block Girls; Convict Women; Women’s Prison Escape; It Snows in the Everglades) (Robinson); That’s Entertainment! (Haley Jr.—compilation) (as narrator); Journey Back to Oz (Hal Sutherland—animation) (as voice); The Year without a Santa Claus (Bass and Rankin Jr.—animation, for TV) (as voice of Santa Claus)

1975 Bon baisers de Hong Kong (Chiffre); Rachel’s Man (Mizrahi)

1976 Find the Lady (Kopek and Broom; Call the Cops!) (Trent)

1977 Pete’s Dragon (Chaffey) (as Lampie); The Domino Principle (The Domino Killings) (Kramer) (as Spiventa)

1978 The Magic of Lassie (Chaffey) (as Gus)

1979 The Black Stallion (Ballard) (as Henry Dailey); Donovans Kid (McEveety—for TV) (as Bailey); Arabian Adventure (Connor) (as Daad El Shur)

1980 My Kidnapper, My Love (Dark Side of Love) (Wanamaker—for TV)

1981 The Fox and the Hound (Steven—animation) (as voice of Tod); Leave ‘em Laughing (Cooper—for TV); L’Empereur de Perou (The Emperor of Peru; Odyssey of the Pacific) (Arrabal) (as Emperor of Peru); Bill (Page—for TV) (as Bill Sackter); Senior Trip (Kenneth Johnson—for TV) (cameo)

1982 The Black Stallion Returns (Dalva) (as Henry Dailey); O’Malley (O’Herlihy); One of the Boys (Baldwin)

1983 Bill: On His Own (Page—for TV) (as Bill Sackter)

1984 It Came upon the Midnight Clear (Hunt—for TV)

1985 The Care Bears Movie (Arna Selznick—animation) (as voice of Mr. Cherrywood)

1986 Lightning—The White Stallion (Levey) (as Barney Ingram); Little Spies (Beeman—for TV); The Return of Mickey Spillane’s Mike Hammer (Danton—for TV); There Must Be a Pony (Sargent—for TV) (cameo)

1987 Bluegrass (Wincer—for TV) (as John Paul Jones)

1989 Erik the Viking (Terry Jones) (as Erik’s grandfather)

1990 Home for Christmas (McGibbin—for TV) (as Elmer)

1991 My Heroes Have Always Been Cowboys (Rosenberg) (as Junior); Silent Night, Deadly Night 5: The Toy Maker (Kitrosser) (as Joe Petto); La Vida Lactea (The Milky Life) (Estrellich) (as Barry Reilly); The Gambler Returns: Luck of the Draw (Lowry—for TV) (as the Director)

1992 The Magic Voyage (as narrator); The Legend of Wolf Mountain (Clyde) (as Jensen); Maximum Force (Merhi) (as chief of police); Little Nemo: Adventures in Slumberland (Hurtz and Hata—animation) (as voice of Flip)

1993 Sweet Justice (Plone)

1994 That’s Entertainment! III (Friedgen and Sheridan—compilation) (as host); The Revenge of the Red Baron (Plane Fear) (Robert Gordon) (as Grandpa James); Radio Star—Die AFN-Story (Karnick and Richter—doc) (as himself)

1995 The Legend of O. B. Taggart (Hitzig) (+ sc); Brothers’ Destiny (Hamilton—for TV) (Father Flanagan)

1997 Boys Will Be Boys (Dom DeLuise) (as Wellington); Animals (Di Jiacomo) (as Tollkeeper)

1998 Stories From My Childhood (series for TV) (as Ole Lukoje); Michael Kael vs. the World News Company (Smith) (as Griffith); Babe: Pig in the City (Miller) (as Fugly Floom)
(1927–34 series of “Mickey McGuire” shorts, directed by Herman, Montgomery, and Duffy; Rooney was billed first as Mickey Yule, then Mickey “Himself” McGuire, and Mickey Rooney):

1927 Mickey’s Circus (includes Pals, Battle, Eleven)
1928 Mickey’s Parade (includes In School, Nine, Little Eva, Wild West, In Love, Triumph, Babies, Movies, Rivals, The Detective, Athletes, Big Game Hunt)
1929 Mickey’s Great Idea (includes Explorers, Menagerie, Last Chance, Brown Derby, Northwest Mounted, Initiation, Midnight Follies, Surprise, Mixup, Big Moment)
1930 Mickey’s Champs (includes Strategy, Mastermind, Luck, Whirlwind, Warriors, The Romeo, Merry Men, Winners, Musketeers, Bargain)
1931 Mickey’s Stampede (includes Crusaders, Rebellion, Diplomacy, Wildcats, Thrill Hunters, Helping Hand, Sideline)
1932 Mickey’s Travels (includes Holiday, Golden Rule, Busy Day, Charity, Big Business)
1933 Mickey’s Ape Man (includes Race, Big Broadcast, Disguises, Touchdown, Tent Show, Covered Wagon)
1934 Mickey’s Minstrels (includes Rescue, Medicine Man)

Films as Director:

1951 My True Story
1961 The Private Lives of Adam and Eve (co-d with Zugsmith, + ro as Nick Lewis/Devil)

Publications

By ROONEY: books—

By ROONEY: articles—

Interview with George Christy, in Interview (New York), May 1992.

On ROONEY: book—

On ROONEY: articles—

Shindler, Merrill, “‘How I Did It!’: Three Recent Comebacks that Have Worked,” in Los Angeles Magazine, March 1980.

* * *

Mickey Rooney has done everything there is to do in show business—vaudeville, radio, legitimate theater, television, and film—all with equal success and, it might be said, equal failure. His is a career that reached the heights and plunged to the depths, but through it all Rooney kept on working and growing, the mark of a professional. His recent successes include nominations for the Tony (Sugar Babies), the supporting actor Oscar (Black Stallion), the inspiration for a later television series in which he also appeared, and an Emmy (Bill). The “comeback” such recognition indicates represents one of the most spectacular returns to the limelight in Hollywood history.

Rooney was born into a show business family. At the age of two, he joined his parents in their vaudeville act, and by the age of five was appearing in a series of filmed shorts under the name of Mickey McGuire. Throughout the late 1920s and early 1930s, he made more than 40 appearances in films. By the mid-1930s he was called Mickey Rooney and was under contract to MGM as a successful child star. In 1937 he was featured in a minor film called A Family Affair, which introduced the family of Judge Hardy (played in that original movie by Lionel Barrymore). Rooney’s appearance as the Judge’s son, Andy Hardy, was to turn into a box-office bonanza as he became one of Hollywood’s best-loved characters. Hardy became the idealized image of the all-American teenager, real enough to get himself into trouble, but strong enough to find his way out of it (though not without the wise counsel of his beloved father, played in the later Hardy films by Lewis Stone). In 1938 Rooney was awarded a special honorary Oscar for “bringing to the screen the spirit and personification of youth” and for “setting a high standard of ability and achievement” as Andy Hardy. In 1939, 1940, and 1941 Rooney was among the top box-office stars in the United States, a success attributable not only to the Hardy series, but also to his pairings with co-stars as diverse as Wallace Beery and Judy Garland. In these famous MGM films, Rooney sang, danced, clowned, played various musical instruments, emoted, and generally did everything with seeming ease and an abundance of raw talent. He was nominated for Oscars in 1939 and 1943. He was on top of the world at the age of 20, full of youth and energy, and with an apparently unlimited career ahead of him. By the end of the 1940s, however, and by his own admission, he was an unwanted commodity. “In 1938,” he said, “I stared in eight pictures. In 1948 and 1949 together, I starred in only three.”

During the 1950s, Rooney kept his career going by appearing in nightclubs and on television, and by forming an independent film production company to present himself as the star of a series of movies, none of which was really successful. He also tried his hand at dramatic roles, many of which were much against type. Rooney received another Oscar nomination for his intense performance as a doomed G.I. during the invasion of Italy in the iconoclastic war film The Bold and the Brave; drew excellent notices for his supporting role in Requiem for a Heavyweight, the film version of Rod Serling’s celebrated television drama; and won a Best Actor César award (the French equivalent of the Oscar) for his Cagneyesque performance as the psychopathic title character of Don Siegel’s much underrated gangster film Baby Face Nelson. Despite these accomplishments, his career faltered. Bankruptcy in 1962, various emotional problems, and seven divorces (which made him the subject of many jokes) all contributed to a difficult period in which Rooney was considered finished in show business. He developed himself further as a character actor, however, and began to find acclaim in television. He published an autobiography, pursued various business ventures, and taught acting, continuing to work professionally when and where he could. In the early 1980s he returned to Broadway in the long-running hit musical, Sugar Babies, and found himself once more back on top. When the Motion Picture Academy gave him a second honorary Oscar at its 1982 ceremony, his long career as the boy who could do anything and everything, but who had to grow up, was placed in perspective.

Rooney’s abundant talent, like his film image, might seem like a metaphor for America: a seemingly endless supply of natural resources that could never dry up, but which, it turned out, could be ruined by excessive use and abuse, by arrogance or power, and which had to be carefully tended to be returned to full capacity. From child star to character actor, from movie shorts to television specials, and from films to Broadway, Rooney ultimately did prove he could do it all, do it well, and keep on doing it. His is a unique career, both for its versatility and its longevity.

—Jeanine Basinger, updated by John McCarty

ROSSELLINI, Isabella

Nationality: Italian. Born: Rome, 18 June 1952; daughter of the director Roberto Rossellini and the actress Ingrid Bergman. Family: Married 1) the director Martin Scorsese, 1979 (divorced 1983); 2) Jonathan Wiedemann (divorced), daughter: Elettra Ingrid; also has adopted son: Roberto; 3) the actor Gary Oldman, 1994; had long-term relationship with the director David Lynch. Education: Was graduated from Rome’s Academy of Fashion and Costume; attended Finch College and The New School for Social Research. Career: 1972—moved to New York at age 19; 1970s—worked as a translator for the Italian News Bureau and as a New York correspondent for Italian TV; 1976—made her screen debut opposite her mother, Ingrid Bergman, in A Matter of Time; 1979—returned to Italy to play first leading movie role, in Il Prato; 1980—began modeling career; 1982—enrolled in acting classes; 1993—in “The Frightening Frammis” episode of the TV series Fallen Angels. Address: Click Model Management, Inc., 881 Seventh Avenue, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1976 A Matter of Time (Minnelli) (as Sister Pia)
1979 Il Prato (The Meadow) (Paolo Taviani and Vittorio Taviani) (as Eugenia)
1981 Il Pap’occhio (In the Pope’s Eye) (Arbare) (as Isabella)
1985 White Nights (Hackford) (as Darya Greenwood)
1986 Blue Velvet (David Lynch) (as Dorothy Vallens)
1987 Tough Guys Don’t Dance (Mailer) (as Madeline); Siesta (Lambert) (as Marie); Red Riding Hood (Adam Brooks)
1988 Zelly and Me (Rathborne) (as Joan, “Zelly”)
1989 Cousins (Schumacher) (as Maria Hardy)
1990 Wild at Heart (David Lynch) (as Perdita Durango); Ivory Hunters (The Lost Elephant) (Sargent—for TV) (as Maria Di Conti)
1991 Dames Galantes (Gallant Ladies) (Tacchella) (as Victoire); Lies of the Twins (Hunter—for TV) (as Rachel Marks)
1992 Death Becomes Her (Zemeckis) (as Anna Maria Erdody)
1993 Fearless (Weir) (as Laura Klein); The Pickle (Mazursky) (as Planet Cleveland Woman); ... und der Himmel steht still (The Innocent) (Schlesinger) (as Maria)
1994 Wyatt Earp (Kasdan) (as Big Nosed Kate); Immortal Beloved (Rose) (as Anna Marie Erdody)
1996 The Funeral (Ferrara) (as Clara); Big Night (Scott and Tucci); Crime of the Century (Rydell—for TV) (as Anna Hauptmann)
1997 The Odyssey (Konchalovsky—series for TV) (as Athene)
1998 Left Luggage (Krabbe) (as Mrs. Kalman); Merlin (Barron) (as Nimue); The Impostors (Tucci) (as Queen)
2000 Don Quixote (Yates—for TV) (as The Duchess)

Publications

By ROSSELLINI: book—

By ROSSELLINI: articles—

Interview with D. Furnish, in Interview, February 1996.

On ROSSELLINI: book—

On ROSSELLINI: articles—

* * *

Isabella Rossellini was born into celluloid royalty; she is the daughter of Ingrid Bergman and Roberto Rossellini. Her fame rests mostly in her bloodline, her uncanny resemblance to her mother, and her extraordinary success as a model. Rossellini began the latter career at age 28, and soon became one of the world’s highest-paid and most in-demand models. She has graced more than 500 magazine covers, and earned $2-million a year from a contract with Lancome, the French cosmetics company. In 1982, she appeared on the cover of the U.S. edition of Vogue, which became the magazine’s biggest seller in over a decade.

White Nights, released in 1985 (in which her role is secondary to those of stars Mikhail Baryshnikov and Gregory Hines), was trumpeted as Rossellini’s movie debut. Her actual first screen appearance, however, came almost a decade earlier in A Matter of Time, which starred her mother. The role was a small one, as a nurse; it is of interest mostly for her character’s name, Sister Pia—Rossellini’s older half sister, of course, Pia Lindstrom (by Bergman’s first husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom). Also before White Nights, Rossellini had a key role in Il Prato, directed by Italy’s Paolo and Vittorio Taviani, playing a young clerk in a small Tuscan village who becomes romantically involved with two men.

Rossellini’s roles often have been secondary ones. A prime example is Wyatt Earp, in which her character—Big Nosed Kate, sweetheart of Doc Holliday (Dennis Quaid)—seems to evaporate from sight soon after initially appearing on-screen. Even when she does well in a fully conceived role, she finds herself eclipsed by characters (and performers) who are far more charismatic. In Fearless, she is fine as the wife of a plane crash survivor (Jeff Bridges), but she ultimately is outflanked by Bridges and Rosie Pérez (playing another survivor). The latter two have the showcase roles, and give the showcase performances.

But Rossellini was charming and appealing in Cousins, an American remake of Cousin, Cousine, Jean-Charles Tachella’s French-language romantic comedy. Her character is married to a womanizer, and has become accustomed to his infidelities. She finds herself attracted to her cousin-by-marriage (Ted Danson), and the two become romantically involved. Had Rossellini been cast in more roles like this, she might have developed into a widely popular leading lady.

Easily Rossellini’s best screen work to date may be found in Blue Velvet, directed by David Lynch, with whom she had a long-term relationship. Blue Velvet is a dark and unsettling thriller in which she plays a bored, deranged nightclub singer who is raped by a psycho-path (Dennis Hopper). Her presence here was controversial in that she appeared frontally nude. Rossellini also had a role in Lynch’s violent, erotic Wild at Heart, playing Perdita Durango, ex-girlfriend of macho but tenderhearted, on-the-lam Sailor Ripley (Nicolas Cage). But here, too, the foremost female roles are played by other actresses—Laura Dern and Diane Ladd.

—Rob Edelman

ROTH, Tim

Nationality: British. Born: Dulwich, London, England, 14 May 1961; moved to United States, 1990. Education: Dick Sheppard Comprehensive School; Brixton and Camberwell College of Art, London. Family: One son, Jack (born 1983), with former long-term partner Lori Baker; married Nikki Butler (1993); one son, Timothy Hunter Roth (born 1995). Career: Acting debut in school production of Dracula; began acting at Glasgow Citizen’s Theatre, The Oval House, and The Royal Court Theatre; quit theatre because of stage fright; reputedly still works behind the bar between acting jobs; debut as director, The War Zone, 1999. Awards: British Academy Award (BAFTA) for Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role, for Rob Roy, 1996; Edinburgh International Film Festival Award for Best New British Feature, Berlin International Film Festival CICAE Award, European Discovery of the Year Award, European Film Awards, Troia Award, Fesutroia-Troia International Film Festival, Fort Lauderdale International Film Festival Jury Award for Best Director and Best First Feature, and Valladolid (Spain) International Film Festival Silver Spike, all for director of The War Zone, 1999.
Tim Roth

Agent: Ilene Feldman Agency, 8730 W. Sunset Boulevard, Suite 490, Los Angeles, CA 90069–2277, USA.

Films as Actor:

1982 Made in Britain (Clarke—for TV) (as Trevor)
1983 Meantime (Leigh—for TV) (as Colin)
1984 The Hit (Frears) (as Myron)
1985 Return to Waterloo (Davies) (as Boy Punk)
1987 Metamorphosis (Goddard—for TV) (as Gregor Samsa)
1988 A World Apart (Menges) (as Harold); To Kill a Priest (Le Complot) (Holland) (as Felix)
1989 The Cook, the Thief, His Wife, and Her Lover (Greenaway) (as Mitchel)
1990 Vincent and Theo (Altman) (as Vincent van Gogh); Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard) (as Guildenstern); Farendj (Prenzina); Yellowbacks (Battersby—for TV) (as Peter Pike)
1991 Jumpin’ at the Boneyard (Stanzler) (as Manny); Backsliding (Target) (as Tom Whitton)
1992 El Marido Perfecto (The Perfect Husband) (Feijoo) (as Milan); Common Pursuit (Morahan—for TV) (as Nick); Reservoir Dogs (Tarantino) (as Freddy Newednyke/Mr. Orange)
1993 Bodies, Rest and Motion (Steinberg) (as Nick); Murder in the Heartland (Markowitz—for TV) (as Charles Starkweather)
1994 Who Do You Think You’re Fooling? (White) (as Mr. Orange Chow); Little Odessa (Gray) (as Joshua Shapiro); Heart of Darkness (Roeg—for TV) (as Marlow); Captives (Pope) (as Philip Chaney); Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (as Pumpkin/Ringo)
1995 Rob Roy (Caton-Jones) (as Archibald Cunningham); Four Rooms (Anders, Rockwell, Rodrigues, Tarantino) (as Ted the Bell Hop)
1996 No Way Home (Giovinazzo) (as Joey); Mocking the Cosmos (as Myron); Everyone Says I Love You (Allen) (as Charles Ferry)
1997 Animals and the Toll Keeper (Di Jiacomo) (as Henry); Gridlock’d (Curtis-Hall) (as Stretch); Hoodlum (Duke) (as Dutch Schulz); Deceiver (Liar) (Jonas and Joshua Pate) (as Wayland)
1998 La Leggenda del pianista sull’oceano (The Legend of 1900) (The Legend of the Pianist on the Ocean) (Tornatore) (as Novecento)
2000 The Million Dollar Hotel (Wenders) (as Izzy Goldkiss [uncredited]); Vatel (Joffé) (as Le Marquis de Lauzun); Numbers (Ephron) (as Gig)

Publications

By ROTH: articles—

‘‘Roth ‘N’ Roll,’’ interview with Cathy Hoyrn in Vanity Fair (New York), September 1995.
‘‘Revenge of the Working Class,’’ interview with Tim Rice and Tom Allen, in MovieMaker, January/February 1996.
‘‘Big Tim Roth,’’ interview with Theresa Sturley in Interview Magazine (New York), February 1997.

On ROTH: articles—

Goldstein, Patrick, ‘‘The Japes of Roth,’’ in Premiere (New York), 8 April 1995.
Stahl, Jerry, ‘‘The Devil in Tim Roth,’’ in Esquire (New York), May 1995.
Bielby, Matt, ‘‘The Greats of Roth,’’ in Total Film (London), July 1997.
Mosley, John, ‘‘UnAmerican Psycho,’’ in Total Film (London), July 1997.
An English character actor who has made his name playing American toughs, Tim Roth is devoted to independent filmmaking and the promotion of new directorial talent. Leaving school with few qualifications, Roth initially signed up for a course at art college, but quit soon after to try his luck as an actor, despite having no formal training. By attending auditions whenever they were advertised in the trade papers, and with the help of bar-work and “dole” money when he was unemployed, Roth managed to establish himself as a stage actor. He moved into films partly because the opportunity presented itself, and partly because of severe stage fright, but although he can now command large fees from the major studios, most of his work has been with independents. His own directional debut, The War Zone (1999), is a characteristically uncompromising film, about a teenager who discovers an incestuous relationship between his sister and their father. It has been praised for the quality of the direction, which creates a suitably claustrophobic sense of isolation, entrapment, and loss.

Having grown up with politically active left-leaning parents in south London, Roth is interested in making films that take a realistic approach to poverty and violence. His first film appearance was as an alienated neo-nazi skinhead in Alan Clarke’s film, Made in Britain, which attempted to depict the social breakdown that took place in Britain in the early 1980s. Roth cites the socialist filmmaker Clarke as his greatest influence, and the person who inspired him to pursue filmmaking as a career. He spent the next seven years appearing in low-budget British films, such as Meantime, The Hit, and Return to Waterloo, generally playing the part of punks and other alienated characters.

After appearing in Peter Greenaway’s brutal parable, The Cook, the Thief, His Wife, and Her Lover, Roth made his first foray into American cinema in 1990, playing Vincent van Gogh in Robert Altman’s Vincent and Theo. His much-lauded performance was the beginning of a new phase in Roth’s career, and although he visits Britain about twice a year, since 1992 he has been based permanently in the United States. Even so, Roth remained loyal to independent filmmaking, avoiding being cast as the English-accented villain by meticulously studying American accents and taking Gary Oldman’s advice to make the accent very specific so that if you slip up “you’d only slip out of state, not the pond."

It was in 1992 that his role as the wounded undercover cop, “Mr Orange,” in Quentin Tarantino’s debut Reservoir Dogs brought him fame and notoriety in America. In one of the longest death scenes in movie history, Roth’s character spends almost the whole film slowly bleeding in the corner of a warehouse in which an armed gang takes refuge after a failed robbery. The pool of blood that expands around his prostrate body measures time running out for the gang as they bicker in the foreground. Perhaps what is most impressive about his performance in the film is his depiction of intense pain conflicting with frustration at being unable to resolve the situation and get to a hospital.

Roth has worked with Tarantino twice since, as Pumpkin, the stickup man in Pulp Fiction, and in the comedy Four Rooms, in which he plays a hotel bellhop, a character who ties together four short films each made by a different director. He also has had success with directors as diverse as Tom Stoppard and Woody Allen, and in roles as different as van Gogh and a TV salesman in Bodies, Rest and Motion. Even so, he has acquired a reputation for playing violent heavies, despite the fact that he stands only five-feet seven-inches tall, and is by all accounts a kind and compassionate man.

Reservoir Dogs is the most successful of Roth’s performances for first-time directors, but he has made a habit of choosing projects with new filmmakers, such as Jeff Stanzler and James Gray. That is not to say that he is entirely antagonistic towards Hollywood. As evidenced by Rob Roy, which he says earned him his first proper paycheck, and also an Oscar nomination, Roth’s attitude towards commercial Hollywood filmmaking is pragmatic: he admires actors like Harvey Keitel who work for the studios in order to free themselves for less popular and more challenging projects. Although he now earns a good living and can choose more carefully the projects he takes on, he still sums up his general approach thus: “You either want to get rich, or you want to be an actor.”

—Chris Routledge

ROURKE, Mickey

Films as Actor:

1979 1941 (Spielberg) (as Reese)
1980 City in Fear (“Allan Smithee,” i.e. Jud Taylor—for TV); Act of Love (Jud Taylor—for TV) (as Joseph Cybulkowski);
Heaven’s Gate (Cimino) (as Nick Ray); Fade to Black (Zimmerman) (as Richie); Rape and Marriage: The Rideout Case (Levin—for TV)
1981 Body Heat (Kasdan) (as Teddy Lewis)
1982 Diner (Levinson) (as Boogie)
1983 Rumble Fish (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Motorcycle Boy)
1984 The Pope of Greenwich Village (Rosenberg) (as Charlie; Eureka (Roeg—produced in 1982) (as Aurelio D’Amato)
1985 Year of the Dragon (Cimino) (as Stanley White)
1986 9½ Weeks (Lyne) (as John)
1987 Angel Heart (Alan Parker) (as Harry Angel); Barly (Schoeder) (as Henry Chinaski); A Prayer for the Dying (Hodges) (as Martin Fallon)
1989 Johnny Handsome (Walter Hill) (as John Sedley); Homeboy (Seresin) (as Johnny Walker, + story); Francesco (Cavani) (title role)
1990 Wild Orchid (Zalman King) (as James Wheeler); Desperate Hours (Cimino) (as Michael Bosworth)
1991 Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man (Wincer) (as Harley Davidson)
1992 White Sands (Donaldson) (as Gorman Lennox)
1993 The Last Outlaw (Geoff Murphy—for TV) (as Graff)
1994 The Last Ride (F. T. W.) (as Frank T. Wells)
1995 Full Time (Paul Warner) (as Florence)
1996 Exit in Red (Bogayevicz) (as Ed Altman); Bullet (Temple) (as Butch “Bullet” Stein)
(From left) Kevin Bacon, Mickey Rourke, Daniel Stern, and Timothy Daly in Diner

1997  Point Blank (Matt Earl Beesley) (as Rudy Ray); Double Team (Tsui) (as Stavros); Love in Paris (Another 9 1/2 Weeks) (as John); The Rainmaker (Coppola) (as Bruiser Stone)

1998  Thursday (Woods) (as Det. Kasarov); Buffalo '66 (Gallo) (as Bookie); Thicker Than Blood (Pearce—for TV) (as Father Frank Larkin)

1999  Shergar (Lewiston); Shades (Van Looy) (as Paul Sullivan); Out in Fifty (Christopher and Leet)

2000  The Animal Factory (Buscemi) (as Jan the Actress)

Publications

By ROURKE: articles—

Interview in Films and Filming (London), March 1990.

On ROURKE: book—

On ROURKE: articles—

McDonough, Tom, “Down and (Far) Out,” in American Film, November 1987.
Crawley, T., “The Man behind the Mask,” in Film Monthly (Berkhamsted, England), September 1990.
Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), Winter 1993.
Mickey Rourke’s career is one of unfulfilled potential. He might have developed into his generation’s John Garfield, Marlon Brando, Montgomery Clift, James Dean: a foremost on-screen interpreter of the sexually attractive but disillusioned and world-weary rebel hero/loner, and a modern-era practitioner of the Method. Unfortunately, he has been restricted by poor judgment in choosing his screen roles and, even more haplessly, an inability to coexist with his fellow actors and film makers. Indeed, stories of Rourke playing out the role of off-camera spoiled brat/bad boy are legion—and, after a while, they grow tiresome.

He began his career in promising fashion, with a starring role in the made-for-television movie Rape and Marriage: The Rideout Case, playing a husband who is accused by his wife of rape, and he impressed as the quiet, intense explosives expert in Body Heat. He had a nice showcase as a member of the ensemble cast of Diner (playing the womanizing Boogie), and emerged unscathed from Francis Coppola’s disappointing Rumble Fish (in the role of the Motorcycle Boy).

Diner and Rumble Fish feature casts laden with up-and-coming talent. In Diner, Rourke appears with Steve Guttenberg, Daniel Stern, Kevin Bacon, Ellen Barkin, and Paul Reiser; in Rumble Fish, his fellow actors include Matt Dillon, Diane Lane, Nicolas Cage, Christopher Penn, and Laurence Fishburne. Some of these actors have gone on to enjoy thriving celluloid careers. In particular, Bacon, Barkin, Dillon, Lane, Cage, Penn, and Fishburne have done arresting work on screen; in the mid-1990s, several—especially Bacon, Cage, and Fishburne—are entering their prime as major movie stars. But, while Rourke is not without several commendable credits on his filmography, as he nears his 40th birthday the sense about him is that his future movies will more than likely be of the direct-to-video variety.

Easily Rourke’s best screen role came in Barfly, based on the autobiographical musings of cult writer Charles Bukowski. Rourke plays Henry Chinaski, a self-destructive fall-down drunk, and his bravura performance predates that of Cage’s award-winning work almost a decade later in Leaving Las Vegas. Barfly, however, was to be the exception to, rather than the rule of, Rourke’s career. His casting in Johnny Handsome, Desperate Hours, and Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man is obscured by the fact that he turned down the leads in Beverly Hills Cop and Top Gun. After taking sixth billing in Nicolas Roeg’s Eureka, he may have declared, “I’d rather do a small part on a Roeg film than a big one in a Hollywood meatball movie.” But his attempts at “serious” filmmaking have been seriously misguided. A prime example: Year of the Dragon, a sloppily directed (by Michael Cimino) genre exercise in which he plays a Vietnam veteran/New York City cop. The scenario may have serious pretensions—Rourke’s character is named White; his main life-skill is killing; and he has brought the war home to the extent that he is involved in Chinatown hostilities. But in Year of the Dragon, the bottom line is that Rourke plays yet another boring, stereotypically violent Vietnam vet.

Rourke has, at the same time, chosen to work abroad, but with little impact. In the British-made A Prayer for the Dying, he sports a laughable accent playing an IRA hit man. In the Italian-German Francesco he plays Francis of Assisi, but the result is practically unwatchable. If his early performances were calm and cerebral, in Francesco Rourke embodies the worst stereotype of Method acting as he mumbles his way through the film.

Rourke also has specialized in erotically-charged roles. The best of these came in the ambitious but ultimately unsuccessful Angel Heart, playing a private eye; his erotic love scene (with Lisa Bonet) had to be cut to avoid an X-rating. In 9½ Weeks, he is cast as a bondage-hooked banker, and the result is a mess of a movie that earned headlines for Rourke’s lack of rapport with his co-star, Kim Basinger. The actor may have married his Wild Orchid co-star, Carre Otis; the film won notoriety for an infamous, supposedly unsimulated sex scene between the two. But Wild Orchid is a typical concoction of its director, Zalman King: dramatically inept soft-core pornography. At least Rourke did not appear in the sequel, Wild Orchid 2: Two Shades of Blue.

In 1991, Rourke became a professional boxer. As a youngster growing up on the mean streets of New York and Miami, his aspiration was to become a boxer. Nevertheless, his decision to turn pro at an age—35—when most career fighters are way beyond their primes was ill-advised. It was as if playing a pugilist on screen (as he had in Homeboy) was insufficient proof of his machismo. He had to one-up John Garfield, Robert Ryan, Kirk Douglas, and Sylvester Stallone—actors who appeared in classic boxing movies—by becoming the real McCoy.

Every actor is entitled to an occasional turkey, but Rourke’s career, once past its early, promising stages, is the equivalent of a Thanksgiving feast. “I’ve watched actors I’ve admired over the years sell out. That’s the worst crime of all,” he has said. While a noble thought, Rourke’s proclivity for misguided decision making (not to mention his oversized ego) is the dominating factor of his career.

—Rob Edelman

ROWLANDS, Gena

Gena Rowlands with Peter Falk in A Woman Under the Influence series Peyton Place, 1967; starred in Unhook the Stars, directed and co-scripted by son Nick Cassavetes, 1996; had a small role in She’s So Lovely, directed by Nick Cassavetes from a script by John Cassavetes, 1997. Awards: National Board of Review Best Actress, San Sebastian International Film Festival Best Actress, Best Motion Picture Actress-Drama Golden Globe, for A Woman Under the Influence, 1974; Berlin Film Festival Best Actress, for Opening Night, 1978; Italian Silver Ribbon for Best Foreign Actress, for Love Streams, 1983–84; Outstanding Lead Actress in a Miniseries or a Special Emmy Award, Best Performance by an Actress in a Mini-Series or Motion Picture Made for TV Golden Globe, for The Betty Ford Story, 1987; Outstanding Lead Actress in a Miniseries or a Special Emmy Award, for Face of a Stranger, 1991; Natuional Board of Review Career Achievement Award, 1996. Address: 7917 Woodrow Wilson Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90046, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1958 The High Cost of Loving (Ferrer) (as Virginia Fry)
1962 A Child Is Waiting (John Cassavetes) (as Sophie Widdicombe); Lonely Are the Brave (Miller) (as Jerri Bondi); The Spiral Road (Mulligan) (as Els)
1967 Tony Rome (Douglas) (as Rita Kosterman)
1968 A qualiasi prezzo (The Vatican Affair) (Miraglia); Faces (John Cassavetes) (as Jeanni Rapp); Gli intocabili (Machine Gun McCain) (Montaldo) (as Rosemary Scott)
1969 The Happy Ending (Richard Brooks)
1971 Minnie and Moskowitz (John Cassavetes) (title role)
1974 A Woman Under the Influence (John Cassavetes) (as Mabel Longhetti)
1976 Two-Minute Warning (Peerce) (as Janet)
1978 The Brink’s Job (Friedkin) (as Mary Pine); A Question of Love (Thorpe—for TV)
1979 Opening Night (John Cassavetes) (as Myrtle Gordon); Strangers: The Story of a Mother and Daughter (Katselas—for TV)
1980 Gloria (John Cassavetes) (title role)
1982 Tempest (Mazursky) (as Antonia)
1983 Thursday’s Child (Rich—for TV) (as Victoria Alden)
1984 Love Streams (John Cassavetes) (as Sarah Lawson)
1985 An Early Frost (Erman—for TV) (as Katherine Pierson)
1987 The Betty Ford Story (Greene—for TV) (title role); Light of Day (Schrader) (as Jeannette Rasnick)
1988 Another Woman (Woody Allen) (as Marion Post)
1990 Montana (Graham—for TV) (as Bess Guthrie)
1991 Once Around (Hallström) (as Marilyn Bella); Night on Earth (Jarmusch) (as Victoria Snelling); Face of a Stranger
Over the next 20 years, Rowlands’s career was inextricably linked with that of her husband. She starred in an additional five films he directed, including three in which he co-starred; in 1982, they played husband and wife in Paul Mazursky’s Tempest. Unlike any other director with whom Rowlands has worked, Cassavetes was able to successfully tap into the actress’s ability to depict a wide variety of female experiences, particularly playing women at extreme points of stress. Three years after the release of Faces, Rowlands appeared in Minnie and Moskowitz as Minnie, a lonely, former prom queen about to turn 40 who, after being dumped by her married boyfriend (Cassavetes), takes up with Moskowitz, an aging hippie who works as a parking lot attendant.

Then, as the tortured housewife Mabel Longhetti in A Woman Under the Influence, Rowlands garnered her greatest critical reviews, her depiction of a lower-middle-class woman’s struggle to maintain sanity striking a resonant chord with many viewers and critics. Sadly, Mabel lives her life through her husband and children; according to Rowlands, Mabel was “totally vulnerable and giving, she had no sense of her own worth, and was completely mirrored in the eyes of men.” In an intensely physical performance, Rowlands convincingly depicted the erratic behavior of a woman who finds she cannot always express herself in words. Mabel struggles valiantly but ineffectually with her psychological condition; never does Cassavetes romanticize her martyrdom. Made at a time when challenging, fully-developed female experiences, particularly playing women at extreme points of stress. Rowlands developed a certain motherly responsibility to this six-year-old Puerto Rican orphan. Lines of dialogue such as “I’m saving your life, stupid” encapsulate her confusion. Throughout, Rowlands never hedges in her meanness, despite the well-known acting school dictum that you must never be mean to kids or old people.

The next Cassavetes–Rowlands collaboration—Opening Night—had Rowlands playing Myrtle Gordon, an unmarried actress on the verge of a nervous breakdown, who attempts to come to terms with her private life through her theatrical career. It just so happens that she is undergoing a crisis of confidence while playing a woman who is facing the same situation. Here Cassavetes also plays the dual role: Myrtle’s former lover in real life, who also plays opposite her on stage.

Then, beginning with a statement that Rowlands made to her husband about her desire to work with a child, came the script of Gloria. As a hardened ex-showgirl and former girlfriend to a Mafia boss, Gloria is living on her own, with, as she claims, her own money and her own apartment. That is until her neighbor squeals on the mob boss, Gloria is living on her own, with, as she claims, her own money and her own apartment. That is until her neighbor squeals on the mob and Gloria is left holding his son and the book of evidence his father had compiled. Gloria walks tough; Rowlands explained that much of the power of her performance was communicated in the way she carried herself as she moves about on the streets of New York. According to her, it was a walk that said, “They’d better watch out.” Ultimately, Gloria is a trapped woman; she admits she hates kids, yet in following her code of what is right, she protects and eventually develops a certain motherly responsibility to this six-year-old Puerto Rican orphan. Lines of dialogue such as “I’m saving your life, stupid” encapsulate her confusion. Throughout, Rowlands never hedges in her meanness, despite the well-known acting school dictum that you must never be mean to kids or old people.

Their final project—Love Streams—is perhaps Cassavetes’s most successful film. As brother and sister, Rowlands and Cassavetes depict characters going through individual crises, she of divorce and custody, he as a writer in the throes of researching a book on... prostitution. Ultimately, Rowlands’s Sarah loves too much, particularly those who are less fortunate than she; she herself has recently been incarcerated in a mental institution. She desperately tries to prove that she is happy, and can function on her own. Sarah and Robert meet up and through several tumultuous scenes, reawaken childhood affections.

It is unfortunate that Rowlands no longer has Cassavetes to direct her, for very few others have tapped into her unique capabilities. In 1988, just before Cassavetes’s death, Woody Allen directed her in his Bergmanesque Another Woman, about a writer coming to terms with her life; the role was very much the kind Bergman wrote for Liv Ullmann. Unfortunately, the project lacked the piercing insights that mark Bergman’s work, and Rowlands was never fully able to plumb the depths of the character.

One of Rowlands’s most incisive performances outside her work with Cassavetes was as the mother dealing with her son’s AIDS in the television movie An Early Frost. Here, her character, at a point in her life of extreme stress, compassionately acknowledges her love for her son. But her best 1990s role was in Terence Davies’s The Neon Bible, cast as Aunt Mae, a blowsy swing band singer and aging Southern belle who comes to live with her young nephew and his family in a small town. Mae, like a character out of a Tennessee Williams play, fills the boy’s ear with colorful stories, but beneath her surface bravado is a melancholy soul; she is like the forlorn subject of one of the blues songs she sings, as she goes on to impart her feelings and vulnerabilities to her nephew.

In the late 1990s and well into her sixties, Rowlands busily worked in various theatrical and made-for-television features—and added character and class to them all. She excelled as Sandra’s Bullock’s eccentric small-town Texas mother in Hope Floats, and was well-cast as Sean Connery’s long-time mate in Playing By Heart. She still carried the Cassavetes banner, appearing in a bit role in She’s So Lovely, directed by son Nick Cassavetes from a script by her late husband. And her most telling role—one that is a notch below her Lovel deeper roles—is as the mother dealing with her son’s AIDS in the television movie An Early Frost. Here, her character, at a point in her life of extreme stress, compassionately acknowledges her love for her son. But her best 1990s role was in Terence Davies’s The Neon Bible, cast as Aunt Mae, a blowsy swing band singer and aging Southern belle who comes to live with her young nephew and his family in a small town. Mae, like a character out of a Tennessee Williams play, fills the boy’s ear with colorful stories, but beneath her surface bravado is a melancholy soul; she is like the forlorn subject of one of the blues songs she sings, as she goes on to impart her feelings and vulnerabilities to her nephew.

In the late 1990s and well into her sixties, Rowlands busily worked in various theatrical and made-for-television features—and added character and class to them all. She excelled as Sandra’s Bullock’s eccentric small-town Texas mother in Hope Floats, and was well-cast as Sean Connery’s long-time mate in Playing By Heart. She still carried the Cassavetes banner, appearing in a bit role in She’s So Lovely, directed by son Nick Cassavetes from a script by her late husband. And her most telling role—one that is a notch below her Aunt Mae—came in Unhook the Stars, a slice-of-life directed and co-scripted by her son. Here, Rowlands offered a finely modulated performance as a well-off sixtysomething widow who becomes immersed in the lives of a troubled neighbor and her young son while attracting the romantic interest of a French-Canadian truck driver.

—Doug Tomlinson, updated by Rob Edelman

RUSSELL, Jane

Nationality: American. Born: Ernestine Geraldine Russell in Bemidji, Minnesota, 21 June 1921; grew up in California. Education: Was graduated from Van Nuys High School. Family: Married 1) the athlete Bob Waterfield, 1943 (divorced 1968), three adopted children: Thomas, Tracy, Robert; 2) Roger Barrett, 1968 (died 1968); 3) John Calvin Peoples, 1974. Career: Receptionist, then model; studied acting at Max Reinhardt’s Theatre Workshop and Maria Ouspenskaya’s school; 1939-late 1950s—under contract to Howard Hughes; 1943—enormous publicity with release of her debut film The Outlaw; also worked on stage and in nightclubs; 1971—in the stage musical Company; spokeswoman for the Playtex Company; 1983-84 appeared in some episodes of TV series Yellow Rose. Address: c/o Webb, 7500 Devista Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90046, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1943 The Outlaw (Hughes) (as Rio)
1946 Young Widow (Marin) (as Joan Kenwood)
1948 The Paleface (McLeod) (as Calamity Jane)
1951 His Kind of Woman (Farrow) (as Lenore Brent); Double Dynamite (Cummings) (as Mildred Goodhug)
1952 Macao (von Sternberg) (as Julie Benson); Road to Bali (Walker) (as herself); The Las Vegas Story (Stevenson) (as Linda Rollins); Son of Paleface (Tashlin) (as Mike); Montana Belle (Dawn) (as Belle Starr)
1953 Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks) (as Dorothy)
1954 The French Line (Lloyd Bacon) (as Mary Carson); Underwater! (John Sturges) (as Theresa)
1955 Foxfire (Pevney) (as Amanda Lawrence); Gentlemen Marry Brunettes (Sale) (as Bonnie/Mimi Jones); The Tall Men (Walsh) (as Nella Turner)
1956 Hot Blood (Nicholas Ray) (as Annie Caldash); The Revolt of Mamie Stover (Walsh) (title role)
1957 The Fuzzy Pink Nightgown (Taurrog) (as Laurel Stevens)
1964 Fate Is the Hunter (Ralph Nelson) (as herself)
1966 Johnny Reno (Springsteen) (as Nona Williams); Waco (Springsteen) (as Jill Stone)
1967  The Born Losers (Laughlin) (as Mrs. Shorn)
1970  Darker than Amber (Clouse) (as Alabama Tiger)

Publications

By RUSSELL: book—

By RUSSELL: articles—

On RUSSELL: book—

On RUSSELL: articles—
Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), Autumn 1993.

Most stars develop an image, but Jane Russell was an image before she was properly a movie star. Even today, she is likely best remembered as the busty, cleavaged sex symbol of The Outlaw’s huge publicity campaign than as, for example, Dorothy in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. The image (together with the accompanying slogan, “Mean, moody, magnificent”) was much parodied, but hardly required it: it was a parody already. Of what? Female sexual provocation, of course, in a culture that has not been reluctant to endorse the equation sexuality = woman = evil. But even worse: an active, aggressive, desiring female sexuality. “How would you like to tussle with Russell?” was always meant, presumably, to be a question that daunted viewers as much as aroused them. How—within a male-dominated culture that takes the phallus as its symbol of power, a culture in which male potency is thus continuously threatened and dominated culture that takes the phallus as its symbol of power, a culture in which male potency is thus continuously threatened and dominated—can active female sexuality be represented except as parody? (There are, in fact, two other options: it can be set up in order to be punished and subdued, or it can be quite straightforwardly vilified.) Jane Russell was always something of a joke because what the image stood for could not be seriously contemplated.

Russell’s role in The Outlaw is in fact remarkably innocuous: the film is so obsessed with male homosexuality that it marginalizes her completely. Movie reviewers routinely dismissed her performance, but they did note the contribution her breasts made to the production. Indeed, director Howard Hughes conducted a nationwide “talent” search for the perfect actress to play Rio; and he selected Russell based almost solely upon her amply endowed physique. Accordingly, it was clearly not the role but the image that made her a kind of star. But what kind? What could be done with her? It seems inevitable that, after one or two false starts, she would be shifted into comedy; inevitable even, that she would find a special if temporary niche partnering Bob Hope, most of whose humor is rooted in sexual ineffectuality, so that the comic-parodic side of the Russell persona becomes even more pronounced.

One might also have predicted—given a certain auteurist hindsight—that if Russell were to have a moment of real glory it would be in collaboration with Howard Hawks; one wonders how different her career might have been had Hawks directed her in The Outlaw as was originally intended (he directed only a couple of scenes at the beginning of the film, before Russell was introduced). Hawks’s delight in assertive women, and his insistence that the role of Dorothy be developed especially for her, enabled Russell, in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, to play comedy in which female sexual attractiveness becomes the positive norm in a ridiculous world of male incompetence and inanity. Although Marilyn Monroe was unequivocally the star of Gentlemen, Russell rises to this considerable challenge to deliver a clever performance as her wisecracking, sexually experienced, and less materially motivated friend. And, in one of the film’s most memorable numbers, “Ain’t There Anyone Here for Love?,” Russell is enchanting as a woman who is quite comfortable in the company of scores of barely clad athletic men. Little wonder that the film’s final scene, the double wedding, ends with the camera moving in to frame Russell and Monroe as they smile at each other rather than at their husbands.

—Robin Wood, updated by Cynthia Felando

RUSSELL, Rosalind

Films as Actress:

1934  Evelyn Prentice (Howard) (as Nancy Harrison); The President Vanishes (Wellman) (as Sally Voorman); Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke) (as Eleanor)
1935  The Night Is Young (Murphy) (as Countess Rafay); West Point of the Air (Rosson) (as Dare); The Casino Murder Case (Marin) (as Doris); Reckless (Fleming) (as Jo); China Seas
Rosalind Russell

(Garnett) (as Sybil Barclay); Rendezvous (Howard) (as Joel Carter)

1936
It Had to Happen (Del Ruth) (as Lady Venetia); Trouble for Two (Ruben) (as Miss Vandeleur/Princess Brenda); Craig's Wife (Arzner) (as Harriet Craig)

1937
Night Must Fall (Thorpe) (as Olivia); Live, Love, and Learn (Fitzmaurice) (as Julie Stoddard)

1938
Man-Proof (Thorpe) (as Elizabeth); Four's a Crowd (Curtiz) (as Jean Christy); The Citadel (Vidor) (as Christine Manson)

1939
Fast and Loose (Marin) (as Garda Sloane); The Women (Cukor) (as Sylvia Fowler)

1940
His Girl Friday (Hawks) (as Hildy Johnson); No Time for Comedy (Keighley) (as Linda Easterbrook); Hired Wife (Seiter) (as Kendal Browning)

1941
This Thing Called Love (Married but Single) (Hall) (as Ann Winters); They Met in Bombay (Brown) (as Anya Von Duren); Design for Scandal (Taugro) (as Cornelia Porter)

1942
Take a Letter, Darling (Leisen) (as A. M. MacGregor); My Sister Eileen (Hall) (as Ruth Sherwood)

1943
Flight for Freedom (Mendes) (as Tonic Carter); What a Woman! (Cummings) (as Carol Kingsley)

1945
Roughly Speaking (Curtiz) (as Louise Randall); She Wouldn't Say Yes (Hall) (as Susan Lane)

1946
Sister Kenny (Nichols) (title role)

1947
The Guilt of Janet Ames (Levin) (title role); Mourning Becomes Electra (Nichols) (as Lavinia Mannon)

1948
The Velvet Touch (Gage) (as Valerie Stanton)
1949
Tell It to the Judge (Foster) (as Marsha Meredith)
1950
A Woman of Distinction (Buzzell) (as Susan Middelcott)
1952
Never Wave at a WAC (McLeod) (as Jo McBain)
1955
The Girl Rush (Pirosi) (as Kim Halliday)
1956
Picnic (Logan) (as Rosemary Sydney)
1958
Auntie Mame (Da Costa) (title role)
1961
A Majority of One (LeRoy) (as Mrs. Jacoby)
1962
Five Finger Exercise (Mann) (as Louise Harrington); Gypsy (LeRoy) (as Rose) 1966
The Trouble with Angels (Lupino) (as Mother Superior)
1967
Oh, Dad, Poor Dad (Mackendricks) (as Madame Rosepettle)
1968
Rosie! (Rich) (title role); Where Angels Go—Trouble Follows! (Neilson) (as Mother Simplectic)
1971
Mrs. Pollifax—Spy (Martinson) (title role)
1972
The Crooked Hearts (Sandrich—for TV) (as Laurita Dorsey)

Film as Writer:

1956 The Unguarded Moment (Keller) (co-sc)

Publications

By RUSSELL: book—

On RUSSELL: books—

On RUSSELL: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.

* * *

In 1965 Rosalind Russell gave David Zeitlin of Life magazine her prescription for success in acting: “It’s okay to have talent, but talent is the least of it. In a performance or a career, you’ve got to have vitality. I’ve worked with actors and actresses far better than I’ll ever be—as far as talent goes. But what they have just doesn’t register because they don’t have a . . . drive underneath a project . . . . Sometimes what you have to do is almost claw your work onto film.” That two-fisted approach worked well in such larger-than-life characters as Sylvia Fowler (The Women), Hildy Johnson (His Girl Friday), Ruth Sherwood (My Sister Eileen), Mame Dennis (Auntie Mame), and Rose (Gypsy), but badly in more subtle or multidimensional roles as Lavinia Mannon (Mourning Becomes Electra), Bertha Jacoby (A Majority of One), and Louise Harrington (Five Finger Exercise). Still, despite her excesses, Russell cornered the market on the intelligent, fast-talking, well-dressed career woman, and her superb comic timing was arguably the best in the business.

Russell’s film career can be divided into roughly three periods. In the 1930s she played the “other woman” in major films and the resilient leading lady of minor ones, usually getting Joan Crawford’s or Myrna Loy’s discarded roles. Her first real break came in 1935 when Myrna Loy decided not to play opposite William Powell in Rendezvous, a spy comedy in the Thin Man tradition. Russell’s first starring role came a year later when MGM lent her out to Columbia to do Craig’s Wife. Though too young for the part, she received excellent notices as a fastidious, domineering housewife. Despite this critical acclaim (or perhaps because of it), she was still locked into a type—the young, well-dressed sophisticate.

The Women marked a transition in her career and made her a star. Russell played a malicious chatterbox in a flamboyantly exaggerated comic style. Producer Hunt Stromberg had intended to cast Ilka Chase (who originated the role on stage), declaring Russell “too beautiful” and “a fine dramatic actress, but not a comedienne.” Russell kept pushing for the part and made five tests until she got it.

After The Women Russell was accepted enthusiastically as a full-fledged comedienne and in 1940 played the role for which (with the possible exception of Mame) she is most remembered—Hildy Johnson. With a breakneck, clenched-teeth delivery, she deflates the lesser mortals around her (all men), lighting her own cigarettes and disarming a murderer, while trying to decide between a career (newspaper reporting) and marriage. She gets them both in the end, but opts for convivial Cary Grant (one of the few leading men able to stand up to her on screen) over the mealy-mouthed Ralph Bellamy.

Throughout the 1940s Russell played a seemingly endless series of career women with (she claimed) essentially the same office set. Once again she had been typecast. Although the 1940s brought her three Oscar nominations for parts deviating from type (My Sister Eileen, Sister Kenny, and, inexplicably, Mourning Becomes Electra), only My Sister Eileen was commercially successful and her career went into a decline.

By the 1950s Russell was too old for her “type,” so she returned to the stage, appearing in Bell, Book and Candle, Wonderful Town (a musical version of My Sister Eileen), and Auntie Mame. She appeared in a few films during that period, the best of which was Picnic, for which she undoubtedly would have been nominated as Best Supporting Actress had she agreed to be considered for that category. Russell’s two-year stage role as Mame Dennis led to her best film in over a decade—Auntie Mame. Modeling the role on one of her sisters, she received a fourth Oscar nomination for her zany portrayal, but did not work again in film until three years later.

With the exception of Gypsy, which offered her a part large enough to encompass her pull-out-all-the-stops theory of acting, Russell’s film roles in the last decade of her career were an embarrassment—either because she misunderstood the characters (e.g., Bertha Jacoby and Louise Harrington) or because the films themselves were bad (e.g., Where Angels Go, Trouble Follows and Mrs. Pollifax—Spy).

Discussing her career, she remarked: “There are only two ways to get ahead in Hollywood. You either have to get one great picture a year—these propel you forward—or your impact has to be made with a lot of pictures.” Clearly she went the latter route, her vivacious intelligence and snappy delivery remaining in our memories in the leaner years of her career.

—Catherine Henry

RUSSO, Rene

Films as Actress:

1989 Major League (Ward) (as Lynn Wells)
1990 Mr. Destiny (Orr) (as Cindy Jo)
1991 One Good Cap (Gould) (as Rita Lewis)
1992 Lethal Weapon 3 (Donner) (as Lorna Cole); Freejack (Murphy) (as Julie Redlund)
1993 In the Line of Fire (Petersen) (as Lilly Raines)
1994 Major League II (Ward) (as Lynn, uncredited)

Rene Russo and Dustin Hoffman in Outbreak
1995
Get Shorty (Sonnenfeld) (as Karen Flores); Outbreak (Petersen) (as Dr. Roberta “Robby” Keough)

1996
Ransom (Howard) (as Kate Mullen); Tin Cup (Shelton) (as Dr. Molly Griswold)

1997
Buddy (Thompson) (as Trudy Lintz)

1998
Lethal Weapon 4 (Donner) (as Lorna Cole)

1999
The Thomas Crown Affair (McTiernan) (as Catherine Banning)

2000
The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle (McAnuff) (as Natasha Fatale)

Publications

On RUSSO: articles—

* * *

At a time when the media were increasingly complaining about Hollywood’s tendency to pair increasingly older leading men with increasingly younger female costars (Michael Douglas and Gwyneth Paltrow in A Perfect Murder, Sean Connery and Catherine Zeta-Jones in Entrapment), along came the remake of The Thomas Crown Affair (1999), starring the incredibly sexy Rene Russo, who was less than two years younger than costar Pierce Brosnan. While other actresses and most models go to great lengths to conceal their true age, this actress-turned-model has never been shy about mentioning hers (45 when Thomas Crown premiered), most likely because she is relying less and less on her looks and more and more on her burgeoning acting ability.

Many descriptions of Russo’s storybook entry into modeling don’t quite have the facts correct. She wasn’t at a Rolling Stones concert but was, in fact, walking home from the concert when Hollywood talent agent John Crosby spotted her, stopped his car and asked her if she acted or modeled. Russo had heard that line before, but the fact that Crosby was with his wife at the time and asked her to come to his office with her mother led her to think he might be serious. Within weeks she had signed a contract with the Ford Modeling Agency and was being photographed by internationally known photographer Richard Avedon, and within months she was on the cover of Vogue, among other magazines. But as she entered her thirties and the assignments dwindled, she dropped out of modeling completely and began studying Christian theology. According to Russo, God appeared to her in a vision and showed her there was nothing to be afraid of, including her long-felt desire to be an actress. Crosby, still her agent to this day, got her roles in such films as Major League (1989), Mr. Destiny (1990), One Good Cop (1991) and Freejack (1992), but it wasn’t until Lethal Weapon 3 (1992) that she really began to shine, playing not just Mel Gibson’s love interest but a sergeant from Internal Affairs who keeps right up with Gibson and Glover in delivering the series’ trademark wisecracks. In his review for the Chicago Sun-Times, Roger Ebert complained about the film lacking the inventiveness that brightened the first two installments, but singled out Russo as one of the element that made the film “worth seeing, and that set it aside from the routine movies in this genre.”

Her reviews in her next film, the Clint Eastwood film In the Line of Fire (1993), were even more glowing. The New York Times said Russo “works terrifically well with Mr. Eastwood. Their scenes have some of the caustic spirit of the material Ruth Gordon and Garson Kanin used to write for Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn. They are genuinely funny lovers.” In 1995 she starred in Outbreak, playing a virologist who joins ex-husband Dustin Hoffman in tracking down a deadly virus, and in Get Shorty, playing a B-movie actress who specializes in screaming.

But her two roles in 1996 demonstrated that she could play much more than tough competent professional women. In Tin Cup she played Dr. Molly Griswold, a flaky psychologist caught between rival golfers played by Kevin Costner and Don Johnson. According to Russo, “I’ve played all these confident, together, get-the-job-done women, but Molly’s really the closest to me. She’s searching. One minute she’s strong and the next she doesn’t know what the heck she’s doing.” Tin Cup director Ron Shelton called her “that rarity of rarities: an unvan beautiful woman.” In Ransom (again opposite Mel Gibson) she had her greatest challenge, playing a mother whose son has been kidnapped. It would have been easier to continually show hysteria, but she gives a modulated performance that shows her at times turning against her husband and at times just stopping to collect herself.

Her role as Catherine Banning in The Thomas Crown Affair may have been less challenging, but showed her to be totally fearless, with sizzling star power. Rolling Stone said of her performance, “Russo gives off enough carnal heat to singe the screen. Topless on the beach, torrid on the dance floor and a tiger between the sheets, Catherine is fantasy made flesh. That she’s played, with a tough core of intelligence and wit, by a forty-five-year-old actress is some kind of miracle in Hollywood, a place where most women lose their babe status as soon as they’re old enough to vote.” Her acting ability will most likely enable her to make the transition to ‘older’ parts, but at this rate that necessity may be a long way off.

—Bob Sullivan

RUTHERFORD, (Dame) Margaret

Films as Actress:

1936 Dusty Ermine (Hideout in the Alps) (Vorhaus) (as Miss Butterby); Talk of the Devil (Reed) (as housekeeper); Troubled Waters (Parker)
1937 Beauty and the Barge (Edwards) (as Mrs. Baldwin); Big Fella (Wills); Catch as Catch Can (Atlantic Episode) (Kellino) (as Maggie Carberry); Missing. Believed Married (Carstairs) (as Lady Parke)
1941 Spring Meeting (Mycroft) (as Aunt Bijou); Quiet Wedding (Asquith) (as Magistrate)
1943 The Yellow Canary (Wilcox) (as Mrs. Towcester); The Demi-Paradise (Adventure for Two) (Asquith) (as Rowena Ventnor)
1944 English without Tears (Her Man Gilbey) (French) (as Lady Christobel Beauclerk)
1945 Blithe Spirit (Lean) (as Mme. Arciay)
1947 While the Sun Shines (Asquith) (as Dr. Winifred Frye); Meet Me at Dawn (The Gay Duellist) (Freeland) (as Mme. Vernmorel)
1948 Miranda (Annakin) (as Nurse Cary); Passport to Pimlico (Cornelius) (as Prof. Hatton-Jones)
1950 The Happiest Days of Your Life (Launer) (as Miss Whitchurch); Her Favourite Husband (The Taming of Dorothy) (Soldati) (as Mme. Dotherington)
1951 The Magic Box (Boultigny) (as Lady Pond)
1952 Curtain Up (Smart) (as Jeremy St. Clare); The Importance of Being Earnest (Asquith) (as Miss Prism); Castle in the Air (Cass) (as Miss Nicholson); Miss Robin Hood (Guillermin) (as Miss Honey)
1953 Innocents in Paris (Parry) (as Gwladwys Inglot); Trouble in Store (Carstairs) (as Miss Bacon)
1954 The Runaway Bus (Guest) (as Cynthia Beeston); Aunt Clara (Kimmens) (as Clara Hilton); Mad about Men (Thomas) (as Nurse Carey)
1955 An Alligator Named Daisy (Thompson) (as Prudence Croquet)
1957 The Smallest Show on Earth (Dearden) (as Mrs. Fazackerlee); Just My Luck (Carstairs) (as Mrs. Dooley)
1959 I’m All Right Jack (Boultigny) (as Aunt Dolly)
1961 Murder She Said (Pollock) (as Jane Marple); On the Double (Shavelson)
1963 The Mouse on the Moon (Lester) (as Grand Duchess Gloriana); Murder at the Gallop (Pollock) (as Miss Marple); The V.I.P.s (Asquith) (as Duchess of Brighton)
1964 Murder Most Foul (Pollock) (as Miss Marple); Murder Ahoy (Pollock) (as Miss Marple)
1965 The Alphabet Murders (Pollock) (as Miss Marple)
1966 A Countess from Hong Kong (Chaplin) (as Mrs. Gauslswallow); Chimes at Midnight (Campanadas a medianoche; Falstaff) (Welles) (as Hostess Quickly)
1967 The Wacky World of Mother Goose (Bass) (as voice); Arabella (Bolognini) (as Princess Ilaria)

Publications

By RUTHERFORD: book—

On RUTHERFORD: books—

On RUTHERFORD: articles—

James Mason, asked to name his favorite leading lady, said that he tried rating them all by stars and that the only five-star lady was Margaret Rutherford. She was an exceptional and well-loved comedian, who began her working life as a teacher of piano and elocution before a small legacy enabled her to attend the Old Vic school to study drama. She had various successful stage roles before making her first film in 1936, Dusty Ermine. She had a highly unorthodox appearance—the demeanor of a startled turkey-cock, the jaws of a bloodhound and a highly unwieldy frame. All of this marked her out to be a character actress, a term applied to women not considered attractive enough to be the love interest in films. Margaret Rutherford’s screen career depended on her playing variations on the theme of delightfully dotty “spinster,” either intense, gushing, and absentminded or tweedy and austere.

She played all her roles with aplomb and perspicacity and had a superb sense of timing. She was the irrepressible and flamboyant Madame Arcati in Blithe Spirit, the enthusiastic Medieval expert in Ealing Studio’s Passport to Pimlico, and the unforgettable, floating Miss Prism in The Importance of Being Earnest. In The Happiest Days of Your Life she starred with Alastair Sim, who played the headmaster of the school upon which Rutherford and her truculent “gels” are billeted with uproarious consequences (shades of St. Trinian’s). He was her male counterpart in the realms of the British Eccentric—realms that they ruled with equal gusto and gladiatorial insolence. Raymond Durgnat writing in A Mirror for England noted that “British guls” about the system are often expressed in two ways: their veneration for eccentrics and their much touted sense of humour . . . (they) are usually ‘upperclass’ in origin and either of independent means or firmly ensconced in authority . . . they are usually variations on old-fashioned father and aunt figures and the eccentricity is not eccentricity at all, but the old upperclass way of speaking out boldly and rudely.”

Several other eccentric roles followed for Margaret Rutherford for she played Miss Marple in several MGM Agatha Christie films, where once again her unlikely and sexually “unappealing” exterior hid a true and marvelous ingenuity and a remarkable and scrupulous intelligence. Her elegant comic touch and her warmth were triumphant in every role she played—a glorious galleon in full sail firing salvos at all who crossed her bow.

—Sylvia Paskin
RYAN, Meg

Films as Actress:

1981 Rich and Famous (Cukor) (as Debby at 18); Amy and the Angel (Rosenblum—for TV) (as Denise)
1983 Amityville 3-D (Amityville: The Demon) (Fleischer) (as Lisa)
1986 Armed and Dangerous (Lester) (as Maggie Cavanaugh); Top Gun (Scott) (as Carole Bradshaw)
1987 Innerspace (Dante) (as Lydia Maxwell)
1988 Promised Land (Young Hearts) (Hoffman) (as Bev); D.O.A. (Morton and Jankel) (as Sydney Fuller); The Presidio (Hyams) (as Donna Caldwell)
1989 When Harry Met Sally . . . (Rob Reiner) (as Sally Albright)
1990 Joe versus the Volcano (Shanley) (as DeDe/Angelica/Patricia)
1991 The Doors (Oliver Stone) (as Pamela Courson)
1992 Prelude to a Kiss (René) (as Rita Boyle)
1993 Sleepless in Seattle (Nora Ephron) (as Annie Reed); Flesh and Bone (Kloves) (as Kay Davies)
1994 I.Q. (Schepisi) (as Catherine Boyd); When a Man Loves a Woman (Mandoki) (as Alice Green)
1995 French Kiss (Paris Match) (Kasdan) (as Kate, + co-pr); Restoration (Hoffman) (as Katherine)
1996 Courage under Fire (Zwick) (as Capt. Karen Walden); Two for the Road (as Joanna, + pr)
1997 Addicted to Love (Dunne) (as Maggie); Anastasia (Bluth, Goldman) (voice of Anastasia)
1998 Harlyburly (Drazan) (as Bonnie); City of Angels (Silberling) (as Maggie); You’ve Got Mail (Ephron) (as Kathleen Kelly)
2000 Hanging Up (Keaton) (as Eve)

Publications

By RYAN: articles—

On RYAN: articles—

Premier (New York), May 1997.

* * *

Before Meg Ryan achieved the top rank of stardom with When Harry Met Sally . . . in 1989, she had attracted notice in a number of memorable supporting roles on television and in film. Her big-screen debut was as Candice Bergen’s daughter in Rich and Famous in 1981 and she acquired fans with her role in the soap opera As the World Turns from 1982–84, but it was in Top Gun, as Anthony Edwards’s wife and then widow, that she made her first major impression. Her line to Edwards, “Take me to bed or lose me forever,” became something of a catch phrase for teenage girls in the summer of 1986 and Ryan and Edwards stole much of the spotlight away from the film’s leads, Tom Cruise and Kelly McGillis.

Ryan’s raw-nerve, wild-girl image in Top Gun may have caused Michael Hoffman to cast her in Promised Land, two years later. While the film sank under a surfeit of unstructured adolescent angst, Ryan’s performance as Kiefer Sutherland’s violence prone, white-trash bride impresses and even shocks today’s viewers who only know her from her later romantic comedies. Her Bev in that film suggests that Ryan has a range that has gone sadly unused, even in her recent dramatic roles in Flesh and Bone and When a Man Loves a Woman.

After Promised Land, however, Ryan sank comfortably back into “girlfriend-of-the-lead” parts in D.O.A. and The Presidio. It was in Rob Reiner’s When Harry Met Sally . . ., that Ryan emerged as a major star and solidified the comic persona that would dominate much of her career in the coming years. Ryan’s faked orgasm scene in that film would be widely replayed and comparisons would be drawn between her and Carole Lombard. Ryan offered a winsome amalgamation of innocence and big city savoir faire; her inchoate romantic schemes seemed to evaporate across her face before being fully solidified but Ryan always managed to land her man in the final reel. If the Lombard comparison was a bit pat, one could compare Ryan to the remarkably similar Clara Bow in the 1927 film, It. As with Bow in that Hoover-era picture, Ryan offered the Reagan-Bush years a post-Jane Fonda, post-Sally Field image of the “strong” woman who gets what she wants through feminine ingenuity while maintaining a supple, girlish demeanor. This was hardly a persona feminists took to—even Camille Paglia would criticize Ryan’s image in print—but it won the actress a coveted place in the hearts of many filmgoers who yearned for a return to preliberation sex roles and attitudes.
Meg Ryan with Nicholas Cage in City of Angels

Ryan did stretch a bit in Joe versus the Volcano (where she played three distinct roles) and Prelude to a Kiss (where her character’s body is possessed by an elderly, ill man who fortuitously gets a new lease on life). Neither film, however, had the enormous impact of 1993’s Sleepless in Seattle. In that Nora Ephron film, as an engaged woman who leaves her fiancé to track down a dream man she has heard about on the radio, Ryan offered another canny alternative to the “strong” and perhaps subliminally threatening female stars of the period.

While Sleepless in Seattle grossed $188 million, Ryan may have played out that film’s kind of character to the point where audiences have become a bit wary. I.Q. for Fred Schepisi in 1994 was a critical and box-office disappointment and 1995’s French Kiss, co-produced by her new production company, did not recapture the success of her earlier blockbusters. The latter’s only modest box-office success, despite a witty script, sharp direction, and some of Ryan’s most skillful and precise comic work, points to the actress’s need to explore other options in film roles. When A Man Loves a Woman, where Ryan plays an alcoholic mother, earned her a certain amount of respect as a dramatic actress, and Edward Zwick’s Courage under Fire, where she plays a Persian Gulf War hero, seems calculated to help Ryan shift gears into a more complex mode of performance for the second half of the nineties.

—Daniel Humphrey

RYAN, Robert

Awards: Special Prize, U.S. National Society of Film Critics, for The Iceman Cometh, 1973. Died: Of cancer, in New York City, 11 July 1973.

Films as Actor:

1927 The College Widow (Mayo) (as extra)
1929 Strong Boy (Ford) (bit role as baggage man)
1940 Golden Gloves (Dmytryk) (as Pete Wells); Queen of the Mob (Hogan) (as Jim); The Ghost Breakers (George Marshall) (as intern); Northwest Mounted Police (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Constable Dumont)
1941 Texas Rangers Ride Again (Hogan) (as Eddie)
1943 Bombardier (Wallace) (as Joe Connors); The Sky’s the Limit (Edward H. Griffith) (as Reg Fenton); Behind the Rising Sun (Dmytryk) (as Lefty); Gangway for Tomorrow (Auer) (as Joe Dunham); The Iron Major (Enright) (as Father Tim Donovan); Tender Comrade (Dmytryk) (as Chris)
1944 Marine Raiders (Schuster) (as Capt. Dan Craig)
1947 Trail Street (Enright) (as Allen Harper); The Woman on the Beach (Renoir) (as Scott); Crossfire (Dmytryk) (as Monty Montgomery)
1948 Berlin Express (Touren) (as Robert Lindley); Return of the Badmen (Enright) (as Sundance Kid); Act of Violence (Zinnemann) (as Joe Parkson); The Boy with Green Hair (Losey) (as Dr. Evans)
1949 Caught (Max Ophuls) (as Smith Ohlrig); The Set-Up (Wise) (as Stoker Thompson); The Woman on Pier 13 (I Married a Communist) (Stevenson) (as Brad Collins)
RYAN

1950 The Secret Fury (Ferrer) (as David); Born to Be Bad (Nicholas Ray) (as Nick Bradley)
1951 Best of the Badmen (William D. Russell) (as Jeff Clanton); Flying Leathernecks (Nicholas Ray) (as Griff); The Racket (Cromwell) (as Nick Scanlon); On Dangerous Ground (Nicholas Ray) (as Jim Wilson)
1952 Clash by Night (Fritz Lang) (as Earl Pfeiffer); Beware My Lovely (Horner) (as Howard Wilton); Horizons West (Boetticher) (as Dan Hammond)
1953 City beneath the Sea (Boetticher) (as Brad Carlton); The Naked Spur (Anthony Mann) (as Ben Vandergroat); Inferno (Roy Baker) (as David Carson)
1954 Alaska Seas (Jerry Hopper) (as Matt Kelly); About Mrs. Leslie (Daniel Mann) (as George Leslie); Twelve Men (Leonard) (as Joe Hargrave); Bad Day at Black Rock (John Sturges) (as Reno Smith)
1955 Escape to Burma (Dwan) (Jim Brecan); House of Bamboo (Fuller) (as Sandy Dawson); The Tall Men (Walsh) (as Nathan Stark)
1956 The Proud Ones (Webb) (as Marshal Cass Silver); Back from Eternity (Farrow) (as Bill Larnigan)
1957 Men in War (Anthony Mann) (as LT Benson)
1958 God’s Little Acre (Anthony Mann) (as Ty Ty Walden); Lonelyhearts (Miss Lonelyhearts) (Donehue) (as William Shrike)
1959 Day of the Outlaw (De Toth) (as Blaise Starrett); Odds against Tomorrow (Wise) (as Earle Slater)
1960 Ice Palace (Sherman) (as Thor Storm)
1961 The Canadians (Kennedy) (as Inspector William Gannon); King of Kings (Nicholas Ray) (as John the Baptist)
1962 The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Wicki, and Oswald) (as Brig. Gen. James M. Gavin); Billy Budd (Ustinov) (as Master-at-Arms John Claggart)
1963 The Inheritance (Mayer—doc) (as narrator)
1964 Battle of the Bulge (Annakin) (as Gen. Grey); The Crooked Road (Chaffey) (as Richard Ashley)
1965 La Guerre secrète (La guerra segreta; Spione untersich; The Dirty Game; The Dirty Agents) (Terence Young, Christian-Jaque, and Lizzani) (as Gen. Bruce); The Professionals (Richard Brooks) (as Hans Ehrengard)
1966 The Busy Body (Castle) (as Charley Barker); The Dirty Dozen (Aldrich) (as Col. Everett Dasher-Breed); Hour of the Gun (The Law and Tombstone) (John Sturges) (as Ike Clanton)
1967 Custer of the West (Good Day for Fighting) (Siodmak) (as Sgt. Mulligan); Excommunicado (Un Minuto per Preghere un Instante per Morire; A Minute to Pray, a Second to Die; Dead or Alive) (Giraldi) (as Governor Lem Carter); Lo Sbarco di Anzio (Anzio; The Battle for Anzio) (Dmytryk) (as Gen. Carson)
1968 The Wild Bunch (Peckinpah) (as Deke Thornton)
1970 Captain Nemo and the Underwater City (James Hill) (title role)
1971 Lawman (Winner) (as Marshal Cotton Ryan); The Love Machine (Haley Jr.) (as Gregory Austin)
1972 Le Course, du lièvre a travers les champs (. . . And Hope to Die) (Clément) (as Charley)
1973 The Lolly-Madonna War (Lolly-Madonna XXX) (Sarafian) (as Pap Gutshall); Executive Action (David Miller) (as Foster); The Outfit (The Good Guys Always Win) (Flynn) (as Mailer); The Iceman Cometh (Frankenheimer) (as Larry Slade); The Man without a Country (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Vaughan)

Publications

On RYAN: books—

On RYAN: articles—
Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1955.
Ecran (Paris), November 1979.

* * *

Robert Ryan was unique among Hollywood stars for having been both an Ivy League graduate (Dartmouth, class of 1931) and an undefeated intercollegiate boxing champion, heavyweight class. Thus he brought to his acting career the unusual combination of a fine education and an authentic tough-guy reputation. In his early years out of college, he found work in a depression environment wherever he could, first spending two hot and dirty years as engine room janitor on a freighter that steamed from New York to East Africa around the Cape and back, then touring the country in one odd job after another—gold prospecting and cowpunching in northern Montana, department store modeling and working a desk job with the board of education in Chicago.

When he ended up in California in 1939, he enrolled at the Max Reinhardt Actors’ Workshop, which led to his stage debut in Too Many Husbands at Belasco Theatre in Los Angeles. A Paramount Pictures talent scout was impressed enough by Ryan’s opening night performance to offer him a $75 a week contract, which he accepted on the spot. With Paramount, he then made his feature film debut, appropriately cast as a boxer in a B movie entitled Golden Gloves. He found steady work in small parts, with his first big break coming in 1943 as co-star to Ginger Rogers in Crossfire. His chilling performance not only earned him an Oscar nomination as Best Supporting Actor, it also tended to type him for the majority of the screen roles to follow. His film persona relied on that of the smooth surface which covers a twisted interior. Ryan was a big man, 6’ 3’’ tall, with dark hair and good looks. He might have become a traditional “handsome hero” leading man, but instead he began playing articulate villains, the kind who could talk their way out of places and build alibis for themselves in any kind of situation. In addition to the obvious acting skill such roles require, Ryan had the sort of Irishness viewers often associate with blarney. He added to it a suspicious smile and overly confident manner which seemed to suggest hidden strength and possible danger, an undercurrent of violence and cruelty. With these characteristics, he created a gallery of some of the most interesting villains ever seen on film, and built a career out of crime films, films noir, melodramas, and Westerns.

For the majority of the moviegoing public, he is most associated with the last genre. (Ryan himself referred to his “long, seamy face” as being perfect for Westerns.) His filmography reads as a chronology of the development of the genre in the postwar period, from such classics as Anthony Mann’s The Naked Spur and John Sturges’s Bad Day at Black Rock through Raoul Walsh’s The Tall Men, Budd Boetticher’s Horizons West, and Andre De Toth’s Day of the Outlaw to the iconoclastic film by Sam Peckinpah, The Wild Bunch. Recently, much critical attention has been given to Ryan’s seminal contributions to film noir, especially given his appearance in films by many of that genre’s most important directors, notably Jean Renoir (The Woman on the Beach), Max Ophüls (Caught), Robert Wise (The Set-Up), Nicholas Ray (On Dangerous Ground), and Fritz Lang (Clash by Night).

Always an actor to seek challenge and a change, Ryan returned to the New York stage in 1954, starring in Coriolanus. From that time on, he moved back and forth from his film career to his stage career, creating successes in theater both in Los Angeles and New York, and particularly finding praise for his outstanding performance in an excellent revival of The Front Page shortly before his death. Unfortunately, over the last eight years of his life Ryan was largely relegated to cameos in big pictures, such as The Dirty Dozen, Custer of the West, and Anzio (although he made more money in this period than in the first 25 years of his film career combined).

Ryan guided his entire career with intelligence and seriousness of purpose. Since his desire was to be more than a movie star, he willingly accepted roles that did not create a lovable persona. Because of this, he did not attract as large a following as some other stars. Nevertheless, he always maintained a reputation for quality and reliability. Seen in retrospect, this quality places him at the center of film history, as he appeared in many films which, although not Oscar winners of their day, are now considered classics worthy of serious attention and study. In this way, history and time are making Robert Ryan into one of the most interesting stars of Hollywood films.

—Jeanine Basinger, updated by David E. Salamie

RYDER, Winona

Films as Actress:

1986 Lucas (Seltzer) (as Rina)
1987 Square Dance (Home Is Where the Heart Is) (Petrie) (as Gemma)
1988 Beetlejuice (Burton) (as Lydia Deetz); 1969 (Ernest Thompson) (as Beth)
1989 Great Balls of Fire! (McBride) (as Myra Gail Lewis); Heathers (Lethal Attraction; Westerberg High) (Lehmann) (as Veronica Sawyer)
1990 Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael (Abrahams) (as Dinky Bosetti); Mermaids (Richard Benjamin) (as Charlotte Flax); Edward Scissorhands (Burton) (as Kim Boggs)
1991 Night on Earth (Jarmusch) (as Corky)
1992 Bram Stoker’s Dracula (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Mina Murray/Elisabeta)
1993 The Age of Innocence (Scorsese) (as May Welland)
1994 The House of the Spirits (August) (as Blanca); Reality Bites (Stiller) (as Lelaina Pierce); Little Women (Armstrong) (as Jo March)
1995 How to Make an American Quilt (Moorhouse) (as Finn Dodd)
1996 The Crucible (Hytner) (as Abigail “Abby” Williams); Looking for Richard (Pacino) (as Lady Anne); Boys (Cochran) (as Patty Vare)
1997 Alien Resurrection (Jean-Pierre Jeunet) (as Annalee Call)
1998 Celebrity (Allen) (as Nola)
1999 Girl, Interrupted (Mangold) (as Susanna Kayser + exec pr)
2000 Lost Souls (Kaminski) (as Maya Larkin); Autumn in New York (Chen); Tanto per stare insieme (Just to Be Together) (Antonioni)

Publications

By RYDER: articles—

Winona Ryder (bottom) and Sigourney Weaver in Alien Resurrection

On RYDER: articles—

Campbell, V., and E. Margulies, “All the Right Moves,” in Movieline (Escondido), March 1994.

* * *

At an age when young people are in the throes of starting high school, Winona Ryder was making her screen debut in Lucas. When many teenagers are thinking about who to ask to the senior prom, Ryder was starring in Beetlejuice. And when young adults are finishing college and pondering their futures, Ryder already had appeared on-screen in Heathers, Great Balls of Fire!, Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael, Edward Scissorhands, Mermaids, and Bram Stoker’s Dracula. Despite all of these credits, Ryder’s career had not yet peaked. She would become one of the rare adolescent actresses to segue into a prominent adult career.

In her early films, Ryder more often than not was cast as an intelligent but essentially ingenuous and alienated young person. In Lucas and Square Dance, she effectively plays sensitive adolescents. Later, she did well as the friendless small-town eccentric in Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael; the thoughtful, distressed daughter in Mermaids; and, in particular, the teen who hangs out, albeit uncomfortably, with her high school’s princess-shrews and eventually opts for independence in Heathers. But the role which brought her to popular attention was in Tim Burton’s Beetlejuice, where she played a self-described “strange and unusual” adolescent with a morbid fashion sense. Not all of Ryder’s characters were unconventional; in Edward Scissorhands, she is the otherwise average teen who comes to love an android. Two of her more important roles were in Francis Coppolla’s Bram Stoker’s Dracula, in which she plays both Elisabeta (who kills herself upon obtaining erroneous news that her beloved, the fifteenth-century Romanian king Vlad the Impaler, had died in battle) and Mina Murray (the fiancée of Jonathan Harker and the love-object of Dracula). In the Los Angeles segment of Jim Jarmusch’s Night on Earth, Ryder plays one of her more centered characters: Corky, a rough-around-the-collar type who would much rather be a mechanic than a movie star. Corky’s character is contrasted with a chic casting agent who drips Beverly Hills and is wedded to her portable telephone.

Ryder’s first truly compelling contemporary “adult” role came in Ben Stiller’s Reality Bites, one of the earliest in a mid-1990s cycle of Generation X coming-of-age movies. The conflicts experienced by her character, Lelaina Pierce, mirror the personal and professional frustrations of post-Baby Boomer twentysomethings who grew up in dysfunctional families and are products of American pop culture. Ultimately, it is difficult for Lelaina to “find [her] own identity without having any heroes or role models.” She also has come to adulthood in a declining economy. So despite her college diploma, she may not have a white-collar future. In one telling sequence, Lelaina, who was valedictorian of her college graduation class, applies for employment in a fast-food restaurant: the type of job which, under different circumstances, she would have had part-time back in high school. Still, some of the issues with which Lelaina deals are, in their essence, age-old. With whom does she fall in love? Does she sustain a relationship with the yuppie who is flashy and successful? Does she turn the product of grunge culture, who will never buy her a tennis bracelet but is at least honest in his response to the world around him? Ryder offers an attractive performance as Lelaina, capturing all of the character’s confusion and frustration.

In her two Oscar-nominated roles to date, Ryder donned period costumes in adaptations of classic American novels. In Martin Scorsese’s sumptuously produced but only intermittently engaging The Age of Innocence, based on the book by Edith Wharton, she is the proper young lady whom the old-fashioned lawyer Daniel Day Lewis is engaged to marry. And in Gillian Armstrong’s Little Women, based on the Louisa May Alcott classic, she makes a vibrant Jo March, the story’s central character. Her follow-up to Little Women was similar in that it too was directed by a woman, and tells the story of the strength in female relationships; Jocelyn Moorhouse’s How to Make an American Quilt. As in Reality Bites, Ryder plays a perplexed contemporary twentiesomething: Finn Dodd, who is about to be married and who spends a summer at the home of her grandmother and great aunt. There, she discovers truths about friendship and loving relationships from the members of a quilting circle.

During the late 1990s Ryder played a range of roles. She offers a spunky performance as an uncharacteristic villainess, a deceitful young woman who incriminates the married man with whom she is infatuated, in The Crucible, Arthur Miller’s political allegory of the McCarthy/HUAC witchhunt. While she is sorely miscast as an action heroine in Alien Resurrection, she is a bewitching presence as an ambitious waitress/wannabe actress in Woody Allen’s Celebrity. In Girl, Interrupted, Ryder plays yet another asocial young person, a character who may be directly linked to so many of her earlier roles. Even though she was in her late twenties when she made the film, she is believable as a recent high school graduate whose aimlessness and inability to fit into pre-feminist late 1960s upper-class Boston suburban society results in her being dispatched to a psychiatric hospital with a “borderline personality disorder.” In Girl, Interrupted, Ryder displays a canny ability to communicate her character’s thoughts and mental state. When given a meaty role—as she was in Little Women, The Crucible, or Girl, Interrupted—Ryder is a pleasure to watch. She remains one of the most accomplished actresses of her generation.

—Rob Edelman

RYU, Chishu

Films as Actor:
1929 Wakaki hi (Days of Youth) (Ozu) (as student)
1930 Rakudai wa shitakeredo (Flunked, But . . .) (Ozu) (as passing student); Sono yo no tsuna (That Night’s Wife) (Ozu) (as policeman)
1932 Umarete wa mita keredo (I Was Born, But . . .) (Ozu); Seishun no yume ima izuko (Where Now Are the Dreams of Youth?) (Ozu) (as Shimazaki)
1933 Tokyo no onna (Women of Tokyo) (Ozu) (as reporter); Hijosen no onna (Dragnet Girl) (Ozu) (as policeman); Dekigokoro (Passing Fancy) (Ozu) (as man on boat)
1934 Haka o kowazuya (A Mother Should Be Loved) (Ozu) (as Hattori)
1935 Tokyo no yado (An Inn in Tokyo) (Ozu)
1936 Daigaku yoitoko (College Is a Nice Place) (Ozu) (as Amano); Hotori musuko (The Only Son) (Ozu) (as Okubo)
1941 Todake no kyodai (Brothers and Sisters of the Toda Family) (Ozu) (as friend)
Chichi ariki (There Was a Father) (Ozu) (as Shuhei Horikawa); Minami ni kaze (South Wind) (Yoshimura)

Nagaya Shinshiroku (Record of a Tenement Gentleman) (Ozu) (as Tashiro)

Kaze no naka no mendori (A Hen in the Wind) (Ozu) (as Kazuichiro Satake)

Banshun (Late Spring) (Ozu) (as Shukicki Somiya, the father)

Munekata shimai (The Munekata Sisters) (Ozu) (as Takachika Munekata)

Bakushu (Early Summer) (Ozu) (as Koichi); Karemen Kyoko ni kaeru (Carmen Comes Home) (Kinoshita)

Ochazuke no aji (The Flavor of Green Tea over Rice; Tea and Rice) (Ozu) (as Sadao Hirayama)

Tokyo monogatari (Tokyo Story) (Ozu) (as Shukicki Hirayama)

Nijushi no Hitomi (Twenty-Four Eyes) (Kinoshita)

Shoshun (Early Spring) (Ozu) (as Kiichi Onodera)

Tokyo boshoku (Twilight in Tokyo) (Ozu) (as Shukichi Sugiyama)

Higanbana (Equinox Flower) (Ozu) (as Shukichi Mikami); Muhomatsu no issho (The Rickshaw Man) (Inagaki) (as Mr. Yuki)

Ohayo (Good Morning) (Ozu) (as Keitaro Hayashi); Ukiyousa (Floating Weeds; The Duckweed Story; Drifting Weeds) (Ozu) (as theater owner)

Akihitori (Late Autumn) (Ozu) (as Shukichi Miwa, the uncle); Warai yatsu hodo yoku nemura (The Bad Sleep Well; The Rose in the Mud; The Worse You Are, the Better You Sleep) (Kurosawa) (as Nonaka)

Yato kaze no naka o shuisha (Bandits on the Wind) (Inagaki) (as village priest); Kohayagawa-ke no aki (The End of Summer, Early Autumn; Last of Summer) (Ozu) (as a farmer); Gen to fudou-myo (The Youth and His Amulet) (Inagaki); Ningen no joken III (A Soldier’s Prayer) (Kobayashi) (as village elder)

Onna no za (The Wiser Age; Woman’s Status) (Naruse); Samna no aji (Autumn Afternoon) (Ozu) (as Shuhei Hirayama)

Daikun to ninjin (Twilight Path; Radishes and Carrots) (Shibuya) (as Tokichi Tamaki)

Akahige (Red Beard) (Kurosawa) (as Yasumoto’s father)

Nippon no ichiban nagai hi (The Emperor and a General) (Okamoto) (as Prime Minister)

Nihonkai daikaisen (Battle of the Japan Sea) (Maruyama) (as Gen. Nogi); Eiko eno kurohyo (Fight for the Glory) (Ichimura) (as Yonoshin)

Nikudan (Okamoto)

When We Are Old (Iyoda)

Gubijin (Ohyama); I Lived But (Inone); Ososhiki (The Funeral Rites; The Funeral; Death, Japanese Style) (Itami) (as the priest)

Otoko wa Tsuraiyo: Toraijiro kokoro no tabiji (Tora-San Goes to Vienna) (Yamada) (as Gozen-Sama, Priest)

Otoko wa Tsuraiyo: Toraijiro kokoro no tabiji (Tora-San Goes to Vienna) (Yamada) (as Gozen-Sama, Priest)

Village of the Watermills” ep. of Akira Kurosawa’s Dreams (Dreams) (Kurosawa) (as 103 year old man)

Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Mr. Mori)

Hikarigoke (Luminous Moss) (Kumai) (as judge)

Publications

By RYU: articles—

On RYU: articles—

Obituary in Skrien (Amsterdam), June-July 1993.

Obituary in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), July 1993.

* * *

Yasujirō Ozu’s method of filmmaking demanded a style of acting and a kind of actor at the opposite extremes from the Method school so familiar in the West. Every sequence, every shot within it, and every detail (whether of decor or gesture) within every shot, was planned by the director, his screenwriter (most often Kogo Noda), and his cinematographer (usually Yuharu Atsuya) during the evolution of the film. The actors were never asked to improvise or psychologize; instead they were expected to subordinate themselves to the overall compositional design of the film and be able to communicate the most meticulous and subtle inflections of expression and gesture under Ozu’s direction. According to Chishu Ryu, Ozu “fixed each actor into each shot,” and so one imagines that the ascetic discipline required of Ryu’s early (and abandoned) training to follow his father as a Buddhist priest had some lasting value for his acting career.

Chishu Ryu was Ozu’s lifelong friend and the most regular member of the stock company of actors he drew together. He is in Ozu’s earliest surviving film (his eighth) Wakaki hi (1926), and is in all the last 17 (and the star of many) of the director’s films. Just how consistent his contributions were in between is somewhat difficult to determine, as many of the films are lost or inaccessible. In the later works, Ryu’s appearances take on the character of a directorial trademark: if there is no star role for him, he turns up in a brief cameo, perhaps with no more than a line or two of dialogue. (Ryu’s consistent dependability was perhaps his defining quality as a professional: he was reportedly also on hand for all 45 of director Yoji Yamada’s inexplicably popular Tora-san films.)

In many of the later films the director/actor relationship becomes clearly symbiotic, in an extremely complex and fruitful way. There is no question of Ryu “playing” Ozu or being a mouthpiece for the director’s statements, yet one repeatedly senses a special sympathy between the director and the Ryu character, a sympathy which never precludes the possibility of critical distance. In Banshun and Tokyo monogatari, for example, we are made firmly aware of the character’s limitations: the film’s vision is far wider than his vision, which it contains and transcends. The limitations (and this is consistent with other late Ozu works, not necessarily starring Ryu, for example Equinox Flower are defined in relation to the female characters (especially those played by Setsuko Hara): Ozu’s subtle feminism has never been as acknowledged as Mizoguchi’s or Naruse’s, and Ryu’s most frequent role in Ozu’s universe as a gentle yet somewhat obtuse patriarch deserves reviewing in this light.

In his final film appearances, Ryu is an explicitly revered icon, for both his aging contemporaries (such as Kurosawa) and younger acolytes, such as Wim Wenders, whose pilgrimage to meet Ryu in Tokyo-Ga is a moving tribute to both Ozu and his favorite actor.

—Robin Wood, updated by Corey K. Creekmur
SABU, Selar Shaik

Films as Actor:

1937 Elephant Boy (Flaherty, Korda) (as Toomai)
1938 The Drum (Drums) (Korda) (as Prince Azim)
1940 The Thief of Baghdad (Berger, Powell, Whelan, Alexander Korda [uncredited], Zoltan Korda [uncredited], and William Cameron Menzies [uncredited]) (as Abu)
1942 Jungle Book (Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Book) (Korda) (as Mowgli); Arabian Nights (Rawlins) (as Ali Ben Ali)
1943 White Savage (White Captive) (Lubin) (as Orano)
1944 Cobra Woman (Siodmak) (as Kado)
1946 Tangier (Waggener) (as Pepe)
1947 Black Narcissus (Powell, Pressburger) (as Young Prince); The End of the River (Twist) (as Manoel)
1948 Man-Eater of Kumaon (Haskin) (as Narain)
1949 Song of India (Rogell) (as Ramdar)
1951 Savage Drums (Berke) (as Tipo Tairu)
1952 Buongiorno, elefante! (Hello Elephant; Pardon My Trunk) (Franciolini) (as Sultan of Nagore)
1953 The Black Panther (Ormond) (as Sabu the Jungle Boy)
1954 Il Tesoro del Bengala (The Treasure of Bengal) (Vernuccio) (as Ainur); Baghdad
1956 Jungle Hell (Jungle Boy) (Cerf) (as Jungle Boy); Jaguar (Blair) (as Juanu)
1957 Sabu and the Magic Ring (Blair) (as Sabu, the stable boy)
1960 Herrin der Welt—Teil I (Formel des Todes—Teil I, Die) (Dieterle, Angst [uncredited]) (as Dr. Lin-Chor)
1963 Rampage (Karlson) (as Talib)
1964 A Tiger Walks (Tokar) (as Ram Singh)

Publications

On SABU: articles—

“Story of Sabu: From Elephant Boy to Screen Star,” in Senior Scholastic, 24 September 1938.
Obituary in Newsweek, 16 December 1963.

* * *

In 1934 Frances Flaherty, wife of the noted documentarian and filmmaker Robert Flaherty, wrote from India to a friend about a film project called Elephant Boy. At the time they had not yet found an actor for the title role, but were interviewing possible candidates. “I watch them play around,” she writes, “kicking a football, shouting and fighting like kids everywhere, and think of the strange stroke of fate that is hanging over one of them. There is one boy among them . . . different from the other sprightly little sprouts. He is rather pathetic, more reserved, an orphan. His mother’s family came from Assam, where the people are part Mongolian. His name is Sabu.”
Selar Shaik Sabu’s father had died in 1931; his mother died in 1924 soon after his birth. Sabu became a ward of the Maharajah of Mysore for whom his father had been a 4th generation mahout, or elephant driver. As was customary, the boy followed in his father’s profession. His skill, combined with a natural intelligence and charm, gave him the edge over the other boys, and he spent the next year working for the Flahertys. The actual filming suffered extensive delays due to bad weather.

Taken to Britain in 1937, along with his brother, Dastagir, (an error when they passed through British customs led to the widespread misapprehension that the actor’s name was Sabu Dastagir) to help publicize the film, Sabu became an instant star. The film was loosely based on “Toomai of the Elephants,” one of the tales in Rudyard Kipling’s Jungle Books, and fed the popular British interest in the exotic details of life in its colonial empire. Based on the success of his first starring role, Sabu was next chosen to play one of the two protagonists in The Drum, a story of the friendship between an Indian prince and a British drummer boy, which was filmed in Wales.

Sabu’s first visit to the United States was a publicity tour for The Drum. He was to return for location shooting for his third, and best, film The Thief of Bagdad, and eventually to take up American citizenship. The young actor’s enthusiastic performance as Abu, the titular chief, shares equal credit for the phenomenal popularity of this film with the art direction of William Cameron Menzies, who had also worked on the original Douglas Fairbanks version in 1925.

The Thief of Bagdad also suffered extensive delays, mostly due to Britain’s entry into World War II; this, combined with the need to do some location shooting in the Grand Canyon and the Painted Desert, is what caused the shift of filming to Hollywood. Living in Hollywood, Sabu was tempted to sign a multi-film contract with Universal, which he did in 1942, the same year he finished his last film for Alexander Korda (who had produced his first three films), The Jungle Book. Based on four more stories from Kipling’s work of the same name (“Mowgli’s Brothers,” “How Fear Came,” “Tiger! Tiger!” and “The King’s Ankus”), The Jungle Book features Sabu as Mowgli, a boy abandoned by his parents in the jungle and raised by a pack of wolves. The film very ably contrasts “the ways of man” with those Mowgli learned from his adoptive family, both by letting us listen in as he is educated by his human mother (Rosemary de Camp) after his return to human society, and through a voice-over narration by Joseph Calleia, which makes the participation of animals as characters possible.

Although he could not have guessed it at the time, Sabu’s signing of the contract with Universal marked the beginning of the downward spiral of his acting career. In the 1940s American audiences developed a fascination with “the exotic” similar to that of the British public which first caused Sabu’s removal from his native state. Other personalities who briefly became stars in this period were Carmen Miranda, Turhan Bey, and Maria Montez. While they might appear as supporting actors in major Hollywood productions, they were more often seen in the B-movies which in many cases were only a few cuts above exploitation movies. Universal Studios was particularly adept at turning out this sort of film.

In rapid order Universal placed Sabu in three films in which he received third billing, after Montez and Jon Hall—Arabian Nights, White Savage, and The Cobra Woman. The Indian actor began to take on his familiar role as the entertaining sidekick to the star (Jon Hall) in these movies, and the plots were mostly constructed from amusing nonsense which was partially covered up by the, then less common, use of Technicolor to accentuate the exotic nature of the settings.

Sabu became an American citizen early in 1944 and immediately enlisted in the U. S. Army Air Force. He became a tail-gunner on B-29s in the Pacific theater, flew 42 combat missions, and earned a Distinguished Service Cross, the Air Medal, four battle stars and three clusters. After the war he returned to Universal to make Tangier with Maria Montez, and then returned to England where he was reunited with his Thief of Bagdad director, Michael Powell, in a supporting role in Black Narcissus. After another British picture, End of the River, the actor returned to America for his last effort at Universal, The Man-Eater of Kumaon. Moving over to Columbia, Sabu starred in Song of India, made personally notable for him by his meeting with Marilyn Cooper, who was to become his wife. Recognizing that his film career was fading, soon after his 1948 marriage the actor diversified into real estate and other ventures, a prescient move since the jungle and fantasy films in which he had made his name fell out of favor as the 1950s progressed.

For the rest of his life, Sabu took whatever work came his way, including one Allied Artists film whose title contained his name, Sabu and the Magic Ring. During this period he acted in three European productions, and successfully sued to stop the distribution of Jungle Hell, in which footage of him from a never-released project was combined with a mishmash of other footage without his knowledge. On 2 December, 1963, Sabu suffered a fatal heart attack. He was just 39 years old.

—Stephen Brophy

SAINT, Eva Marie

Films as Actress:

1954 On the Waterfront (Kazan) (as Edie Doyle)
1956 That Certain Feeling (Panama and Frank) (as Dunreath Henry)
1957 A Hatful of Rain (Zinnemann) (as Celia Pope); Raintree Country (Dmytryk) (as Nell Gaither)
1959 North by Northwest (Hitchcock) (as Eve Kendall)
1960 Exodus (Preminger) (as Kitty Fremont)
1962 All Fall Down (Frankenheimer) (as Echo O’Brien)
1964 36 Hours (Seaton) (as Anna Hessler); A Carol for Another Christmas (Mankiewicz—for TV) (as Wave)
Eva Marie Saint

1965  The Sandpiper (The Flight of the Sandpiper) (Minnelli) (as Claire Hewitt)

1966  The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming (Jewison) (as Elspeth Whittaker); Grand Prix (Frankenheimer) (as Louise Frederickson)

1969  The Stalking Moon (Mulligan) (as Sarah Carver)

1970  Loving (Kershner) (as Selma Wilson)

1972  Cancel My Reservation (Bogart) (as Sheila Bartlett)

1976  A Christmas to Remember (Englund—for TV) (as Emma Larson)

1979  When Hell Was in Session (Krasny—for TV) (as Mrs. Jeremiah Denton)

1980  The Curse of King Tut’s Tomb (Leacock—for TV) (as Sarah Morrissey)

1981  The Best Little Girl in the World (O’Steén—for TV) (as Joanne Powell); Splendor in the Grass (Sarafian—for TV)

1983  Malibu (Swackhamer—for TV) (as Mary Wharton); Jane Doe (Nagy—for TV) (as Dr. Addie Coleman)

1984  Fatal Vision (David Greene—for TV) (as Mildred Kassab); Love Leads the Way (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Mrs. Eustes)

1986  Nothing in Common (Garry Marshall) (as Lorraine Basner); The Last Days of Patton (Delbert Mann—for TV)

1988  Breaking Home Ties (Norman Rockwell’s Breaking Home Ties) (John Wilder—for TV); I’ll Be Home for Christmas (Chomsky—for TV) (as Martha Bundy)

1991  Palamino (Danielle Steel’s Palomino) (Michael Miller—for TV) (as Caroline Lord)

1993  Kiss of a Killer (Elikann—for TV) (as Mrs. Wilson)

1995  My Antonia (Sargent—for TV) (as Grandmother Burden)

1996  Mariette in Ecstasy (Bailey) (as Mother Saint-Raphael); After Jimmie (Jordan—for TV) (as Liz); Titanic (Lieberman—for TV) (as Hazel Foley)

1997  Time To Say Goodbye (David Hugh Jones)

1999  Jackie’s Back! (Townsend—for TV) (as herself)

2000  I Dreamed of Africa (Hudson) (as Franca)

Publications

By SAINT: article—

Interview with Michael Buckley, in Films in Review (New York), May 1983.

On SAINT: article—

* * *

In one sense, Eva Marie Saint is the perfect example of a talent that Hollywood never quite figured out how to use. Her career failed to develop in any confident direction after she won an Academy Award for her first film, On the Waterfront. To paraphrase Marlon Brando’s famous line, “she should’ve been a contender.”

In almost all her films, Saint has been presented as an outwardly vulnerable, fragile woman who possesses a surprising inner strength. This image has carried her through a series of roles as either a supportive wife (A Hatful of Rain; All Fall Down; 36 Hours; The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming; and Loving) or a determined, resourceful mother (The Stalking Moon, Loving, The Best Little Girl in the World, and The Macahans). Only Alfred Hitchcock employed the reverse of this image, casting Saint against type as an outwardly strong woman with a hidden vulnerability in North by Northwest.

While never cast in a role of central importance, Saint has frequently highlighted the talents of the men with whom she has starred. Her ability to pay attention, show interest, and respond has made many actors look very good indeed. Don Murray’s strongest scenes in A Hatful of Rain are those with Saint, actually interacting with her instead of simply reciting monologues for the camera. Warren Beatty’s initial recognition as a serious actor occurred when he appeared opposite Saint in All Fall Down. Gregory Peck’s role as a resourceful Westerner in The Stalking Moon was made particularly poignant by Saint’s portrayal of a complex woman who merits his protection. Perhaps George Segal’s best work was in Loving with...
Saint. Ironically, Bob Hope recognized and used Saint’s ability to make an actor look good and charge a film with believability in That Certain Feeling and Cancel My Reservation.

Following the latter, Saint has had little opportunity to show her acting skill on the big screen. Mostly, she has valiantly risen above the largely inferior television productions that predominate her late-career filmography, with only occasional forays back to the screen, such as the underdeveloped role as mother of Tom Hanks and wife of Jackie Gleason, whom she leaves after 36 years of marriage, in Nothing in Common. Her better television performances include her role as Crissy in the mini-series The Outsider (as Simon Templar) (as Indifference); The Saint in London (as Roddy Burch); The Man Who Could Work Miracles (as Dr. Odell); The Strange Woman (as Albert Richter); Lured (as Lt. Michael Bruce) (as John Warwick); Uncle Harry (as Victor) (as Gordon); Invasion of the Body Snatchers (as Captain Swanson); The Saint Takes Over (as Simon Templar) (as Major Quive-Smith); The Gay Falcon (Reis) (title role); A Date with the Falcon (Reis) (title role); Sundown (Hively) (as Gurko Lanen)

—Stuart M. Kaminsky, updated by David E. Salamie

SANDERS, George

Nationality: British. Born: St. Petersburg, Russia, of English parents, 3 July 1906. Education: Attended a Russian grade school; Dunhurst Preparatory School; Bedales School; Brighton College; Manchester Technical School. Family: Married 1) the actress Susan Larson, 1940 (divorced 1949); 2) the actress Zsa Zsa Gabor, 1949 (divorced 1957); 3) the actress Benita Hume, 1958 (died 1967); 4) the actress Magda Gabor, 1970 (divorced 1970). Career: Worked in a Birmingham textile mill, in the tobacco business, and as an advertising writer; then in show business as a chorus boy, in a cabaret act, on radio, and as understudy in London; 1936—film debut in Find the Lady; contract with 20th Century-Fox: U.S. film debut in Lloyd’s of London; in the Saint and the Falcon series over the next few years; 1957—host of TV series The George Sanders Mystery Theatre. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Academy Award for All about Eve, 1950. Died: Suicide, 25 April 1972.

Films as Actor:

1936 Find the Lady (Gillett) (as Curly Randall); Strange Cargo (Huntington) (as Roddy Burch); The Man Who Could Work Miracles (Mendes) (as Indifference); Dishonor Bright (Walls) (as Lisle); Lloyd’s of London (Henry King) (as Lord Everett Stacy); Things to Come (Menzes) (as Pilot)

1937 Love Is News (Garrett) (as Count Andre de Guyon); Slave Ship (Garrett) (as Lefty); The Lady Escapes (Forde) (as Rene Blanchiard); Lancer Spy (Ratoff) (as Lt. Michael Bruce)

1938 International Settlement (Forde) (as Del Forbes); Four Men and a Prayer (Forde) (as Wyatt)

1939 Mr. Moto’s Last Warning (Foster) (as Eric Norvell); So This Is London (Freeland); The Saint Strikes Back (Farrow) (as Simon Templar); Confessions of a Nazi Spy (Litvak) (as Schlager); The Saint in London (Carstairs) (as Simon Templar); Allegheny Uprising (Seiter) (as Captain Swanson); Nurse Edith Cavell (Wilcox) (as Captain Heinrichs)

1940 The Outsider (Stein) (as Ratagzy); Green Hell (Whales) (as Forrester); Rebecca (Hitchcock) (as Jack Flavell); The Saint’s Double Trouble (Hively) (as Simon Templar/The Boss); The House of the Seven Gables (May) (as Jaffrey Pynchon); The Saint Takes Over (Hively) (as Simon Templar); Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock) (as Fiofliott); Bitter Sweet (Van Dyke) (as Baron von Tranisch); The Son of Monte Cristo (Lee) (as Gurko Lanen)

1941 Rage in Heaven (Van Dyke) (as Ward Andrews); The Saint in Palm Springs (Hively) (as Simon Templar); Man Hunt (Fritz Lang) (as Major Quive-Smith); The Gay Falcon (Reis) (title role); A Date with the Falcon (Reis) (title role); Sundown (Hively) (as Major Coombes)

1942 Son of Fury (Cromwell) (as Sir Arthur Blake); The Falcon Takes Over (Reis) (title role); Her Cardboard Lover (Cukor) (as Tony Barling); Tales of Manhattan (Duuvier) (as Williams); The Moon and Sixpence (Lewin) (as Charles Strickland); The Falcon’s Brother (Logan) (as Gay Lawrence); The Black Swan (Henry King) (as Captain Billy Leech); Quiet Please, Murder (Larkin) (as Fleg)

1943 This Land Is Mine (Renoir) (as George Lambert); They Came to Blow Up America (Ludwig) (as Carl Stealman); Appointment in Berlin (Green) (as Keith Wilson); Paris after Dark (Moguy) (as Dr. Andre Marbel)

1944 Action in Arabia (Moguy) (as Gordon); The Lodger (Brahm) (as John Warwick); Summer Storm (Sirk) (as Fedor Michailovich Petroff)

1945 The Picture of Dorian Gray (Lewin) (as Lord Henry Wotton); Hangover Square (Brahm) (as Dr. Allan Middleton); Uncle Harry (The Strange Affair of Uncle Harry) (Siodmak) (title role)

1946 A Scandal in Paris (Sirk) (as Vidocq); The Strange Woman (Ulmer) (as John Evered)

1947 The Private Affairs of Bel Ami (Lewin) (as George Duroy); The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Mankiewicz) (as Miles Fairley); Lured (Sirk) (as Robert Fleming); Forever Amber (Preminger) (as Charles II)

1949 The Fan (Lady Windermere’s Fan) (Preminger) (as Lord Darlington); Samson and Delilah (DeMille) (as The Saran of Gaza)

1950 Captain Blackjack (Duuvier) (as Mike Alexander); All about Eve (Mankiewicz) (as Addison De Witt)

1951 I Can Get It for You Wholesale (Gordon) (as Noble); The Light Touch (Brooks) (as Felix Guignol)

1952 Ivanhoe (Thorpe) (as De Bois-Guilbert); Assignment—Paris (Parrish) (as Nick Strange)

1954 Viaggio in Italia (Journey to Italy; Voyage to Italy) (Rossellini) (as Alexander Joyce); Call Me Madam (Walter Lang) (as Cosmo Constantine)

1955 Witness to Murder (Rowland) (as Albert Richter); King Richard and the Crusaders (Butler) (as Richard I); Jupiter’s Darling (Sidney) (as Fabius Maximus)

1959 Moonfleet (Lang) (as Lord Ashwood); The Scarlet Coat (Sturges) (as Dr. Odel); The King’s Thief (Leondard) (as Charles II); Night Freight (Yarborough) (as disc jockey)

1956 Never Say Goodbye (Hopper) (as Victor); While the City Sleeps (Fritz Lang) (as Mark Loving); That Certain Feeling (Panama and Frank) (as Larry Larkin); Death of a Scoundrel (Martin) (as Clementi Sabourn)

1957 The Seventh Sin (Neame and Minnelli) (as Tim Waddington)
1958  The Whole Truth (Guillermin) (as Carliss); From Earth to the Moon (Haskin) (as Stuyvesant Nicholl)
1959  That Kind of Woman (Lumet) (as the man); Solomon and Sheba (King Vidor) (as Adonijah)
1960  A Touch of Larceny (Hamilton) (as Sir Charles Holland); The Last Voyage (Stone) (as Captain Robert Adams); Bluebeard's Ten Honeymoons (Wild) (as Landru); Village of the Damned (Rilla) (as Gordon Zellaby); The Rebel (Call Me Genius) (Day) (as Sir Charles Brouard)
1961  Cone of Silence (Trouble in the Sky) (Friend) (as Sir Arnold Hobbes); Cinque ore in contanti (Five Golden Hours) (Zampi) (as Mr. Bing); Le Rendez-vous (Delannoy) (as J. K.)
1962  Operation Snatch (Day) (as Major Hobson); In Search of the Castaways (Stevenson) (as Thomas Ayerton)
1963  Cairo (Rilla) (as Major Pickering); The Cracksmans (Scott) (as the guv'nor); Ecco (Mondo di notte) (Proia—doc) (as narrator)
1964  Dark Purpose (Marshall) (as Raymond Fontaine); A Shot in the Dark (Edwards) (as Benjamin Ballon); The Golden Head (Thorpe) (as Basil Palmer)
1965  The Amorous Adventures of Moll Flanders (Young) (as the banker)
1966  The Quiller Memorandum (Anderson) (as Gibbs); Trunk to Cairo (Golan) (as Professor Schlieben)
1967  Good Times (Friedkin) (as Mr. Mordicus); Warning Shot (Kulik) (as Calvin York)
1968  One Step to Hell (Howard) (as Captain Phillips); The Jungle Book (Reitherman) (as voice of Shere Khan)
1969  The Candy Man (Leder) (as Sidney Carter); The Best House in London (Saville) (as Sir Francis Leybourne); The Body Stealers (Thin Air; Invasion of the Body Stealers) (Levy) (as General Armstrong)
1970  The Kremlin Letter (Huston) (as the warlock); Rio '70 (The Seven Secrets of Su-Mara; Future Women) (Franco); Appuntamento col disonore (Rendezvous with Dishonor) (Bolzoni)
1971  Endless Night (Gilliat)
1972  Doomwatch (Sadry) (as the Admiral); The Living Dead (Psychomaniac; The Frog; The Death Wheelers) (Sharp) (as Shadwell)

Publications

By SANDERS: book—

On SANDERS: books—

Aherne, Brian, A Dreadful Man, assisted by George Sanders and Benita Hume, New York, 1979.
Van Der Beets, Richard, George Sanders: An Exhausted Life, Lanham, Maryland, 1990.

On SANDERS: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.

* * *

George Sanders was the smoothest of villains; a cool, dangerous cad who could outshine Basil Rathbone and outperform Vincent Price. He deployed irresistible charm with an edge of menace, qualified by a disconcerting sense of languid indifference. Given the quality of many of his films, this feeling of enmity was often justified.

Despite frequently pronounced laziness (“My own desire as a boy was to retire. That ambition has never changed”) and contempt for the whole business of acting, Sanders made an impressive quantity of movies. From time to time he was cast as a good chap, or even a romantic lead, but the impersonation was rarely convincing. During the war years he inevitably played despicable Nazis, most notably in Lang’s Man Hunt. But it was the morally ambiguous roles, the charmingly cynical bounders, that suited him best. “I was beastly but I was never coarse. I was a high-class sort of heel.” Highly literate and multilingual, Sanders responded thankfully to intelligent scripts. Albert Lewin, master of overblown cultural decadence, served him well in three films, but his finest part came from another word-oriented director, Joseph Mankiewicz, in All about Eve. As the adder-tongued drama critic Addison De Witt, Sanders effortlessly walked off with the picture and a thoroughly deserved Oscar.

Such ideal roles were sadly rare. Sanders occasionally worked for major directors such as Renoir and Lang, but only in their lesser films. Towards the end of his career the overall quality of his material slipped from mediocre to abysmal, and he often looked as weary as he must have felt. One of his last assignments was Disney’s Jungle Book, impeccably cast as the voice of Shere Khan, the soft-spoken, razor-clawed tiger. His suicide note was wholly in character: “Dear World, I am leaving because I am bored.”

—Philip Kemp

SARANDON, Susan

Sitting around Talking. Awards: London Critics Circle ALFS Award for Actress of the Year, for White Palace, 1990; London Critics Circle ALFS Award for Actress of the Year, National Board of Review Best Actress Award, for Thelma and Louise, 1991; Women in Film Crystal Award, 1994; BAFTA Film Award for Best Leading Actress, for The Client, 1995; Best Actress Academy Award, and Screen Actors Guild Award for drama actor, for Dead Man Walking, 1995; San Sebastian International Film Festival Honorary Award of the City of Locarno, 1995; Munich Film Festival CineMerit Award, 1997; ShoWest Humanitarian Award, 1998. Agent: William Morris Agency, 1350 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

- 1970 Joe (Avildsen) (as Melissa Compton)
- 1972 Lady Liberty (Monicelli) (as Sallyi)
- 1973 The Haunting of Rosalind (for TV) (as Dita)
- 1974 The Satan Murders (Swift—for TV) (as Kate); The Front Page (Wilder) (as Peggy Grant); The Great Waldo Pepper (Hill) (as Mary Beth); Lovin’ Molly (Lumet) (as Sarah); F. Scott Fitzgerald and the Last of the Belles (Schaefer—for TV)
- 1975 The Rocky Horror Picture Show (Sharman) (as Janet Weiss)
- 1976 One Summer Love (Dragonfly) (Cates—for TV) (as Chloe)
- 1977 The Other Side of Midnight (Jarrott) (as Catherine Douglas)
- 1978 Pretty Baby (Malle) (as Hattie); King of the Gypsies (Pierson) (as Rose); Checkered Flag or Crash (Gibson); The Great Smokey Roadblock (The Last of the Cowboys) (Leone) (as Ginny, + co-pr)
- 1979 Something Short of Paradise (Helperm) (as Madeleine Ross)
- 1980 Loving Couples (Smith) (as Stephanie)
- 1981 Atlantic City (Malle) (as Sally); Owen Marshall, Counselor at Law (Pattern of Morality) (Kulik—for TV)
- 1982 The Tempest (Mazursky) (as Aretha); Who Am I This Time? (Dendme—for TV)
- 1984 The Hunger (Tony Scott) (as Sarah Roberts); The Buddy System (Glenn Jordan) (as Emily); Talking Nicaragua (Engel—doc)
- 1985 Compromising Positions (Perry) (as Judith Singer); Io e il duce (Mussolini and I) (Negrin—for TV)
- 1986 Women of Valor (Kulik—for TV)
1987 The Witches of Eastwick (Miller) (as Jane Spofford)
1988 Bull Durham (Shelton) (as Annie Savoy); Sweet Hearts Dance (Greenwald) (as Sandra Boon); Da grande (Amurri)
1989 The January Man (O’Connor) (as Christine Starkey); A Dry White Season (Palcy) (as Melanie Bruwer); The Monkey People (doc) (as narrator)
1990 White Palace (Mandoki) (as Nora Baker); Through the Wire (doc) (as narrator)
1991 Thelma and Louise (Ridley Scott) (as Louise Sawyer)
1992 Bob Roberts (Robbins) (as news anchor Tawna Titan); Lorenzo’s Oil (Miller) (as Michaela Odone); The Player (Altman); Light Sleeper (Schrader) (as Ann)
1994 The Client (Schumacher) (as Reggie Love); Little Women (Armstrong) (as Marmee March); Safe Passage (as Mag Singer)
1995 Dead Man Walking (Robbins) (as Sister Helen Prejean)
1996 James and the Giant Peach (Selick) (as voice)
1997 Father Roy: Inside the School of Assassins (Richter—doc) (as Narrator); 187: Documented (Fong—docudrama) (as Voice)
1998 Stepmom (Chris Columbus) (as Jackie Harrison + exec pr); Illuminata (Turturro) (as Celimene); Twilight (Brenton) (as Catherine Ames)
1999 Joe Gould’s Secret (Tucci) (as Alice Neel); Baby’s in Black (Silberling); Cradle Will Rock (Robbins) (as Margherita Sarfatti); Earthly Possessions (Lapine—for TV) (as Charlotte Emory) Anywhere But Here (Wang) (as Adele August)

Publications

By SARANDON: articles—

Interview in Inter/View (New York), June 1983.
Interview by Graham Fuller, in Interview, June 1991.
“Susan Sarandon on Movies, Men and Motherhood,” interview with M. Frankel, in Movieline (Escondido), January/February 1995.

On SARANDON: articles—

Farber, Stephen, “Who Is She This Time?,” in American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1983; see also June 1988.

Reel West (Burnaby), August/September 1994.
Stars (Mariembourg), no. 27, 1996; no. 28, 1997.

* * *

Flashing the most hypnotic movie star eyes since Bette Davis overworked her optic nerves, Susan Sarandon graduated from utility performer (Joe, Other Side of Midnight) to respected actress (Atlantic City, television’s Who Am I This Time?) to one of the most durable stars of contemporary cinema. At an age when most actresses are scrambling for second leads and TV sitcoms, Sarandon became the rare kind of star you would go to see in anything. Unfortunately, at earlier periods in her career, she seemed to appear in just about anything (The Great Smokey Roadblock) and got by on cover girl looks alone (The Great Waldo Pepper, The Front Page) until Louis Malle recognized that her European sensuality was being miscast as Apple Pie Americana. Once Malle released her self-deprecating wit and unabashed sexuality, Sarandon seemed to relax on screen.

Having shuffled off the sorority sister wholesomeness (that netted her cult status as the square in Rocky Horror Picture Show), Sarandon plowed through the eighties in Hollywood properties save for one bright spot: a sassy amateur detective in Compromising Positions, the first evidence an entire film could be fashioned around her star-presence.

In 1987 she was asked (via Cher’s clout) to switch roles with that living legend in the unaccountably popular Witches of Eastwick and was then convinced to audition for Bull Durham. She landed the juicy part of Annie Savoy and has not looked back. Covering all of that rollicking romance’s bases, her screen persona emerged: a sensualist who flaunts conventions because the rules make no sense to her. Obliterating the double standard that has always plagued popular entertainment, Sarandon did not accept the Madonna or Whore dichotomy, but instead created the figure of a sexual missionary who made no apology for her largesse. A lucky project for her, Bull Durham introduced her to co-star Tim Robbins, her now long-time companion with whom she has had two children.

Refining her blue collar earth mother image further by bedding a younger man in White Palace, Sarandon then struck a nerve in the feminist fantasía Thelma and Louise. Harmoniously teamed with Geena Davis, Sarandon’s fiercely guarded vulnerability lit up this turnabout-is-fair-play escapism and made the film seem more novel than it was.

Heart-wrenchingly, she next threw herself into the challenge of interpreting an unsympathetic character, a grimly determined mother alienating anyone who rains on her anti-medical establishment parade in Lorenzo’s Oil as she seeks a cure for her dying son. In this unwieldy movie, which is a terminal illness weepie so clinical it turns into a horror film, crusading Sarandon provides the bleak life-and-death struggles with a heartbeat.
This unwavering, nurturing quality is an integral part of Sarandon’s refurbished appeal. Known for her humanitarian efforts offscreen, Sarandon’s compassion is imprinted on her roles as a mother surrogating the Goodfellas in The Client (a creaky vehicle that solidified her box office power), as a Civil War matriarch role-modeling her brood in a perceptive remake of Little Women and as a nun grappling with capital punishment in Dead Man Walking. Even cast as a recreational drug dispenser in Light Sleeper, she zeroed in on this weary hedonist’s speck of conscience. If any one scene crystallizes her image as fearless protector, it is the sequence in A Safe Place, in which she risks her life fending off a vicious dog threatening her son. Ferocity and passion characterize her every move as she invests the often-disparaged role of American mother with quiet heroism.

Whereas other stars condescend to mother roles to preserve the last vestiges of stardom, Sarandon has rediscovered herself in such parts without mumifying herself as a sexless, aproned martyr. More vividly beautiful with the passage of time, Sarandon unapologetically shows audiences that there is more to womanhood than Sharon Stone can reveal.

Sadly, a post-Oscar malaise has taken some of the steam out of her career; she seems less edgy and driven. Stuck in a child-rearing rut, if she wasn’t a terminally ill mother in Stepmom, she was a terminally confused one in Anywhere But Here. Even in the Cable-TV May-December love story, Earthly Possessions (a slipshod adaptation of an Anne Tyler novel), this firebrand seemed to be playing a mother figure to her own romantic lead. Surprisingly, when Sarandon took a vacation from nurturing, she gave her least convincing interpretation of the decade. As the femme fatale in the flimsily written Twilight, Sarandon valiantly tried to find a substantive character to play in this pastiche film noir and failed to embody the filmmaker’s vision of a temptress.

Will Sarandon go on being the Patron Saint of the PTA, while aging male stars go on playing a variety of roles? If only American moviegoers could imagine female stars like Sarandon masterminding crimes, leading expeditions, and saving the world! There’s nothing wrong with addressing all sort of mother roles, as long as the inevitable next step isn’t grandmother parts, with nothing else in between. A European director would know how to showcase her worldly wise personality (Imagine her teaming with Almodovar). Always a continental spirit, Sarandon runs the risk of being short-changed by that American short-sightedness about women of an certain age.

—Robert Pardi

SCHIEIDER, Roy

Films as Actor:

1964  Curse of the Living Corpse (Tenney) (as Philip Sinclair)
1968  Paper Lion (March); Star! (Wise)
1969  Stiletto (Kowalski) (as Bennett)
1970  Loving (Kershner) (as Skip); Puzzle of a Downfall Child (Schatzberg) (as Mark)
1971  The French Connection (Friedkin) (as Buddy “Cloudy” Russo); Klute (Pakula) (as Frank Ligourin)
1972  Assignment Munich (Rich—for TV) (as Jake Webster)
1973  The Seven-Ups (D’Antoni) (as Buddy Manucci); Un Homme est morte (The Outside Man; Funerale a Los Angeles) (Deray) (as Lenny); L’Attendat (The French Conspiracy) (Boisset) (as Michael Howard)
1975  Jaws (Spiegelberg) (as Sheriff Martin Brody); Sheila Levine Is Dead and Living in New York (Furie) (as Sam Stoneham)
1976  Marathon Man (Schlesinger) (as Doc Levy)
1977  Sorcerer (Friedkin) (as Jackie Scanlon/“Juan Dominiguez”)
1978  Jaws II (Szwarz) (as Sheriff Brody)
1979  Last Embrace (Jonathan Demme) (as Harry Hannan); All That Jazz (Fosse) (as Joe Gideon)
1982  Still of the Night (Benton) (as Sam Rice)
1983  Blue Thunder (Badham) (as Frank Murphy); Tiger Town (Shapiro) (as Billy Young); Jacobo Timerman: Prisoner without a Name, Cell without a Number (Yellen—for TV) (title role)
1984  2010 (Hyams) (as Heywood Floyd)
1985  Mishima (Schrader) (as narrator)
1986  The Men’s Club (Medak) (as Cavanaugh); 52 Pick-Up (Frankenheimer) (as Harry Mitchell)
1988  Cohen and Tate (Red) (as Cohen)
1989  Night Game (Masterson) (as Mike Seaver); Listen to Me (Stewart) (as Charlie Nichols)
1990  The Fourth War (Frankenheimer) (as Colonel Jack Clark); The Russia House (Scheptis) (as Russell); Somebody Has to Shoot the Picture (Pierson—for TV) (as Paul Marish)
1991  Naked Lunch (Cronenberg) (as Dr. Benway); Contact: The Yahomani Indians of Brazil (doc)
1993  Romeo Is Bleeding (Medak) (as Don Falcone)
1994  Covert Assassin (as Col. Peter Stride)
1996  Myth of Fingerprints (Freundlich) (as Hal)
1997  Money Plays (Frank D. Gilroy—for TV) (as Johnny Tobin); Executive Target (Merhi) (as President Carlson); The Definite Maybe (Lobl, Sokolow) (as Eddie Jacobson); The Rainmaker (Copolla) (as Wilfred Keeley)
1998  The White Raven (Stevens) (as Tom Heath); Evasive Action (Jerry P. Jacobs); Better Living (Mayer) (as Tom/Tim)
1999  Silver Wolf (Svatek) (as John Rockwell); RKO 281 (Benjamin Ross—for TV) (as George Schaefer)
2000  Chain of Command; The Doorway; Falling Through

Publications

By SCHEDER: articles—

Interview with James Cameron-Wilson, in Film Review (London), November 1980.

On SCHEDER: article—

... ... ...

Roy Scheider’s career is marked by variety and diversity, but it has not been varied by degrees. Instead, Roy Scheider characters can always be seen at the extremes. He is at once the heroic, everyman, Sheriff Martin Brody in Jaws and Jaws II and Frank, the sadistic pimp in Klute. On both counts, at whatever end of the character spectrum he operates, he is always believable, and most importantly, accessible.

The best way to visualize the extremes in Scheider’s long film career is to look at the year 1971. In that year he had roles in two Academy Award-winning motion pictures. In Klute he played Jane Fonda’s pimp Frank, a necessarily small, seedy character from whose lips syrupy wooing and brutal epithets flow with equal credibility. Later that year, Scheider got what was to become perhaps his breakthrough role, as Buddy Russo, Gene “Popeye Doyle” Hackman’s partner in The French Connection, he was the ideal, play-it-by-the-book offset to Hackman’s obsessive Doyle.

Scheider’s most memorable role, and subsequently his most marketable persona, is that of Sheriff Martin Brody in Jaws. Brody is the perfect commoner’s hero: a former New York cop, who is afraid of the water, but lives and works on a small resort island. Brody himself wittily underscores this fact saying, “It’s only an island if you’re looking at it from out there [the water].” Brody, like so many later Scheider characters—the mild-mannered psychiatrist in The Still of the Night or the daring copter pilot in Blue Thunder—must rise above his personal limitations or hang-ups to overcome an adversary seemingly much better prepared. The task of these characters is made harder by the fact that they are also outsiders. But Scheider has worked his way up the ranks (i.e., “paid his dues”) as an actor—anyone who has seen the low-budget Curse of the Living Corpse will agree—and been a tough guy in real life (Golden Gloves boxer in high school). These factors have helped bring a special kind of realism to his roles.

A less visible aspect of Scheider’s career, but one that is just as significant, is the number of times he has played against his usual persona. In films such as William Friedkin’s Sorcerer, Scheider finds characters that seem to have no precedent in his prolific past. All That Jazz is the best example of how Scheider has willingly taken career chances. In the film, which Bob Fosse loosely based on his own self-destructive lifestyle, Scheider plays a famed choreographer/filmmaker named Joe Gideon. As such, he must dance, sing, and most importantly, develop a character that is credible within such a world. Scheider did an excellent job of making Gideon a three-dimensional character, managing to create a sympathetic side to a self-indulgent womanizer. His performance earned him an Academy Award nomination.

Among other things, Scheider has been fortunate enough to have worked with the major directorial talents of the last two decades: Steven Spielberg, William Friedkin, Robert Benton, Alan J. Pakula, and Bob Fosse. It is also, decidedly, a tribute to Roy Scheider’s talents that the foremost names continue to want to work with him.

—Rob Winning, updated by Linda J. Stewart

SCHELL, Maria

Nationality: Swiss. Born: Maria Margarethe Anna Schell in Vienna, Austria, 5 January 1926; sister of the actor Maximilian Schell; became Swiss citizen. Education: Attended a convent school in Colmar, Germany; business school in Switzerland; School of the Theatrical Arts, Zurich. Family: Married 1) the director Horst Hächler, 1957; 2) the stage director Veit Relin, 1966. Career: 1942—film debut in Der Steinbruch; then acted on Swiss stage; 1946—member of the State Theater of Bern; film contract with Alexander Korda; continued to act on stage: in Faust opposite Albert Bassermann on European tour; 1958—first U.S. film, The Brothers Karamazov; 1980—in TV mini-series The Martian Chronicles, Inside the Third Reich, 1982, and Der Clan der Anna Voss, 1995. Awards: Best Actress, Cannes Festival, for Die letzte Brücke, 1954; Best Actress, Venice Festival, for Gervaise, 1955; Deutscher Filmpreis Career Award, 1977.

Films as Actress:

1942  Der Steinbruch (Steiner)
1943  Maturareise (Steiner)
1948  Der Engel mit der Posaune (Hartl) (as Anna Linden); Maresi (Thimig)
1949  Die letzte Nacht (York)
1950 Nach dem Sturm (Ucicky); Es kommt ein Tag (A Day Will Come) (Jugert) (as Madeline)
1951 The Magic Box (John Bouling) (as Helena Friese-Greene); The Angel with the Trumpet (Bushell) (as Anna Linden); Angelika (Affairs of Dr. Hoff; Dr. Hoff) (Hansen) (title role)
1952 So Little Time (Bennett) (as Nicole de Malvines)
1953 The Heart of the Matter (O’Ferrall) (as Helen Rolt); Bis wir uns Wiedersehen (Ucicky) (as Pamela); Tagebuch einer Verliebten (Diary of a Lover) (von Baky) (as Barbara Holzmann); Solange du da bist (As Long as You’re Near Me) (Braun); Der traumende Mund (Dreaming Lips) (von Baky) (as Liss)
1954 Die letzte Brücke (The Last Bridge) (Käutner) (as Helga Reinbeck); Napoléon (Guioty) (as Marie-Louise of Austria)
1955 Die Ratten (The Rats) (Siodmak) (as Pauline Karka); Urgano sul Po; Herr über Leben und Tod (No Way Back) (Vicas); Gervaise (Clément) (title role)
1956 Liebe (Love) (Hächler)
1957 Rose Bernd (The Sins of Rose Bernd) (Staudte) (title role); Le notti bianche (White Nights) (Visconti) (as Natalia); Ungarn in Flammen (as narrator)
1958 The Brothers Karamazov (Richard Brooks) (as Grushenka); Une Vie (End of Desire; One Life) (Astruc) (as Jeanne Dandieu); Der Schinderhannes (Duel in the Forest) (Käutner)
1959 The Hanging Tree (Daves) (as Elizabeth Mahler)
1960 Hellas (As the Sea Rages) (Hächler) (as Mana); Cimarron (Anthony Mann) (as Sabra Cravet)
1961 Das Reisenrad (von Radvanyi); The Mark (Guy Green) (as Ruth Leighton)
1962 Ich bin auch nur eine Frau (Only a Woman; I, Too, Am Only a Woman) (Weidenmann) (as Lilli Koenig)
1963 L’Assassin connaît la musique (Weidemann); Zwei Whisky und ein Sofa (Rendezvous in Trieste) (Gräwert)
1965 Who Has Seen the Wind? (Sidney—for TV); Nora oder Ein Puppenheim (Moszkowicz—for TV)
1966 99 mujeres (99 Women; Island of Despair; Isle of Lost Women) (Franco) (as Leonie); Le Diable par la queue (The Devil by the Tail) (de Broca) (as Diane)
1969 La Provocation (Charpak)
1970 El proceso de las brujas (Throne of Fire; The Bloody Judge; Night of the Blood Monster) (Franco)
1971 Such a Pretty Cloud; Dans la poussière du soleil (Last in the Sun) (Balducci)
1972 Chamsin (Rilen); Die Pfarrhauskomödie (Rilen)
1973 Immobilien (Jägersberg)
1974 The Odessa File (Neame) (as Frau Miller); Change (Fischerauer); Marie (Geissendörfer); Die Kurpfuscherin (The Quack) (Cremer—for TV)
1975 Das Konzert (Haugk—for TV); Die Heiratsvermittlerin (Matiasek—for TV); Die Abrechnung (Wolfgang Becker—for TV)
1976 Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg); So oder so ist das Leben (Rilen—for TV); Folies bourgeoises (The Twist) (Chabrol) (as Gretel)
1977 Spiel der Verlierer (Hohoff); Teerosen (Rolf Von Sydow—for TV)
1978 Superman (Richard Donner) (as Vond-Ah)
1979 Die erste Polka (Emmerich) (as Valeska); Schöner Gigolo—armer Gigolo (Just a Gigolo) (Hemmings) (as Mutti); Christmas Lilies of the Field (Ralph Nelson—for TV); Der Wald (Ten Haaf—for TV); Moral (Wilhelm—for TV)
1980 Der Thronfolger (Döpke—for TV); Liebe bleibt nicht ohne Schmerzen (Bohrer)
1981 La Passante du Sans-Souci (La Passante) (Ruoffito) (as Anna Helwig); Frau Jenny Triebel (Franz Josef Wild—for TV); Inside the Third Reich (Chomsky—for TV) (as Mrs. Speer)
1982 Der Besuch der alten Dame (Ammann—for TV) (as Claire Zachanassian)
1983 Der Trauschein (Kishon—for TV)
1984 Samson and Delilah (Philips—for TV); Koenig Drosselbart (Kral drozdi brada) (Beck and Luther)
1985 1919 (Brody) (as Sophie Rubin)
1991 Le Dernier mot (Behat) (as Maria Wagner)
1995 Der Clan der Anna Voss (Ballmann—mini for TV) (as Anna Voss)
1996 Tatort-Heilig Blut (Griesmayr—for TV) (as Aebißin)

Publications

By SCHELL: book—

By SCHELL: article—
In Seventeen Interviews, by Edwin Miller, New York, 1970.

On SCHELL: book—
Spaich, Herbert, Maria Schell: Ihre Filme—ihre Leben, Munich, 1986.

On SCHELL: articles—
Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1994.

* * *

Throughout the 1950s, Maria Schell dazzled rows of moviegoers in Europe and Great Britain with a series of extraordinarily moving performances. German audiences, who were especially enamored of her intense portrayals of unjustly suffering women, voted Schell their favorite actress in 1951, 1952, 1954, 1955, and 1956. Critical tongues likewise wagged approbation, frequently citing Schell’s instinctual talent as an actress, the emotional range of her acting, and her goldstruck beauty. Recognizing that her presence in a film could help assure its commercial and often critical success, filmmakers throughout Europe cast Schell in nearly 25 films before 1960. Her role as a central character would also cancel the need for dubbing as Schell spoke five languages.

After her critical successes in Die letzte Brüche and Gervaise, MGM acknowledged Schell’s abilities and the healthy box-office receipts of her films by inviting her to appear in The Brothers Karamazov as Grushenka, a coveted role for which Marilyn Monroe had originally been considered. Schell’s arrival in Hollywood provoked both enthusiastic speculations on her becoming the newest international screen star, and favorable comparisons with Ingrid Bergman who had captured Hollywood in the 1940s. But, a brief series of miscastings, including her performance as Grushenka, revealed the potential weakness of box-office casting and soured Schell’s three years in Hollywood. The miscastings only highlighted her shortcomings and misused her strengths. As Grushenka, Schell reduced the complexity of Dostoevsky’s character to a frustrating ambiguity, replete with a nervous giggle. For MGM’s remake of Cimarron, Schell undermined the role of Sabra Cavet through a number of inexplicable acts such as repeatedly flashing the famous Schell smile while in childbirth.

Critical response to Schell had so deteriorated by the early 1960s that, despite her strong performance in Le notti bianche, Bosley Crowther would write in a review of the film, “Miss Schell is enough to blunt one’s perceptivity to the poetry and meaning of the [film’s] theme.” The additional waning of her popularity with the moviegoing public induced Schell in 1963 to leave film and work full-time in the theater, where she had begun her career as an actress. Schell returned to motion pictures in 1968, once again as an international performer, to play a diversity of roles, including a cameo appearance in Superman.

—Nancy Jane Richards

SCHELL, Maximilian

Nationality: Swiss. Born: Vienna, Austria, 8 December 1930; brother of the actress Maria Schell; became Swiss citizen. Education: Attended the universities of Zurich and Munich. Military Service: Swiss Army. Family: Married Natalya Andreichenko, 1985, one child. Career: Following military service, actor in London, Germany, and Switzerland; 1955—film debut in Kinder, Mütter, und ein General; 1958—English-language role in The Young Lions brought international attention; stage debut in New York in Interlock; 1959—in Hamlet on American television; followed by other film, stage, and television roles; 1968—produced the film Das Schloss; 1970—directed the film Erste Liebe; also stage director; 1977—directed the...
Maximilian Schell

Films as Actor:

1955 Kinder, Mütter, und ein General (Benedek); Der 20 Juli (Harnak); Reifende Jugend (Erfurt)
1956 Ein Mädchen aus Flandern (The Girl from Flanders) (Kautner);
Die Ehe des Dr. Med. Danwitz (Rabenalt); Ein Herz kehrt Heim (York)
1957 Die Letzten werden die Ersten sein (Hansen); Taxichauffeur Bänz (Dueggelin) (as Toni Schellenberg)
1958 Das Glück auf der Alm (Ein wunderbaren Sommer) (Tressler);
The Young Lions (Dmytryk) (as Capt. Hardenberg)
1960 Hamlet (Wirth) (title role)
1961 Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer) (as Hans Rolfe)
1962 Five Finger Exercise (Delbert Mann) (as Walter);
The Reluctant Saint (Dmytryk) (as Giuseppe Desa);
I sequestri di Altona (The Condemned of Altona) (De Sica) (as Franz)
1964 Topkapi (Dassin) (as William Walter)
1965 Return from the Ashes (J. Lee Thompson) (as Stanislaus Pilgrim)
1966 John F. Kennedy: Years of Lightning, Day of Drums (Herschensohn—doc) (as narrator)
1967 The Deadly Affair (Lumet) (as Dieter Foey);
Más allá de las montañas (Beyond the Mountains; The Desperate Ones) (Ramati) (as Marek); Counterpoint (Nelson) (as Schiller)
1968 Heidi (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Herr Sesserman)
1969 Krakatoa, East of Java (Volcano) (Kowalski) (as Captain Chris Hanson);
Simon Bolivar (Blasetti); L’assoluto naturale (Bolognini)
1972 Paulina 1880 (Bertucci Cli) (as Count);
Pope Joan (The Devil’s Imposter) (Anderson) (as Adrian)
1974 The Odessa File (Neame) (as Eduard Roschmann)
1975 The Man in the Glass Booth (Hiller) (as Arthur Goldman);
The Days that Shook the World (Atentat u Sarajevu; Assassination at Sarajevo; Assassination) (Bulajic) (as Djuro Sarac)
1976 St. Ives (J. Lee Thompson) (as Dr. John Constable)
1977 A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as Gen. Wilhelm Bittrich);
Cross of Iron (Peckinpah) (as Stransky); Julia (Zimmermann) (as Johann)
1978 Amo non Amo (Together; I Love You, I Love You Not) (Balducci) (as John)
1979 Avalanche Express (Robson) (as Bunin);
The Black Hole (Nelson) (as Dr. Hans Reinhardt);
Players (Harvey) (as Marco)
1980 The Diary of Anne Frank (Sagal—for TV)
1982 The Chosen (Kagan) (as Professor David Malter)
1983 Phantom of the Opera (Markovic—for TV)
1984 The Assisi Underground (Ramati) (as Col. Mueller);
Morgen in Alabama (Man under Suspicion) (Kuckelmann) (as lawyer Landau)
1989 The Rose Garden (Rademakers) (as Aaron Reichenbacher)
1990 The Freshman (Andrew Bergman) (as Larry London)
1992 Labyrinth (Jires) (as himself); Miss Rose White (Sargent—for TV) (as Mordechai);
Salem’s Passer—for TV (as Lenin)
1993 A Far Off Place (Salomon) (as Col. Mopani Theron);
Justice (Justice) (Geissendörfler) (as Isaak Kohler)
1994 Little Odessa (Gray) (as Arkady Shapira);
Abraham (Sargent—for TV) (as Pharao)
1996 The Thorn Birds: The Missing Years (Dobson—for TV) (as Cardinal Vittorio)
1997 Zwischen Rosen (as Carl Stern);
The Eighteenth Angel (Bindley) (as Father Simeon);
Telling Lies in America (Ferland) (as Dr. Istvan Jonas)
1998 Left Luggage (Krabbé) (as Chaya’s Father);
Deep Impact (Ledner) (as Jason Lerner); Vampire's (Carpenter) (as Cardinal Alba)
1999 Fissimaten (Kuhn); Wer liebt, dem wachsen Flügel (On the Wings of Love) (Barylli);
Joan of Arc (Duguay—for TV) (as Brother John Le Maitre)
2000 I Love You Baby (Lyon) (as Walter Ekland);
Fissimaten (Kuhn)

Films as Producer:

1968 Das Schloss (The Castle) (Noelte) (+ ro as “K’”)
1976 Einsichten eines Clowns (co-pr)
Films as Director:

1970  Erste Liebe (First Love) (+ co-pr, co-sc, ro as the father)
1974  Der Fussgänger (The Pedestrian) (+ co-pr, sc, ro as Andreas Giese)
1975  Der Richter und sein Henker (Murder on the Bridge; End of the Game; Getting Away with Murder) (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1981  Geschichten aus dem Wienerwald (Tales from the Vienna Woods) (+ pr, sc)
1984  Marlene (doc) (+ co-sc, ro as interviewer)
1993  Candles in the Dark (for TV) (+ ro as Colonel Arkash)

Film as Scriptwriter:

1971  Trotta (Schaaf)

Publications

By SCHELL: books—

By SCHELL: articles—

“Maximilian Schell akteur en kineast,” interview with R. Pede, in Film en Televisie (Brussels), October 1980.

On SCHELL: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1994.

* * *

The specter of Nazism seems to have haunted Schell throughout his acting career. Although born in Vienna and raised in Switzerland, he is best known for his work in films about World War II and its aftermath, wherein he has most often been cast as a Nazi officer. In fact, his first Hollywood part was that of the devout storm trooper who commanded Marlon Brando’s morally troubled German captain in The Young Lions, based on the Irwin Shaw best-seller. He subsequently donned the uniform of the Third Reich in war films as varied as Counterpoint, A Bridge Too Far, and Sam Peckinpah’s Cross of Iron, where he played a scheming German general determined to win the titular medal for valor even if he has to sacrifice his entire command.

In 1961, Schell won the Academy Award as best actor for his intense performance as the German attorney defending Nazis charged with war crimes in Judgment at Nuremberg—a role he had originated on television in the CBS series Playhouse 90 where the Abbe Mann drama first appeared. In 1975, more than a decade later, Schell was again nominated for the same award for his role in the American Film Theater’s production of The Man in the Glass Booth in which he portrayed a war criminal, based on Adolf Eichmann, brought to justice in an Israeli court after the end of the war. Later, in The Odessa File, he played a similar war criminal, who this time manages to escape justice and is bent on reviving the Third Reich. Still another instance of Schell’s interpretation of the Nazi mentality may be found in Zinnemann’s Julia. Despite the undeniable quality of his acting, Schell’s continued casting as a Nazi has tended to limit his career. For even in roles that do not deal with the World War II experience, he seems to be expected to portray figures with Nazi-like characteristics. For example, in The Black Hole, an artistically and commercially unsuccessful science fiction film released by Disney in 1979, Schell portrayed a mad scientist. Derived obviously from James Mason’s treatment of Captain Nemo in 20,000 Leagues under the Sea, the character created by Schell evinces the same sort of authoritarianism and cold dedication to cause at the expense of humane concerns which marks the stereotype of the Nazi in much film and literature. His performance as Lenin in the made-for-cable docudrama Stalin was cut from the same cloth.

Perhaps because his acting career has been somewhat restricted in breadth, Schell turned to other aspects of filmmaking. In 1968 he produced a treatment of Franz Kafka’s The Castle, and in 1970 he directed his first film, First Love, based on a short novel by Ivan Turgenev. In 1974 The Pedestrian, which Schell co-produced, directed, wrote, and acted in, was nominated for an Academy Award as best foreign-language film. But his 1984 documentary Marlene on the life of the legendary film star Marlene Dietrich remains one of his most interesting achievements. Dietrich agreed to cooperate with Schell in the making of the film, but when the cameras started to roll, she turned the tables on him by refusing to appear on camera. His slight-of-hand in suggesting her presence through the use of silhouettes and other techniques turned what might otherwise have been a standard “talking head” piece into a visually stunning tour de force.

Schell’s acting career has not languished with his involvement in production, direction, and screenwriting. After all, two of his Academy Award nominations for acting occurred in the 1970s, after he had taken on other filmmaking responsibilities. Yet it is clear that his place in cinematic history will be more than that of an actor, for his achievements behind the camera will have to enter into the final account. Also, perhaps as the trauma of Nazism recedes more and more into the historical past, the casting of Schell as a Nazi may become less frequent, and he can just play Germans, even sympathetic ones, as he did quite memorably in the television remake of The Diary of Anne Frank as the title character’s father.

—William M. Clements, updated by John McCarty

SCHENSTRÖM, Carl

See MADSEN, Harald and Carl SCHENSTRÖM

SCHNEIDER, Romy

Films as Actress:

1953 Wenn der weisse Flieder wieder blüht (Deppe)
1954 Feuerwerk (Hoffmann); Mädchennahre einer Königen (The Story of Vickie) (Marischka) (as Queen Victoria)
1955 Der letzte Mann (Braun); Die Deutschmeister (Man‘zelle Cricri) (Marischka)
1956 Sissi (Marischka) (as Princess Elisabeth of Austria); Kitty und die grosse Welt (Wiedermann)
1957 Sissi—die junge Kaiserin (Marischka) (as Empress Elisabeth of Austria); Robinson soll nicht sterben (The Girl and the Legend) (von Baky) (as Maud); Monpti (Kläutner)
1958 Sissi—Schicksalsjahre einer Kaiserin (Marischka—edited version of the three Sissi films released as Forever My Love, 1962) (as Empress Elisabeth of Austria); Scampolo (Wiedermann); Mädchen in Uniform (Radvanyi) (as Manuela von Mainhardis)
1959 Die schöne Lügnerin (von Ambesser); Die Halbzart (Thiele); Christine (Gaspard-Huit) (title role); Ein Engel auf Erden (Angel on Earth) (Radvanyi) (as air stewardess/guardian angel)
1960 Katia (Magnificent Sinner) (Siodmak) (title role); Plein soleil (Purple Noon; Last for Evil) (Clément)
1961 Le Combat dans l’île (Cavalier); Die Sendung der Lysistrata (Kortner)
1962 Le Procès (The Trial) (Welles) (as Lena); ‘Il lavoro’ (‘The Job’) ep. of Boccaccio 70 (Visconti) (as Pupé)

1963 The Victors (Foreman) (as Regine); The Cardinal (Preminger) (as Annemarie)
1964 Good Neighbor Sam (Swift) (as Janet Lagerhof)
1965 What’s New Pussycat? (Donner) (as Carole Werner)
1966 La Voleuse (Schorrsteino. No. 4) (Chaplet); 10.30 P.M. Summer (Dassin) (as Claire); Triple Cross (Young) (as the Countess)
1968 Otley (Dick Clement) (as Imogen)
1969 La Piscine (The Swimming Pool) (Deray) (as Marianne)
1970 My Lover, My Son (Newland) (as Francesca Anderson); Qui? (The Sensuous Assassin) (Keigel); Les Choses de la Vie (The Things of Life) (Sautet) (as Hélène)
1971 La califfa (Bevilacqua); Max et les ferraillers (Sautet); Bloomfield (The Hero) (Harris)
1972 César et Rosalie (Sautet); The Assassination of Trotsky (Losey)
1973 Ludwig (Ludwig: Twilight of the Gods) (Visconti) (as Empress Elisabeth of Austria); Le Train (Granier-Deferré); Le Trio infernal (The Infernal Trio) (Girod) (as Philomène)
1974 Un Amour de pluie (Loving in the Rain) (Brialy); Le Mouton enragé (Love at the Top; The French Way) (Deville)
1975 L’Important c’est d’aimer (The Most Important Thing Is Love) (Zulawski); Les Innocents aux mains sales (Dirty Hands) (Chabrol); Le Vieux Fusil (The Old Gun) (Enrico)
1976 Une Femme à sa fenêtre (A Woman at Her Window) (Granier-Defere) (as Margot)
1977 Gruppenbild mit Dame (Group Picture with Lady) (Petrović)
1978 Mado (Sautet) (as Helene); Une Histoire simple (A Simple Story) (Sautet) (as Marie)
1979 Last Embrace (Denné); Bloodline (Young); Clair de femme (Costa-Gavras) (as Lydia); Lo sconosciuto (The French Way) (Deville)
1980 Garde à Vue (Under Suspicion) (Miller) (as Chantal Martinad); La Banquieré (Girod)
1981 Fantasma d’amore (Ghost of Love) (Risi) (as Anna); La Passante du Sans-Souci (La Passante) (Roffio) (as Elsa Weiner/Lina Baumenstein)

Publications

By SCHNEIDER: book—

On SCHNEIDER: books—

Born into an old established and famous theatrical family, Romy Schneider was almost predestined to become an actress. As an internationally known German film star, she is second in fame only to Marlene Dietrich. Like Dietrich, she had an ambiguous relationship to Germany and chose not to live there.

Schneider’s screen debut, at the age of 14, was alongside her mother Magda Schneider, in Wenn der weisse Flieder wieder blüht. This led to further film offers and to playing the saccharine-sweet eponymous heroine in the trilogy Sissi, a kitsch bio-pic of Elisabeth, the Austrian Empress. As Sissi, Schneider had become the darling of the German speaking public. Ute Schneider suggests that the Sissi films provided a safety valve for Germans in their inability to mourn (i.e. the collective disavowal of the fascist past): “Hardly any other 1950s tearjerker film had been more effective in letting the audience sob their heart out. It is a pertinent example of the continuing repression of political reality that can be traced in [German] entertainment cinema. Sissi demonstrated yet again the victory of the heart over the ‘evil’ of politics, the dream of conquering people and countries with no more than a feminine smile and maternal care.” The role of Sissi typecast Schneider for the early part of her career and she came to hate the image, but was haunted by it for the rest of her life.

Her engagement to Alain Delon seems to have given her enough determination to leave for France, escaping parental control and the smothering Sissi image (although initially she continued to be typecast). Nevertheless, Schneider’s first serious role came from the German director Fritz Kortner, as Myrrha in Kortner’s adaptation of Aristophanes’s Die Sendung der Lysistrata. Then in Paris Visconti offered Schneider her first theater engagement, in 'Tis Pity She’s a Whore. Despite having to act in French, she won audience and critical acclaim. It also marked the beginning of her international career as a character actress. Subsequently, Schneider gained a major prize for her performance in Welles’s Le Procès and Visconti cast her again in Boccaccio ‘70. Following a brief interlude in Hollywood, playing in Preminger’s The Cardinal, and demonstrating her ability for comedy alongside Jack Lemmon in Good Neighbor Sam, and Peter Sellers and Peter O’Toole in What’s New, Pussycat?, Schneider returned to France. Subsequently, while working with the director Claude Sautet and with Michel Piccoli as her film partner, Schneider embarked on the most fruitful period of her career. Sautet cast her in a range of roles, playing the modern sexually liberated woman. Having created a new persona, Schneider had the courage to accept again the role of Elisabeth in Visconti’s Ludwig. She depicted the woman as cold and unyielding, thereby erasing any trace of the sweet Sissi character.

Over the years Schneider achieved success in her career by great discipline and ambition. She stated frankly that she used her classical beauty as a handmaiden in the service of her craft. Despite Schneider’s professional emancipation and her rebellion against the values of her parents’ generation, she cannot be considered a feminist, even in the widest sense. She mostly played women as perceived from a typical male position: the housewife, the mother, the mistress or the whore. She rarely depicted independent professional women, but rather came to represent those women who revolt, only to settle eventually for compromise.

Even while in France, however, she deliberately chose roles that critically engaged with Germany’s fascist history, albeit from a French perspective. La Passante du Sans-Souci, a French-German co-production, is a striking case in point, since the film illustrates differing national perspectives on recent history. The German version has a happy end, whereas in the French the couple are killed by the neo-Nazis. Another pertinent example is the German film Gruppenbild mit Dame (based on Heinrich Böll’s sociohistorical critique of Germany). Schneider could strongly identify with her role of Leni, a woman misunderstood in her own country. Though the film was dismissed by the critics (lacking the complexity of the novel), Schneider won an important German prize for her performance.

Towards the end, Romy Schneider knew both sadness and tragedy. After serious kidney surgery and her divorce from her second husband, her young son, David Christophe, was killed climbing over his own front gate. Although she threw herself into her work, the pressure and stress proved too much and Romy Schneider died of heart failure a year later.

—Ulrike Sieglohr

SCHWARZENEGGER, Arnold

On SCHWARZENEGGER: books—

By SCHWARZENEGGER: articles—

On SCHWARZENEGGER: articles—

Considering he has made a mere 20-odd movies, Arnold Schwarzenegger’s career has gone through numerous distinct and bizarre phases. His evolution, from a bodybuilder who appeared in such consciously silly entries as Hercules in New York and Conan the Barbarian to sci-fi death machine in the Terminator movies to comic actor in such films as Twins and Junior, has been strange, to say the least. His films have shown consistency, however, in that Schwarzenegger’s performance style has always exhibited the basic hallmarks of postmodernity: pastiche and parody. First gaining notoriety as a professional bodybuilder, he recognized opportunities to appear in such outrageously over-the-top films as the Conan series, for example, which were little more than pumped-up B movies (with big budgets), films Schwarzenegger clearly (and quite rightly) did not take entirely seriously. His constant mugging to the camera in the documentary Pumping Iron did more than win him the Mr. Universe title: it proved his innate theatrical sensibility and his canny comic abilities.

But Schwarzenegger’s first real breakthrough came with The Terminator, in which he cleverly turned down the offer to play the hero and opted instead for the role of evil robot. The film, a characteristically action-packed entry from director James Cameron, had an entertaining but intelligent Oedipal time-warp sci-fi concept, some excusably cheesy special effects, and a, well, perfectly robotic performance by Schwarzenegger. The subsequent huge box-office success of the film secured Schwarzenegger’s place in the American cultural Zeitgeist.

Schwarzenegger’s deadpan performance immediately drew comparisons to Clint Eastwood, an actor famous for his minimalist style. This performance style would carry on in other films, including Commando, Raw Deal, The Running Man, Predator, Total Recall, and Terminator 2: Judgment Day, among others. Schwarzenegger also appropriated Eastwood’s stinging penchant for the one-liner (e.g., “Make my day”), many of which became popular catchphrases and Schwarzenegger trademarks (“I’ll be back” in particular). Eastwood would acknowledge the debt Schwarzenegger owed him when he referred to the former bodybuilder as “my son” during the 1995 Academy Award ceremonies.

Schwarzenegger’s career took a disastrous turn in 1993 with The Last Action Hero, an ultra-self-reflexive take on the action movie. The film has its entertaining moments, but fans appeared uncomfortable with the artifices of the action film being laid quite so bare—thus the film flopped despite one of the most expensive publicity campaigns in Hollywood history (including an ad posted on the space shuttle, the first of its kind). Schwarzenegger has also been far less successful when trying his hand at out-and-outright comedies (Twins and Junior), where he is simply uncontrolled as a performer. Junior was a brave and interesting gender-challenging role for Schwarzenegger; the film’s premise had him the first man ever to become pregnant. Again, audiences seemed uncomfortable with this wall of muscles in a maternal position, and the film did mediocre box office.

Schwarzenegger’s last major success was True Lies, a film which divided critics with its misogynist and racist overtones, resurrecting speculation that the actor had far-right leaning politics. Schwarzenegger has become something of an anti-Jane Fonda, notorious for his support of conservative causes and politicians, including Ronald Reagan and George Bush. Like Fonda, Schwarzenegger’s persona is also not without contradictions (he is married to Maria Shriver, a member of America’s most famous liberal clan the Kennedys, for example). Like his politics and personal life, Schwarzenegger’s appearances on-screen can be read as perfect open texts: the audience can choose to see his machismo as role-model material to be emulated and adored, or as astute post-modern parody of the ludicrous masculine male ideal.

—Matthew Hays

SCOTT, George C.

Nationality: American. Born: George Campbell Scott in Wise, Virginia, 18 October 1927; grew up in Detroit. Education: Attended Redford High School, Detroit; University of Missouri School of Journalism, Columbia to 1953. Military Service: 1945–49—served in the U.S. Marine Corps. Family: Married 1) Carolyn Hughes (divorced); 2) the actress Patricia Reed (divorced); 3) the actress Colleen Dewhurst, 1960 (divorced 1965; remarried 1967, divorced 1972), sons: Alexander and the actor Campbell; also four other children; 4) the actress Trish Van Devere, 1972. Career: 1953–57—actor in stock in Toledo, Washington, D.C., and Ontario, while working as laborer and clerk; 1957—New York stage role in Richard III in Joseph Papp’s Shakespeare Festival season brought critical recognition; later stage work includes roles in Comes a Day on Broadway, 1958, The Andersonville Trial, 1959, The Merchant of Venice, 1962, and The Three Sisters in London, 1965; 1959—film

George C. Scott in Patton

Films as Actor:

1959 The Hanging Tree (Daves) (as Dr. George Grubb); Anatomy of a Murder (Preminger) (as Claude Dancer)
1961 The Hustler (Rossen) (as Bert Gordon)
1963 The List of Adrian Messenger (Rossen) (as Bert Gordon)
1964 Dr. Strangelove: Or, How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (Kubrick) (as Gen. “Buck” Turgidson)
1965 The Yellow Rolls Royce (Asquith) (as Paolo Maltese)
1966 La Bibbia (The Bible... in the Beginning; The Bible) (Huston) (as Abraham); Not with My Wife You Don’t! (Panama) (as Tank Martin); This Savage Land (The Road West) (McEveety—for TV, released theatrically in 1969) (as Jud Barker)
1967 The Flim-Flam Man (One Born Every Minute) (Kershner) (as Mordecai)
1968 Petulia (Lester) (as Archie Bollen)
1970 Patton (Patton: Lust for Glory) (Schaffner) (title role)
1971 They Might Be Giants (Harvey) (as Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer); Jane Eyre (as G. A. D. Bellamy)
1972 The Hindenberg (Cook—for TV) (as Charles Lindbergh)
1973 The Last Run (Fleischer) (as Harry Garmes); The Hospital (Hiller) (as Dr. Herbert Bock)
1974 The New Centurions (Fleischer) (as Sgt. Kilvinski)
1975 Oklahoma Crude (Kramer) (as Noble Mason); The Day of the Dolphin (Mike Nichols) (as Dr. Jake Terrell)
1976 Bank Shot (Champion) (as Walter Upjohn Ballantine)
1977 The Hindenberg (wise) (as Col. Ritter); Fear on Trial (Johnson—for TV) (as Louis Nizer)
1978 Beauty and the Beast (Cook—for TV)
1977 Islands in the Stream (Schaffner) (as Thomas Hudson)
1978 Crossed Swords (The Prince and the Pauper) (Fleischer) (as the Ruffler); Movie Movie (Donen) (as Gloves Malloy/ Spats Baxter)
1979 Hardcore (The Hardcore Life) (Schrader) (as Jake Van Dorn); Arthur Miller on Home Ground (Rasky)
1980 The Formula (Avidsen) (as Barney Caine); The Changeling (Medak) (as John Russell)
1981 Taps (Harold Becker) (as Gen. Harlan Bache)
1982 Oliver Twist (Clive Donner—for TV) (as Fagin)
1983 China Rose (Day—for TV)
1984 A Christmas Carol (Clive Donner—for TV) (as Ebenezer Scrooge); Firestarter (Lester) (as John Rainbird)
1985 The Indomitable Teddy Roosevelt (Engle—doc) (as narrator)
1986 Choices (Rich—for TV); The Last Days of Patton (Delbert Mann—for TV) (title role); The Murders in the Rue Morgue (Szwarc—for TV) (as Auguste Dupin)
1987 Pals (Antonio—for TV) (as Jack Stobbs)
1989 The Ryan White Story (Hertzfeld—for TV)
1990 Descending Angel (Kagan—for TV) (as Florian Stroia); The Exorcist III (The Exorcist III: Legion) (Blatty) (as Lt. Kinderman); The Curse of the Starving Class (Masterson); The Rescuers Down Under (Butoy—animation) (as voice of Percival McLeach)
1991 Finding the Way Home (Holcomb—for TV) (as Max Mittelmann)
1993 Curacao (Carl Schultz—for TV); Malice (Harold Becker) (as Dr. Kessler)
1994 In the Heat of the Night: A Matter of Justice (Badiyi—for TV) (as Judge Walker); The Whipping Boy (Macartney—for TV) (as Blind George)
1995 Angus (Patrick Read Johnson) (as Ivan); Tyson (Edel—for TV) (as Gus D’Amato); New York News: Cost of Living (Apted, Bender—series for TV) (as Ollie Herman); New York News: Yankee Glory (Apted, Bender—series for TV) (as Ollie Herman)
1996 Titanic (Lieberman—for TV) (as Captain Smith)
1997 Country Justice (Family Rescue) (Campbell—for TV) (as Clayton); 12 Angry Men (Friedkin—for TV) (as Juror #3)
1999 Gloria (Lumet) (as Ruby); Rocky Marciano (Charles Winkler—for TV) (as Pierino Marchegiano); Inherit the Wind (Petrie—for TV) (as Matthew Harrison Brady)

Films as Director:

1970 The Andersonville Trial (for TV)
1972 Rage (+ ro as Dan Logan)
1974 The Savage Is Loose (+ pr, ro as John)

Publications

By SCOTT: articles—

On SCOTT: book—

On SCOTT: articles—

* * *

George C. Scott was one of the most powerful of American actors, and he often played characters who were unique, individualistic, intense, and sometimes angry in films with such forceful titles as Rage, Crossed Swords, Bank Shot, Not with My Wife You Don’t!, They Might Be Giants, The Savage Is Loose, Firestarter, and Malice. It is almost too easy to classify him as an “angry man,” for some of his most memorable moments in films were when he exhibited extreme rage: slapping a soldier as Patton (Patton), glaring at a slum landlord as a Los Angeles policeman (The New Centurions), smashing up a pornographic headquarters as an angry father (Hardcore). But he could also show great tenderness on the screen, which can be clearly seen in many of the above-mentioned films and especially in The Day of the Dolphin and Petulia. He also had a great flair for comedy. Two of his most famous comic roles are General “Buck” Turgidson (Dr. Strangelove) and the film-flam man (The Flim-Flam Man). Whether it is in a title role (Patton) or in a brief appearance (Malice), with his rasping voice, piercing eyes, and chiseled features, he created characters who were believable, multidimensional, and exciting.

Scott began in the theater, but from the beginning and throughout his career, he divided his acting choices between stage, film, and television. One of his early roles in film that brought acclaim was as gambler/manager Bert Gordon opposite Paul Newman, Jackie Gleason, and Piper Laurie in The Hustler (1961), where he brought just the right blend of menace, cruelty, and charm to the morality tale of an eager pool player. His roles necessarily changed as he aged. He moved from playing a divorced father (Archie Bollen) with young children in Petulia (1968) to a father (Jake Van Dorn) with a runaway daughter in Hardcore (1979) to a grandfather (Ivan) with an adult daughter and grandson in Angus (1995). Even in the short-lived 1994 television series Traps he played Joseph Trapcheck, the grandfather of three generations of police detectives.

Although his roles included several soldiers, doctors, and police detectives, including a character who thought he was Sherlock Holmes (They Might Be Giants), his work cannot be stereotyped. He was just as comfortable playing the rogue Fagin (Oliver Twist for television) or a music composer (The Changeling).

What may account for Scott’s staying power as an actor for so many years was his three-dimensional qualities. He was often cast in very masculine, assertive roles, and to these and his other roles he brought a depth of feeling which could touch an audience deeply. For example, he played General George S. Patton (probably his most well-known characterization) in two films, Patton (1970), directed by Franklin Schaffner, and The Last Days of Patton (1986), directed for television by Delbert Mann. Scott had to play much of the latter film lying in bed, as Patton had broken his neck in an automobile accident. The camera is in close on him in many shots, and Scott runs through a range of emotions which convey to the viewer Patton’s sadness, anger, sentimentality, and courage. It is a remarkable performance, considering that earlier in the film Scott showed his usual toughness in sparring with his superiors and his ability to do comedy by singing a silly song.

Though Scott worked with some of the best Hollywood directors and actors, he never fit the typical Hollywood stereotype and always had an independent spirit. For example, he turned down the Academy Award for best actor in Patton. He fought with the program practices department of CBS in order to obtain more realism for his television series East Side, West Side. He opposed the rating given the excellent film he produced, directed, and starred in, The Savage Is Loose. Being so outspoken, he was sometimes called difficult, but he was always the professional. He aged well, and provided a series of original and memorable performances throughout his career.

—H. Wayne Schuth

SCOTT, Randolph

Films as Actor:
1928 Sharp Shooters (Blystone)
1929 Dynamite (DeMille); The Far Call (Dwan) (as Helms); The Virginian (Fleming); The Black Watch (Ford)
1931 The Women Men Marry (Hutchinson) (as Steve Bradley)
1932 Sky Bride (Robertta); Hot Saturday (Seiter) (as Fadden); A Successful Calamity (Adolfi) (as Larry)
1933 Island of Lost Souls (Kenton); Wild Horse Mesa (Hathaway) (as Chane Weymer); Hello Everybody! (Seiter) (as Hunt Blake); Heritage of the Desert (Hathaway) (as Jack Hare); Murders in the Zoo (Sutherland) (as Dr. Woodford); Supernatural (Halperin) (as Grant Wilson); Cocktail Hour (Schartzierger) (as Randolph Morgan); Man of the Forest (Hathaway) (as Brett Dale); To the Last Man (Hathaway) (as Lynn Hayden); Sunset Pass (Hathaway); Broken Dreams (Vignola) (as Dr. Robert Morely); Thundering Herd (Hathaway)
1934 The Last Round-Up (Hathaway) (as Jime Cleve); Wagon Wheels (Barton) (as Clint Belmet)
1935 The Rocky Mountain Mystery (The Fighting Westerner) (Bar-ton); Roberta (Seiter) (as John); Home on the Range
Randolph Scott (left) in Comanche Station (Jacobson) (as Tom Hartfield); Village Tale (Cromwell) (as Slaughter Somerville); She (Pichel and Holden) (as Leo Vincey); So Red the Rose (King Vidor) (as Duncan Bedford)

1936 Follow the Fleet (Sandrich) (as Bilge); And Sudden Death (Barton) (as Lt. James Knox); The Last of the Mohicans (Seitz) (as Hawkeye); Go West, Young Man (Hathaway) (as Bud)

1937 High, Wide, and Handsome (Mamoulian) (as Peter Cortlandt)

1938 Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (Dwan) (as Anthony Kent); Road to Reno (Simon) (as Steve Fortune); The Texans (as Kirk Jordan)

1939 Jesse James (Henry King) (as Will Wright); Susannah of the Mounties (Seiter) (as Monty Montague/Inspector Angus); Coast Guard (Ludwig) (as Speed Bradshaw); Frontier Marshall (Dwan) (as Wyatt Earp); Twenty Thousand Men a Year (Green) (as Brad Reynolds)

1940 Virginia City (Curtiz) (as Vance Irby); My Favorite Wife (Kanin) (as Burkett); When the Daltons Rode (Marshall) (as Tod Jackson)

1941 Western Union (Fritz Lang) (as Vance Shaw); Belle Starr (Cummings) (as Sam Starr); Paris Calling (Marlin) (as Nick)

1942 To the Shores of Tripoli (Humberstone) (as Sgt. Dixie Smith); The Spoilers (Enright) (as Alexander McNamara); Pittsburgh (Seiter) (as Cash Evans)

1943 The Desperadoes (Charles Vidor) (as Steve Upton); Bomber (Wallace) (as Capt. Buck Oliver); Corvette K-225 (Rosson) (as Lt. Commander MacClain); Gung Ho! (Enright) (as Col. Thorwald)

1944 Belle of the Yukon (Seiter) (as Honest John Calhoun)

1945 China Sky (Enright) (as Dr. Gray Thompson); Captain Kidd (Lee) (as Adam Mercy)

1946 Abilene Town (Marin) (as Dan Mitchell, + co-pr); Badman’s Territory (Whelan) (as Mark Rowley); Home Sweet Homicide (Bacon) (as Bill Smith)

1947 Trail Street (Enright) (as “Bat” Masterson); Gunfighters (Waggner) (as Brazos Kane); Christmas Eve (Sinner’s Holiday) (Marin) (as Jonathan)

1948 Albuquerque (Enright) (as Cole Armin); Return of the Badmen (Enright) (as Vance); Coroner Creek (Enright) (as Chris Denning)

1949 Canadian Pacific (Marin) (as Tom Andrews); The Walking Hills (Sturges) (as Jim Carey); The Doolins of Oklahoma
(Douglas) (as Bill Doolin); Fighting Man of the Plains
(Marin) (as Jim Dancer)
1950 The Nevadan (Douglas) (as Andrew Barclay); Colt 45 (Marin)
(as Steve Farrell); The Cariboo Trail (Marin) (as Jim Redfern)
1951 Sugarfoot (Marin) (as Jackson “Sugarfoot” Redan); Starlift
(De Ruth) (as himself); Santa Fe (Pichel) (as Britt Canfield);
Fort Worth (Marin) (as Ned Britt); Man in the Saddle (De Toth) (as Owen Meritat)
1952 Carson City (De Toth) (as Jeff); Hangman’s Knot (Huggins)
(as Matt Stewart); The Man Behind the Gun (Feist) (as Major Callicut)
1953 The Stranger Wore a Gun (De Toth) (as Jeff Travis); Thunder over the Plains (De Toth) (as Captain David Porter)
1954 Riding Shotgun (De Toth) (as Larry Delong); The Bounty
Hunter (De Toth) (as Jim Kipp)
1955 Rage at Dawn (Whelan) (as James Barlow); Ten Wanted
Men (Humberstone) (as John Stewart); Tall Man Riding (Selander) (as Larry Madden); A Lawless Street (Lewis) (as Calem Ware)
1956 Seven Men from Now (Boetticher) (as Ben Stride, + co-pr);
Seventh Cavalry (Lewis) (as Captain Tom Benson)
1957 The Tall T (Boetticher) (as Pat Brennan, + co-pr); Shoot-Out at Medicine Bend (Bare) (as Cap Devlin); Decision at Sundown (Boetticher) (as Bart Allison, + co-pr)
1958 Buchanan Rides Alone (Boetticher) (title role, + co-pr)
1959 Westbound (Boetticher) (as John Hayes, + co-pr); Ride Lonesome (Boetticher) (as Ben Brigade, + co-pr)
1960 Comanche Station (Boetticher) (as Jefferson Cody, + co-pr)
1962 Ride the High Country (Guns in the Afternoon) (Peckinpah)
(as Gil Westrum)

Publications

On SCOTT: books—
Fenin, George, and William K. Everson, The Western: From Silents
Crow, Jefferson Brim III, Randolph Scott: The Gentleman from McDonald, Archie P., editor, Shooting Stars: Heroes and Heroines of Western Film, Bloomington, Indiana, 1987.
Crow, Jefferson Brim, Randolph Scott: A Film Biography, Madison,
Scott, C. H., Whatever Happened to Randolph Scott?, Madison,
Scott, C. H., In the Footsteps of the Giant: Randolph Scott’s Son
Remembers His Father, Savannah, 1996.

On SCOTT: articles—
Boetticher, Budd, “Un gentleman,” in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris),
April 1987.

Dolven, Frank, “The Legacy of Randolph Scott,” in Classic Images
(Muscateine), September 1989.
Dolven, Frank, “Randolph Scott: ‘The Best of the Saddle Riders,’” in Classic Images (Muscateine), May 1994.
Clarke, Gerald, “Cary Grant and Randolph Scott,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1996.

* * *

Randolph Scott had a long career in the movies, beginning during the coming of sound, and ending with his final performance in director Sam Peckinpah’s celebrated Western, Ride the High Country, in 1962. Throughout this remarkable 35-year span Scott remained true to one role—the character of the bashful but feared Western hero.
But in real life he was neither a Westerner nor a cowboy. Scott was born and bred a Southerner; he attended Georgia Tech and was graduated from the University of North Carolina. He broke into Hollywood through a series of menial jobs, the most illustrious of which was being Gary Cooper’s voice coach for a short time.

Scott’s break came with the revival of the B Western in the 1930s.
Quickly he became a minor star, graduating to making Westerns for Paramount. Through the 1930s and 1940s he appeared in an amazing 66 films and rarely worked with distinguished directors (and when he did, it was in mediocre films such as Fritz Lang’s Western Union and Rouben Mamoulian’s High, Wide, and Handsome). More often than not Scott was grinding them out under the guiding hand of a Ray Enright or a Henry Hathaway.

In the early 1950s (at almost 50 years of age) Scott “overnight” became a star. In the first four years of that decade he made his only appearances in the annual ten list of most popular actors. The Westerns seemed unchanged from the vehicles of the 1940s, save for the addition of color. But during the early 1950s the public embraced Randolph Scott’s “new” screen persona as dished up in a series of two or three Westerns per year.

Based on this newfound popularity, Scott formed his own production company with producer Harry Joe Brown. This enterprise provided Scott with the freedom to create his own Westerns and at the same time become a very wealthy man. In what is now known as the “Ranown” cycle of films, Randolph Scott made his greatest contribution to film history by portraying an aging cowboy in seven films directed by Budd Boetticher, and produced by Scott and Brown.
These seven films (from Seven Men from Now in 1956 to Comanche Station in 1960), established, according to noted critic Andrew Sarris, “a new style of the [Western] genre.’’ Film theorist André Bazin called Seven Men from Now “the most intelligent Western I know of
. . . and the most beautiful.”

Scott’s final film was Ride the High Country. Many critics consider this tribute to the Western to be director Sam Peckinpah’s best film. Randolph Scott retired in 1962 as one of Hollywood’s richest men. He made this fortune, estimated to be in the tens of millions of dollars, from the movies plus wise investments in oil wells and real estate. Unlike many of his generation Scott appeared on television only in his old films, not in movies made for television or as a guest star on a series.

—Douglas Gomery
SEBERG, Jean

Nationality: American. Born: Jean Dorothy Seberg in Marshalltown, Iowa, 13 November 1938. Education: Attended schools in Marshalltown; University of Iowa, Iowa City. Family: Married 1) Francois Moreuil, 1958 (divorced 1960); 2) the writer Romain Gary, 1963 (divorced); 3) Dennis Berry. Career: 1956—chosen amid great publicity as unknown to play the lead in Preminger’s film Saint Joan; 1958—Preminger turned over her contract to Columbia after the failure of both Saint Joan and Bonjour Tristesse; 1959—role in Godard’s A bout de souffle gave her international critical recognition; later French and international films; 1970s—career embittered by political harassment of her by the media; breakdown after the miscarriage of her child, and lawsuit concerning its paternity. Died: In Paris, 31 August 1979.

Films as Actress:

1957 Saint Joan (Preminger) (title role)
1958 Bonjour Tristesse (Preminger) (as Cecile)
1959 The Mouse That Roared (Arnold) (as Helen)
1960 A bout de souffle (Breathless) (Godard) (as Patricia Franchini);
   Let No Man Write My Epitaph (Leacock) (as Barbara Holloway);
   La Recreation (Playtime; Love Play) (Moreuil) (as Kate Hoover)
1961 Les Grandes Personnes (Time Out for Love) (Valere) (as Ann);
   L’Amant de cinq jours (The Five-Day Lover) (de Broca)
1962 Congo Vivo (Bennati)
1963 In the French Style (Parrish) (as Christina James); Le Grand Escroc (Godard—short)
1964 Echappement libre (Backfire) (Becker) (as Olga Celan); Lilith (Rossen) (title role)
1965 Moment to Moment (LeRoy) (as Kay Stanton); Un Millard au billard (Diamonds Are Brittle) (Gessner)
1966 La Ligne de demarcation (Line of Demarcation) (Chabrol) (as Edith Lemoine);
   Camorra! (Squitieri)
1967 Les Oiseaux vont mourir au Perou (Birds Come to Die in Peru) (Gary) (as Adriana)
1968 Pendulum (Schaefner) (as Adele Matthews); Paint Your Wagon (Logan) (as Elizabeth)
1970 Airport (Seaton) (as Tanya Livingston); Ondata di calore (Dead of Summer) (Risi) (as Joyce Grasse);
   Macchi Callahan (Kowalski) (as Alexandra Mountford)
1971 Kill! (Gary) (as Emily)
1972 Quaeta specie d’amore (This Kind of Love) (Bevilacqua);
   L’Attentat (The French Conspiracy) (Boisset) (as Edith Lemoine);
   Corruption de Chris Miller (Bardem) (as Ruth) 1973 Mousy (Petrice—for TV) (as Laura Anderson/Richardson);
   Les hautes solitudes (The Outer Limit of Solitude) (Garrel)
1974 Bianchi cavalli d’Agosto (The White Horses of Summer) (Del Balzo);
   Le Grande Delire (The Great Frenzy) (Berry)
1976 Die Wildente (The Wild Duck) (Geissendoerfer) (as Gina)

Film as Director:

1974 Ballad for the Kid (+ to)

Publications

By SEBERG: articles—

Interview with Susan d’Arcy, in Films Illustrated (London), August 1974.

On SEBERG: books—

On SEBERG: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1995; Autumn 1995.

Fuller, G., “Shots in the Dark,” in Interview, March 1996.

Waarala, Hannu, in Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 4–5, 1997.

* * *

In the 34 features and 2 shorts that Iowa-born Jean Seberg made, she frequently played the all-American woman abroad. Her first two films, Saint Joan (in which the 17-year-old Seberg won the title role in a highly publicized open casting call) and Bonjour Tristesse, failed to gain her a critical or popular audience in the United States. Saint Joan in particular was a notorious failure, and easily might have plunged her back into obscurity. In France, however, she became a star overnight after her performance in the film that launched the French New Wave, A bout de souffle. Here, Jean-Luc Godard developed what he saw as her essential image, a fetching ambiguity of incorruptible wholesomeness that cloaked a casual amorality. The French were immediately charmed by her short-cropped blond hair, midwestern-accented French, and relaxed naturalistic acting.

A bout de souffle also established Seberg as the archetypal American girl abroad, and prompted Robert Rossen to cast her in her finest American film, Lilith. She plays a beautiful young schizophrenic in a luxurious mental asylum who seduces an occupational therapist. A genuine departure for her, the role allowed Seberg to use her wholesomeness as a cover for Lilith’s malevolence. In one hauntingly lovely scene, Seberg draws her skirt to her knees, wades into a misty lake, and bends over to kiss her own image, an act that hauntingly lovely scene, Seberg draws her skirt to her knees, wades into a misty lake, and bends over to kiss her own image, an act that hauntingly lovely scene, Seberg draws her skirt to her knees, wades into a misty lake, and bends over to kiss her own image, an act that hautes solitudes. In the latter she portrays herself—an American actress and left-wing activist living in exile. Neither film was successful.

At her best an actress of uncommon intelligence and feeling, Seberg never completely lost her all-American wholesomeness on the screen, even in films that explicitly tried to undermine it: La corrupción de Chris Miller and Les Oiseaux vont mourir au Perou. As the critic Vincent Canby said, she was “one of the most appealing and enigmatic movie stars of the 1960s.” But she also was one of the more notorious casualties of the times, on levels personal, professional, and political. In 1995, 16 years after her tragic and much-too-early death, independent filmmaker Mark Rappaport reconstructed her life in the celluloid essay From the Journals of Jean Seberg, in which he examined her on- and off-screen persona from a social and cultural perspective.

—Arthur Nolletti Jr., updated by Rob Edelman

SELLERS, Peter

Films as Actor:

1951 Penny Points to Paradise (Young) (as the Major/Arnold Fringe); London Entertains (Faucye); Let’s Go Crazy (Cullimore—short) (as Groucho/Guiseppe/Cedric/izzy Gozzunk/Crystal Jollibottom)

1952 Down among the Z Men (Rogers) (as Major Bloodnok)

1953 Super Secret Service (Green)

1954 Orders Are Orders (Paltenghi) (as Private Goffin)
1955  John and Julie (Fairchild) (as P. C. Diamond); The Ladykillers (Mackendrick) (as Harry); The Case of the Makkinese Battlehorn (Stirling—short) (as Inspector Quilt/Henry Crun/Sid Crimp/Sir Jervis Fruit); The Man Who Never Was (Neame) (voice of Winston Churchill)

1957  The Smallest Show on Earth (Dearden) (as Percy Quill); Death of a Salesman (Arliss—short); Cold Comfort (Hill); Insomnia Is Good for You (as Hector Dimwiddle)

1958  The Naked Truth (Your Past Is Showing) (Zampi) (as Sonny MacGregor); Up the Creek (Guest) (as Chief Petty Officer Doherty); Tom Thumb (Pal) (as Tony); Carlton-Browne of the F.O. (Man in a Cocked Hat) (Boulting) (as Amphibulous)

1959  The Mouse That Roared (Arnold) (as Bascombe/Grand Duchess Gloriana/Count Mountjoy); I’m All Right, Jack (Boulting) (as Fred Kite)

1960  Battle of the Sexes (Crichton) (as Mr. Martin); Two-Way Stretch (Day) (as “Dodger” Lane)

1961  Never Let Go (Guillermin) (as Lionel Meadows); The Millionairess (Asquith) (as Dr. Ahmed el Kabir/Parerga); The Road to Hong Kong (short)

1962  Only Two Can Play (Gilliat) (as John Lewis); Waltz of the Toreadors (Guillermin) (as General Leo Fitzjohn); Lolita (Kubrick) (as Clare Quilty)

1963  The Dock Brief (Hill) (as Morgenhall); Heavens Above (Boulting) (as the Reverend John Aspinall); The Wrong Arm of the Law (Owen) (as Pearly Gates); The Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Inspector Clouseau)

1964  Dr. Strangelove: Or, How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (Kubrick) (title role/Captain Mandrake/President Muffley); The World of Henry Orient (Hill) (title role); A Shot in the Dark (Edwards) (as Inspector Clouseau)

1965  What’s New, Pussycat? (Clive Donner) (as Fritz Fassbender)

1966  The Wrong Box (Forbes) (as Dr. Pratt); After the Fox (Sica) (as Aldo Vanucci)

1967  Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as Evelyn Tremble); The Bobo (Parrish) (as Juan Bautista); Woman Times Seven (De Sica) (as Jean)

1968  The Party (Edwards) (as Hrundi Vakshi); I Love You, Alice B. Toklas (Averback) (as Harold Fine)

1969  The Magic Christian (McGrath) (as Sir Guy Grand)
1970 Hoffman (Rakoff) (title role); There’s a Girl in My Soup (Boulting) (as Robert Danvers); A Day at the Beach (Hesera); Simon, Simon (Stark—short)

1972 Where Does It Hurt? (Amateau); Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland (Sterling) (as King of Hearts)

1973 The Blockhouse (Rees) (as Bouquet); The Optimist (The Optimist of Nine Elms) (Simmons) (as Sam); Soft Beds and Hard Battles (Undercover Hero) (Boulting) (as Gen. Latour/ Major Robinson/Schroeder/Adolf Hitler/Prince Kyoto/French President)

1974 Ghost in the Noonday Sun (Medak); The Great McGonagall (McGrath) (as Queen Victoria); The Return of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Inspector Clouseau)

1976 Murder by Death (Moore) (as Sidney Wang); The Pink Panther Strikes Again (Edwards) (as Inspector Clouseau)

1978 Revenge of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Inspector Clouseau)

1979 Being There (Ashby) (as Chance); The Prisoner of Zenda (Quine) (as Prince Rudolph/Syd Frewin)

1980 The Fiendish Plot of Dr. Fu Manchu (Haggard) (title role/+ title role)

1982 Trail of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Inspector Clouseau)

Film as Producer:

1960 The Running, Jumping, and Standing Still Film (Lester—short)

Film as Director:

1961 Mister Topaze (+ title role)

Publications

By SELLERS: books—

On SELLERS: books—

On SELLERS: articles—

Peary, Gerald, “Peter Sellers,” in American Film (New York), April 1990.

* * *

English comedy pre-1945 was usually modest, rueful, cheerful, uncritical; back from the war Sellers’s generation brought more anarchic attitudes, and Sellers found fame, with Spike Milligan, Harry Secombe, and, initially, Michael Bentine, in The Goon Show radio comedy. Like some missing link between Edward Lear and Monty Python, the Goons combined anarcho-daffy parodies of Englishness with the Dada-logic of crazy cartoons, yet being soundonly, were crazier still. Sellers was the voices of, inter alia, Bluebottle, Major Dennis Bloodnok, and Henry Crum, later developing a quieter, more populist, humor on records. Goonery boggles visual live action; the early, very cheap, shorts get odd licks of it, though Richard Lester’s 1960 The Running, Jumping, and Standing Still Film (which Sellers produced) is a gem.

Having risen to fame as a gaggle of lunatic voices, Sellers hesitated before plunging into film, as if uncertain what the rest of him could add; indeed, throughout certain roles, and periodically in all of them, his voice seems to float over a face which, however deadly its mimicry, also seems blank. His immense diversity of characters—mad-keen officer-class types, the “shabby genteel,” polite misfits, demented liberals—all share a gleaming-eyed obstinacy with a Nelsonian blindness to some obvious and enormous truth.

His movie career developed slowly, through character acting, especially lower-class character parts: a Cockney crook in The Ladykillers, a Scottish clerk in Battle of the Sexes, an “Old Mate” cinema projectionist in Smallest Show on Earth, the caricature-suave criminal kingpin in The Wrong Arm of the Law, a misanthropic television star in The Naked Truth, and above all Fred Kite, the earnest Communist shop-steward, in I’m All Right, Jack, the performance that earned Sellers a British Academy Award and brought him international attention. A cold energy, a deadly accurate detail, an association of deference with pathos, and an absence of team spirit set Sellers’s lower-class characters nearer the “angry young men” of the time and the subsequent “satire boom” than the general 1950s ethos.

Wistful pathos keynoted his first star part in an international film, as the idealistic Indian doctor pursued by Sophia Loren’s Shavian Superwoman in The Millionairess. But two stronger, atypical dramatic roles, as a ravingly irate crook in the gangster film Never Let Go, and as the worldly colonel in Walz of the Toreadors, from Anouilh’s play, strengthened the, perhaps unfair, critical opinion that, unlike Alec Guinness, he was more an impersonator of types than an actor. In three films about middle-class innocents finally learning the prevalent cynicism—Mister Topaze (self-directed), Only Two Can Play (from Kingsley Amis), and The Dock Brief (from John Mortimer)—his talent seemed stalled for lack of heart, or at least, modulations between his “home keys”: icy rage and stiff bewilderment.

His gifts revived under a group of American directors. Pulling a Guinness, he played several roles in Jack Arnold’s The Mouse That Roared (including a fruitily Edwardian Margaret Rutherford-type duchess). Sellers then repeated the feat in Kubrick’s Dr. Strangelove (a liberal President being desperately reasonable during nuclear apocalypse, his ex-Nazi scientific adviser, and a decent but dumb RAF colonel who almost saves the world from the brink of destruction; Sellers was set to play a fourth role in the film, as the Texas bombardier who rides a nuke to oblivion, but suffered an accident after several scenes were shot and was replaced by Slim Pickens). He had warmed up for this job with several identity-jugglings in Kubrick’s earlier Lolita, as an enigmatic intellectual playacting a succession of characters to hound James Mason’s nymphet-obsessed Humbert Humbert.

Hollywood snared Sellers for Blake Edwards’s lighthearted Pink Panther films, a fusion of slapstick and “comedy of manners,” about the (mis)adventures of Inspector Clouseau, an accident-prone detective braving social humiliations which would have finished a less insensitive and dimwitted man. The role was a supporting one in the first Panther film, but Sellers’s tomfoolery stole the picture out from under David Niven and its other big-name stars, and Sellers’s character was made the lead in the immediate follow-up, A Shot in the Dark, and all the remaining (and gradually deteriorating) Panther comedies from then on.

Disagreements during the shooting of Sellers’s first film actually made in Hollywood, Kiss Me, Stupid!, generated much publicity, first from a reported clash of egos between Sellers and his director, Billy Wilder, then from the near-fatal heart attack that prompted Sellers’s replacement by Ray Walston. Trimmer and healthier, he returned in What’s New, PussyCAT?, scripted by Woody Allen, in which Sellers’s swinging psychiatrist intriguingly mixed gauderies à la Clouseau with a smidgeon of Strangelove. But many unsuccessful films ensued, in which he offered awkward variations on his swinging sixties specialities (parody, pathos, awkwardness, stiffly frozen fury). Nevertheless, the Clouseau sequels proved highly popular, and kept his name in the public eye long enough for him to achieve a fine swansong (and an Oscar nomination) as the simpleminded gardener taken for a guru in Hal Ashby’s quiet, mournful, comedy, Being There. Sellers had pursued the role for years, bombarding the novel’s author, Jerzy Kosinski, with marathon telegrams signed by its hero, Chauncey Gardiner. He imbued the film with a chilling superficiality of feeling, which a number of Sellers biographers suggest was a self-portrait. It is often said that in every clown is a Hamlet struggling to get out; Sellers was a chameleon struggling to contain a vacuum within, his biographers say. His characters’ propensity to quietly fixed stances suggests not so much Stan Laurel, from whom Sellers learned them, but some furious frustration, some tantrumy dominance. If Goonish lunacy generally was exuberantly obsessive, and had soul, its essence was a maniac triumph over some inner deadness.

Sellers was the type of actor-comedian whose basic character shades into a myriad of impersonations—like Peter Ustinov (for whom the role of Clouseau was first intended) or Danny Kaye (the original choice for the old Cockney bucker of The Optimist of Nine Elms). He drew much inspiration from two more fully dramatic chameleons, Alec Guinness, renowned for stiff-upper-lip melancholy, and Laurence Olivier, especially in his cynically hollow roles (parodied by Sellers repeatedly, almost vengefully). On an abidingly popular comedy record, Sellers speaks Lennon and McCartney’s A Hard Day’s Night like Laurence Olivier doing Shakespeare; but the Sellers combines Henry V (noble resolution) and Richard III (dark treachery). So many incongruous identities, cultures, moralities, in one even vocal line, is Seller’s essence—and ars celare artis.

It is reputedly Sellers who endowed Fred Kite with soul, where the Boultings had envisaged only a schematically nasty “bolshie’’ militant. On Strangelove, Kubrick used three or more cameras to catch Sellers’s unscripted, unpredictable, yet always in-character, improvisations. Clouseau is a classic comic figure, a silhouette as appropriate to mass affluence and its embarrassments as Tati’s Hulot, but always exact and intimate, where Tati’s films became remote and overblown. Sellers was surely an auteur, even if one can only dream about the Wilder film as it might have been, with Sellers and Monroe (as first envisaged), or Sellers in deeper Woody Allen films (Allen’s Zelig, for example, another fable about “being there’’). It is fittingly sardonic that Seller’s many happy collaborations with Edwards ended on a sour note, with litigation over Seller’s last “performance” as Clouseau, which was cobbled together, after his death, from the outtakes of earlier films, a life-size cutout, and other simulacra of an actor “being there.”

—Raymond Durgnat, updated by John McCarty

SEYRIG, Delphine

Delphine Seyrig (left) with Daniele Quimet in Daughters of Darkness

Films as Actress:

1958 Pull My Daisy (Frank) (as Mrs. Larry Rivers)
1961 L’Année dernière à Marienbad (Last Year at Marienbad) (Resnais) (as the woman)
1963 Muriel (Resnais) (as Helene)
1965 Qui êtes-vous, Polly Magoo? (Klein)
1966 La Musica (Duras and Seban) (as She)
1967 Accident (Losey) (as Francesca)
1968 Mr. Freedom (Klein) (as Marie/Madeleine); Baisers volés (Stolen Kisses) (Truffaut) (as Fabienne Tabard); La Voie lactée (The Milky Way) (Buñuel) (as prostitute)
1970 Peau d’âne (The Magic Donkey; Donkey Skin) (Demy) (as Fairy Godmother)

1971 Le Rouge aux lèvres (Daughters of Darkness) (Kumel) (as Countess Elizabeth Bathory)
1972 Le Charme discret de la bourgeoisie (The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie) (Buñuel) (as Mme. Thevenot); Le Journal d’un suicide (Stanojevic) (as interpreter)
1973 Evalie quitte les champs (The Star, The Orphan, and the Butcher) (Savary); A Doll’s House (Losey) (as Kristine Linde); The Day of the Jackal (Zinnemann) (as Colette)
1974 The Black Windmill (Siegel) (as Cecil Burrows); Dites-le avec des fleurs (Grimblat) (as Françoise); Le Cri de coeur (Lallemand) (as wife)
1975 India Song (Duras) (as Anne-Marie); Le Jardin qui bascule (Gilles) (as Kate); Jeanne Dielman, 23 Quai du Commerce, 1080 Bruxelles (Akerman) (title role); Aloise (de Kermadec) (title role); Voyage en Amérique; Je t’aime, tu danses
1976 Caro Michele (Monicelli) (as Adriana); Son nom de Venise dans Calcutta désert (Duras)
1977 Repérages (Faces of Love) (Soutter) (as Julie); Der letzte Schrei (van Ackeren); Baxter—Véra Baxter (Duras)
The haunting screen image of Delphine Seyrig stands at the center of French avant-garde filmmaking since the 1960s. Her elevation to this stature is based on two films, L'Année dernière à Marienbad and India Song. Not only significant as films, these works are important for their connections with the nouveau roman, a style that seeks to achieve an image of the eternal present through a dynamic of frozen gesture and glances. Only the face, body, and intellect of Seyrig could lend the subtleties demanded of this form which emphasizes image and psychology over plot and dialogue. David Bordwell admirably summed up Seyrig’s novelistic qualities by calling her a Proustian actress. She endows her characters with a historical complexity brought to life in the present through the simplest of gestures.

Alain Robbe-Grillet, who wrote L'Année dernière à Marienbad, had hoped Kim Novak would play the female lead. He wanted an actress who was less cerebral and more carnal than Seyrig. Fortunately for the dramatic and visual complexity of the film, Seyrig won the role. The film is about brainwashing: a man attempts to create in a woman’s mind a past that never was in order to gain control over her present. The dramatic energy of the film is based on the woman’s psychic resistance to the man. At times, the woman posed like a model, moments when the fashion-plate beauty of Seyrig works to perfection. Other times, the woman rebels or at least recoils from this positioning and rebuffs the man with wit and sophistication. Here the persona of Seyrig comes into full play. Even when capitulating to the man, there is enough lingering resistance to make the spectator question the validity of the image and wonder if it is not part of the man’s fantasy. Novak, who plays to perfection a woman conforming to all aspects of imagistic male fantasy, as in Vertigo, would not have been able to generate this sense of resistant intellect.

In India Song Seyrig perfectly embodies the upper-class hauteur of the femme fatale. She portrays a woman who, in the grand French manner of de Pompadour, de Staël, and George Sand, has emotional and intellectual power to enslave certain males even into her middle age. India Song, even more than L'Année dernière à Marienbad, gives the false impression of stasis. Treating mental actions and developments rather than physical ones, the film requires a commanding yet illusive presence that only Seyrig could provide. Any other actress would have made the character appear like a dressmaker’s dummy in a shop window.

Between L'Année dernière à Marienbad and India Song lie other fine films. Muriel, Accident, and Baisers volés. Throughout her career, Delphine Seyrig embodied the intelligent and beautiful woman who approximates human perfection. She remains one of film history’s most important actresses.

—Rodney Farnsworth

SHARIF, Omar

Nationality: Egyptian. Born: Michael Shalhoub in Alexandria, 10 April 1932; grew up in Cairo. Education: Attended English schools; British Victoria College, Cairo. Family: Married the actress Faten

---

Omar Sharif

Films as Actor:

1953 Sera's Fil Wadi (Struggle in the Valley) (Shahin)
1954 Ayamna al Hilwa (Our Happy Days) (Halim); Shaitan el Sahara (Devil of the Desert) (Shahin)
1955 Sera'a Fil Mina (Struggle in the Pier) (Shahin); Ard el Salam (Land of Peace) (El-Chiekh)
1956 La Anam (No Sleep) (Saif)
1957 Shatt el Asrar (Shore of Mystery) (Salem); Ghaliit Habibi (My Lover's Mistake) (Bideir)
1958 Goha (Baratier); Min Ajr Imraa (For the Sake of a Woman) (El-Chiekh); Moud ma a el Maghoula (A Date with an Unknown) (Salem); Fedha Fil Zamalek (Scandal at Zamalek) (Mustafa)
1959 Ehne el Talamza (We Students) (Salem); Sera's Fil Nil (Struggle in the Nile) (Saif)
1960 Eshaet Hub (Love Rumor) (Abdel-Wahab); Lowat el Hub (Agony of Love) (Saif); Nahr el Hub (River of Love) (Zakhfikar); Hubbi el Wahid (My Only Love) (El-Chiekh); Gharam el Axyad (I Love My Boss) (Naguib); Bidaya wa Nihaya (Beginning and End) (Saif)
1961 Fi Batina Rajal (A Man in Our House) (Barakat)
1962 Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (as Sherif Ali ibn el Kharish)
1964 The Fall of the Roman Empire (Anthony Mann) (as Sohamus); Behold a Pale Horse (Zinnemann) (as Father Francisco); The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Neibaur) (as Grandfather)
1965 La Fabuleuse Aventure de Marco Polo (Marco the Magnificent) (de la Patellière and Noel Howard) (as Emir Alaou); Genghis Khan (Levin) (title role); Doctor Zhivago (Lean) (title role)
1966 The Poppy Is Also a Flower (Terence Young) (as Dr. Rad)
1967 The Night of the Generals (Litvak) (as Major Grau); C'era una volta (More than a Miracle; Cinderella, Italian Style; Happily Ever After) (Rosì) (as Prince Ramon)
1968 Funny Girl (Wyler) (as Nick Arnstein); Mayerling (Terence Young) (as Crown Prince Rudolf)
1969 MacKenzie's Gold (J. Lee Thompson) (as Colorado); The Appointment (Lumet) (as Federico Fendi); Che! (Fleischer) (title role)
1970 The Last Valley (Clavell) (as Vogel); The Horsemen (Frankenheimer) (as Uraz)
1971 Le Casse (The Burglars) (Verneuil) (as Abel Zacharia)
1972 Le Droit d'aîmer (The Right to Love; Brainwashed) (Le Hung)
1973 L'isola misteriosa e il capitano Nemo (The Mysterious Island of Captain Nemo) (Bardem) (as Captain Nemo)
1974 The Tamarind Seed (Edwards) (as Feodor Sverdlov); Juggernaut (Lester) (as Captain Brunel); The Return of the Pink Panther (Edwards)
1975 Funny Lady (Ross) (as Nick Arnstein); Crime and Passion (Ace Up Your Sleeve) (Passer) (as Andre Ferren)
1976 The Pink Panther Strikes Again (Edwards) (as Egyptian assassin)
1979 Bloodline (Terence Young) (as Ivo Palazzi); Ashanti (Fleischer) (as the Prince)
1980 The Baltimore Bullet (Miller) (as the Deacon); Oh, Heavenly Dog! (Camp) (as Malcolm Bart); S*H*E (Robert Lewis—for TV) (as Cesare Magnasco); Pleasure Palace (Grauman—for TV)
1981 Green Ice (Day) (as Meno Argenti)
1982 Inchon (Terence Young)
1984 Top Secret! (Zucker, Abrahams, and Zucker) (as Cedric); Far Pavilions (Duffell—for TV)
1985 Edge of the Wind (Ives—for TV); Vicious Circle (Ives—for TV)
1986 Anastasia: The Mystery of Anna (Chomsky—for TV) (as Czar Nicholas II); Harem (Hale—for TV) (as Sultan Hassan)
1987 Les Possédés (The Possessed) (Wajda) (as Stephan Verkhovensky)
1988 Grand Larcony (Swara—for TV) (as Rashid Saoud); Les Pyramides bleue (Paradise Calling) (Dombasle) (as Alex); Keys to Freedom (Feke)
1990 Michelangelo and Me (De Moro—for TV); No Justice (Tessari)
1990 Mountains of the Moon (Rafelson) (uncredited); Quatro piccole donne (Albano—for TV); The Rainbow Thief (Jodorowsky) (as Dima the Thief); Lion in the Desert (Tessari—for TV); Viaggio d'Amore (Journey of Love) (as Rico)
1991 The Castle (Foreman); Al Mouten Al Myssri (War in the Land of Egypt) (Salah Abou Serif); Mayrig (Verneuil) (as Hagop)
1992 Tengoku No Taizai (Heavenly Sin) (Masuda) (as Tsai Meng Hua); Mrs. ‘Arris Goes to Paris (Shaw—for TV) (as Marquis DeChassange); 588 Rue Paradis (Verneuil) (as Hagop); Beyond Justice (Tessari) (as Emir)
1996 Galliver's Travels (Sturridge—for TV) (as the Sorcerer)
1997 Heaven Before I Die (Musallam) (as Khalil Gibran)
1998 Mysteries of Egypt (Neihaur) (as Grandfather)
1999 The 13th Warrior (McTiernan) (as Melchisedek)

Publications

By SHARIF: books—

On SHARIF: articles—

* * *

After almost ten years as a star of the Egyptian cinema, Omar Sharif received desired international critical and popular acclaim with his performance as Sherif Ali, Lawrence’s fierce ally in David Lean’s Lawrence of Arabia. The film won an Oscar as Best Picture and Sharif was nominated as Best Supporting Actor. Quickly he became a gossip-magazine staple as the hottest new screen sex symbol. In the years that followed, he courageously took on other historical characters, including Sohamus, King of the Armenians in The Fall of the Roman Empire, and the title role of Genghis Khan.

David Lean, who brought him to international acclaim, then altered Sharif’s established image as a fierce warrior, when he next cast him as Dr. Yuri Zhivago, the idealistic poet caught up in the Russian Revolution and an illicit love affair. Sharif’s role in the epic Doctor Zhivago is still the part many moviegoers primarily identify him with. The film was produced on a mammoth scale, by a major director and co-starred Julie Christie (who also was extremely popular at the time). This all contributed to Zhivago’s current status as a cinematic classic and Sharif’s association to the main character. Three years later he was cast as Nick Arnstein opposite Barbra Streisand’s Fanny Brice in Funny Girl. (This was his ultimate role as a man wounded in love.) For the third time in less than ten years, he was in a top-grossing film and the focus of much media attention. His real life escapades as a bridge player fueled the fan magazines with parallels between Sharif and Arnstein.

The year 1969 saw the beginning of his fall from major stardom. Once again he took on the role of a historic figure: Che Guevara in Che!. This time the film was a disaster and Sharif did not weather the failure. He then began to work in Europe. In the mid-1970s he returned to English-speaking roles only to be involved in three all-star failures: as Soviet spy Sverdlov opposite Julie Andrews in Blake Edwards’s The Tamarind Seed, as Captain Brunel in Richard Lester’s Juggernaut, and once again as Nick Arnstein opposite Streisand in Herbert Ross’s Funny Lady. Despite an interesting performance as the opportunistic investment counselor André Ferren in Ivan Passer’s underrated Crime and Passion, Sharif has since received only mediocre roles in mediocre or poor films. Most recently, he was uncharacteristically cast as a villain in the television movie Gulliver’s Travels.

Sharif’s offscreen life as an international playboy kept his name active in the gossip columns in the 1980s. His box-office power, however, has waned significantly from the promise of the 1960s.

—Doug Tomlinson, updated by Linda J. Stewart

SHAW, Robert

Nationality: British. Born: Westhoughton, Lancashire, 9 August 1927. Education: Attended Truro School, Cornwall; Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts, London. Family: Married 1) the actress Jennifer Bourke, 1952 (divorced), four daughters; 2) the actress Mary Ure, 1956—in TV series The Scarlet Buccaneer (novel), London, 1959. Child: Girl. Children: Daughter. Father: Henry John Shaw, 1896—Broadway debut in The Caretaker; 1968—his play The Man in the Glass Booth, based on his novel, produced in both London and New York, and in 1975 made into a movie; 1976—co-host of Academy Awards show. Died: In Tourmakeady, Ireland, 28 August 1978.

Films as Actor:

1951 The Lavender Hill Mob (Charles Crichton) (as police scientist) (Yates) (as Romer Treece)
1955 The Dam Busters (Anderson) (as Flight Sgt. Pulford) (Goldstone) (as Ned Lynch);
1956 Doublecross (Squire); A Hill in Korea (Hell in Korea) (Amyes) (as Lance-Cpl. Hodge) A Card from Morocco (novel), New York, 1969; (as Lance-Cpl. Hodge);
1959 Sea Fury (Enfield) (as Gorman); Libel (Asquith) (as first photographer) (as Lt. Field) (as Kershner) (title role); Carol for Another Christmas (Joseph L. Mankiewicz—for TV)
1961 Battle of the Bulge (Annakin) (as Col. Hessler) A Man for All Seasons (Zinnemann) (as King Henry VIII)
1962 Custer of the West (Good Day for Fighting) (Siodmak) (as Gen. George Custer); The Birthday Party (Friedkin) (as Stanley Weber) Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (as Squadron Leader Skipper);
1963 The Royal Hunt of the Sun (Lerner) (as Francisco Pizarro)
Figures in a Landscape (Losey) (as MacConnachie, + sc) A Town Called Hell (Parrish) (as town priest) The Taking of Pelham One Two Three (Sargent) (as Blue)
1972 Young Winston (Attenborough) (as Lord Randolph Churchill) Jaws (Spieberg) (as Quint); Der Richter und sein Henker (Müller) (as Lobby); The Sting (George Roy Hill) (as Doyle Lonnegan)
1974 The Taking of Peliham One Two Three The Deep (Yates) (as Romer Treece) Force Ten from Navarone (Hamilton) (as Mallory)
1977 Black Sunday (Frankenheimer) (as Kabakov); The Man in the Glass Booth (play), London, 1965; (as Kabakov) Avalanche Express (Robson) (as Marenkov)

Publications

By SHAW: books—

By SHAW: articles—

“Running Figure in Landscape,” interview with A. Guerin and H. Grossman, in Show (Hollywood), January 1970.

On SHAW: books—

On SHAW: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1994.
Norman, Barry, in Radio Times (London), 22 June 1996.

***

At the time Robert Shaw died of a heart attack in 1978, his status as a bona fide movie star was still in its infancy. But this late recognition was preceded by a long and memorable career as a character actor and villain. His classical training at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art interested him in writing as well as acting. Shaw was a playwright, scenarist, and award-winning novelist, bringing a literate and literary sensibility to his screen acting.

But it was the other side of Shaw’s personality—that of an extremely competitive, quick-tempered, greedy man whose infidelities resulted in his first and second wives each giving birth to one of his children within a five-week span, and led his second wife, the actress Mary Ure, and mother of four of his ten children to suicide—that provided the raw material for his initial film image. Built on a foundation of harnessed anger, Shaw’s image was cemented through numerous performances in character roles and as arch-villains. Most notable of these were his roles as Red Grant, stalking James Bond and... sporting outrageously dyed blond hair, in From Russia with Love; Lord Randolph Churchill, the father of Winston Churchill, in Attenborough's Young Winston; and perhaps the role that best-suited the dark side of Shaw’s psyche, King Henry VIII in A Man for All Seasons, for which, appropriately enough, he was nominated for a Best Supporting Actor Academy Award.

The two films most responsible for altering Shaw’s career were The Sting and Jaws. In co-starring roles he fixed himself indelibly in the public eye and secured his status as a leading man. This new position however, was unfortunately brief. The few films that followed granted him top-billing but little else in terms of popular or critical acceptance. Had he lived, he might have been able to create a leading man as colorful, memorable, or dynamic as his best villains. His failed attempts at heroic stardom seem to indicate that Shaw’s particular brand of blustery ferocity was best utilized in support of, or in opposition to, the protagonist of a film.

—Bill Wine, updated by David E. Salamie

SHEARER, Norma

Nationality: American. Born: Edith Norma Shearer in Westmont, Montreal, Quebec, Canada, 10 August 1900; became U.S. citizen, 1932. Education: Attended Westmont High School; Canadian Royal Academy of Music. Family: Married 1) the producer Irving Thalberg, 1922—film debut as extra in Chasing York; 1920—film debut as extra in The Flapper; 1929/30; Best Actress, Venice Festival, for Marie Antoinette, 1938. Died: In Woodland Hills, California, 12 June 1983.

Films as Actress:

1920 The Flapper (Crosland) (as extra); The Restless Sex (Leonard) (as extra); Way Down East (Griffith) (as extra); The Stealers (Cabanee) (as Julia Martin)

1921 Torchy's Millions

1922 The Leather Pushers (Pollard—serial); The Man Who Paid (Apfel) (as Jeanne); The Bootleggers (Sheldon) (as Helen Barnes); Channing of the Northwest (Ince) (as Jess Driscol)

1923 A Clouded Name (Huhn) (as Marjorie Dare); Man and Wife (McCutehon) (as Dora Perkins); The Devil’s Partner (Fleming) (as Jeanne); Pleasure Mad (Barker) (as Elinor Benton); The Wanters (Stahl) (as Marjorie); Lucretia Lombard (Conway) (as Mimi)

1924 The Trail of the Law (Apfel) (as Jerry Varden); The Wolf Man (Mortimer) (as Elizabeth Gordon); Blue Water (Hartford) (as Lilian Dunian); Broadway after Dark (Bell) (as Rose Duane); Broken Barriers (Barker) (as Grace Durland); Married Flirts (Vignola) (as herself); Empty Hands (Fleming) (as Claire Endicott); The Snob (Bell) (as Nancy Claxton); He Who Gets Slapped (Seastrom) (as Consuelo)

1925 Lady of the Night (Bell) (as Molly/Florence Banning); Waking Up the Town (Keyses) (as Mary Ellen Hope); A Slave of Fashion (Henley) (as Katherine Emerson); Pretty Ladies (Bell) (as Frances White); The Tower of Lies (Seastrom) (as Glory); His Secretary (Henley) (as Ruth Lawrence)

1926 The Devil’s Circus (Christenson) (as Mary); The Winning Sex (Leonard) (as Nina Duane); Upstage (Bell) (as Dolly Haven)

1927 The Demi-Bride (Leonard) (as Criquette); After Midnight (Bell) (as Mary); The Student Prince (Lubitsch) (as Kathie)

1928 Voices across the Sea (short); The Latest from Paris (Wood) (as Ann Dolan); The Actress (Franklin) (as Rose Trelawney); A Lady of Chance (Henley) (as Dolly)

1929 The Trial of Mary Dugan (Veiller) (title role); The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Franklin) (title role); The Hollywood Revue (Reisner) (as herself); Their Own Desire (Hopper) (as Lally)

1930 The Divorcee (Leonard) (as Jerry); Let Us Be Gay (Leonard) (as Kitty Brown)

1931 The Stolen Jools (McCann—short); Jackie Cooper’s Christmas Party (short) (as herself); Strangers May Kiss (Fitzmaurice) (as Lisbeth); A Free Soul (Brown) (as Jan Ashe); Private Lives (Franklin) (as Amanda Prynne)

1932 Smilin’ Through (Franklin) (as Monyean Clare/Kathleen)

1934 Riptide (Goulding) (as Lady Mary Rexford); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin) (as Elizabeth Barrett)

1936 Mister Will Shakespeare (Tourneur-short); Romeo and Juliet (Cukor) (as Juliet)

1938 Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke) (title role)

1939 Idiot’s Delight (Brown) (as Irene Fellara); The Women (Cukor) (as Mrs. Stephen Haines)

1940 Escape (LeRoy) (as Countess Von Trelck)

1941 We Were Dancing (Leonard) (as Vicki Wilomirski)

1942 Her Cardboard Lover (Cukor) (as Consuelo Croydon)

Publications

By SHEARER: article—

‘‘I’m Tame as a Lion,’’ in American Magazine, July 1935.

On SHEARER: books—

On SHEARER: articles—

Howe, Herbert, ‘‘What Is Norma Shearer’s Charm for Men?’’ in Photoplay (New York), November 1925.

St. Johns, Adela Rogers, ‘‘I’m Not Going to Marry Says Norma Shearer,’’ in Photoplay (New York), May 1927.

Fletcher, Adele, ‘‘Beauty, Brains, or Luck?’’ in Photoplay (New York), August 1930.

1115
Tully, Jim, “Early Struggles of Norma Shearer,” in Pictures and Pictureroom, 17 August 1935.
Obituary in Films and Filming (London), July 1983.

* * *

During the Great Depression, Norma Shearer represented all the glamour and chic associated with MGM. Although her acclaimed talent as an actress rested on little more than fan magazine publicity, she was, undeniably, a major star. She consistently ranked among Hollywood’s most popular performers during the 1930s, winning six Academy Award nominations for best actress between 1929 and 1938. Her marriage to Irving Thalberg was of great importance; his position made her a first lady of Hollywood while his power secured for Shearer some of her best roles. This is not to imply that Shearer’s career depended upon her husband’s connections. She had learned from working in silent films for such marginal outfits as Allied Producers, New Brunswick, and FBO Studios, how best to utilize her limited talents to create the ultimate image of a glamorous woman. After Thalberg’s death, she completed her studio contract and then retired to a life of wealth and leisure, only rarely appearing in public. Of her films, only The Student Prince, Romeo and Juliet, and The Women seem to hold any interest for audiences today.

—Douglas Gomery

SHEEN, Martin

Nationality: American. Born: Ramon Estevez in Dayton, Ohio, 3 August 1940; brother of actor Joe Estevez. Education: Attended Chaminade High School, Dayton. Family: Married Janet Templeton, 1961, sons: the actors Charlie Sheen, Emilio Estevez, and Ramon Estevez, daughter: the actress Renée Estevez. Career: Joined Julian Beck and Judith Malina’s off-off-Broadway Living Theatre, New York, late 1950s; had a key featured role on stage in The Connection, 1961; made his Broadway debut in Never Live over a Pretzel Factory; also in The Subject Was Roses, 1964; made film debut in The Incident, 1967; appeared in the TV soap opera As the World Turns, 1967–68; played the title role in Joseph Papp’s “mod” production of Hamlet, 1968; appeared in Then Came Bronson, the first of his many TV movies and mini-series, 1969; starred in the TV series The West Wing as Josiah “Jed” Bartlet, President of the United States, 1999.

Awards: San Sebastian International Film Festival Best Actor, for Badlands, 1974; Imagen Foundation Lifetime Achievement Award, 1998; Best Performance by an Actor in a Series-Drama Golden Satellite Award, Best Actor in a New Series TV Guide Award, for The West Wing, 1999. Agent: Innovative Artists, 1999 Avenue of the Stars, #2850, Los Angeles, CA 90067, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1967 The Incident (Peerce) (as Artie Connors)
1968 The Subject Was Roses (Grosbard) (as Timmy Cleary)
1969 Then Came Bronson (William Graham—for TV)
1970 Catch-22 (Mike Nichols) (as Lt. Dobbs); The Andersonville Trial (George C. Scott—for TV)
1971 Goodbye, Raggedy Ann (Cook—for TV); Mongo’s Back in Town (Chomsky—for TV); No Drums, No Bugles (Ware) (as Ashby Gatrell)
1972 Pickup on 101 (Florea) (as Les Cavanaugh); Rage (George C. Scott) (as Major Holliford); Welcome Home, Johnny Bristol (McCowan—for TV) (as Graytak); That Certain Summer (Lamont Johnson—for TV); Pursuit (Michael Crichton—for TV) (as Timothy Drew)
1973 Crime Club (Rich—for TV) (as Deputy Wilson); Letters from Three Lovers (Ermann—for TV); Catholics (Gold—for TV) (as Father John Kinsella); Message to My Daughter (Robert Michael Lewis—for TV)
1974 Badlands (Malick) (as Kit); The Execution of Private Slovak (Lamont Johnson—for TV) (title role); The Story of Pretty Boy Floyd (Ware—for TV); The California Kid (Hefron—for TV)
1975 The Legend of Earl Durand (John Patterson) (as Luther Sykes); The Last Survivors (Katzin—for TV); Sweet Hostage (Philips—for TV) (as Leonard Hatch)
1977 The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos) (as Robby Navarro); The Little Girl Who Lives Down the Lane (Gessner) (as Frank Hallett)
1978 Eagle’s Wing (Harvey) (as Pike)
1979 Apocalypse Now (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Capt. Willard)
1980 The Final Countdown (Don Taylor) (as Warren Lasky); Loophole (Break In) (Quested) (as Stephen Booker)
1982 Gandhi (Attenborough) (as Walker); That Championship Season (Miller) (as Tom Daley); In the Custody of Strangers (Greenwald—for TV)
1983 Enigma (Szwarc) (as Alex Holbeck); Man, Woman, and Child (Richards) (as Bob Beckwith); The Dead Zone (Cronenberg) (as Sen. Greg Stillson); No Place to Hide (Johnson and Bird) (as narrator); Choices of the Heart (Sargent—for TV); In the King of Prussia (De Antonio)—doc
1984 The Guardian (David Greene—for TV) (as Charlie Hyatt); Firestarter (Lester) (as Capt. Hollister)
1985 Out of the Darkness (Jud Taylor—for TV) (as Ed Zigo); Consenting Adult (Gates—for TV) (as Ken Lynd); In the Name of the People (Christopher)—doc (as narrator); Broken Rainbow (Mudd)—doc (as narrator); The Fourth Wise Man (Michael Ray Rhodes—for TV); From Blitzkrieg to the Bomb (doc) (as narrator); The Real Thing (Schnall)—doc
Martin Sheen in Apocalypse Now (as narrator); Shattered Spirits (Greenwald—for TV); The Atlanta Child Murders (Erman—for TV)

1986 News at Eleven (Robe—for TV) (as Frank Kenley); Samaritan: The Mitch Snyder Story (Heffron—for TV) (as Mitch Snyder); State of Emergency (Bennett) (as Dr. Alex Carmody)

1987 Secrets of the Titanic (Hurley—doc) (as narrator); Siesta (Lambert) (as Del, Claire’s husband); Wall Street (Oliver Stone) (as Carl Fox); Conspiracy: The Trial of the Chicago 8 (Kagan—for TV) (as James Marion Hunt); The Believers (Schlesinger) (as Dr. Cal Jamison)

1988 Da (Clark) (as Charlie); Judgment in Berlin (Leo Penn) (as Herbert J. Stern); Walking after Midnight (Kay—doc)

1989 Beverly Hills Brats (Sotirakis) (as Jeffrey Miller); Beyond the Stars (Personal Choice) (Saperstein) (as Paul Andrews); Cold Front (Goldstein) (as John Hyde); Nightbreaker (Markle—for TV) (as Dr. Alexander Brown)

1991 The Maid (Toynton) (as Anthony Wayne); Paper Hearts (McCall); JFK (Oliver Stone) (as Narrator); Guilty until Proven Innocent (Wendkos—for TV) (as Harold Hohne)

1992 My Home, My Prison (Muñoz) (doc) (as Narrator); Original Intent (Marcarelli) (as Joe); Touch and Die (Solinas) (as Frank); The Water Engine (Schachter—for TV) (as chain letter voice); Blood on the Badge (McCormick)

1993 Hear No Evil (Greenwald) (as Lt. Philip Brock); Gettysburg (Maxwell) (as Gen. Robert E. Lee); The Killing Box (Ghost Brigade) (Hickenlooper) (as Gen. Haworth); The Last P.O.W.? The Bobby Garwood Story (Georg Sanford Brown—for TV) (as Capt. Ike Eisenbraun); Hot Shots!, Part Deux (Abrahams) (as himself, uncredited); A Matter of Justice (Final Justice) (Switzer—for TV) (as Jack Brown)

1994 Roswell (Kagan—for TV) (as Townsend); When the Bough Breaks (Cohn) (as Police Capt. Swaggert); Boca (Avancini—for TV) (as Jesse James Montgomery); Trigger Fast (Lister) (as Jackson Baines); Guns of Honor: Rebel Rousers (for TV); Running Wild (Humer—doc) (as Dan Walker); Fortunes of War (Notz) (as Francis Labeck); Hits! (Greenblatt) (as Kelly); One of Her Own (Armand Mastroianni—for TV) (as Asst. D.A. Pete Maresca)

1995 Gospa (Sedlar) (as Jozo Zovko); The Break (Katzin) (as Gil Robbins); Les Cent et une Nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Furtive and Friendly Appearance);
Dillinger and Capone (Purdy) (as Dillinger); Dead Presidents (Albert and Allen Hughes) (as The Judge, uncredited); The American President (Rob Reiner) (as A.J. MacInerney); Captain Nuke and the Bomba Boys (Demolition Day) (Gale) (as Jeff Snyder); Present Tense, Past Perfect (Dreyfuss—for TV) (short); Sacred Cargo (Buravsky) (as Father Andrew Kanvesky)

1996

Project ALF (Lowry—for TV) (as Colonel Milton); The War at Home (Estevez) (as Bob Collier); Entertaining Angels: The Dorothy Day Story (Michael Ray Rhodes) (as Peter Maurin); The Elevator (Bologna); The Crystal Cave (as King Arthur); The Great War (Byker, Goldfarb) (as voice); Marlon Brando: The Wild One (Joyce—for TV) (doc) (as himself)

1997

Tudjman (doc) (as Narrator); Titanic: Anatomy of a Disaster (Elisco) (doc) (as Narrator); 187: Documented (Fong) (doc) (as Voice); Contagious (Napolitano—for TV); Truth or Consequences, N.M. (Kiefer Sutherland) (as Sir); Hostile Waters (Drury—for TV) (as Aurora Skipper); Spawn (Mark A.Z. Dippé) (as Jason Wynn); Medusa’s Child (Shaw—mini for TV) (as U.S. President)

1998

Voyage of Terror (Trenchard-Smith—for TV) (as Henry); Taylor's Campaign (Cohen) (as Narrator); Stranger in the Kingdom (Jay Craven) (as Sigurd Moulton); Snitch (Ted Demme) (as Hanolon); Shadrach (Styron) (as Narrator); No Code of Conduct (Michaels) (as Bill Peterson); Gunfighter (Christopher Coppola) (as The Stranger); Babylon 5: The River of Souls (Greek—for TV) (as The Soul Hunter); A Letter from Death Row (Baker, Michaels); Free Money (Simoneau) (as New Warden)

1999

Texas Funeral (W. Blake Herron) (as Grandpa Starta); Ninth Street (Rebman, Willmott) (as Father Frank); Lucky Town (Beseth) (as The Red); The Darklings (Jeffrey Reiner—for TV) (as Ira Everett); Lost & Found (Jeff Pollack) (as Mr. Millstone); Storm (Done, Spano—for TV) (as General Roberts); D.R.E.A.M. Team (Hamilton—for TV) (as Garrison); Forget Me Never (Yelin, Longstreet—for TV) (as Jack); The Time Shifters (Azopardi—for TV) (as Grifasi)

2000

O (Nelson) (as Coach Duke); Seeing in the Dark

On SHEEN: books—

On SHEEN: articles—

Kellner, Elena, “All in the Family” (cover story), in Hispanic (Austin, Texas), May 1994.

Doucette, Len, “Cameo: Citizen Sheen,” in Modern Maturity (Lakewood, California), March/April 2000.

* * *

Martin Sheen is a prolific, reliable actor whose versatility has been evident from the very beginning of his screen career. In his first two films, he offered fine performances as altogether different characters: a thug who terrorizes the passengers in a New York City subway car, in The Incident; and a young World War II veteran who becomes immersed in his parents’ marital problems, in The Subject Was Roses (a role for which he had won acclaim on Broadway).

Early on, Sheen—along with a seemingly endless list of actors who, over the decades, have been able to strike nonconformist poses—was heralded as a “new James Dean.” He gave his most Dean-like performance in Terrence Malick’s cult classic, Badlands, playing an alienated and amoral young rebel-on-the-run who, joined by a female counterpart, goes on a killing binge. Badlands is a film that serves as a major link in a cinematic chain that includes They Live by Night, Bonnie and Clyde, Thieves Like Us, and Natural Born Killers. Unlike so many James Dean clones who quickly proved to be flavors-of-the-month, however, Sheen has had a substantial career. Yet his early, flashy roles never did propel him to major screen stardom. By far, the major body of his best work came in made-for-television movies and mini-series, including That Certain Summer, Catholics, The Execution of Private Slovik, Sweet Hostage, Kennedy (as John F. Kennedy), The Missiles of October (as Robert Kennedy), News at Eleven, The Long Road Home, and Samaritan: The Mitch Snyder Story.

Far and away the penultimate Sheen screen appearance—and most consequential credit of his career—is in Francis Coppola’s much-publicized, much-analyzed Vietnam War epic, Apocalypse Now. Sheen has the pivotal role of the fatigued Captain Willard, who is dispatched to seek out and kill the renegade officer Colonel Kurtz (Marlon Brando). Sheen even suffered a heart attack during the film’s

Other Films:

1986 Babies Having Babies (d—for TV)

1988 No Means No (Auerbach) (exec pr)

1989 Cadence (Stackade) (d, co-sc, + ro as Sgt. Otis V. McKinney)

Publications

By SHEEN: article—

Interview with Emile De Antonio, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), December 1982.

1118
endlessly exhausting shoot in the Philippines. Still, with regard to its actors, it was the controversial presence and performance of Brando that was the most discussed upon the film’s release, and remains so to this day. This focus on Brando does not reflect on Sheen’s talent, but it does symbolize his inability to break through as a major movie star.

As he aged, Sheen has maintained a high profile by constantly accepting roles in TV movies, and in 1999 was cast as the U.S. President in the TV series The West Wing. But he has not been absent from the big screen. He has had nice supporting roles in films ranging from Oliver Stone’s Wall Street (playing the father of real-life son Charlie Sheen) to Rob Reiner’s The American President, with his role in the latter (as President Michael Douglas’s chief of staff) providing a nice segue into The West Wing. He has been one of the cast members of prestigious epics (Gandhi and Gettysburg, playing General Robert E. Lee in the latter), and has narrated an endless number of documentaries and features (including Stone’s JFK). Also of note is his political activism. Sheen is a humanist and progressive who has never avoided being at the center of an organized protest; in April 1996, he was one of 20 people arrested during a Good Friday demonstration outside the Riverside Research Institute, a Manhattan-based nuclear research facility. Sheen has translated his politics to the screen via his involvement in such projects as Maria Florio’s and Victoria Mudd’s Broken Rainbow, an Oscar-winning documentary about the resettling of Navajo Indians, and Emile De Antonio’s In the King of Prussia, about a trial of Roman Catholic activists in Pennsylvania.

Around the late 1980s and early 90s, it could be said that Sheen’s identity was related as much to his being the father of Charlie Sheen and Emilio Estevez as to his own professional accomplishments. In this regard, he joined the likes of Henry Fonda, John Carradine, Lloyd Bridges, Kirk Douglas, and others as the senior member of a Hollywood acting family. Yet by the late 90s, the younger Sheen and Estevez had not established screen careers to rival a Jane Fonda, Jeff Bridges, or Michael Douglas—and, with the success of The West Wing, Sheen Senior had jump-started his own career by becoming a high-profile television star.

—Rob Edelman

SHEPARD, Sam

Nationality: American. Born: Samuel Shepard Rogers VII in Fort Sheridan, Illinois, 5 November 1943. Education: Attended Mount Antonio Junior College, Walnut, California, 1960–61. Family: Married 1) the actress O-Lan Johnson, 1969 (divorced), son: Jesse Mojo; children with the actress-producer Jessica Lange, daughter: Hannah Jane, and son: Samuel Walker. Career: 1962—joined a theatrical repertory group but left the next year; by 1966 several of his one-act plays had been produced off-Broadway; by the late 1960s began to write film scripts and continued to write plays which were performed nationwide; 1978—selected to play the lead in Days of Heaven, his first of several major acting roles; 1988—wrote and directed Far North, and Silent Tongue, 1993; 1995—in TV mini-series Streets of Laredo. Awards: Three Obie Awards, 1965–66; Brandeis University Creative Arts Medal, 1976; Pulitzer Prize, for play Buried Child,

Films as Actor:

1969 Bronco Bullfrog (Platts-Mill) (as Jo)
1970 Brand X
1978 Days of Heaven (Malick) (as the Farmer); Renaldo and Clara (Dylan) (+ co-sc)
1980 Resurrection (Daniel Petrie) (as Cal Carpenter)
1981 Raggedy Man (Fisk) (as Bailey)
1982 Frances (Clifford) (as Harry York)
1983 The Right Stuff (Kaufman) (as Chuck Yeager)
1984 Country (Pearce) (as Gil Ivy); Paris, Texas (Wenders) (+ sc)
1985 Fool for Love (Altman) (as Eddie, + sc)
1986 Crimes of the Heart (Beresford) (as Doc Porter)
1987 Baby Boom (Shyer) (as Dr. Jeff Cooper)
1989 Steel Magnolias (Ross) (as Spud Jones)
1991 Defenseless (Martin Campbell) (as George Beutel); Voyager (Homo Faber) (Schlondorff) (as Walter Faber); Bright Angel (Fields) (as Jack Russell)
1992 Thunderheart (Apted) (as Frank Coutelle)
1993 The Pelican Brief (Pakula) (as Thomas Callahan)
1994 Safe Passage (Ackerman) (as Patrick Singer)
1996 Lily Dale (Masterson—for TV) (as Peter Davenport)
1998 The Only Thrill (Masterson) (as Reece McHenry)
1999  Snow Falling on Cedars (Hicks) (as Arthur Chambers);  Curtain Call (Yates) (as Will Dodge);  Purgatory (Edel—for TV) (as Sheriff Forrest/Will Bill Hickok);  Dash and Lilly (Kathy Bates—for TV) (as Dashiell Hammett)

2000  Hamlet (Almereyda) (as Ghost);  One Kill (Menaul—for TV) (as Major Nelson Gray);  All the Pretty Horses (Thornton) (as Banker)

Films as Scriptwriter:

1968  Me and My Brother (Frank) (co-sc)
1970  Zabriskie Point (Antonioni) (co-sc)
1972  Oh! Calcutta! (Aucion) (co-sc)
1982  True West (Sinise and Goldstein—for TV) (+ pr)
1995  Curse of the Starving Class (McClary—for TV)

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1988  Far North
1993  Silent Tongue

Publications

By SHEPARD: plays—

Five Plays (includes Chicago, Icarus’s Mother, Fourteen Hundred Thousand, Red Cross, Melodrama Play), Indianapolis, 1967.

La Turista, Indianapolis, 1968.

Mad Dog Blues and Other Plays (includes Cowboy Mouth, Cowboys No. 2), New York, 1971.

Angel City and Other Plays (includes The Rock Garden, Cowboys No. 2, Cowboy Mouth, Mad Dog Blues, Action, Killer’s Head, Curse of the Starving Class), New York, 1976.

Buried Child and Other Plays (includes Suicide in Bb: A Mysterious Overture, Seduced, Suceded), New York, 1979.

Seven Plays (includes Buried Child, Curse of the Starving Class, The Tooth of Crime, La Turista, True West, Tongues, Savage/Love), New York, 1981.

Chicago and Other Plays, 1982.

By SHEPARD: books—

By SHEPARD: articles—

On SHEPARD: books—

Callens, Johan, Sam Shepard—Between the Margins and the Centre, 1998.

On SHEPARD: articles—

* * *

Sam Shepard has spent almost his entire adult life as an artist. He has written numerous plays, has published short fiction and screenplays, and has acted, directed, and collaborated on a variety of film projects with artists ranging from Bob Dylan to Wim Wenders.

After a brief stint with a theatrical repertory group and writing several one-act plays that were produced off-Broadway, it was the “transformation” techniques of actor-director Joseph Chaikin in the mid-sixties that inspired Shepard to act. Many of his film characters are concealed and enigmatic, a reflection of his own publicity-shy nature.

Shepard made his feature motion picture debut when director Terrence Malick cast him as a wealthy and mysterious farmer in Days of Heaven. In 1980 he co-starred opposite Ellen Burstyn in Resurrection. He was featured in Raggedy Man with Sissy Spacek, and then co-starred with Jessica Lange in Frances, where the two met and established a long-term relationship. He followed his performance in Frances with one as test pilot Chuck Yeager in The Right Stuff for which he received an Oscar nomination for Best Actor. Again he teamed with Jessica Lange in Country, then played the starring role of “Eddie” in his own screen adaptation of his long-running play Fool for Love, directed by Robert Altman. He also appeared in Crimes of the Heart with Diane Keaton, Lange, and Spacek; followed by Baby Boom with Keaton; Steel Magnolias; and nonlead roles in Thunderheart, The Pelican Brief, and Safe Passage. He made his film directing debut with Far North in 1988.

—Kelly Otter

SHIMURA, Takashi

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Shoji Shimazaki in Hyogo prefecture, 12 March 1905. Education: Attended night courses in English at Kansai University, late 1920s. Family: Married Masako, 1937. Career: 1928—formed amateur theater group, Shichigatsu-za; then joined a commercial group, Kindai-za, 1930, and appeared on stage in Osaka and on tour; 1939—joined the Shinsen-za group; 1934—joined a commercial group, Kindai-za, 1930, and appeared on stage in Osaka and on tour; 1939—joined the Shinsen-za group; 1934—joined the Shinko Kinema studio, Kyoto; first important film role in Chuji uridasu, 1935; later worked for other studios, including Makino, Nikkatsu, Shochiku, and, from 1941, Toho; 1950–54—roles in Rashomon and Seven Samurai brought international attention; appeared on television from the mid-1960s. Died: Of emphysema in Tokyo, 11 February 1982.

Films as Actor:

1935 Chuji uridasu (Itami); Tora-ko (Sasukita)
1936 Umon torimonono: Harebare gojusan-tsugi; Naniwa ereji (Osaka Elegy) (Mizoguchi) (as the detective); Akanishi Kakita (Itami) (as Tsunomata); Shura yako: Edo no hanasho; Hasshu kyokakujin; Maisen; Churetsu niku dan sanyushi; Hatsugaro-ono; Irezumi chohan (Kinugasa)
1937 Seishun gonin otoko (Part I, II); Ryuko sokita; Kaitana o nuite; Kisoi no tabigasa
1938 Jigoku no mushi (Inagaki)
1939 Myohoin Kanpachi (Tsujii); Shunju-ittoryu (Marune); Mumiyo-yumyo (Matsuda)
1940 Genroku bushido; Adauchi kokyogaku (Marune); Zoko Shimizuminato (Makino); Maboroshi-jo; Uemon tori mono-cho; Uemon Edo-sugata (as Abata no Keishiro)
1941 Uchiri zeny (Marune); Um i o wataru sairei (Inagaki); Edo saigo no hi (Inagaki); Miyamoto Musashi: Ichijo-ji no kotto (Inagaki)
1942 Torii Kyozazen (Uchida)
1943 Sugata Sanshiro (Sanshiro Sugata) (Kurosawa) (as Hansuke Murai)
1944 Ichiban utsukushii (The Most Beautiful) (Kurosawa) (as Goro Ishida)
1945 Tota no o o fumu otokotachi (The Men Who Tread on the Tiger’s Tail) (Kurosawa) (as Kakaoka)
1946 Waga seishun ni kai nashi (No Regrets for Our Youth) (Kurosawa) (as Dokuzami)
1947 Ginrei no hate (Snow Trail) (Taniguchi)
1948 Yoidore Tenshi (Drunken Angel) (Kurosawa) (as Dr. Sanada)
1949 Shizukanura ketto (The Quiet Duel) (Kurosawa) (as Kyomosuke Fujiyakaji); Nora-inu (Stray Dog) (Kurosawa) (as Chief Detective Sato)
1950 Sukyandaru (Shabun; Scandal) (Kurosawa) (as Hiruta); Rashomon (Kurosawa) (as the woodcutter)
1951 Hakuchi (Taniguchi) (as Ono); Mesu-inu (Kimura); Bakui ichidai (Kimura)
1952 Ikiru (To Live; Doomed) (Kurosawa) (as Kanji Watanabe); Ketto Kagiyanotsuji (Honda) (as Dr. Yamane)
1953 Chushingura (Kurosawa) (as General Izumi Nagakura); Nippon no ichiban nagai hi (Kurosawa) (as Chiba); Tengoku to jigoku (Kurosawa) (as official)
1954 Shobushi ro sono musume (Hidden Fortress) (Kurosawa) (as General Izumi Nagakura)
1955 Sukyandaru (Shabun; Scandal) (Kurosawa) (as Hiruta); Rashomon (Kurosawa) (as the woodcutter)
1956 Otoko arite (Kurosawa) (as Dr. Yamane)
1957 The Idiot (Kurosawa) (as Tokubei Izumiya); Bijo to yaju (Honda)
1958 Chushingura (Kurosawa) (as Dr. Sanada); The Life of Oharu (Mizoguchi) (as Oya); The Annual Obituary 1982 (Mizoguchi); The Seven Samurai (Kurosawa) (as Chief Justice); Sanjuro (Kurosawa) (as Chiba); The Three Headed Monster (Honda)
1959 Kotan no kuchibue (Kurosawa) (as Tokimune)
1960 Taiheiyo no arashi (Matsuda); Dotanba (Uchida)
1961 Shobushi ro sono musume (Hidden Fortress) (Kurosawa) (as General Izumi Nagakura)
1962 Chushingura (Kurosawa) (as General Izumi Nagakura)
1963 Tengoku to jigoku (High and Low) (Kurosawa) (as the director)
1964 Kaidan (Kawaidan) (Kobayashi) (as priest); Samurai (Samurai Assassin) (Okamoto); Dai-tozoku (Samurai Pirate) (Taniguchi)
1965 Akahige (Red Beard) (Kurosawa) (as Tokubei Izumiya); Sandai kaiju chuikyu saisai no kessen (Ghidrah; The Three Headed Monster) (Honda)
1966 Frankenstein Conquers the World (Kurosawa) (as Dr. Yamane); Bankoku no yuro (Night in Bangkok) (Chiba)
1967 Nippon no ichiban nagai hi (The Emperor and a General) (Okamoto) (as information clerk)
1968 Kurobe no tayi (Kumai); Zatoichi hatsashi-jo (Yasuda); Gion matsuri (The Day the Sun Rose) (Yamanuchi) (as Tsuneemon)
1969 Furin-kazan (Samurai Banners) (Inagaki); Showa zankyoden; Karaishi jingi; Zoka otoko wa tsuraiyo (Yamada) (as the father)
1970 Genbatsu (Horikawa)
1971 Otokowa tsuraiyo; Torajiro kouta (Yamada)
1973 Zatoichi’s Conspiracy (Yasuda) (as Sakuebi)
1974 Ranru, no hata (Yoshimura); Shinkansen diabakua (Sato)
1976 Zoku ningen kakumei (Masuda); Ninjutsu Sarutobi Sasuke (Kurosawa)
1982 Ogin Sama (Love and Faith of Ogin) (Kamai) (as Sen Rikyu)

Publications

On SHIMURA: article—

* * *

Takashi Shimura began his career playing villains or fools in many prewar films. His first major performance in Akira Kurosawa’s Sugata Sanshiro began his ascendency as one of Japan’s most skillful and distinctive actors. Although he worked in numerous genres throughout his career, he is most often associated with Kurosawa’s films, becoming an indispensable partner with him for 30 years.

Shimura’s first starring role was as the alcoholic ghetto detective of Drunken Angel. He attempts to save the life of a reckless gangster, played by Toshiro Mifune, who suffers from tuberculosis. Their performances, showing strength beneath human frailty, depicted opposing attitudes towards the confusion of optimism and despair in post-war Japan. Shimura continued to play characters with paternal relationships to the younger Mifune: in The Quiet Duel as a doctor who encourages his son to follow his profession; in Stray Dog as an older detective paired with a rookie; and in Seven Samurai as the leader of a group of samurai which includes Mifune.

Two of Shimura’s most impressive roles were as a villainous lawyer who awakens to the meaning of justice in Scandal and as a middle-aged bureaucrat in Ikiru. Learning he has terminal cancer, Shimura’s character wishes to redeem his egocentric life by building a children’s park. The dramatic change of this ordinary businessman as he wavers between hope and disillusionment became Shimura’s screen monument.

—Kyoko Hirano

SIGNORET, Simone

Nationality: French. Born: Simone-Herniette-Charlotte Kaminker in Wiesbaden, Germany, to French parents, 25 March 1921. Education: Attended schools in Paris; teaching degree. Family: Married 1) the director Yves Allégret, 1947 (divorced 1950), daughter: Catherine; 2) the actor Yves Montand, 1951. Career: Early 1940s—worked as teacher, then typist for Le Nouveau Temps newspaper; 1942—film debut in Le Prince charmant; 1946—leading role in Macadam; 1954—in stage version of French version of Miller’s The Crucible in Paris with Montand, and in later film version, 1957; 1958—English-language role in Room at the Top; also appeared in Macbeth in London, and on television in the U.S. Awards: Best Foreign Actress, British Academy, for Casse d’or, 1952; Best Foreign Actress, British Academy, for Witches of Salem, 1957; Best Simone Signoret (right) with Vera Clouzot in Les Diaboliques

Foreign Actress, British Academy, Best Actress Academy Award, and Best Actress, Cannes Festival, for Room at the Top, 1959; French César for Best Actress, for La Vie devant soi, 1977. Died: 30 September 1985.

Films as Actress:

1942 Le Prince charmant (Boyer); Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoy) (Carné); Bolero (Boyer)
1943 La Bête aux rêves (Yves Allégret); Adieu Léonard (Prévert); L’Ange de la nuit (Berthomieu); Beatrice devant le désir (de Marguenat)
1945 Les Démons de l’Aube (Yves Allégret); Le Couple idéal (Roland)
1946 Macadam (Back Streets of Paris) (Blistène)
1947 Phantômas (Sacha)
1948 Dédée d’Anvers (Yves Allégret) (title role); Against the Wind (Crichton) (as Michele); L’Impasse de deux anges (Tourneur)
1949 Manèges (The Cheat) (Yves Allégret) (as Dora); Four Days Leave (Swiss Tour) (Lindtberg) (as Yvonne)
1950 Le Traqué (Gunman in the Streets) (Tuttle); Ombre et lumière (Calef) (as Isabelle); La Ronde (Circle of Love) (Ophüls) (as the Whore)
1952 Casque d’or (The Golden Helmet) (Becker) (as Marie)
1953 Thérèse Raquin (The Adulteress) (Carné) (title role)
1955 Les Diaboliques (Diabolique; The Fiends) (Clouzot) (as Nicole Horner)
1956 La Mort en ce jardin (Death in the Garden; Evil Eden; Gina) (Buñuel) (as Djin); Die Wind Rose (Bellon)
1957 Les Sorcières de Salem (Witches of Salem) (Rouleau) (as Elizabeth Proctor)
1958 Room at the Top (Clayton) (as Alice Aisgill)
1960 Les Mauvais Coups (Naked Autumn) (Leterrier) (as Roberte); Adua e le compagne (Love à la Carte) (Pietrangeli) (as Adua)
1961 “Jenny de Lacours” ep. of Les Amours célébrés (Girod) (title role)
1962 Term of Trial (Glenville) (as Anna Weir)
1963 Le Jour et l’heure (The Day and the Hour) (Clément) (as Thérèse Duthelil); Dragées au poivre (Sweet and Sour) (Baratier) (as Geneviève); Le Joli Mai (Marker—doc) (as narrator)
Defiantly unconventional, Signoret made no attempt to conceal the growing heaviness of her face and figure, even emphasizing it with her trademark in her later years. No attempt was made to minimize her age gradually and gracefully, retaining slimness and glamour well into their sixties, prompting envious murmurs of “She doesn’t look a day over. . . .” Simone Signoret broke all these rules, which may be why she inspired so many un gallant comparisons. Writers likened her to an aging boxer, to Brando, Michel Simon, and Margaret Rutherford. Loss of glamour may be condoned, but deliberate rejection of it, Signoret’s trademark in her later years, arouses resentment. With characteristic forthrightness she titled her 1976 autobiography Nostalgia Isn’t What It Used to Be, as if to call attention to this deliberate rejection of her earlier, glamour days.

So it was as a streetwalker that she first came to international notice, opening and closing the sexual carousel in Ophüls’ shimmering La Ronde, and touchingingly bemused in her scene with Gérard Philippe’s emotionally anesthetized count. A year later, another period piece raised her to the summit of her early years: as Serge Reggiani’s lover in Becker’s Casque d’or, she brought to the scenes of their brief, doomed idyll an erotic intensity which suffused the whole film with immediacy and warmth.

Signoret was never petite. The breadth of her shoulders and her squarely planted stance suggested a tenacious practicality, a vulnerable strength. As a murderess, she could be both credible and sympathetic: as one of Zola’s pair of guilt-ridden lovers in Thérèse Raquin, or as the seemingly vulnerable yet scheming blond bombshell accomplice in the homicidal labyrinth of Clouzot’s Les Diaboliques, the role that cemented her international renown and became an archetype thereafter in imitation upon ripoff of the Boileau-Narcejac thriller, including three remakes with Tuesday Weld, Kate Vernon, and, most recently, Sharon Stone filling Signoret’s shoes.

According to rumor, no British actress could be found with the requisite blend of sophistication and sensuality to play the older woman driven to suicide by her social climbing lover (Laurence Harvey) in Jack Clayton’s Room at the Top. True or not, Signoret indisputably lacked neither; feminine and exotic amid the bleak Northern terraces of the British New Wave, she picked up an Oscar for her performance in this, her first English-language film, and a string of Hollywood offers, all refused. Politics and her marriage to singer-turn ed-actor Yves Montand (whose international renown was also cemented by an appearance in a Clouzot film, The Wages of Fear) increasingly took precedence in her life. Both of them were banned from French television, radio, and state-run theaters during the 1960s, and at one point were refused entry to the United States for their left- wings views. with drably unglamorous roles. Often she played women oppressed by the past: a survivor of the concentration camps in Lumet’s downbeat thriller The Deadly Affair based on a John Le Carré novel; an impressive Arkadina in the same director’s The Sea Gull, co-starring Vanessa Redgrave, another actress known and ostracized for her political views; movingly dignified as the fated Resistance fighter in L’Armée des ombres; hiding frustrated love beneath outward bitterness in Le Chat; and vulnerability to her illicit love for doomed Oskar Werner in Ship of Fools. Such roles were never depressing, given the vitality of her presence.

Age could do nothing to lessen the beauty of her smile, which when it came still lit up her face with protective tenderness. Signoret had always said she would go on acting until she could play grandmothers, and now she could, superbly: a surrogate in Olivier’s surreal L’Adolescente. From every man’s dream mistress to every child’s ideal grandmother—there are worse progressions.

—Philip Kemp, updated by John McCarty

SIMMONS, Jean

Films as Actress:

1944 Give Us the Moon (Guest) (as Heidi); Mr. Emmanuel (French); Kiss the Bride Goodbye (Stein) (as Molly Dodd); Meet Sexton Blake (Harlow) (as Eva Watkins)
1945 Sports Day (The Colonel’s Cup) (Short); The Way to the Stars (Johnny in the Clouds) (Asquith) (as singer)
1946 Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal) (as handmaiden/harpist); Great Expectations (Lean) (as young Estella)
1947 Hungry Hill (Hurst) (as Jane Brodrick); Black Narcissus (Powell and Pressburger) (as Kanchi); Uncle Silas (The Inheritance) (Frank) (as Caroline Ruthyn); The Woman in the Hall (Jack Lee) (as Jay Blake)
1948 Hamlet (Olivier) (as Ophelia)
1949 Adam and Eve (Adam and Eve) (French) (as Evalyn Wallace); The Blue Lagoon (Lauder) (as Emmeline Foster)
1950 “Sanatorium” ep. of Trio (French) (as Eve Bishop); Cage of Gold (Dearden) (as Judith Moray); So Long at the Fair (Darnborough and Fisher) (as Vicky Barton); The Clouded Yellow (Thomas) (as Sophie Malraux)
1953 Androcles and the Lion (Erskine) (as Lavinia); Angel Face (Preminger); Affair with a Stranger (Rowland) (as Carolyn Parker); The Actress (Cukor) (as Ruth Gordon Jones); The Robe (Koster) (as Diana); Young Bess (Sidney) (title role)
1954 She Couldn’t Say No (Lloyd Bacon) (as Corby Lane); The Egyptian (Curtiz) (as Merit); Desiree (Koster) (title role); A Bullet Is Waiting (Farrow) (as Cally Canham)
1955 Guys and Dolls (Mankiewicz) (as Sarah Brown); Footsteps in the Fog (Lubin) (as Lily Watkins)
1956 Hilda Crane (Dunne) (title role)
1957 This Could Be the Night (Wise) (as Anne Leeds); Until They Sail (Wise) (as Barbara Leslie Forbes)
1958 Home before Dark (LeRoy) (as Charlotte Bronn); The Big Country (Wyler) (as Julie Maragon)
1959 This Earth Is Mine (Henry King) (as Elizabeth Rambeau)
1960 Spartacus (Kubrick) (as Varinia); Elmer Gantry (Richard Brooks) (as Sister Sharon Falconer); The Grass Is Greener (Donen) (as Hattie Durant)
1963 All the Way Home (Segal) (as Mary Follet)
1965 Life at the Top (Kotch) (as Susan Lampton)
1966 Mister Buddwing (Woman without a Face) (Delbert Mann) (as the blond)
1967 Divorce American Style (Yorkin) (as Nancy Downes); Rough Night in Jericho (Laven) (as Molly Lang)
1968 Heidi (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Fräulein Rottenmeier)
1969 The Happy Ending (Richard Brooks) (as Mary Wilson)
1971 Say Hello to Yesterday (Rakoff) (as Woman)
1975 Mr. Sycamore (Kohner) (as Estelle Benbow)
1978 Dominique (Anderson) (title role)
1981 A Small Killing (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV); Golden Gate (Wendkos—for TV); Valley of the Dolls (Grauman—for TV) (as Helen Lawson)
1984 December Flower (Fears—for TV)
1985 Midas Valley (Trikonis—for TV)
1987 Perry Mason: The Case of the Lost Love (Satlof—for TV) (as Laura Kilgallen)
1988 Going Undercover (Clarke) (as Maxine De La Hunt); The Dawning (Knights—released in U.S. in 1993) (as Aunt Mary); Inherit the Wind (David Greene—for TV) (as Lucy Brady); A Friendship in Vienna (Arthur Allan Seidelman—for TV) (as narrator)
1990 The Laker Girls (Bruce Seth Green—for TV) (as Connie Harrison); People Like Us (Billy Hale—for TV) (as Peach); Sensibility and Sense (David Hugh Jones—for TV)
1992 They Do It with Mirrors (Norman Stone—for TV) (as Carrie Louise Serrocold)
1994 One More Mountain (Lowry—for TV) (as Sarah Keyes)
1995 Daisies in December (Haber—for TV) (as Katherine Palmer); How to Make an American Quilt (Moorhouse) (as Em); Daisies in December (Haber—for TV) (as Katherine Palmer)
1998 Her Own Rules (Bobby Roth)

Publications

On SIMMONS: articles—

* * *

In an early screen appearance—a cameo in The Way to the Stars in which she briefly sang “Let him go, let him tarry” at a troop show—Jean Simmons made an instant and indelible impression. The fascination of that appearance—a song of adult sexuality performed quite unselfconsciously by a very young girl—lay in the way it collapsed any such opposition. The ambiguity was brilliantly used by David Lean in Simmons’s young Estella of Great Expectations: indeed, the film never quite recovers from the shock of Jean Simmons growing up to be Valerie Hobson.

Typically, the British cinema of the late 1940s, divided among plodding “good taste,” elephantine comedy, and determinedly risqué and much be-cleaveged period melodrama, was quite incapable of developing this extraordinary talent, or even of understanding its nature. Powell and Pressburger grasped something of the persona’s possibilities, but her role in Black Narcissus (Sabu’s Indian seductress) was small and underdeveloped. Otherwise, predictably, the “innocent” side of the persona was played at the expense of the sexual; even so, her presence was registered as sufficiently provocative (especially in one so young and “sweet”) for strenuous efforts to be necessary to chastise and subdue it in The Clouded Yellow. Yet the presence survived it all; it even survived Hamlet, in which her Ophelia, despite (or perhaps because of) her inexperience in Shakespeare, despite the encumbrance of an absurd blond wig, and Olivier’s turgid direction, was one of the more bearable performances.

It was Preminger in Angel Face who first realized fully the complexity of her potential, much to the consternation of the British critics. Here the innocent/sexual tension is fully developed in a characterization that manages to be touching, vulnerable, sensitive, selfish, manipulative, pathological, and horrific all at the same time; the devastating effect of the ending derives as much from the accumulated energies and frustrations conveyed by Simmons’s performance as from Preminger’s casual and poker-faced abruptness. Perfectly complementing this was her work in The Actress, where the unerring instinct and feminine sympathy of Cukor helped her to realize most captivatingly the persona’s positive connotations, its eagerness, energy, and exuberance. These two films, with Elmer Gantry, mark the peak of Simmons’s achievement.

Ultimately, Simmons’s Hollywood career has proved scarcely more satisfying than her British one. The problem has lain partly in the persona itself and its resistance to age: its fascination, suggestiveness, and ambiguity are necessarily contingent upon youthfulness, and as the girl became a woman the persona had to be restructured. Her relationship (marital and professional) with Richard Brooks produced one more rounded and complex realization of Simmons’s potential, her Sister Sharon in Elmer Gantry. Here the innocent/knowing ambiguity reaches a definitive formulation, the film playing on Sharon’s genuineness/fraudulence, integrity/self-deception. The other Brooks collaboration, The Happy Ending, suffers from the director’s heavy-handed approach to social significance: the film looks as if he had just read an introductory guide to feminism.

Mired in television dreck such as the soapy Angel Falls and the recycled Dark Shadows, Jean Simmons remains a gallant trouper who, unlike many contemporaries, gives fully realized performances even as a guest on Murder, She Wrote. For adoring fans, a big-screen return in the A-picture ensemble of How to Make an American Quilt was cause for celebration. Pinpointing what went wrong with her film career is a graver pastime. Rumors still abound that disgruntled eccentric Howard Hughes set out to wreck her American career when he ran RKO. Whether that charge can ever be proven does not explain why she so often settled for comfortable leading lady status (Spartacus, The Big Country, The Robe, The Egyptian) when she should have been toplining her own star vehicles. In 1958 she gave heart and soul to the quasi-feminist soap opera, Home before Dark by audaciously conveying a woman belittled into a breakdown for not measuring up to the 1950s ideals of physical beauty and womanliness. Unleashing a tour de force in this little-seen movie, Simmons lends her radiance also to more popular melodramas such as This Earth Is Mine, Until They Sail, and the now-campy Hilda Crane. Is there a more apropos symbol of fifties’s domestic directives than Simmons’s used-goods Hilda eyeing two gorgeous marital prospects while snuggled in a mint that has seen better days? Pausing to praise her comedic éclat in Divorce American Style and The Grass Is Greener and marveling at her grasp of heart- ravaged grief in All the Way Home, aficionados can only shake their heads at her descent into television’s Laker Girls. Sort of The Star that Got Away, Simmons’s iridescent work brings a tinge of regret about the wasted potential of an indisputably great actress and an unrealized movie superstar.

—Robin Wood, updated by Robert J. Pardi
SIMON, Michel

Films as Actor:

1925 La Puissance du travail (La Vocation d’André Carrel) (Choux) (as Marius Duret); Feu Mathias Pascal (The Late Matthew Pascal) (L’Herbier) (as Pomino)
1926 L’Inconnue des six jours (Sti) (as servant)
1927 Casanova (Volkoff)
1928 La Passion de Jeanne d’Arc (The Passion of Joan of Arc) (Dreyer) (as Judge Lemaître); Tire au flanc (Renoir) (as Joseph)
1929 Pivoine (Sauvage) (title role); L’Enfant de l’amour (L’Herbier) (as Loredan)
1931 Jean de la Lune (Choux) (as Clotaire); On purge Bébé (Renoir) (as Chouiloux); La Chienne (Renoir) (as Maurice Legrand); Baleydier (Mamy) (title role)
1932 Boudu sauvé des eaux (Boudu Saved from Drowning) (Renoir) (title role)
1933 Miquette et sa mère (Maurice) (as Monchablon); Du haut en bas (Pabst) (as Bodoletz); Leopold le bien-aimé (Brun) (as Ponce)
1934 L’Aralante (Vigo) (as Le Père Jules); Lap aux Dames (Marc Allégret) (as Oscar Lissenhop); Le Bonheur (L’Herbier) (as Noël Malpiaus)
1935 Quand la vie était belle (L’Herbier) (as Clément)
1936 Sous les yeux d’occident (Razumov) (as Lespera); Moutonnet (Moutonnet à Paris; Une Aventure de Moutonnet) (Sti) (as Frecheville); Les Jumeaux de Brighton (Heymann) (as La Brosse); Le Mort en fuite (Berthomieu) (as Achille Baluchet); Jeunes filles de Paris (Vermorel) (as Milord et Baron de Beaupoil)
1937 La Bataille silencieuse (Le Poisson Chinois) (Billon) (as Captain Sauvin); Naples au baiser de feu (The Kiss of Fire) (Genina) (as Michel); Boulot aviateur (Fripions, voleurs, et cie) (de Canonge) (as Baron Bobeche); Drôle de drame (Bizarre Bizarre) (Carné) (as Félix Chapel/Irwyn Molyneux); Si tu m’aimes (Mirages) (Ryder) (as Michel); Le Choc en retour (Monca et Keroul) (as Laverdac)
1938 Les Disparus de Saint-Agil (Boys School) (Christian-Jaque) (as Lemel); Le Quai des brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné) (as Zabel); Les Nouveaux Riches (Berthomieu) (as Martinet); La Chaleur du sein (Boyer) (as Michel Quercy); Le Ruisseau (Autant-Lara) (as Comte Edouard de Bourgogne); Belle étoile (de Barongelli) (as Leon)
1939 Eusèbe Deputé (Berthomieu) (as Eusèbe Bonbonneau); Le Dernier Tournant (Chenal) (as Nick Marino); Noix de Coco (Boyer) (as Josserand); Le Fin de jour (The End of a Day) (Duvivier) (as Cabrisssade); Cavalcade d’amour (Bernard) (as Diogene); Circonstances attenuantes (Extenuating Circumstances) (Boyer) (as the lawyer); Fric-Frac (Autant-Lara) (as Jo-les-bras-coupés); Derrière la façade (32 Rue Montmartre) (Lacombe) (as Picking); Les Musiciens du ciel (Lacombe) (as Captain Simon); Paris New York (Mirande and Heymann) (as Boucheron)
1940 La Comédie du bonheur (L’Herbier) (as Jourdain); La Tosca (The Story of Tosca) (Koch) (as Scarpa)
1942 Il re sè diverte (The King’s Jester) (Bonnard) (as Triboulet); La Dame de l’ouest (Koch) (as Carras)
1943 Au bonheur des Dames (Shop-Girls of Paris) (Cayatte) (as Baudu); Vautrin (Vautrin the Thief) (Billon) (title role)
1945 Un Ami viendra ce soir (A Friend Will Come Tonight) (Bernard) (as Michel Lemaret)
1946 Panique (Panic) (Duvivier) (as Hire); La Taverne de poisson couronne (Chanas) (as Captain Palmer)
1947 Non coupable (Not Guilty) (Decoin) (as Dr. Ancelin); Les Amants du Pont Saint-Jean (Decoin) (as Garonne); La Carcasse et le Tord-Cou (Chanas) (as Le Tord-Cou)
1948 Fabiola (Blasetti) (as Fabian Sévère)
1949 La Beauté du diable (Beauty and the Devil) (Clair) (as Faust/Mephistopheles); Women in Prison (Radvanyi)
1950 Les Deux Vertiès (Leoniola) (as Maitre Simoni)
1951 La Poisson (Guirty) (as Paul Bracconier)
1952 La Fille au fouet (Dreville); Brelan d’As (Verneuil) (as Maigret); Monsieur Taxi (Hunebelle) (as Pierre Verger); Le Rideau rouge (Barsacq) (as Lucien Berta); Le Chemin de Damas (Glass) (as Caiphe); La Vie d’un honnête homme (The Virtuous Scoundrel) (Guitty) (as Alain/Albert); Il mercante de Venezia (The Merchant of Venice) (Billon) (as Shylock); Femmes de Paris (Boyer) (as Buissone)
1953 L’Etrange Désir de M. Bard (Radvanyi) (as Bard); Saadia (Lewin) (as Bou Rezza); Par ordre du Tsar (Hague) (as General Witgenstein); Quelques pas dans la vie (Blasetti)
1955 L’Impossible M. Pipetler (Hunebelle) (as Maurice Martin); Les Mémoires d’un flic (Foucaud) (as Inspector Dominique)
1956 La Joyeuse Prison (Berthomieu) (as Benoit)
1957 Les Trois font la paire (Duhour) (as Commissar Bernard); Un Certain M. Jo (Jolivet) (title role)
1959 Es geschah am hellichten Tag (It Happened in Broad Daylight) (Vajda); La Femme nue et Satan (The Thirde) (Trivas) (as Professor Abel); Austerlitz (Gance)
1960 Pierre la tendresse (Villiers) (title role); Candide (Carbonaux) (as Colonel Nanar)
1961 Le Bateau d’emile (Le Homard flambé) (de la Patellière) (as Charles-Edmond Larmentil)
1962 Le Diable et les dix commandements (The Devil and the Ten Commandments) (Duvivier) (as Jerome Chambard); Cyrano et D’Artagnan (Gance) (as Mauvais)
1963 The Train (Frankenheimer) (as Papa Boule); Mondo di notte (Ecce) (Proia—doc)
1965 Deux heures à tuer (Gavar) (as Nénette)
1967 Le Vieil Homme et l’enfant (The Two of Us) (Berri) (as Pépé);
Ce sacre grand-père (The Marriage Came Tumbling Down)
(Poitrenaud) (as Jéricho)
1970 Contestation Generale (Zampa); La Maison (Brach) (as Jacques Compiegne)
1971 Blanche (Borowczyk) (as the lawyer)
1972 La più bella serata della mia vita (Scola) (as Zorn)
1973 Evalalie quitte les champs (The Star, The Orphan, and the Butcher) (Savary)
1975 L’Ibis rouge (Mocky) (as Zizi)

Publications

By SIMON: articles—

Interview in Entr’acte (Brussels), October 1960.
Plexus (Paris), October–November 1968.
Cinéma (Paris), November 1974.

On SIMON: books—

Buache, Freddy, Michel Simon: Un Acteur et ses personnages, Bienne, 1962.
Loubier, Jean-Marc, Michel Simon, ou le roman d’un joyisseur,

On SIMON: articles—

Doneux, M., “Hommage à Michel Simon,” in APEC—Revue belge du cinéma (Brussels), v. 13, no. 1–2, 1975–76.
Gauteur, Claude, “Michel Simon” in Anthologie du Cinéma, vol. 10,
Gauteur, Claude, “Michel Simon (1895–1975),” in Avant-Scène du Sellier, G., “L’inquiétante étrangeté de Michel Simon,” in Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1983.
September 1987.

Michel Simon shared with a very few other great stars, notably Charles Laughton, a kind of lifelong personal struggle with his physical appearance, an appearance which nevertheless was to be the essence of his very special appeal as an actor. Like Laughton, Simon’s homeliness, even ugliness, was in itself a part of his deeply sympathetic personality on the screen. Before going on stage he had been a professional boxer and acrobatic clown, entering the theater in 1918 when in his early twenties. He was already in his thirties before he made any mark in films, though well-established in the theater. There are glimpses of him, however, in notable silent films, such as Marcel L’Herbier’s Pirandellian Feu Mathias Pascal and Carl Dreyer’s La
Passion de Jeanne d’Arc, but he achieved film stardom in Jean Choux’s Jean de la lune, a film version of the play by Marcel Achard in which he had achieved success on the stage. It was in sound films that he best fulfilled his unique capacity to interpret the more bizarre character roles that matched his massive bulk, his twisted-up facial expression, and his rough, corn-creaky, semiarticulate voice, with which he managed to project extraordinary comic effects. Jean Renoir, who himself had to cope with an ungainly body and a homely, if kindly, face, took to him, and together, with the coming of sound, they created two eccentric comedies, On purge Bébé (after Feydeau) and Boudou sauvé des eaux, and, in total contrast, the tragic La Chienne. Renoir describes with delight the eccentric character of Simon and his pleasure at working with him in his book My Life and My Films.

Simon’s output of films was to continue for the next quarter century, led initially by his grotesquely comic performance in the star role of a good-natured mate of a barge plying the Seine in Jean Vigo’s film, L’Atalante. His more notable prewar serious parts came in the films of Marcel Carné, Drôle de drame and the poetic Quai des brumes, in Christian-Jaque’s film of a boy’s school, Les Disparus de Saint-Agil, and in Julien Duvivier’s La Fin de jour. He also appeared with Arletty in a farcical film, Fric-Frac, which they had both played on the stage.

With the coming of war and the occupation, Simon, now in his fifties, remained in France, but appeared in fewer films, and those of a kind very different from the predominantly proletarian parts of the past. He worked in costume drama, playing, for example, Scarpia in the film La Tosca and Rigolotto in Il re sè diverte, both Italian films, a genre he was to continue after the war in the Italian Fabiola, he starred as Shylock in Il mercante de Venezia and as Faust/Mephis-topheles in Réné Clair’s La Beauté du diable. His other principal genre became crime films, including the title role of the thief in Vautrin and the criminal in Duvivier’s Panique.

In his private life, apart from a single brief period of marriage, Simon remained virtually a recluse, and in 1957 he suffered near exclusion from his profession through a serious injury to the nervous system caused by a dye he had used for makeup; this brought on partial paralysis from which it took time for him to recover. Nevertheless, he achieved a magnificent performance in 1967 in Le Vieil Homme et l’enfant as a French peasant whose anti-Jewish prejudice is overcome through caring for a small Jewish boy during the period of the occupation. Simon continued to appear in French and Italian productions until 1975, the year of his death.

—Roger Manvell

SIMON, Simone

Nationality: French. Born: Bethune, 23 April 1910 (other sources give 1911 or 1914); grew up in Marseilles. Career: Worked briefly as fashion designer and model, Paris; 1931—stage debut in the operetta SIMONE SIMON was originally brought to the United States to repeat her French ingenue roles. Even though a talented actress, she never achieved any level of popularity with American audiences. Twentieth Century-Fox even attempted to promote her as a singing star in Love and Hisses and Josette, but her weak voice undid that strategy. Her Hollywood films are mostly forgotten except for the quartet she made at RKO. In All that Money Can Buy, Simon plays the devil’s emissary who steals a good man away from his wife. This role probably led to her selection as the lead in her best-known American film, Cat People, and its sequel The Curse of the Cat People. Playing a foreign wife who fears the consequences of sex, her accent adds to the films’ strange atmospheric qualities. Finally she made Mademoiselle Fifi, an adaptation of two de Maupassant stories about a French laundress who defies the occupying German forces during the Franco-Prussian War. This patriotic indictment of collaboration was unpopular in the United States, and although it was the first American film to be shown in France after the Normandy invasion, it failed to find an audience. Thus, what some critics consider to be Simon’s best Hollywood work... went largely unseen, and she returned to Europe and her minor triumphs in Ophüls’s La Ronde and Le Plaisir.

—Anthony Ambrogio

SINATRA, Frank

Films as Actor:

1935 Major Bowes’ Amateur Theatre of the Air (Auer) (as singer)
1941 Las Vegas Nights (Murphy) (as band singer)
1942 Ship Ahoy (Buzzell) (as band singer)
1943 Reveille with Beverly (Barton) (as singer); Higher and Higher (Whelan) (as Frank); Show Business at War (March of Time series) (short)
1944 The Road to Victory (Prinz) (as himself); Step Lively (Whelan) (as Glen)
1945 The All Star Bond Rally (Audley) (as himself); Anchors Aweigh (Sidney) (as Clarence Doolittle); The House I Live In (LeRoy) (as himself)
1946 Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (as himself)
1947 It Happened in Brooklyn (Whorf) (as Danny Miller)
1948 The Miracle of the Bells (Pichel) (as Father Paul); The Kissing Bandit (Benedek) (as Riccardo)
1949 Take Me Out to the Ball Game (Berkeley) (as Dennis Ryan); On the Town (Donen and Kelly) (as Chip); Adam’s Rib (Cukor) (voice only)
1951 Double Dynamite (Cummings) (as Emile Keck); Meet Danny Wilson (Pevney) (title role)
1953 From Here to Eternity (Zimmernann) (as Angelo Maggio)
1954 Suddenly (Lewis Allen) (as John Baron)
1955 Young at Heart (Gordon Douglas) (as Barney Sloan); Not as a Stranger (Kramer) (as Alfred Boone); The Tender Trap (Walters) (as Charlie Reader); Guys and Dolls (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Nathan Detroit); The Man with the Golden Arm (Preminger) (as Frankie Machine)
1956 Meet Me in Las Vegas (Viva Las Vegas) (Rowland) (as himself); High Society (Walters) (as Mike Connor); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as piano player)
1957 The Pride and the Passion (Kramer) (as Miguel); The Joker Is Wild (Charles Vidor) (as Joe E. Lewis); Pal Joey (Sidney) (title role)
1958 Kings Go Forth (Daves) (as Lt. Sam Loggins); Some Came Running (Minnelli) (as Dave Hirsch)
1959 Invitation to Monte Carlo (Lloyd) (as himself); A Hole in the Head (Capra) (as Tony Manetta); Never So Few (John Sturges) (as Captain Tom Reynolds)
1960 Can-Can (Walter Lang) (as Francois Durnais); Ocean’s Eleven (Milestone) (as Danny Ocean); Pepe (Sidney) (as himself)
1961 The Devil at Four O’Clock (LeRoy) (as Harvey)
1962 Sinatra in Israel (short) (as himself); The Road to Hong Kong (Panama) (as himself); The Manchurian Candidate (Frankenheimer) (as Bennett Marco)
1963 Come Blow Your Horn (Bud Yorkin) (as Alan Baker); The List of Adrian Messenger ( Huston) (as Gypsy stableman); Four for Texas (Aldrich) (as Mack Thomas)
1964 Paris When It Sizzles (Quine) (as singing voice)
1965 Von Ryan’s Express (Robson) (as Colonel Joseph Ryan); Marriage on the Rocks (Donohue) (as Dan Edwards)
1966 Cast a Giant Shadow (Shavelson) (as David “Mickey” Marcus); The Oscar (Rouse) (as himself); Assault on a Queen (Donohue) (as Mark Brittain)
1967 The Naked Runner (Furie) (as Sam Laker); Tony Rome (Gordon Douglas) (title role)
1968 The Detective (Gordon Douglas) (as Joe Leland); Lady in Cement (Gordon Douglas) (as Tony Rome)
1970 Dirty Dingus Magee (Kennedy) (title role)
1974 That’s Entertainment! (Haley—compilation) (as narrator)
1977 Contract on Cherry Street (Graham—for TV) (as Detective Frank Horannes)
1984 Cannonball Run II (Needham) (as himself)
1988 Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis) (as voice of Singing Sword)
1989 Entertaining the Troops (doc)
1990 Listen Up!: The Lives of Quincy Jones (Graham—for TV) (as Chief Pharmacist Mate Maloney)
1995 Young at Heart (as himself); The Films of John Frankenheimer (Emery) (as himself); Sinatra: 80 Years My Way (as himself)
1996 Rodgers & Hammerstein: The Sound of Movies (Burns—for TV) (archive footage)

Films as Actor and Producer:

1956 Johnny Concho (McGuire) (title role)
1962 Sergeants 3 (John Sturges) (as Sgt. Mike Merry)
1964 Robin and the Seven Hoods (Gordon Douglas) (as Robbo)
1980 The First Deadly Sin (Hutton) (as Edward Delaney, exec pr)

Film as Actor, Director, and Producer:

1965 None but the Brave (as Chief Pharmacist Mate Maloney)

Publications

By SINATRA: books—

Sinatra in His Own Words, compiled by Guy Yarwood, New York, 1982.

By SINATRA: article—

“‘And Then There Was One,’” interview with B. Zehme, in Esquire (New York), March, 1996.

On SINATRA: books—

On SINATRA: articles—

Ressner, Jeffrey, “‘And Again, One More for the Road,’” in Time (New York), 21 March 1994.
Conomos, John, “‘It’s a Quarter to Three?’” obituary in Cinema Papers (Fitzroy), August 1998.
Sight & Sound (London), March 1999.

On SINATRA: films—

* * *
Frank Sinatra’s acting has been notable for its variety of roles and versatility of styles. Appearing in many different types of films, he has made particular contributions to musicals, dramas, action/adventure films, and comedies. To a certain extent his film career has paralleled his singing career. As he grew older, he became more serious and introspective, sometimes more personal, as a singer. He sought new material and different arrangements in a conscious evolution of vocal style. Similarly, in films he turned from youthful, singing roles to serious, dramatic ones during the 1950s in an attempt to establish himself as an actor. His uncanny ability to choose just the right material to sing, however, has not always worked for him on the screen. Although he has had remarkable success in certain, very disparate films—On the Town, From Here to Eternity, A Hole in the Head, The Manchurian Candidate, and The Detective—he has also seemed frequently miscast or indifferent in others—Guys and Dolls, Can Can, and The Pride and the Passion. Nevertheless, he is probably as well known as a screen star as he is as a recording artist.

Sinatra’s earliest roles exploited an image that had contributed to his popularity as a singer—the skinny kid who needs mothering. In several of the films, he played opposite a strong female character who had to teach him about love. In Take Me Out to the Ball Game, for example, Betty Garrett’s Shirley chases Sinatra’s Dennis Ryan, aggressively overcoming his reticence. At one point, she even picks him up and carries him off the baseball field. The two were paired in almost identical roles in On the Town as well. He was also cast in Anchors Aweigh as the younger partner who could not succeed in getting the leading lady to fall for him, but who realizes in time that a less sophisticated girl is the one he really loves.

Dissatisfied, however, with that image and the roles in those musicals, Sinatra left MGM. Although he appeared in subsequent musicals, it is primarily in dramatic roles that Sinatra has achieved success since he played Maggio in From Here to Eternity (the role that won him an Oscar for Best Supporting Actor). Pivotal to that change in emphasis for his career, Maggio was a role for which Sinatra campaigned, and it led to further roles of dramatic power and significance, usually as a character whose tough facade hides his vulnerability. Such contradictions often lead to the film’s dramatic conflict as in The Man with the Golden Arm, The Jokers Wild, Some Came Running, and The Detective.

Sinatra’s versatility as a screen actor is especially represented by his roles in comedies and adventure films. In both genres he avoids the pretentiousness of some of his less successful serious roles while still displaying a personal style akin to some of his best work as a singer. As Alan Baker, the older brother teaching the younger about the pretentiousness of some of his less successful serious roles while his roles in comedies and adventure films. In both genres he avoids the pretentiousness of some of his less successful serious roles while still displaying a personal style akin to some of his best work as a singer.

In the 1950s and 1960s, Sinatra and other actors such as Shirley MacLaine, Dean Martin, and Sammy Davis Jr.—who appeared in several films together—became known as the “Rat Pack.” (Sinatra has also been nicknamed “Chairman of the Board of Show Business,” or just “Chairman of the Board.”) His leadership of the Rat Pack and the stories of Sinatra’s impatience with film production practices and lack of cooperation on the set are legendary. Certain films, particularly The Pride and the Passion, may have been compromised because of his intransigence. In addition, many other aspects of his offscreen life are often difficult to separate from his on-screen performances. Nevertheless, such a separation must be made because he created a significant number of diverse roles over a 40-year career.

—Jerome Delamater, updated by Linda J. Stewart

SLOANE, Everett

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 1 October 1909. Education: Attended Public School No. 46; Townsend Harris High School, New York; University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia. Family: Married Luba Herman, 1933, son: Ned, daughter: Erika. Career: 1927—joined Jasper Deeter’s stock company, Moylan, Pennsylvania; 1928—New York stage debut; then worked for a Wall Street broker; 1929—radio actor: over the next few years appeared in The Goldbergs, The Crime Doctor, and, for eight years, The Shadow; 1935—Broadway debut in Boy Meets Girl; 1938—joined Orson Welles’s Mercury Theatre, and appeared in many of its radio productions; 1941—film debut in Welles’s Citizen Kane; 1944—on Broadway in A Bell for Adano; 1950s—in many television series and plays, notably Rod Sterling’s Patterns and Noon on Doomsday; directed the stage plays Twilight Bar and The Dancer. Died: Suicide, 6 August 1965.

Films as Actor:

1941 Citizen Kane (Welles) (as Bernstein)
1942 Journey into Fear (Foster) (as Kopeikin)
1948 The Lady from Shanghai (Welles) (as Arthur Bannister)
1949 Prince of Foxes (King) (as Belli)
1950 The Men (Zinnemann) (as Dr. Brock)
1951 The Enforcer (Windust) (as Albert Mendoza); Bird of Paradise (Daves) (as beachcomber); The Prince Who Was a Thief (Maté) (as Yussef); Sirocco (Bernhardt) (as General LaSalle); The Blue Veil (Bernhardt) (as District Attorney); The Desert Fox (Hathaway) (as General Burgdoff)
1952 The Sellout (Mayer) (as Nelson Tarsson); Way of a Gaucho (Tourneur) (as Falcon)
1955 The Big Knife (Aldrich) (as Nat Danziger)
1957 Patters (Cook) (as Walter Ramsey); Somebody Up There Likes Me (Wise) (as Irving Cohen); Last for Life (Minnelli) (as Dr. Gachet)
1958 Marjorie Morningstar (Rapper) (as Arnold Morgenstern); The Gun Runners (Siegel)
1960 Home from the Hill (Minnelli) (as Albert Halstead)
1961 By Love Possessed (Sturges) (as Reggie)
1962 Brushfire (Warner) (as Chevren McCase)
1963 The Man from the Diner’s Club (Tashlin) (as Martindale)
1964 The Patsy (Lewis) (as Caryl Ferguson); Ready for the People (Kulik) (as Paul Boyer); The Disorderly Orderly (Tashlin) (as Mr. Tuffington)
SMITH, (Dame) Maggie

Films as Actress:

1958 Nowhere to Go (Holt) (as Bridget Howard)
1962 Go to Blazes (Truman) (as Chantal)
1963 The V.I.P.s (Asquith) (as Miss Mead)
1964 The Pumpkin Eater (Clayton) (as Philpot)
1965 Young Cassidy (Cardiff and Ford) (as Nora)
1966 Othello (Burge) (as Desdemona)
1967 The Honey Pot (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Sarah Watkins)
1968 Hot Millions (Till) (as Patty Terwilliger)
1969 The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (Neame) (title role); Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as music hall star)
1972 Travels with My Aunt (Cukor) (as Aunt Augusta); Love and Pain and the Whole Damn Thing (Pakula) (as Lola Fisher)
1976 Murder by Death (Moore) (as Dora Charleston)
1978 California Suite (Ross) (as Diana Barrie); Death on the Nile (Guillermin) (as Miss Bowers)
1981 Evil under the Sun (Hamilton) (as Daphne Castle); Clash of the Titans (Desmond Davis) (as Thetis); Quartet (Ivy) (as Lois Heidler)
1982 The Missionary (Loncraine) (as Lady Ames); Better Late than Never (Whose Little Girl Are You?) (Forbes) (as Miss Anderson)
1985 A Private Function (Mowbray) (as Joyce Chilvers); Lily in Love (Iatszani Kell) (Makk) (title role)
1986 A Room with a View (Ivy) (as Charlotte Bartlett)
1987 The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne (Clayton) (title role)
1990 Romeo-Juliet (Acosta) (as voice of Rozaline)
1991 Hook (Spielberg) (as Granny Wendy Darling)
Maggie Smith (center), with Laurence Olivier and Joyce Redman, in Othello

1992  Sister Act (Ardolino) (as Mother Superior); Memento Mori (Clayton and Hubbard—for TV) (as Mrs. Mabel Pettigrew)

1993  The Secret Garden (Holland) (as Mrs. Medlock); Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit (Duke) (as Mother Superior); Suddenly Last Summer (Eyre—for TV) (as Violet Venable)

1996  Richard III (Loncraine) (as the Duchess of York); The First Wives Club (Hogan)

1997  Washington Square (Holland) (as Aunt Lavinia Penniman)

1999  The Last September (Warner) (as Lady Myra); David Copperfield; Curtain Call (Yates) (as Lily Marlowe); Tea With Mussolini (Zeffirelli) (as Hester); All the King's Men (Jarrold—for TV) (as Queen Alexandra)

Interview with Mary Harron, in the Observer (London), 18 November 1982.

Interview with Sheridan Morley, in the Times (London), 14 July 1990.

On SMITH: book—

On SMITH: articles—

By SMITH: articles—

Interview in Show (Hollywood), November 1972.

Publications

As a younger dramatic actress making a splash in Othello, Maggie Smith seemed as proficient as other English stage contemporaries but unremarkable on-screen. It was as a flustered comedienne, England’s daffiest export since Kay Kendall, that Smith truly emerged as a star. What makes Smith so funny is that she is often the sole cast member diligently trying to remain the voice of reason; the loss of her dignity to chaos can be overwhelmingly hilarious, whether it is her Oscar-nominee in California Suite, who drowns her desire for her gay hubby in booze; her mousy nurse uncovering a rapscallion’s murder scheme in The Honey Pot; or her Dora Charleston trying to keep her wits about her while the world’s most famous detectives lose their cool in Murder by Death. Often cast as a low-level professional (e.g., the enterprising secretary in Hot Millions, the paid companion in Death on the Nile), who is sometimes a spinster, Smith specializes in playing underappreciated ugly ducklings who often save the day for their love objects as Patty Tervilliger does in Hot Millions by wisely investing her spouse’s embezzled funds.

When Smith seamlessly combines the frustration of the unmarried woman with her trademark frazzled composure in melodramas, the comedy technique heightens her characters’ predicaments. In her Oscar-winning performance as the disciplinarian molder of little girls in The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie, she is both pathetic and laughable as she misinterprets the range of her influence. What is so heartbreaking about Smith’s roles that play tears off laughter is that her insular characters have no sense of their own ridiculousness; when the self-image is shattered by the perception of the outside world as in Jean Brodie, the effect on the spectator is devastating. In the transmuting tragicomedy Love and Pain and the Whole Damn Thing, the slapstick sequences brilliantly reverse audience expectations; Smith’s dazzling physical comedy shtick becomes a slap in the audience’s face once it is revealed that Smith’s character is terminally ill. We are so conditioned to draw enjoyment from Smith’s lively self-deprecation, that this knowledge of Lola Fisher’s mortality is shocking. Daringly, both A Room with a View and The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne employ ludicrous aspects of the characters’ deportment to underscore their fragility. Not since Katharine Hepburn cornered the market on the unlabeled (The African Queen, Summertime, Rainmaker), has a star brought so much poignancy to bear on the plight of the spinster.

A comparison between these two great eccentrics is telling even if Hepburn was a great beauty who relied on mannerisms to emphasize her characters’ uniqueness, whereas Smith is a plain woman who sometimes falls back on mannerisms to undercut her characters’ despair. But when Smith colors her unloved woman with humor not for sugarcoating but for ironic counterpoint, her artistry is profoundly moving, as with her moral watchdog chaperon in Room with a View and her tipping neurasthenic, Judith Hearne, one of cinema’s incontrovertibly great performances. Foolishly pinning her old maid hope on an obvious con man, Hearne is driven round the bend by this final rejection as if it were a personal affront from a God she has come to question. Superb in British television productions such as Memento Mori and a remake of Hepburn’s chilling Suddenly Last Summer, Smith is admittedly something of a one-woman band as an actress. If her performance gimmickry is not as well-suited to the all-star bitchery of Evil under the Sun as it is to the inspired satire of A Private Function or The Missionary, she can never be accused of tasteful dullness; her bag of tricks is unmistakably hers, not the generic posturing of female clowns such as Goldie Hawn and Meg Ryan.

Lately, somewhat toned-down in supporting roles as the stern Mrs. Medlock in the stylish children’s film The Secret Garden or as the disgusted mother of a political monster in the revisionist Richard III, Smith is restrained but still impactful. In the tepid box-office-smash the Sister Act films, Smith provides a welcome soufflé of class, but she is much too distinctive a funnywoman to play straight lady to other comediennes. Her only dreadful performance in a brilliant career forms the centerpiece of Travels with My Aunt, a cripplingly project she inherited from Katharine Hepburn after a power play between that actress and MGM. Encouraged in an interpretation owing more to Auntie Mame than Graham Greene’s beloved book, Smith offers a circus clown rendition of The Madwoman of Chaillot. For the only time in her career, those much written-about star mannerisms strangle her authority. One misstep in a body of work this bright and singular only throws the other magnificent achievements into sharper relief. Whereas other versatile stars manage to give superb comic and searing dramatic acting displays in different films, Smith magically combines comic and tragic masks inside the spirit of the same character. How she creates these breathtaking histrionic effects may be the province of sorcery.

—Robert Pardi

SMITH, Will

Nationality: American. Born: Willard Christopher Smith II, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 25 September 1968. Education: Attended Our Lady of Lourdes elementary school and Overbrook High School, Philadelphia; turned down a scholarship in computer science at Massachusetts Institute of Technology to pursue his career as a performer. Family: Married Sheree Zampino, 1992 (divorced 1995); one son: Willard Christopher Smith III; married Jada Pinkett, 1997; one

Films as Actor:

1992 Where the Day Takes You (Rocco) (as Manny)
1993 Made in America (Benjamin) (as Tea Cake Walters); Six Degrees of Separation (Schepisi) (as Paul Poitier)
1995 Bad Boys (Bay) (as Mike Lowrey)
1996 Independence Day (Emmerich) (as Steven Hiller)
1997 Men in Black (Sonnenfeld) (as James Darrel Edwards III)
1998 Enemy of the State (Scott) (as Robert Clayton Dean)
1999 The Wild Wild West (Sonnenfeld) (as James West); Legends of Bagger Vance (Redford) (as Bagger Vance)

Publications

By SMITH: articles—

On SMITH: books—

On SMITH: articles—

Will Smith’s success as an actor, both on television and in the movies, is largely due to the same qualities that rocketed him to national attention as a star of rap music when he was only eighteen. Born into a middle class African American family in Philadelphia, Smith has become a crossover performer on many levels. Immensely popular with black audiences, Smith has been able to make elements of black identity and black popular culture not only accessible but comfortably appealing to white audiences. His relaxed stage presence and easy rapport with audiences led Esquire’s Tom Carson to compare him to screen giant Clark Gable.

Hip-hop culture and its soundtrack rap music was just beginning to capture the imagination of American youth when Smith started rapping at age thirteen. With his partner “Jazzy Jeff” Townes, he helped create a softer brand of rap that spoke to middle-class teens of all races in a way that the hard-edged rap born of urban poverty did not. Though some sneered at what they called “suburban rap lite” and accused Smith and Townes of writing rap for white people, record sales soared for “Jazzy Jeff and the Fresh Prince.” It was Smith’s playful and ebullient style as much as his songs about girl trouble and clueless parents that attracted fans.

In 1990, when Benny Medina and Quincy Jones conceived a sitcom about a streetwise kid from the east coast transplanted into a wealthy California suburb, they immediately saw how the exuberant young rap star from Philly fit the role. The Fresh Prince of Bel Air stayed on the air for six years, and even critics who panned it as banal TV froth recognized the charismatic quality of young Will Smith.

When Smith joined the cast of The Fresh Prince, he had virtually no acting experience; the first seasons show the unevenness and tension of his learning years. It took three seasons before he was able to relax into the role, but even in the early years, Smith’s ability to convey a mix of sweetness, cockiness, and intelligence in the central character held the slight show together.

In 1992, Smith surprised critics with his performance in a small but intense role as a homeless man in the film Where the Day Takes You, but it was his standout performance in the 1993 film Six Degrees of Separation that made critics and adult audiences begin to take him seriously as an actor. Three years later, his role in the heavily hyped action film Independence Day made him a star.

Smith’s good looks and playful, low-key style made him a natural hero of the Hollywood comic-action blockbuster genre, and he was given roles in a succession of films of that type, beginning with Men in Black, a spoof of the type of sci-fi film that had just given him his stardom. One after another, Smith’s films were box office successes, and his salary approached $10 million per film. Even when a film flopped, as did The Wild, Wild West in 1999, critics singled out Smith as the one bright spot in an otherwise dismal movie.

Though Smith has been called “the next Eddie Murphy,” he has a quality that Murphy has never possessed, which is his ability to inspire comfort in a broad range of audiences. Though Smith is African American and expresses himself both in the vernacular and cultural genres of black culture, he has an everyman kind of humor that disarms white audiences. Film studios have been quick to cash in on this crossover potential, perhaps neglecting to develop his considerable acting ability in favor of showcasing his style, flash, and product placement potential. Smith’s highly popular songs for films like Men in Black and The Wild, Wild West are another benefit of his crossover appeal, and are one more reason he has been given more action movies than serious roles.

—Tina Gianoulis

SNIPES, Wesley

Nationality: American. Born: Orlando, Florida, 31 July 1962; grew up in the South Bronx. Education: Attended the High School of Performing Arts in New York; State University of New York at Wesley Snipes (left) with Stephen Dorff in Blade

Purchase, B.A. in Dramatic Arts. Family: Divorced, son: Jelani Asar. Career: Moved back to New York to establish career as an actor, early 1980s; made Broadway debut in The Boys of Winter, 1985; had attention-getting role as a gang leader in the Michael Jackson music video Bad, 1987; made first important movie appearances in Major League, King of New York, and Mo’ Better Blues, 1989–90; in TV series H.E.L.P., 1990; is an expert at capoeira, an African-Brazilian martial arts technique. Awards: Best Actor Cable Ace Award, for Vietnam War Story 2, 1989; Venice Film Festival Volpi Cup, for One Night Stand, 1997. Agent: Baker Winokur Ryder, 405 South Beverly Drive, 5th Floor, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Wildcats</td>
<td>Ritchie</td>
<td>(as Trumaine); Streets of Gold</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Critical Condition</td>
<td>Apted</td>
<td>(as ambulance driver)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Vietnam War Story 2</td>
<td>Morris, Sholder, Uno</td>
<td>— for TV</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Major League</td>
<td>Ward</td>
<td>(as Willie Mays Hayes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>King of New York</td>
<td>Ferrara</td>
<td>(as Thomas Flannigan); Mo’ Better Blues (as Shadow Henderson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>New Jack City</td>
<td>Van Peebles</td>
<td>(as Nino Brown); Jungle Fever (as Flipper Purify)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>White Men Can’t Jump</td>
<td>Shelton</td>
<td>(as Sidney Deane); The Waterdance (as Raymond Hill); Passenger 57 (as John Cutter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Boiling Point</td>
<td>Harris</td>
<td>(as Jimmy); Rising Sun (as Web Smith); Demolition Man (as Simon Phoenix); Harlem (as Roemello Skuggs)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Drop Zone</td>
<td>Badham</td>
<td>(as Pete Nessip)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything! Julie Newmar</td>
<td>Kidron</td>
<td>(as Noxeema Jackson); Money Train (as John); Waiting to Exhale (as James, uncredited)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>The Fan</td>
<td>(as Bobby Rayburn); Clive Anderson All Talk (as himself); America’s Dream (Sulliman—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>One Night Stand</td>
<td>Figgis</td>
<td>(as Max Carlyle); Murder at 1600 (as Detective Harlan Regis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>Down in the Delta</td>
<td>Angelou</td>
<td>(as Will Sinclair) (+ pr); Blade (as Blade/Eric) (+ pr, chor); U.S. Marshals (as Mark Sheridan); Futuresport (for TV) (as Obike Fixx) (+ pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Blade 2</td>
<td>del Toro</td>
<td>(as Blade); The Art of War (Duguay)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Publications

By SNIPES: articles—

Interview with Paul D. Colford, in Newsday (Melville, New York), 23 October 1990.

Interview in Playboy (Chicago), October 1993.

On SNIPES: books—

On SNIPES: articles—

Hirschberg, Lynn, ‘‘Living Large,’’ in Vanity Fair (New York), September 1993.

Norment, Lynn, ‘‘Bachelors with Money and Clout,’’ in Ebony (Chicago), October 1993.

Fink, Mitchell, ‘‘Could It Be the Title?’’ in People Weekly (New York), 6 March 1995.

* * *

Wesley Snipes is best-known to the mainstream moviegoing public as a durable star of action-adventure films. Upon earning his movie star stripes in the early 1990s, he became an action hero to rival Stallone and Schwarzenegger. The actor’s success in the likes of Passenger 57 (playing a specialist in antiterrorism who goes up against airline hijackers) and Drop Zone (cast as a U.S. marshal battling sky-diver villains) confirms that an African-American actor is perfectly capable of finding major stardom playing such roles. Snipes also has been cast as other standard characters in action epics. He has been the wizened veteran hero’s youthful partner (in Rising Sun, paired with Sean Connery); and the deranged, ultra-dangerous villain (in Demolition Man, opposite Stallone).

But what truly marks Snipes as a motion picture personality is his versatility; his interest in playing not only in action-adventure fare but in character-driven films; and his willingness to experiment in roles that a Sylvester Stallone never, ever would accept. He initially attracted attention as the gang leader in the popular Michael Jackson music video Bad, a role that served as his calling card for feature film work. After impressive supporting turns in three films—Major League (as the speedy baseball player Willie Mays Hayes); King of New York (as a tough, honest cop); and Mo’ Better Blues (as a jazz musician)—Snipes hit the mark in two 1991 releases. Not only did his performances in New Jack City and Jungle Fever establish him as a rising young star, but they effectively displayed his range as an actor. In New Jack City, he offered a chillingly sinister performance as Nino Brown, a Harlem drug lord; and in Jungle Fever, he gave a subtle performance as Flipper Purify, a guilt-ridden architect, married to a black woman, who enters into an affair with his white secretary.

Around the time he made The Waterdance and White Men Can’t Jump, Snipes quickly was emerging as one of the decade’s upper-echelon stars. In The Waterdance, he is Raymond Hill, a streetwise black who has become a paraplegic and is confined to a rehabilitation center. In White Men Can’t Jump, he plays another street-smart type: Sidney Deane, a Southern California basketball hustler. At first glance, both characters are contemporary African-American stereotypes. Raymond Hill is a self-described ladies’ man who before becoming wheelchair-bound had lived a ‘‘wild life’’; admittedly, he was not much of a husband to his wife or father to his little girl. And Sidney Deane seems the type who, if given the opportunity, would hustle you out of your last dime. Nevertheless, in both The Waterdance and White Men Can’t Jump, Snipes adds unusual depth and poignancy to his characterizations. His performances allow you to see beyond the characters’ surface hype, making both men at once deeply flawed and deeply human.

Snipes also is not apprehensive about playing against type—in the broadest possible sense. He lampooned his macho image in To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything! Julie Newmar, in which he, along with Patrick Swayze and John Leguizamo, play drag queens. Snipes’ Noxema Jackson comes complete with blond wig and red high-heel shoes. He/she is co-winner of a drag queen beauty pageant, and he/she is not afraid of wiggling his/her hips. Arnold Schwarzenegger may be amenable to gently spoofing his screen image, playing the ‘‘twin’’ of Danny DeVito in Twins and a scientist who finds himself pregnant in Junior. But one cannot imagine Schwarzenegger playing a homosexual, let alone a drag queen. It is to Snipes’ credit that he is willing to risk alienating his action-adventure audience by stretching himself in a role like Noxema Jackson.

In the latter part of the 1990s, Snipes kept on mixing his screen roles. He appeared in thrillers, action films, and science fiction epics, playing heroes, villains, and victims: U.S. Marshalls (as an ex-CIA agent framed on a murder rap); Murder at 1600 (as a homicide detective intent on solving the title crime); Money Train (re-teamed with White Men Can’t Jump co-star Woody Harrelson, as a New York City undercover transit cop who becomes entangled in a theft scheme); The Fan (as a star San Francisco Giants baseball player who is stalked by a psycho); and, most strikingly, the ultra-violent Blade (as a half-human/half-vampire). At the same time, Snipes accepted roles in dramas, playing secondary characters in a pair of films that charted the plight of contemporary black women: Waiting to Exhale (as a businessman whose wife is dying); and Down in the Delta (as a successful lawyer). Perhaps his most interesting role of the period is the lead in One Night Stand, Mike Figgis’ thoughtful and ambitious follow-up to Leaving Las Vegas. Snipes has one of his best-ever parts as Max Carlyle, an otherwise intelligent and compassionate television commercial director who is floundering in a world that is all gloss and no substance, and whose wife, friends, and colleagues are collectively shallow. Max undergoes a crisis upon visiting an old friend who is dying of AIDS and having a chance encounter with a kindred spirit, a woman who may be his true soul mate.

—Rob Edelman

SORDI, Alberto

Films as Actor:

1938 La principessa Tarahanova (Princess Tarahanova) (Ozep and Soldati)
1940 La notte delle beffe (The Night of Tricks) (Campogalliani; Cuori nella tormenta (Tormented Hearts) (Campogalliani)
1941 Le signorine della villa accanto (The Women Next Door) (Rossino)
1942 I tre aquilotti (The Three Pilots) (Mattòli) (as Filippo); La Signorina (Kish); Giarabub (Alessandrini); Casanova farebbe così Casanova Would Do It That Way! (Bragaglia); Santa Elena piccolo isola (Simoni)
1944 Tre ragazze cercano marito (Three Girls Looking for Husbands) (Coletti) (as Giulio); Circo equestre Za-Bum (The Za-Bum Circus) (Mattòli)
1945 Chi l’ha visto? (Who’s Seen Him?) (Alessandrini); L’innocente Casimiro (The Innocent Casimiro) (Campogalliani)
1946 Le miserie del signor Travet (His Young Wife) (Soldati) (as Barbarotti)
1947 Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo (Flesh Will Surrender) (Lattuada) (as Doberti); Il passatore (A Bullet for Stefano; The Ferryman) (Coletti) (as the boyfriend)
1948 Il vento mi ha cantato una canzone (The Wind Sang Me a Song) (Mastrocinque); Che Tempo! What Times! (Bianchi) (as Mario Aguirre); Sotto il sole di Roma (Under the Sun of Rome) (Castellani)
1951 Mamma mia, che impressione (Savarese) (+ co-sc); Cameriera bella presenza offesi (Pastini)
1952 Lo sceicco bianco (The White Sheikh) (Fellini) (title role); Totò e i re di Roma (Steno and Monicelli); E arrivato l’accordatore (The Tuner Has Arrived) (Coletti); G iovinezza (Pastina)
1953 I rivellini (The Young and the Passionate; Vitelloni) (Fellini) (as Alberto); Ci troviamo in galleria (Bolognini) (as Alberto); L’incantevole nemicia (Gora); Canzoni, canzoni, canzoni (Paolella); Due notti con Cleopatra (Two Nights with Cleopatra) (Mattòli) (as Cesario)
1954 Il seduttore (Rossi) (+ co-sc); Amori di mezzo secolo (Chiari); Tempi nostri (Anatomy of Love; Our Time) (Blasetti); Gran varietà (Paolella) (as Premoli); Tripoli, bel suol d’amore (Cerio) (as Alberto); Via Padova 46 (Lo Scocciatore) (Bianchi); Un giorno in pretrura (A Day in Court) (Steno) (as Meniconi, + co-sc); Una purgina a Roma (Kohler); L’allegra squadrone (Moffa); Le Rouge et le noir (Autant-Lara); Accadde al commissariato (Simonielli) (as Alberto Tadini); Il matrimonio (Petrucci); Un americano a Roma (Steno) (as Nando Moriconi, + co-sc)
1955 L’arte di arrangiarsi (Zampa); Il segno di Venere (The Sign of Venus) (Risi) (as Romolo Proietti); La bella di Roma (Comencini); Bravissimo (D’Amico); Piccolo posta (Steno) (as Rodolfo Vanzino); Un eroe dei nostri tempi (Monicelli); Accadde al penitenziario (Bianchi); Buona notte . . . avvocato! (Bianchi) (as Alberto Santi, + co-sc)
1956 Lo scopalo (Pietrangeli); I pappagalli (Paolinelli); Mio figlio Nerone (Nero’s Mistress; Nero’s Weekend) (Steno) (as Nero); Da qui all ‘eredità; Guardia, guardia scelta, brigadiere e maresciallo (Bolognini); Era da venerdì 17 (The Virtuous Bigamist) (Soldati) (as Mario); Mi permette babbo! (Bonnard)
1957 Souvenir d’Italie (It Happened in Rome) (Pietrangeli) (as Sergio); Arrivano i dollari! (Costa); A Farewell to Arms (Charles Vidor) (as Father Galli); Il conte Max (Bianchi)
1958 Il medico e lo stregone (Monicelli); Il marito (Loy and Puccini); Fortunella (De Filippo); Ladro lui, ladra lei (Zampa); Domenica e sempre domenica (Mastrocinque) (+ co-sc); Le Septième Ciel (Bernard); Venezia, la luna, e tu (Risi); Nella città l’inferno . . . and the Wild Wild Women; Hell in the City) (Castellani) (as Adonis); Racconti d’estate (Love on the Riviera; Summer Tables; Femmes d’un âge (Franciolini) (as Aristarco Bertolini); Oh! Que Mambo! (Berry)
1959 Il moralista (The Moralist) (Bianchi) (as Agostino); I magliari (The Swindlers) (Rosí) (as Tontonno); La grande guerra (The Great War) (Monicelli) (as Orsete Jacovacci); Brevi amori a Palma di Majorca (Bianchi); Il vedovo (Risi); Il giovane leone; Vacanze d’inverno (Mastrocinque); Costa azzurra (Sala); Policarpo, ufficiale di scrittura (Soldati)
1960 Tutti a casa (Everybody Go Home!) (Comencini) (as Alberto Innocenzi); Gastone (Bonnard); Il vigile (Zampa); Crimen . . . And Suddenly It’s Murder!; Killing in Monte Carlo (Camerini) (as Alberto Franzetti)
1961 I due nemici (The Best of Enemies) (Hamilton) (as Captain Blasi); Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (de Sica); Una vita difficile (Risi) (as Silvio Magnozzi)
1962 Mafioso (Lattuada) (as Antonio Badalamenti); Il commissario (Comencini) (as Dante Lombardozzi)
1963 Il diavolo (To Bed or Not to Bed; The Devil) (Polidoro) (as Amadeo Ferretti); Il boom (de Sica) (as Giovanni Alberti); Il maestro di Vigevano (Petri) (as Monbelli); Tentazione proibite (Civirani)
1964 La mia signora (Bolognini, Comencini, and Brass) (five roles)
1965 Il disco volante (The Flying Saucer) (Brass) (four roles); Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines (Annakin) (as Count Emilio Ponticelli); Made in Italy (A L’Italienne) (Loy) (as errant husband); “Latin Lover” ep. of I tre volti (Three Faces of a Woman) (Indovina) (as Armando Tucci, + co-sc); “Guglirimo il dentone” ep. of I complessi (D’Amico) (+ co-sc); Thrilling (Scola, Polidoro, and Lizzani)
1966  I nostri mariti (Our Husbands) (Risi, d’Amico, and Zampa);
“Queen Marta” (“Giovanni”) ep. of Le fate (The Queens; Sex Quartet) (Pietrergoli) (as Giovanni)
1967  “Senso civico” (“Civic Sense”) ep. of Le streghe (The Witches) (Bolognini) (as truckdriver)
1968  Il medico della mutua (The Family Doctor) (Zampa) (as Dr. Guido Tersilli, + co-sc); Riusciranno i nostri eroi ad ritrovare l’amico misteriosamente scomparso in Africa? (Scola) (as Fausto di Salvio)
1970  “La camera” (as Antonio) and “Il leone” (as Giacinto Colonna) eps. of Le coppie (The Couples) (+ d of first ep.; de Sica); Conitestazione generale (Zampa) (as Don Giuseppe)
1971  Detenuto in attesa di giudizio (Detained While Waiting for Justice, Why?) (Loy) (as Giuseppe Di Noi)
1972  La più bella serata della mia vita (The Most Wonderful Evening of My Life) (Scola) (as Alfredo Rossi); Lo scopone scientifico (The Scientific Cardplayer) (Comencini) (as Peppino); Roma (Fellini’s Roma) (Fellini)
1973  Anastasia mio fratello (Steno) (as Don Salvatore Anastasia, + co-sc)
1975  To Love, Perhaps to Die; Tra moglie e Mario
1977  Un borghese piccolo piccolo (An Average Man) (Monicelli) (as Giovanni Vivaldi); ‘L’ascensore’ ep. of Quelle strane occasioni (Comencini) (as Monsignor); “First Aid,” “Like a Queen,” and “Funeral Elegy” eps. of I nuovi mostri (Viva Italia!; The New Monsters) (Monicelli, Risi, and Scola)
1978  Le Temoin (The Witness) (Mocky) (as Antonio)
1979  L’Ingorgo (Traffic Jam) (Comencini); Il Malato Imaginario (The Imaginary Invalid) (Tonino Cervi) (as Arganti, + co-sc)
1980  Il Marchese del Grillo (Monicelli) (as Onofrio Del Grillo/Gasperino, + co-sc)
1982  Bertoldo, Bertoldino e Cacasenno (Monicelli) (as Friar Cipolla)
1984  Sono un fenomeno paranormale (I’m a Paranormal Phenomenon) (Corbucci) (+ co-sc)
1985  Troppo forte (Great!) (Verdone) (as lawyer, + co-sc)
1986  Una bota da vita (A Blast of Life) (Oldoini) (as Battistini, + co-sc)
1990  El Avaro (The Miser) (Cervi) (+ sc); In nome del popolo sovrano (In the Name of the Sovereign People) (Magni) (as Marchese Arquati)
1992  Vacanze di Natale ’91 (Christmas Vacation ’91) (Oldoini) (as Sabino, + co-sc)
1995  Romanzo di un giovane povero (Scola) (as Mr. Bartoloni)

Films as Director:
1966  Fumo di Londra (+ ro as Dante Fontane, co-sc); Scusi, lei favorevole o contrario?; Un italiano in America (+ ro as the father, sc)
1969  Amore mio, aiutami (+ ro as Giovanni Macchiavelli, co-sc)
1973  Polvere di stelle (Stardust) (+ ro as Mimmo Adami, sc)
1974  Finché c’è guerra c’è speranza (While There’s War, There’s Hope) (+ ro as Pietro Ciocca, co-sc)
1976  Il commune senso del pudore (A Common Sense of Modesty) (+ ro, co-sc)
1978  “Le Vacanze intelligenti” ep. of Dove vai in vacanza? (+ ro as Remo, co-sc)
1980  Io e Caterina (Catherine and I) (+ ro as Enrico)
1982  Io so che tu sai che io so (I Know that You Know that I Know) (as Fabio Bonetti); In viaggio con papa (Journey with Papa) (+ ro as Armando Ferretti, co-sc)
1983  Un tassinaio (The Taxi Driver) (+ ro as Pietro, co-sc)
1984  Tutti dentro (Everybody in Jail) (+ ro as Judge Annibale Salvemini)
1987  Un tassinaio a New York (A Taxi Driver in New York) (+ ro as Pietro, co-sc)
1992  Assolto per aver commesso il fatto (Acquitted for Having Committed the Deed) (+ ro as Emilio Garrone)
1994  Nestore l’ultima commissio il fatto (Acquitted for Having Committed the Deed) (+ ro as Gaetano)

Publications
By SORDI: books—

By SORDI: articles—
Interview, in Ecran (Paris), November 1977.
“Alberto Sordi: ‘Sur la scène, ce que je sais faire dans la vie,’” interview with A. Tournès, in Jeune Cinéma (Paris), April/May 1978.
Interview, in Interview (New York), July 1986.

On SORDI: books—
Porro, Maurizio, Alberto Sordi, Milan, 1979.

On SORDI: articles—
Mazzetti, L., “‘People of Talent: Alberto Sordi,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1956.
Cineforum (Bergamo), May 1980.
Cinema Action (Conde-sur-Noireau, France), March 1987.
Comuzio, E., “Chi ha paura di sordi regista?” in Cineforum (Bergamo), January/February 1996.

* * *

Alberto Sordi is probably the most beloved personality of the Italian cinema. He commands a public so varied and a reputation so large that it is surprising he is little known outside his own country. His participation in international productions is also unfortunately rare.

Sordi entered films in 1938, but his comic sensibilities were not used to full advantage until Federico Fellini cast him as the false hero of photo-romances in Lo sceicco bianco and as a weak-willed provincialist in I vitelloni. From then on, Sordi was the king of satirical comedy, specializing in portrayals of inept, foolish, and pompous petite bourgeoisie frightened by progress and change. The films he starred in were far from exceptional, but Sordi’s screen persona was powerful enough to transcend the limitations of his directors and production companies. These socially conscious comedies serve as an excellent barometer of the Italian cultural phenomena during the 1950s. His immense popularity generated the demand for at least six films a year. Un americano a Roma has become a repertory favorite while Un eroe dei nostri tempi serves as a final distillation of his image: cowardly, conformist, and very, very funny.

Sordi’s screen image developed more and more tragic overtones during the 1960s and 1970s, culminating in his masterful performance in Un borghese piccolo piccolo. He plays a man so blindly dedicated to his common son’s vain attempts at social climbing that he becomes a criminal maniac. Since the late 1960s, Sordi has directed and scripted as well as starred in many critically neglected films which have been relatively successful at the box office. One of Sordi’s favorite subjects in his own films is the generation gap, a theme he handles with concern and intelligence.

—Elaine Mancini

SOTHERN, Ann

Nationality: American. Born: Harriette Lake, Valley City, North Dakota, 22 January 1909; mother was a touring concert singer who later worked as a diction and vocal coach in Hollywood. Education: Studied voice and musical composition; attended University of Washington, Seattle. Family: Married 1) bandleader Roger Pryor, 1936 (divorced 1942); 2) socialite William J. Hart (who became the actor Robert Sterling), 1943 (divorced 1949). Career: Bit parts in Hollywood as Harriet Lake, 1927–33; signed contract with Columbia Pictures, 1934 (dropped, 1936); signed contract with RKO, 1936; signed contract with MGM, 1939; appeared in the TV series Private Secretary, 1953–57, The Ann Sothern Show, 1958–61, and as the voice of Gladys Crabtree in My Mother the Car, 1965–66; currently retired. Awards: Golden Globe for “Best TV Show,” for “The Ann Sothern Show,” 1959.

Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Broadway Nights The (Boyle)</td>
<td>(uncredited bit part)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>The Show of Shows (Adolfi)</td>
<td>(uncredited bit part)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>The Song of the West (Enright)</td>
<td>(uncredited bit part)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Hold Everything (Del Ruth)</td>
<td>(uncredited bit part)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Doughboys (Forward March) (Sedgewick)</td>
<td>(as Dancer); Whoopee</td>
<td>(as Chorus Girl)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Broadway Through a Keyhole (Broadway Thru a Keyhole) (Sherman)</td>
<td>(as Dancer); Footlight Parade (Bacon)</td>
<td>(as Chorus Girl)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>The Party’s Over (Lang)</td>
<td>(as Dancer); Melody in Spring</td>
<td>(McLeod)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Hooray for Love (Lang)</td>
<td>(as Pat Thatcher); Grand Exit</td>
<td>(Kenton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>You May Be Next (Rogell)</td>
<td>(as Fay Stevens); Smartest Girl in Town</td>
<td>(Santley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>There Goes the Groom (Santley)</td>
<td>(as Betty Russell); There Goes My Girl</td>
<td>(Holmes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Trade Winds (Garnett)</td>
<td>(as Jean Livingston)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Maisie (Marin)</td>
<td>(as Maisie Ravier); Joe and Ethel Turp Call on the President (Sinclair)</td>
<td>(as Ethel Turp); Hotel for Women</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(as Constance Bennett); Dulcy (Simon)</td>
<td>(as Dulcy Ward); Congo Maisie</td>
<td>(Potter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Dulcy (Simon)</td>
<td>(as Dulcy Ward); Congo Maisie</td>
<td>(Potter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Ringside Maisie (Cash and Curry)</td>
<td>(Marin)</td>
<td>(as Maisie Ravier); Maisie Was a Lady</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Panama Hattie (McLeod)</td>
<td>(as Hattie Maloney); Maisie Gets Her Man</td>
<td>(She Got Her Man)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1943 Three Hearts for Julia (Thorpe) (as Julia Seabrook); Swing Shift Maisie (The Girl in Overalls) (McLeod) (as Maisie Ravier); Cry Havoc (Thorpe) (as Pat Conlin); You, John Jones (LeRoy) (as Mary Jones [uncredited]); Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (as Mary Jones [uncredited]);

1944 Maisie Goes to Reno (You Can't Do That to Me) (Beaumont) (as Maisie Ravier);

1946 Up Goes Maisie (Up She Goes) (Beaumont) (as Maisie Ravier);

1947 Undercover Maisie (Undercover Girl) (Beaumont) (as Maisie Ravier);

1948 April Showers (Kern) (as June Tyme); Words and Music (Taurig) (as Joyce Harmon);

1949 The Judge Steps Out (Indian Summer) (Ingster) (as Peggy); A Letter to Three Wives (Mankiewicz) (as Rita Phipps);

1950 Shadow on the Wall (Jackson) (as Delf Faring); Nancy Goes to Rio (Leonard) (as Frances Elliott);

1953 The Blue Gardenia (Lang) (as Crystal Carpenter);

1954 The Best Man (Schaffner) (as Mrs. Gamadge); Lady in a Cage (Grauman) (as Sade);

1955 Sylvia (Douglas) (as Mrs. Argona);

1956 The Outsider (Ritchie—for TV) (as Mrs. Kozzek);

1958 Chubasco (Miner) (as Angela);

1959 The Great Man’s Whiskers (Leacock—for TV) (as Aunt Margaret); Congratulations, It’s a Boy! (So’s Your Old Man) (Graham) (as Ethel Gaines); Death of Innocence (Wendkos—for TV) (as Annie Lassiot);

1960 The Weekend Nun (Matter of the Heart) (Szwarc—for TV) (as Mother Bonaventure); 1961 The Killing Kind (Harrington) (as Thelma Lambert);

1964 Golden Needles (Chase for the Golden Needles) (Clouse) (as Fenzie);

1975 Crazy Mama (Demene) (as Sheba);

1976 Captains and Kings (Heyes, Reisner—mini, for TV) (as Mrs. Finch);

1978 The Manitou (Girdler) (as Mrs. Karmann);

1980 The Little Dragons (Karate Kids) (Hanson) (as Angel);

1985 A Letter to Three Wives (Elikann—for TV) (as Ma Finney);

1987 The Whales of August (Anderson) (as Tisha Doughty)

Publications

On SOTHERN: books

On Sothern: articles—

* * *

After an itinerant childhood touring with her concert singer mother, Harriette Lake eventually ended up in Hollywood when her mother retired from the concert stage and took a position coaching actors for the new art of talking motion pictures. Commencing with work as an extra in 1927 (as Harriet Lake) the young actress only appeared in a few bit parts before abandoning Hollywood for Broadway. In New York she was cast in a Florenz Ziegfield show, “Smiles,” and appeared in musicals by Rodgers and Hart and Gershwin. In the early 1930s she returned to Hollywood where she became a platinum blond and had her name changed to Ann Sothern under a term contract with Columbia Pictures. A string of B-pictures followed, first at Columbia and then at RKO, until she signed with MGM in 1939 for a film which had originally been conceived for Jean Harlow. The ongoing Maisie films proved as popular as the equally low-budget black-and-white Andy Hardy films, and also served as a proving ground for many MGM players.

Aside from the durable Maisie series— which ran from Maisie in 1939 to Undercover Maisie in 1947—Sothern appeared in a number of slightly higher budget features as well, most notably landing the title role in the film version of Cole Porter’s Broadway success, Panama Hattie, in 1942. While most of the Broadway score was cut from the film version Sothern did get to perform a rowdy version of Porter’s risqué “I’ve Still Got My Health.” A distinctive singer as well as a charming and glamorous comedienne, Sothern also starred in an equally cut-and-paste version of Gershwin’s Lady Be Good in 1941, sensitively performing Kern and Hammerstein’s celebrated “The Last Time I Saw Paris” to a simple piano accompaniment. As Sothern had appeared in Rodgers and Hart’s Hollywood Satire, “‘America’s Sweetheart’ on Broadway in 1931, it was appropriate (and a bit ironic) that she appeared as one of the musical guest stars in MGM’s lavish, if unintentionally satiric Rodgers and Hart biofilm, Words and Music, in 1948.

Aside from the aforementioned musicals and a few good dramatic roles (such as on loan to Warner Bros. for Brother Orchid in 1940, and in MGM’s own Cry Havoc in 1943) Sothern’s 1940s roles were less than career-boosting, centered primarily around the on-going Maisie series. Sothern’s contract with MGM expired in 1947, though she returned to the studio one more time as the glamorous actress who fears daughter Jane Powell is about to become an unwed mother in 1950’s glossy Technicolor musical Nancy Goes to Rio. One of the best roles of Sothern’s career was at 20th Century-Fox when she was cast as one of the three title characters in Joseph L. Mankiewicz’s excellent A Letter To Three Wives in 1948.

A recurring struggle with hepatitis curtailed her career for several years in the early 1950s, but in 1953 she made a dramatic come-back in the noir thriller, The Blue Gardenia, receiving fine critical notices. The Fritz Lang film failed to revive her film career, however, and Sothern became one of the first personalities to transfer Hollywood glamour to the small television screen. After a series based on her popular Maisie character failed to materialize, Sothern starred in Private Secretary, a comedy series about Susie MacNamara, a charmingly meddlesome secretary to a harassed and ineffectual boss played by Don Porter. The show (which commenced in 1953) ran until 1958 when it became The Ann Sothern Show with a different but equally successful comic format. The Sothern shows were collectively nominated for four Emmy awards, in 1955, 1956, 1957, and 1959, and in 1959 the Ann Sothern Show won a Golden Globe Award for “Best TV Show.”

Sothern returned to Hollywood for the first time in over a decade in Lady In A Cage (1964), in which she played the second lead as... a plumpish prostitute opposite a harrassed Olivia de Havilland. The film was part of an unfortunate phase of the “new” post-studio Hollywood when stars such as de Havilland, Joan Crawford, Bette Davis, and others managed to pump a few extra years out of their film careers with a spate of Gothic semi-horror films, a trend which commenced with Whatever Happened To Baby Jane in 1962. But for Sothern 1964 also saw her nominated for another Golden Globe Award (for Best Supporting Actress in a film) for her role in Franklin Schaffner’s film version of Gore Vidal’s Broadway play about Washington politics, The Best Man. A number of minor character roles ensued, in films such as Carroll Baker’s opus, Sylvia (1965), and Chubasco (1968). Sothern achieved minor cult status with her performances as John Savage’s possessive mother in Curtis Harrington’s bizarre The Killing Kind in 1973, and as Sheba in Jonathan Demme’s Crazy Mama in 1975. Intermixed with this film work were miscellaneous TV movie roles, including a bit as Ma Finney in the 1985 TV version of A Letter To Three Wives. While Sothern herself has put down her own acting talents, claiming that “Hollywood sold its stars on good looks and personality buildups. We weren’t really actresses in the true sense. We were just big names—the products of a good publicity department…,” she was a versatile, distinctive, and enduring example of the Hollywood star system at its best, most charming, and hard-working.

—Ross Care

SPACEK, Sissy

Films as Actress:

1970 Trash (Morrissey) (as extra)
1972 Prime Cut (Ritchie) (as Poppy)
1973 Ginger in the Morning (Wiles) (title role); Badlands (Malick) (as Holly Sargis); The Girls of Huntington House (Kjellin—for TV)
1996  Thomas Jefferson: A View from the Mountain (as voice of Martha Jefferson); If These Walls Could Talk (Cher, Savoca—for TV) (as Barbara Barrows); Beyond the Call (Bill) (as Pam O’Brien)
1997  Affliction (Schrader) (as Margie Fogg)
1999  The Straight Story (Lynch) (as Rose); Blast from the Past (Wilson) (as Helen Thomas Webber); The Rage: Carrie 2 (Shea) (archive footage as Carrie White)

Other Films:

1974  Phantom of the Paradise (De Palma) (set dresser)
1977  Death Game (The Seducers) (Traynor) (art director)

Publications

On SPACEK: books—

On SPACEK: articles—

Bandler, Michael J., “‘I’ve Kinda Found My Rhythm’,” in McCall’s, February 1991.

* * *

The Texas accent, which she has retained throughout her career, has allowed Sissy Spacek to play a variety of characters with Southern-American roots. But beyond this geographic similarity, she has been able to submerge her personality in various screen roles, instilling in them a genuine sincerity and bringing to them much subtlety and intelligence and an impressive emotional range. In the initial phase of her career she played victims: troubled teens and subtotently impaired live-in daughter, and gives a sharp, scene-stealing comic performance in Carrie. In the late 1990s found Spacek on screen strictly in character supporting roles. In Affliction, she is Nick Nolte’s girlfriend, but is overshadowed by the riveting presences of Nolte and James Coburn. She fares better in The Straight Story as Richard Farnsworth’s speech-impaired live-in daughter, and gives a sharp, scene-stealing comic performance in Blast from the Past as Brendan Fraser’s loopy, kitchen-puttering mother, a 1960s homemaker who spends 35 years underground in a bomb shelter.

During this period, Spacek has been severely under-used on screen. Nonetheless, she has not lost an iota of her talent.

—Rob Edelman

SPACEY, Kevin

Born: Kevin Spacey Fowler, 26 July 1959, South Orange, New Jersey. Education: Attended Los Angeles Valley College; studied drama at Juilliard School, 1979–81. Career: Appeared on TV series Wiseguy, 1988. Awards: Tony Award for best featured actor in a drama, for Lost in Yonkers, 1991; Academy Award and National Board of Review Award for best supporting actor, The Usual Suspects, 1996; Boston Society of Film Critics Award for best supporting actor, 1997, and London Critics Circle Award for supporting actor of the year, 1998, both for L.A. Confidential; Academy Award and British Academy Award, for best actor in a leading role, London Critics Circle Award, for actor of the year, and Screen Actors Guild Award, for outstanding performance by a cast in a theatrical motion picture.
Kevin Spacey (right) and John Cusack in Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil picture, for American Beauty, 2000. Address: Altman, Greenfield, and Salvaje, 120 West 45th Street, 36th Floor, New York, NY 10036, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1986  Heartburn (Nichols) (as Subway Thief)
1987  Wiseguy (Holcomb, Marshall—for TV) (as Mel Profit); Long Day’s Journey Into Night (Miller—for TV) (as James “Jamie” Tyrone, Jr.)
1988  Rocket Gibraltar (Petrie) (as Dwayne Hanson); Working Girl (Nichols) (as Bob Speck); The Murder of Mary Phagan (Hale—for TV) (as Wes Brent)
1989  Dad (Goldberg) (as Mario); See No Evil, Hear No Evil (Hiller) (as Kirgo)
1990  A Show of Force (Barreto) (as Frank Curtin); When You Remember Me (Winer—for TV) (as Wade); Henry & June (Kaufman) (as Richard Osborn); Fall from Grace (Arthur—for TV) (as Jim Bakker)
1991  Darrow (Coles—for TV) (as Clarence Darrow)
1992  Consenting Adults (Pakula) (as Eddy Otis); Glengarry Glen Ross (Foley) (as John Williamson)
1994  Doomsday Gun (Young—for TV) (as Jim Price); Iron Will (Haid) (as Harry Kingsley); The Ref (Hostile Hostages) (Deme) (as Lloyd Chasseur); Swimming with Sharks (The Boss) (The Buddy Factor) (Huang) (as Buddy Ackerman) (+ pr)
1995  Se7en (Seven) (Fincher) (as John Doe); The Usual Suspects (Singer) (as Verbal Kint); Outbreak (Petersen) (as Casey Schuler)
1996  A Time to Kill (Schumacher) (as Rufus Buckley); Looking for Richard (Pacino) (as Buckingham/Himself)
1997  Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil (Eastwood) (as Jim Williams); L.A. Confidential (Hanson) (as Jack Vincennes)
1998  A Bug’s Life (Lasseter, Stanton) (as voice of Hopper); Hurryburly (Drazan) (as Mickey); The Negotiator (Gray) (as Lt. Chris Sabian); Steve McQueen: The King of Cool (Katz—for TV) (as Narrator)
1999  American Beauty (Mendes) (as Lester Burnham); Forever Hollywood (Glassman, McCarthy) (as Himself); Hitchcock: Shadow of a Genius (Dial H Hitchcock: The Genius Behind the Showman, Dial H for Hitchcock) (Haimes—for TV) (as Narrator); Saturday Night Live: 25th Anniversary (McCarty—for TV) (as Himself); The Big Kahuna (Swanbeck) (as Larry Mann) (+ pr)

2000 Ordinary Decent Criminal (O’Sullivan) (as Michael Lynch); Pay It Forward (Leder)

Other Films:

1996 Albino Alligator (d)

Publications

By SPACEY: articles—

Interview in Time Out (London), no. 1337, 3 April 1996.

On SPACEY: articles—

“Exciting and dangerous though he is,” wrote critic John Lyttle in 1994, “Kevin Spacey will never be a front rank film star: there’s something a mite too mean in that pig-cum-pug face and beefy body.” A cautionary object-lesson in “never say never,” certainly; but the steady rise in Spacey’s status since that judgement attests the actor’s impressive skill in expanding his range, effecting a turnaround in his screen persona that still leaves room for the deep-dyed scuzzbag roles that first made his name. Not since Lee Marvin, perhaps, has a born heavy so persuasively remoulded himself into star material.

With hindsight the potential seems self-evident, right from his screen debut in Mike Nichols’ Heartburn when, orange-haired and satinine, he coolly mugs Meryl Streep’s entire therapy group and briefly galvanises an otherwise vapid movie. In Glengarry Glen Ross, a showpiece of ensemble acting, Spacey’s self-serving office manager astutely holds his own with actors of the calibre of Jack Lemmon and Al Pacino. But his breakthrough year didn’t come until 1995, when three films in quick succession—The Usual Suspects, Seven, and Swimming with Sharks—transformed him from a cult actor treasured by connoisseurs to a major star in the making. He played bad guys in all three films, but in such utterly different registers that any lingering thoughts of typecasting were banished.

With his dark eyes and heavy, sullen jowls Spacey scarcely fitted the Hollywood norm for male leads. “I keep seeing the same people,” he observed of his fellow-actors, “and I don’t look like them. I have to go at it a different way.” His way of going at it involved discarding the stock elements in any role, no matter how cursory or underwritten, in favour of a layered, nuanced performance that suggested complexities swirling beneath the surface, facets yet to be exposed. “If you look at a person through only one lens, then you miss truth,” he once remarked. “People can be many things at many times.” He was referring specifically to The Usual Suspects (and not just to his own part in it), but the principle applies to most of the roles he’s played.

As the parts have grown larger and more substantial with his improving status, this technique has allowed Spacey to find moments when a character reveals hidden elements, not only to us but to himself. Such a flash of self-revelation comes at a key moment in L.A. Confidential when smug “celebrity cop” Jack Vincennes suddenly discovers, to his own dismay, that he has a conscience. Up to this point Spacey has given a preening, dancing performance, as though Vincennes were acknowledging unheard applause on each entry. (He apparently studied several of Dean Martin’s films while preparing for the role.) Then all at once, as this unwonted aspect of himself makes itself known, a stillness grips him and a look of inner-directed bemusement fills his eyes: what is this and how did it get here?

Even as producer-from-hell Buddy Ackerman in Swimming with Sharks, the least complex of his three 1995 bad guys, Spacey adds layers and ambiguities for us to explore: Buddy’s a monster, no question, but we also sense the man putting on his monster act, standing back and savouring his own sadistic riffs. (Does this make him more hateful, or less?) In The Usual Suspects, his tour de force of verbal and physical deviousness lurks at the very heart of the labyrinth. Now slumped in maudlin self-abasement, now taking off on another fluent, meandering yarn, his flickering eyes restlessly sizing up the odds, Spacey gives a performance of such masterly layering let down by Eastwood’s lethargic direction; and his

By way of transition, he tried out a varied spread of good-bad roles. Besides L.A. Confidential there was his gay Southern socialite in Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil, a model of silky underplaying let down by Eastwood’s lethargic direction; and his teaming with Samuel L. Jackson in the police thriller The Negotiator—“I wanted to see if I could do a big commercial action movie that I could live with myself in the morning about.” He also collected rave notices in O’Neill’s The Iceman Cometh on the London stage, and made his directorial debut with Albino Alligator, a psychological heist-gone-wrong drama. His direction was fluent and assured, if a touch under-ambitious.

As Lester Burnham, the shop-soiled protagonist of American Beauty, Spacey was at last given room to show what he could do. For him, it was a link back to his theatre work, where rather than being cast as heavies, “I played men more like Lester—having an internal turmoil with themselves.'" Lifting the role, as ever, well clear of easy caricature, Spacey takes the stock figure of the unhappily-married, midlife-crisis suburban male and imbues him with warmth, urgency, and a self-deprecating hangdog charm. A man who tries to recapture his lost youth out of lust for a 16-year-old schoolgirl could so easily have appeared unsavoury or contemptible; Spacey, without making any crass bids for sympathy, holds us with him right to the film’s final, unlooked-for moment of redemption. Kevin Spacey’s status as a major movie star is now secure. What he does with it should be well worth watching.

—Philip Kemp

STALLONE, Sylvester

Nationality: American. Born: Michael Sylvester Stallone in New York City, 6 July 1946; brother of actor Frank Stallone. Education: Attended Devereux High School, Berwyn, Pennsylvania; an American college in Leysin, Switzerland (also served as athletic coach); University of Miami, Coral Gables. Family: Married 1) Sasha Czack, 1974 (divorced 1985), sons: Sage Moonblood, Seth; 2) the actress Brigitte Nielsen, 1985 (divorced 1987); Jennifer Flavin, 1987, daughters: Sophia Rose, Sistine Rose. Career: Worked as a pizza demonstrator, swept zoo cages, and worked as an usher in New York while trying to get acting parts, late 1960s; made his film debut in Party at Kitty and Studs, 1970; won stardom playing the title role in Rocky, from his own script, 1976; directed his first film, Paradise Alley, 1978. Awards: Honorary César Award, 1992; Best Actor Stockholm Film Festival, for Cop Land, 1997; Academy of Science Fiction, Horror and Fantasy Film Lifetime Achievement Award, 1997. Agent: c/o William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1970 The Italian Stallion (Party at Kitty and Studs) (Milton Lewis and Morton Lewis) (as Stud)
1971 Bananas (Woody Allen) (as mugger)
1974 No Place to Hide (Shaftel) (as Jerry); The Prisoner of Second Avenue (Frank) (as youth in park); The Lords of Flatbush (Verona and Davidson, + co-sc) (as Stanley)
1975 Farewell My Lovely (Richards) (as Kelly/Jonnie); Capone (Carver) (as Frank Nitti); Death Race 2000 (Bartel) (as ‘‘Machine Gun’’ Joe Vitebo); Rebel (Schnitzer) (as Jerry Savage)
1976 Rocky (Avildsen) (as Rocky Balboa, + sc); Cannonball (Carquake) (Bartel) (cameo)
1978 F.I.S.T. (Jewison) (as Johnny Kovak, + co-sc)
1981 Victory (Escape to Victory) (Huston) (as Robert Hatch); Nighthawks (Malmuth) (as Deke DeSilva)
1982 First Blood (Kotcheff) (as John Rambo, + co-sc)
1984 Rhinestone (Clark) (as Nick, + co-sc)
1985 Rambo: First Blood, Part II (Cosmatos) (as John Rambo, + co-sc)
1986 Cobra (Cosmatos) (as Marion Cobretti, + co-sc); Over the Top (Golan) (as Lincoln Hawk, + co-sc)
1988 Rambo III (MacDonald) (title role, + co-sc)
1989 Lock Up (Flynn) (as Frank Leone); Tango and Cash (Konchalovsky) (as Ray Tango)
1990 Rocky V (Avildsen) (title role, + sc)
1991 Oscar (Landis) (as Angelo ‘‘Snaps’’ Provolone)
1992 Stop! Or My Mom Will Shoot (Spottswoode) (as Sgt. Joe Bomowski)
1993 Cliffhanger (Harlin) (as Gabe Walker, + sc); Demolition Man (Brambilla) (as Sgt. John Spartan)
1994 The Specialist (Losa) (as Ray Quick); A Century of Cinema (Thomas) (doc) (as himself)
1995 Judge Dredd (Cannon) (title role); Assassins (Richard Donner) (as Robert Rath); Your Studio and You (Parker) (short) (as himself)
1996 Daylight (Cohen) (as Kit Latura)
1997 The Good Life (Harrison); An Alan Smithee Film: Burn Hollywood Burn (Hiller, Smithee) (as himself); Cop Land (Mangold) (as Sheriff Freddy Hefflin)
1998 Antz (Darnell, Guterman) (as voice of Weaver)
2000 Get Carter (Kay) (as Jack Carter)
2001 Eye See You (Gillespie) (as Jake Malloy)

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1978 Paradise Alley (+ ro as Cosmo Carboni)
1979 Rocky II (+ title ro)
1982 Rocky III (+ title ro)
1983 Staying Alive (co-sc, + co-pr)
1985 Rocky IV (+ title ro)

Publications

By STALLONE: books—

By STALLONE: articles—

‘‘The Underdog Triumphs!,’’ interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), October 1994.
‘‘My Daughter’s Health is the Best Christmas Gift I Could Have,’’ interview with Andrew Duncan, in Radio Times (London), December 21-January 3, 1996–97.

On STALLONE: books—

On STALLONE: articles—

Pally, M., ‘‘Red Faces,’’ in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1986.
Brauerhoch, A., ‘‘Glanz und Elend der Muskelmänner,’’ in Frauen und Film (Frankfurt), August 1986.
Stauth, Cameron, ‘‘Requiem for a Heavyweight,’’ in American Film (New York), January 1990.
Crawley, T., ‘‘The End of Stallone’s Rocky Road,’’ in Film Monthly (Berghamsted, England), February 1991.

Regardless of how one may feel about Sylvester Stallone and what he represents, he is still a bankable star of the first magnitude. With Arnold Schwarzenegger, he is the preeminent action-movie star of his era, an actor whose mere presence in films with such generic titles as Cobra, Cliffhanger, The Specialist, Demolition Man, and Judge Dredd signals to audiences a certain kind of contemporary movie: mindlessly violent action films where character development is secondary to special effects, gushing blood, and high body counts. Stallone’s appeal in such films is based on a combination of his brawn and the physical heroics his character undergoes, rather than any acting ability. Often, Stallone grunts his way through his films, having been given hardly any dialog lasting beyond a few sentences at a time. But then, his characters are meant to be men of action, rather than words.

This is not to say that Stallone has made flawless career choices. He has involved himself in movies that have flopped. In F.I.S.T., a box-office failure (which is nonetheless one of his better films), he had one of his more ambitious roles as a Jimmy Hoffa-like labor leader. Not all of his action films have been successes, either. One example is Judge Dredd, a film that on paper seemed a sure-fire hit but which disappointed at the box office. And for the most part, he has met disaster whenever taking a role in a non-action film. Rhinestone, for example, starred him with Dolly Parton as a New York cabdriver who becomes a hillbilly singer. As with most Stallone films, it earned dreadful reviews, but in this case audiences stayed away en masse. Stallone’s failures when veering from tried-and-true formulas are what separates him from Schwarzenegger, who has worked successfully in other film genres, even to the point of self-parody (as in Twins and Junior).

Stallone’s most popular and enduring characters remain boxer Rocky Balboa and Vietnam-veteran John Rambo; he appeared in each role in a separate, hugely successful film series. Indeed, it was a combination of his performance as the lovable proletarian lug Rocky Balboa, compounded by the real-life, rags-to-riches story of how the film came to movie screens, which earned Stallone his initial mass fame. Stallone was just another struggling, unbankable actor, playing bit parts and featured roles as hoods (in, respectively, Bananas and The Lords of Flatbush), when he penned the Rocky screenplay. In a shrewd move, he refused to sell the script unless he was allowed to play the title role. He won out, and in so doing became one of Hollywood’s most well-publicized success stories and an American myth come to life.

In the great American tradition, the characters of Rocky Balboa and John Rambo reflect the idealized triumph of the individual, and herein lies the essence of their appeal. At the same time, politics also plays no small part in the Rocky-Rambo films. Rocky Balboa may have started out as an endearing pug, a heartfelt symbol of the common man who lives out the fantasies of millions of other common men in that he gets his one shot at fame by fighting for the world championship. But as the story of Rocky continued through its sequels, Rocky literally wraps himself in the American flag. John Rambo, meanwhile, rises out of the ashes of the Vietnam folly. He is a bigger-than-life, thoroughly indestructible superhero—the good guy who can never, ever be defeated, and the good guy that America wishes itself to be. As Rambo battles the yellow and red perils (in Rambo: First Blood, Part II and Rambo III), American males are meant to fantasize about filling his shoes, just as they fantasize about filling the shoes of a Don Mattingly or Dan Marino.

The Rambo films in particular are throwbacks to the 1950s, as a simpler age. America was then the self-proclaimed leader of the free world. Good and bad were clearly defined, and war movies were popular because they reenacted battles in conflicts from which the United States emerged victorious. So for the Rambo films to have been popular, they must portray a soldier as a winner in battle—even if the facts tell you that the war is lost. First Blood, the initial Rambo film, focuses on the character’s status as a Vietnam veteran. Next, he returns to the Asian jungle to liberate MIAs and rewrite the Vietnam history book. Then, he finds a new war. This one may be set in Afghanistan, but it is against the usual enemy: ludicrous commie-miscreant caricatures who claim that they ‘‘try to be civilized’’ as they beat unconscious their red, white, and blue-blooded foes. But after being exposed to a strong dose of Rambo, they are destined to fall like cattle rustlers in a John Wayne Western. Indeed, in the 1980s, Stallone came to replace Wayne as the celluloid symbol of love-it-or-leave-it, hit-first-and-ask-questions-later conservatism.

In effect, in his subsequent big-budget action extravaganzas, Stallone has played thinly disguised Rambo variations. In the trailer for The Specialist, viewers are told all they need to know about Stallone’s character when informed that ‘‘the government taught him to kill’’—a description that also holds true for John Rambo. In Nighthawks, Stallone plays a stalwart New York City cop who learned his killing skills—where else?—on the battlefields of Southeast Asia.

Now well into his fifties, Stallone has not yet abandoned playing action heroes. However, he has proven that he can be up to the challenge when assigned a multi-dimensional dramatic role. He offers a sensitive performance in Cop Land, playing the antithesis of the standard, brawny, and cartoonish Stallone character: a paunchy, ineffectual sheriff who is mocked by the rough, tough, ‘‘real’’ (not to mention corrupt) lawmen who work in New York City but reside in his New Jersey town. Cop Land is of course the rare exception, rather than the rule, for Stallone. Yet however you view him, it cannot be denied that he has made his mark as a late-twentieth-century celluloid icon. His screen persona should not easily be dismissed, just as his pop-cultural success cannot be ignored.

—James M. Welsh, updated by Rob Edelman

STAMP, Terence

Nationality: British. Born: Terence Henry Stamp in Stepney, London, England, 22 July 1938. Education: Attended the Webber-Douglas Drama School, London. Career: Stage actor; role in Why the Chicken; 1962—film debut in title role in Billy Budd; later stage roles in Dracula, The Lady from the Sea, and Alfie; 1980s—published three volumes of autobiography. Awards: Best Actor, Cannes Festival, for The Collector, 1965; Seattle International Film Festival Golden
Space Needle Award for Best Actor, for The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert, 1994; Golden Satellite Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture, Drama, for The Limey, 1999.
Address: c/o Markham and Froggatt, 4 Windmill St, London W1,
England Agent: IFA Talent Agency, 8730 Sunset Boulevard, Suite
490, Los Angeles, CA 90069, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1962 Billy Budd (Ustinov) (title role); Term of Trial (Glennville) (as Mitchell)
1965 The Collector (Wyler) (as Freddie Clegg)
1966 Modesty Blaise (Losey) (as Willie Garvin)
1967 Far from the Madding Crowd (Schlesinger) (as Sgt. Troy);
Poor Cow (Loach) (as Dave) 1968 ‘‘Toby Dammit’’ ep. of Histoires extraordinaires (Spirts of the Dead) (Fellini) (title role); Blue (Narizzano) (title role);
Teorema (Theorum) (Pasolini) (as the visitor)
1970 The Mind of Mr. Soames (Cooke) (as John Soames)
1971 Una stagione all’ inferno (Risi)
1974 Hu Man (Lapperrousaz)
1976 Strip-Tease (Lorente); La divina creatura (The Divine Nymph)
(Griffi) (as Duke Daniele di Bagnasco
1978 The Thief of Bagdad (Clive Donner—for TV) (as Wazir Jaudur); Superman (Richard Donner) (as Gen. Zod)
1979 Ano non amo (I Love You, I Love You Not) (Balducci); Meetings with Remarkable Men (Peter Brook) (as Prince Lubovedsky)
1980  Misterio en la isla de los monstruos (Monster Island; Mystery of Monster Island) (Piquer) (as Taskinar); Superman II (Lester) (as Gen. Zod)
1982  Morte in Vaticano (Death in the Vatican) (Aliprandi)
1983  Bloody Chamber (Lewin); Chess Game (Tucker—for TV)
1984  The Hit (Fears) (as Willie Parker); The Company of Wolves (Jordan)
1986  Had (Lokkeberg) (as Edward, an artist); Legal Eagles (Reitman) (as Victor Taft); Link (Franklin) (as Dr. Steven Philip); Directed by William Wyler (Slesin—doc) (as himself)
1987  The Sicilian (Cimino) (as Prince Borsa); Wall Street (Stone) (as Sir Larry Wildman)
1988  Alien Nation (Baker) (as William Harcourt); Young Guns (Cain) (as John Henry Tunstall)
1990  Genuine Risk (Voss) (as Paul Hellwart)
1991  Beltenebros (Prince of Shadows) (Pilar Miro) (as Darman)
1993  The Real McCoy (Mulcahy) (as Jack Schmidt); The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert (Elliott) (as Bernadette)
1996  Tire a part (Bernard Rapp) (Lamb)
1997  Bliss (Young) (as Baltazar Vincenza)
1998  Kiss the Sky (Young) (as Kozen); Love Walked In (Juan José Campanella) (as Fred Moore)
1999  The Limey (Soderbergh) (as Wilson); Star Wars: Episode I—the Phantom Menace (Lucas) (as Chancellor Finis Valorum); Bowfinger (Oz) (as Terry Stricter)
2000  Red Planet (Hoffman) (as Dr. Bud Chantillas)

Films as Director:

1990  Stranger in the House (+ sc, ro)

Publications

By STAMP: books—

By STAMP: articles—

On STAMP: article—

Hibbert, Tom, article in Empire (London), no. 61, 1994.

*   *   *

Enjoying a late-1990s mini-renaissance in his film career, Terence Stamp is unlikely to find a more apt valedictory role than the part of vengeful Cockney rogue Wilson in The Limey. Out to get the shady American music impresario he blames for his daughter’s death, the character is far more than just another vigilante “hero,” drawing on Stamp’s own background and a forceful star persona that has shone, with varying degrees of brightness, for nearly forty years. It says something about the erratic progress of Stamp’s career that this justly acclaimed performance came six years after his last high profile film. Following a lengthy period in which he largely disappeared from the consciousness of moviegoers, Stamp served notice that he was still an actor of considerable range with his eye-opening star turn in The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert. Stamp had not exactly been absent from movie screens, but he was commanding neither memorable featured parts nor the prestige starring roles he had won earlier in his career. For instance, when one thinks of Wall Street, in which he had a supporting role, one thinks of Oliver Stone, Michael Douglas and Charlie Sheen. When one thinks of Young Guns—in which Stamp has one of his better later-career roles as a British gentleman who becomes mentor to six youthful hooligans in the American West—one thinks of Sheen, Emilio Estevez, Lou Diamond Phillips, and Kiefer Sutherland, whose combined thespian efforts looked pretty thin by comparison. When one thinks of Star Wars: Episode I—the Phantom Menace, which wastes Stamp in a brief cameo, one merely hopes he was paid well.

Back in the 1960s, his decade of stardom, Stamp established himself with his Oscar-nominated supporting performance as the ingenuous, ill-fated seaman in Ustinov’s Billy Budd. This success led to his being cast with varying degrees of success in high-profile, prestige productions. Stamp’s best roles were complex, enigmatic ones. In Poor Cow, he is impressive as the petty criminal whose tenderness towards Carol White is countered by his vicious beating of an elderly victim. He gave his finest star performances in The Collector, playing a warped young amateur lepidopterist who kidnaps an art student, hoping that during her imprisonment she will come to love him; the Fellini-directed segment of the three-part * Spirits of the Dead*, a surreal adaptation of an Edgar Allan Poe story in which Stamp is cast as a cynical, alcoholic, ill-fated movie star; and Teorema, the story of a mysterious, ambiguous figure who disrupts and transforms the lives of a bourgeois Italian family. While the latter is very much the creation of its writer-director, Pier Paolo Pasolini, the film gains immeasurably from Stamp’s imposing presence and otherworldly features. His lesser roles of the period came in Far from the Madding Crowd, in which he has little to do but look good in a cavalry uniform and wave his saber for the benefit of Julie Christie, and the desperately ‘pop’ comic-strip film Modesty Blaise, in which he is stranded as Monica Vitti’s sidekick. Lead roles in the sleeper hits Alfie—which Stamp offered to play for free—and Blow Up eluded him, going instead to relative unknowns Michael Caine and David Hemmings.
In the 1970s and 1980s, Stamp made the transition from leading man to supporting actor. Among his strongest roles were the hunted ex-con in The Hit and the thoroughly evil General Zod in Superman II (also seen briefly in Superman). The character of General Zod may have been one-dimensional, but Stamp is highly effective as he adopts a calm, detached attitude to his acts of destruction. But for the most part, his roles (as well as films) remained undistinguished until, in a brilliant bit of casting, he signed on to play his highest-profile character in years: Bernadette, the dignified yet vulnerable transsexual in Priscilla. The film is a funny, moving, sleeper hit comedy in which Stamp is one-third of a drag queen act touring the Australian provinces. Bernadette is a risky character for any actor, one which easily might have degenerated into a campy caricature. But the actor’s striking features and sheer presence lent much to the role, which ends up a sensational star turn—and, perhaps, Stamp’s most memorable screen characterization.

In the 1990s, The Limey returns to Stamp’s sixties roots in the most literal way possible, utilizing clips from Poor Cow to depict the younger Wilson. Playing opposite fellow 1960s icon Peter Fonda, Stamp is both amusing and poignant as the East End Englishman in L.A., his deliberately impenetrable rhyming slang masking both resilience and resourcefulness. While Dave in Poor Cow was amoral and brutal underneath his “charmer” exterior, the equally tough Wilson is a man of principle, sharing Bernadette’s sense of battered integrity, if not her taste in high fashion.

—Daniel O’Brien, with previous updates by Rob Edelman

STANWYCK, Barbara

Nationality: American. Born: Ruby Stevens in Brooklyn, New York, 16 July 1907. Education: Attended elementary schools in Brooklyn. Family: Married 1) Frank Fay, 1928 (divorced 1935); 2) the actor Robert Taylor, 1939 (divorced 1951). Career: Working girl from early age; wrapper in a department store, telephone operator, pattern cutter, file clerk; then dancer in night clubs; 1923—first stage appearance in musical comedy; toured with Ziegfeld Follies of 1923; 1926—in dramatic role in stage play The Noose; 1927—film debut in Broadway Nights; 1931—contract with Warner Brothers; 1935—freelance actress; 1936—began radio acting with Lux Radio Theatre; 1956—formed Barwyk Corporation production company; 1960–61—host of TV series The Barbara Stanwyck Show; and in The Big Valley series, 1965–69; 1980s—in TV mini-series The Thorn Birds, 1983, and 1985–86 in series The Colbys. Awards: Co-recipient, Special Jury Prize for Ensemble Acting, Venice Festival, for Executive Suite, 1954; Special Academy Award, for “superlative creativity and unique contribution to the art of screen acting,” 1981. Died: In Santa Monica, California, 20 January 1990.

Films as Actress:

1927 Broadway Nights (Boyle) (as dancer)
1929 The Locked Door (Fitzmaurice) (as Ann Carter); Mexicali Rose (Kenton) (title role)
1930 Ladies of Leisure (Capra) (as Kay Arnold)
1931 Illicit (Mayo) (as Anne Vincent); Ten Cents a Dance (Barrymore) (as Barbara O’Neill); Night Nurse (Wellman)
1932 Forbidden (Capra) (as Lulu Smith); Shopworn (Grinde) (as Kitty Lane); So Big (Wellman) (as Selina Peak Dejong); The Purchase Price (Wellman) (as Joan Gordon)
1933 The Bitter Tea of General Yen (Capra) (as Megan Davis); Ladies They Talk About (Bretherton) (as Nan Taylor); Baby Face (Green) (as Lily Powers); Ever in My Heart (Mayo) (as Mary Archer)
1934 Gambling Lady (Mayo) (as Lady Lee); A Lost Lady (Green) (as Marian Ormsby)
1935 The Secret Bride (Dieterle) (as Ruth Vincent); The Woman in Red (Florey) (as Shelby Barrett); Red Salute (Lanfield) (as Drue Van Allen); Annie Oakley (Stevens) (title role)
1936 A Message to Garcia (George Marshall) (as Raphaelita Maderos); The Bride Walks Out (Jason) (as Carolyn Martin); His Brother’s Wife (Van Dyke) (as Rita Wilson); Banjo on My Knee (Cromwell) (as Pearl Holley); The Plough and the Stars (Ford) (as Nora Citheroe)
1937 Interns Can’t Take Money (Santell) (as Janet Haley); This Is My Affair (Seiter) (as Lil Duryea); Stella Dallas (King Vidor) (title role); Breakfast for Two (Santell) (as Valentine Ransom)
1938 Always Goodbye (Lanfield) (as Margot Weston); The Mad Miss Manton (Jason) (title role)
1939 Union Pacific (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Mollie Monahan); Golden Boy (Mamoulian) (as Lorna Moon)
1940 Remember the Night (Leisen) (as Lee Leander)

---

!Barbara Stanwyck

---

[1151]
1941  The Lady Eve (Preston Sturges) (as Jean Harrington); Meet John Doe (Capra) (as Ann Mitchell); You Belong to Me (Ruggles) (as Helen Hunt); Ball of Fire (Hawks) (as Sugarpuss O’Shea)

1942  The Great Man’s Lady (Wellman) (as Hannah Sempler); The Gay Sisters (Rapper) (as Diana Gaylord)

1943  Lady of Burlesque (Wellman) (as Dixie Daisy); Flesh and Fantasy (DuVivier) (as Joan Stanley)

1944  Double Indemnity (Wilders) (as Phyllis Dietrichson); Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as herself)

1945  Christmas in Connecticut (Godfrey) (as Elizabeth Lane)

1946  My Reputation (Bernhardt) (as Jessica Drummond); The Bride Wore Boots (Pichel) (as Sally Warren); The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Milestone) (title role); California(Farrow) (as Lily Bishop)

1947  The Two Mrs. Carrrolls (Godfrey) (as Sally Morton Carroll); The Other Half (de Toth) (as Karen Duncan); Cry Wolf (Godfrey) (as Sandra Marshall); Variety Girl (George Marshall) (as herself)

1948  B. F.’s Daughter (Leonard) (as Polly Fulton); Sorry, Wrong Number (Litvak) (as Leona Stevenson)

1949  The Lady Gamblers (Gordon) (as Joan Boothe); East Side, West Side (LeRoy) (as Jessie Brown)

1950  The File on Thelma Jordan (Siodmak) (title role); No Man of Her Own (Leisen) (as Helen Ferguson); The Furies (Anthony Mann) (as Vince Jeffords); To Please a Lady (Brown) (as Regina Forbes)

1951  The Man with a Cloak (Markle) (as Lorna Bounty)

1952  Clash by Night (Fritz Lang) (as Mae Doyle)

1953  Jeopardy (Sturges) (as Helen Stilwin); Titanic (Negulesco) (as Julia Sturges); All I Desire (Sirk) (as Naomi Murdoch); The Moonlighter (Rowland) (as Rela); Blowing Wild (Fregonese) (as Marina)

1954  Executive Suite (Wise) (as Julie Tredway); Cattle Queen of Montana (Dwan) (as Sierra Nevada Jones)

1955  The Violent Men (Maté) (as Martha Wilkinson); Escape to Burma (Dwan) (as Gwen Moore)

1956  There’s Always Tomorrow (Sirk) (as Norma Miller); The Maverick Queen (Kane) (as Kit Banion); These Wilder Years (Rowland) (as Ann Dempster)

1957  Crime of Passion (Oswald) (as Kathy); Trooper Hook (Warren) (as Corna); Forty Guns (Fuller) (as Jessica Drummond)

1962  Walk on the Wild Side (Dmytryk) (as Jo Courtney)

1964  Roustabout (Rich) (as Maggie Morgan)

1965  The Night Walker (Castle) (as Irene Trent)

1970  The House That Wouldn’t Die (Llewellyn—for TV) (as Ruth Bennett)

1971  A Taste of Evil (Llewellyn—for TV) (as Miriam Jennings)

1973  The Letters (Nelson—for TV) (as Geraldine Parkington)

Publications

By STANWYCK: articles—

On STANWYCK: books—

On STANWYCK: articles—

Murphy, Kathleen, “Farewell My Lovelies,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1990.

* * *

Of strong and resolute character, the Stanwyck woman seemed equal to whatever life might bring her, and the result was that there was little in the way of struggle, corruption, sacrifice, hysteria, or fun that Barbara Stanwyck did not experience and convey with startling honesty.

It was Frank Capra who first recognized and elicited Stanwyck’s ability to render emotion before it has been rationalized or repressed. Under his direction, she gave her most sensual performance in The Bitter Tea of General Yen as a straight-laced, yet fervent missionary who abducts her. The expected changes of heart that Capra’s populist comedies would dramatize were first and more subtly worked out in his films with the young, pliant Stanwyck. Capra brought out the moral passion lurking in Stanwyck’s intensity, the counterpart to the talent for evil that her film noir roles would later explore.

Stanwyck’s capacity for self-transfiguration, which Capra put to ironic use in his tale of a compromised female evangelist, The Miracle Woman, has been overlooked by even her most sympathetic critics, but the last shot of Stella Dallas proclaims and glorifies it. Even in less high-toned films about female self-betterment such as Shopworn and Capra’s Ladies of Leisure, Stanwyck showed undisguised feeling for the dreams, often understandably shabby, dreamt by those with little hope and no faith except in themselves.

Her comic heroines never quite forget their relation to their hard-boiled, often manhandled cousins. Even when presented the assured blessings of comic existence, Stanwyck never trusts to luck alone;
romantic kismet, in particular, is notoriously unreliable. In The Lady Eve she spends the first half of the film falling for her chosen dupe, the irresistibly naive Henry Fonda, the second half revenging herself on him for not seeing that good girls are not as good as they look and bad girls not as bad as he thinks. She is equally convincing in admitting her comic heroines never quite forget their relation to their hard-boiled, often manhandled cousins. Even when presented the assured blessings of comic existence, Stanwyck never trusts to luck alone;
romantic kismet, in particular, is notoriously unreliable. In The Lady Eve she spends the first half of the film falling for her chosen dupe, the irresistibly naive Henry Fonda, the second half revenging herself on him for not seeing that good girls are not as good as they look and bad girls not as bad as he thinks. She is equally convincing in admitting for not seeing that good girls are not as good as they look and bad girls not as bad as he thinks. She is equally convincing in admitting the limits of her wisdom, as in her savvy, yet tenderhearted performance as the newspaperwoman who pleads for the populist idealism she once scoffed at in Meet John Doe.

In the late 1940s and through the 1950s, Stanwyck was called upon to exhibit and endure a battery of female neuroses—invalidism, masochism, helpless addiction, and baffled desire—taking on such parts as the hysterick in Sorry, Wrong Number and a gambler beaten within an inch of her life in The Lady Gambles. Even when possessed of power she would turn it against herself, nursing her impatient hatred for the tycoon who rejected her in Executive Suite or, more strikingly, concealing a murderous hatred and even more fatal love in The Strange Love of Martha Ivers. But she also struggled against quieter forms of desperation, nowhere with more dignity than in two of Douglas Sirk’s less gaudy melodramas of life desiccated by convention, All I Desire and There’s Always Tomorrow. These years touched more boldly, too, on a sexual ambiguity that could shadow her female fatales and self-reliant frontier women. Her harsh blend in Double Indemnity intensifies rather than interrupts the relationship between Fred McMurray’s Walter and Edward G. Robinson’s Keyes, giving a peculiar suggestion to the desperation in Walter’s passion for her.

By the time of Walk on the Wild Side she unabashedly plays a lesbian madam.

Fearless in whatever psychic territory she was asked to explore, she braved the wilds of the first patent Freudian Western, The Furies, and in old age was mortified by sexual desire in The Thorn Birds. Whether playing a struggling working girl, burlesque queen, madcap heiress, sassy gun moll, doting mother, lonely career woman, restless wife, murderous adulteress, or rugged frontier woman,
Stanwyck could gaze into the heart of her character and never blink.

—Arthur Nolletti Jr., updated by Maria DiBattista

STEIGER, Rod

Nationality: American. Born: Rodney Stephen Steiger in Westhampton, Long Island, New York, 14 April 1925. Education:
Attended public schools in Irvington, Bloomfield, and Newark, New Jersey; studied acting at the New School for Social Research, New York, two years. Military Service: U.S. Navy, 1941–45. Family: Married 1) the actress Sally Gracie, 1952 (divorced 1958); 2) the actress Claire Bloom, 1959 (divorced 1969), daughter: Anna Justine;
3) Sherry Nelson, 1973 (divorced 1979); 4) Paula Ellis, 1986 (divorced 1997). Career: 1947—actor on television, and studied acting at the Dramatic Workshop and the Actors Studio, New York; stage debut in The Trial of Mary Dugan; 1951—Broadway debut in Night
Music; film debut in Teresa; 1959—on Broadway in Rasmohon;
1977—in TV mini-series Jesus of Nazareth, Hollywood Wives, 1985,
Passion and Paradise, 1989, Sinatra, 1992, Armistead Maupin’s Tales of the City, 1994, and Tom Clancy’s Op Center, 1995. Awards:
Best Actor, Berlin Festival, Best Foreign Actor, British Academy, for
The Pawnbroker, 1965; Best Actor Academy Award, Best Actor,
New York Film Critics, and Best Foreign Actor, British Academy, for
In the Heat of the Night, 1967. Agent: Gold/Marshak & Associates, 3500 West Olive Avenue, Burbank, CA 91505–5320, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1951 Teresa (Zinnemann) (as Frank)
1954 On the Waterfront (Kazan) (as Charley Malloy)
1955 The Big Knife (Aldrich) (as Stanley Hoff); The Court Martial of Billy Mitchell (One-Man Mutiny) (Preminger) (as Maj.
Allan Gullion); Oklahoma! (Zinnemann) (as Judd Fry)
1956 Jubal (Daves) (as Pinky); The Harder They Fall (Robson)
(as Nick Benko); Back from Eternity (Zinnemann) (as Vasquez)
1957 Run of the Arrow (Fuller) (as O’Meara); Across the Bridge
(Annakin) (as Carl Schaffner); The Unholy Wife (Farrow)
(as Paul Hochen)
1958 Cry Terror (Andrew L. Stone) (as Paul Hoplin)
1959 Al Capone (Wilson) (title role)
1960 Seven Thieves (Hathaway) (as Paul)
1961 The Mark (Guy Green) (as Dr. Edmund McNally); The World in My Pocket (On Friday at Eleven; Vendredi 13 Heures)
(Rakoff) (as Frank Morgan)
1962 Convicts Four (Kaufman) (as Tiptoes); The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Wicki, and Oswald) (as destroyer commander); Thirteen West Street (Leacock) (as Det. Sgt.
Koleski)
1963 La mani sulla citta (Hands over the City) (Rosi)
1964 Gli indifferenti (A Time of Indifference) (Maselli) (as Leo)
1965 The Loved One (Richardson) (as Mr. Joyboy); E venne un uomo (And There Came a Man; A Man Named John) (Olmi) (as the intermediary); The Pawnbroker (Lumet) (as Sol Nazerman); Doctor Zhivago (Lean) (as Komarovsky)
1967 In the Heat of the Night (Jewison) (as Bill Gillespie); La ragazza e il generale (The Girl and the General) (Campanile) (as the general)
1968 The Sergeant (Flynn) (as Sgt. Albert Callan); No Way to Treat a Lady (Smyth) (as Christopher Gill)
1969 The Illustrated Man (Smight) (as Carl); Three into Two Won’t Go (Hall) (as Steve Howard)
1970 Waterloo (Bondarchuk) (as Napoleon)
1971 Happy Birthday, Wanda June (Robson) (as Harold Ryan)
1972 Glii la testa (Duck, You Sucker!; A Fistful of Dynamite)
(Leone) (as Juan Miranda)
1973 The Lolly-Madonna War (Lolly Madonna XXX) (Sarafian)
as Laban Feather); A proposito Lucky Luciano (Re: Lucky Luciano; Lucky Luciano) (Rosi) (as Gene Giannini)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title and Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Mussolini: ultimo atto (The Last Four Days; Last Days of Mussolini) (Lizzani) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Hennessy (Sharp) (title role); Les Innocents aux mains sales (Dirty Hands) (Chabrol) (as Louis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>W. C. Fields and Me (Hiller) (as W. C. Fields)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>The Amityville Horror (Rosenberg) (as Father Delaney); Love and Bullets (Rosenberg) (as Joe Bomposa); Breakthrough (Sargent Steiner) (McLagen) (as Gen. Webster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The Lucky Star (Fischer) (as Col. Gluck); Klondike Fever (Jack London’s Klondike Fever) (Carter) (as Soapy Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Lion of the Desert (Omar Mukhtar) (Akkad—produced in 1979) (as Mussolini); Cattle Annie and Little Brittenes (Johnson) (as Tilghman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>The Magic Mountain (Geissendörfer); The Chosen (Kagan) (as Reb Saunders)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Cook and Peary: The Race to the North Pole (Day—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Naked Face (Forbes) (as Lt. McCreavey); The Glory Boys (Ferguson—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Sword of Gideon (Anderson—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Catch the Heat (Feel the Heat) (Silberg) (as Jason Hannibal); The Kindred (Obrow) (as Dr. Philip Lloyd)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>American Gothic (Hough) (as Pa); Desperado: Avalanche at Devil’s Ridge (Compton—for TV) (as Silas Slaten)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Try This One for Size (Hamilton); The January Man (O’Connor) (as Mayor Eamon Flynn); That Summer of White Roses (Grlic) (as Martin); The Exiles (Kaplan—doc) (as himself); Passion in Paradise (Hart—for TV) (as Sir Harry Oakes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>The Ballad of the Sad Café (Callow) (as the Reverend Willin); In the Line of Duty: Manhunt in the Dakotas (Midnight Murders) (Lowry—for TV) (as Gordon Kahl); Men of Respect (Reilly) (as Charlie D’Amico)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>The Player (Altman) (as himself); Guilty as Charged (Irvin) (as Ben Kallin); Lincoln (Kunhardt—for TV) (as voice of Gen. Grant)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>The Neighbor (Gibbons) (as Myron Hatch); Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (as voice)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>The Last Tattoo (John Reid) (as Major Gen. Frank); The Specialist (Llosa) (as Joe Leon); Black Water (Tennessee Nights) (Gessner) (as Judge Prescott); Seven Sundays (Tachella) (as Benjamin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Columbo: Strange Bedfellows (for TV) (as Vincenzo Fortelli); In Pursuit of Honor (Olin—for TV) (as Col. Owen Stuart); Choices of the Heart: The Margaret Sanger Story (Paul Shapiro—for TV) (as Anthony Comstock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Mars Attacks! (Tim Burton) (as Gen. Decker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>The Real Thing (Merendino) (as Victor); The Kid (Hamilton) (as Harry Sloan); Animals (Di Jiacomo); Shiloh</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Rod Steiger in Waterloo
(Rosenbloom) (as Doc Wallace); Truth or Consequences, N.M. (Kiefer Sutherland) (as Tony Vago); Incognito (Badham) (as Milton A. Donovan)

1998 Modern Vampyres (Elftman) (as Dr. Frederick Van Helsing); Body and Soul (as Johnny Ticotin); Legacy (T.J. Scott)

1999 Shiloh 2: Shiloh Season (Tung) (as Doc Wallace); The Last Producer (Reynolds); The Hurricane (Jewison); End of Days (Hyams) (as Father Kovak); Crazy in Alabama (Banderas) (as Judge Mead)

2000 The Last Producer (Burt Reynolds)

Publications

By STEIGER: articles—

On STEIGER: articles—

* * *

In reexamining Steiger’s riveting tour de force as tortured Sol Nazerman in The Pawnbroker, one searches for signs of the overstatement and histrionic effluvia that have marred much of Steiger’s poststardom work. Catching him as a neo-Nazi posing as a garment district merchant on a Commish television movie or dropping one’s jaw at his Hispanic crime king in The Specialist, one is embarrassed by a personification of Method Acting’s worst excesses. Suiting up with various nationalities that never fit comfortably over his stolid Americaness, stocky Steiger now seems like a poor country cousin to world traveler Anthony Quinn, only Quinn wisely uses the same accent no matter what country’s spirit he is suppose to be embodying. Steiger tries to sound different but registers as a party bore doing imitations.

Creating a sensation with that semi-improvised taxicab scene from On the Waterfront, Steiger fired audiences’ imaginations whenever he was linked with forthright directors who brooked no nonsense. Although he won an Oscar for the easier role as a bigoted good old boy who sees the light of brotherhood in In the Heat of the Night, his repressed basket case in The Pawnbroker was a more daring piece of work. Since these halcyon years (which also brought forth a scene-stealing villain lending sharp menace to the soft-focus Doctor Zhivago), Steiger has made curious choices and slipped back into bad habits visible from his pre-stardom days. Huffing and puffing to blow down Jack Palance’s career in The Big Knife, his amalgam of Louis B. Mayer and Harry Cohn is such a screaming meemie no one could take him seriously, and this is the kind of barnstorming acting that follows his Oscar with few exceptions. Throughout his career, for every occasion of welcome restraint (Back from Eternity), there are distracting performances in major studio events such as the homespun Oklahoma! in which Steiger is incongruously threatening in a musical that has no ambition to be a rural Othello.

It may be instructive that his applauded work in In the Heat of the Night is suffused with humor, and that Steiger is splendid as Mr. Joyboy in the hit-and-miss screen version of The Loved One and astounding as a one-man screen actor’s guild in a film in which he revels in getups while murderously demonstrating the fine art of No Way to Treat a Lady. Unfortunately, the blustery versatility so compatible with comedy becomes unbearable when applied with ten times the force to prestige dramas. Recently, and best when sampled in small doses, Steiger is both scary and amusing in the direct-to-video Black Water as a classical music-loving judge who releases a prisoner from his hellhole on a whim thanks to the accused’s knowledge of the legal dictator’s favorite subject. But more often, Steiger has miscast his own eccentricity. In W. C. Fields and Me, he misses the point by delivering an accurate caricature but giving no indication of what made that idiosyncratic comic funny.

Dismissing Steiger as a pompous ham is unfair to a talented actor whose erraticness may be unmatched in movie history. For every incisive portrait such as his white supremacist in television’s Midnight Murders, there are examples of his scenery-chewing egregiousness such as his Southern officer in In Pursuit of Honor in which Steiger buttonholes General MacArthur less as a dissenting voice against military policy than as a disgruntled upstager determined to milk his one flashy scene for all it is worth. Considering the critical backlash against Steiger yet refusing to abandon his propensity to sweat and strain on camera, he has become something of a Method Acting joke. If he could jettison that stop-and-start line delivery, the multilingual shtick, and the breath-beating, perhaps firm directors will still steer him toward the basics of Strasberg’s acting philosophy—to determine a character’s inner core through sense memory, not to flagellate your emotions in order to stop-the-movie-because-you-want-to-get-off-on-yourself.

—Robert Pardi

STEWART, James

career); 1971–72—actor in TV series The Jimmy Stewart Show, and in series Hawkins, 1973–74; 1986—in TV mini-series North and South II; The James Stewart Museum was opened in Indiana, Pennsylvania, in 1995. Awards: Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, 1939; Best Actor Academy Award, for The Philadelphia Story, 1940; Best Actor, New York Film Critics, and Best Actor, Venice Festival, for Anatomy of a Murder, 1959; Best Actor, Berlin Festival, for Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation, 1962; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1980; Special Academy Award, for “his 50 years of meaningful performances, for his high ideals, both on and off the screen, with the respect and affection of his colleagues,” 1984. Died: 2 July 1997, in Beverly Hills, California, of pulmonic blood clot)

Films as Actor:

1934 This Side of Heaven (William K. Howard) (as Hal); Art Trouble (short)
1935 Important News (Lawrence—short); Murder Man (Whelan) (as Shorty)

1936 Rose Marie (Van Dyke) (as John Flower); Next Time We Love (Edward H. Griffith) (as Christopher); Wife versus Secretary (Brown) (as Dave); Small Town Girl (Wellman) (as Elmer); Speed (Marin) (as Terry Martin); The Gorgeous Hussy (Brown) (as “Rowdy” Roderick Dow); Born to Dance (Del Ruth) (as Ted Barker); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke) (as David Graham)

1937 Seventh Heaven (Henry King) (as Chico); The Last Gangster (Wellman) (as Paul North Sr.); Navy Blue and Gold (Wood) (as “Truck” Cross)

1938 Of Human Hearts (Brown) (as Jason Wilkins); Vivacious Lady (Stevens) (as Peter Morgan); The Shopworn Angel (Potter) (as Bill Pettigrew); You Can’t Take It with You (Capra) (as Tony Kirby)

1939 Made for Each Other (Cromwell) (as Johnny Mason); Ice Follies of 1939 (Schunzel) (as Larry Hall); It’s a Wonderful World (Van Dyke) (as Guy Johnson); Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra) (title role); Destry Rides Again (George Marshall) (as Tom Destry)

1940 The Shop around the Corner (Lubitsch) (as Alfred Kralik); The Mortal Storm (Borzage) (as Martin Brietner); No Time for Comedy (Keighley) (as Gaylord Easterbrook); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor) (as Mike Connor)

1941 Come Live with Me (Brown) (as Bill Smith); Pot o’ Gold (George Marshall) (as Jimmy Kassel); Ziegfeld Girl (Leondard) (as Gilbert Young)

1942 Fellow Americans (short); Winning Your Wings (short)

1943 It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra) (as George Bailey)

1947 Magic Town (Wellman) (as Lawrence “Rip” Smith)

1948 Call Northside 777 (Hathaway) (as McNeal); 10,000 Kids and a Cop (doc); On Our Merry Way (A Miracle Can Happen) (King Vidor and Fenton) (as Slim); Rope (Hitchcock) (as Rupert Cadell); You Gotta Stay Happy (Potter) (as Marvin Payne)

1949 The Stratton Story (Wood) (as Monty Stratton); Malaya (Thorpe) (as John Royer)

1950 Winchester ’73 (Anthony Mann) (as Lin McAdam); Broken Arrow (Daves) (as Tom Jeffords); Jackpot (How Much Do You Owe?) (Walter Lang) (as Bill Lawrence)

1951 Harvey (Koster) (as Elwood Dowd); No Highway in the Sky (No Highway) (Koster) (as Theodore Honey)

1952 The Greatest Show on Earth (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Buttons); Bend of the River (Anthony Mann) (as Glyn McIntylock); Carbine Williams (Thorpe) (as Marsh Williams)

1953 The Naked Spur (Anthony Mann) (as Howard Kemp); Thunder Bay (Anthony Mann) (as Steve Martin)

1954 The Glenn Miller Story (Anthony Mann) (title role); Rear Window (Hitchcock) (as L. B. Jeffries)

1955 The Far Country (Anthony Mann) (as Jeff Webster); Strategic Air Command (Anthony Mann) (as Lt. Colonel Robert “Dutch” Holland); The Man from Laramie (Anthony Mann) (as Will Lockhart)

1956 The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock) (as Ben McKenna)

1957 The Spirit of St. Louis (Wilders) (as Charles Lindbergh); Night Passage (Neilson) (as Grant McLaine)

1958 Vertigo (Hitchcock) (as John “Scottie” Ferguson); Bell, Book and Candle (Quine) (as Shepherd Henderson)

1959 Anatomy of a Murder (Preminger) (as Paul Biegler); The FBI Story (LeRoy) (as Chip Hardesty)

1960 The Mountain Road (Daniel Mann) (as Major Baldwin)

1961 Two Rode Together (Ford) (as Guthrie McCabe); X-15 (Richard Donner) (as narrator)

1962 The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance (Ford) (as Ransom Stoddard); Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation (Koster) (title role); Flashing Spikes (Ford—for TV) (as Slim Conway)

1963 “The Rivers’” ep. of How the West Was Won (Hathaway) (as Linus Rawlings); Take Her, She’s Mine (Koster) (as Frank Michaelson)

1964 Cheyenne Autumn (Ford) (as Wyatt Earp)

1965 Dear Brigitte (Koster) (as Professor Robert Leaf); Shenandoah (McLaglen) (as Charlie); The Flight of the Phoenix (Aldrich) (as Frank Towns)

1966 The Rare Breed (McLaglen) (as Sam Burnett)

1968 Firecreek (McVeety) (as Johnny Cobb); Bandolero! (McLaglen) (as Mace Bishop)

1970 The Cheyenne Social Club (Kelly) (as John O’Hanlan)

1971 Fools’ Parade (McLaglen) (as Mattie Appleyard); Directed by John Ford (Bogdanovich—doc) (as himself); The American West of John Ford (doc—for TV)

1972 Harvey (Cook—for TV) (as Elwood P. Dowd)

1973 Hawkins on Murder (Taylor—for TV) (as Billy Jim Hawkins)

1974 Tha’s Entertainment! (Haley—compilation) (as narrator)

1976 The Shootist (Siegel) (as Dr. Hostetler)

1977 Airport ’77 (Jameson) (as Philip Stevens)

1978 The Magic of Lassie (Chaffey) (as Clovis Mitchell); The Big Sleep (Winner) (as General Sternwood)

1980 Mr. Krueger’s Christmas (Merrill)

1981 Afurika Monogatari (A Tale of Africa) (Hani) (as old man)

1983 Right of Way (Schaef—er—for TV)

1989 An American Tail 2: Fievel Goes West (Nibelink and Wells—animation) (as voice of Wylie Burp)

1994 A Century of Cinema (Thomas) (as himself)

1996 Marlene Dietrich: Shadow and Light (Hurt—for TV) (as himself)

Publications

By STEWART: book—

By STEWART: articles—

“‘That’s Enough for Me,’” interview in Films and Filming (London), April 1966.

On STEWART: books—

Thompson, Howard, James Stewart, New York, 1974.

On STEWART: articles—

* * *

James Stewart has come a long way since his boyhood days in Pennsylvania. Starting out as an amateur magician and accordionist, he made his acting debut in a Boy Scout play and later performed in shows for the Princeton Triangle Club. He was graduated from Princeton in 1932 with a degree in architecture, but eventually joined the University Players at Falmouth, Massachusetts. It was here he befriended future stars Henry Fonda and Margaret Sullavan. Years later Sullivan would prove to be instrumental to Stewart’s career by insisting that he be given parts in her films. In the years since his motion picture debut, James Stewart has earned a place in the hearts of moviegoing audiences as one of Hollywood’s best-loved actors. His laconic style and boyish manner seem the embodiment of an uncomplicated honesty that also marked the career of his longtime friend, Henry Fonda (Stewart and Fonda were roommates in New York while working in the theater and also when they first arrived in Hollywood in 1935). Both men came to exemplify a uniquely American style of acting that takes simplicity and directness as its foundation.

Stewart’s early screen appearances often found him playing rapidly forgettable callow youths. It was director Frank Capra who first recognized his special blend of bashful humor and underlying strength, and put it to use in several films that cast Stewart as the personification of American idealism. Capra’s populist comedies, including You Can’t Take It with You, Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, and It’s a Wonderful Life, conveyed the director’s belief in the fundamental decency of the common man, and Stewart’s skill at combining warmth, humor, and pathos in his performances made him the perfect Capra hero. George Cukor’s The Philadelphia Story demonstrated his flair for sophisticated comedy alongside Katharine Hepburn and Cary Grant.

Stewart received critical acclaim for It’s a Wonderful Life, perhaps the quintessential Capra film, in which he gives a moving performance as a man on the verge of suicide whose faith in humanity is restored by a visit from a guardian angel. This movie has since become a holiday staple—being broadcast on television numerous times during the Christmas season. Stewart’s air of earnest innocence lent itself naturally to stories of whimsical appeal, as his portrayal of Elwood P. Dowd in Harvey confirmed. As the gentle alcoholic who believes himself befriended by an invisible six-foot white rabbit, Stewart displays an easy and engaging charm.

Stewart’s work in a number of Westerns, including several with director Anthony Mann, drew on his image as a man of honor and with an unswerving sense of duty. Again, Stewart’s deliberate manner and tall, lean form made him an effective presence in this uniquely American film genre. John Ford used Stewart’s image to examine the truth behind the Western myth in The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance, in which Stewart’s character wins fame for an act that his friend, John Wayne, has performed.

Alfred Hitchcock also played on Stewart’s familiar persona in four films that reveal a very different side to the actor’s talents. In Rope he is cast as an intellectual gamesman whose musings on the “perfect crime” lead two young friends to commit a murder. Rear Window stars Stewart as a photographer ready to risk his fiancée’s safety to satisfy his own voyeuristic curiosity, while in The Man Who Knew Too Much he is the desperate father of a kidnapped son. Vertigo, one of Hitchcock’s finest films, features the actor as an emotionally tormented man obsessed with recreating the image of the woman he has lost. In all four films, there is an underlying edge to Stewart’s characters, from his mildly paternalistic treatment of his wife in The Man Who Knew Too Much to his overtly disturbed behavior in Vertigo. The clash of these qualities with the image of Stewart we have come to expect makes his work for Hitchcock among his most challenging.

Stewart’s long career was certainly one of Hollywood’s most rewarding, and the actor’s occasional interviews and television appearances only strengthened the warm regard in which he was held. With the continuing popularity of many of his best films, he remains a much-loved and much-admired figure in American cinema.

—Janet E. Lorenz, updated by Linda J. Stewart

STOCKWELL, Dean

Married actress Millie Perkins, late 1960s (divorced after two years); married Joy Stockwell, early 1980s; children: one son, one daughter. Career: Worked as a real estate agent in New Mexico; performed in dinner theatre productions; Broadway stage debut in short-lived Theater Guild production, 1942; under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Hollywood, 1945–1950; dropped out of films for approximately five years, 1951; worked primarily in television, 1956–1999, appearing in series including Police Story, 1973; Greatest Heroes of the Bible, 1978; Quantum Leap, 1989; The Tony Danza Show, 1997, and It's True, 1998. Awards: Golden Globe Award, Best Juvenile Actor, for Gentleman's Agreement, 1947; Cannes Film Festival, Best Actor (with Bradford Dillman and Orson Welles), for Compulsion, 1959; Cannes Film Festival, Best Actor (with Jason Robards, Jr., and Ralph Richardson), for Long Day's Journey Into Night, 1962; Golden Globe Award, Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role in a Series, for Quantum Leap, 1989. Agent: Jason Heyman, United Talent Agency, 9560 Wilshire Blvd., 5th Floor, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1945 The Valley of Decision (Garnett) (as Paulie); Anchors Aweigh (Sidney) (as Donald Martin); Abbott and Costello in Hollywood (Simon) (as himself/uncredited)

1946 The Mighty McGurk (Waters) (as Nipper); The Green Years (Saville) (as Robert Shannon as a child); Home Sweet Homicide (Bacon) (as Archie Carstairs)

1947 Song of the Thin Man (Buzzell) (as Nick Charles, Jr.); The Romance of Rosy Ridge (Rowland) (as Andrew McBean); The Amelio Affair (Oboler) (as Ricky Parkinson); A Really Important Person (Wrangel); Gentleman's Agreement (Kazan) (as Tommy Green)

1948 Deep Waters (King) (as Danny Mitchell); The Boy With Green Hair (Losey) (as Peter Frye)

1949 The Secret Garden (Wilcox) (as Colin Craven); Down to the Sea in Ships (Hathaway) (as Ted Joy)

1950 The Happy Years (Wellman) (as John Humperdink “Dink” Stover); Stars in My Crown (Tourneur) (as John Kenyon); Kim (Saville) (as Kim)

1951 Cattle Drive (Neumann) (as Chester Graham, Jr.)

1956 Gun for a Coward (Biberman) (as Hade “Harry” Keough)

1957 The Careless Years (Hiller) (as Jerry Vernon)

1959 Compulsion (Fleischer) (as Judd Steiner)

1960 Sons and Lovers (Cardiff) (as Paul Morel)

1962 Long Day’s Journey Into Night (Lumet) (as Edmund Tyrone)

1965 Rapture (Guillermín) (as Joseph)

1968 Psych-Out (Rush) (as Dave); Before Breakfast (for TV)

1970 The Dunwich Horror (Haller) (as Wilber Whatley)

1971 The Last Movie (Chincher) (Hopper) (as Billy); The Paper Man (Grauman—for TV) (as Avery Jensen); The Failing of Raymond (Sagai—for TV) (as Raymond)

1972 The Loners (Roley) (as Stein); Columbo: The Most Crucial Game (Kagan—for TV) (as Eric Wagner); The Adventures of Nick Carter (Krasny—for TV) (as Freddy Duncan)

1973 The Werewolf of Washington (Ginsberg) (as Jack Whittier)

1974 Eadweard Maybridge, Zoopraxographer (Andersen) (as Narrator)

1975 Another Day at the Races (Bailey); The Pacific Connection (South Pacific Connection) (Santiago); Cop on the Beat (The Return of Joe Forrester) (Vogel—for TV) (as Detective Callan); Columbo: Troubled Waters (Gazzara) (as Lloyd Harrington)

1976 Won Ton Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (Winner) (as Paul Lavell); Tracks (Jaglom) (as Mark)

1977 She Came to the Valley (Texas in Flames) (Band) (as Pat Westall); A Killing Affair (Behind the Badge) (Sarafian—for TV) (as Kenneth Switzer)

1981 Born to be Sold (Brinkerhoff—for TV) (as Marty Helick)

1982 Human Highway (Young) (as Otto Quartz); Alsino y el Condoe (Alsino and the Condor) (Littin) (as Frank); Wrong Is Right (The Man with the Deadly Lens) (Brooks) (as Hacker)

1984 Paris, Texas (Wenders) (as Walt); Dune (Lynch) (as Doctor Wellington Yueh)

1985 To Live and Die in L.A. (Friedkin) (as Bob Grimes); To Kill A Stranger (Matar a un extrano aka Secuestrada) (Moctezuma) (as John Carver); Papa Was a Preacher (Feke) (as John); The Legend of Billy Jean (Robbins) (as Muldaur)

1986 Ecstacy (Spinelli); Blue Velvet (Lynch) (as Ben)

1987 The Time Guardian (Hannant/Prowse) (as Boss); Kenny Rogers as The Gambler, Part III: The Legend Continues (Lowry) (as Howard Hughes); Palais Royale (Smoke Screen) (Lavut) (as Michael Dallatiko); Jorge um Brasiliero (The Long haul) (Thiago) (as Mario); The Blue Iguana (Lafia) (as Detective Carl Strick); Married to the Mob (Demme) (as Tony “The Tiger” Russo)

1989 Limit Up (Martini) (as Peter Oak); Buying Time (Gabourne) (as Detective Novak); Catchfire (Backtrack) (Hoppert/Smithee) (as John Luponi); Quantum Leap (Hemmings) (as Rear Admiral Alben “Al” Calavacce)

1990 Sandoino (Littin) (as Captain Hafiel)

1991 Son of the Morning Star (Robe) (as General Sheridan)

1992 Friends and Enemies (Frank) (as Freddie); The Player (Altman) (as Andy Civella); Shame (Lerner—for TV) (as Tim Curtis); Fatal Memories (The Eileen Franklin Story) (Duke—for TV) (as Detective Robert Morse)

1993 Bonaanza: The Return (Jameson—for TV) (as Augustus Brandenburg)

1994 In the Line of Duty: The Price of Vengeance (Lowry—for TV) (as Jack Lowe); Chasers (Hopper) (as Salesman Stig); Vanishing Son II (Nicolella—for TV) (as Mickey Jo); Justice in a Small Town (Hard Evidence) (Egleson—for TV) (as Commissioner Sam Caldwell); The Innocent (Leder—for TV) (as Jason Flaboe); Madonna: Innocence Lost (May—for TV) (as Tony Ciccone)

1995 Naked Souls (Chubbuck) (as Duncan); The Commish: In the Shadow of the Gallows (Brazil—for TV) (as Robert Allardycy); The Langoliers (Holland—for TV) (as Bob Jenkins); Deadline for Murder: From the Files of Edna Buchanan (Chopra—for TV) (as Aaron Bliss)

1996 Unabomber: The True Story (Purdy—for TV) (as Ben Jeffries); Twilight Man (Baxley) (as Hollis Deitz); Midnight Blue (Snider) (as Katz-Feeney); Mr. Wrong (Castle) (as Jack Tramonte)
1997 The Shadow Men (Bond) (as Stan Mills); Close to Danger (Barnette—for TV) (as Dr. Ames); The Last Resort (as Grey Wolf); McHale’s Navy (Spicer) (as Capt. Wallace B. Binghamton); Living in Peril (The Peril of Being Walter Woods) (Ersgard) (as William); Air Force One (Petersen) (as Defense Secretary Walter Dean); The Rainmaker (Coppola) (as Judge Harvey Hale)

1998 Sinbad: The Battle of the Dark Knights (Mehrez) (as Ophisto)
1999 What Katy Did (Stewart/Curtis—for TV) (as Tramp); Water Damage (Battle) (as Frank Skoufaris); Rites of Passage (Salva) (as Del Farley); Restraining Order (Der Todfeind) (Katzin) (as Mains); The Venice Project (Dornhelm) (as Senator Campbell)

2000 The Flunky (Van Patten) (as Micky); They Nest (Elkayem—for TV) (as Sheriff Hobbs)

Publications

By STOCKWELL: articles—

“A Handful of Quarters,” as told to Ina Steinhauser, in Photoplay, December 1957.

Interview in Interview, October 1988.

Interview in Rolling Stone, 4 May 1989.

On STOCKWELL: books—

On STOCKWELL: articles—

* * *

Dean Stockwell was born into a show business family and, along with brother Guy, was groomed for a show-business career at an early age. (His father, singer Harry Stockwell, gave voice to Prince Charming in Disney’s Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs.) Young Stockwell made his New York stage debut (with brother Guy) in a production of The Innocent Voyage, a dramatization of the Richard Hughes novel about an encounter between a group of orphaned children and bloodthirsty pirates.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer producer Joe Pasternak discovered Stockwell in Voyage and brought him to Hollywood, where he made his screen debut with Gregory Peck and Greer Garson in Valley of Decision in 1945. He was featured more prominently in a big George Sidney musical, Anchors Aweigh, playing aspiring starlet Kathryn Grayson’s nephew, an almost too adorable curly-headed youngster determined to join the U.S. Navy. In just his second film the young actor managed to hold his own in scenes with pros Gene Kelly and Frank Sinatra playing musically inclined Navy buddies.

A variety of films at MGM followed, along with occasional loan outs to Twentieth Century-Fox, though one of Stockwell’s peak roles during this period occurred at that most minor of the major Hollywood studios, the title role in RKO’s off-beat allegory, The Boy with Green Hair, directed by Joseph Losey. A teen-age Stockwell was still juvenile enough to star as Colin Craven opposite the also maturing Margaret O’Brien’s Mary Lennox in MGM’s 1949 version of The Secret Garden. The fact that neither he nor O’Brien were, nor even attempted to be remotely English did not deter MGM from pairing them in the classic British children’s tale. This Secret Garden is chiefly memorable for its over-the-top temper-tantrum screaming match between MGM’s two foremost and inevitably aging juveniles, and the fact that the picture is shot in black-and-white with a Technicolor finale. (MGM had originally hoped Stockwell would be their “male Margaret O’Brien,” but never really found a Meet Me In Saint Louis for him).

One of Stockwell’s best later juvenile roles was in an small MGM B-picture, 1950’s Stars In My Crown. Sensitive directed by Jacques Tourneur, the film is a beautifully shot black-and-white period piece about a quietly virile minister (played by Joel McCrea) who deals with crises of faith, family, and racism in a closely-knit small town in the post-Civil War South. Stockwell gives one of his most natural and appealing juvenile performances as the adopted son of McCrea and Ellen Drew. Now well into his teen years, Stockwell completed his MGM years opposite Erroll Flynn in MGM’s lavish but somewhat dull Technicolor spectacle, Kim, from the Rudyard Kipling story.

Post-MGM, Stockwell’s career went through a series of ups and downs which may well have inspired the song “I’m Still Here” from Sondheim’s Follies, as the maturing juvenile moved rather quickly from Eugene O’Neill to AIP. Like many veterans of the autocratic but also protective studio era Stockwell seemed to resent his childhood spent at MGM, but also seemed uncertain of how to manage a career of his own when his contract ran out. After a brief stint in college Stockwell made a half-hearted attempt at the New York theater scene before passing the rest of the 1950s with television roles and a brief return to films with UI’s Gun for a Coward and UA’s The Careless Years. Around this period Stockwell’s exceptional good looks also made him a prime candidate for the young male heartthrob leads popular in the youth-enamored Hollywood of the mid-1950s, and for a brief period his handsome visage appeared in the major fan magazines of the period. His romance with (and short-lived marriage to) Millie Perkins, a young unknown model who landed the prime title role in The Diary of Anne Frank, was also well publicized. But, aside from garnering him comparisons to the late James Dean, Stockwell’s apparently genuine rebel stance (and fondness for fast sports cars) prevented him from ultimately “going Hollywood,” and the key “sensitive young man” roles of the era (for which Stockwell was ideally suited) went primarily to Tony Perkins.

In the late 1950s Stockwell returned to New York where he secured the lead (opposite Roddy McDowell) in Compulsion, Meyer Levin’s play loosely based on the Leopold/Loeff murder case. The stage role led to the excellent 1959 film version (with Orson Welles), which in turn ushered in the adult Stockwell’s choicest roles, that of Paul Morel in Jack Cardiff’s British-made film of D. H. Lawrence’s

Though hardly a box-office bonanza, the grim 174-minute O’Neill film proved the artistic peak of Stockwell’s early career. His first film after Long Day’s Journey was Rapture, a French film in which Stockwell starred opposite Patricia Gozzi, another maturing child performer who had played the title role in the controversial Sundays and Cybele. Though Rapture was a commercial flop, Leonard Maltin calls it “an intensive, sensitive account of Gozzi’s tragic romance with Stockwell, a man on the run.” Continuing television work through the 1960s was intercut with two American International potboilers: Psych-Out, a drug exploitation flick co-starring Susan Strasberg, and The Dunwich Horror, a psyched-out horror film who bore only the most nodding of acquaintances with the H. P. Lovecraft original.

In the 1970s Stockwell’s movie career took an emphatically cultish turn. In 1971 he appeared along with Julie Adams, Sylvia Miles, Rod Cameron, and Sam Fuller in Dennis Hopper’s follow-up to Easy Rider, the equally stoned-out The Last Movie, a relatively incomprehensible screenplay about a movie company shooting a film in a small Peruvian village. Soon came The Loners, a biker-flick with Scott Brady and Gloria Grahame, and Tracks, in which Hopper portrayed an escalatingly psychotic Vietnam veteran. 1984 saw two of Stockwell’s more prestigious later appearances, a supporting role in David Lynch’s spectacular, if somewhat misguided film of Dune (about twenty years earlier Stockwell himself would have made an excellent Paul Atreides), and as Walt, co-starring opposite Harry Dean Stanton and Nastassia Kinski, in Wim Wenders Paris, Texas. These two roles led to a career revival of sorts, and were followed by parts in To Live and Die in L.A., Blue Velvet, Tucker, and The Player, among an eclectic variety of other roles throughout the 1990s.

Dean Stockwell once commented: “Acting is my business, my work. I love it, even when I’m miserable.” One of the few Hollywood child actors to maintain an active and prolific acting career after his childhood years, Stockwell’s numerous roles in films and television have proved that one of the studio era’s most charismatic and talented juveniles has never lost the passion for his art.

—Ross Care

STONE, Sharon

Films as Actress:

1981 Stardust Memories (Woody Allen) (as dream girl); Deadly Blessing (Craven) (as Lana); Les Uns et les autres (Bolero) (Lelouch)
1982 Not Just Another Affair (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV) (as Lynette)
1984 Irreconcilable Differences (Shyer) (as Blake Chandler); Calendar Girl Murders (William A. Graham—for TV) (as Cassie Bascomb); The Vegas Strip Wars (Englund—for TV) (as Sarah Shipman)
1985 King Solomon’s Mines (J. Lee Thompson) (as Jessie Huston)
1987 Allan Quatermain and the Lost City of Gold (Gary Nelson and Newt Arnold) (as Jessie Huston); Cold Steel (Dorothy Ann Puzo) (as Kathy Connors); Police Academy 4: Citizens on Patrol (Jim Drake) (as Claire Mattson)
1988 Above the Law (Nico) (Andrew Davis) (as Sara Toscani); Action Jackson (Baxley) (as Patrice Dellaplane); Tears in the Rain (Don Sharp—for TV) (as Casey Cantrell)
1989 Blood and Sand (Elorrieta) (as Doña Sol); Beyond the Stars (Personal Choice) (Saperstein) (as Laurie McCall)
1990 Total Recall (Verhoeven) (as Lori Quaid)
1991 He Said, She Said (Marisa Silver and Kwapis) (as Linda); Scissors (DeFelita) (as Angie Anderson); Year of the Gun (Frankenheimer) (as Alison King)
1992 Basic Instinct (Verhoeven) (as Catherine Tramell); Diary of a Hitman (London) (as Kiki)
Stone has a lot in common with two actresses of earlier generations who equally bore their share of ridicule, but whose performances either there or it is not, it is not the product of really hard work, and the Protestant work ethic is still a potent fact in evaluating performance. I have the impression that Moore is a capable actress, but like Stone, she specializes in playing strong women. The loveliness of women—Stefani that has been heaped upon her by (mostly male) reviewers over the past few years.

Clearly, the crux is Basic Instinct, and specifically the moment when she exposes herself (and her lack of underwear) to a roomful of cops. It is a wonderful moment in a flawed but very interesting film: one of the classic “moments” of modern American cinema, already inscribed in film history. To grasp its significance fully, it is helpful to address an extremely influential article by Peter Baxter, “The Naked Thighs of Miss Dietrich.” Baxter analyzes The Blue Angel in terms of castration fears and the resulting feminism: what terrifies men is the woman’s “lack,” because it arouses their own dread that they might share it. “Miss Dietrich” repeatedly exposes herself “almost, but not quite,” thus at once arousing and assuaging castration fears. Stone in Basic Instinct goes all the way, exposing her lack of the phallus proudly and defiantly (and in a film in which, according to reports, Michael Douglas adamantly refused to expose his possession of it: we might have seen that, after all, it is just a bit of anatomy). The resentment and anger of our male reviewers, and their escape into facile ridicule, is only explicable in these terms, and seems an admirable vindication of one aspect of Freudian theory.

Yes, Sharon Stone can act, she always could, and did not suddenly begin to because she was directed by Scorsese. But she remains less striking as an actress than as a presence. “Acting” is notoriously difficult to talk about except in the most general terms, but “presence” is even harder. It has something to do with the star’s relationship to the camera, but that scarcely takes us very far. It has a lot to do with the eyes—their aliveness or otherwise, the way they look within the image, at other characters, the way they confront the camera. Two contemporary comparisons come to mind: Demi Moore (because, like Stone, she specializes in playing strong women) and Madonna (because she is blond, and is primarily associated with a defiant sexuality). I have the impression that Moore is a capable actress, but after seeing her in about a dozen films I still cannot remember what she looks like. As for Madonna, she has neither presence nor acting ability; she has built her career entirely on sheer nerve and a talent for self-promotion.

Reviewers are always impressed by acting (which, like the people who decide the Oscars every year, they usually confuse with certain roles: Stone can be allowed to “act” in Casino because her character goes through various stages of degradation, addiction, and near-insanity). They are not very interested in “presence,” because it is either there or it is not, it is not the product of really hard work, and the Protestant work ethic is still a potent fact in evaluating performance. Stone has a lot in common with two actresses of earlier generations who equally bore their share of ridicule, but whose performances with the eyes—their aliveness or otherwise, the way they look within the image, at other characters, the way they confront the camera. Two contemporary comparisons come to mind: Demi Moore (because, like Stone, she specializes in playing strong women) and Madonna (because she is blond, and is primarily associated with a defiant sexuality). I have the impression that Moore is a capable actress, but after seeing her in about a dozen films I still cannot remember what she looks like. As for Madonna, she has neither presence nor acting ability; she has built her career entirely on sheer nerve and a talent for self-promotion.

Reviewers are always impressed by acting (which, like the people who decide the Oscars every year, they usually confuse with certain roles: Stone can be allowed to “act” in Casino because her character goes through various stages of degradation, addiction, and near-insanity). They are not very interested in “presence,” because it is either there or it is not, it is not the product of really hard work, and the Protestant work ethic is still a potent fact in evaluating performance. Stone has a lot in common with two actresses of earlier generations who equally bore their share of ridicule, but whose performances... survive undimmed: Kim Novak and Jean Seberg. Novak in Vertigo, Seberg in Bonjour, Tristesse; are these not still indelibly stamped in the memory, where so many “great” acting performances have vanished into oblivion? Stone repeatedly reminds me of Novak in particular—perhaps partly because of what Truffaut described as Novak’s “‘carnality,’” but even more because, whatever character she plays (even, or especially, a bisexual murderess), there is always in her performances an underlying sense of vulnerability. Stone is a Kim Novak for the nineties.

Casino is not the first film in which Stone has shown that she can act, but it is the first she has been in of any great distinction, under one of the great contemporary filmmakers. Aside from that, one can make certain claims for Basic Instinct, The Quick and the Dead, and Sliver, chiefly because of Stone’s presence in them. In an attempt to illustrate this “presence” (more precisely, presence-plus-acting), however, I shall draw on a brief scene from a film for which no one is likely to make high claims, The Specialist, a very efficient action thriller built upon a strictly formulaic plot (roughly, the pattern long-build-up/big explosion, repeated five times—six if you include the pre-credits sequence). Here, Stone is surrounded by strong actors giving strong performances (notably James Woods and Eric Roberts); the film suffers from an understandable lack of chemistry between Stone and Sylvester Stallone, mitigated by the fact that they do not meet until two-thirds through.

Anyone who wishes to grasp—intuitively, if not intellectually—what is meant by “screen presence” could do no better than examine the brief scene of the second encounter (daytime, in a Miami bar) between Stone and Eric Roberts. (He is one of the three men she watched murder her parents when she was a young child, on whom she has vowed to take revenge). The two-minute scene includes eight full-face shots of Stone as she allows herself to be seduced; they have the effect of close-ups, although the back of Roberts’s head is present in most of them, and are intercut with reverse shots as Roberts speaks:

1. The face, looking very vulnerable, expresses nervous tension.
3. (After he asks to kiss her): the smile becomes more enigmatic and ambiguous as she says “I hardly know you.”
4. After his “Wait till you try spending the night,” the smile has faded, the lips are tense, the eyes seem to probe; there is a slight look of recoil, almost fear.
5. The smile returns as she glances up at him, then quickly down into her drink.
6, 7, 8. He moves away to help a henchman beat somebody up; she watches in the mirror. The beating evokes (brief flashback) the traumatic night of her parents’ murder: her face conveys an extraordinary blend of anger, hatred, and fear.

One might argue that, in such a sequence, the “performance” is constructed in the editing—to which the reply is that nothing can be constructed out of nothing. A suggestion: watch this brief scene on video, then imagine it again with Stone replaced, first by Demi Moore, then by Madonna. The experience should illuminate what is meant by those vague phrases “screen presence” and “star quality.”

Since Casino Stone has continued her efforts to prove (to skeptics) that she can act, but most of her choices have been extremely unfortunate. Last Dance gave her the opportunity (as a condemned murderer) for emotional histrionics, but her hard work is not enough to turn a mediocre movie into a good one; in Sphere she more than holds her own in a cast that includes Dustin Hoffman, giving arguably the best performance in the film, but it remains a feeble sci-fi movie on a premise Event Horizon had already tackled rather more intelligently just a year earlier. Her worst errors were surely those of challenging comparison with two of the most famous female performances in world cinema—Simone Signoret in Diabolique and Gena Rowlands in Gloria. Neither remake is even nearly as good as its original (one may hate Clouzot’s film, but what it did it did perfectly), provoking predictable sneers from the critics. The best one can say for any of these films is that, if they are worth seeing at all, they are worth seeing for Stone, her presence alone adding distinction.

Two films, and two superb performances, can be salvaged from this period; they also illustrate splendidly two opposite facets of her talent. Stone’s supporting role in The Mighty as the troubled, deeply committed mother of a severely handicapped and doomed child is strongly felt and extremely moving. In The Muse she demonstrates quite captivatingly what one had long suspected—that she is a wonderful comedienne. Her role as a (hypothetical) Greek muse, daughter of Zeus, inspiring artists with failing powers and shaky status, is very demanding in that she must be convincingly irresistible or the film collapses. It is difficult to think of another current star could have brought this off so triumphantly.

—Robin Wood

STREEP, Meryl

Meryl Streep with Robert Redford in Out of Africa

for A Cry in the Dark, 1988; Women in Film Crystal Award, 1998; Berlin Film Festival Berlinale Camera, 1999; Gotham Awards Lifetime Achievement Award, 1999. Agent: c/o CAA, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1977 The Deadliest Season (Markowitz—for TV); Julia (Zinnemann) (as Anne Marie)
1978 The Deer Hunter (Cimino) (as Linda)
1979 Manhattan (Woody Allen) (as Jill); The Seduction of Joe Tynan (Schatzberg) (as Karen Traynor); Kramer vs. Kramer (Benton) (as Joanna Kramer); Uncommon Women . . . and Others (Mossman and Robman—for TV) (as Leilah)
1981 The French Lieutenant’s Woman (Reisz) (as Sarah/Anna)
1982 Sophie’s Choice (Pakula) (title role); Still of the Night (Benton) (as Brooke Reynolds)
1983 Silkwood (Nichols) (title role)
1984 Falling in Love (Grosbard) (as Molly); In Our Hands (Richer and Warnow—doc) (appearance)
1985 Plenty (Schepisi) (as Susan Traherne); Out of Africa (Pollack) (as Karen Blixen)
1986 Heartburn (Nichols) (as Rachel)
1987 Ironweed (Babenco) (as Helen Archer)
1988 A Cry in the Dark (Schepisi) (as Lindy Chamberlain)
1989 She-Devil (Seidelman) (as Mary Fisher)
1990 Postcards from the Edge (Nichols) (as Suzanne Vale)
1991 Defending Your Life (Albert Brooks) (as Julia)
1992 Death Becomes Her (Zemeckis) (as Madeline Ashton)
1993 The House of the Spirits (August) (as Clara Del Valle Trueba)
1994 The River Wild (Hanson) (as Gail Hartman); A Century of Cinema (Thomas (doc) (as herself)
1995 The Bridges of Madison County (Eastwood) (as Francesca Johnson); The Living Sea (MacGillivray) (doc) (short) (as Narrator)
1996 Before and After (Schroeder) (as Carolyn Ryan); Marvin’s Room (Zaks) (as Lee)
1997 First Do No Harm (Abrahams) (as Lori Reimuller) (+ exec pr); Assignment Rescue (The Story of Varian Fry and the Emergency Rescue Committee) (Kaplan) (doc) (short) (as Narrator)

1164
1998  Dancing at Lughnasa (O'Connor) (as Kate Mundy); Chrysanthemum (Wilkos) (short) (as Narrator); One True Thing (Franklin) (as Kate Gulden); Eternal Memory: Voices from the Great Terror (Pultz, Yemec) (doc) (as Narrator)

1999  Music of the Heart (Craven) (as Roberta Guaspari)

Publications

By STREEP: articles—

Interview with Thomas Wiener, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), December 1983.

“Streep’s Ahead,” interview with G. Fuller, in Interview (New York), December 1998.

On STREEP: books—

On STREEP: articles—

* * *

Meryl Streep is among the contemporary cinema’s greatest assets—a star of the first order who, like the Spencer Tracys and Edward G. Robinsons before her, is an exceptional and multifaceted actor. One critic has said that she “manages to make her face an astonishingly clear reflection of her characters’ complexities.” Indeed, Streep is a master at shaping the intricacies of emotion and bringing them subtly to life through the use of refined and minimalist expression. The result has been an impressive and memorable list of films in which she has appeared, and in which she has offered consistently credible performances playing an astounding variety of roles.

On occasion, Streep has been criticized for taking on so many “accents” in her films. Her characters have been British, Irish, Australian, Polish; her “American” roles have ranged from sophisticated New Yorkers to small-town blue collar types, average suburbanites to ravaged alcoholics. One suspects, however, that this disapproval comes from a misguided mistrust of her ability to transform herself with such seeming effortlessness. The fact is that Streep can play—and play brilliantly—just about any character she chooses.

Streep’s important roles were supporting ones. Her first major part came in The Deer Hunter, in which her pale good looks and soft-spoken delivery made a compelling contrast to her male counterparts, small-town Pennsylvania buddies who head off to fight in Vietnam. Her role in the television miniseries Holocaust was essentially a reworking of this quietly gentle persona. What is most intriguing about Streep’s early career is that she offered award-caliber performances in roles that were not showy, that easily might have been typically bland feminine characters. The year after she made The Deer Hunter, Streep appeared in supporting roles in three films: The Seduction of Joe Tynan (playing a bright Southern charmer); Manhattan (as Woody Allen’s estranged lesbian spouse); and Kramer vs. Kramer (as Dustin Hoffman’s confused, insecure estranged wife). Especially in the latter, she fused the quality of introverted shyness that characterized her role in The Deer Hunter with a new external effervescence to convey her character’s disorientation and instability. As a result, she won an Oscar, and firmly entrenched herself in the minds of moviegoers.

From then on, Streep has had her choice of starring roles in high-prestige features. Her best characterizations have been thoughtfully conceived and complexly drawn; they have been women who are severely troubled, or facing an overwhelming life crisis. Her first starring role came in The French Lieutenant’s Woman, in which she is cast in a double role, that of an actress and the restrained Victorian woman this character plays in a movie. Here, Streep displays her uncanny ability for understatement and subtle expression as she projects the private madness of the latter character. She was to prove equally brilliant playing a working-class woman under duress in a film that is part drama, part political tract (Karen Silkwood, the ill-fated nuclear parts factory worker, in Silkwood); an intellectual in a film that is primarily romantic in tone (Danish writer Karen Blixen, in Out of Africa); and an immature, fragile offspring of privileged Hollywood in a cautionary drama whose core role is a mother-daughter relationship (the fatigued, drugged-up actress who lives in the shadow of her famous, domineering mother, in Postcards from the Edge). On occasion, the torment of Streep’s characters directly relates to one of the most personal concerns of any woman: her maternal feelings, coupled with the very survival of her children. In Sophie’s Choice, she won her second Oscar as the tragic Polish concentration camp survivor, whose “choice” was to decide which of her offspring will live and which will die. In A Cry in the Dark, she is an otherwise average Australian woman who experiences the death of her baby and then finds herself charged with murder. In Before and After, she is a loving wife and mother whose adolescent son is accused of murdering his girlfriend. In the TV movie . . . First Do No Harm, which she executive produced, she is a mother seeking alternative treatment for her epileptic son.

Streep also has accepted roles that are not as psychologically intricate, but which still allow her to display her impressive talent. She can more than effectively play a standard, essentially unglamorous part, such as the average suburban New York commuter who commences an extramarital relationship in Falling in Love, and even can add class and intelligence to a generic action-heroine role, as she did in The River Wild. And she is capable of playing gentle comedy—witness her likable performance in Defending Your Life—as well as in-your-face farce—her hilarious turns were the sole reasons for seeing She-Devil and Death Becomes Her.

Most any Streep performance can be examined for its nuances and lauded for its sheer believability. Take Ironweed, in which she plays Helen Archer, the longtime companion of street bum Francis Phelan (Jack Nicholson). Archer has, in her time, guzzled too much wine, and her insides are now twisted beyond repair. She raves and rants irrationally, and declares that “everything ails me.” At first Streep is almost unrecognizable in the role. Her voice is coarse. Her words sound as if they are emanating from a throat that really has been abused by the constant flow of alcohol. In her best of several exceptional moments, Streep sings a ditty called “He’s Me Pal” in a gin mill—and fantasizes that she is doing so in fine voice for high-class folk, rather than in a roomful of rummies.

As her screen career approached the end of its second decade, Streep remained the preeminent movie actress of her era. Her mid-to-late-1990s roles remained rich and varied: an Iowa farm wife and mother who becomes the lover of photographer Clint Eastwood (The Bridges of Madison County); a coarse, chain-smoking trailer trash type who is out of touch with troubled son Leonardo Di Caprio and long-estranged from caregiver sister Diane Keaton (Marvin’s Room); a bossy schoolteacher who is the eldest of five unmarried rural Irish sisters (Dancing at Lughnasa); a wife and mother who relishes her role as happy homemaker, but is dying of cancer and is looked after by reluctant caretaker daughter Renee Zellweger (One True Thing); the concerned mothers in Before and After and . . . First Do No Harm; and a violinist, abandoned by her husband, who reinvents herself as a music teacher and inspires her inner-city charges (Music of the Heart). For the latter, Streep earned her 12th Academy Award nomination.

Indeed, Meryl Streep can play (and has played) just about any role. And, one suspects, she will go on doing so.

—Rob Winning, updated by Rob Edelman

STREISAND, Barbra

Nationality: American. Born: Barbara Joan Streisand in Brooklyn, New York, 24 April 1942. Education: Attended Erasmus Hall High School. Family: Married the actor Elliott Gould, 1963 (divorced 1971), son: Jason Emanuel; the actor James Brolin, 1998. Career: Singer in New York nightclub; 1961—professional stage debut in Another Evening with Harry Stockes; 1963—Broadway debut in I Can Get It for You Wholesale; recording star; 1964—phenomenal success in stage play Funny Girl, and later in film version, 1968; 1969—co-founder, with Paul Newman and Sidney Poitier, First Artists Productions; 1983—producer and director, as well as actress, Yentl. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award, David Di Donatello award for Foreign Actress, and Golden Globe award for Best Actress, for Funny Girl, 1968; David Di Donatello award for Foreign Actress, The Way We Were, 1973; Best Song Academy Award, and Golden Globe award for Best Song, for “Evergreen,” in A Star Is Born, 1976; Golden Globe award for Best Director, Silver Ribbon (Italy) as Best New Foreign Director, Yentl, 1983; Women in Film Crystal Awards, 1984, 1992; Emmy Award for Outstanding Variety, Music, or Comedy Special, 1985; ASCAP Award for Most Performed Song from a Motion Picture, for “I Finally Found Someone,” 1998; Golden Globe Cecil B. DeMille Award for Lifetime Achievement, 2000. Address: 301 N. Carolwood Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90077, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1968 Funny Girl (Wyler) (as Fanny Brice)
1969 Hello Dolly! (Kelly) (as Dolly Levi)
1970 On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (Minnelli) (as Daisy Gamble); The Owl and the Pussycat (Ross) (as Doris)
1972 What’s Up, Doc? (Bogdanovich) (as Judy Maxwell); Up the Sandbox (Kershner) (as Margaret Reynolds)
1973 The Way We Were (Pollack) (as Katie Morosky)
1974 For Pete’s Sake (Yates) (as Henrietta)
1975 Funny Lady (as Fanny Brice)
1976 A Star Is Born (Pierson) (as Esther Hoffman) (+ exec pr, musical concepts)
1979 The Main Event (Zief) (as Hillary Kramer) (+ pr)
1981 All Night Long (Tramont) (as Cheryl Gibbons)
1983 Yentl (as Henrietta) (+ d, co-pr, sc)
1987 Nuts (Ritt) (as Claudia Draper) (+ pr, mus)
1990 Listen Up!: The Lives of Quincy Jones (doc)
1991 The Prince of Tides (as Susan Lowenstein) (+ d, co-pr)
1995 Barbra Streisand: The Concert (as herself—for TV) (+ pr)
1996 The Mirror Has Two Faces (as Rose Morgan) (+ d, co-pr, mus)

Other Films:

1995 Serving in Silence: The Margarethe Cammermeyer Story (Bleckner—for TV) (co-exec pr)
1997 Rescuers: Stories of Courage: Two Women (Bogdanovich) (pr)
1998 City of Peace (Koch) (exec pr); The Long Island Incident (Sargent—for TV) (exec pr)
1999 The King and I (song composer)

Publications

By STREISAND: articles—

On STREISAND: books—

On STREISAND: articles—

Pally, Marcia, “Kaddish for the Fading Image of Jews in Film,” in Film Comment (New York), February 1984.
Barbra Streisand has become, by sheer force of talent and the strength of her personality, one of the icons of the American cinema and popular culture. Her career has been long, unusual, and incredibly successful, despite the fact that for such a major star, she has a relatively short list of film credits. During the late seventies and eighties when men overwhelmingly dominated the American box office, Streisand was, for the most part, the only woman consistently considered bankable, that is, a performer who could make a project happen. And having directed only three films, she has become one of the most powerful directors in Hollywood as well. In short, Streisand is an industry to herself: a director, a producer, a concert performer, a recording star, and an actress who could secure virtually any part she chooses. She is one of the few performers who has won all four major American entertainment awards: the Emmy for television work, the Grammy for music recording, the Tony for the Broadway stage, and the Academy award for film work. Incredibly, she has even won several awards for composing music. Despite her achievements, criticism of Streisand has always been centered on two fronts: first, charges of egotism and self-centeredness which her defenders reject as actually representing her perfectionism; and second, her choice of projects, many of which have been rather safe vehicles that have not especially stretched her abilities as performer.

Streisand’s first screen appearance was in the role she originated on Broadway, Fanny Brice in the film Funny Girl. In Funny Girl Streisand established the persona which she was to express, with only slight variation, in a series of vehicles over the next several years: an unattractive woman, generally with Jewish vocal inflections, intelligence, ego, and humor, who disarms all about her and is able to transform herself into the successful and morally superior creature who is the romantic object of a Gentile man’s affections. In Funny Girl, Streisand’s energy was overwhelming, indeed threatening. Her slightly crossed eyes and long, crooked nose proved no impediment to her triumphant announcement, in her first film, that “I’m the greatest star...” Along with Dustin Hoffman, Streisand was one of the new generation of Hollywood stars who refused to change their names, get plastic surgery, or conform to the conventional Hollywood stereotypes of attractiveness. That Streisand became a star at all, looking as she did, is itself a sign of her enormous talent: the strong singing voice, the comic timing, the photogenic face, the considerable onscreen charisma. To say that Streisand forced the Hollywood community and American moviegoers to reevaluate their concepts of beauty would not really be an overstatement. For her first film, Hollywood awarded Streisand an Academy Award, though in a tie with Katharine Hepburn—a symbol, as it were, of Streisand’s uneasy alliance with Hollywood, a community that fears and respects her, but does not, apparently, love her with the kind of fervor they reserve for her more conventional male counterparts.

Funny Girl was followed by two musicals, On a Clear Day You Can See Forever, and the highly underrated Hello, Dolly! Her performance as Dolly Levi was controversial at the time for its tongue-in-cheek synthesis of Vivien Leigh and Mae West mannerisms. The film’s climax is in a restaurant filled with patrons contemplating Streisand’s beauty (rather than her talent), a concept that would have been unthinkable only several years earlier. A series of comedies harkening back to the screwball era followed, including What’s Up, Doc?, in which Streisand wooed the blond WASP Ryan O’Neal, For Pete’s Sake, in which Streisand starred opposite the pretty Michael Sarrazin, and The Owl and the Pussycat, in which Streisand plays opposite George Segal, and gives what many feel is her most energetic and inspired comic performance. At least two films in this period indicated untapped wells of dramatic abilities: the commercially unsuccessful feminist comedy Up the Sandbox, in which Streisand quietly and naturallyistically plays a mother contemplating another pregnancy, and The Way We Were. The latter, which starred Streisand opposite blonde WASP superstar Robert Redford, was an incredibly successful and romantic film. The pairing evoked the kind of chemistry generally associated with the greatest stars of the past, such as Gable and Crawford. Streisand’s persona was fundamentally the same: the awkward, ugly duckling who becomes the romantic object of a handsome man’s affections. When Redford and Streisand divorce at the end of the film, it is Streisand who is morally righteous. In the three decades since the release of The Way We Were, the film looks increasingly like a great Hollywood classic, valorized and remembered, its images and sounds strongly reverberating in our national consciousness, a love story that one can put alongside Casablanca as an immortal icon of American identity.

Streisand followed The Way We Were with a series of films attacked by many for being lazy, self-indulgent, or redundant: another comedy called The Main Event, a sequel to Funny Girl, entitled Funny Lady, in which Streisand gets to reject Omar Sharif, reversing the pattern of the original; and an almost universally reviled but commercially successful remake of A Star Is Born. The latter, like Funny Girl and Funny Lady, chronicles the rise to fame of Streisand in a narrative that also chronicles the decline and moral inferiority of the handsome man with whom she becomes involved.

Yentl definitely ushered in a new era for Streisand and her career. The story of a young Jewish woman who masquerades as a man in order to study the Talmud, this quasi-musical (in an era when the film musical had been long considered as extinct as the dinosaur) was directed and produced by Streisand. Although most critics were prepared to accuse Streisand of total self-centeredness, Yentl’s genuine and ostensibly quality, for the most part, disarmed them. Certainly Streisand the director is by no means self-indulgent with Streisand the star: close-ups of Streisand do not automatically reveal the actress’s “good” (left) side; occasionally, the star will even be photographed out of focus so the director can emphasize something else within the frame. The film’s cinematography is extraordinary. In Yentl, director Streisand reveals a fetching sensitivity, an interest in androgyny (which would foreshadow her interest in gay and lesbian issues in the nineties), and a profoundly lyrical sensuality. Unlike A Star Is Born, Yentl seems organically unified, with all facets of production working in harmony toward one artistic end. For the first time, Streisand’s love interest is as Jewish as she and not morally inferior. Much sympathy (as well as screen time) is extended to the secondary female lead in the film as well—another break with the patterns of Streisand’s past films.

In 1991, Streisand both directed and acted in Prince of Tides, a deviously entertaining love story-cum-melodrama in the style of the classic women’s films of the forties and fifties, updated with subtlety and intelligence to deal head-on with a variety of current issues, most notably childhood sexual abuse and the socially prescribed gender roles for men and women. To the surprise of many, including Streisand, the film turned into a huge event, winning the enthusiastic approbation of an emotionally moved public and significant critical raves. Streisand garnered sensitive performances from her son, Jason Gould, who played her on-screen son, and particularly from macho Nick Nolte, whose key scene required him to break down emotionally to childlike vulnerability as he admits to having been raped as a young boy. The negative backlash to the film was, unfortunately, muddled in sexism: criticism of Streisand’s having photographed herself in a glamorous way (with no criticism of director Streisand having photographed Nolte similarly), accusations against the genre of melodrama as inherently unworthy (except to the extent that its focus is on male characters), and so forth. That the film received seven Academy award nominations, but again not one for Streisand, its director and star, became a matter for such public comment that Streisand became the de facto, acclaimed director of the year.

From 1992, Streisand worked on a variety of projects: particularly her long-awaited return to live performance—her first in over twenty-five years—via a triumphantly successful concert tour. Notably, the tour was itself marked by Streisand’s expanded political consciousness: notably absent were many of the “loney-woman-as-victim” songs that had made Streisand famous. Streisand also became increasingly involved in feminist issues, AIDS research and education, and children’s rights. Although always politically active and socially conscious in the past (particularly through her philanthropic Streisand Foundation), Streisand transformed herself into Hollywood’s leading liberal spokesperson, notably giving a very public and controversial speech against Colorado legislation designed to prevent civil rights protection to gays and lesbians, in the process cementing a tourism boycott against the entire state. Similarly, Streisand has been vocal in her support for the beleaguered President Clinton.

After co-producing, with Glenn Close, a successful Emmy award-winning TV movie on homophobia in the military, Serving in Silence: The Margarethe Cammermeyer Story, Streisand finally abandoned her long-cherished project of directing Larry Kramer’s angry exposé of government inaction during the first wave of the AIDS epidemic, The Normal Heart. This abandonment, after having kept the optioned property away from other potential producers for so many years, angered Kramer and garnered negative publicity for Streisand, which perhaps contributed to the markedly tepid reaction to her “replacement” project (on a less overtly important subject), The Mirror Has Two Faces.

Perhaps surprisingly, although a Hollywood entertainment, The Mirror Has Two Faces is amazingly ambitious, synthesizing the genres of traditional romantic comedy with the mother/daughter melodrama. Streisand’s hybrid, which works as a kind of ideological re-invention, miraculously avoiding all the sexist claptrap endemic to both genres, managed to attract a large, popular audience in an era in which “feminism” had been turned into a dirty word. Streisand’s exploration of romantic vs. courtly love is a testament to the political resolve of its director’s obsessive work with screenwriter Richard Lagravanese. Streisand also takes the role of Rose, and the cinematography glows with an appropriate pink burnish, its art direction witty and inspired. That The Mirror Has Two Faces was under-esteemed by both Hollywood and the critical community suggests that the film’s very real intellectual achievements were, like the proverbial purloined letter, not particularly noticed, if nevertheless in plain sight. A witty, droll comedy filled with compassion (based, oddly enough, on a French film by André Cayatte), The Mirror Has Two Faces offers warm performances by Streisand and her co-star Jeff Bridges, as well as generous opportunities for a supporting cast headed by Lauren Bacall.

Including references to It Happened One Night, Brief Encounter, and particularly, Now Voyager (with its tortured mother/daughter relationship, theme of female transformation, and iconography of cigarette smoking as the epitome of romantic chic), The Mirror Has Two Faces at times is rather reflexive. The truth about lasting love, contends Bridges, is that unlike lovers in the movies, “we don’t hear music when we kiss.” Later, when the stars kiss for the first time, romantic soundtrack music is notably absent. Amazingly for a Hollywood film, Bridges falls in love with Streisand not because of her looks or sexual allure, but because of “your mind, your humor, your passion for ideas.” Streisand’s eventual physical transformation—which takes place after she and Bridges have already married—turns out to be laudably irrelevant: wittily, Bridges prefers her appearance pre-transformation. “I don’t care if you are pretty,” offers Bridges, “I love you anyway.” The final fade-out kiss on the streets of New York suggests a feminist correction of the final scene of The Way We Were. Although this kiss is accompanied by Puccini (Streisand’s metaphor for how it feels to be in love), Turandot is presented as source music from an apartment above, rather than as extra-diegetic comment.

Energized by her feminism and political activism, and now the most visible role model for Hollywood women interested in social change through art or grassroots political action, Streisand has effectively shut down her career as an actress-for-hire. Whereas once one might have looked forward to Streisand in a Bergman film (who once had wanted to cast her), or in a Scorsese film, or even in a Woody Allen film, it is clear that Streisand’s future projects will continue to be carefully chosen and painstakingly produced in the service of her own artistic vision. Perhaps one emotional climax to her career is the Lifetime Achievement Award given her by the Foreign Press Association (Golden Globes), whose ceremony in 2000 was marked by a Streisand testament and climaxed by her unusually intelligent and inspiring speech, which strongly emphasized the integrity of the “work” itself as the supreme value for all artists, even those working in Hollywood.

—Charles Derry

STUART, Gloria

Nationality: American. Born: Gloria Finch in Santa Monica, California, on 4 July 1910. Education: Santa Monica High School, University of California at Berkeley. Family: Married Blair Gordon Newell on 21, June 1930, Divorced in 1934; Married Arthur Sheekman in 29 July 1934; Had one child Sylvia Thompson, born in 1935; four grandchildren. Career: After she trod the boards of the Pasadena Playhouse in the classics, she graced the classic horror films of James Whale, including The Old Dark House and The Invisible Man; other highlights include the melodrama, Sweepings, and the musical, Gold Diggers of 1935, and films by such major directors as William...
Wellman, George Stevens, John Ford; unable to make a splash on Broadway after her film career dissipated, she became an accomplished painter and, later, a renowned book designer and printer; after decades of virtual inactivity, she staged Cinema’s most spectacular renascence in Titanic.

Awards: Academy of Family Films and Television Honor, 1997; Screen Actors Guild Award, for best supporting actress, for Titanic, 1997; Screen Actors Guild Award, special achievement award, 1998. Address: Jeff Hunter, the William Morris Agency, 1325 Avenue of the Americas, New York, New York 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1932 Street of Women (Mayo) (as Doris Baldwin); The All-American (Mack) (as Ellen Steffens); The Old Dark House (Whale) (as Margaret Waverton); Air Mail (Ford) (as Ruth Barnes)

1933 Sweepings (Cromwell) (as Phoebe Pardway Gilitiz); The Invisible Man (Whale) (as Flora Cranley); Hollywood on Parade No. 9 (Film Short) (as Herself); The Girl in 419 (Hall and Sommes) (as Mary Dolan); The Kiss Before The Mirror (Whale) (as Frau Lucie Bernsdorf); Secret of the Blue Room (Neumann) (as Irene Von Helldorf); Private Jones (Mack) (as Mary Gregg); Laughter in Hell (Cahn) (as Dorothy Wilton); Roman Scandals (BERKLEY) (as Princess Sylvia)

1934 Beloved (Scherzinger) (as Lucy Hausmann); The Love Captive (Marcin) (as Alice Trask); I'll Tell The World (Sedgwick) (as Jane Hamilton); Here Comes The Navy (Bacon) (as Dorothy Martin); Gift of Gab (Freund) (as Barbara Kelton); I Like It That Way (Lachman) (as Grandma)

1935 Laddie (Stevens) (as Pamela Pryor); Gold Diggers of 1935 (BERKLEY) (as Ann Prentiss); Maybe It's Love (Wellman) (as Bobby Haleyv)

1936 Professional Soldier (Garnett) (as Countess Sonia); The Prisoner of Shark Island (Ford) (as Peggy Mudd); Poor Little Rich Girl (Cummings) (as Margaret Allen); Girl Overboard (Salkow) (as Mary Cheshbrooke); The Girl on the Front Page (Beaumont) (as Joan Langford); 36 Hours to Kill (Forde) (as Anne Marvis); Want: Jane Killer (Killy) (as Doris Martin); The Crime of Dr. Forbes (Marshall) (as Ellen Godfrey)

1937 Life Begins in College (Seiter) (as Janet O’ Harra); The Lady Escapes (Forde) (as Linda Ryan)

1938 Keep Smiling (Leeds) (as Carol Walters); The Lady Objects (Kenton) (as Ellen Adams); Island in the Sky (Leeds) (as Julie Hayes); Change of Heart (Tinling) (as Carol Murdock); Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (Dwan) (as Gwen Warren); Time Out for Murder (Humberstone) (as Margie Ross)

1939 It Could Happen to You (Werker) (as Dorothy Winslow); Winner Take All (Browr) (as Julie Harrison); The Three Musketeers (Dwan) (as Queen Anne)

1943 Here Comes Elmer (Brower) (as Alice Walker); Enemy of Women (Zeisler) (as Bertha)

1944 She Wrote the Book (Lamont) (Phyllis Fowler)

1946 The Legend of Lizzie Borden (Wendkos—for TV) (as Store Customer); Adventures of the Queen (Rich—for TV); Barbary Coast (Bixby—for TV)

1947 Flood (Bellamy—for TV) (as Mrs. Parker); Gibbsville (AKA: The Turning Point of Jim Malloy) (Gilroy—for TV)

1976 In the Glitter Palace (Butler—for TV) (as Mrs. Bowman)

1978 The Two Worlds of Jenny Logan (de Felitta—for TV) (as Roberta)

1979 The Incredible Journey of Dr. Meg Laurel (Green—for TV) (as Rose); The Best Place to Be (Miller—for TV)

1980 Fun and Games (Smithhee—for TV)

1981 Merlene of the Movies (Malone—for TV) (as Evangeline Eaton); The Violation of Sarah Mc David (Llewelyn Moxy—for TV) (as Mrs. Fowler)

1982 My Favorite Year (Benjamin) (as Mrs. Horn)

1984 Mass Appeal (Jordan) (as Mrs. Curry)

1986 Wildcats (Ritchie) (as Mrs. Connolly)

1988 Shootdown (Pressman—for TV) (as Gertrude)

1997 Titanic (Cameron) (as Old Rose)

1999 The Love Letter (Ho-Sun Chan) (as Eleanor)

2000 The Million Dollar Hotel (Wenders) (as Jessica); My Mother the Spy (Keene—for TV) (as Grandma)

Publications

By GLORIA STUART: book—

By GLORIA STUART: articles—

“Ready for My Close-Up,” by Gloria Stuart and Sylvia Thompson, in McCall’s, (New York), September 1999.

On GLORIA STUART: books—

On GLORIA STUART: articles—

When a cherished actress’s star dimmes, moviegoers customarily consign their favorite to the “Whatever Happened to Her?” category. You cannot, however, take shortcuts through the life of Gloria Stuart.

Was it so long ago that film enthusiasts took female beauty for granted? In that faraway Hollywood, where film stars seemed like mythical creatures born into their Orry-Kelly creations, no one was lovelier than Gloria Stuart. And yet, Stuart was never just another pretty face; she dreamed about Max Reinhardt, not Max Factor. Having distinguished herself in the Los Angeles theatrical community, she took Movieland by storm as the prize in a bidding war between Paramount and Universal Studios. Ironically, after Universal claimed her, she fought against Nazi oppression before it became popular. Out of the Hollywood rat race, she funneled her artistic blockage into a new venues throughout the 1950s, 1960s, 1970s and 1980s; she became an acclaimed painter with several one-woman shows and an accomplished book designer/printer with exquisite hand-made volumes to her credit. Still, to paraphrase the title of her memoirs, she just kept hoping.

Several decades later, that hope bore fruit. (One bright spot of this period was a guest role on a 1987 Murder, She Wrote episode, entitled “The Days Dwindle Down.”) Although the 1980s added only bit parts to her filmography, a movie about a legendary boat sinking would lift Stuart’s career out of its submerged status. The biggest money-maker of all time, Titanic was an epic whose truest distinction lies in Stuart’s elegant acting as shipwreck survivor, Old Rose; she is the heart and soul of the film. With her impeccable line readings, Stuart lent an air of gravity to a spectacle that portrayed the oceanic catastrophe as a backdrop for doomed romance. Stuart might be justifiably grateful to James Cameron for resurrecting her stardom, but he was damned lucky to have found her. The oldest performer ever to be nominated for an Academy Award, Stuart lost that statuette but plunges into a career as a character actress at age 87. Yet, her real triumph is that she has never lived her life as a has-been. Has any other under-utilized star ever had such delicious vindication? To see her interviewed on TV talk shows is to witness a free spirit, whose undimmed loveliness and grit make her a poster girl for all vintage souls. What Stuart’s resurrection as a performer demonstrates is the durability of talent. What her life demonstrates is the magic of believing in second chances. Symbolically, she puts miracles within the grasp of anyone, who’s ever waited for opportunity to knock twice. As a movie icon, she’s had the last laugh on all those long-dead moguls who never gave her a first chance in the first place.

—Robert J. Pardi
SULLAVAN, Margaret

Films as Actress:

1934 Only Yesterday (Stahl) (as Mary Lane); Little Man, What Now? (Borzage) (as Lammchen Pinneberg)
1935 The Good Fairy (Wyler) (as Luisa Ginglebusher); So Red the Rose (Vidor) (as Vallette Bedford)
1936 The Next Time We Love (Edward Griffith) (as Cicely Tyler); The Moon’s Our Home (Seiter) (as Cherry Chester)
1938 Three Comrades (Borzage) (as Patricia Hollman); The Shopworn Angel (Potter) (as Daisy Heath)
1940 The Shop around the Corner (Lubitsch) (as Klara Novak); The Mortal Storm (Borzage) (as Freya Roth)
1941 So Ends Our Night (Cromwell) (as Ruth Holland); Back Street (Stevenson) (as Ray Smith); Appointment for Love (Seiter) (as Jane Alexander)
1943 Cry Havoc (Thorpe) (as L.t. Smith)
1950 No Sad Songs for Me (Maté) (as Mary Scott)

Publications

By SULLAVAN: article—

On SULLAVAN: books—

Borrows, Michael, Patricia Neal and Margaret Sullavan, St. Austell, Cornwall, 1971.
Quirk, Lawrence J., Margaret Sullavan: Child of Fate, New York, 1986.

On SULLAVAN: articles—

Current Biography 1944, New York, 1944.
Sarris, Andrew, “Reflections on Margaret Sullavan,” in Film Comment (New York), November-December 1977.

Margaret Sullavan’s personal independence characterized her life on and off screen. Her reluctance to bind herself to a movie star’s contract resulted in a relatively limited number of films. Nevertheless, she established a strongly identifiable persona of individuality and courage amid suffering. She used her naturally pensive appearance and husky, breathless voice as means of characterizing women who were often doomed but confronted their fate with spirit.

The majority of Sullavan’s films were melodramas in which her characters faced adversity in the form of poverty, sickness, hopeless romance, political oppression, and, often, death. But even in comedies she projected an air of underlying sadness. When the correspondent never shows up for their first meeting in The Shop around the Corner, for example, she wears her disappointment with the same resigned but indomitable acceptance that she does facing serious illness in Three Comrades or sitting alone on New Year’s Eve waiting for her married lover in Back Street.

There was often an otherworldly quality to Sullavan’s characters, roles that called for realism and principle. Her hair was frequently lighted to make it shine, accentuating the angelic way in which her characters accepted their fate. As the mother in Little Man, What Now? she makes the birth of her son akin to the Nativity. And those films that call for her character to die seem the fulfillment of her tragic spirit, for the films suggest that her characters are not limited by mortality. In The Mortal Storm Freya is killed as she and Martin (James Stewart) are escaping from Nazi Germany, but Stewart nevertheless carries her body to freedom. The memory of her goodness seems to influence her Nazi brother (Robert Stack) to reconsider his commitment to evil. Her final role, in No Sad Songs for Me, is perhaps the quintessence of her persona. Told that she is dying, she ingratiates her husband and daughter with another woman, one who can take her place when she is gone.

A sense of self-sacrificing concern was combined with a unique presence, submissive yet strong, smiling but mournful, courageous though doubtful, that made Margaret Sullavan’s characters, paradoxically, vulnerable while living—and dying—heroically.

—Jerome Delamater

SUTHERLAND, Donald

daughter: Rachel; since 1974, has lived with the actress Francine Racette, sons: Roeg, Rossif, and Angus. Career: Late 1950s—worked in repertory companies in the United Kingdom; professional debut in London in The Gimmick; also acted on television; 1964—film debut in Castle of the Living Dead; late 1970s—formed McNichol Picture production company; 1981—New York stage debut in Lolita; 1994—in TV mini-series The Oldest Living Confederate Widow Tells All. Awards: Emmy Award, Golden Globe for Best Supporting Actor, for Citizen X, 1995. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1964 Il castello dei morti vivi (Castle of the Living Dead) (Ricci) (as witch/sergeant)
1965 The Bedford Incident (James B. Harris) (as Nery); Dr. Terror’s House of Horrors (Francis) (as Bob Carroll); Fanatic (Die! Die! My Darling) (Narizzano) (as Joseph)
1966 Promise Her Anything (Hiller)
1967 The Dirty Dozen (Aldrich) (as Vernor Pinkley); Oedipus the King (Saville) (as chorus leader)
1968 The Sunshine Patriot (Sargent—for TV) (as Benedek); Interlude (Billington) (as Lawrence); Joanna (Sarne) (as Lord Peter Sanderson); The Split (Flemyng) (as Dave Negli); Mr. Sebastian (Sebastian) (David Greene) (as American)
1970 Start the Revolution without Me (Yorkin) (as Charles/Pierre); Acte du Coeur (Act of the Heart) (Almond) (as Father Michael Ferrier); *M*A*S*H* (Altman) (as Capt. Benjamin Franklin “Hawkeye” Pierce); Kelly’s Heroes (The Warriors) (Hutton) (as Oddball); Alex in Wonderland (Mazursky) (title role)
1971 Johnny Got His Gun (Trumbo) (as “Christ”); Little Murders (Arkin) (as the Minister); Klute (Pakula) (title role)
1972 The FTA Show (F.T.A.; Foxtrot Tango Alpha; Free the Army; Fuck the Army) (Francine Parker—doc) (+ co-pr, sc)
1973 Steeleyard Blues (Merson) (as Veldini); Lady Ice (Gries) (as Andy Hammond); Don’t Look Now (Roeg) (as John Baxter)
1974 S+P+S (Kershner) (as Brulard)
1975 Der Richter und sein Henker (End of the Game; Murder on the Bridge; Getting Away with Murder) (Schell) (as corpse);
The Day of the Locust (Schlesinger) (as Homer Simpson); Alien Thunder (Dan Candy’s Law) (Fournier)
1976 1900 (Novecento) (Bertolucci) (as Attila); Casanova (Fellini’s Casanova) (Fellini) (title role); The Eagle Has Landed (John Sturges) (as Liam Devlin)
1977 The Kentucky Fried Movie (Landis) (as waiter); The Cinema According to Bertolucci (Bertolucci—doc); Les Liens de sang (Blood Relatives) (Chabrol) (as Carella); The Disappearance (Cooper) (as Jay Mallory)
1978 National Lampoon’s Animal House (Landis) (as Dave Jennings); Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Kaufman) (as Matthew Bennel); The Great Train Robbery (The First Great Train Robbery) (Michael Crichton) (as Agar)
1979 Murder by Decree (Clark) (as Robert Lees); A Very Big Withdrawal (A Man, a Woman, and a Bank) (Black) (as Reese Halperin); Bear Island (Sharpe) (as Frank Lansing)
1980 Ordinary People (Redford) (as Calvin); Nothing Personal (Bloomfield) (as Professor Roger Kelly)
1981 Gas (Rose) (as Nick the Noz); Eye of the Needle (Marquand) (as Henry Faber); Threshold (Pearce) (as Dr. Thomas Vrain)
1983 Max Dugan Returns (Ross) (as Brian Costello); The Winter of Our Discontent (Hussein—for TV); Nothing Personal (Bloomfield)
1984 Crackers (Malle) (as Weslake); Ordeal by Innocence (Desmond Davis) (as Dr. Arthur Calgary)
1985 Heaven Help Us (Catholic Boys) (Dinner) (as Brother Thadeus); Revolution (Hudson) (as Sgt. Maj. Peasy)
1986 The Wolf at the Door (Oviri) (Carlson) (as Paul Gauquelin)
1987 The Rosary Murders (Walton) (as Father Bob Koesler); The Trouble with Spies (Kennedy) (as Appleton Porter)
1988 Apprentice to Murder (Thomas) (as John Reese)
1989 A Dry White Season (Palcy) (as Ben du Toit); Lock Up (Flynn) (as Warden Drumgoole); Lost Angels (The Road Home) (Hudson) (as Dr. Charles Loftis)
1990 Bethune: The Making of a Hero (Dr. Bethune) (Borsos—released in U.S. in 1993) (title role); Baxter’s Bedroom (Horn); Schrei aus Stein (Scream of Stone) (Herzog) (as Ivan)
1991 Eminent Domain (Irvine) (as Josef Burski); Backdraft (Ron Howard) (as Ronald Bartel); JFK (Oliver Stone) (as Colonel ‘X’)
1992 Buffy the Vampire Slayer (Kuzui) (as Merrick); The Railway Station Man (Whyte—for TV) (as Roger Hawthorne); Quicksand: No Escape (Pressman—for TV)
1993 Benefit of the Doubt (Heap) (as Frank); Shadow of the Wolf (Agakuk) (Dorffmann) (as Henderson); Six Degrees of Separation (Scheppis) (as Plan Kittredge); Younger and Younger (Adlon) (as Jonathan Younger)
1994 Disclosure (Levinson) (as Bob Garvin); The Puppet Masters (Orme) (as Andrew Nivens); Punch (Birkinshaw and Fluetshch); The Lifeforce Experiment (The Breakthrough) (Haggar—for TV) (as Dr. ‘MAC’ MacLean)
1995 Outbreak (Petersen) (as Gen. Donnie McClintock); Citizen X (Gerolmo—for TV) (as Ferisov)
1996 The Shadow Conspiracy (The Shadow Program) (Cosmatos); Hollow Point: A Time to Kill (Schumacher) (as Lucien Wilbanks)
1997 Natural Enemy (Jackson) (as Ted); Shadow Conspiracy (Cosmatos) (as Conrad); The Assignment (Duguay) (as Jack Shaw/Henry Fields)
1998 Fallen (Hoblit) (as Lt. Stanton); Without Limits (Towne) (as Bill Bowerman); Free Money (Simonneau) (as Judge Rolf Rausenberg)
1999 Virus (Bruno) (as Captain Robert Everton); Behind the Mask (McLoughlin—for TV) (as Dr. Bob Shushan); Instinct (Turteltaub) (as Dr. Ben Hillard); The Hanley (Gray—for TV) (as General Pierre Beauregard)
2000 Panic (Bromell) (as Michael); Space Cowboys (Eastwood) (as Jerry O’Neill); The Art of War (Duguay) (as U.N. Secretary General Douglas Thomas)

Publications

By SUTHERLAND: articles—

Interview, in Show (New York), April 1971.

Interview with R. Schar, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), April 1977.

On SUTHERLAND: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), June 1990.

* * *

Donald Sutherland continues a long and distinguished, although eclectic, career in North American and European cinema. He has proven himself adept in a wide variety of roles and acting styles, from broad work in action thrillers to subtle, self-deferential characterizations in domestic dramas, as well as conceptual interpretations in European art films.

Sutherland achieved stardom in Robert Altman’s *M*A*S*H* as Hawkeye Pierce in 1970, but he had been acting (in Europe and Canada) in a variety of character parts during the 1960s. In an earlier era, the tall, gawky-looking Sutherland might not have achieved the stardom that followed *M*A*S*H*, but Hollywood in the early seventies was open for male stars with unconventional looks. He was hired for the title roles in Paul Mazursky’s Alex in Wonderland and Alan Pakula’s Klute, yielding attention in the latter to Jane Fonda’s riveting prostitute, Bree Daniels. Sutherland was known to have had antagonistic relationships with some of his early directors (it is an oft-reported story that Sutherland and Elliott Gould attempted to get the studio to fire Altman from M*A*S*H, but by the mid-seventies he had rethought his role in the collaborative process. “What I was trying to do all the time was impose my thinking,” Sutherland later remarked. “Now I contribute. I offer, I don’t put my foot down.”

As his career continued, Sutherland would offer his services to many of the brightest directors of the age—John Schlesinger, Bernardo Bertolucci, Federico Fellini, Claude Chabrol, and Louis Malle, among others—but he would have the misfortune of doing so as those directors embarked on some of their more problematic films.

Sutherland’s commitment to a director’s vision would, however, serve him well in Nicolas Roeg’s brilliant Don’t Look Now, where his willingness to become the object of Julie Christie and Roeg’s erotic gaze was unique even in that era’s tradition of frontal male nudity. Don’t Look Now’s John Baxter provided Sutherland with a role that balanced his ability to display subtle nuance through a generally repressed character who could, occasionally, display great depths of emotion. Later, continuing to work in Europe with Bertolucci on 1900 and on Fellini’s Casanova, Sutherland would take heroic dives off the artistic cliffs his directors put in front of him. While his work as the monstrous fascist Attila in the former would eventually win him respect and even a certain amount of awe (and surely contribute to casting directors’ willingness to give him larger-than-life roles in the future), it was considered an embarrassing misstep at the time. Fellini’s conception of Casanova would, however, effectively turn Sutherland into a life-sized marionette in one of the Italian auteur’s worst pictures.

If Sutherland’s allegiance to some directors would backfire in the direction of “overacting,” his commitment to Robert Redford in Ordinary People (1980) and Fred Schepisi in Six Degrees of Separation (1993) would require him to defer attention to the films’ other cast members. Surely Sutherland’s work in Redford’s film equaled Mary Tyler Moore’s and Timothy Hutton’s, but as a gentle man trying to hold his family together, it was not the kind of performance that impressed casual viewers or won awards. In Schepisi’s adaptation of John Guare’s dazzling play, Sutherland was given the script’s one underconceived part—art speculator Flan Kittredge who is locked into a life by rote while his wife Ouisa has the epiphanies. Still, Sutherland was able to suggest a certain sorrow over a life of unconsummated possibilities.

Perhaps Sutherland’s work as a villain, or at least a character prone to malevolence, in numerous films such as Eye of the Needle, Lock Up, Backdraft, and Disclosure, used him to most impressive effect in the eighties and nineties. Eye of the Needle’s Nazi spy Henry Faber was a complex and bone-chilling characterization; Sutherland’s Warden Drumgoole in the Stallone film Lock Up evoked his Attila; and in Disclosure, as Michael Douglas’s corporate boss, Sutherland was able to use his flashing eyes, curling upper lip, and imposingly large frame to subtly convey malevolent intent without any direct acknowledgment within the script. Sutherland did give at least one completely stunning performance in this period as a sympathetic Paul Gauguin in the 1986 film The Wolf at the Door, but few saw that French-Danish co-production.

Still, one wishes for more opportunities for this risk-taking actor, one of the most talented of his generation. In the late nineties, Sutherland would be heard doing voice-overs for Volvo commercials and turning in still more villainous performances in such films as Outbreak, where boredom seems finally to be creeping into his performances. Considering the quality of the scripts, it is hard to entirely fault him for this.

—Daniel I. Humphrey

SWANSON, Gloria

Gloria Swanson
Films as Actress:

1915 The Fable of Elvira and Farina and the Meal Ticket (Baker); Sweedie Goes to College (Baker); The Romance of an American Duchess; The Broken Promise; At the End of a Perfect Day (as extra, hands bouquet to Holmes); The Ambition of the Baron; His New Job (Charlie’s New Job) (Chaplin) (as extra, stenographer)

1916 A Dash of Courage (Chase); Hearts and Sparks (Parrott); A Social Club (Badger); The Danger Girl; Love on Skates; Haystacks and Steeples (Badger); The Nick of Time Baby (Whose Baby?) (Badger)

1917 Teddy at the Throttle (Badger); Baseball Madness (Mason); Dangers of a Bride; The Sultan’s Wife; A Pullman Bride (Badger)

1918 Society for Sale (The Honorable Billy) (Borzage) (as Phyllis Cline); Her Decision (Conway) (as Phyllis Dunbar); You Can’t Believe Everything (Conway) (as Patricia Reynolds); Everywoman’s Husband (Hamilton) (as Edith Emerson); Shifting Sands (Albert Parker) (as Marcia Grey); Station Content (Hoyt); Secret Code (Albert Parker) (as Sally Carter Rand); Wife or Country (E. Mason Hopper) (as Sylvia Hamilton)

1919 Don’t Change Your Husband (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Leila Porter); For Better, for Worse (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Sylvia Norcross); Male and Female (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Lady Mary Lasenby)

1920 Why Change Your Wife? (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Beth Gordon); Something to Think About (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Ruth Anderson); The Great Moment (Wood) (as Nada Pelham)

1921 The Affairs of Anatole (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Vivian Spencer); Under the Lash (Wood) (as Deborah Krilet); Don’t Tell Everything (Wood) (as Marion Westover)

1922 Her Husband’s Trademark (Wood) (as Lois Miller); Beyond the Rocks (Wood) (as Theodora Fitzgerald); Her Gilded Cage (Wood) (as Suzanne Orloff); The Impossible Mrs. Belloc (Wood) (title role)

1923 My American Wife (Wood) (as Natalie Chester); Prodigal Daughters (Wood) (as Elinor “Swifite” Forbes); Bearder’s Eighth Wife (Wood) (as Mona de Bricia); Zaza (Dwan) (title role); Hollywood (Joligud) (Cruze and Vacariello) (guest appearance)

1924 The Humming Bird (Olcott) (as Toinette); A Society Scandal (Dwan) (as Marjorie Colbert); Manhandled (Dwan) (as Tessie McGuire); Her Love Story (Dwan) (as Princess Maria); Wages of Virtue (Dwan) (as Carmelita)

1925 Madame Sans-Gêne (Perret) (as Catherine Hubbscher); The Coast of Folly (Dwan) (as Nadine Joyce Gateway); Stage Struck (Dwan) (as Jennie Hagen)

1926 Untamed Lady (Tuttle) (as St. Clair Van Tassel); Fine Manners (Rosson) (as Orchid Murphy)

1927 The Love of Some Albert Parker) (title role, + pr)

1928 Sadie Thompson (Walsh) (title role, + pr); Queen Kelly (von Stroheim) (title role, + pr)

1929 The Trespasser (Goulding) (as Marion Donnell)

1930 What a Widow? (Dwan) (as Tamarind Brooks, + pr)

1931 Indiscreet (McCarey) (as Geraldine “Jerry” Trent); Tonight or Never (LeRoy) (as Nella Vago)

1932 Perfect Understanding (Gardner) (as Judy Rogers, + pr)

1934 Music in the Air (Joe May) (as Frieda Hertefeld)

1941 Father Takes a Wife (Hively) (as Leslie Collier)

1949 Down Memory Lane (Karlson—compilation)

1950 Sunset Boulevard (Wilder) (as Norma Desmond)

1952 Three for Bedroom C (Bren) (as Ann Haven)

1956 Mio figlio Nerone (Néro’s Mistress; Néro’s Weekend) (Steno) (as Agrippina)

1960 When Comedy Was King (Youngson—compilation) (as herself)

1974 The Killer Bees (Harrington—for TV) (as Mme. Von Bohlen); Airport 1975 (Smight) (as herself)

Publications

By SWANSON: book—

Swanson on Swanson, New York, 1980.

By SWANSON: articles—

“Why I Am Going Back to the Screen,” interview with Frederick Smith, in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), February 1920.

“There Is No Formula for Success,” in Photoplay (New York), April 1926.

“Gloria! Miss Swanson in Excelsis,” interview with Andy Warhol and John Kobal, in InterView (New York), September 1972.

On SWANSON: books—

On SWANSON: articles—

Smith, Frederick, “The Silken Gloria,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), February 1920.

Brownlow, Kevin, “Gloria Swanson,” in Film (London), Autumn 1964.

Frank, Michael, “Gloria Swanson: The Queen of Sunset Boulevard,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1990.

* * *

To a generation of filmgoers, Gloria Swanson will only be the half-mad movie queen of Sunset Boulevard who traps screenwriter William Holden in a bizarre world behind the walls of her 1920s mansion. But there is much more to Swanson’s career than just this image indelibly etched in film history.

Swanson was one of the biggest stars of the silent era. No personality was more vital, more visible, more passionately alive in Hollywood. Cecil B. DeMille changed her from a routine Mack Sennett comedienne into an elegant, vivacious, and narcissistic clotheshorse. He seldom required his teenage star to act, merely pose, flirt, tyrannize servants, and discreetly reveal portions of her slim, perfectly proportioned body. She became noted for the bathing rituals DeMille incessantly constructed for her. Precisely reflecting the Paramount taste for European manners, lush lighting, and sexual innuendo, DeMille created, in his drawing room sex comedies such as Don’t Change Your Husband, Why Change Your Wife?, and The Affairs of Anatol, a style that persisted into Swanson’s life outside the studio; her best performances were usually for the papers.

Swanson capitalized on her provocative glance and perpetual slouch to epitomize the emancipated female predator. She collected only the most prestigious male trophies that guaranteed her continued presence in the headlines. Her third husband, an impoverished French marquis, made her one of Hollywood’s first legitimate aristocrats. In the mid-1920s she snared as a lover and financier Joseph P. Kennedy, father of John F. Kennedy. Kennedy backed her in the doomed production of Eric von Stroheim’s Queen Kelly. Ironically, she watches a scene from Queen Kelly projected by her butler played by von Stroheim in Sunset Boulevard.

Swanson was only 30 years old when sound came. She had no stage training, but a clear, almost piercing voice that suited the primitive systems of the time. She even learned to sing for the 1934 musical Music in the Air. But nobody was making films in her intense, sultry style. Clutching at William Holden the way her creator, Gloria Swanson, dug her manicured nails into her stardom, Sunset Boulevard’s Norma Desmond was as deluded in her quest for immortality as Swanson was practical in hers. If operettas could not revive her luster in the 1930s, then maybe a screwball comedy such as Father Takes a Wife would do the trick in the 1940s. Ultimately, Swanson realized that her legend was not genre or trend dependent. The designer clothes diva remained a media magnet for decades because Swanson elegantly embodied the entire bygone era of the silent cinema; her gift for adaptability prevented her from becoming a dinosaur like Norma Desmond.

Still, it could not have been easy for a grandiloquent symbol to find roles in keeping with her eminence. Incredibly, her follow-up to Sunset Boulevard—the greatest comeback of all time—was a tepid farce, Three for Bedroom C. In addition to triumphing on Broadway in a revival of Twentieth Century, Swanson toured with comedic élan in such plays as Butterflies Are Free. That she acted her roles to the hilt seemed of less consequence than her providing living proof of one of Sunset Boulevard’s most famous lines: “Stars are ageless. No one ever leaves a star.” Her fans never did.

Whether she slummed in the gimmicky horror of a literal B movie, The Killer Bees, or sashayed haughtily through the all-star peril of Airport 1975 in variations of her aristocratic screen image, she remained Swanson: Hallowed Defender of Crow’s Feet and Nutritional Warrior against Junk Food. She defeated Time. However confining it must have been to never sink her teeth into another juicy role, it must have been comforting to know that the public did not make the same demands of her that they did of other silent-era survivors such as Crawford and Gish. As always, her private life was her most effective performance. Even in a silly guest spot on The Beverly Hillbillies, Swanson maintained her dignity so thoroughly that even the Clampetts behaved with propriety. Whereas other stars curried admiration, Swanson commanded respect without really trying.

—John Baxter, updated by Robert Pardi

SWEET, Blanche

Films as Actress:

1909 A Man with Three Wives; A Corner in Wheat (Griffith); The Day After (Griffith)
1910 All on Account of the Milk (Powell)
1911 Country Lovers (Sennett); Was He a Coward? (Griffith); The Lonedale Operator (Griffith); How She Triumphed (Griffith); The White Rose of the Wild (Griffith); A Smile of a Child (Griffith); The Last Drop of Water (Griffith); Out from the Shadow (Griffith); The Blind Princess and the Poet (Griffith); The Making of a Man (Griffith); The Long Road (Griffith); Love in the Hills (Griffith); The Battle (Griffith); Through Darkened Vales (Griffith); A Woman Scorned (Woman of Sin) (Griffith)

1912 The Eternal Mother (Griffith); For His Son (Griffith); The Transformation of Mike (Griffith); Under Burning Skies (Griffith); The Goddess of Sagebrush Gulch (Griffith); The Punishment (Griffith); One Is Business, The Other Crime (Griffith); The Lesser Evil (Griffith); The Outcast among Outcasts (Griffith); A Temporary Truce (Griffith); The Spirit Awakened (Griffith); Man’s Last for Gold (Griffith); The Painted Lady (Griffith); With the Enemy’s Help (Griffith); A Change of Spirit (Griffith); Blind Love (Griffith); The Chief’s Blanket (Griffith); A Sailor’s Heart (Griffith); The God Within (Griffith)

1913 Three Friends (Griffith); Pirate Gold; Oil and Water (Griffith); A Chance Deception (Cabanne); Broken Ways (Griffith); The Hero of Little Italy (Griffith); The Stolen Bride (Griffith); Classmates (Griffith); Love in an Apartment Hotel (Griffith); If We Only Knew (Griffith); Death’s Marathon (Griffith); The Coming of Angelo (Griffith); The Mistake (Griffith); Two Men on the Desert (Griffith); The House of Discord (Kirkwood); Her Wedding Bell

1914 The Sentimental Sister; The Massacre (Griffith); Strongheart (Kirkwood); Men and Women (Kirkwood); Ashes of the Past (Kirkwood); The Soul of Honor (Kirkwood); The Painted Lady (Griffith); The Second Mrs. Rosbuck (O’Brien); For Those Unborn (Cabanne); Her Awakening (Cabanne); For Her Father’s Sins (O’Brien); The Tear That Burned (O’Brien); The Odalisque (Griffith); The Little Country Mouse (Griffith); The Old Maid (O’Brien); Judith of Bethulia (Her Condemned Sin) (Griffith) (title role); The Escape (Griffith); “The Marriage of Roses and Lilies” ep. of Home Sweet Home (Griffith); The Avenging Conscience (Griffith) (as Annabel)

1915 The Warrens of Virginia (Cecil B. DeMille); The Captive (Cecil B. DeMille); Stolen Goods (Melford); The Clue (Neill); The Secret Orchard (Reicher); The Case of Becky (Reicher) (title role); The Secret Sin (Reicher) (as twin sisters)

1916 The Ragaraffin (William DeMille); Blacklist (William DeMille); The Sowers (William DeMille); The Thousand Dollar Husband (Young); The Dupe (Reicher); Public Opinion (Reicher); The Storm (Reicher); Unprotected (Young)

1917 The Evil Eye (Melford); Those without Sin (Neilan); The Tides of Barnegat (Neilan); The Silent Partner (Neilan)

1919 The Unpardonable Sin (Neilan) (as Alice Parcot/Dimmy Parcot); The Hashed Hour (Mortimer); A Woman of Pleasure (Worsley); Fighting Cressy (Thornby) (title role)

1920 The Deadlier Sex (Thorny); Simple Souls (Thorny); The Girl in the Web (Thorny); Help Wanted—Male (Object Matrimony) (King); Her Unwilling Husband (Scardon)

1921 That Girl Montana (Thorny)

1922 Quincy Adams Sawyer (Badger)

1923 The Meanest Man in the World (Cline); Anna Christie (Wray) (title role); In the Palace of the King (Flynn)

1924 Those Who Dance (Hillyer); Tess of the D’Urbervilles (Neilan) (title role)

1925 The Sporting Venus (Neilan); His Supreme Moment ( Fitzmaurice); Why Women Love (Carewe); The New Commandment (Higgin)

1926 Bluebeard’s Seven Wives (Santell); The Far Cry (Balboni); The Lady from Hell (Paton) (as Lady Margaret); Diplomacy (Neilan)

1927 Singed (Wray)

1929 The Woman in White (Wilcox) (dual role); Always Faithful (Middleton)

1930 The Woman Racket (Ober and Kelley); Showgirl in Hollywood (LeRoy); The Silver Horde (Archainbaud)

1982 Before the Nickelodeon: The Early Cinema of Edwin S. Porter (Musser) (as narrator)

Publications

By SWEET: articles—

“Keep Your Public Guessing,” in Motion Picture Director (Hollywood), August 1926.

On SWEET: books—

On SWEET: articles—

Smith, Frederick, “The New Blanche Sweet,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), November 1918.

* * *

A pioneering actress, Blanche Sweet had a curious career replete with highlights, falls from favor, and inexplicable absences from the screen. She was one of D. W. Griffith’s first stars at Biograph, the actress chosen to head the cast of his first feature-length production, Judith of Bethulia, and the star of Griffith’s subsequent features. She was set to play the role of Elsie Stoneman in The Birth of a Nation when Griffith gave the part to Lillian Gish. Sweet continued to star in films that did little to enhance her career. Then came Anna Christie, the first filming of the Eugene O’Neill play and a major dramatic success for its star. Another group of features followed, all minor, except for Tess of the D’Urbervilles with a fine performance from Sweet. She had no difficulty adapting to sound film production. She was a delight as the fading silent star in Showgirl in Hollywood, playing a suicide scene with consummate skill. Within two years, however, she had disappeared from the screen never to appear again.

Unlike her contemporary Lillian Gish, Blanche Sweet did not handle her professional life successfully. An unhappy marriage to director Marshall Neilan, too many program features, and too few major productions cut short a promising career. It is unfortunate because she was capable of fine and subtle emotional performances. Her range of characterizations was quite extraordinary, from biblical figures to drug addicts and prostitutes. She was a major silent star who deserved better from her career and deserves more recognition today.

—Anthony Slide
TAKAMINE, Hideko

Films as Actress:

1929 Haha (Nomura) (as Haruko)
1930 Dai-Tokyo no ikkaku (A Corner of Great Tokyo) (Gosho); Reijn (Shimazu); Chichi
1931Watashi no papa-san mamagaku suki; Urahushiki ai; Ai yojinntai to tomo ni are (Shimazu); Bofiu no bara; Onna wa itsuno you nimo; Shimai; I chitaro yai (Nomura); Tokyo no gasho (Tokyo's Chorus) (Ozu) (as the daughter); Reijn no bisho
1932Jonetsu; Nanatsu no umi (Teiso-hen); Edo gonomi; Ryogoku; Tsurigane-so; Akemi no maki, Ryota no maki; Hototogisu (A Cuckoo (Ichikawa); Nezumi-kozo Jirokichi: Kaiketsu-hen (Shimazu); Juku-sai no haru; Yotamonoto to kyakusen-bi; Hoho o yosureba (Shimazu); Riso no otto; Rappa to musume (Shimazu); Hatsuko no haru
1934Onna to umareta karianya; Toyo no hahaha; Nukashashishashi; Nihon josei no uta; Sonoyo no onna (Shimazu)
1935 Haha no ai (Ikeda); Ramura etenureru
1936Shindo: Akemi no maki, Ryota no maki
1937Hanayome karuta (Gosho); Hanakago no uta (Song of the Flower Basket) (Gosho) (as Hamako); Otto no teiso: Haru kitareba, Aki futatabi (Yamamoto) (as Musuko); Edoko Kenchan; Misemono okoku; Ojo-san; Nanpu no oka; Kaminari oyaji
1938Hanataba no yume; Shinryu-ru; Tsuzurikata kyoshitsu (Yamamoto) (as Masako); Niji tatsu oka (Otani); Chokoreito to heitai (Sato)
1939Urahushiki shappatsu (Yamamoto); Hajoji sensei (Abe); Chushingura; Higuchi Ichiyoshibi (Nami); Wareagera kyokan (Our Teacher) (Imai)
1940Hideo no oendancho (Chiba); Shinpen Tange Sazen: Koiguruma no maki; Sozyakuyichi to tomoni (Yamamoto); Ane no shassee (Kondo); Tsurige teno (Ishida); Songo
1941Sakujitsu kieta otoko (Makino) (as Okyo); Uma (Horse) (Yamamoto) (as Ine); Awa no odoriko (Makino); Jogakuseki; Hideo no sho-son (Hideo the Bus Conductor) (Naruse)
1942 Musashibo Benkei; Kobo no seishun; Matteita oyoko (Makino); Minami kara kaetta hito; Fukei-zu (Makino) (as Taeho); Suiko-den (as Taeho); Zohu fuhei-zu (Makino) (as Taeho)
1943Ahen senso (Makino); Ai no sekai (Aoyagi); Yamaneko Tomi no hanashi; Hanako-sen; Hyoroku yume monoqatarci; Wakiki hi no yorokobi
1944Obasaan; Sanjaku Sagoei; Yottsu no kkek
1945Shori no himade
1946Urashima Taro no koei (The Descendants of Taro Urashima) (Naruse); Aru yo no tonosuma (Lord for a Night) (Kinugasa) (as Taeko); Toho shoboto; Kita no san-nin (Saeoki); Yoki no onna (Saeoki)
1947Toho sen-ichi-ya (1001 Nights with Toho) (Ichikawa); Oedo no oni (Hagiwara); Ai yo hoshi to tomoni (Abe); Kofukan he no shotai (Chiba)
1948Aijo shindansho; "Machiko" yori: Hana hiraku (A Flower Blooms) (Ichikawa); Sanbyaku-rukujugo-ya: (365 Nights in Tokyo); Tokyo-hen (Ichikawa); Sanbyaku-rukujugo-ya: (365 Nights in Osaka) (Ichikawa); Niji o idaku shojo
1949Haru no tawamure (Yamamoto); Gudobai (Shima); Ginza kankan musume (Shima)
1950Shyo-akari (Shima); Sasameyuki (Abe) (as Taeko); Munekata Shimai (The Munekata Sisters) (Ozu) (as Mariko); Senka o kote; Sasaki Kojiro
1951Onna no mizukakami; karumen Kokyo ni kaeru (Carmen Comes Home) (Kinoshita) (title role); Zoku Sasaki Kojiro; Karumen Junjo-su (Carmen’s Pure Love) (Kinoshita) (title role); Waguya wa tanoshi (Nakamura)
1952Asa no hamon (Trouble in the Morning; Morning Conflicts) (Gosho) (as Atsuko Takimoto); Tokyo no ekkaku; Inazuma (Lightning) (Naruse); Onna to iu shiro; Mari no maki; Onna to iu shiro; Yuko no maki
1953Entotsu no mieri basho (Four Chimneys; Where Chimneys Are Seen) (Gosho) (as Senko Azuma); Asu wo dacchi da; Gan (Wild Geese) (Toyoda) (as Otama)
1954Dai-ni no seppun; Onna no son (The Garden of Women) (Kinoshita) (as Yoshi Deishi); Kono hitori sora no dokokini; Nijushi no hitomi (Twenty-Four Eyes) (Kinoshita) (as Miss Hisako Oishi)
1955Uigumo (Floating Clouds) (Naruse) (as Yukiko Koda); Watariidori ittsukaeru (Hisa matsusu); Toodo kuno (Distant Clouds) (Kinoshita); Kuchizuke; Onna doshi
1956Shin Heike monogatari Yoshinaka o meguru san-nin no onna (Three Women around Yoshinaka) (Kinugasa) (as Fuyuhime); Kodomo no me (Kawazu); Tsunamoko kokoro (A Wife’s Heart) (Naruse); Nagarera (Flowing) (Naruse)
1957  Kumo no bohyo yori: Sora yukaba; Arakure (Untamed) (Naruse) (as Oshima); Yorokobi no Kanashimi no ikotsuitsuki (The Lighthouse) (Kinoshita); Facen no tomoshibi (A Candle in the Wind; Danger Stalks Near) (Kinoshita)
1958  Harikomi (Nomura); Muhomatsu no issho (The Rickshaw Man) (Inagaki) (as Mrs. Yoshiko Yoshioka)
1960  Onna ga kaidan o agaru toki (When a Woman Ascends the Stairs) (Naruse) (as Keiko Yashiro); Musume tsuma haka (Daughters, Wives, and a Mother) (Naruse); Fuefuki-gawa (The River Fuefuki) (Kinoshita)
1961  Namonaku mazushiku utsukushiku (Happiness of Us Alone) (Kinoshita) (as Akiko Katayama); Ningen no joken III (A Soldier's Prayer; The Human Condition) (Kobayashi) (as woman in settler's village); Tsuma to shite haka to shite (As a Wife; As a Woman; The Other Woman) (Naruse); Eien no hito (The Bitter Spirit; Immortal Love) (Kinoshita)
1962  Onna no za (The Wiser Age; Woman's Status) (Naruse); Futari de aruita ikutoshitsuki (The Seasons We Walked Together) (Kinoshita); Horoki (A Wanderer's Notebook; Lonely Lane) (Naruse) (as Fumiko Hayashi); Burari burabura monogatari (My Hobo) (Matsuyama) (as Komako)
1963  Onna no rekishi (A Woman's Life; A Woman's Story) (Naruse) (as Nobuko)
1964  Midareru (Yearning) (Naruse) (as Reiko Morita)
1965  Ware hitotsubu no mugi naredo (Could I but Live) (Matsuyama) (as Ine Rokujo) (Kinoshita)
1966  Hikinige (Moment of Terror) (Naruse) (as the mother)
1967  Zoku namo naku mazushiku utsukushiku (Matsuyama); Chichi to ko (Our Silent Love) (Matsuyama); Hanao Seiisha no tsuma (The Wife of Seiisha Hanaoka) (Masumura) (as Ojaku)
1969  Oni no sumu yakata (Devil's Temple) (Misumi) (as Kaede)
1973  Kokotsu no hito (Toyoda)
1976  Suri Lanka no ai to wakare (Love and Separation in Sri Lanka) (Kinoshita); Futari no Iida
1979  Shodo satsujin: Musuko yo (Oh My Son!) (Kinoshita) (as the mother)

Publications

By TAKAMINE: articles—

By TAKAMINE: books—

Pari hitori-aruki, Tokyo, 1953.
Mainai tsuburo, Tokyo, 1955.
Watashi no interview, Tokyo, 1958.
Iomono mitsuketa, Tokyo, 1979.
Tabi wa mitchura Gandala, with Zenzo Matsuyama, Tokyo, 1979.
Daidokoro no okestra, Tokyo, 1982.
Ninjo banashi matsutaro, Tokyo, 1985.
Watashi no umehara ryuzaburo, Tokyo, 1988.

On TAKAMINE: article—

Birnbaum, P., “‘The Odor of Pickled Radishes,’” in New Yorker, 5 November 1990.

* * *

From her first screen appearance at age five, Hideo Takamine was for decades one of the most beloved Japanese screen stars. At the Shochiku Studio, she appeared in films of Gosho, Shimazu, Hotei Nomura, and others, mostly in the family-film genre. Her recognition increased after she moved to the Toho Studio and began to work under the producer Fujimoto and the director Kajiro Yamamoto. In Tsuzukikata kyoshitsu, based on a best-selling autobiography, she played an impoverished 13-year-old girl struggling to live a decent life. In Uma she played a village girl who raises a horse for the army, and her affection for the horse is delicately accented by the naturalistic direction of the film. In these two films, Takamine won critical acclaim, in addition to her popular fame.

After the Toho labor union’s strike of 1946, she left for a new studio, Shin-Toho, and became the main actress there. Her most representative work at this studio was in Ozu’s The Munekata Sisters, to which she brought her light, comic flair to the serious and tragic tone of the film. After becoming freelance, she began to choose more meaningful roles. Among her various postwar roles, her collaborations with Naruse, Kinoshita, and her husband, Matsuyama, are most important.

Takamine became the indispensable heroine in 12 Naruse films, in which she created the archetype of the strong-willed, hardworking woman unrewarded at the bottom of society or subjugated by the family system. Among these excellent portrayals, her roles in Floating Clouds was outstanding, bringing her and the film all the major awards of 1955. Playing a character living in the confusion of postwar Japan, she gave a passionate performance as a woman who cannot help clinging to an unfaithful man, leading to her own destruction.

While Naruse’s heroines tend to be caught in tense conflicts with men, which eventually are resolved by the woman’s spiritual victory, the heroines of Kinoshita and his student Matsuyama are more melodramatic. Takamine impressively played humanistic heroines who survive their unfortunate environment by good-natured sincere efforts. She moved audiences to tears with her performance in Kinoshita’s Twenty-Four Eyes and The Lighthouse and in Matsuyama’s Zoku namo naku mazushiku utsukushiku. She also showed her comedic talent as a half-witted stripper in Kinoshita’s light satires Carmen Comes Home and Carmen’s Pure Love, which reflected the optimistic mood of the immediately postwar democracy. As Takamine gradually undertook more serious roles, however, she had little subsequent opportunity to demonstrate her comic flair. entertainer George Jessel, 1934 (divorced 1939); 3) Carvel James, 1946. Career: Model; actress for Vitagraph in New York at age 13; 1911—contract with Vitagraph; made many short films in the period 1910–15; 1913—first billing as Norma Talmadge; 1915—contract with National Pictures, then with D. W. Griffith; 1916—Norma Talmadge Film Company set up by Joseph Schenck: first film for the company, Panthea, 1917; 1930—retired from films. Died: 24 December 1957.

Films as Actress:

(between 1910–15, Talmadge appeared in numerous Vitagraph shorts including:)

1910 The Household Pest; The Dixie Mother; Love of Chrysanthemum; A Broken Spell; Uncle Tom’s Cabin
1911 Paola and Francesca; In Neighboring Kingdoms; Mrs. ‘Enery ‘Awkins; A Tale of Two Cities (Blackton) (as a midinette); The Sky Pilot; The General’s Daughter; The Thumb Print; Her Hero; The Child Crusoes
1912 The First Violin (Brooke); The Troublesome Stepdaughters; Mr. Butler Butts; Fortunes of a Composer; Omens and Oracles; The Midget’s Revenge; The Lovesick Maidens of Cuddleton; Captain Barnacle’s Messmate; O’Hara—Squatter and Philosopher; Casey at the Bat
1913 Just Show People; Extremities; His Official Appointment; Under the Daisies (Brooke); The Doctor’s Secret (Brooke); Father’s Husband (Brooke); Fanny’s Conspiracy (Brooke); His Silver Bachelorhood (Brooke); ‘Arriet’s Baby; An Old Man’s Love Story; Solitaires; The Other Woman; The Blue Rose; An Elopement at Home (Brooke); The Honorable Algernon (Brooke); His Little Page (Brooke); Officer John Donovan (Brooke); The Sacrifice of Kathleen (Brooke); Counsel for the Defense; The Silver Cigarette Case
1914 Sawdust and Salome (Brooke); The Vavasour Ball; The Helpful Sisterhood (Brooke); Cupid versus Money; The Right of Way (Brooke); John Rance—Gentleman (Brooke); Under False Colours (Brooke); Goodbye Summer (Brooke); The Caring of Myra May; Sunshine and Shadow (Brooke); A Daughter of Israel (Brooke); Miser Murphy’s Wedding Present (Brooke); Old Reliable (Brooke); The Hex on Fogg’s Millions (Thomson); The Hidden Letters (Brooke); Memories and Men’s Souls (Brooke); Politics and the Press (Brooke); The Mill of Life; A Loan Shark King (Brooke); The Peacemaker (Brooke)
1915 A Daughter’s Strange Inheritance; Janet of the Chorus; The Pillar of Flame; The Barrier of Faith; The Criminal; The Battle Cry of Peace (North); The Crown Prince’s Double (Brooke); The Captivating Mary Carstairs (Mitchell)
1916 The Missing Links (Ingraham); Martha’s Vindication (S. and C. Franklin); The Children in the House (S. and C. Franklin); Going Straight (Corruption) (S. and C. Franklin); The Devil’s Needle (Withey); The Social Secretary (Emerson); Fifty-Fifty (Dwan)
1917 Panthea (Dwan); The Law of Compensation (Styger and Goulden); Poppy (Jose); The Moth (Jose); The Secret of the Storm Country (Miller)
1918 Ghosts of Yesterday (Miller); By Right of Purchase (Miller); Deluxe Annie (West); The Safety Curtain (Franklin); Her Only Way (Franklin); The Forbidden City (Franklin); The Heart of Weton (Franklin)
1919 Prohibition Wife (Franklin); The New Moon (Withey); The Way of a Woman (Leonard); Isle of Conquest (Jose)
1920 She Loves and Lies (Withey); A Daughter of Two Worlds (Young); The Woman Gives (Neill); Yes or No? (Neill); The Branded Woman (Parker); Passion Flower (Love or Hate) (Brenon); The Sign on the Door (Brenon); The Wonderful Thing (Brenon); Love’s Redemption (Parker)
1922 Smilin’ Through (Franklin); The Eternal Flame (Lloyd)
1923 The Voice from the Minaret (Lloyd); Within the Law (Lloyd); Ashes of Vengeance (Lloyd); Song of Love (Dust of Desire) (Marion and Franklin)
1924 Secrets (Borzage); The Only Woman (Olcott)
1925 The Lady (Borzage); Graustark (Buchowitzki)
1926 Kiki (Brown)
1927 Camille (Niblo) (title role)
1928 The Dove (West); The Woman Disputed (King and Taylor)
1929 New York Nights (Milestone)
1930 DuBarry: Woman of Passion (Taylor) (title role)

Publications

By TALMADGE: articles—

‘The Amazing Interview,’’ with Faith Service in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), January 1920.
‘My Lucky Break,’’ in Pictures and Picturegoer, July 1928.

On TALMADGE: books—

On TALMADGE: articles—

St. Johns, Adela Rogers, ‘‘Our One and Only Great Actress,’’ in Photoplay (New York), February 1926.

---

Theatrical families were nothing new in Hollywood, but the offspring of Peg Talmadge secured a permanent place in film history. They may not have received the accolades of revival accorded to other players, but their contribution to the cinema was nevertheless considerable.

The eldest of the three Talmadge girls, Norma began her film career with Vitagraph in New York. She made several short films before attracting attention with her small role as the little mididette who accompanied Maurice Costello (Sidney Carton) on his way to the guillotine in the 1911 Tale of Two Cities. She eventually blossomed under the direction of Van Dyke Brooks and played frequently with Antonio Moreno as her leading man. In 1915 she made her last appearance with Vitagraph in the propaganda-laden Battle Cry of Peace.

A move to the National Picture Corporation with a more gratifying contract did not meet with success. She then joined D. W. Griffith’s Fine Arts Company, for which she made seven films—none, however, directed by Griffith. Having made no less than 250 films for Vitagraph, Talmadge had by now developed a gallery of threatened and misunderstood heroines which appealed to her fans. Her great beauty was to remain a permanent asset. The Social Secretary, a comedy written by Anita Loos and directed by John Emerson, gave her an opportunity to disguise that beauty as a girl trying to avoid the unwelcome attentions of her male employers.

Her marriage to Joseph M. Schenck in 1916 was all-important. Under his aegis, and the banner of The Norma Talmadge Film Company, she seriously challenged the popularity of Mary Pickford. Her first film for the company was Pantherea, directed by Allan Dwan. She made many films opposite Eugene O’Brien, a sophisticated and polished actor who provided a perfect foil to her beauty. Her roles included Chinese maidens, Indian half-breeds, and Russian noblemen. A series of films for First National included those directed by Herbert Brenon, whose version of Benevente’s Passion Flower allowed her to play a proud Spanish girl caught up in the toils of love and murder. Sidney Franklin’s Smilin’ Through was one of her most popular films—a sentimental story that has earned several remakes. The Eternal Flame, based on Balzac’s La Duchesse de Langeais, was a costume picture, as was Ashes of Vengeance, set in the time of the Medicis in France. Bayard Veiller’s Within the Law presented her as a wrongly imprisoned girl driven to seek revenge through blackmail, but eventually redeemed by love and cleared of her supposed crime. In contrast, the sentimental Secrets, directed by Frank Borzage, shows her as an old lady at her sick husband’s bedside, dreaming of the past episodes of her life. Inevitably she attempted the role of the Lady of the Camellias in Camille, directed by Frank Niiblo. Her leading man was the attractive Gilbert Roland, with whom she was to have an affair for some years. The film was elaborately staged, and Talmadge’s performance was good, but Niiblo never brought the story to life. It is interesting to note that Armand’s father was played by her old Vitagraph colleague Maurice Costello.

By now Talmadge was installed in Hollywood and part of the film establishment. She and Schenck remained married until 1927, but he continued to advise her on business matters after the divorce. She acted with Roland in a Mexican story, The Dove, and her last silent film was the unhappy The Woman Disputed, directed by Henry King, and mangled by front office politics. It was loosely based on de Maupassant’s Boule de Suif.

Her entry into talking pictures was not auspicious. New York Nights and DuBarry: Woman of Passion failed (in spite of the elaborate sets by William Cameron Menzies), and her retirement was immediate.

---

TANAKA, Kinuyo

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Shinmomoske City, 29 December 1909. Education: Attended Tennoji Elementary School, Osaka to 1919; studied the musical instrument the chikuzen-biwa, licence 1919. Family: Married the director Hiroshi Shimizu, 1929 (divorced 1929). Career: 1920–23—member of the Biwa Shojo Kageki girls revue, Osaka; 1924—film debut in Genroku onna; 1925—joined Shochiku Kamata Studio, Tokyo, and over the next 15 years became their leading star; 1953—directed her first film, Koibumi; appeared on television from the late 1960s. Awards: Japan Mainichi Eiga Concourse, 1947, 1948, 1957, 1960, 1974; Japan Kinema Jumpo Awards for Best Actress, for Ballad of Narayama, 1958, and Sandakan, House No. 8, 1974. Best Actress, Berlin Festival, for Sandakan, House No. 8, 1975. Died: Of a brain tumor, 21 March 1977.

Films as Actress:

- 1924 Genroku onna (Nomura) (as a maid); Mura no bokujō (Shimizu) (as Oharu)
- 1925 Chisaki tabigein (Shimizu); Gekitsu no sakebi (Shimizu); Yukan naru koi (Shimazu); Shizen wa sabaku (Shimazu); Ishinji no hyakunin-giri (Shimizu); Koi no torinawa (Shimizu); Ochimusha (Shimizu); Goiken Gomuyo
- 1926 Nayamashiki koro (Shimizu); Machi no hitobito (People in the Town; Town People) (Gosho); Honryu (A Torrent) (Gosho); Ara nonkida ne (Obocchan) (Shimazu); Uragirareta mono (Shimizu); Koi no ikujii (Yoto) (Shimizu); Karabotan (Nomura); Shimizu no Jirocho Zen-den: Kohen Ashura fukushu no maki (Kamata); Kanojo (She; Girl Friend) (Gosho); Hiramuku yaiba
- 1927 Kurayami; Chikashitsutsu; Yakko no Koman; Tennoji no harakiri; Takada-no-baba; Hazuakashiyume (Shameful Dream; Intimate Dream) (Gosho); Kokkyo no uta; Mado; Shinju fujin; Byakkotai; Higan sen-nin giri; Murasabi no Sankichi; Yoru no kyoja; Kissei'hinjyu
- 1928 Kindai musha shuyo (Ushihara); Kaikoku-ki (Tales from a Country by the Sea) (Kinugasa); Moshimo kanojo ga; Haha yo kimini no na o kegasu nakare (Mother, Do Not Shame Your Name) (Gosho); Mura na hanayome (The Village Bride) (Gosho); Kangeki jidai (Ushihara); Funetsu so at; Eien no kokoro; Tetsu no shojo; Appare binanshi
- 1929 Hito no yo no sugata (The Situation of the Human World; Man’s Worldly Appearance) (Gosho); Kare to denen (Ushihara); Gokarosama; Riku no ooja (Ushihara); Kagayaku
Showa; Seishun kokyogaku; Mura no kajiya; Echigo-jishi; Kare to jinsei (Ushihara); Hinarai naku sato; Daitokai: Bakuhatsu-hen (Ushihara); Shin josei-kagami; Yokina uta Daigaku wa detakeredo (I Graduated, But . . . ) (Ozu) (as Michiko); Yama no gaika (Ushihara)

Hohoem o jinse i (A Smiling Life) (Gosho); Onna wa doko he ita; Daitokai: Bakuhatsu-hen (Ushihara); Kinuyo monogatari (The Kinuyo Story) (Gosho); Aiyoku no koi; Wakezono yo naze naku ka (Ushihara); Ojosan (Young Miss) (Ozu); Seisun-fur, Shingun (Ushihara); Tekken sei dan

Rakuda wa shitakeredo (I Flunked, But . . . ) (Ozu) (as Sayoko); Ai yo jinrui to tomio ni are; Hakoiri musume (Aizen tsubaki) (1940)

Okayo no kakuge (Okayo no kakugo) (Nomura); Sumai no ratai-jiken; Seikatsusen ABC: Fujie nomaki (Shimazu) (as Fujie); Seikatsusen ABC: Zenpen (Shimazu) (as Kieko)

Konjiki-yasha (Konjiki-yasha) (Shimizu) (as Kiyoko Hirayama); Jinsei wa moenu (Kiiroi karasu) (Inagaki); Kono ten no niji (Kanashimi wa onna dakeni) (Naruse); Kiiroi karasu; Wataridori itsu kaeru (Sanshu dayu) (Mizoguchi) (as Miyakichi); Engeiji ringu (Engeiji ringu) (Shimizu); Oen-dancho no kumoi (Yakuzai mo) (Yamada and his wife)

Hanayome no negoto (Sleeping Words of the Bride; The Bride Talks in Her Sleep) (Gosho) (as Haruko); Izu no odoriko (Dancing Girls of Izu) (Gosho) (as Kaoru); Tokyo no onna (A Tokyo Woman) (Ozu) (as Harue); Oen-dancho no koi; Hijosen no onna (Dragnet Girl) (Ozu) (as Tokiko); Seidom; Kekkonkaido; Yomeiri mae; Chinchoge (Nomura); Futamabat葵

Toyo no ha ha; Fukei-zero (Nomura); Sakura onda; Chijo no seiza; Chijo-ren, Seizahen (Nomura); Shinkon-ryoko (Nomura); Machi no bofu (Nomura); Osaka koisugata (Shimazu); Sono yo no onna (Shimazu); Watashi no nisan (Shimazu)

Hakoiri musume (An Innocent Maid) (Ozu); Shunkin-sho; Okoto to Sasuke (Shimazu) (as Okoto); Yume Utsutsu; Eikyu no ai; Semete koyoi o; Jinsie ni onimotsu (Burdern of Life) (Gosho) (as Itu); Hanayome kurabe

Naniwa erejii (Osaka Elegy) (Mizoguchi) (as Ochika); Onatsu Seijuro (Onouzuka); Dansuii tai; Yoshio: Akemi no make; Ryota no maki (New Way) (Gosho); Waga ha ha no sho; Hanakagoko no uta (Song of the Flower Basket) (Gosho) (as Yoko Morii); Joi Kinuyo sensei (Nomura); Okoto no tsugumon (Nomura)

Bancho sarayashiki (Fuyushima); Akatsuki wa tokedo (1935)

Hanauta ojosan; Shupatsu; Haha to ko (Shibuya); Aizen katsura (Nomura) (as Katsue Takaishi); Haha no uta; Shinsashika; Tojin Okichi, Frankish hen

Okayo no kakuge; Minamikaze (Shibuya); Shunrai; Zoku aizen katsura (Nomura) (as Katsue Takaishi); Hana aru zasso (Shimizu); Kawa no mi wa akai (Shimizu); Aizen katsura: Kanketsu-hen (Nomura) (as Katsue Takaishi)

Aizen tsubaki; Watashi niwa otto ga aru; Kinuyo no hatsukoi (Nomura); Akatsuki ni inoru; Josei no kakuge; Butai sugata; Okin to banto (Nomura)

Toka kan no jinsei; Genki de ikauyo (Nomura); Hana (Flower) (Yoshimura); Kanzashi (Shimizu); Joi no Kiroku (Shimizu)
(Kinoshita); Taiheiyo hitoribocchi (Alone in the Pacific; My Enemy the Sea) (Ichikawa); Hikaru umi (Nakahira)

1964 Koge (The Scent of Incense) (Kinoshita); Kono sora no aru kagiri

1965 Haha no saigetsu; Akahige (Red Beard) (Kurosawa) (as Yasumoto’s mother)

1966 Eriti no wakadaisho (Campus a Go-Go) (Iwaschi); Arapatsu no wakadaisho (It Started in the Alps) (Furusawa)

1972 Otoko wa tsuraiyo: Torajiro yume-makura (Yamada)

1974 Sanba (Nakamura); Sandakan hashi-ban shokan: Bokyo (Sandakan, House No. 8) (Kumai) (as Osaki)

1975 Aru eiga kantoka no shogai: Mizoguchi Kenji no kiroka (Life of a Film Director: Record of Kenji Mizoguchi) (Shindo—doc)

1976 Kita no misaki (Kumai); Daichi no komori-uta (Masumura)

Films as Director:

1953 Koibumi (+ ro)

1955 Tsuki wo noborinu (+ ro); Nyudo yo eien nare (+ ro)

1960 Ruten no oohi (+ ro); O-gin Sama (Love under the Crucifix)

Publications

On TANAKA: book—

Shindo, Kaneto, Shoestu Tanaka Kinuyo, Tokyo, 1983.

On TANAKA: articles—

* * *

Kinuyo Tanaka’s half-century of film stardom began in the 1920s at the Shochiku Studio, leading her to become one of the few Japanese woman directors (producing six films between 1953–62).

She started appearing in contemporary and period melodramas by Hotei Nomura, Shimazu, and Gosho—specializing in cute and naive girl’s roles. Through her casting opposite popular stars such as Denmei Suzuki (for director Ushihara) and Chojiro Hayashi (for director Kinugasa), she gradually established her stardom. After she appeared in the first Japanese talkie, Gosho’s Madame and Wife, her soft voice, with a colloquial accent, attracted more fans. Her attractive, light, and familiar character brought a rush of popularity, making her one of the most commercially successful stars in the early 1930s. Her legendary roles include the heroines of Konjiki-yasha and Zoku aizen katsuma.

Her real critical recognition came when she played the blind Koto player in Shimazu’s Okoto to Saisuke. Not only did she master the difficult role as a blind woman; she enriched her acting style by successfully conveying the complicated psychology of a strong-willed, wealthy girl, after tremendous effort and training.

The work for Mizoguchi finally awakened Tanaka as an actress. From 1936 (Osaka Elegy) she collaborated with this perfectionist director until 1954 (The Woman of Rumor). They later parted when she decided to become a director herself. Mizoguchi demanded that she study the role thoroughly, including its background, and her hard work successfully met Mizoguchi’s extremely high artistic standards.

She became his indispensable partner, creating his ideal woman type in various roles, usually exploited by men, yet in the end ‘saving’ them by warmly supporting them without thought of reward. As Oharu in Life of Oharu, she portrayed a woman’s terrible fate at the hands of men and the social system. Particularly memorable was her performance as the lowest-class street walker, in which she dared to show the ultimate ugliness and misery of aged and weary womanhood. Contrasting with this dramatic portrayal, her performance as a warm wife who welcomes her unfaithful potter husband in Ugetsu monogatari was rather static, yet equally impressive, and elicited equally sensational acclaim from the critics and public.

Tanaka also did fine work collaborating with Naruse (Ginza Cosmetics and Mother) and Gosho (Four Chimneys), playing ordinary, hard-working women with her strong screen presence and convincingly realistic acting style.

—Kyoko Hirano

TANDY, Jessica

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Cast Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>The Indiscretions of Eve (New Year’s Eve)</td>
<td>(Lewis)</td>
<td>(as Maid)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Murder in the Family</td>
<td>(Parker)</td>
<td>(as Ann Osborne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>The Seventh Cross (The Seven Crosses)</td>
<td>(Zinneman)</td>
<td>(as Liesel Roeder); Blonde Fever (Whorf) (uncredited)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>The Valley of Decision</td>
<td>(Garnett)</td>
<td>(as Kate Leckie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Forever Amber</td>
<td>(Preminger)</td>
<td>(as Nan Britton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>A Woman’s Vengeance (The Gioconda Smile)</td>
<td>(Korda)</td>
<td>(as Janet Spence)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>September Affair</td>
<td>(Dieterle)</td>
<td>(as Catherine Lawrence)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>The Desert Fox: The Story of Rommel</td>
<td>(Hathaway)</td>
<td>(as Lucie Rommel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>The Light in the Forest</td>
<td>(Daugherty)</td>
<td>(as Myra Butler)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>The Fallen Idol</td>
<td>(Narizzano—for TV); The Moon and Sixpence (Mulligan—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Blanche Stroeve)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Hemingway’s Adventures of a Young Man (Adventures of a Young Man)</td>
<td>(Ritt)</td>
<td>(as Mrs. Adams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>The Birds</td>
<td>(Hitchcock)</td>
<td>(as Lydia Brenner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Butley</td>
<td>(Pinter)</td>
<td>(as Edna Shaft)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Honky Tonk Freeway</td>
<td>(Schlesinger)</td>
<td>(as Carol); The Gin Game (Nichols—for TV) (as Foncia Dorsey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Best Friends</td>
<td>(Jewison)</td>
<td>(as Eleanor McCullen); Still of the Night (Benton) (as Grace Rice); The World According to Garp (Hill) (as Mrs. Fields)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Bostonians</td>
<td>(Ivory)</td>
<td>(as Miss Birdseye)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On TANDY: books—

On TANDY: articles—

Seidenberg, R. “Driving Miss Daisy,” in American Film (Marion, OH), vol. 15, no. 4, January 1990.

Obituary, in Film Dienst (Cologne), vol. 47, no. 20, 27 September 1994.

By the end of her life, Jessica Tandy was hailed as a Hollywood legend, and acclaimed one of the screen’s great talents. Her cinematic beginnings were much more humble.

Born in England, Tandy worked her way up through the ranks of the British repertory system before making her way to the London stage, where she had a successful career during the 1930s. She played Ophelia to John Gielgud’s 1934 Hamlet and Viola in Tyrone Guthrie’s acclaimed Twelfth Night three years later. She made her way across the Atlantic in 1940 and, shortly after arriving in New York City, she met a young Canadian actor named Hume Cronyn. The couple was married in 1942 and together they headed for Hollywood, where Cronyn’s career quickly took off. Tandy, however, had a much more difficult go of it.

The actress made her American screen debut in 1944 Fred Zinneman’s World War II thriller, The Seventh Cross, appearing with Spencer Tracy, Agnes Moorehead, and Cronyn. But it was her husband who received the acclaim—and an Oscar nomination for Best Supporting Actor. Tandy was instead relegated to playing maids in hits such as Dragonwyck and Forever Amber. In 1946, Tennessee Williams chose Tandy to play Blanche DuBois in his new play, A Streetcar Named Desire. The actress’ electrifying performance garnered her rave reviews and a Tony for Best Actress. But it did not earn her the role in the 1951 Hollywood film, which went to Vivien Leigh. Instead, during the 1950s, Tandy and Cronyn became America’s most... acclaimed stage duo, the successors to Lunt and Fontanne. Tandy did not make a significant film contribution until 1963, when she played the frosty and controlling mother in Alfred Hitchcock’s The Birds. Tandy and Cronyn continued to win accolades for stage performances such as The Gin Game, which earned Tandy her second Oscar. But it wasn’t until the actress entered her seventies that she began to find work suited to her extraordinary talent. When Ron Howard assembled a star-studded cast of Hollywood veterans for Cocoon, he did not overlook Cronyn and Tandy. The immensely popular film about senior citizens who literally find the fountain of youth ignited Tandy’s career, and she appeared in batteries not included in 1987 and Cocoon: The Return the following year.

In 1989, director Bruce Beresford cast the 80-year-old Tandy as Miss Daisy Werthan in Driving Miss Daisy. Spanning twenty-five years, from 1948 to 1973, the film depicts the relationship between a wealthy Southern Jewish widow (Tandy) and her dignified African American chauffeur (Morgan Freeman). After years of developing her acting skills in tandem with her husband, Tandy and Freeman achieve what critic Pauline Kael called “a beautiful equilibrium.” In a performance that many felt was the best of her long career, Tandy won the Oscar for Best Actress.

During her eighties, Tandy made up for lost time by becoming a fixture in films aimed largely at female audiences, such as Fried Green Tomatoes (1991), Used People (1992), and Nobody’s Fool (1994). In her last three films, the indomitable spirit that Tandy brought to her stage performances and that kept her committed to a profession that sometimes overlooked her wide-ranging talents finally shone through and found a place in the hearts and minds of film audiences. The fact that Hollywood did not come to appreciate Jessica Tandy sooner can only be rued, even as fans of superb acting can be grateful that her formidable talents finally found a suitable cinematic home.

—Victoria Price

---

TAYLOR, Elizabeth

Nationality: British. Born: Elizabeth Rosemond Taylor in London on 27 February 1932. Education: Attended the Hawthorne School, Beverly Hills, California; MGM studio school; University High School, Hollywood, graduated 1950. Family: Married 1) Conrad “Nicky” Hilton, Jr., 1950 (divorced 1951); 2) the actor Michael Wilding, 1952 (divorced 1957), sons: Michael and Christopher; 3) the producer Michael Todd, 1957 (died 1958), daughter: Elizabeth Frances; 4) the singer Eddie Fisher, 1959 (divorced 1964); 5) the actor Richard Burton, 1964 (divorced 1974; remarried 1975, divorced 1976), adopted daughter: Maria; 6) the politician John Warner, 1976 (divorced); 7) Larry Fortensky, 1991 (divorced, 1996). Career: Evacuated to California at outbreak of World War II; 1942—film debut as child in There’s One Born Every Minute; 1943—contract with MGM: series of successful films as child, adolescent, and adult over the next ten years; 1981—on Broadway in The Little Foxes; 1985-present—founder and National Chairman of American Foundation for AIDS Research; in TV mini-serires North and South; 1987—launched own perfume line. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award for Butterfield 8, 1960; Best Actress Academy Award, Best Actress, New York Film Critics, and Best Actress, British Academy, for Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, 1966; Best Actress, Berlin Festival, for Hammersmith Is Out, 1972; French Légion d’honneur, 1987; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1993; Dame of British Empire, 2000. Agent: Chén Sam, 506 E 74th Street, New York, NY 10021, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1942 There’s One Born Every Minute (Young) (as Gloria)
1943 Lassie Come Home (Wilcox) (as Priscilla)
1944 Jane Eyre (Stevenson) (as Helen Burns); The White Cliffs of Dover (Brown) (as Betsy, age 10); National Velvet (Brown) (as Velvet Brown)
1946 Cocoon (Willcox) (as Kathie Merrick)
1947 Cynthia (Leonard) (title role); Life with Father (Curtiz) (as Mary Skinner)
1948 A Date with Judy (Thorpe) (as Carol Foster); Julia Misbehaves (Conway) (as Susan Packett)
1949 Little Women (LeRoy) (as Amy)
1950 Conspirator (Saville) (as Melinda Greyton); The Big Hangover (Krasna) (as Mary Belney); Father of the Bride (Minnelli) (as Kay Banks)
1951 Father’s Little Dividend (Minnelli) (as Kay Dunston); A Place in the Sun (Stevens) (as Angela Vickers); Quo Vadis (LeRoy) (cameo role); Callaway Went Thataway (Panama) (as herself)
1952 Love Is Better Than Ever (Donen) (as Anastacia Macaboy); Ivanhoe (Thorpe) (as Rebecca)
1953 The Girl Who Had Everything (Thorpe) (as Jean Latimer)
1954 Rhapsody (Charles Vidor) (as Louise Durant); Elephant Walk (Dieterle) (as Ruth Wiley); Beau Brummel (Bernhardt) (as Lady Patricia); The Last Time I Saw Paris (Richard Brooks) (as Helen Ellsworth)
1956 Giant (Stevens) (as Leslie Lynnton Benedict)
1957 Raintree County (Dmytryk) (as Susanna Drake)
1958 Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Brooks) (as Maggie Pollit)
1959 Suddenly, Last Summer (Mankiewicz) (as Catherine Holly)
1960 Scent of Mystery (Cardiff) (as Sally Kennedy); Butterfield 8 (Daniel Mann) (as Gloria Wandrous)
1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz) (title role); The V.I.P.s (Asquith) (as Frances Andros)
1965 The Sandpiper (Minnelli) (as Laura Reynolds)
1966 Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Nichols) (as Martha)
1967 The Taming of the Shrew (Zeffirelli) (as Katharina, + pr); Reflections in a Golden Eye (Huston) (as Leonora Penderton); The Comedians (Glenville) (as Martha Pineda); Doctor Faustus (Burton) (as Helen of Troy)
1968 Boom! (Losey) (as Flora “Sissy”’ Goforth); Secret Ceremony (Losey) (as Leonora)
1970 The Only Game in Town (Stevens) (as Fran Walker)
1972 X, Y, & Zee (Hutton) (as Zee Blakeley); Hammersmith Is Out (Ustinov) (as Jimmie Jean Jackson)
1973 Under Milk Wood (Sinclair) (as Rosie Probert); Night Watch (Hutton) (as Ellen Wheeler); Divorce: His/Divorce: Hers (Hussein—for TV) (as Jane Reynolds); Ash Wednesday (Peerce) (as Barbara Sawyer)
1974  That's Entertainment! (Haley—compilation) (as narrator)
1975  The Driver's Seat (Identikit) (Patroni-Griffi) (as Lise)
1976  The Blue Bird (Cukor) (as Mother/Witch/Light/Maternal Love)
1977  A Little Night Music (Prince) (as Desiree Armfeldt); Victory at Entebbe (Chomsky—for TV) (as Edra Vilnosky); Winter Kills (Richert) (as Lola Comante)
1978  Return Engagement (Hardy—for TV)
1980  The Mirror Crack'd (Hamilton) (as Marina Rudd); Genocide (Schwartzman—doc) (as narrator)
1982  Between Friends (Antonio—for TV) (as Deborah Shapiro)
1985  Malice in Wonderland (Trikonis—for TV) (Louella Parsons)
1986  There Must Be a Pony (Sargent—for TV) (as Marguerite Sydney)
1987  Poker Alice (Seidelman—for TV) (as Alice Moffit)
1988  Giovane Toscanini (Young Toscanini) (Zeffirelli) (as Nadina Bulicoff); Who Gets the Friends? (Lila Garrett—for TV)
1989  Sweet Bird of Youth (Roeg—for TV)
1994  The Flintstones (Levant) (as Pearl Slaghoople)
1997  Happy Birthday Elizabeth: A Celebration of Life (Margolis—for TV) (as herself)
1999  The Visit (Fasano)

Publications

By TAYLOR: books—

On TAYLOR: books—

On TAYLOR: articles—

Pendleton, Austin, “Elizabeth,” in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1986.

Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1995.

Diamond, Suzanne, “Who’s Afraid of George and Martha’s Parlour” in *Domestic F(r)ictions and the Stir-Crazy Gaze of Hollywood,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), October 1996.

On TAYLOR: mini-series—

* * *

Elizabeth Taylor’s star image always has overshadowed her capabilities as a performer. Public and media attention has fallen not on her achievements as an actress, but on the sensational aspects of her private life. Her passage from youth to maturity has been marked by a public preoccupation with her appearance. When she was young, her lavender eyes and all-around beauty enthralled audiences and clouded the critical faculties of the press. Decades later, persistent weight problems attracted negative comment from all quarters. Few screen personalities have been so consistently evaluated in terms of physical criteria. Considerations of looks and celebrity aside, however, Taylor emerges as an actress of definite ability whose talents—despite several worthy screen roles in the 1950s and 1960s—have too often been exaggerated or underused.

In the early 1940s, child stars were major revenue earners at the box office. Taylor’s uncommon beauty, even at the age of nine, had much to do with her being selected for stardom by MGM, but it was the warmth and freshness of her screen presence which ensured success. The luminous charm that she projected in her earliest films, especially National Velvet, struck a chord with the moviegoing public. Unlike many child actors, she made a smooth transition to adult parts, although the path was strewn with weak scripts and underdemanding roles. MGM, to which she was under contract for 18 years, was apt to use her as decoration in frothy comedies or typecast her as a poor little rich girl. She received good notices for Minnelli’s Father of the Bride, and provided solid evidence of acting talent in George Stevens’s A Place in the Sun. Stevens, who acted as midwife to another memorable Taylor performance in Giant, induced her to display considerable emotional range and an unforgettable sensuality. Most of the films she made in the early 1950s, however, were lacking in distinction.

The years from the mid-1950s to mid-1960s represent the zenith of Taylor’s career. During this period she created various portraits of women wrestling with adversity, usually of a psychological nature. As Maggie in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, she suffered intense emotional and sexual frustration at the hands of a morose, self-absorbed husband. In Raintree County and Suddenly, Last Summer, both Oscar-nominated performances, the battle was with the imminent threat of mental disintegration. As Katharina in Zeffirelli’s The Taming of the Shrew, she was a fury who vigorously warded off the role of obedient wife. In Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (for which she won her second Best Actress Oscar, after Butterfield 8), she was a rauous harried woman—using drink to anaesthetize life’s disappointments and verbal aggression to provide the illusion of control.

Taylor has been at her best when playing brash, shrewish women. Few actresses have better demonstrated the power of sarcasm as a weapon against the male ego. After the mid-1960s, however, she seemed increasingly unable to make effective use of her abilities. Even as regal Cleopatra, she drew critical fire for being excessively shrill in voice. For many years, too much faith was placed in her drawing power at the box office, and too little thought given to the selection of appropriate parts. Since she never attempted a transition from leading lady to character actress, the onset of middle age accelerated the decline of her film career.

In response to the dearth of suitable movie roles, she has recently diversified into theater and television. Most of these ventures have done little more than capitalize on her star status. A notable exception was Between Friends, a television movie in which she and Carol Burnett help each other confront the problems of lonely middle-aged existence in a youth-oriented society. Taylor gives a sensitive, multi-dimensional performance, distinguished by its responsiveness to her fellow actors.

Yet public attention to this day remains directed towards Taylor the legend, rather than Taylor the actress. She continues to be the quintessential star, providing a focus for the fantasies of successive generations. In recent years she has experienced more frequent hospitalizations for hip replacement surgery and a brain tumor, yet she also has managed to be at the forefront of the movie industry’s campaign to raise awareness of the devastation of AIDS.

—Fiona Valentine, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg
TAYLOR, Robert

Films as Actor:

1934 Handy Andy (Butler) (as Lloyd Burmeister); There's Always Tomorrow (Sloman) (as Arthur); A Wicked Woman (Brabin) (as Bill Renton)
1935 Buried Loot (Seitz) (as Al Douglas); Society Doctor (Seitz) (as Dr. Ellis); Times Square Lady (Seitz) (as Steve); West Point in the Air (Rossen) (as Jaskerelli); Murder in the Fleet (Sedgewick) (as Lt. Tom Randolph); Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth) (as Bob Gordon); Magnificent Obsession (Stahl) (as Bobby Merrick)
1936 Small Town Girl (Wellman) (as Bob Dakin); Private Number (Del Ruth) (as Richard Winfield); His Brother's Wife (Van Dyke) (as Chris); The Gorgeous Hussy (Brown) (as Bow Timberlake)
1937 Camille (Cukor) (as Armand Dural); Personal Property (Van Dyke) (as Raymond Dabney); This Is My Affair (Setzer) (as Lt. Richard Perry); Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth) (as Steve); Lest We Forget (Whitbeck—doc) (as himself)
1938 A Yank at Oxford (Conway) (as Lee Sheridan); Three Comrades (Borzage) (as Erich Lokcamp); The Crowd Roars (Thorpe) (as Tommy McCoy)
1939 Stand Up and Fight (Van Dyke) (as Blake Cantrell); Lucky Night (Taurog) (as Bill Overton); Lady of the Tropics (Conway) (as Bill Carey); Remember? (McLeod) (as Jeff Holland)
1940 Flight Command (Borzage) (as Ensign Alan Drake); Waterloo Bridge (LeRoy) (as Roy Cronin); Escape (LeRoy) (as Mark Preiping)
1941 Billy the Kid (Miller) (as Billy Bonney); When Ladies Meet (Leonard) (as Jimmy Lee)
1942 Johnny Eager (LeRoy) (title role); Her Cardboard Lover (Cukor) (as Terry Trindle)
1943 Stand by for Action (Leonard) (as Lt. Gregg Mastersen); Bataan (Garnett) (as Sgt. Bill Dane); The Youngest Profession (Buzzell) (as himself)
1944 Song of Russia (Ratoff) (as John Meredith)
1945 The Fighting Lady (de Rochemont—doc) (as narrator)
1946 Undercurrent (Minnelli) (as Alan Garroway)
1947 The High Wall (Bernhardt) (as Steven Kenet)
1948 The Secret Land (Dull—doc) (as narrator)
1949 The Bribe (Leonard) (as Rigby)
1950 Ambush (Wood) (as Ward Kinsman); Conspirator (Saville) (as Major Michael Curtagh); The Devil's Doorway (Anthony Mann) (as Lance Poole)
1951 Quo Vadis (LeRoy) (as Marcus Vinicius); Westward the Women (Wellman) (as Buck)
1952 Ivanhoe (Thorpe) (title role)
1953 Above and Beyond (Frank and Panama) (as Colonel Paul Tibbets); I Love Melvin (Weiss) (as himself); Ride Vaquero! (Farrow) (as Rio); All the Brothers Were Valiant (Thorpe) (as Joel Shore)
1954 Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe) (as Sir Lancelot); Valley of the Kings (Piros) (as Mark Brandon); Rogue Cop (Rowland) (as Christopher Kelvaney)
1955 Many Rivers to Cross (Rowland) (as Bushrod Gebrty); Quentin Durward (Thorpe) (title role)
1956 The Last Hunt (Brooks) (as Charles Gilson); D-Day, the Sixth of June (Koster) (as Brad Parker)
1957 Tip on a Dead Jockey (Thorpe) (as Lloyd Fredman)
1958 Saddle the Wind (Parrish) (as Steve Sinclair); The Law and Jake Wade (Sturge) (title role); Party Girl (Ray) (as Thomas Farrell)
1959 The Hangman (Curtiz) (as Mackenzie Bovard); The House of the Seven Hawks (Thorpe) (as John Northley)
1960 Killers of Kilimanjaro (Thorpe) (as Adamson)
1963 Miracle of the White Stallions (Hiller) (as Colonel Podhajsky); Castle King (Garnett) (as Sam Grassfield)
1964 A House Is Not a Home (Rouse) (as Frank Costigan)
1965 The Night Walker (Castle) (as Barry Morland)
1966 Johnny Tiger (Wendkos) (as George Dean)
1967 Savage Pampas (Prade's Comet) (Fregonese) (as Captain Martin); Return of the Gunfighter (Nielsen—for TV)
1968 La esfinge de cristal (The Glass Sphinx) (Scattini and Sheikh) (as Prof. Karl Nichols); Where Angels Go—Trouble Follows (Nielsen) (as Mr. Farriday); The Day the Hotline Got Hot (Perier) (as Anderson)

Publications

On TAYLOR: books—

On TAYLOR: articles—

There seem almost to have been two Robert Taylors. The first was a callow youth, stiff and unformed as an actor, but so very handsome that his stock soared for over a decade after his film debut in the mid-1930s. This young Taylor was earnest in Magnificent Obsession, snide and shallow in Small Town Girl, the epitome of the naïve dream lover in Camille. MGM, where Taylor spent most of his career, was a glamour factory and he was groomed to be the perfect leading man: smooth, charming, boyishly sincere.

The other Taylor was less a studio creation than the inevitable assertion of the actor’s capabilities and nature. Early in the 1940s, a hard, cold aspect of his personality began to emerge: in Johnny Eager he is an unsympathetic racketeer, in Undercurrent an unscrupulous, dangerous husband, in The Bribe a tough federal agent. Taylor’s increasingly craggy countenance made him a natural for Westerns; the Pretty-Boy played the title role in the glamorized Billy the Kid but the tougher, more humorless Taylor took things firmly in hand in Ambush, Westward the Women, Devil’s Doorway, and Ride Vaquero! His willingness to take on harsh characters, as in The High Wall, Rogue Cop, and The Last Hunt, exhibits his desire to transform himself into a player of greater versatility. Unfortunately, either he did not have it in him or MGM never gave him the chance to stretch. That he had a way with comedy is evidenced by his witty cameo in I Love Melvin and some boisterous scenes in Westward the Women, but his comedic talents went otherwise unexplored.

Taylor’s only respite from the hard, often villainous roles of his later career came in splashy costume dramas—Ivanhoe, Knights of the Round Table, Quo Vadis—in which his dash could be displayed in technicolor opposite such leading ladies as Elizabeth Taylor, Ava Gardner, and Deborah Kerr.
His last decade in films was spent treading water, but \textit{Party Girl}, \textit{The House of the Seven Hawks}, and \textit{Cattle King} are indications of what he could accomplish with a good director and an offbeat setting. He and his ex-wife, Barbara Stanwyck, even accomplished that rarity in \textit{The Night Walker}: they make it a pretty good William Castle film.

—Frank Thompson

\section*{TEMPLE, Shirley}

\subsection*{Films as Actress:}

\begin{itemize}
  \item 1932 \textit{War Babies} (Lamont—short) (as Charmaine); \textit{The Runt Page} (La Verne—short) (as Lulu Parsnips); \textit{Pie Covered Wagon} (Lamont—short) (as captive); \textit{Glad Rags to Riches} (Lamont—short) (as La Belle Diaperina); \textit{The Red-Haired Alien} (Cabanne) (as Sylvia Dolores)
  \item 1933 \textit{Kid’s Last Fight} (Lamont—short) (as girlfriend); \textit{Kid ‘n’ Hollywood} (Lamont—short) (as Morelegs Sweet Trick); \textit{Pooly-tix in Washington} (Lamont—short) (as gold digger); \textit{Kid ‘n’ Africa} (Lamont—short) (as Madame Cradlebait); \textit{Merrily Yours} (Lamont—short) (as Mary Lou Rogers); \textit{Dora’s Dunkin’ Doughnuts} (Edwards—short) (as pupil); \textit{To the Last Man} (Hathaway) (as Mary Standing); \textit{Out All Night} (Sam Taylor) (as child)
  \item 1934 \textit{Pardon My Pups} (Lamont—short) (as Mary Lou); \textit{Managed Money} (Lamont—short) (as Mary Lou); \textit{New Deal Money} (short); \textit{Carolina} (The House of Connelly) (Henry King) (as girl); \textit{Mandalay} (Curtiz) (as Betty Shaw); \textit{Stand Up and Cheer} (McFadden) (as Shirley Dugan); \textit{Now I’ll Tell} (While New York Sleeps) (Burke) (as Mary Golden); \textit{Change of Heart} (Blustone) (as Shirley, girl on airplane); \textit{Little Miss Marker} (Hall) (title role); \textit{Baby, Take a Bow} (Lachman) (as Shirley); \textit{Now and Forever} (Hathaway) (as Penelope Day); \textit{Bright Eyes} (David Butler) (as Shirley Blake)
  \item 1935 \textit{The Little Colonel} (David Butler) (as Lloyd Sherman, the Little Colonel); \textit{Our Little Girl} (Robertson) (as Molly Middleton); \textit{Carly Top} (Cummings) (as Betsy Blair); \textit{The Littlest Rebel} (David Butler) (as Virginia Houston Cary)
  \item 1936 \textit{Captain January} (David Butler) (as Star); \textit{Poor Little Rich Girl} (Cummings) (as Barbara Barry); \textit{Dimples} (Seiter) (as Sylvia Dolores); \textit{Stowaway} (Seiter) (as Ching-Ching)
  \item 1937 \textit{Wee Willie Winkie} (Ford) (as Priscilla Williams); \textit{Heidi} (Dwan) (title role)
  \item 1938 \textit{Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm} (Dwan) (title role); \textit{Little Miss Broadway} (Cummings) (as Betsy Brown); \textit{Just around the Corner} (Cummings) (as Penny Hale)
  \item 1939 \textit{The Little Princess} (Walter Lang) (as Sara Crewe); \textit{Susannah of the Mounties} (Seiter) (title role)
  \item 1940 \textit{The Blue Bird} (Walter Lang) (as Mytyl); \textit{Young People} (Dwan) (as Wendy)
  \item 1941 \textit{Kathleen} (Bucquet) (title role)
  \item 1942 \textit{Miss Annie Rooney} (Marin) (title role)
  \item 1944 \textit{Since You Went Away} (Cromwell) (as Bridget Hilton); \textit{I'll Be Seeing You} (Dieterle) (as Barbara Marshall)
  \item 1945 \textit{Kiss and Tell} (Wallace) (as Corliss Archer)
  \item 1947 \textit{Honeymoon} (Two Men and a Girl) (Keighley) (as Barbara Olmstead); \textit{The Bachelor and the Bobby-Soxer} (Bachelor Knight) (Reis) (as Susan); \textit{That Hagen Girl} (Godfrey) (title role)
  \item 1948 \textit{Fort Apache} (Ford) (as Philadelphia Thursday)
\end{itemize}
Mr. Belvedere Goes to College (Nugent) (as Ellen Baker); Adventure in Baltimore (Bachelor Bait) (Wallace) (as Dinah Sheldon); The Story of Seabiscuit (David Butler) (as Margaret O’Hara); A Kiss for Corliss (Wallace) (as Corliss Archer)

That’s Dancing! (Haley Jr.) (as herself)

Going Hollywood: The War Years (doc—archival)

Why Havel?

Publications

By TEMPLE: books—

My Young Life, with the editors of Look, Garden City, New York, 1945.

By TEMPLE: articles—

“Tomorrow I’ll Be Thirty,” in Good Housekeeping, November 1957.

On TEMPLE: books—

Beatty, Jerome, Shirley Temple, Akron, Ohio, 1935.

On TEMPLE: articles—

Cadden, V., “Return to Prague,” in McCall’s, April 1990.

* * *

Shirley Temple was the darling of the Great Depression. She was the biggest box-office attraction during one of the bleakest periods of American history. As she sang and danced her way into the hearts of millions of Americans, Temple became an institution. There were Shirley Temple dolls, toys, and clothes (including a line of bathing suits), and her curly hair (which evoked the celebrated curls of America’s first “Little Sweetheart”—Mary Pickford) was imitated eagerly by countless little girls. Why was Shirley Temple so beloved? Although her films were formulaic and generally dismissed by critics, she redeemed them with her overwhelming charisma and spirited performances. Indeed, there has been no other child star before or since who has been as popular or who demonstrated her extraordinary talents as a singer, dancer, or actress.

Shirley played bit parts in several short films during the early 1930s, but her star soared with Stand Up and Cheer in which she sang “Baby, Take a Bow.” Although she played a minor role, she stole the show with her cute, dimpled face and irresistible charm, and the film proved to be a smash hit. Temple’s success continued in movies such as Little Miss Marker, Baby, Take a Bow, and Bright Eyes—in which she delivered her memorable song-and-dance rendition of “On the Good Ship Lollipop.” Despite their youth and innocence, it seemed there was no challenge too large for Temple’s characters. During the mid-1930s, Temple played an orphan at least nine times, a matchmaker at least twice, and she reunited her own broken family at least four times. Her screen characters had even loftier goals as well: she brings peace to India in Wee Willie Winkie and personally asks President Lincoln to pardon her imprisoned Confederate father in The Littlest Rebel. Also compelling is that Temple’s characters display no overt racial or class biases (although the same cannot be said about her films in general). On several occasions, she performs with black characters; and when her characters were wealthy, they typically cavorted with less fortunate characters. Indeed, one of her most engaging performances occurs in The Little Colonel when she dances with the legendary Bill “Bojangles” Robinson. Accordingly, it seems, wrapped up in this little girl were many of the ideals that Americans cherished but rarely practiced.

Despite that she provided an antidote of sorts to Mae West’s scandalously aggressive screen sexuality, the Temple persona evokes an unmistakable sexual quality that was visible in both her screen characterizations and her publicity photographs. Indeed, even in her earliest screen roles she played the leads in a series of one-reel films titled “Baby Burleks,” that lampooned popular movies and movie stars, including the sultry Marlene Dietrich. And, in her subsequent leading roles, she was invariably paired with attentive older men with whom she expressed a distinct and rather demonstrative affection.

Between 1934 and 1939 Temple was enormously popular, but in her early teens her popularity started to decline. Her audience was accustomed to seeing her play enchanting little girls, and was apparently unwilling to accept her on-screen maturity. As a result, in the early 1940s she played mostly supporting roles as a teenager, though she did enjoy a brief comeback that started with her appearance in the wartime epic Since You Went Away, and continued with I’ll Be Seeing You, and Kiss and Tell. Soon however, her star started to sink once again, and when she was only 21, Temple retired from movies. Then, after her experience in two short-lived television shows in the late 1950s and early 1960s, Temple permanently left acting behind. In the late 1960s, she tried her hand at politics, and she has been successful in this realm ever since. Her résumé includes her service as a United Nations representative, the U.S. Chief of Protocol, and as ambassador to both Ghana and Czechoslovakia.

—Maryann Oshana, updated by Cynthia Felando

TERRY-THOMAS

Nationality: British. Born: Thomas Terry Hoar Stevens in London, 14 July 1911. Education: Attended Ardingly College. Family: Married 1) the dancer Ida Putlanskey, 1938 (divorced 1962); 2) Belinda Cunningham, 1963, sons: Tiger and Cushan. Career: 1930s—transport clerk, Smithfield Meat Market; also dancer, and ukelele player in band, The Rhythm Maniacs; cabaret work led to film debut as extra, 1936, and radio debut, 1938; 1941–46—served in Army, Signal Corps (won four military service medals); also Entertainments National Service Association; 1946—West End debut in Piccadilly Hayride; from 1951—TV performer; shows include How Do You View?, and Strictly T-T; 1970s—worked in Italy, then forced to stop work through illness. Died: In Godalming, Surrey, of Parkinson’s disease, 8 January 1990.

Films as Actor:

1936  It’s Love Again (Saville) (as extra); Rhythm in the Air (Woods); This’ll Make You Whistle (Wilcox)
1937  Rhythm Racketeer (Seymour)
1940  For Freedom (Elvey); Under Your Hat (Elvey)
1948  A Date with a Dream (Leeman) (as Terry); The Brass Monkey (Lucky Mascot) (Freeland)
1949  Helter Skelter (Thomas) (as announcer); Melody Club (Berman) (as Freddy Forrester)
1951  Cookery Nook (short); The Queen Steps Out (Henryson—short)
1956  Private’s Progress (Boulting) (Major Hitchcock); The Green Man (Day) (as Boughtflower)
1957  The Brothers in Law (Boulting) (as Alfred Green); Lucky Jim (Boulting) (as Bertrand Welch); Blue Murder at St. Trinian’s (Lauder) (as Captain Romney Carlton-Ricketts); The Naked Truth (Your Past Is Showing) (Zampi) (as Lord Mayley)
1958  Happy Is the Bride (Boulting) (as PC); Tom Thumb (Pal) (as Ivan)
1959  Too Many Crooks (Zampi) (as Billy Gordon); Carlton-Browne of the F.O. (Man in a Cocked Hat) (Boulting and Dell) (as Cadogan deVere Carlton-Browne); I’m All Right, Jack (Boulting) (as Major Hitchcock)
1960  School for Scoundrels (Hamer) (as Raymond Delauney); Make Mine Mink (Asher) (as Major Albert Rayne)
1961  His and Hers (Hurst) (as Reggie Blake); A Matter of Who (Chaffey) (as Archibald Bannister)
1962  Operation Snatch (Day) (as Lt. Piggy Wigg); Bachelor Flat (Tashlin) (as Professor Bruce); Kill or Cure (Polllock) (as J. Barker-Rynde); The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm (Levin and Pal) (as Ludwig)
1963  The Mouse on the Moon (Lester) (as Spender); It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (as J. Algermon Hawthorne); The Wild Affair (Krish) (as Godfrey Deane)
1964  Strange Bedfellows (Frank) (as Assistant Mortician); How to Murder Your Wife (Quine) (as Charles)
1965  Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines; or, How I Flew from London to Paris in 25 Hrs and 11 Minutes (Annakin) (as Sir Percy Ware-Armitage); You Must Be Joking! (Winner) (as Major Foskett)
1966  The Daydreamer (Bass) (as voice only); Our Man in Marrakesh (Bang, Bang, You’re Dead) (Sharp) (as El Caid); The Sandwich Man (Hartford-Davis) (as Scoutmaster); Munster, Go Home (Bellamy) (as Freddie Munster); Kiss the Girls and Make Them Die (Se tutte le donne del mondo) (Levin and Mauiri) (as Lord AldricJames); Don’t Look Now, We’re Being Shot At (La Grande Vadrouille) (Oury) (as Reginald)
1967  Jules Verne’s Rocket to the Moon (Those Fantastic Flying Fools) (Sharp) (as Sir Harry Washington-Smythe); A Guide for the Married Man (Kelly) (as Technical Adviser); Arabella (Bolognini) (as the Hotel Manager/the General/the Duke); Arriva Dorellik (de Steno) (as Candesty); The Perils of Pauline (Leonard) (as Sten Martin); Top Crack (Russo); Diabolik (Danger: Diabolik) (Bava) (as Minister of Finance)
1968  Don’t Raise the Bridge, Lower the River (Paris) (as H. William Homer); Uno scacco tutto mattto (Fiz); Seven Times Seven (Lupo); How Sweet It Is (Paris) (as Gilbert Tilly); Where Were You When the Lights Went Out? (Averback) (as Ladislau Waclock)
1969  Arthur, Arthur (Gallu); 2000 Years After (Tenzer) (as Charles Goodwyn); Monte Carlo or Bust! (Those Daring Young Men in Their Jaunty Jalopies) (Annakin) (as Sir Cuthbert Ware-Armitage); Twelve Plus One (Thirteen; Una su tredici) (Gessner) (as Albert)
1970  Le Mur de l’Atlantique (Camus); The Cherry Picker (Curran)
1971  The Abominable Dr. Phibes (Fuest) (as Dr. Longstreet)
1972  Gli eroi (The Heroes) (Tessari); Dr. Phibes Rises Again (Fuest) (as Lombardo)
1973  The Vault of Horror (Tales from the Crypt II) (Baker) (as Critchit); Robin Hood (Reitherman) (voice only)
Terry-Thomas began his 1990 autobiography with some of the descriptions offered by critics through his career: “Terry-Thomas with his permanent air of caddish disdain . . . bounder . . . aristocratic rogue . . . upper-class English twit . . . genuine English eccentric . . . one of the last real gentlemen . . . wet, genteel Englishman . . . highbred idiot . . . cheeky blighter . . . camel-haired cad . . . amiable buffoon . . . pompous Englishman . . . twentieth-century dandy . . . stinker . . . king of the cads . . .” Such phrases instantly conjure up one of the most easily recognizable of film stars, whose gap-toothed

Publications

By TERRY-THOMAS: books—

By TERRY-THOMAS: article—

* Interview in Films Illustrated (London), September 1976.

On TERRY-THOMAS: articles—

* TV Times (London), 28 October 1989.

* * *
smile, military moustache, florid accent and dapper dress sense cropped up in (and too often propped up) so many films in the 1950s and 1960s.

Yet Terry-Thomas, while invariably playing himself, managed to create a persona whose appeal to film audiences in the 1950s was based on more than just his well-polished comic ability. In those four days, with its rationing and its collapsing empire, Britain welcomed the fruity humor of Terry-Thomas, with his loud waistcoats, exaggerated vowels, and overfamiliar manner. He was the comic incarnation of the sort of ex-minor-public-schoolboys whose shady dealings were such a feature of postwar British culture.

Although sometimes seen as aristocratic, Terry-Thomas, as British audiences (rather than American ones) may have suspected, was not quite the genuine article. To his own disgust, he was born and raised in Finchley, a suburb of London which was, at most, respectable. As he himself said, ‘‘I’ve cashed in on playing the lower-middle-class pretending to be upper-class.’’ Though educated privately, he was unable subsequently to join the British Army, despite being his school’s star cadet officer, since an officer at that time needed an independent income. Instead he took a rather less glamorous job as a transport clerk at Smithfield Meat Market. Though he remained there six years, he made a mark less with his abilities as a clerk than with his regular attire of a boutonniere, a silver-topped Malacca cane and slip-on suede shoes.

He developed his show-business career in the early 1930s through organizing and playing the ukelele with a band called The Rhythm Maniacs, through dancing as a professional at the Cricklewood Palais, and by impersonating well-known singers on the cabaret circuit. In World War II he served in the army, rising to the rank of sergeant. His success in ENSA, the Forces Entertainment wing, ensured that, like many of his colleagues, he then went on to the London stage. His popularity with British audiences was consolidated by radio work and by his own television show, How Do You View?, in 1951.

It is for his film appearances that Terry-Thomas will be remembered, as new generations, seeing his work reshown on television, relish his improbably plummy drawl, and his inevitable catch-phrases. As Major Hitchcock in the Boulting brothers’ Private’s Progress, he described his troops, memorably, as ‘‘a shower! An absolute shower!’’ Similarly, the lecherous charm underlying the apparently innocent enquiry, ‘‘How do you do?’’ delighted audiences then and now. Yet his film work in the late 1950s, from his pseudointellectual in Lucky Jim to his crooked personnel manager in I’m All Right, Jack, and from his bumbling diplomat in Carleton-Browne of the F.O. to the hilariously bumptious cad in School for Scoundrels, showed Terry-Thomas carrying off subtly different, yet similarly priceless studies of fraudulently Englishmen, with a talent whose depth was perhaps never fully tapped.

By 1960, he was a genuine star, if only as a cameo performer, and inevitably Hollywood beckoned. By happy coincidence, a shift in English culture was occurring which threatened to make his brand of humour an anachronism. Some excellent work (opposite Jack Lemmon in How to Murder Your Wife, for example), was almost overshadowed by a series of cameo roles in less-than-challenging, though financially rewarding, projects. Struck by the amount of money available merely for reproducing what Americans saw as an archetypal Britisher on film, Terry-Thomas was able to finance an extravagant lifestyle without ever extending or developing his considerable comic talents. Although he was never less than watchable, the projects became more obscure and his career waned.

His unusual name was the result of several experiments. Disliking his given name, Tom Stevens, he decided to spell it backwards. But Mot Snetswe gave way to Thomas Terry, until confusion with the Terry acting family prompted the adoption of Terry Thomas. The subsequent hyphen, he would often point out, matched the trademark gap between his front teeth. Later, he was delighted when his name was adopted by the field of orthopedic surgery, to describe the gap produced by a disruption of the ligaments in the carpal bones of the wrist.

In the mid-1970s he was diagnosed as having Parkinson’s disease, and spent the later years of his life struggling to pay for medical treatment. In the late 1980s, a picture in the British press, showing this once immaculately turned out bon vivant huddled in a blanket, almost unrecognizable and all too clearly stricken by his illness, prompted a charity show from fellow British entertainers. It is to be hoped that he was, at the last, aware of the tremendous affection in which he was held.

—Nicholas Thomas

THOMPSON, Emma

Nationality: British. Born: London, England, 15 April 1959; daughter of the stage and TV director Eric Thompson and the actress Phyllida Law; sister of the actress Sophie Thompson. Family: Married the actor Kenneth Branagh, 1989 (divorced 1996); one daughter with actor Greg Wise, 1999. Education: Studied English literature at Cambridge University. Career: Began acting while at Cambridge with the comedy troupe Footlights, and wrote and performed in an all-woman program of comedy routines, late 1970s; performed as a stand-up comic, then worked on the stage and in British TV, 1980s; appeared on the BBC mini-series Tutti Frutti and Fortunes of War, 1987; created her own six-part TV comedy series, Thompson, co-starring her sister and mother; began performing with Kenneth Branagh’s Renaissance Theatre Company, 1988; first appeared on-screen with Branagh in Henry V, 1989; became member of board of advisers, FAHRENHEIT Theatre Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, 1995. Awards: Variety Club Newcomer of the Year, 1987; British Academy Award Best Actress, for Tutti Frutti and Fortunes of War, 1987; New York Film Critics Circle Best Actress, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Actress, National Board of Review Best Actress, Best Actress Academy Award, Best Actress British Academy Award, Best Actress National Society of Film Critics, Best Performance by an Actress in a Motion Picture—Drama Golden Globe, for Howards End, 1992; Outstanding Guest Appearance in a Comedy Series Emmy Award, for Ellen, 1994; Best Adapted Screenplay Academy Award, Best Screenplay Based on Material Previously Produced or Published Writers Guild of America Award, New York Critics Circle Best Screenplay, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Screenplay, National Board of Review Best Actress, Best Performance by an Actress in a Leading Role British Academy Award, Best Screenplay Golden Globe, for Sense and Sensibility, 1995; Best Actress Venice Film Festival, for The Winter Guest, 1997.
Agents: Lorraine Hamilton Management, 19 Denmark Street, London WC2H 8NA, England; and William Morris, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1988  The Winslow Boy (for TV) (as Catherine)
1989  The Tall Guy (Mel Smith) (as Kate Lemon); Henry V (Branagh) (as Katherine of France); Look Back in Anger (Dench—for TV) (as Alison Porter)
1991  Impromptu (Lapine) (as Duchesse d’Antan); Dead Again (Branagh) (as Grace/Margaret Strauss)
1992  Howards End (Ivory) (as Margaret Schlegel); Peter’s Friends (Branagh) (as Maggie)
1993  Much Ado about Nothing (Branagh) (as Beatrice); The Remains of the Day (Ivory) (as Miss Kenton); In the Name of the Father (Sheridan) (as Gareth Peirce)
1994  My Father, the Hero (Daddy Cool) (Miner) (unbilled cameo as Isabelle); Junior (Reitman) (as Dr. Diana Reddin); The Blue Boy (Murton—for TV) (as Marie)
1995  Carrington (Hampton) (as Dora Carrington); Sense and Sensibility (Ang Lee) (as Elinor Dashwood, + sc)
1997  Hospital! (Henderson—for TV); The Winter Guest (Rickman) (as Frances)
1998  Primary Colors (Nichols) (as Susan Stanton); Judas Kiss (Gutierrez) (as FBI Agent Sadie Hawkins)
2000  Maybe Baby (Elton) (as Desiree)

Other Films:

2000  Johnny Hit and Run Pauline (Efrosini Lillios) (pr)

Publications

By THOMPSON: book—

By THOMPSON: articles—

Interview with Caryn James, in New York Times, 28 March 1993.
Interview with Robbie Coltrane, in Interview (New York), May 1993.

On THOMPSON: books—

On THOMPSON: articles—

Sessums, Keven, “‘Never Look Back,’” in Vanity Fair (New York), February 1996.
“‘Emma Thompson,’” in Film Review (London), March 1996.
Fuller, Graham, and Claire Monk, “‘Cautionary Tale / Shitick and Seduction / Sense and Sensibility,’” in Sight & Sound (London), March 1996.
Thompson, D., and others, “‘Who’s the Best Actress in Hollywood?’” in Movieline (Escondido), November 1996.
Friend, T., “‘Emma’s True Colors,’” in Vogue (New York), March 1998.

* * * *

Emma Thompson’s versatility seems boundless. With roots in the British theater and an early inclination towards comedy, she also has a gift for developing full-blooded period characters and has performed adroitly in Shakespearean parts, as well. Her acting education began during childhood as the daughter of television and stage director Eric Thompson and actress Phyllida Law. She studied English literature at Cambridge University, where she performed with a troupe called Footlights, which specialized in comedy. After graduation, she appeared as a stand-up comic and did television work before obtaining a starring role in the hit musical comedy revival Me and My Girl. So it is appropriate for Thompson’s screen debut to have come in a comedy. She co-starred in The Tall Guy, an underrated farce in which she is the love interest of an American actor in London (Jeff Goldblum) who finds himself cast in a musical version of The Elephant Man (which, when you think about it, is as silly a vehicle for song and dance as Les Misérables).

While working on Fortunes of War for the BBC, she met actor-director Kenneth Branagh, who cast her as Katherine of France in his screen version of Henry V. They married shortly after the release of Henry V, and Branagh cast her in several very different roles in three of his subsequent films. In Dead Again, she gives a bravura performance in the dual role of a dazed woman tormented by memories of another woman’s murder, and a concert pianist (in flashbacks to the 1940s). In the ensemble film Peter’s Friends, Thompson has the plum role of Maggie, a spinsterish flake who leaves photos around her apartment so her cat will not forget her. She brings a guileless quality to the role, making it one of the film’s stand-out performances. Finally, in Much Ado about Nothing, she stars as Beatrice to Branagh’s Benedick. As the real-life husband-wife team traded sex-based jibes in the Bard’s poetic format, they brought an energy to the film that touched a broad-based audience. In 1995, Thompson and Branagh announced they were separating, putting an end to a dynamic professional partnership.

It was Howards End, not a Branagh project, that propelled Thompson into the upper ranks of screen personalities. She won an Academy Award for her work in this Merchant-Ivory production of an E. M. Forster tale of the social classes in 1910 England. Thompson portrays a self-reliant woman of no economic means who marries a prosperous man (Anthony Hopkins) whose pleasant veneer hides a heartless nature. Thompson and Hopkins are brilliant together, with both characters storing wells of emotion under the constraints of Edwardian British custom.

She was splendidly re-teamed with Hopkins in another Merchant-Ivory film, The Remains of the Day, set between the two World Wars. Thompson is cast as Miss Kenton, the new housekeeper in the castle of a British lord. Miss Kenton just might be a potential romantic partner to the world’s most perfect servant: Stevens (Hopkins), a reserved British butler who is single-mindedly dedicated to his employer. The Remains of the Day essentially is a character study of Stevens, who is steadfastly absorbed in his professional role to the exclusion of all else. Thompson brings intelligence and intensity to a role which might have been little more than a plain-Jane housekeeper in another actress’s hands. Her layered interpretation of Miss Kenton helps to give dimension to Stevens’s character and brings the film to a disturbing and extraordinary ending.

After earning more critical acclaim as a lawyer defending an accused IRA bomber (Daniel Day Lewis) in the U.S.-Irish production In the Name of the Father, Thompson surprised moviegoers who only were familiar with her Shakespearean and somber characterizations. Sharing the screen with “pregnant” Arnold Schwarzenegger, Thompson garnered laughs as an eminent British cryogenicist in the Hollywood farce Junior. In good spirited fun, she was given an opportunity to spoof the prim image she has gained during her screen career.

She returned to period filmmaking in Carrington, a film with lofty ambitions that is more interesting for what it attempts than what it achieves. It is a based-on-fact story, set in the early twentieth century, that charts the evolution of the deep love between a homosexual British writer, Lytton Strachey (Jonathan Pryce), and a little-known painter, Dora Carrington (Thompson). This is fascinating material, but the film often is too slow-moving and unevenly paced. Still, Thompson (along with Pryce) offers an effectively subtle performance. She next scored one of her biggest hits with Sense and Sensibility, a pleasing, literate adaptation of the Jane Austen novel. Thompson not only stars as Elinor Dashwood but also scripted—and earned an Academy Award for her effort—lending to the material a refreshing contemporary air.

In the mid-1990s, Thompson was at the forefront of contemporary world cinema. Curiously, in the second half of the decade, she either has found herself miscast on screen or has not won the high-profile roles that enabled her to earn screen stardom. She worked with actor-turned-director Alan Rickman and her mother in the deeply personal but little-seen The Winter Guest, featuring the two actresses as mother and daughter. By far her highest-visibility role came in Primary Colors, a pithy satire of Bill and Hillary Clinton that was based on the notorious, best-selling novel. Thompson fell into trouble by taking on the role of Susan Stanton, the Hillary Clinton character. John Travolta, playing her husband, Clintonian presidential candidate Jack Stanton, imitates the real-life president to the point of caricature. Meanwhile, Thompson—who bears a resemblance to Mrs. Clinton—plays her character straight, and thus is overshadowed by Travolta and a strong supporting cast of character actors. Furthermore, her attempt to speak with an American accent is less than successful.

During her film career, Emma Thompson has proven her ability to play all sorts of roles. She can take a character from the pages of literature and make that personality live on-screen, or she can breathe life into broad comedy parts. She has shown audiences many of her talents, and one hopes that she will continue receiving the types of roles that will enable her to display those abilities.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

THE THREE STOOGES

SHEMP HOWARD. Nationality: American. Born: Samuel Horwitz in Brooklyn, New York, 17 March 1895. Family: Married Gertrude Frank, 1925, one son. Military Service: U.S. Army during World War I. Career: Worked as comic in vaudeville; 1922—worked with Ted Healy; 1938–49—made a number of solo films. Died: 23 November 1955.

MOE HOWARD. Nationality: American. Born: Moses Horwitz in Bensonhurst, New York, 19 June 1897. Family: Married Helen Schonberger, 1925, two children. Career: In show business from age 12: ran errands at Vitagraph studios; worked in various comic and singing acts with Ted Healy. Died: 4 May 1975.

LARRY FINE. Nationality: American. Born: Louis Feinberg in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 5 October 1902. Family: Married Mabel Louisin (died 1967), two children. Died: 24 January 1975.

CURLEY HORWITZ. Nationality: American. Born: Jerome Lester Horwitz in Brooklyn, New York, 22 October 1903. Family: Married 1) unknown marriage (annulled); 2) Elaine Ackerman, 1937 (divorced 1940), one daughter; 3) Marion Buxbaum, 1945 (divorced 1946); 4) Valerie Neman, 1947, one daughter. Died: 18 January 1952.

Moe, Larry, and Shemp teamed with Ted Healy in mid-1920s for early Stooges act; 1930—film debut in Soup to Nuts; 1932—Shemp replaced by Curly in the act, and Healy dropped: long series of shorts and features, for MGM, 1933, and Columbia, 1934–57; 1946—Curly retired from the act for health reasons, and was replaced by Shemp; 1955—Joe Besser joined the act after Shemp’s death; 1959—Curly Joe DeRita replaced Joe Besser in the act; 1965—made a series of five-minute TV cartoons.

Films as Actors (all shorts unless noted):

(1) Soup to Nuts (Stoloff—feature) 1930
(2) Turn Back the Clock (Selwyn—feature); Meet the Baron (Walter Lang—feature); Dancing Lady (Leonard—feature); Beer and Pretzels (Cummings); Hello Pop (Cummings); Plane Nuts (Cummings); Myrt and Marge (Laughter in the Air) (Boasberg—feature) (as Mullins’s helpers); Nertsery Rhymes (Cummings); Hollywood on Parade; Screen Snapshots (Staub)

1934 Fugitive Lovers (Boleslawski—feature); Hollywood Party (Boleslawski, Dwan, and Rowland—feature); The Big Idea (Crowley)

(Larry, Moe, and Curly)

(3) Woman Haters (Gottler); Punch Drunk (Breslow); Men in Black (McCary); Three Little Pigs (McCary); The Captain Hates the Sea (Milestone—feature); Crazy People (Hiscott—feature) 1934

1935 Screen Snapshots Number Six (Staub); Horses Collars (Buckman); Restless Knights (Lamont); Pop Goes the Easel (Del Lord); Uncivil Warriors (Del Lord); Pardon My Scotch (Del Lord); Hoi Polloi (Del Lord); Three Little Beers (Del Lord)

1936 Anks in the Pantry (Black); Movie Maniacs (Del Lord); Half-shot Shooters (Black); Disorder in the Court (Black); A Pain in the Pullman (Black); False Alarms (Del Lord); Whoops I’m an Indian (Del Lord); Slippery Silks (Black)

1937 Grips, Grunts, and Groans (Black); Dizzy Doctors (Del Lord); Three Dumb Clucks (Del Lord); Back to the Woods (Black); Goofs and Saddles (Del Lord); Cash and Carry (Del Lord); Playing the Ponies (Lamont); The Sitter-Dowers (Del Lord); Start Cheering (Rogell—feature) 1938

Termites of 1938 (Del Lord); Wee Wee Monsieur (Del Lord); Tassels in the Air (Chase); Flat Foot Stooges (Chase); Healthy, Wealthy, and Dumb (Del Lord); Violent Is the Word for Curly (Chase); Three Missing Links (White); Mutts to You (Chase)

1939 Screen Snapshots Number Nine (Staub); Three Little Sew and Sews (Del Lord); We Want Our Mummy (Del Lord); A-Ducking They Did Go (Del Lord); Yes, We Have No Bonanza (Del Lord); Saved by the Belle (Chase); Calling All Curs (White); Oily to Bed, Oily to Rise (White); Three Sappy People (White)

1940 You Nazty Spy (White); Rockin’ through the Rockies (White); A-Plumbing We Will Go (Del Lord); Nutty but Nice (White); How High Is Up? (Del Lord); From Nurse to Worse (White); No Census, No Feelings (White); Cockoo Cavaliers (White); Boobs in Arms (White)

1941 So Long, Mr. Chumps (White); Dutiful but Dumb (Del Lord); All the World’s a Stoooge (Del Lord); I’ll Never Heil Again (White); Time Out for Rhythm (Salkow—feature); An Ache in Every Stake (Del Lord); In the Sweet Pie and Pie (White); Some More of Samoa (Del Lord)
1942 Loco Boy Makes Good (White); Cactus Makes Perfect (Del Lord); What's the Matador? (White); Matri-Phony (Edwards); Three Smart Saps (White); Even as I.O.U. (Del Lord); My Sister Eileen (Hall—feature) (as workmen); Sock-a-Bye Baby (White)
1943 The Stooge to Conga (Del Lord); Dizzy Detectives (White); Back from the Front (White); Spook Louder (Del Lord); Three Little Twerps (Edwards); Higher Than a Kite (Del Lord); I Can Hardly Wait (White); Dizzy Pilots (White); Phony Express (Del Lord); A Gem of a Jam (Del Lord)
1944 Crash Goes the Hash (White); Busy Buddies (Del Lord); The Yoke's on Me (White); Idle Roomers (Del Lord); Gents without Cents (White); No Dough, Boys (White)
1945 Three Pests in a Mess (Del Lord); Booby Dupes (Del Lord); Idiots Deluxe (White); Rockin' in the Rockies (Keays—feature); If a Body Meets a Body (White); Micro-Phonies (Bernds)
1946 Beer Barrel Polecats (White); Swing Parade of 1946 (Karlson—feature); A Bird in the Head (Bernds); Uncivil Warbirds (White); Three Troubledoers (Bernds); Monkey Businessmen (Bernds); Three Loan Wolves (White); G.I. Wanna Go Home (White); Rhythm and Weep (White); Three Little Pirates (Bernds)
1947 Half-Wit's Holiday (White)

(Larry, Moe, Curly, and Shemp)

1947 Hold That Lion (White)
1986 Stoogemania (Workman)

(Larry, Moe, and Shemp)

1947 Fright Night (Bernds); Out West (Bernds); Brideless Grooms (Bernds); Sing a Song of Six Pants (White); All Guessed Up (White)
1948 Shivering Sherlocks (Del Lord); Pardon My Clutch (Bernds); Squareheads of the Round Table (Bernds); Fiddlers Three (White); Hot Scots (Bernds); Heavenly Daze (White); I'm a Monkey's Uncle (White); Mummy's Dummies (Bernds); Crime on Their Hands (Bernds)
1949 The Ghost Talks (White); Who Done It? (Bernds); Hocus Pocus (White); Fuelin’ Around (Bernds); Malice in the Palace (White); Vagabond loafers (Bernds); Dunked in the Deep (White)

1950 Punchy Cowpunchers (Bernds); Hugs and Mugs (White); Dopey Dicks (Bernds); Love at First Bite (White); Self-Made Maids (McCollum); Three Hams on Rye (White); Studio Stoops (White); Slap-Happy Sleuths (McCollum); A Snitch in Time (White)

1951 Three Arabian Nuts (Bernds); Baby Sitters’ Jitters (White); Don’t Throw That Knife (White); Scrambled Brains (White); Merry Mavericks (Bernds); The Tooth Will Out (Bernds); Gold Raiders (Bernds—feature); Hula La La (McCollum); The Pest Man Wins (White)

1952 A Missed Fortune (White); Listen, Judge (Bernds); Corny Casanovas (White); He Cooked His Goose (White); Gents in a Jam (Bernds); Three Dark Horses (White); Cuckoo in a Choo Choo (White)

1953 Up in Daisy’s Penthouse (White); Booty and the Beast (White); Loose Loot (White); Tricky Dicks (White); Spooks (White); Pardon My Backfire (White); Rip, Sew, and Stitch (White); Bubble Trouble (White); Goof on the Roof (White)

1954 Income Tax Sappy (White); Musty Muskeeters (White); Fals and Gals (White); Knotty Knights (White); Shot in the Frontier (White); Scotched in Scotland (White)

1955 Fling in the Ring (White); Of Cash and Hash (White); Gypped in the Penthouse (White); Bedlam in Paradise (White); Stone Age Romeos (White); Wham Bam Slam (White); Hot Ice (White); Blunder Boys (White)

1956 Husbands Beware (White); Creeps (White); Flagpole Jitters (White); For Crim’ In Out Loud (White); Rumpus in the Harem (White); Hot Stuff (White); Scheming Schemers (White); Commotion on the Ocean (White)

(Larry, Moe, and Joe Besser)

1957 Hoofs and Goofs (White); Muscle Up a Little Closer (White); A Merry Mix-Up (White); Space Ship Sappy (White); Guns A-Poppin’ (White); Horning Around (White); Rusty Romeos (White); Outer Space Jitters (White)

1958 Quiz Whiz (White); Fift Blows Her Top (White); Pies and Guys (White); Flying Saucer Duffy (White); Oil’s Well That Ends Well (White); Triple Crossed (White); Sappy Bullfighters (White); Sweet and Hot (White)

(Larry, Moe, and Curly Joe DeRita)

1959 Have Rocket, Will Travel (Lowell—feature)
1960 Three Stooges Scrapbook (Maurer—feature)
1961 Snow White and the Three Stooges (Snow White and the Three Clowns) (Walter Lang—feature)
1962 The Three Stooges Meet Hercules (Bernds—feature); The Three Stooges in Orbit (Bernds—feature)
1963 The Three Stooges Go around the World in a Daze (Maurer—feature); It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer—feature) (as firemen); Four for Texas (Aldrich—feature)

1965 The Outlaws IS Coming! (Three Stooges Meet the Gunslinger) (Maurer—feature)
1968 Star Spangled Salesman (Maurer—feature)

Films of Moe Howard (features):

1958 Space Master X-7 (Mutiny in Outer Space) (Bernds) (as cab driver)
1959 Senior Prom (Rich)
1966 Don’t Worry, We’ll Think of a Title (Harmon Jones) (as Mr. Raines)
1973 Doctor Death: Seeker of Souls (Saeta) (as volunteer)

Films of Shemp Howard (features unless noted):

1934–7 as Knobby Walsh in Joe Palooka shorts for Vitaphone
1935 Convention Girl (Luther Reed) (as Dan)
1937 Headin’ East (Ewing Scott) (as Windy)
1938 Hollywood Roundup (Ewing Scott) (as Oscar)
1939 Another Thin Man (Van Dyke) (as Wacky)
1940 Millionaires in Prison (Ray McCarey) (as Professor); The Leather-Pushers (Rawlins) (as sailor); Give Us Wings (Lamont) (Whitey); The Bank Dick (The Bank Detective) (Cline) (Joe Guelpe); Murder over New York (Lachman) (as Pakir)
1941 Meet the Chump (Cline) (as Stinky Fink); Buck Privates (Rookies) (Lubin) (as Chef); The Invisible Woman (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Frankie); Six Lessons from Madame La Zonga (Rawlins) (as Gabby); Mr. Dynamite (Rawlins) (as Abdullah); In the Navy (Abbott and Costello in the Navy) (Lubin) (as Dizzy); Tight Shoes (Rogell) (as Okay); San Antonio Rose (Lamont) (as Benny the Bounce); Hold That Ghost (Oh, Charlie) (Lubin) (as soda jerk); Hit the Road (Joe May) (as Dingbat); Too Many Blondes (Freeland) (as hotel manager); Hellzapoppin’ (Potter) (as Louie); The Flame of New Orleans (Clair) (as walter); Cracked Nuts (Cline) (as Robot)
1942 The Strange Case of Dr. Rx (Nigh) (as Sgt. Sweeney); Butch Minds the Baby (Rogell) (as Squinty Sweeney); Mississippi Gambler (Maté) (as Milton Davis); Private Backaroo (Cline) (as Sgt. “Muggsy”’ Shavel); Pittsburgh (Seiler) (as Shorty); Arabian Nights (Rawlins) (as Sinbad); Who Done It? (Kenton) (as Goof)
1943 Keep ’em Slugging (Cabanee) (as Binky); It Ain’t Hay (Money for Jam) (Kenton) (as Umbrella Sam); How’s About It? (Fenton) (as Alf); Strictly in the Groove (Keays) (as Pops); Crazy House (Cline) (as Mumbo)
1944 Moonlight and Cactus (Cline) (as Punchy); Strange Affair (Alfred E. Green) (as laundry truck driver); Three of a Kind (Lederman) (as Crazy Knights (Ghost Crazy) (Beaudine)
1946 Blondie Knows Best (Berlin) (as Jim Gray); Dangerous Business (Lederman); The Gentleman Misbehaves (Sherman); One Exciting Week (Beaudine) (as Marvin)
1949 Africa Screams (Barton) (as Gunner)
By THE THREE STOOGES: books—

Besser, Joe, with Jeff and Greg Lenburg, Not Just a Stooge, Orange, California, 1984.

On THE THREE STOOGES: books—

Hansen, Tom, with Jeffrey Forrester, Stoogemania, Chicago, 1984.

On THE THREE STOOGES: articles—

‘‘Re-Stooges,’’ in American Film (Washington, D.C.), July/August 1982.
Sandler, A., ‘‘Three Stooges Heirs Win Rights to Trico,’’ in Variety (New York), 1/7 January 1996.

* * *

The quality of the comedy films created by the Three Stooges will always be an arguable controversy because critics and fans of the group will never agree on what is good taste. If the talents of this comedy team are compared with other teams—Laurel and Hardy, the Marx Brothers, or even Wheeler and Woolsey and the Ritz Brothers—the ability to create a wide range of humor will balance out in favor of these other groups. Fans will, of course, not care—they like the simple, unpretentious directness of Three Stooges comedy. Over three decades the team created almost 200 shorts, appeared in or starred in some 20 features, and evidently lasted longer than any other team of comedians. In the popular cinema Moe, Larry, and Curly have made a contribution that cannot be dismissed.

The Three Stooges are actually a latter-day version of the wacky slapstick tradition developed by Mack Sennett in the 1920s—a type of unsophisticated comedy that springs from the verbal and physical alterations of circus clowns and vaudeville comedians. All of the kings of silent and sound screen comedy—Charles Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Buster Keaton, Harry Langdon, W. C. Fields, Laurel and Hardy, and the Marx Brothers—used many scenes with physical abuse (slapstick) and verbal inventive. If the Three Stooges can be faulted for the use of such material, it lies mostly in the thin motivation for face slapping and eye poking. A minor disagreement in their films causes Moe to slap Curly or Larry and an exchange of blows develops that seems unnecessary or even silly. Such exchanges, however, are well divorced from reality. As fans know, these are childlike men who will soon be working as a trio to solve, in a bungling way, the problem that confronts them.

Many of the shorts created by the Three Stooges show the basic materials used by other comedians in the 1920s and 1930s. To create a basic situation that was different, the group would take up a variety of occupations: they were waiters, plumbers, salesmen, detectives, soldiers, physicians, and businessmen. And in any of these endeavors, they would botch up the job. Moe, Larry, and Curly also had a relationship that was similar to that used by other comedy teams. Moe Howard, the most durable Stooge over the years, was a leader of sorts—a low-brow version of Groucho Marx. He also believed he knew more than the others in much the same way Oliver Hardy thought he knew more than Stan Laurel, but Moe had about the same brain power as his comrades. Larry and Curly sometimes served as foils for Moe; they were not merely detractors, they were threats to his assumed leadership. In this sense they worked on a rudimentary level as Chico and Harpo did in their relationship with Groucho. While these relationships are not as clear-cut and consistent as those that existed in the major comedy teams, they indicate the Three Stooges were working on common ground in a way that would appeal to less sophisticated audiences.

While the revival of interest in the Three Stooges was prompted by the 1958 release of many of their shorts to television, it should be realized that theatrical releases of the group’s shorts lasted into the late 1950s, ten years after most two-reel comedies had faded from the movie program. The immediate success of the television releases did promote one of their first features in years, the 1959 Have Rocket, Will Travel. The features that followed in the 1960s, such as The Three Stooges Meet Hercules and The Three Stooges in Orbit, were starring vehicles, whereas the features of the 1930s and 1940s were light comedies and musicals that used the group as a minor part in the total films.

The box-office success of the Three Stooges probably assisted in a revival of interest in slapstick comedy such as the high-budget features It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (1963), The Great Race (1965), and Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines (1965).

Many of the works of the Marx Brothers, W. C. Fields, Mae West, Laurel and Hardy, and the silent films of Charles Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, and Buster Keaton were revived in the 1960s. As humble as the humor of the Three Stooges might be, they obviously had a part in a comedy tradition that refused to die.

—Donald McCaffrey

THULIN, Ingrid

Films as Actress:

1948 Känn dej som Hemma (Holmsen); Dit vindarna Rår (Ohberg)
1949 Havets Son (Hasberg); Kärleken segrar (Love Will Conquer) (Molander)
1950 Hjärter Knekt (Ekman); Nar Kärleken kom till byn (Mattsson)
1951 Leva pa hoppet (Gentele) as Yvonne
1952 Möte med Livet (Werner); Kalle Karlsson fran Jularbo (Johansson)
1953 En Skärgardsnatt (Logardt); Goingehovdingen (Ohberg)
1954 Två Sköna Javeler (Hugberg); I Rök och Dans (Gamlin and Blomgren)
1955 Hoppsan! (Olin); Danssalongen (Larsson)
1956 Foreign Intrigue (Sheldon Reynolds) as Briita
1957 Aldrig i livet (Ragnborn); Snultronstilet (Wild Strawberries) (Bergman) as Marianne Borg
1958 Nära livet (Brink of Life; So Close to Life) (Bergman) as Cecilia Ellius; Ansketet (The Face; The Magician) (Bergman) as Manda Vogler/Amann
1960 Domaren (Sjöberg)
1962 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli) as Marguerite Laurier; Agostino (Bolognini) as the mother
1963 Natthjorten (Winter Light) (Bergman) as Märta Lundberg; Tystnaden (The Silence) (Bergman) as Ester; Sekstet (Sextet) (Hovmand)
1964 Die Lady (Games of Desire; Frustration) (Albin and Bermeis) as Nadine Anderson; Der Film den Niemand sieht (Triyandafilidis)
1965 Return from the Ashes (J. Lee Thompson) as Dr. Michele Wolf
1966 Nattlek (Night Games) (Zetterling) as Irene; La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over; Krigetar Slut) (Resnais) as Marianne
1967 Domani non siamo più qui (Rondi)
1968 Vargtimmen (Hour of the Wolf) (Bergman) as Veronica Vogler; Badarna (I, a Virgin) (Gamlin) as the cook; Adelaide (Fino a farti male; The Depraved) (Simon) as Elisabeth Hermann; Cuore di mamma (Mother’s Heart) (Benelli) as Eloisa
1969 Riten (The Rite; The Ritual) (Bergman—for TV) as Thea Winkelman; La caduta degli dei (The Damned) (Visconti) as Baroness Sophie von Essenbeck; Un diablo bajo la Almohada (Forte)
1970 It Rained All Night the Day I Left (Gessner)
1971 N. P. (N.P.—The Secret) (Agosti) as the wife; Malastrana (Corta notte delle bambole di vetro) (Lado)
1972 Viskningar och rop (Cries and Whispers) (Bergman) as Karin; La Sainte famille (Marchion)
1973 En handfull kärlekar (A Handful of Love) (Sjoman)
1975 Mose (Moses; The Lawgiver) (de Bosio—for TV) as Miriam; Monismianien 1995 (Monismiania 1995) (Fant); La Cage (Granier-Defere) as Helene; Il viaggio nella vertigini (De Gregorio)
1976 Salon Kitty (Madame Kitty) (Brass) (title role)
1977 The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos) as Elena Stradner
1983 Le Corraire (Giraldi—for TV)
1984 Efter Repetitioner (After the Rehearsal) (Bergman) as Reks Egerman
1985 Freibuter (Giraldi—for TV)
1987 Il giorno prima (Control) (Montaldo) as Mrs. Haversnay; Orn
1988 La Casa del sorriso (House of Smiles) (Ferreri)
1990 Faccia di lepre

Films as Director:

1965 Hängivelse (short)
1978 En och en (One and One) (co-d with Josephson and Nykvist, + ro as Ylva)
1982 Brusten Himmel (Broken Sky)

Publications

By THULIN: book—

By THULIN: article—

On THULIN: articles—

* * *

Of all the actresses brought to prominence through the films of Ingmar Bergman, Ingrid Thulin perhaps best exemplifies the cool, blond Swedish beauty who combines sensuality and suffering with Nordic intensity. She first worked with Bergman, who was the artistic director of the Malmö Municipal Theater, after she had trained at the Royal Dramatic Theater in Stockholm in the late 1940s. In the film Wild Strawberries, however, playing the sister-in-law, she made her mark in Swedish cinema and began her long and fruitful career in Bergman’s films. She appeared in a variety of roles in his films from 1958 in Brink of Life, for which she received an award at Cannes along with Bibi Andersson, to 1972 when she starred with Harriet Andersson and Liv Ullmann in Cries and Whispers. Often cast as a mistress (Winter Light, Hour of the Wolf, The Rite), Thulin capitalized on the enigmatic quality of her stunning beauty and her tragic face which conveys a unique combination of pain and pleasure. Her career in Swedish cinema has not been restricted to the films of Bergman, however, and she also has been active in the movies of many other Swedish filmmakers—among them Alf Sjöberg and Mai Zetterling. Particularly noteworthy was her appearance in the latter’s Night Games.

Ingrid Thulin’s international career ranks her among the three great Swedish actresses with Ingrid Bergman and Greta Garbo. While the films in which she has appeared outside Sweden have made uneven use of her talents, her performances in Luchino Visconti’s The Damned and Alan Resnais’s La Guerre est finie were marked by brilliance. Especially memorable, because it so movingly captured her unique style, was her portrayal of Yves Montand’s loving and long-suffering wife in the Resnais film. She has acted, but not always very effectively, in a wide variety of other international films—among them a number of Italian productions, as well as Visconti’s remake of The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. She has directed the short film Hängivelse and the feature Brusten Himmel, and co-directed One on One with Erland Josephson and Sven Nykvist.

—Charles L. P. Silet

THURMAN, Uma

Nationality: American. Born: Uma Karuna Thurman in Boston, Massachusetts, 29 April 1970. Family: Married 1) the actor Gary Oldman, 1990 (divorced 1992); 2) the actor Ethan Hawke, 1998, one daughter: Maya Ray Thurman-Hawke. Education: Attended the Professional Children’s School, New York. Career: Began modeling while in high school, mid-1980s; began her screen career at age 17 in Uma Thurman with Ralph Fiennes in The Avengers

Films as Actress:

1987  Kiss Daddy Goodnight (Huemer) (as Laura)
1988  Johnny Be Good (Bud Smith) (as Georgia Elkans); Dangerous Liaisons (Frears) (as Cecile de Volanges)
1989  The Adventures of Baron Munchausen (Gilliam) (as Venus/Rose)
1990  Henry & June (Kaufman) (as June Miller); Where the Heart Is (Boorman) (as Daphne)
1991  Robin Hood (Irvin—for TV) (as Maid Marian)
1992  Final Analysis (Joanau) (as Diana Baylor); Jennifer Eight (Robinson) (as Helena Robertson)
1993  Mad Dog and Glory (McNaughton) (as Glory)
1994  Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (Van Sant) (as Sissy Hankshaw); Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (as Mia)
1995  A Month by the Lake (Irvin) (as Miss Beaumont); The Duke of Groove (Dunne) (short) (as Maya)

1996  Beautiful Girls (Ted Demme) (as Andrea); The Truth about Cats & Dogs (Michael Lehmann) (as Noelle Slusarsky)
1997  Batman & Robin (Schumacher) (as Poison Ivy/Dr. Pamela Isley); Gattaca (Niccol) (as Irene Cassini)
1998  Les Misérables (August) (as Fantine); The Avengers (Chechik) (as Emma Peel)
1999  Sweet and Lowdown (Allen) (as Blanche)
2000  The Golden Bowl (Ivory) (as Charlotte); Vatel (Joffe)

Other Films:

1997  Julian Po (The Tears of Julian Po) (Wade) (for “acknowledged contribution”)

Publications

By THURMAN: articles—

Interview in Interview (New York), July 1987.
“Numero Uma,” interview with Alex Shoumatoff, in Vanity Fair (New York), January 1996.

On THURMAN: articles—

Yagoda, Ben, “Uma Thurman: Whatever You Do, Don’t Ask This Brainy Bombshell for Her Phone Number,” in Rolling Stone (New York), 18 May 1989.
Klinger, J., “Henry and June,” in American Film (Hollywood), September 1990.

* * *

Uma Thurman is a lanky, thoroughly beguiling actress whose exotic good looks separate her from such all-American beauties as Julia Roberts and Michelle Pfeiffer. After making her screen debut in an obscure independent film (Kiss Daddy Goodnight) and appearing to little effect in an atrocious comedy throwaway (Johnny Be Good), Thurman established herself in her first important film: Stephen Frears’s savagely witty Dangerous Liaisons, made when she was all of 18, in which she plays the seduced virgin Cecile de Volanges. Thurman more than held her own playing opposite a well-seasoned cast (including John Malkovich, Glenn Close, and Pfeiffer). Indeed, in a number of her subsequent roles she specialized in playing defenseless innocents. She was especially good in this capacity in Jennifer Eight, in which she has the difficult role of a young blind woman who just may be the next victim of a serial killer. In one scene, as her character is left alone at a noisy party, Thurman’s face subtly and effectively expresses just the right amount of fear, confusion, and anxiety.

Her early-career characters ooze vulnerability even when they are sexually experienced. In Mad Dog and Glory, her role in essence is that of a gift, presented to a reserved crime scene photographer (Robert De Niro) who has saved the life of a mobster (Bill Murray). While the focus of Henry & June is on the erotic relationship between the writers Henry Miller (Fred Ward) and Anais Nin (Maria de Medeiros) in early 1930s Paris, Thurman’s June Miller is very much a part of the scenario as she becomes the final link in a three-cornered love affair. In both these films, Thurman is an exhilarating presence, with her characters at once sexually alluring and deeply human. In Mad Dog and Glory, she is especially impressive as she interacts with De Niro.

Perhaps Thurman’s most disappointing screen appearance came in Gus Van Sant’s disastrous Even Cowgirls Get the Blues. She plays a young woman named Sissy Hankshaw, who is “somewhat of a medical oddity” in that she was born with abnormally large thumbs. For years, Sissy has been fulfilling her calling by hitchhiking across America. The crux of the story details her experiences as she encounters a band of lesbian-feminist cowgirl-revolutionaries in a western spa-resort. The film was screened to standing-room-only crowds at the 1993 Toronto Film Festival. Van Sant was not happy with audience reaction, so he took his work back to the editing room. Despite his alterations, critics and audiences remained unenthralled.

Fortunately for Thurman, she escaped unscathed. Her follow-up was the most talked-about film of 1994, and one of the most influential films of the 1990s: Quentin Tarantino’s Pulp Fiction. Here, she exchanges vulnerability for outright kookiness and take-charge attitude in her role as Mia, the sexy, flaky wife of a crime lord, who spends an eventful evening in the company of hired gun Vincent Vega (John Travolta). Mia is a character straight out of 1940s film noir, and Thurman gives a deliciously watchable performance, full of clever and outrageous mannerisms. As a result, she earned reams of publicity, and a Best Supporting Actress Oscar nomination. And in the far more conventional A Month by the Lake, set in a totally different time and place, her performance is almost as equally over-the-top. Here she plays Miss Beaumont, a nanny who flirts with a dapper older man (Edward Fox) in a Lake Como, Italy, resort immediately prior to the start of World War II.

In the second half of the 1990s, Thurman has played characters who are coolly sexy (in the sci-fi thriller Gattaca); goofy and ditzy (the Cyrano-like romantic comedy The Truth About Cats & Dogs); sharp, knowing, and much-coveted (the small town slice-of-life/ensemble piece Beautiful Girls); and eccentric (Woody Allen’s Sweet and Lowdown). And her reputation was not hampered by the less-than-successful Batman & Robin (playing the villainous Poison Ivy) and The Avengers (as Emma Peel).

All these roles are linked in that they hinged on her looks—and none offered her a character as eye-opening as that of Pulp Fiction’s Mia. In Sweet and Lowdown, costars Sean Penn and Samantha Morton garnered the good reviews and Oscar nominations; Thurman’s presence mostly was overlooked.

—Rob Edelman

1207
TIERNEY, Gene

Films as Actress:

1940 The Return of Frank James (Fritz Lang) (as Eleanor Stone); Hudson's Bay (Pichel) (as Barbara)
1941 Tobacco Road (Ford) (as Ellie May); Belle Starr (Cummings) (title role); Sundown (Hathaway) (as Zia)
1942 The Shanghai Gesture (von Sternberg) (as Poppy Charteris); Son of Fury (Cromwell) (as Eve); Rings on Her Fingers (Mamoulian) (as Susan Miller/Linda Worthington); Thunder Birds (Wellman) (as Kay Saunders); China Girl (Hathaway) (as Miss Young)
1943 Heaven Can Wait (Lubitsch) (as Martha)
1944 Laura (Preminger and Mamoulian) (title role)
1945 A Bell for Adano (King) (as Tina); Leave Her to Heaven (Stahl) (as Ellen Berent)
1946 Dragonwyck (Lubitsch and Mankiewicz) (as Miranda); The Razor's Edge (Goulding) (as Isabel Bradley)
1947 The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Mankiewicz) (as Lucy)
1948 The Iron Curtain (Wellman) (as Anna Gouzenko); That Wonderful Urge (Sinclair) (as Sara Farley)
1949 Whirlpool (Preminger) (as Ann Sutton)
1950 Night and the City (Dassin) (as Mary Bristol); Where the Sidewalk Ends (Preminger) (as Morgan Taylor)
1951 The Mating Season (Lesien) (as Maggie Carleton); On the Riviera (Walter Lang) (as Lilli); The Secret of Convict Lake (Gordon) (as Marcia Stoddard); Close to My Heart (Keighley) (as Midge Sheridan)
1952 Way of a Gaucho (Tourner) (as Teresa); Plymouth Adventure (Brown) (as Dorothy Bradford)
1953 Never Let Me Go (Daves) (as Marya Lamarkina)
1954 Personal Affair (Pelissier) (as Kay Barlow); Black Widow (Johnson) (as Iris); The Egyptian (Curtiz) (as Baketamon)
1955 The Left Hand of God (Dmytryk) (as Ann Scott)
1956 Advise and Consent (Preminger) (as Dolly Harrison)
1963 Toys in the Attic (Hill) (as Albertine Prine)
1964 The Pleasure Seekers (Negulesco)
1969 Daughter of the Mind (Grauman—for TV)

Publications

By TIERNEY: book—

On TIERNEY: books—

On TIERNEY: articles—

***

Gene Tierney

1208
Gene Tierney’s exquisitely modeled features graced more than 30 feature films over a period of 25 years. As a contract player for Twentieth Century-Fox she was best cast in roles that combined her qualities as a fresh-faced ingenue with elements that hinted at a more enigmatic, possibly sinister exoticism, as in Laura or Leave Her to Heaven. Tierney seemed least effective when saddled with parts that utilized only one of these traits; unfortunately, this was most often the case. She was fortunate enough to work with the finest directors Fox had under contract: Lang, Ford, Mamoulian, Wellman, Lubitsch, King, Stahl, Mankiewicz. Otto Preminger directed her in four films, including the role with which she is most often identified, Laura. In Laura Preminger contrasted her persona as an obscure object of desire in an emblematic painting with the radiantly beautiful, yet more conventional woman she proves to be in real life. Earlier, her country slattern in Ford’s Tobacco Road, South Seas maiden in Son of Fury, and corrupted innocent in von Sternberg’s The Shanghai Gesture (where she was cast as a Eurasian) displayed her more sultry elements, to her disadvantage.

John Stahl’s refined melodrama Leave Her to Heaven gave Tierney her most complex role and she rose to the occasion, achieving the only Academy Award nomination of her career. As a jealous, possessive woman who destroys anything that comes between her and her husband’s attentions, Tierney’s placid beauty contrasts with the methodical working out of her psychosis, which involves drowning, miscarriage, and eventual suicide. Though she was touching in The Ghost and Mrs. Muir and remarkably warm in Night and the City, her subsequent ‘starring’ roles were often in support of the male leads, as in The Iron Curtain and Where the Sidewalk Ends. Only in Preminger’s Whirlpool was her masklike calm used to best advantage. Her 1950s and 1960s work is negligible, but she registers as a sympathetic Washington matron in Advise and Consent.

—Lee Tsiantis

TRACY, Spencer

Films as Actor:

1930 Taxi Talks (short) (as a gunman); The Hard Guy (Hurley—short) (as World War I veteran); Up the River (Ford) (as St. Louis)
1931 Quick Millions (Brown) (as “Bugs” Raymond); Six Cylinder Love (Freeland) (as William Dontoy); Goldie (Stoloff) (as Bill)
1932 She Wanted a Millionaire (Blystone) (as William Kelly); Sky Devils (Sutherland) (as Wilkie); Disorderly Conduct (Considine) (as Dick Fay); Young America (Borzage) (as Jack Doray); Society Girl (Lanfield) (as Briscoe); The Painted Woman (Blystone) (as Tom Brian); Me and My Gal (Walsh) (as Don Dolan)
1933 Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing (Curtiz) (as Tom Connors); The Face in the Sky (Lachman) (as Joe Buck); The Power and the Glory (William K. Howard) (as Tom Garner); Shanghai Madness (Blystone) (as Pat Jackson); The Mad Game (Cummings) (as Edward Carson); Man’s Castle (Borzage) (as Bill)
1934 The Show-Off (Riesner) (as Aubrey Piper); Bottoms Up (Butler) (as Smoother King); Looking for Trouble (Wellman) (as Joe Graham); Now I’ll Tell (Burke) (as Murray Golden); Marie Galante (Henry King) (as Crawford)
1935 It’s a Small World (Cummings) (as Bill Shelvin); Dante’s Inferno (Lachman) (as Jim Carter); The Murder Man (Whelan) (as Steve Gray); Whipsaw (Wood) (as Ross McBride)
1936 Riffraff (Leonard) (as Dutch); Fury (Fritz Lang) (as Joe Wheeler); San Francisco (Van Dyke) (as Father Mullin); Lelsey Lady (Conway) (as Haggerty)

1937 They Gave Him a Gun (Van Dyke) (as Fred); Captains Courageous (Fleming) (as Manuel); The Big City (Borzage) (as Joe)

1938 Mannequin (Borzage) (as John L. Hennessy); Test Pilot (Fleming) (as Gunner Sloane); Boys’ Town (Taurog) (as Father Flanagan)

1939 Stanley and Livingston (Henry King) (as Henry Stanley)

1940 I Take This Woman (Van Dyke) (as Karl Decker); Northwest Passage (King Vidor) (as Major Rogers); Edison, the Man (Brown) (title role); Boom Town (Conway) (as Square John Sand)

1941 Men of Boys’ Town (Taurog) (as Father Flanagan); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming) (title role)

1942 Ring of Steel (Kanin—short) (as narrator); Woman of the Year (Stevens) (as Sam Craig); Tortilla Flat (Fleming) (as Pilon)

1943 Keeper of the Flame (Cukor) (as Steven O’Malley); A Guy Named Joe (Fleming) (as Pete Sandidge)

1944 Battle Stations (Kanin—short) (as narrator); The Seventh Cross (Zinnemann) (as George Heisler); Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy) (as Lt. Col. James Doolittle)

1945 Without Love (Bucquet) (as Pat Jamieson)

1947 The Sea of Grass (Kazan) (as Jim Brewton); Cass Timberlane (Sidney) (title role)

1948 State of the Union (Capra) (as Grant Matthews)

1949 Edward, My Son (Cukor) (as Arnold Boul); Adam’s Rib (Cukor) (as Adam Bonner)

1950 Malaya (Thorpe) (as Carnahan); Father of the Bride (Minnelli) (as Stanley Banks)

1951 Father’s Little Dividend (Minnelli) (as Stanley Banks); The People Against O’Hara (Sturges) (as James Curtayne)

1952 Pat and Mike (Cukor) (as Mike Conovan); The Plymouth Adventure (Brown) (as Captain Christopher Jones)

1953 The Actress (Cukor) (as Clinton Jones)

1954 Broken Lance (Dmytryk) (as Matt Deveraux); Bad Day at Black Rock (Sturges) (as John McReedy)

1956 The Mountain (Dmytryk) (as Zachary Teller)

1957 The Desk Set (Lang) (as Richard)

1958 The Old Man and the Sea (Sturges) (title role); The Last Hurrah (Ford) (as Frank Skelfington)

1960 Inherit the Wind (Kramer) (as Henry Drummond)

1961 The Devil at Four O’Clock (LeRoy) (as Father Matthew Doonan); Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer) (as Judge Dan Haywood)

1963 How the West Was Won (Hathaway, Ford, and Marshall) (as narrator); It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (as Captain C. G. Culpeper)

1967 Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner? (Kramer) (as Matt Drayton)

Publications

By TRACY: article—

Interview in Film Weekly (London), 29 August 1936.
TRAVOLTA, John

Films as Actor:

1975 The Devil’s Rain (Fuest) (as Danny)
1976 Carrie (De Palma) (as Billy Nolan); The Boy in the Plastic Bubble (Kleiser—for TV) (as Tod Lubitch)
1977 Saturday Night Fever (Badham) (as Tony Manero)
1978 Moment by Moment (Wagner) (as Strip); Grease (Kleiser) (as Danny Zuko)
1980 Urban Cowboy (Bridges) (as Bud)
1981 Blow Out (De Palma) (as Jack)
1983 Staying Alive (Stallone) (as Tony Manero); Two of a Kind (Herzfeld) (as Zack)
1985 Perfect (Bridges) (as Adam)
1987 The Dumb Waiter (Basements, The Room) (Altman—for TV) (as Ben)
1989 The Experts (Thomas) (as Travis); Look Who’s Talking (Heckerling) (as James Ubriacco)
1990 Look Who’s Talking Too (Heckerling) (as James Ubriacco)
1991 Shout (Hornaday) (as Jack Cabe); Chains of Gold (Holcomb—for TV, produced 1989) (as Scott Barnes)
1992 Boris and Natasha: The Movie (Smith—for TV) (as Himself)
1993 Look Who’s Talking Now (Ropelewski) (as James Ubriacco); Eyes of an Angel (The Tender) (Harmon—produced in 1990) (as Bobby)
1994 Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (as Vincent Vega)
1995 Get Shorty (Sonnenfeld) (as Chili Palmer); White Man’s Burden (Nakano) (as Louis Pinnock)
1996 Broken Arrow (Woo) (as Vic Deakins); Phenomenon (Turteltaub) (as George Malley); Michael (Ephron) (as Michael)
1997 She’s So Lovely (Cassavetes) (as Joey, + exec pr); Face/Off (Woo) (as Sean Archer/Castor Troy); Mad City (Costa-Gavras) (as Sam Baily)
1998 Welcome to Hollywood (Markes, Rifkin) (as Himself); Primary Colors (Nichols) (as Gov. Jack Stanton); The Thin Red Line (Malick) (as Brig, Gen. Quintard); A Civil Action (Zaillian) (as Jan Schlichtmann)
1999 Forever Hollywood (Glassman, McCarthy) (as Himself); The General’s Daughter (West) (as Warrant Officer Paul Brenner)
John Travolta (right) and Nicolas Cage in Face/Off

2000  Battlefield Earth (Christian) (as Terl); Lucky Numbers (Ephron) (as Russ Richards)
2001  Swordfish (Sena)

Publications

By TRAVOLTA: books—

By TRAVOLTA: articles—

‘‘Travolta and De Palma Discuss Blow Out,’’ interview with C. Amata, in Films and Filming (London), December 1981.

‘‘Travolta’s Second Act,’’ interview with Martin Amis, in New Yorker, 20–27 February 1995.

On TRAVOLTA: books—

On TRAVOLTA: articles—

Yakir, Dan, “‘Vinnie and Wenner,’” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1985.

Stars (Mariembourg), 1996.

Yanc, Jeff, “‘More Than a Woman’: Music, Masculinity and Male Spectacle in Saturday Night Fever and *Staying Alive’”,’ in Velvet Light Trap (Austin), Fall 1996.

* * *

It might be argued that no other actor in the history of motion pictures enjoyed the kind of career renaissance experienced by John Travolta in 1994. In the late 1970s and early 1980s, he was a red-hot commodity in Hollywood, as the star of the enormously popular Saturday Night Fever and Grease. Over the years, however, his career had faltered; before being cast in Quentin Tarantino’s Pulp Fiction, he was considered a has-been. Despite his appearance in the popular comedy Look Who’s Talking and its two sequels, Travolta could not buy a prestige part. In fact, a number of his films even were released directly to video, quite an embarrassment for a star of his stature. But Pulp Fiction, one of the most talked-about movies of its year—and most influential films of its era—jump-started his career. For a second time, Travolta found himself atop the A-list of Hollywood stars.

Travolta earned his initial mainstream stardom as Vinnie Barbarino on the television situation comedy Welcome Back, Kotter. Teen girls swooned over him, he became a hot new sex symbol—and he was destined to be spared the fate of innumerable other television phenoms who eventually fade into oblivion. Actors who come to stardom in television series often are unable to surmount the public’s perception of them in their series role. For this reason, they cannot find work once their shows leave the air. Fortunately for Travolta, he was able to play an extension of Barbarino in his role as disco dancing Tony Manero in Saturday Night Fever, the film that earned him an Oscar nomination and won him his big-screen fame. The actor’s Brooklyn Italian-American street-boy attitude further endeared him to (mostly female) moviegoers, and his fancy moves on the dance floor almost single-handedly helped popularize the disco craze of the late 1970s. In fact, Travolta-as-Tony Manero became one of the icons of 1970s pop culture. He is as representative of the era as Bogie’s Sam Spade and Philip Marlowe are mirrors of the film noirish 1940s, or as Dustin Hoffman’s Benjamin Braddock reflects the late 1960s.

Travolta followed Saturday Night Fever with another tailor-made screen role: Danny Zuko in Grease. The popular musical, a nostalgia piece which fondly looks back on 1950s rock ‘n’ roll culture, was an ideal property for Travolta, allowing him to dance as impressively as in Saturday Night Fever and play yet another Barbarino clone. He also gave impressive performances in two other films: Urban Cowboy (which unfortunately failed at the box office), cast as a mechanical bull-riding hard hat; and Blow Out, Brian De Palma’s variation of Antonioni’s Blow-Up, playing a sound-effects man who inadvertently becomes involved in a murder scenario.

Travolta’s celluloid successes, however, were destined to be outweighed by his misfires. In 1978, one year after Saturday Night Fever and the same year as Grease, he co-starred with Lily Tomlin in the dreadful Moment by Moment. Through the potentially interesting pairing of Travolta and Tomlin, the film confronts a number of social taboos: the older woman/younger man syndrome; the relationship between a rich woman and poor man; and, above all else, gender reversal. But the film proved a shallow, forced attempt at a feminist declaration. Even if Moment by Moment had been artistically successful, it would not have advanced Travolta’s career. In Saturday Night Fever and Grease, he is the macho male, the focus of attention. In Moment by Moment, he plays the passive leading role, that of Strip, a drifter-beach bum. Tomlin is the dominant partner, with Travolta the object of desire, and he expresses markedly ‘‘feminine’’ characteristics such as vulnerability, sensitivity, and passivity. Travolta’s army of fans had no desire to watch him playing such a role. To add to his misfortune, all of his mid-1980s films—Staying Alive (in which he reprises Tony Manero), Two of a Kind, and Perfect—were downright disasters. By the end of the decade, he was considered a faded star, a view which remained unaltered despite his appearance in Look Who’s Talking.

In Pulp Fiction, the new John Travolta rose like a phoenix from its ashes. In the film, he at once redesigned his on-screen personality and revived his career. Travolta plays ultracool hitman Vincent Vega, who converses memorably with his criminal cohort (Samuel L. Jackson) and his employer’s wife (Uma Thurman). In Pulp Fiction, Travolta was one of an ensemble; his role as Vega was as important to the story as any one of a half-dozen other characters, and his Oscar nomination as Best Actor easily might have been in the Supporting Actor category. But in his follow-up, Get Shorty, he most decidedly was the star of the show. He plays Chili Palmer, another hip thug, a loan shark who loves old movies and ends up hustling his way into the film industry. In Get Shorty, Travolta solidified the fame he had re-won in Pulp Fiction.

He next appeared as unlucky, inarticulate factory worker Louis Pinnock in White Man’s Burden, a provocative morality tale set in a society in which African Americans are ensconced in the upper classes while whites inhabit the lower economic wrung. While far more artistically successful than Moment by Moment, both films are linked as radical departures at pivotal points in Travolta’s career. If Tony Manero and Danny Zuko are macho and Strip is feminized, Vincent Vega and Chili Palmer are empowered and Louis Pinnock is helpless and victimized. In the second half of the 1990s Travolta—now ensconced as one of Hollywood’s $15-$20-million dollar men—has been a prolific screen presence. Travolta has experimented with a variety of roles; he has played military men, heroes and villains, and blue-collar and white-collar types. In all, he has been interesting to watch, even when his scripts fail to match his talent. Travolta did well as an over-the-top bad guy in Broken Arrow, playing a rugged, diabolical Air Force aviator who hatches a scheme to steal nuclear weapons and blackmail the government for $250 million. This was Travolta’s first outright villain since his supporting role as a low-class teen in Carrie, one of his pre-Saturday Night Fever credits. On the other end of the scamp-to-champ scale, Travolta literally played a cherub (albeit an atypical one) in Michael, cast as a cigarette-smoking, beer-swilling, sexually active archangel. As a standard-issue sleuth, he is a tenacious army warrant officer investigating a murder in The General’s Daughter. In A Civil Action, he is a slick, ambulance-chasing lawyer who is humanized and humbled while researching an environmental pollution lawsuit. He even played stalwart hero and psychotic villain in the same film: Face/Off, in which he is an FBI agent who, via special effects, switches faces with a sadistic terrorist. Extending his Louis Pinnock character, Travolta has played average Joes who find themselves in extraordinary situations. In Mad City, he is a dim-witted, recently fired museum security guard who becomes a hostage-taker. In Phenomenon, he is another blue-collar type, an auto repair shop proprietor mysteriously transformed into a modern-era Einstein. In contrast, Travolta won the coveted role of an aspiring President of the United States in Primary Colors, based on the notorious novel by ‘‘Anonymous’’ (aka Joe Klein). In his rendering of a charismatic, Clintonesque presidential contender, Travolta shows what a fine actor he is.

—the original essay by Robin Wood
—updated by Rob Edelman

TREVOR, Claire

Nationality: American. Born: Claire Wemlinger in Bensonhurst, Long Island, New York, 8 March 1909 (some sources say 1912).

Education: Attended high school in Mamaroneck, Long Island; Columbia University, New York; American Academy of Dramatic Arts, New York, for six months. Family: Married 1) the producer Clark Andrews, 1938 (divorced 1942); 2) Cylos William Dunsmoore, 1943 (divorced 1947), son: Charles Cylos; 3) the producer Milton Bren, 1948. Career: 1929—professional stage debut with Robert Henderson’s Repertory Players in Ann Arbor, Michigan; 1930—with Warner Brothers stock company in St. Louis; 1931—summer stock with Hampton Players in Southhampton, Long Island; 1932—Broadway debut in Whistling in the Dark; 1933–37—contract with Fox: feature film debut in Life in the Raw; 1937–40—in radio series Big Town with Edward G. Robinson; 1938–43—contract with Warner Brothers; 1947—on Broadway in The Big Two; on television from mid-1950s. Awards: Best Supporting Actress Academy Award, for Key Largo, 1948. Died: 8 April 2000.

Films as Actress:

1929 two Vitaphone shorts
1933 Life in the Raw (Louis King); The Last Trail (Tinling); The Mad Game (Cummings) (as Jane Lee); Jimmy and Sally (Tinling) (as Sally Johnson)
1934 Hold That Girl (MacFadden) (as Tony Bellamy); Wild Gold (George Marshall) (as Jerry Jordan); Baby, Take a Bow (Lachman) (as Kay Ellison); Elinor Norton (MacFadden) (title role)
1935 Spring Tonic (Bruckman) (as Betty Ingals); Black Sheep (Dwan) (as Janette Foster); Dante’s Inferno (Lachman) (as Betty McWade); Beauty’s Daughter (Dwan)
1936 My Marriage (Archainbaud) (as Carol Barton); The Song and Dance Man (Dwan) (as Julia Carroll); Human Cargo (Dwan) (as Bonnie Brewster); To Mary—With Love (Cromwell) (as Kitty Brant); Star for a Night (Seiler) (as Nina Lind); 15 Maiden Lane (Dwan) (as Jane Martin); Career Woman (Seiler) (as Carroll Aiken); Navy Wife (Dwan) (as Vicky Blake)
1937 Time Out for Romance (St. Clair) (as Barbara Blanchard); King of Gamblers (Florey) (as Dixie); One Mile from Heaven (Dwan) (as Lucy “Tex” Warren); Dead End (Wyler) (as Francie); Second Honeymoon (Lang) (as Marcia); Big Town Girl (Werker) (as Fay Loring)
1938 Walking Down Broadway (Norman Foster) (as Joan Bradley); The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak) (as Jo Keller); Valley of the Giants (Keighley) (as Lee Roberts); Five of a Kind (Leeds) (as Christine Nelson)
1939 Stagecoach (Ford) (as Dallas); I Stole a Million (Tuttle) (as Laura Benson); Allegheny Uprising (Seiter) (as Janie)
1940 Dark Command (Walsh) (as Mary McCloud)
1941 Texas (George Marshall) (as “Mike” King); Honky Tonk (Conway) (as “Gold Dust” Nelson)
1942 Crossroads (Conway) (as Michelle Allain); Street of Chance (Hvely) (as Ruth Dillon); The Adventures of Martin Eden (Salkow) (as Connie Dawson)
1943 The Desperadoes (Carson) (as Countess Maletta); Good Luck, Mr. Yates (Enright) (as Ruth Yates); The Woman of the Town (Archainbaud) (as Dora Hand)
1944 Murder, My Sweet (Farewell, My Lovely) (Dmytryk) (as Mrs. Grayle)
1945 Johnny Angel (Marin) (as Lilah)
1946 Crack-Up (Reis) (as Terry Cordeau); The Bachelor’s Daughters (Bachar Girls) (Andrew L. Stone) (as Cynthia)
1947 Born to Kill (Lady of Deceit) (Wise) (as Helen Trent)
1948 Raw Deal (Anthony Mann) (as Pat); Key Largo (Huston) (as Gaye Dawn); The Velvet Touch (Gage) (as Marion Webster); The Babe Ruth Story (Ruth) (as Claire Hodgson)
1949 The Lucky Stiff (Lewis R. Foster) (as Marguerite Seiter); The Woman of the Town (Archainbaud) (as Dora Hand)
1950 Borderline (Seiter) (as Madeleine Haley)
1951 Best of the Badmen (William D. Russell) (as Lily Fowler); Hard, Fast, and Beautiful (Lupino) (as Milly Farley)
1952 Hoodlum Empire (Kane) (as Connie Williams); My Man and I (Wellman) (as Mrs. Ansel Ames); Stop, You’re Killing Me (Del Ruth) (as Nora Marko)
1953 The Stranger Wore a Gun (De Toth) (as Josie Sullivan)
Claire Trevor with John Wayne in Stagecoach

1954 The High and the Mighty (Wellman) (as May Hoist)
1955 Man without a Star (King Vidor) (as Idonee); Lucy Gallant (Oil Town) (Parrish) (as Lady MacBeth)
1956 The Mountain (Dmytryk) (as Marie)
1958 Marjorie Morningstar (Rapper) (as Rose Morgenstern)
1962 Two Weeks in Another Town (Minnelli) (as Clara Kruger)
1963 The Stripper (Schaffner) (as Helen Baird)
1965 How to Murder Your Wife (Quine) (as Edna)
1967 Capetown Affair (Webb)
1982 Kiss Me Goodbye (Mulligan) (as Charlotte Banning)
1987 Breaking Home Ties (John Wilder—for TV) (as Grace)

On TREVOR: articles—

Publications

By TREVOR: articles—

In the early 1930s, Claire Trevor was one of the “Broadway Imports” to the film colony in the rush to find actors who were capable of performing in talking pictures. She studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, worked briefly on Broadway, and appeared in Vitaphone shorts before being signed to a contract with Twentieth Century-Fox. Unfortunately, her stay there was not marked by any great distinction, and she found herself typecast as assorted bad girls in a slew of unmemorable B films. Her presence in Dead End (made on loan to Samuel Goldwyn), with Sylvia Sidney, Joel McCrea, Humphrey Bogart, and the Dead End Kids, was the exception, rather than rule, of her early career.

Trevor was destined never to become a star. Indeed, in a 1983 Films in Review interview, she explained that she was unwilling to deal with the pressures that stardom demanded, and was content to acquit herself in subsidiary roles. In the late 1930s and early 1940s, the quality of her films increased, and she was never better than when playing hard-bitten women on the periphery of society. Perhaps her two greatest roles are the no-nonsense yet understanding prostitute opposite John Wayne’s Ringo Kid in John Ford’s Stagecoach, and the tough mistress of Edward G. Robinson in John Huston’s Key Largo. She also appeared with Wayne in Allegheny Uprising, Dark Command, and The High and the Mighty, and had showy roles in Street of Chance, Murder, My Sweet, and Hard, Fast, and Beautiful. Her career continued apace until the mid-1950s, at which point she semiretired.

From then on, Trevor only appeared sporadically on screen. Her last theatrical film, a Sally Field/James Caan vehicle called Kiss Me Goodbye, received bad reviews, yet she—ever so typically—won enthusiastic personal notices.

—Joseph Arkins, updated by Rob Edelman

TRINTIGNANT, Jean-Louis

Films as Actor:

1955  Si tous les gars du monde (If All the Guys in the World; Race for Life) (Christian-Jaque) (as Jean-Louis)
1956  Et Dieu crée la femme (And God Created Woman) (Vadim) (as Michel); La Loi des rues (Habib); Club de femmes (Habib)
1959  Estate violenta (Violent Summer) (Zarlini) (as Carlo); Les Liaisons dangereuses (Vadim) (as Danceny)
1960  Austerlitz; Gance and Richebé; Le Cœur battant (The French Game) (Doniol-Valcroze) (as François); La Milliènne Fenêtre (Menegoz) (as Georges)
1961  Pleins feux sur l’assassin (Franju) (as Jean-Marie); Le Combat dans l’île (Fire and Ice) (Cavaliere) (as Clement); Le Jeu de la vérité (Hosseim) (as Guy); L’Antinea L’Atlantide; Journey beneath the Desert, The Lost Kingdom) (Ulmer and Masini) (as Pierre)

1962  “La Luxure” ep. of Les Septs Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (Denny) (as Paul); Il sorriso (The Easy Life) (Risi) (as Roberto Mariani); Horace ’62 (Versini) (as Joseph)
1963  Il successo (Morassi) (as Sergio); Château en Suède (Nutty Naughty Chateau) (Vadim) (as Eric)
1964  Mata-Hari, Agent H21 (Richard) (as Capt. François Lassalle); Les Pas perdus (Robin) (as Georges); Merveilleuse Angélique (Borderie) (as the poet)
1965  Compartiment tueurs (The Sleeping Car Murders) (Costa-Gavras) (as Eric); La Bonne Occase (Drach); Un Jour à Paris (short); Fragilité, ton nom est femme (short); “La donna che vive va sola” ep. of Io uccido, tu uccidi (Puccini)
1966  Le Dix-septième Ciel (Corber) (as François); La Longue Marche (Astruc) (as Philippe); Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Serge); Un Homme et une femme (A Man and a Woman) (Lelouch) (as Jean-Louis Duroc); Safari diamants (Drach) (as Raphael)
1967  Col cuore in gola (With Bated Breath; Deadly Sweet) (Brass) (as Bernard); Trans-Europ Express (Robbe-Grillet) (as Elias/himself); Un Homme à abattre (A Man to Kill) (Condroy) (as Raphael); La morte, la faffe, l’uro (Plucked; A Curious Way to Love) (Questi) (as Marco); Mon amour, mon amour (Nadine Trintignant) (as Vincent)
1968  Les Biches (The Does) (Chabrol) (as Paul Thomas); Z (Costa-Gavras) (as the magistrate)
1969  Le Voleur de crimes (Nadine Trintignant) (as Jean); Metti, una sera a cena (The Love Circle; One Night at Dinner) (Griffi) (as Michele); Ma nuit chez Maud (My Night at Maud’s) (Rohmer) (as Jean-Louis); La matriarca (The Libertine) (Campanile) (as Dr. De Marchi); L’Homme qui ment (Shock Troops; The Man Who Lies) (Robbe-Grillet) (as Boris Varissa); Il grande silenzio (Corbucci); L’Opium et le bâton (Rachedi); Cosi dolce cosi perversa (Lenzi)
1970  L’Américain (Bozzufi) (as Bruno); Le Voyou (The Crook) (Lelouch) (as Simon); Il conformista (The Conformist) (Bertolucci) (as Marcello)
1971  L’Homme au cerveau greffé (Doniol-Valcroze); La Course du lièvre à travers les champs (And Hope to Die) (Clément) (as Froggy); Sans mobile apparent (Without Apparent Motive) (Labro) (as Detective Carella)
1972  L’Attentat (Plot; The French Conspiracy) (Boisset) (as Darien)
1973  Un Homme est mort (The Outside Man) (Deryay) (as Lucien); Defense de savoir (Forbidden to Know) (Nadine Trintignant) (as Laubre); Le Train (Granier-Defere) (as Meyereu)
1974  Les Violons du bal (Drach) (as Michel); Le Secret (The Secret) (Enrico) (as David); Le Mouton enragé (Love at the Top) (Devillle) (as Nicholas); L’Escarade (Soutter) (as Ferdinand); Le Jeu avec le feu (Playing with Fire) (Robbe-Grillet) (as Frantz)
1975  Le Voyage de noces (Nadine Trintignant) (as Paul); L’Aggression (Act of Aggression) (Pirès) (as Paul Varlin); Flic Story (Deray) (as Buisson); Il pleut sur Santiago (Soto) (as the Senator); La donna della domenica (The Sunday Woman) (Comencini) (as Massimo)
1976  Les Passagers (Leroy) (as Alex)
1977  Il deserto dei Tartari (The Desert of the Tartars) (Zullini) (as the doctor)
1978  L’Argent des autres (Other People’s Money) (du Chalonge) (as Rainier); Repérages (Faces of Love) (Soutter) (as Victor)
1980  La Banquière (Girod) (as Horance Vannister); Je vous aime (I Love All of You) (Berri)
1981  Malevil (du Chalonge) (as Rulbert); Passion d’amour (Passion of Love) (Scola) (as the doctor); Eaux profondes (Deville) (as Victor)
1982  Colpa al cuore (Blow to the Heart) (Amelio—for TV); Boulevard des assassins (Tioulang); Le Grand Pardon (Arcady)
1983  Le Bon Plaisir (Girod) (as the president); Under Fire (Spottiswoode) (as Jazy); La Nuit de Varennes (Scola) (as Monsieur Sauce); Vivement dimanche! (Confidentially Yours; Finally, Sunday) (Truffaut) (as Julien Vercel); La Crime (Cover-Up) (Labro) (as Christian Lacassagne)
1984  Viva la vie! (Lelouch) (as François Gaucher); Partir, revenir (Going and Coming Back) (Lelouch) (as Roland Rivièrè); Femmes de personne (Frank) (as Gilquin)
1985  L’Été prochaine (Next Summer) (Nadine Trintignant) (as Paul); L’Homme aux yeux d’argent (Granier-Deferre) (as Inspector Mayene); Rendez-vous (Téchiné) (as Scrothzler); Sortez, c’est le feu des bivalviers (Laszlo Szabo) (as Fodo the Teacher)
1986  La Femme de ma vie (Wargnier) (as Pierre); Un homme et une femme: vingt ans déjà (A Man and a Woman: 20 Years Later) (Lelouch) (as Jean-Louis Duroc); Quinzième août (Garcia)
1987  Le Moustachu (Chaussois) (as the general); La Vallée fantôme (Tanner) (as Paul)
1989  Bunker Palace Hotel (Bilal) (as Holm); Pour un oui ou pour un non (Doillon)
1991  Merci la vie (Thanks for Life) (Blier) (as S.S. officer)
1993  L’Instinct de l’Ange (as the colonel)
1994  Regarde les hommes tomber (See How They Fall) (Audiard) (as Marx); Try Kolory: Czerwony (Red; Rouge) (Kieslowski) (as Judge Joseph Kern); Ernesto Che Chuevara: Das bolivianische Tagebuch (Dindo—doc) (as narrator of French version)
1995  Fiesta (Pierre Boutron) (as Masagual); La Cite des Enfants Perdus (The City of Lost Children) (Jeunet and Caro) (as voice of Irvin)
1996  Les Bidochons (Serge Korber); C’est jamais loin (Centonze); Un héros très discret (Audiard) (as old Albert Dehousse); Tykho Moon (Bilal)
1998  Ceux qui m’aident prendront le train (Those Who Love Me Can Take the Train) (Chéreau) (as Lucien/Jean-Baptiste)

By TRINTIGNANT: articles—

Interview with Jacques Zimmer, in Mensuel du Cinéma (Amsterdam), May 1993.
Interview with Agnés Peck and Michel Ciment, in Positif (Paris), September 1994.

On TRINTIGNANT: articles—

Veenstra, T., “L’homme qui ment.,” in Skrien (Amsterdam), April/May 1993.
Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1994.
Naddaf, Roswitha, “Der anständige Verführer.,” in Film-dienst (Cologne), 6 December 1994.

* * *

After training in Paris under Charles Dullin, Jean-Louis Trintignant appeared in theatrical repertory before making his film debut in a maritime drama, Si tous les gars du monde. In a career closely associated with the French New Wave and with Italian productions, he has achieved distinction in romantic, comic, and dramatic parts but especially in his portrayal of psychologically disturbed characters. Slight in build with limpid eyes and pale complexion, he projected a romantic image defined by gentleness, diffidence, and vulnerability. In Et Dieu créa la femme, he established himself as the kind, unassertive deceived husband, and roles as the vulnerable, inexperienced male followed. In Estate violenta, he played the innocent youth seduced by a knowing female, in Les Liaisons dangereuses a too-trusting Dancyen, in La Matriarcha a shy doctor initiated into eroticism by a widowed patient, and in Les Biches a compliant male for two lesbians. His wittiest exploration of the insecure, morally confused male character came in Ma nuit chez Maud as an upright Catholic offered, but not recognizing, sexual opportunity.

Romantic comedy roles came in Le Coeur battant and Le Dix-Septième Ciel, and in two Italian productions: Metti, una sera a cena, as the seductive playwright, and Passion d’amore, as the doctor counseling lovesick patients. For Franju he was the romantic lead in Pleins Feux sur l’assassin, for Vadim he appeared in Château en Suède, and for Lelouch in Le Voyou and Viva la vie. More serious studies of romantic involvement are found in Le Train, where against the setting of the Nazi occupation he falls in love with a fleeing Jewess, played by Romy Schneider, and in Nadine Trintignant’s study of an affair in Mon amour, mon amour. His most memorable romantic part, however, came in Un Homme et une femme: vingt ans déjà.

Films as Director:

1972  Une Journée bien remplie (A Well-Filled Day)
1979  Le Maître nageur

Publications

By TRINTIGNANT: book—

Trintignant’s taut and impassively cryptic acting style has suited films dealing with crime, political intrigue, war, or espionage. After an engaging performance as a juvenile criminal in La Loi des rues, he was the fascist thug of Le Combat dans l’île, the murderer’s accomplice in Compartiment tueurs, the Frenchman Froggy in Clément’s thriller La Course du lièvre à travers les champs, and the bored parachutist choosing crime in Safari-Diamants. Variations within the detective genre brought roles as Inspector Carella in Sans mobile apparent, the disquieting investigator in Glissements progressifs du plaisir, and a detective remorselessly pursuing his colleague’s killers in L’Homme aux yeux d’argent, while as Paul Verlin in Agression and Julien Vercel in Vivement Dimanche! he turns investigator to establish his innocence.

Roles in war films have included that of Captain François Lassalle in the spy drama Mata-Hari, Serge in the liberation spectacle Paris brûle-t-il?, the resolute but fallible Resistance leader Philippe in La Longue Marche, and, in his first American film, the French spy Jazy working for the CIA in Under Fire. In political thrillers he has been a venal left-wing journalist duped by the authorities in L’Attaquant, the infamous dictator Rubert in Malevil, and the left-wing intellectual implicated in terrorism in Colpe al cuore. It was in Z, however, that he had his most commanding role as the principled examining magistrate who refuses to bow to political pressures.

In roles as persecuted individuals he was impressive in Les Violons du bal as the Jew recalling his boyhood in Nazi France and La Course du lièvre à travers les champs, as the Jew recalling his boyhood in Nazi France. He was unscrupulously manipulative. His finest portrayal of an essentially immature and inadequate individual came in Longue Marche, playing an embittered, reclusive retired judge, a man on the prowl. More often, via the wonders of modern technology, he exteriorized sadistic fantasies with a prosthetic device, and a detective remorselessly pursuing his colleague’s killers in L’Homme aux yeux d’argent. It was in Z, however, that he had his most commanding role as the principled examining magistrate who refuses to bow to political pressures.

Recent films have confirmed a growing diversity in Trintignant’s roles. In La Vallée fantôme, he is seen as a filmmaker seeking inspiration and reflecting on his art; in the black comedy Le Moustachu, he appears as a grotesque secret service chief investigating infiltration; in the cartoon-styled science-fiction Bunker Palace Hotel, he appeared as the disconcerting, shaven-headed Holm; while in La Femme de ma vie, he gave a critically acclaimed performance as a reformed alcoholic helping a fellow victim.

Trintignant’s most widely seen later-career performance came in Red, the final installment in Krzysztof Kieslowski’s Trois Couleurs trilogy, playing an embittered, reclusive retired judge, a man on the edge of old age. On occasion, the judge peeps in on his neighbors through the window. More often, via the wonders of modern technology, he listens in on their telephone conversations. The judge, ultimately, is grappling with the moral implications that have deeply rattled his soul. How have his many guilty-or-innocent verdicts affected the lives of those he was empowered to judge? How have his own prejudices and moods affected his ability to judge impartially? Trintignant convincingly peels away the layers of this character, as he reveals himself to the young woman with whom he has come in contact.

Trintignant’s spare, undemonstrative acting style has lent itself well to comic understatement, to seeming diffidence or innocence in romantic roles, but most powerfully to the depiction of repressed or dangerously unbalanced individuals given to private fantasies. The interiority of these characters is conveyed through noted idiosyncrasies and telling mannerisms so that they are gradually established as powerful screen presences.

—R. F. Cousins, updated by Rob Edelman

---

TSUKASA, Yoko

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Yoko Shoji in Sakai-minato City, 20 August 1934. Education: Studied home economics at the Kyoritsu Women’s Junior College, was graduated in 1954. Family: Married Eisuke Aizawa, 1969. Career: 1954—secretary for Shin-Nihon Broadcast Company, Osaka; also a model; 1954—film debut in Kimi shintiamoukoto nakare; then worked for Toho Studio; acted on television from the mid-1960s, and on stage from the mid-1970s. Awards: Japan Mainichi Eiga Concourse, Kinema Juappo Award, and Tokyo Blue Ribbon, all 1966. Address: 7–10–3 Seijo, Setagaya-ku, Tokyo, Japan.

---

Films as Actress:

1954 Kimi shintiamoukoto nakare (Maruyama) (as Kumiko)

1955 Tenka taiheii; Yuki no hono; Fumetsu no nekyu (Suzuki); 33-go-sha oto nashi (Taniguchi); Oenosan; Hatsukoi san-nin masuko (Aoyagi); Ai no rekishi; Meoto renzai (Toyoda); Kuchizuke: Ni-wa, kaettekita wakadanna (Aoyagi)

1956 Hesokuri shacho (Chiha); Hanayome kaigi (Aoyogi); Chiemi no hatsukoi chaccha musume (Aoyogi); Mogotona musume (Mizuho); Zoku hesokuri shacho (Chiha); Aoi me (Suzuki); Konyaku samba-garasu (Sugie); Gendai no yokabu; Harikiri shacho (Watanabe); Aru to sono no baai (Mizuho); Ani to sono imoto (Matsubayashi); Nishikou no natsu (Horikawa)

1957 Bibo no miyako (Matsubayashi); Bokyaku no hanabira: Kanketsu-hen; Kiken na eiyu; Furyu onsen nikko (Suzuki); Sono yo no himegoto (Kimura); Daiagaku no samari-tachi (Aoyogi); Aoi sammyaku: enpen (Matsubayashi); Zoku aoi sanmyaku (Matsubayashi)

1958 Aijo no miyako (Sugie); Shacho sandai-ki (Matsubayashi); Zoku shacho sandai-ki (Matsubayashi); Tokyo no Kyujitsu; Hana no bojo (Suzuki); Furyu anzen nikki (Matsubayashi); Ivashigumo (Herringbone Clouds) (Naruse); Mimizuku seppo (Hisamatsu)

1959 Suzukake no sampo-michi (Horigawa); Hananoren (Toyoda); Aisai-ki (Hisamatsu); Daiagaku no oneichan (Sugie); Aru kengo no shogai (Samurai Saga) (Inagaki) (as Chive Hime); Daigaku no nijuhachi-nin shu; Sengoku gunto-den (Saga of the Vagabonds) (Sugie) (as Tazu); Wakat koibito-tachi;
Nippon tanjo (Inagaki)

1960
Ankokugai no taiketsu (The Last Gunfight) (Okamoto); Hiro-toshi (Suzuki); Aoi yaju (The Blue Beast) (Horikawa) (as Ayaka Eto); Yoru no nagare (Kawashima); Shin onna daigaku (Hisamatsu); Chino hata ni ikuru mono (The Angry Sea) (Hisamatsu); Akibiyori (Late Autumn) (Ozu) (as Ayako, the daughter); Sarariman Chushingura (Matsubayashi)

1961
Zoku sarariman Chushingura (Matsubayashi); Wakarete ikuru otoki no (Eternity of Love) (Horikawa) (as Michi); Yojimbo
(The Bodyguard) (Kurosawa) (as Nui); “Chosen” yori: Ali to honoo to (Challenge to Live) (Sugawa) (as Saeko Sawada; Honkon no yoru (A Night in Hong Kong) (Chiba) (as Keiko
Kimura); Kohayagawa-ke no aki (The End of Summer;
Early Autumn; Last of Summer) (Ozu) (as Noriko)

1962
Sarariman Shimizu minato (Matsubayashi); Onna no za (The Wiser Age; Woman’s Status) (Naruse); Horoki (Lonely
Lane) (Naruse); Sonobasho no onna airi; Zoku sararimann
Shimizu minato (Matsubayashi); Yoru no keisha (Uchikawa);
Eikima onsen; Chushingura (Loyal 47 Ronin; 47 Samurai)
(Inagaki) (as Youzenin); Furya onsen: banto nikki

1963
Onna no tsuyokunaru kufu no kazukazu (Chiba); Tsuma to nu a no onnatachi; Domburi-ike; Warera sarariman

1964
Shacho shinshiroku (Matsubayashi); Zoku shacho shinshiroku
(Matsubayashi); Tadaima shinsatsu-cho; Tensai sagishi monogatari: Tanon no hanamichi; Nishi no taisho higashi tonai shu (Furusawa); Gendai shinshir yaro; Danchi nanatsuno taizai (Chiba and Kakushi)

1965
Shacho ninpo-cho (Five Gents’ Trick Book) (Matsubayashi)
(as Kyoko Ishikawa); Daikon to ninjin (Twilight Path)
(as Haruko); Zoku shacho ninpo-cho (Matsubayashi);
Urakaidan; Kokokara hajimaru (Shosaburo)

1966
Shacho gyojo-ki (Matsubayashi); Zoku shacho gyojo-ki (Five Gents on the Spot) (Matsubayashi); Hikinige (Moment of Terror) (Naruse); Kinokawa: Hana-no-maki, Fumio-no
maki (The River Ki) (Nakamura) (as Mayaka); Jinchoge
(The Daphne) (Chiba) (as the second daughter)

1967
Shacho sen-ichiya (Matsubayashi); Sasaki Kojiro (Kojirou (Inagaki) (as Okinawa Princess); Joi-uchi (Rebellion; Haireyuzma shinsatsu-ki) (Kobayashi) (as Ichizo Sasahara);
Zoku shacho sen-ichiya (Matsubayashi); Midaregumo
(Two in the Shadow; Scattered Clouds) (Naruse) (as Yumiko)

1968
Haru ranman (Chiba); Shacho hanjo-ki (Matsubayashi); Zoku shacho hanjo-ki (Matsubayashi); Yamanoto Isoroku (Admaral Yamamoto) (Maruyama)

1969
Shacho emma-cho (Matsubayashi); Nippon-kai dai-kaisen (Battle of the Japan Sea) (Maruyama); Zoku shacho emma-cho
(Matsubayashi); Goyokin (Gosha) (as Shino)

1970
Shintoshin-gumi (Band of Assassins) (Sawashima); Shachogaku ABC (Matsubayashi); Zoku shacho-gaku ABC
(Matsubayashi); Nihon ichi no yakuza otoko

1971
Yomigaera daichi; Tochan no po ga kikoro

1974
Nagare no fu: Doran, Yoake (Sadanaga); Nostoradamasu no daiyogen (Prophecies of Nostradamus; Castrophe 1999)
(Masuda)

1977
Gokumon-to (The Devil’s Island; Island of Horrors) (Ichikawa)
(as the mother)

1978
Joobachi (Ichikawa) (as the maid); Zansho

1980
Harukanaru soro

Yoko Tsukasa began her career as an actress specializing in the role of the beautiful and sympathetic bourgeois girl so common in the Toho Studio’s productions. Cast opposite such popular stars as Ryo Ikebe, Akira Takarada, and Koji Tsuruta, she soon became the most popular Toho melodrama actress of the late 1950s. She projected an air of refined upper-class beauty so successfully that it resulted in her being typecast; nevertheless, she gradually became more ambitious and tried to expand her ability.

She attracted some attention with her enthusiastic performances as the wife of a poor novelist in Hisamatsu’s Aisai-ki and as the wealthy dughter who is used by the ambitious hero in Horikawa’s The Blue Beast. Finally, her roles as kindhearted daughters in Ozu’s two films, Late Autumn and The End of Summer brought her real recognition. In both films Tsukasa’s soft and natural personality matched Ozu’s sensitive portrayal of the serenity of bourgeois family life. A critic pointed out that her character was unusually believable in contrast to the overly dramatized feeling projected by many other actors of that period.

Aside from her contribution to the countless studio comedy series and melodramas through the 1960s, Tsukasa’s next important step was the collaboration with Naruse. In Moment of Terror she played the dramatic role of a company president’s wife who causes a car accident, and in Two in the Shadow, by contrast, she played the wife of a car accident victim. Her sensitive performance in the latter, a psychologically complex role in which she is gradually attracted to the man who caused the accident, won her much acclaim.

Although she was also called upon by other directors, such as Kurosawa, Kobayashi, and Ichikawa, her most famous role was as the heroine in Nakamura’s The River Ki. Here, she gave perhaps her most powerful, yet restrained performance, as she portrayed the life of a woman in a traditional local family.

—Kyoko Hirano

TURNER, Kathleen

Education: Attended Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield; University of Maryland, M.F.A., 1977; trained for the stage at Central School of Speech and Drama, London. Family: Married Jay Theatre Company, Baltimore Arena Players, and in New York off-off-Broadway; 1976—on Broadway in Gemini; 1977–78—in the daytime TV soap opera The Doctors; 1981—film debut in Body Heat;
1994—directed TV special Leslie’s Folly. Awards: Best Actress, Los Angeles Film Critics, for Romancing the Stone, 1984. Agent: c/o Phil
Gersh, The Gersh Agency, 222 N. Canon Drive, Suite 202, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.
Kathleen Turner and Sting in Julia and Julia

Films as Actress:

- 1981 Body Heat (Kasdan) (as Matty Walker)
- 1983 The Man with Two Brains (Carl Reiner) (as Mrs. Hfuhruhurr)
- 1984 Romancing the Stone (Zemeckis) (as Joan Wilder); A Breed Apart (Mora) (as Stella Clayton); Crimes of Passion (Russell) (as China Blue/Joanna)
- 1985 Prizzi's Honor (Huston) (as Irene Walker); The Jewel of the Nile (Teague) (as Joan Wilder)
- 1986 Peggy Sue Got Married (Coppola) (as Peggy Sue)
- 1987 Giulia e Giulia (Julia and Julia) (Del Monte) (as Julia); Switching Channels (Kotcheff) (as Christy Colleran)
- 1988 Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis) (as voice of Jessica Rabbit); The Accidental Tourist (Kasdan) (as Sarah Leary)
- 1989 The War of the Roses (DeVito) (as Barbara Rose); Tammy Trouble (Minkoff—short) (as voice)
- 1991 V. I. Warshawski (Kanew) (title role)
- 1993 Trail Mix-Up (short) (as voice of Jessica Rabbit); House of Cards (Lessac) (as Ruth Matthews); Undercover Blues (Ross) (as Jane Blue)
- 1994 Serial Mom (Waters) (Mom/Beverly Sutphin); Naked in New York (Algrant) (as Dana Coles)
- 1995 Friends at Last (for TV) (as Fanny Conlon, + pr); Moonlight and Valentino (Anspaugh) (as Alberta Russell)
- 1995 Stories from My Childhood (anim for TV) (as The Snow Queen)
- 1997 Bad Baby (as voice of Mom); A Simple Wish (Ritchie) (as Claudia); Love in the Ancient World (Miles—doc for TV)
- 1998 Legalsee (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Brenda Whitlasse)
- 1999 Prince of Central Park (Leekley) (as Rebecca); Baby Geniuses (Clark) (as Elena Kinder); The Virgin Suicides (Sophia Coppola) (as Mrs. Lisbon); Love and Action in Chicago (Johnson-Cochran) (as Middleman); Cinderella (Kidron—for TV) (as Claudette)
- 2000 Beautiful (Sally Field) (as Verna Chickle)

Publications

By TURNER: articles—

Interview with N. Mills, in Stills (London), March 1986.
Interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview, August 1995.
Interview with Andrew Duncan, in Radio Times (London), 16 August 1997.

On TURNER: book—

On TURNER: articles—

* * *

With her Tallulah voice and sensuous pout, Turner created a sensation by out-fataling the femme fatales of Hollywood’s Golden Age in Body Heat. This rather academic film noir about instant divorce could have been retitled Lethal Weapon with Kathleen unleashed in the title role, but Turner has gone from thinking man’s sexpot to character actress with only a brief stopover as major star. While many of her projects outgrossed those of more prestigious contemporaries, she found herself too often pigeonholed vis-à-vis male box-office attractions, with only two hits, Romancing the Stone and Peggy Sue Got Married (replacing Debra Winger) weighted in her favor. A risk-taker, she shrewdly balanced her steamy debut with a Steve Martin lark, The Man with Two Brains, in which she burlesqued her own bitch goddess image. Then, she followed her sensationally popular feminization of Raiders of the Lost Ark, Romancing the Stone, with a bravura performance as a woman fogged by a sexual identity crisis.
Whereas Turner’s two-faced characters often camouflaged their amoral purpose, Crimes of Passion cleverly split the scheming Turner persona into two aspects of the same personality: Joanna, a repressed 9-to-5 careerist and her after-hours alter ego, a whore named China Blue who indulges Joanna’s fantasies. Somehow, her talent flowered in the hothouse atmosphere of Ken Russell’s camera flowers and Barry Sandler’s memorably florid dialogue. What lent Turner’s work variety was her method of shading a good girl role such as Peggy Sue with a subversive edge while endorsing her terminatrix in the corrosively funny Prizzi’s Honor with a nesting instinct; Irene Walker just happens to kill for a living. Whether victor (Body Heat) or victim (Prizzi’s Honor) in the battle of the sexes, Turner’s formidable women never surrender; the impact of her provocative accessibility and killer instinct can be devastating.

After succumbing to sequeldom in Jewel of the Nile and rising above the sloppily fashioned but fetching time travel of Peggy Sue Got Married, Turner’s instincts failed her. Although the leaden black comedy War of the Roses drew crowds to its screaming matches, Turner miscalculated by repaying her discoverer, Lawrence Kasdan, by accepting a matronly mourner role in The Accidental Tourist. More damaging than the Euro-nonsense of Julia and Julia or the thuddingly inept remake of The Front Page, Switching Channels, Turner’s drab ancillary turn in Accidental Tourist evaporated her sexy demeanor and created the false perception that she was no longer big time. Despite kudos on Broadway for Cat on a Hot Tin Roof and Indiscretions, Turner slid through muddy problem dramas (House of Cards and Switching Channels), Turner’s drab comedy Prizzi’s Honor with a nesting instinct; Irene Walker just happens to kill for a living. Whether victor (Body Heat) or victim (Prizzi’s Honor) in the battle of the sexes, Turner’s formidable women never surrender; the impact of her provocative accessibility and killer instinct can be devastating. Despite kudos on Broadway for Cat on a Hot Tin Roof and Indiscretions, Turner slid through muddy problem dramas (House of Cards and Switching Channels) into a slump where her come-hither look now seemed like ancient history.

Perhaps, Turner will rebound as a latter-day Shelley Winters and grace us with powerhouse supporting turns. That being said, has there ever been as rapid a decline and fall of a goddess in movie history. She’s gone from being the top female draw in films to scrambling for character work in vanilla-flavored flops like The Real Blonde and Moonlight and Valentino, neither of which made her ingrained arrogance particularly fetching.

Although this is a sexist proposition, one cannot overlook how her ravaged leading lady looks have limited her options. What makes the discussion of her decline so troubling is that Turner was never just ravaged leading lady looks have limited her options. What makes the discussion of her decline so troubling is that Turner was never just “Don’t cry for me baby; I’ll deliver my Oscar acceptance speech on your grave!”

—Robert Pardi

TURNER, Lana

Films as Actress:

- 1937 A Star Is Born (Wellman) (as extra); They Won’t Forget (LeRoy) (as Mary Clay); The Great Garrick (Whale) (as Auber)
- 1938 The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo) (as Nazama’s maid); Love Finds Andy Hardy (Sietz) (as Cynthia Potter); The Chaser (Marin) (as Miss Rutherford); Rich Man, Poor Girl (Schunzel) (as Helen Thayer); Dramatic School (Sinclair) (as Mado); Four’s a Crowd (Curtiz)
- 1939 Calling Dr. Kildare (Bucquet) (as Rosalie); These Glamour Girls (Simon) (as Jane Thomas); Dancing Co-Ed (Every Inch a Lady) (Simon) (as Patty Morgan)
- 1940 Two Girls on Broadway (Simon) (as Pat Mahoney); We Who Are Young (Bucquet) (as Margy Brooks)
- 1941 Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard) (as Sheila Regan); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming) (as Beatrice Emery); Honky Tonk (Conway) (as Elizabeth Cotton)
- 1942 Johnny Eager (LeRoy) (as Lisbeth Bard); Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles) (as Peggy Evans); Buck PRIV CLAIM (as Paula Lane)
- 1943 Keep Your Powder Dry (Bucquet) (as Valerie Parks); Weekend at the Waldorf (Leonard) (as Bunny Smith)
- 1946 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Garnett) (as Cora Smith)
- 1947 Green Dolphin Street (Saville) (as Marianne Patourel); Cass Timberlane (Sidney) (as Virginia Marshland)
- 1948 Homecoming (LeRoy) (as Lt. Jane “Snapshot” McCall); The Three Musketeers (Sidney) (as Milady Countess Charlotte de Winter)
1950  A Life of Her Own (Cukor) (as Lily Brannel James) 1951  Mr. Imperium (You Belong to My Heart) (Hartman) (as Fredda Barlo)
1952  The Merry Widow (Bernhardt) (as Crystal Radek); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli) (as Georgia Lorrison)
1953  Latin Lovers (LeRoy) (as Nora Taylor)
1954  The Flame and the Flesh (Thorpe) (as Madeline); Betrayed
(The True and the Brave) (Reinhardt) (as Carla Van Owen)
1955  The Prodigal (Thorpe) (as Samarra); The Sea Chase (Farrow)
      (as Elsa Keller); The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco) (as Edwina Esketh); Diane (David Miller) (title role)
1957  Peyton Place (Robson) (as Constance MacKenzie)
1958  The Lady Takes a Flyer (Arnold) (as Maggie Colby); Another
      Time, Another Place (Lewis Allen) (as Sara Scott)
1959  Imitation of Life (Sirk) (as Lora Meredith)
1960  Portrait in Black (Michael Gordon) (as Sheila Cabot)
1961  By Love Possessed (John Sturges) (as Marjorie Petrose);
      Bachelor in Paradise (Arnold) (as Rosemary Howard)
1962  Who’s Got the Action? (Daniel Mann) (as Melanie Flood)
1965  Love Has Many Faces (Singer) (as Kit Jordan)
1966  Madame X (Rich) (as Holly Anderson)
1969  The Big Cube (Tito Davison) (as Adriana Roman) 1971  The Last of the Powerseekers (Doniger, Leytes, and Henreid—for TV) (as Tracy Carlyle Hastings) 1974  Persecution (Terror of Sheba; The Graveyard) (Chaffey) (as Carrie Masters)
1976  Bittersweet Love (David Miller) (as Claire)
1978  Witches’ Brew (Short)

Publications

By TURNER: book—

Lana: The Lady, the Legend, the Truth, New York, 1982.

On TURNER: books—

Wright, Jacqueline, The Life and Loves of Lana Turner, New York, 1960.
Morella, Joe, Lana: The Public and Private Lives of Miss Turner,

On TURNER: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.

* * *

Lana Turner has come to epitomize the concept of the classical Hollywood movie star. She is identified with glamour, artifice, and excess. The last is not only associated with her on-screen image but also with her offscreen identity. In fact, numerous critics have suggested that Turner’s offscreen activities are her primary claim to fame. Aside from the many marriages, the most spectacular instance of her notoriety was the 1958 killing of Turner’s gangster lover by her teenage daughter. The incident catapulted Turner into the realm of fame. Aside from the many marriages, the most spectacular instance Turner’s image as a celebrity is probably reinforced by her films which, on the whole, are not distinguished. Nevertheless, it would be inaccurate to claim that her film career is negligible. Turner, in addition to having an ability to project sexual desire, cultivated a very feminine identity, to the extent that her presence, in terms of grooming and gesture suggested artifice. But Turner is not a passive on-screen presence. Rather, she tends to play women who struggle and refuse to settle for less than what can be had. These characterizations suggest a woman who is desperate and, therefore, reckless; yet, Turner’s behavior is often constrained and she, unlike actresses such as Joan Crawford, seems incapable of fully challenging or overriding gender and, in numerous instances, class dictates. Arguably, this happens because she is too fully aligned to femininity, hence a socially controlled identity. Turner’s skill resides in her ability to articulate her situation and the insecurities it produces; beneath the somewhat glacial and carefully constructed exterior image, there is a person who is anxious, fearful, and needs help. It is perhaps this tension which contributes to her appeal as it foregrounds the conflicting responses women experience under patriarchy.

Turner’s star image is tightly bound to her sexuality. Such films as The Prodigal and Diane, in which Turner is paired with weak male co-stars and virtually carries the films herself, suggest that it is her sexual desire that makes her an exciting and transgressive figure. This on-screen emphasis on sex was mirrored offscreen through the marriages and the affairs; yet Turner’s offscreen identity was mediated by an emphasis on her as a woman who wanted a lasting marriage, who was a good mother and who was serious about her career. The many contradictions in her identity exploded with the real-life stabbing of her lover and these same contradictions are skillfully utilized by Douglas Sirk in Imitation of Life.

Although Turner continued to work into the late 1970s, her film career effectively ends with Madame X. From the 1980s onward, Turner shied away from public exposure and the decision to avoid the limelight invested her latter-day image with a degree of dignity. While Turner never fully gained critical acceptance as a performer, she proved herself to be an extremely professional and hard-working woman; and she managed to make an indelible mark on the Hollywood cinema through her presence and star image.

—Richard Lippe

TURTURRO, John

Nationality: American. Born: Brooklyn, New York, 28 February 1957; brother of the actor Nicholas Turturro; cousin of the actress Aida Turturro. Family: Married the actress Katherine Borowitz, son: Amadeo. Education: Was graduated from the State University of New York at New Paltz; earned an M.F.A. in Drama at the Yale Drama School. Career: Made his screen debut in a bit role in Raging Bull, 1980; acted in regional and off-Broadway plays, 1980s; made his Broadway debut in Death of a Salesman, 1984; appeared in the TV mini-series Mario Puzo’s The Fortunate Pilgrim, 1988; first appeared in a Spike Lee-directed film, Do the Right Thing, 1989; made his screen directing debut with Mac, 1992. Awards: Obie Award, for Danny and the Deep Blue Sea, 1985; Cannes Film Festival Best Actor, Independent Feature Project Gotham Award, for Barton Fink, 1991; Cannes Film Festival Camera d’Or, for Mac, 1992. Address: 16 North Oak Street, #2B, Ventura, CA 93001, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1980 Raging Bull (Scorsese)
1984 Exterminator II (Buntzman and Sachs) (as Guy No. 1); The Flamingo Kid (Garry Marshall) (as Ted from Pinky’s)
1985 Desperately Seeking Susan (Susan Seidelman) (as Ray); To Live and Die in L.A. (Friedkin) (as Carl Cody)
1986 The Color of Money (Scorsese) (as Julian); Gung Ho (Working Class Man) (Ron Howard) (as Willie); Hannah and Her Sisters (Woody Allen) (as Writer); Off Beat (Dinner) (as Neil Pepper)
1987 The Sicilian (Cimino) (as Aspanu Pisciotta)
1989 Five Corners (Bill) (as Heinz Sabantino); Do the Right Thing (Spike Lee) (as Pino); Backtrack (Catchfire) (Dennis Hopper—released in U.S. in 1991) (as Pinella)
1990 Mo’ Better Blues (Spike Lee) (as Moe Flatbush); Miller’s Crossing (Coen) (as Bernie Bernbaum); State of Grace (Joanou) (as Nick)
1991 Men of Respect (Reilly) (as Mike Battaglia); Barton Fink (Coen) (title role); Jungle Fever (Spike Lee) (as Paulie Carbone)
1992 Mac (title role) (+ d, co-sc); Brain Donors (Dugan) (as Roland T. Flakfizer)
1993 Fearless (Weir) (as Bill Perlman)
1994 Quiz Show (Redford) (as Herbert Stempel); Being Human (Forsyth) (as Lucinnius)
1995 Clockers (Spike Lee) (as Larry Mazilli); Unstrung Heroes (Diane Keaton) (as Sid Lidz); Search and Destroy (Salle) (as Ron); Sugartime (Smith—for TV) (as Sam Giancana)
1996 Girl 6 (Spike Lee) (as Murray, the agent); The Search for One-eye Jimmy (Sam Henry Kass) (as Disco Bean); Grace of my Heart (Anders) (as Joel Millner); Box of Moonlight (Di Cillo) (as Al Fountain); La Tregua (The Truce) (Rosi) (as Primo Levi)
1997 Lesser Prophets (De Vizia) (as Leon); Animals (Di Jiacomo) (as Tuxedo Man)
1998  Illuminata (as Tuccio) (+ d, co-sc, pr); The Big Lebowski (Joel Coen) (as Jesus Quintana); O.K. Garage (Cole) (as Johnny Candellano); He Got Game (Spice Lee) (as Coach Billy Sunday); Rounders (Dahl) (as Joey Knish)

1999  The Source (Workman) (doc) (as Allen Ginsberg); Cradle Will Rock (Robbins) (as Aldo Silvano); Summer of Sam (Spice Lee) (as voice of Harvey the Black Dog)

2000  O Brother, Where Art Thou? (Joel Coen) (as Pete); Company Man (Askin, McGrath); 2000 and None (Paragamian)

Publications

By TURTURRO: articles—

“Getting Down to the Bone,” interview with Marlaine Glicksman, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1990.

On TURTURRO: articles—

Jameson, R.T., and M. Glicksman, “Chasing the Hat, Getting Down to the Bone,” in Film Comment (Denville, New Jersey), vol. 26, no. 5, September-October 1990.

Gendron, Sylvie, in Séquences (Montreal), no. 175, November-December 1994.

* * *

John Turturro is an actor in the mold of Robert De Niro, Al Pacino, and Harvey Keitel: intense and multitalented, New York City-born and very much the New York performer. After knocking around films for several years, this Yale Drama School grad first earned notice in Five Corners, set in the Bronx, in which he offers a hair-raising performance as Heinz Sabantino, a creep who is sexually obsessed with pet store worker Linda (Jodie Foster).

Turturro’s primary strength is that he is a master at playing a range of attitudes. He can portray racists who are either upfront in their bias (Pino, the epithet-spewing pizza man, in Spike Lee’s Do the Right Thing) or more subtle and cunning (Moe Flatbush, the greedy jazz club owner—a character who is an anti-Semitic caricature—in Lee’s Mo’ Better Blues). On the other hand, he just as effectively can play a child of the working class who is a gentle soul, one who is put off by the racial prejudices of others and even is open to a relationship with a black woman (Paulie Carbone, the sensitive luncheonette operator, in Lee’s Jungle Fever).

Turturro can play a thug with a devilishly comic flair (Bernie Bernbaum, the manic lowlife who earns his keep as an informer and double-crosser, in Miller’s Crossing) and a reckless, neurotic nebbish (sore-loser Twenty-One contestant Herbert Stempel, in Quiz Show). He can portray a sweetly eccentric husband and father (Sid Lidz, who is faced with the terminal illness of his wife, in Unstrung Heroes) and a fervently radical, mostly unemployed actor who also is a husband and father (Aldo Silvano, one of the few fictional characters, in Cradle Will Rock). He can play an entertainment industry businessman (Joel Millner, the wig-wearing Brill Building rock ’n roll talent manager, in Grace of My Heart) and an entertainment industry intellectual (the title character in the Hollywood satire Barton Fink, a dedicated New York playwright who heads West in 1941 and whose primary concern is the plight of the “Common Man”; but he finds himself assigned to pen a wrestling picture for Wallace Beery—and promptly develops a severe case of writer’s block). Indeed, Turturro can portray characters as diverse as the mobster Sam Giancana (in the TV movie Sugartime) and the Jewish-Italian chemist-turned-writer Primo Levi, who survived ten months in a concentration camp (in The Truce).

Turturro made his directorial debut with Mac, a heartfelt comedy-drama about one man’s determination to realize his American Dream. The film is set in the mid-1950s and tells the story of three Italian-American brothers, sons of an immigrant tradesman who has just died. The story focuses on the title character, Niccolo “Mac” Vitelli, played by Turturro. The eldest of the trio, Mac is a carpenter like his dad, and he labors for a bullheaded, penny-pinching contractor who offends his sense of professionalism; he decides to start his own construction company, satisfied he can erect better houses and be a more humane employer. Mac, which Turturro co-scripted (with Brandon Cole), clearly is a film from his heart. It is dedicated to his own carpenter father, and inspired by the senior Turturro’s life. The result is a refreshingly sincere depiction of the lives and struggles of average, working-class Americans, a subject rarely explored in mainstream Hollywood movies. But more than anything else, Mac is a film about the dignity of work. “You know what I think happiness is?” Mac asks at one point. “To love your job. Not many people know this—that’s why they take vacations—but it’s the truth. If you hate your work, you hate your life. I love my work.”

Clearly, Turturro loves his work. And if he permits scenes in Mac to run a tad too long, one suspects it is because his respect for the acting craft obscured his good judgment as a director-storyteller.

He went on to direct, co-script, and star in a second feature: Illuminata, a farce detailing the screwball antics of a group of struggling theater-folk in turn-of-the-twentieth-century New York. Turturro plays Tuccio, an embattled playwright who will go to all extremes to see his play performed. In tone and setting, Illuminata may be the polar opposite of Mac. Yet both are linked in that they explore the dynamics of what it means to create something, whether it be building a house or writing and mounting a stage play.

—Rob Edelman
ULLMANN, Liv

Films as Actress:

- 1957 \textit{Fjols til Fjells} (Fools in the Mountains) (Carlmar)
- 1959 \textit{Ung flukt} (Young Escape) (Carlmar)
- 1962 \textit{Kort är Sommaren} (Summer Is Short) (Henning-Jensen) (as Eva)
- 1965 \textit{De kalte ham Skarven} (They Call Him Skarven) (Gustavson) (as Ragna)
- 1966 \textit{Persona} (Bergman) (as Elisabeth Vogler)
- 1968 \textit{Vargtimmen} (Hour of the Wolf) (Bergman) (as Alma); \textit{An-Magritt} (Skouen) (title role); \textit{Skammen} (The Shame) (Bergman) (as Eva Rosenberg)
- 1969 \textit{En Passion} (A Passion; The Passion of Anna) (Bergman) (as Anna Fromm)
- 1971 \textit{The Night Visitor} (Benedek) (as Esther Jenks)
- 1972 \textit{Pope Joan} (Anderson) (title role); \textit{Vriskningar och rop} (Cries and Whispers) (Bergman) (as a sister); \textit{Utvandrarna} (The Emigrants) (Troell) (as Kristina)
- 1973 \textit{Nybrygarna} (The New Land) (Troell) (as Kristina); \textit{Lost Horizon} (Jarrott) (as Catherine); \textit{40 Carats} (Katselar) (as Ann Stanley); \textit{Scener ur ett äktenskap} (Scenes from a Marriage) (Bergman—for TV) (as Marianne)
- 1974 \textit{Zandy's Bride} (Troell) (as Hannah Land); \textit{The Abduction} (Harvey) (as Queen Christina); \textit{L'uomo dalle due ombre} (De la part des copains; Cold Sweat) (Young) (as Fabienne); \textit{Léonor} (Juan Buñuel) (title role)
- 1976 \textit{Ansikte mot ansikte} (Face to Face) (Bergman—for TV) (as Jenny)
- 1977 \textit{A Bridge Too Far} (Attenborough) (as Kate ter Horst); \textit{The Serpent's Egg} (Das Schlangenei; Örmens ägg) (Bergman) (as Manuela Rosenberg)
- 1978 \textit{Herbstsonate} (Autumn Sonata) (Bergman) (as Eva); \textit{Couleur chair} (Wyergans)
- 1979 \textit{A Look at Liv} (Kaplan—doc) (as herself)
- 1980 \textit{The Gates of the Forest}
- 1981 \textit{Richard's Things} (Harvey) (as Kate)
- 1983 \textit{Children in the Holocaust} (Eisner—doc) (as narrator); \textit{Jenny} (Bronken—for TV); \textit{The Wild Duck} (Safran) (as Gina); \textit{La Diagonale du fou} (Dangerous Moves) (Dembo) (as Marina Fromm)
- 1985 \textit{The Bay Boy} (Petrie) (as Jennie Campbell); \textit{Ingrid} (Annakin, Crabtree, and French)
- 1986 \textit{Speriamo che sia femmina} (Let's Hope It's a Girl) (Monicelli) (as Elena)
- 1987 \textit{Gaby: A True Story} (Mandoki) (as Sari Brimmer); \textit{Mosca Addio} (Moscow Goodbye) (Bolognini) (as Ida Nudel)
- 1988 \textit{La amiga} (Meerapfel) (as Maria)
- 1989 \textit{The Rose Garden} (Rademakers) (as Gabriele Schlüter-Freund)
- 1991 \textit{Mindwalk} (Bernt Capra) (as Sonia Hoffman); \textit{The Ox} (Nykvist) (as Maria)
- 1992 \textit{The Long Shadow} (Zsigmond) (as Katherine)
- 1994 \textit{Drømspel} (Dreamplay) (Unni Straume) (as ticket seller); \textit{Zorn} (as Gunnar Hallström) (as Emma Zorn)
- 1995 \textit{Lumiére et compagnie} (Lumière and Company)
- 1997 \textit{Liv Ullmann scener fra et liv} (Hambro)
- 2000 \textit{Ljuset håller mig sällskap} (Light Keeps Me Company) (Nykvist) (as herself)

Films as Director:

- 1982 \textit{Love} (co-d)
- 1992 \textit{Sofie} (+ sc)
- 1995 \textit{Kristin Lavransdatter} (+ sc)
- 1996 \textit{Enskilda samtal} (Private Confessions) (series for TV)

Publications

By ULLMANN: books—

\textit{We, the Children}, New York, 1990.
Liv Ullmann

By ULLMANN: articles—

Interview with A. Leroux, in Séquences (Montreal), July 1975.
“We Are Good—Deep Down; But We Do So Little about It,” in Glamour, January 1990.
Interview with Anneli Jordahl, in Chaplin (Stockholm), 36/2, 1994.
Interview with Jolanta Fajkowska, in Kino (Warsaw), November 1997.

On ULLMANN: books—

On ULLMANN: articles—

Ecran (Paris), March 1978.

* * *

From the mid-1960s, Liv Ullmann represented to American audiences a sensual and sophisticated screen presence that did not exist within Hollywood. Her earthy beauty was best utilized in a series of provocative films directed by her mentor, Ingmar Bergman.

Her film credits were few and minor—she had appeared in several little-known Norwegian features—when Ullmann first met Bergman.
in Stockholm. He offered her the principal role of the mute Elisabeth Vogler in the psychologically complicated and exacting study Persona. There followed not only an artistic collaboration between the director and actress, but for a time, a deep personal and emotional relationship. Persona gave Ullmann a great acting opportunity, and was both an artistic and personal success for her. ‘‘It was difficult,’’ says Ullmann. ‘‘I prepared myself so that I read the script several times and I tried to divide it into certain sections. Bergman helped me a lot. He differs very much from what the majority of people think of him. People say that he is a demon, but it is not true at all. He simply knows whom to engage. He listens and then he tries to get the maximum from an actor.’’

Under Bergman’s influence, Ullmann became an internationally recognized actress. In the films Persona, Hour of the Wolf, Shame, Cries and Whispers, Scenes from a Marriage, and Face to Face, she creates immensely complicated portraits of contemporary women. Able to communicate an entire range of emotions through minute details of action, she relies neither on sharp mimicry nor intensified vocal intonation in her portrayals. Nevertheless, she is capable of expressing urgency, sensitivity, and agitation by the slightest movement of her eyes. Ullmann interprets the feelings and inner actions of her heroines by suggestion. Although trained in the theater, her experience there is not evident, except perhaps in some long Bergmanesque dialogue passages in which, through her ardor, she is able to draw the audience into her own inner conflict. Ullmann’s mastery of the dramatic consists precisely of the simplicity and realism of her expression.

While Ullmann is best known for her work with Bergman, she has performed equally exacting roles while working with other directors. In particular, her portrayal of the rural woman, Kristina, in The Emigrants and The New Land, Jan Troell’s two-part film of immigrant life in 19th-century America, merits extraordinary attention. She also acted under Troell’s direction in the psychological drama Zandy’s Bride.

After the successes of these films, Ullmann accepted several American offers. Her appearances in such films as the musical version of Lost Horizon, 40 Carats, The Abdication, and A Bridge Too Far are tremendous disappointments to the art-house audiences who had followed her rise to stardom with Bergman.

Between films, Ullmann returns to the stage. ‘‘I think that one should not go from one film to another. It is no good. If I do not shoot, I write and meet friends. I make about two films per year and one theatrical play. This is a good working program.’’ Ullmann has performed successfully on the stage in Norway, London, and other cities, in addition to her highly praised literary efforts. Most recently, she has worked behind the camera, having directed and scripted two well-received, similar-themed features: Sofie, the tale of a young woman in nineteenth-century Copenhagen who is unable to sever her constricting family ties; and Kristin Lavransdatter, set in the Middle Ages, in which a well-born young woman, betrothed to another from her class, disgraces her family upon falling in love with a knight.

These multiple achievements rank Ullmann on a high level of accomplishment—along with such actresses as Ingrid Thulin, Bibi and Harriet Andersson, and Gunnel Lindblom, she has made a remarkable contribution to Scandinavian film art.

—Vaclav Merhaut, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

USTINOV, (Sir) Peter

Films as Actor:

1941 Hail Fame (Buchanan); Mein Kampf—My Crimes (Lee)
1942 Let My People Sing (Baxter); The Goose Steps Out (Dearden and Hay) (as Krauss); One of Our Aircraft Is Missing (Powell and Pressburger) (as priest)
1943 The New Lot (Reed—doc)
1944 The Immortal Battalion (The Way Ahead) (Reed) (as Rispoli, + co-sc)
1945 The True Glory (Reed and Kanin)
1951 Quo Vadis (LeRoy) (as Nero); Hotel Sahara (Annakin) (as Emad); The Magic Box (John Boulting) (as film distributor); ‘The Mask,’ ‘The Model,’ and ‘The House of Madame Tellier’  (Ophuls) (as narrator of English-language version)
1954 Beau Brummel (Bernhardt) (as Prince of Wales); The Egyptian (Curtiz) (as Kaptah)
1956 I girovaghi (The Wanderers) (Fregonese) (as Don Alfonso)
1957 Un angel pasò por Brooklyn (An Angel over Brooklyn); The Man Who Wagged His Tail (Vajda) (as Mr. Bossi); Les Espions (The Spies) (Clouzot) (as Michael Kiminsky)
1959 The Adventures of Mr. Wonderful (Grimault) (as voice)
1960 Spartacus (Kubrick) (as Lentulus Batatius); The Sandwiches (Zinnemann) (as Rupert Venner)
1963 La donna del mondo (Women of the World) (Iacopetti) (as narrator); Allemann (Everyman); The Human Dutch (Haanstra—doc) (as English-language narrator)
1968 The Peaches (Gill—short) (as narrator); Topkapi (Dassin) (as Arthur Simpson); John Goldfarb, Please Come Home (Lee Thompson) (as King Fawz)
1967 The Comedians (Glenville) (as Ambassador Pineda)
1968 Blackbeard’s Ghost (Stevenson) (as Capt. Blackbeard); Hot Millions (Till) (as Marcus Pendleton, + co-sc)
1969 Viva Max! (Paris) (as Gen. Maximilian Rodrigues de Santos)
1970 Robin Hood (Reitherman—animation) (as voice of Prince John)
1971 One of Our Dinosaurs Is Missing (Stevenson) (as Hnup Wan)
1972 Trevorise of Matecumbe (McEveyty) (as Dr. Ewing T. Snodgrass); Logan’s Run (Michael Anderson) (as Old Man)
1973 Un Taxi mauve (The Purple Taxi) (Boisset) (as Taubelman); The Last Remake of Beau Geste (Feldman) (as Sgt. Markov); The Mouse and His Child (Voices) (as narrator; a voice of Mr. Bossi, + title role)
1974 Doppio delitto (Double Murders) (Steno) (as Harry Hellman); Death on the Nile (Guillermin) (as Hercule Poirot); Tarka the Otter (Cobham) (as narrator); Winds of Change (Takashi) (as narrator); The Thief of Bagdad (Clive Donner—for TV) (as the Caliph)
1975 Ashanti (Fleischer) (as Suleiman); Nous maigrions ensemble (We’ll Grow Thin Together) (Vocoret) (as Victor)
1976 Charlie Chan and the Curse of the Dragon Queen (Clive Donner) (as Charlie Chan); The Great Muppet Caper (Henson) (cameo as truck driver); Grendel, Grendel, Grendel (Stitt—animation) (as voice of Grendel)
1978 Evil under the Sun (Hamilton) (as Hercule Poirot)
1979 Abgehört (Rolf Von Sydow—for TV)
1980 Tie-up at Dinner (Antonio—for TV) (as Hercule Poirot)
1981 Dead Man’s Folly (Clive Donner—for TV) (as Hercule Poirot); Ferdinand (Behle) (as narrator)
1982 Three Act Tragedy (Murder in Three Acts) (Gary Nelson—for TV) (as Hercule Poirot)
1983 Appointment with Death (Winner) (as Hercule Poirot); Peep and Big Wide World (short); Children of Ghana (Haanstra—doc, short) (as narrator)
1984 La Revolution Francaise (The French Revolution) (Enrico) (as Mirabeau); Grandpa (Jackson) (as voice)
1986 C’era un Castello con 40 Cani
1987 Lorenzo’s Oil (George Miller) (as Professor Nikolais)
1988 Stiff Upper Lips (Sinyor) (as Horace)
1989 Alice in Wonderland (Willing—for TV) (as Walrus); Animal Farm (John Stephenson) (as voice of Old Major); The Bachelor (Keaton and Sinyor) (as Grandfather)

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

1946 School for Secrets (Secret Flight) (d only, + co-pr)
1947 Vice Versa (+ ro, co-pr)
1948 Private Angelo (co-d with Michael Anderson, co-sc, + title role, pr)
1961 Romanooff and Juliet (Dig That Juliet) (+ ro as the general, pr)
1962 Billy Budd (co-sc, + ro as Capt. Edward Fairfax Vere, pr)
1965 Lady L (+ ro as Prince Otto of Bavaria)
1972 Hammersmith Is Out (d only, + ro as the doctor)
1984 Memed My Hawk (The Lion and the Hawk) (+ ro)

Publications

By USTINOV: books—

House of Regrets (play), London, 1943.
Beyond (play), London, 1944.
The Banbury Nose (play), London, 1945.
People (play), London, 1950.
The Love of Four Colonels (play), London, 1951.
Add a Dash of Pity (stories), London, 1959.
We Were Only Humans (caricatures), London, 1961.
The Unknown Soldier and His Wife (play), New York, 1967.
Halfway Up the Tree (play), New York, 1968.
The Old Man and Mr. Smith: A Fable (novel), New York, 1991.
Life Is an Operetta; And Other Short Stories, Amherst, 1997.
Generation in Jeopardy: Children in Central and Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union, with UNICEF and Alexandre Zouev.

By USTINOV: articles—

“Max Ophüls,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1957.
“Doing It All at Once,” in Films and Filming (London), May 1960.
Interview with Gideon Bachmann, in Film (London), Winter 1961.
Interview with Brian McFarlane, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), April 1982.
Interview with Allan Hunter, in Films and Filming (London), September 1983.
Interview with V. Lacombe, in Cinéma (Paris), 27 April 1988.

On USTINOV: books—

On USTINOV: articles—

Brandlmeier, Thomas, “Peter Ustinov. Schräger Vogel aus Berufung,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), August 1997.

Juggling as many careers as the multitalented Peter Ustinov does—screen and stage actor, film and stage director, playwright, novelist, screenwriter, and raconteur—he has never had the inclination to channel his enormous creative energies into screen acting. Nor does he possess the pure acting ability to warrant such a career decision. Still, despite a casualness about his acting that makes him seem a begrudging on-screen performer (a stance happily appropriate to the playing of comedy), he has nevertheless accomplished much as a movie actor with a predisposition toward the humorous.

Born in London, of French and Russian descent, Ustinov attended the London Theatre Studio as an aspiring actor, debuted on stage at age 17, and appeared in his first film—Hullo Fame—three years later. The film that first brought him substantial recognition was Mervyn LeRoy’s spectacle, Quo Vadis, in which he portrays ancient Rome’s reigning Emperor Nero. His prominent roles thereafter include: Michael Curtiz’s We’re No Angels as a fellow convict who has escaped Devil’s Island with Humphrey Bogart; Max Ophüls’ Lola Montés as the circus ringmaster exhibiting Martine Carol’s titular courtesan; Stanley Kubrick’s Spartacus as an avaricious slave dealer, a performance that won him the Best Supporting Actor Oscar; Romanoff and Juliet, which he also wrote and directed, as the ruler of a mythical country; his own film version of Herman Melville’s Billy Budd as Captain Vere; Jules Dassin’s Topkapi as a comic con man (and his second Oscar); Eric Till’s Hot Millions as a computer-aided embezzler; and Jerry Paris’s Viva Max! as a contemporary Mexican general reclaiming the Alamo.

After a quiet decade or so, during which time his film career remained a virtual afterthought, the character actor was cast in 1978 as the idiosyncratic, indomitable Belgian supersleuth, Hercule Poirot, in John Guillermin’s Death on the Nile, an Agatha Christie mystery with a star-studded cast. In this bit of fluff, Ustinov’s effortless expertise at dialectal and physical comedy is smoothly integrated and brightly highlighted, a reminder of how winning this one-man conglomerate’s acting franchise can be in the right comic role.

In the 1980s, he reprised the Poirot role in several subsequent television movies and two additional theatrical films, Evil under the Sun and Appointment with Death. After playing a rather soft-pedaled version of Mirabeau in the somewhat disappointing big-budget international co-production The French Revolution in 1989, Ustinov entered another period of scant screen appearances in the 1990s. He had a nice turn, however, in the disease thriller Lorenzo’s Oil as a sympathetic yet cautious doctor representative of a risk-averse medical profession.

—Bill Wine, updated by David E. Salamie
VALENTINO, Rudolph

Born: Rodolfo Alfonzo Raffaelo di Valentina d’Antonguolla in Castellaneta, Italy, 6 May 1895. Education: Attended a military academy; Royal Academy of Agriculture. Family: Married 1) Jean Acker, 1919 (divorced 1922); 2) Natasha Rambova, 1922 (separated 1925). Career: Left home for Paris, 1912, and emigrated to the United States, 1913; worked at odd jobs, then a dancer in dance halls, clubs and musicals; worked as extra in films on the east coast, and then in Hollywood; 1921—enormous hit in film The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, then The Sheik. Died: Of peritonitis in New York, 23 August 1926.

Films as Actor:

1914 My Official Wife (Young)
1916 Patricia (L. and T. Wharton—serial)
1918 Alimony (Flynn); A Society Sensation (Powell); All Night (Powell)
1919 The Delicious Little Devil (Leonard); A Rogue’s Romance (Young); The Homebreaker (Schertzinger); Virtuous Sinners (Flynn); The Big Little Person (Leonard); Out of Luck (Clifton); Eyes of Youth (Parker)
1920 The Married Virgin (Frivolous Wives) (Maxwell); An Adventuress (Balshofer); The Cheat (Otto); Passion’s Playground (Barry); Once to Every Woman (Holubar); Stolen Moments (Vincent); The Wonderful Chance (Archainbau)
1921 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Ingram) (as Julio Desnoyers); Uncharted Seas (Ruggles) (as Frank Underwood); Camille (Smallwood) (as Armand); The Conquering Power (Ingram) (as Charles Grandet); The Sheik (Melford) (as Sheikh Ahmed Ben Hassan)
1922 Moran of the Lady Letty (Melford) (as Ramon Laredo); Beyond the Rocks (Wood) (as Lord Bracodale); Blood and Sand (Niblo) (as Juan Gallardo); The Young Rajah (Rosen) (as Amos Judd)
1924 Monsieur Beaucaire (Olcott) (title role); A Sainted Devil (Henabery) (as Don Alonzo de Castro)
1925 Cobra (Henabery) (as Count Torriani); The Eagle (Brown) (as Vladimir Dubrovsky)
1926 Son of the Sheik (Fitzmaurice) (as Ahmed)

Publications

By VALENTINO: books—

How You Can Keep Fit, New York, 1923.
Day Dreams (verse), New York, 1923.
My Private Diary, Chicago, 1929.

By VALENTINO: articles—

‘‘Woman and Love,’’ in Photoplay (New York), March 1922.
‘‘My Life Story,’’ in Photoplay (New York), February-April 1923.
‘‘My Trip Abroad,’’ in Pictures and Picturegoer, July 1924-October 1925.

On VALENTINO: books—

On VALENTINO: articles—

Tully, Jim, “Rudolph Valentino,” in Vanity Fair, October 1926.

Buck, C.M., “The Symbol of Everything Wild and Wonderful,” in Blimp (Graz), Fall 1996.
By a curious quirk of fate, Valentino’s most entertaining film, Son of the Sheik was also his last. Had he survived into sound he would certainly not have attained legend status; through his death he became immortal. As one of his leading ladies, Alice Terry, aptly remarked, “The biggest thing Valentino ever did was to die.”

—Anthony Slide

VALLI, Alida

Films as Actress:

1935 Il capello a tre punte
1936 I due sargenti (Guazzoni)
1937 Sono stato io! (Matarazzo); Il ferroce Saladino (Bonnard)
1938 L’ultima nemica (Barbaro); Ma l’amore mio non muore (Amato); La casa del peccato (Neufeld); Mille lire al mese (Neufeld); (as Magda)
1939 Assenza ingiustificata (Neufeld) (as Vera); L’ha fatto una signora (Mattòli); Ballo al castello (Ball at the Castle) (Neufeld) (as Greta Larsen); Taverna rossa (Neufeld)
1940 La prima donna che passa (Neufeld) (as Gabrielle de Vermeine); Otre l’amore (Gallone); Manon Lescaut (Gallone) (title role)
1941 Piccolo mondo antico (Little Old World) (Soldati) (as Lucia); Ore nove lezione di chimica (Schoolgirl Diary) (Mattòli) (as Anna); L’amante segreta (Gallone) (as Renata Kreuze); Luce nelle tenebre (Mattòli)
1942 Catene invisibili (Mattòli); Stasera niente di nuovo (Mattòli); Noi vivi—addio Kira (We the Living) (Alessandri) (as Kira Argounova); Le due orfanelle (The Two Orphans) (Gallone) (as Henrietta)
1943 I pagliacci (Laugh Pagliacci) (Fatigati) (as Julia); T’amerò sempre (Camerini)
1944 Apparizione (De Limur) (as Andreina); Circo equestre Za-Bum (The Za-Bum Circus) (Mattòli)
1945 Il canto della vita (Gallone); La vita reccomincia (Life Begins Anew; The Sin of Patricia) (Mattòli) (as Patrizia)
1946 Eugenia Grandet (Soldati) (title role)
1947 The Paradise Case (Hitchcock) (as Maddalena Anna Paradise)
1948 The Miracle of the Bells (Pichel) (as Olga Treskovna)
1949 The Third Man (Reed) (as Anna Schmidt)
1950 Walk Softly, Stranger (Stevenson) (as Elaine Corelli); The White Tower (Tetzlaff) (as Carla Alton)
1951 Les Miracles n’ont lieu qu’une fois (Yves Allégret) (as Claudia); Ultimo incontro (Francioli) (as Lina)
1953 Les Amants de Tolède (The Lovers of Toledo) (Decoin) (as Inez); “Siam Donne” ep. of Il mondo le condanna (Francioli); La mano dello straniero (The Stranger’s Hand) (Soldati) (as Roberta)
1954 Senso (The Wanton Countess) (Visconti) (as Countess Livia Serpieri)
1957 Il grido (The Outcry) (Antonioni) (as Irma); Les Bijoutiers du clair de lune (The Night Heaven Fell; Heaven Fell That Night) (Vadim) (as Florentine); La grande strada azzurra (Poncecorvo) (as the wife)
1958 Barrage contre le Pacifique (This Angry Age; The Sea Wall; La Diga sul Pacifico) (Clément) (as Claude); L’uomo dai calzoni corti, o L’amore più grande (Pellegrini)
1959 Arsène Lupin et la laison d’or (Robert)
1960 Les Dialogues des Carmélites (Agostini and Bruckberger) (as Mother Therese); Le Gigolo (Deray); Les Yeux sans visage (Eyes without a Face; The Horror Chamber of Dr. Faustus) (Franju) (as Louise); La Fille du torrent (Herwig)
1961 Il peccato degli anni verdi, o L’assegnio (Trieste); Una Aussi Longe Absence (The Long Absence) (Colpi) (as Therese Langlois)
1962 Il disordine (Le desorde; Disorder) (Brusati) (as the mother); Furtio su misura; The Happy Thieves (Once a Thief) (George Marshall) (as Duchess Blanca); Ophélie (Chabrol) (as Claudia Lesurf); Homenaje a la hora de la siesta (Homage at Siesta Time) (Nilsson) (as Constance); Al otro lado de la ciudad
1963 El valle de las espadas (The Castillian; Valley of the Swords) (Setò) (as Queen Teresa)
1964 L’Autre Femme (Villiers)
1965 Humour noir (La muerta viaje demasiado; Death Travels Too Much) (Autant-Lara)
1967 Edipo Re (Oedipus Rex) (Pasolini) (as Merope)
1969 Le Champignon (Simenon) (as Linda); La strategia del ragno (The Spider’s Strategem) (Bertolucci) (as Draifa)
1970 Concerto per pistola solista (The Weekend Murders) (Lupo); L’occhio nel labarinto (Blood) (Caiano—for TV)
1972 La prima notte di quiete (Diario di un italiano) (Capogna) (as Olga)
1973 No es nada mama, solo un juego (It’s Nothing, Only a Game) (Forque)
1974 La Grande Trouille (Grunstein) (as Héloïse); La Chair de l’orchidée (Flesh and the Orchard; Flesh of the Orchid) (Chereau) (as woman); L’anticristo (The Antichrist; The Tempter) (De Martino) (as Irene); Tendre Dracula (La Grande Trouille; Tender Dracula) (Grunstein) (as Eloise)
1975 Cher Victor (Robin Davis) (as Anna); Il caso Raoul (Ponzi)
1976 1900 (Novecento) (Bertolucci) (as Signora Pioppi); Le Jeu de solitaire (Adam) (as friend); Indagine su un delitto perfetto (Leviathan)
1977 Suspiria (Argento) (as Miss Tanner); Berlinger ti voglio bene (Bertolucci); The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos) (as Mrs. Chadwick); The Cinema According to Bertolucci (G. Bertolucci—doc); Un cuore Semplice (Ferrara)
After the war, David O. Selznick offered her a Hollywood contract but Valli did not make a favorable impression on American audiences. Instead, she went to Britain where she did achieve acclaim, especially in Carol Reed’s The Third Man, in which she plays a much-suffering refugee in postwar Vienna. In The Third Man, as in many of her foreign films, she was billed simply as Valli.

Valli’s finest performance was in Senso, where she plays an Italian countess during the Austrian occupation of Venice. An aging beauty, she is torn between admiration of her cousin, an Italian army official, her patriotic duty to aid partisan activities, and her passion for a younger, handsome, but degenerate Austrian officer. She also gave a powerful performance as Irma, a poor woman, in Antonioni’s Il grido.

In 1956 she founded a theater company and appeared on stage occasionally for the following 15 years. She participated in many productions in the United States, Spain, Italy, and France in the 1960s and 1970s. Her services have been called upon to play strong, occasionally eccentric, character roles; among the best of these films are Bertolucci’s 1900 and, most particularly, La strategia del ragno.

—Elaine Mancini

VAN CLEEF, Lee

Nationality: American. Born: Somerville, New Jersey, 9 January 1925. Family: Married 1) Ruth Ann (Van Cleef) (divorced); 2) Joan (Van Cleef) (divorced), two sons and one daughter; 3) Barbara Hevelone, 1976. Career: World War II—served in the U.S. Navy; then farmhand, factory worker, and accountant; amateur actor; 1950—in road company of play Mister Roberts; 1952—film debut in High Noon; followed by a series of minor roles as villains; 1954—television debut; 1966—role in For a Few Dollars More brought international attention; subsequently a star in his own right, especially in Italy. Died: Of a heart attack in Oxnard, California, 16 December 1989.

Films as Actor:

- 1952 High Noon (Zinnemann) (as Jack Colby); Untamed Frontier (Fregonese) (as Dave Chittum); Kansas City Confidential (Karlson) (as Tony Romano)
- 1953 The Lawless Breed (Walsh) (as Dick Hanley); Tumbleweed (Juran) (as Marv); Arena (Fleischer) (as Smitty); Jack Slade (Schuster) (as Toby MacKay); The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms (Lourie) (as Corporal Stone); White Lightning (Bernds) (as Brutus); Vice Squad (Laven) (as Pete); The Nebraskan (Sears) (as Reno); Private Eyes (Bernds)
- 1954 Rails into Laramie (Hibbs) (as Ace Winton); The Bandits of Corsica (Nazarro) (as Nerva); The Desperado (Carr) (as Buck/Paul Creyton); Gypsy Colt (Marton) (as Hank); Arrow in the Dust (Selander) (as crew boss); The Yellow Tomahawk (Selander) (as Fireknife); Dawn at Socorro (Sherman) (as Earl Ferris); Princess of the Nile (Jones) (as Hakar)
Lee Van Cleef entered films after a brief and unspectacular stage career. For a while he was a member of a small amateur dramas group, after which he appeared in Joshua Logan’s stage production of Mister Roberts. He was then spotted by Stanley Kramer in his starring role in Heaven Can Wait. Eventually, he won the part of one of the desperadoes stalking Gary Cooper in High Noon, in which Van Cleef was first typecast as a baddie.

Over the years, Van Cleef perfected his screen persona as a ruthless villain. His athletic frame, steely-eyed stare, hooked nose, demonic smile, and imposing presence all contributed to his success as an antihero. Inevitably portraying a lone, proficient killer, Van Cleef concealed a gentility beneath his tough exterior that gained the sympathy of the audience; although brutal, his actions could usually be traced to a justifiable grievance.

Van Cleef’s flagging film career suddenly picked up in the mid-1960s when he appeared opposite Clint Eastwood in Sergio Leone’s... spaghetti Westerns Per qualche dollaro in più and Il buono, il bravo, il cattivo. Unlike Eastwood, who returned to Hollywood to further his career, Van Cleef stayed in Europe, where he successfully rode the spaghetti and paella trail, playing his invincible gunfighter in a succession of European-made Westerns.

By the early 1970s, he was one of the ten most popular box-office stars on the Continent, and had established himself as a cult figure. With well over 800 television and film appearances to his credit, Van Cleef endeared himself to cinemagoers as a man they love to hate. Although typecast from the outset of his Hollywood career, unlike many other actors in his position, he used this obstacle to his advantage by creating a memorable and immensely popular cinema character.

—Curtis Hutchinson

VANEL, Charles

Nationality: French. Born: Rennes, 21 August 1892. Career: On stage in Paris from age 16; 1912—film debut in Jim Crow; followed by some 200 films; 1929—directed the film Dans la nuit. Awards: Best Actor, Cannes Festival, for The Wages of Fear, 1953; special César award, 1978. Died: In Cannes, 15 April 1989.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Roles</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Jim Crow</td>
<td>Pégy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Crépuscule d'épouvante; L'Enfant du carnaval</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>L'Atre</td>
<td>Boudrioz</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Tempêtes</td>
<td>Boudrioz; Miarka, la fille à l'ourse</td>
<td>Mercanton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>La Flambee des rêves</td>
<td>Barcelloni; Pêcheur d'Islande</td>
<td>Barcelloni</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Barocco</td>
<td>Burguet</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>La Proie du vent</td>
<td>Clair; Nitcheno</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>L'Esclave blanche</td>
<td>Genina; Charité; La Femme rêvée</td>
<td>Durand</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Le Passager</td>
<td>Barcelloni; La Plongée tragique</td>
<td>Heinz; Feux Follets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Waterloo</td>
<td>Grüne; Les Fourchambault</td>
<td>Monca</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Chiqué</td>
<td>Colombier; Accusée levez-vous!</td>
<td>Tourneur; La Maison jaune de Rio; Le Capitaine jaune</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Maison de danses</td>
<td>Tourneur; Au nom de la Loi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Awards:

- 1932 Gitanes (de Baroncelli)
- 1933 Les Misérables (Bernard); Au bout du monde (Flücht-Linge; Ucicky and Chomette)
- 1934 Le Grand Jeu (Feyder); Roi de Canargue (de Baroncelli); ObSESSION (Tourneur—short)
- 1935 L'Impossible aveu (Glavany); Le Domino vert (Selpin and Decoin); L'Equipeage (Flight into Darkness) (Litavak); Michel Strogoff (de Baroncelli)
- 1936 Les Bateliers de la Volga (Strijewsky); Port Arthur (I Give My Life) (Farkas); La Belle equipe (They Were Five) (Duvivier); Les Grands (Gandera and Bibal); L'Assaut (Ducis); La Flamme (Berthomieu); Cuirassier Sud (Billon); Vertige d'un soir (Le Peur) (Tourjansky)
- 1937 Abus de confiance (Abused Confidence) (Decoin); Troika sur la piste blanche (Dréville); Police mondaine (Bernheim and Chamborant); La Femme du bout du monde (Epstein)
- 1938 L'Occident (Fescourt); Les Pirates du rail (Christian-Jaque); Légions d'honneur (Gleize); S.O.S. Sahara (de Baroncelli); Bar du Sud (Fescourt)
- 1939 Carrefour (Crossroads) (Bernhardt); L'Or du Cristallo (Stellin and Becker); La Brigade sauvage (Savage Brigade) (Dréville and L'Herbier); Yamile sous le Cèdres (d'Espayn)
- 1940 La Loi du nord (La Piste du nord) (Feyder); Le Diamant noir (Delannoy); La Nuit merveilleuse (Paulin)
- 1941 Le Soleil a toujours raison (Billon)
- 1942 Promesse à l'inconnue (Berthomieu)
- 1943 Les Affaires sont les affaires (Dréville); Ciel est à vous (Gremillon); Les Roquevillard (Dréville)
- 1944 Haut-le-Vent (de Baroncelli); L'Enquête sur le 58 (Desespo) (short)
- 1945 La Ferme du penda (Dréville)
- 1946 La Bateau à soupe (Gleize); La Cabane aux souvenirs (Stelli); Grisgnalet (Berthomieu)
- 1947 Le Diable souffle (Gréville)
- 1948 Vertigine d'Amore (Capuano)
- 1949 Mafia (Il nome della legge) (Germi); La Femme que j'ai assassinée (Daniel-Norman)
- 1950 Il Bivio (Cerchio); Malaire (Perla); Cuori sul mar (Bianchi)
- 1951 Gli Inesorabili (Mastrocinque); Son dernier verdict (Ultima Sentenza) (Bonnard); Incantesimo Tragico (Mastrocinque)
- 1952 Tempête sur les Mauvants (Dupé); Le Salaire de la peur (The Wages of Fear) (Clouzot)
- 1953 Si Versailles m'était conté (Royal Affairs in Versailles) (Guitry); L'Affaire Mauritzius (On Trial) (Duvisier)
- 1954 Les Diaboliques (Diabolique) (Clouzot); Maddalena (Genina); Tam Tam (Napolitano); To Catch a Thief (Hitchcock) (as Bertani); Rafles sur la ville (Sinners of Paris) (Chenal)
- 1956 La Mort en ce jardin (Gina; Evil Eden) (Buñuel)
- 1957 Le Feu aux poudres (Decoin); Les Suspects (Dréville)
- 1958 Les Gorille vous salue bien (Brabant); Le Piège (No Escape) (Brabant); Pêcheur d'Islande (Schlondorffer)
- 1959 Les Naufrageurs (Brabant); Les Bateliers de la Volga (Tourjansky); La Valse du gorille (Borderie)
- 1960 La Vérité (The Truth) (Clouzot)
- 1961 Tintin et le mystère de la Toison d'Or (Vienne); L'Ainé des Ferchaux (Melville); Maria, matricula de Bilbao (Vajda); Symphonie pour un massacre (Symphony for a Massacre) (Deray); La steppa (The Steppe) (Lattuada)
Charles Vanel, the grand old man of French cinema, was born in 1892 at Rennes. He was educated for a career at sea, but his poor sight put an end to this ambition. Possessing a very fine voice, he decided to become an actor and went to Paris where, encouraged by Firmin Gémier, he played at the Théatre Antoine and the Gymnase. After four years of the theater, he entered films in 1912, playing in Robert Péguy’s Jim Crow. He played with Rejane in Mercanton’s Miarka, la fille à l’ourse, but had his first big success in Robert Boudriot’s remarkable L’Aire in 1922. This marked the beginning of a prolific silent film career for Vanel. He acted with Mozukhin in L’Enfant du carnaval, Tempêtes, and A Message of Mystery, and appeared in many films by Jacques de Baroncelli, particularly in the Pierre Loti story Pécheur d’Islande, filmed in his native Brittany. He played in Germaine Dulac’s Ame d’artiste and Rene Clair’s Proie du vent (with Sandra Milowanoff, who had played in the Loti film). Vanel worked for German and Italian directors, and played Napoleon in Karl Griné’s Waterloo. In 1929 he directed Sandra Milowanoff in Dans la nuit, a film now restored by the Cinémathèque Française which allows us to see a very talented director indeed. This story of rural love and jealousy set among quarry workers has a documentary realism, but as a film it was overshadowed by the coming of sound.

With the arrival of sound, Vanel spent two years in Germany on French versions of German films, and on his return to France became a familiar figure on the cinema screen. He played opposite Harry Baur in Raymond Bernard’s two-part version of Les Misérables in 1933 and also appeared in Bernard’s Faubourg Montmartre and Les Croix de bois. He was in Feyder’s Le Grand Jeu and La Loi du nord. For Gustav Ucicky he played in Flüchtlinge (A bout du monde), and he was in Marcel Carné’s Jenny. He was Yves Montand’s cowardly partner in Clouzot’s Le Salaire de la peur (for which he received the Cannes best actor award). He worked for Hitchcock (To Catch a Thief), Buñuel (Le Mort en ce jardin), and Jean Pierre Melville (L’Aigle des Ferchaux). In 1958 he again played in Pécheur d’Islande (Schlöndorffer), and he was in both the Strijewsky and Tourjansky versions of Les Bateliers de la Volga. In 1978 Vanel was honored with a special César award, and continued to appear in films in his last years. He had a prolific output of 80 films during a distinguished career covering more than 70 years.

—Liam O’Leary

VEIDT, Conrad

Nationality: German/British. Born: Berlin, 22 January 1893; became British citizen, 1939. Family: Married 1) Gussy Hall (divorced); 2) Felicitas Radke, one daughter; married third wife. Career: Studied with Max Reinhardt, and acted in his company in Berlin, before 1914 and after 1916; 1914–16—served in the German Army; illness permitted him to be assigned to Berlin after 1916; 1917—film debut in Der Spion; 1919—controversy over his portrayal of a homosexual in the film Anders als die Andern; formed own production company; directed first film, Wahnsinn; 1920—role in Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari and other expressionist films in the early 1920s brought him international attention; late 1920s—made

1962 Lo Sogarro (Siano); Rififi à Tokyo (Rififi in Tokyo) (Deray)
1963 Un Roi sans divertissement (La Poursuite) (Leterrier)
1964 Le Chant du monde (Camus)
1967 Un Homme de trop (Shock Troops) (Costa-Gavras)
1969 Ballade pour un chien (Vergez); La Nuit bulgare (Mitrani)
1970 Ils (Simon); Comptes à rebours (Pigaut)
1972 Camorra (Squietieri); La plus bella sereta della mia vita (Scio) (as Barenga)
1973 Les Martiens (Ciampi—short); Le Sang des autres (Simenon)
1976 Le Temps d’un jour (Gorin)
1977 A l’ombre d’un été (Van Belle); Ne pleure pas (Ertaud)
1979 Le Chemin perdu (Moraz)
1980 La Puce et le Privé (Kay); Tre fratelli (Three Brothers) (Rosi) (as Donato Giuranna)
1981 Si le soleil ne revenait pas (Goretta) (as Anzevui)
1987 Les Saisons du plaisir (Mocky) (as Charles)

Films as Director:

1929 Dans la nuit (+ ro)
1932 Au joli coin (+ ro)

Publications

By VANEL: articles—

On VANEL: books—

On VANEL: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), September 1989.

* * *
some films in Hollywood; 1934—after being detained briefly in Nazi Germany because his third wife was half-Jewish, emigrated to England; 1940–43—worked in the United States. Died: 3 April 1943.

Films as Actor:

1917 Wenn Tote sprechen (Reinert); Die Claudia von Geiserhof (Biebrach); Der Spion (Heiland); Der Weg des Todes (Reinert) (as Rolf); Furcht (Wiene) (as the Indian); Das Ratsel von Bangalor (Antalfy) (as Count Dinja)

1918 Die Serenyi (Halm); Das Tagebuch einer Verlorenen (The Diary of a Lost Woman) (Oswald) (as Dr. Julius); Didas Bens Geschichte (Oswald) (as Erik Knorrensen); Des Dreimäderthauss (Oswald) (as Baron Schober); Colombba (von Wieder) (as Henrik van Rhyn); Jettchen Geberts Geschichte (Oswald) (as Dr. Köstling); Henriette Jacoby (Oswald) (as Dr. Köstling); Sundige Mutter (Oswald) (as Herr Kramer); Opfer der Gesellschaft (Grunwald) (as Staatsanwalt); Nocturno der Liebe (Boese) (as Frederic Chopin); Die Japannerin (Dupont) (as the Secretary)

1919 Gewitter im Mai (Beck); Die Reise um die Erde in 80 Tagen (Around the World in Eighty Days) (Oswald) (as Phileas Fogg); Peer Gynt (Barnowsky) (as the Button Maker); Anders als die Andern (Oswald) (as Paul Körner); Die Prostitution (Oswald) (as Alfred Werner); Die Mexicanerin (Bonn) (as the Seducer); Die Prostitution II (Oswald) (as Editor Hofer); Die Okarina (Kraft) (as Jaap); Prinz Kukuck (Prince Cuckoo) (Leni) (as Karl Krakor); “Prologue and Epilogue” (as Death); “Die Ercheinung” (as the Stranger); “Die Hand” (as the Assassin); “Die schwarze Katze” (as the Traveller); “Der Klub der Selbstmörder” (as Club President), and “Der Spuk” (as the Husband), e.p.s. of Unheimliche Geschichten (Oswald); Nachtgestalten (Oswald) (as the Comedian); Episode 1 (as the Hermit from Elu/Lucifer), Episode 2 (as Gubetta/Lucifer), and Episode 3 (as Gродski/Lucifer) of Satanus (Murnau)

1920 Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari) (Wiene) (as Cesare); Der Reigen (Ein Werdengeng) (Oswald) (as Peter Karvan); Patience (Leni) (as Sir Percy Parker); Der Januskopf (Janus-Faced) (Murnau) (as Dr. Warren/Mr. O’Connor); Liebestauemel (Hartwig) (as Jalenko); Die Augen der Welt (Wilhelm) (as Juliane von Derp’s lover); Kurfürstendamm (Ein Höllenspuk in 6 Akten) (Oswald) (as the Devil); Moriturus (Hagen) (as Wilmos); Abend-Nacht-Morgen (The Memoirs of Manolescu) (Dreier) (as Briburn); Kunstlaunen (Otto) (as Arpad); Sehnsucht (Murnau) (as the student); Der Gang in die Nacht (Murnau) (as the blind painter); Christian Wahnhasse (Gade) (title role); Der Graf von Cagliostro (Schünzel) (as Dr. Warren/Hofer); Der Geiger von Florenz (Oswald) (as Dr. Köstling); Der Student von Prag (The Student of Prague) (Berger) (as Paul La Roche); Dürfen wir Schweigen? (Oswald) (as Paul Hartwig); Schellenberg (Molander) (as Helgum); Der Klub der Selbstmörder (as Club President), and “Der Spuk” (as the Husband), e.p.s. of Unheimliche Geschichten (Oswald); Nachtgestalten (Oswald) (as the Comedian); Episode 1 (as the Hermit from Elu/Lucifer), Episode 2 (as Gubetta/Lucifer), and Episode 3 (as Gродski/Lucifer) of Satanus (Murnau)

1921 Die Liebschaften des Hektor Dalmore (Oswald) (title role); Der Leidensweg der Inge Kraft (Dinesen) (as Hendryk Overland); Landstrasse und Grossstadt (Wilhelm) (as Raphael Strate); Lady Hamilton (Oswald) (as Lord Nelson); Das Indische Grabmal (Mysteries of India; Above All Law; The Indian Tomb) (May) (as Ayan, the Maharajah)

1922 Lucrezia Borgia (Oswald) (as Cesare Borgia)

1923 Paganini (Goldberg) (title role); Wilhelm Tell (Dworsky) (as Gessler); Glanz gegen Glück (Trotz) (as the Count)

1924 Carlos und Elisabeth (Oswald) (as Karl V/Don Carlos); Das Wachsfugenkabinett (Waxworks) (Leni) (as Ivan the Terrible); Orlacs Hande (The Hands of Orlac) (Wiene) (as Paul Orlac); Nju (Husbands or Lovers) (Czinner) (as the Poet); Schicksal (Basch) (as Count Wranja)

1925 Le Comte Kostia (Robert) (title role); Ingmarsarvet (In Dalarna and Jerusalem) (Molander) (as Helgum); Liebe macht Blind (Love Is Blind) (Mendes) (as Dr. Lamare)

1926 Der Geiger von Florence (Czinner) (as the father); Die Bruder Schellenberg (The Two Brothers) (Grune) (title roles); Dürfen wir Schweigen? (Oswald) (as Paul Hartwig); Kreuzzug des Weibes (Berger) (as the Prosecutor); Der Student von Prag (The Student of Prague) (Berger) (as Balduin); Die Flucht in die Nacht (The Flight in the Night) (Palermi) (as Count Heinrich di Favari)

1927 The Beloved Rogue (Crosland) (as Louis XI); A Man’s Past (Melford) (as Paul La Roche)

1928 The Man Who Laughs (Leni) (as Gwynplaine); The Last Performance (Eric the Great) (Fejos) (as Erik the Great)

1929 Das Land Ohne Frauen (Bride 68) (Gallone) (as Dick Ashton)

1930 Die Letzte Kompagnie (The Last Company; Thirteen Men and a Girl) (Bernhardt) (as Hauptmann Burk); Die Grosse Sehnsucht (Zsellky) (as himself); Menschen in Käfig (Dupont) (as Gordon Kingsley)
1931  Der Mann, der den Mord beging (The Man Who Committed Murder) (Bernhardt) (as Oberst Sevigne); Die Nacht der Entscheidung (Buckowekitsi) (as General Gregori Paltott); Der Kongress tanzt (Congress Dances) (Charelli) (as Count Metternich); Die Andere Seite (Paul) (as Captain Denis Stanhope); Rapsputin (Trotz) (title role)

1932  Der schwarze Husar (The Black Hussar) (Lamprecht) (as Rittmeister Hansgeorg von Hochberg); F.P.I. (Hartl) (as Elissen)

1933  Ich und die Kaiserin (Hollaender) (as the Marquis); Rome Express (Forde) (as Zurtza); The Wandering Jew (Elvey) (as Mathias); I Was a Spy (Saville) (as Commandant Obersetz)

1934  Jew Sass (Power) (Mendes) (as Joseph Oppenheimer); Wilhelm Tell (The Legend of William Tell) (Paul) (as Gessler); Bella Donna (Milton) (as Mahmoud Baroudi)

1935  The Passing of the Third Floor Back (Viertel) (as the Stranger)

1936  King of the Damned (Forde) (as Convict 83)

1937  Under the Red Robe (Sjöström) (as Gil de Berault); Dark Journey (Saville) (as Baron Karl von Marwitz)

1938  Tempête sur L'Asie (Oswald) (as Erich Keith); Le Joueur d'échecs (The Chess Player, The Devil Is an Empress) (Dréville) (as Baron Kempelen)

1939  The Spy in Black (U-Boat 29) (Powell) (as Captain Hardt)

1940  Contraband (Blackout) (Powell) (as Captain Anderson); The Thief of Bagdad (Berger) (as Jaffar, the Grand Vizier); Escape (LeRoy) (as General Kurt von Kalb)

1941  A Woman’s Face (Cukor) (as Torsten Barring); Whistling in the Dark (Sylvian) (as Joseph Jones); The Men in Her Life (Hatoff) (as Stanislas Rosing)

1942  Nazi Agent (Dassin) (as Otto Becker/Baron Hugo von Detner); All through the Night (Sherman) (as Ebbing)

1943  Casablanca (Curtiz) (as Major Strasser); Above Suspicion (Thorpe) (as Hussert Seidel)

Films as Director:

1919  Wahnsinn (+ ro as Lorenzen)
1920  Die Nacht auf Goldenhall (+ roles as Lord Harald/the nephew)
1922  Lord Byron (+ co-pr, sc, title role)

Publications

By VEIDT: article—

Griffithiana (Gemona), no. 38/39, October 1990.

On VEIDT: books—

Kracauer, Siegfried. From Caligari to Hitler: A Psychological History of the German Film, Princeton, New Jersey, 1947.

On VEIDT: articles—

“‘CI’ Salutes Conrad Veidt,” in Classic Images (Muscatine), no. 164, 8 February 1989.

Caldwell, T., “‘Some Things You Didn’t Know About the Original Caligari,’” in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), no. 20, 1989.

* * *

Like many of the prominent stars of the great period of pre-Nazi German cinema, Conrad Veidt received his basic training and stage experience from Max Reinhardt, and appeared at the age of 20—just before World War I—at Reinhardt’s Deutsches Theater in Berlin. His career in German film began in 1917. Before making his name internationally, in Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari, he had already been seen in 15 films, two of which, Wahnsinn and Die Nacht auf Goldenhall, he had directed.

Veidt’s impressive height, handsomely gaunt face, and high cheekbones made him natural casting for sinister or symbolistic roles. He had already played the Button Maker in a film version of Peer Gynt and Death in Unheimliche Geschichten, as well as Phileas Fogg in the silent German film version of Die Reise um die Erde in 80 Tage, before achieving his beautifully mimed and choreographed performance as Cesare, the somnambulist murderer in Wiene’s Dr. Caligari, which had originally been intended as a subject for the developing talents of Fritz Lang. Made on the most modest of postwar budgets, this film, with its expressionist-style sets and theme of insanity, won an international reputation before its proper recognition in Germany itself. It confirmed Veidt as one of the more sinister personalities of German film. He went on to appear (before going to Hollywood in 1927) as Lucifer in Satanas, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in Der Januskopf (the characters renamed Warren and O’Connor), Lord Nelson in Lady Hamilton, Cesare Borgia in Lucretia Borgia, and the title roles in Richard III and Lord Byron. Even more prominent from the international point of view, were his performances as Ivan the Terrible in Paul Leni’s Die Wachsfignenbergkabinett, the lover in Paul Czinner’s Nju, in the title role in Wiene’s Orlacs Hande, and the lead in Henryk Galeen’s Der Student von Prag. He had also extended his range as producer and director as well, with Lord Byron.

His initial career in Hollywood, 1927–29, was relatively undistinguished, and he returned to Germany with the coming of sound. Here
VITTI, Monica

Films as Actress:

1955 Ridere, ridere, ridere (Anton); Adriana Lecouvreur (Salvani)
1956 Una pelliccia di visone (Pellegrini)
1958 Le dritte (Smart Girls) (Amendola)
1959 L’avventura (Antonioni) (as Claudia)
1961 La notte (The Night) (Antonioni) (as Valentina Gherardini)
1962 L’eclisse (The Eclipse) (Antonioni) (as Vittoria); “Le Liere et la torture” (“The Tortoise and the Hare”) ep. of Les Quatres Vérités (Three Fables of Love) (Blasetti) (as Madeleine)
1963 Château en Suède (Nutty Naughty Chateau) (Vadim) (as Eleanore Falsen); Drageées au poivre (Sweet and Sour) (Baratier) (as Elle)
1964 “La sospiosa” (“The Singing Woman” or “The Victim”) ep. of Alta infedeltà (High Infidelity) (Salce) (as Gloria); Il deserto rosso (The Red Desert) (Antonioni) (as Giuliana); “La ministra” (“The Soup”) ep. of Le bambole (Four Kinds of Love; The Dolls) (Rossi) (as Giovanna)
1965 Il disco volante (The Flying Saucer) (Brass) (as Mercedes); Fai in fretta ad ucidermi . . . ho Freddo! (Maselli) (as Giovanna)
1966 Modesty Blaise (Losey) (title role); “Fata Sabina” (“Queen Sabina”) ep. of Le fate (The Queens; Sex Quartet) (Salce) (title role); Le paecevoli notti
1967 Ti ho sposato per allegria (I Married You for Fun) (Salce) (as Giuliana)
1968 La ragazza con la pistola (The Girl with the Pistol) (Monicelli) (as Assunta Borello); La Femme écarlate (The Scarlet Woman) (Valere) (as Lucie)

Awards: Three Nastro d’Argento Awards, nine David Di Donatello Awards, and four Italian Golden Grails.

Film as Actress, Director, and Co-Scriptwriter:

1969 La cintura di Castità (The Chastity Belt; On My Way to the Crusades, I Met a Girl Who . . .) (Campanile) (as Boccador); Vedro nudo (Risi); Amore mio, aiutami (Sordi) (as Raffaella)
1970 Nini Tirabuscio, la donna che inceno la mossa (Fondato) (as Maria Sarta); Drama della gelosia—tutti i particolari in cronaca (The Pizza Triangle; A Drama of Jealousy; The Motive Was Jealousy) (Scola) (as Adelaide)
1971 La pacifista (Smetti di piovere; The Pacifist) (Jancsó) (as the Journalist); “The Refrigerator” and “The Lion” eps. of Le coppie (Monicelli and De Sica); La superstestimonie (Giraldi)
1972 Teresa la ladra (Teresa the Thief) (Di Palma); Gli ordini sono ordini; Noi donne siamo fatte così (Rossi) (twelve roles)
1973 Tosca (Magni); Polvere di stelle (Sordi) (as Dea Adami)
1974 La Fantôme de la liberté (The Phantom of Liberty; The Specter of Freedom) (Buñuel) (as Mrs. Fouca)
1975 A mezzanotte va la ronda del piacere (The Immortal Bachelor; Midnight Pleasures; Qui comincia l’avventura) (Fondato) (as Tina Candela); L’Anatra all’orancia (Duck in Orange Sauce) (Salce) (as Lisa)
1976 La Raison d’état (Cayatte) (as Angela)
1979 An Almost Perfect Affair (Ritchie) (as Maria); Letti selvaggi (Zampa)
1980 Non ti conosco più amore (Corbucci)
1981 Il mistero di Oberwald (The Mystery of Oberwald) (Antonioni) (as the Queen); Camera d’albergo (Monicelli); Tongo della gelosia (Tigers in Lipstick) (Steno)
1982 Io so che tu sai che io so (I Know that You Know that I Know) (Sordi); Scusa se e poco (Vicario)
1983 Flirt (Russo) (as Laura); Trenta minuti d’amore (Vicario)
1986 Francesco e mia (Russo) (+ co-sc, story)

Publications

By VITTI: book—

By VITTI: articles—

Interview with E. Decaux and Bruno Villien, in Cinématographe (Paris), December 1982.
Interview with Ralf Schenk, in Film und Fernsehen, (Berlin), January 1985.

On VITTI: book—

On VITTI: articles—

Rogor Manvell
Stars (Mariembourg), December 1988.
Film a Doba (Prague), Summer 1994.

* * *

Monica Vitti is best known for her representation of the macho Italian version of woman in many of director Antonioni’s films, but it must be said that he manipulated her performances with a callow disregard for human integrity. In the director’s great trilogy, Vitti appears as the molded woman, not only in the cinematography but also in the narrative. In L’avventura she replaces the first woman of Sandro, the male lead. For all his intellectual Weltanschmerz, Sandro has the same attitude toward women as that of any bravo hanging out in the square of any Italian village. He, not she, has the luxury of promiscuity and its subsequent guilt. In the last scene, the Vitti persona forgives the repentant lover like some Florentine Madonna—wistful and melancholy, yet always accepting.

L’eclisse is hardly better: in it Vitti plays a sexually exploited woman. To underscore her position she dresses up, applies blackface, and performs a dance for the entertainment of a colonial from Kenya. It may be said that this scene demonstrates a certain sympathy for her situation, but such acceptance of male sympathy is cheap.

In La notte she plays the passive observer, the writer manqué. In Antonioni’s world, while women can represent symbolically creative apperception, it is only the male poet or director who can actually “make.” Finally, in Il deserto rosso, her baffled gestures and her wistful smile à la Watteau are excruciatingly painful. This role seems the ultimate degradation that Antonioni could effect upon the Vitti persona.

Probably her finest role, at least as a fully cognizant human being, is that of the title character in Joseph Losey’s Modesty Blaise. Admittedly, at the time of its appearance, it was a role little appreciated by the critics sharing the same sexual malaise as Antonioni. The film gained a cult following, however, in the radicalized college campuses of the 1960s. Here, Vitti’s husky voice is heard to best advantage. But of even greater significance is the film’s translation of the refined woman into an active, female James Bond. Here, then, lies the sublime irony of Losey’s film: this actress, whom Antonioni had made out to be the helpless and indecisive neurotic, now becomes the protagonist.

Wim Wenders, Die Angst des Tormanns beim Elfmeter, 1995—in TV mini-series Der Clan der Anna Voss.

Films as Actor:

1971 Die Angst des Tormanns beim Elfmeter (The Goalkeeper’s Fear of the Penalty; The Goalie’s Anxiety at the Penalty Kick) (Wenders) (as village idiot)
1973 Der schwarzlachrote Buchstabe (The Scarlet Letter) (Wenders) (as the sailor); Die Grafen von Rathenow (Beauvais—for TV)
1974 Alice in den Städten (Alice in the Cities) (Wenders) (as Phillip); Falsche Bewegung (Wrong Movement; The Wrong Move) (Wenders) (as Wilhelm Meister)
1976 Im Lauf der Zeit (Kings of the Road) (Wenders) (as Bruno Winter)
1977 Kreutzer (Emmerich) (as Andreas Kreutzer); Fleuchtweg nach Marseille (Engstrom); Die Linksabhängige Frau (The Left-Handed Woman) (Handke) (as the actor)
1978 Alzire oder der Neue Kontinent (Koerfer); L’Etat sauvage (The Savage State) (Girod) (as Tristan)
1979 Letzte Liebe (Engstrom)
1980 Henry Angst (Kratisch)
1981 Beate und Mareile (Gies—for TV)
1982 Die Bleiere Zeit (The German Sisters; Marianne and Juliane) (von Trotta) (as Wolfgang); Logik des Gefühls (Kratisch) (as George)
1983 Heller Wahn (von Trotta); L’Hôpital de Leningrad (Maldoror); Melzer (Heinz Butler); Wanda (Noever)
1984 Un caso d’incoscienza (Greco); Der Havariert (Buhler); Machinations (Gantillon—for TV); La Nuit de Carrefour (Bertin); Praxis der Liebe (Export)
1985 Fratelli (Dordi)
1986 Tarot (Thome) (as Otto)
1987 Lucky Ravi (Lombard); Madrid (Patino) (as Hans); Das Treibe Haus (Goedel) (as narrator)
1989 Erdenschwer (Herbrich) (as Dr. Frank)
1990 Il sole anche di notte (Night Sun) (Tavianis) (as King Charles)
1991 Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Phillip Winter); Anna Goldin; letzte Hexe (Anna Goldin, the Last Witch) (Pinkus) (as Dr. Tsuchidi); Transit (Allio) (as the doctor); Reiche Kunden kilt man nicht (Gute—for TV)
1992 Tatort—Bienzle und der Biedermann (Peter Adam—for TV) (as Paul Stricker); Schöne Feindin (Keglevic—for TV) (as Dr. Egon Wirtz); Das Lange Gespräch mit dem Vogel (Zanus) (as Dr. Halbritter)
1993 Faraway, So Close! (In Weiter Ferne, So Nah!) (Wenders) (as Phillip Winter); Bommels Billigflüge (Rohne—for TV) (as Volker)
1994 Het Verdriet Van Belgie (as Lausegeng); Tod in Miami (Rola—for TV) (as Kai Vogt); Saubere Akten (Mittermayr—for TV) (as Brehm); Hasenjagd—Vor lauter Feigheit gibt es kein Erbarmen (The Quality of Mercy; The Rabbit Hunt) (Gruber) (as Gendarm Birker); De sœur et du sang (Wonderboy) (Vecchiali)
1995 Viagem a Lisboa (Lisbon Story) (Wenders) (as Phillip Winter)

VOGLERACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

VOGLER, Rüdiger

Nationality: German. Born: Warthausen, 1942. Education: Studied theater at Heidelberg University. Career: 1960s—associated with the Frankfurt Theater am Turm: roles in comic and serious plays, especially those by Peter Handke; 1971—first of several films by Rodney Farnsworth
1996 Peanuts—Die Bank zahlt alles (Rola)
1997 Die Schuld der Liebe (Gruber) (as Schweiger); Le Rouge et le noir (Verhaeghe—mini for TV) (as Abbé Pinard); Operation Phoenix—Jäger zwischen den Welten (Fratzscher—for TV) (as Retzbach); Un Prete tra noi (Capitanio and Gasparini—series for TV) (as Pietro)
1998 Le Plus beau pays du monde (Bluwal); Doppelter Einsatz: Die Todfreundin (Zahavi—for TV) (as Dr. Benziger); Tigerstreifenbaby wartet auf Tarzan (Tigerstripe Baby is Waiting for Tarzan) (Thome) (as Franz); Une minute de silence (Florent Emilio Siri)
1999 Götterdämmerung—Morgen stirbt Berlin (Bombs Under Berlin) (Coppoletta—for TV) (as Kommissar Lobenstein); Die Zauberfrau (Hofmann) (as Ernstbert Schatz); Die Braut (Günther) (as Hans-Heinrich Meyer); The Taste of Sunshine (Sunshine) (Szabó); Rendezvous mit dem Teufel (Berger—for TV) (as Henry Scholl); Une pour toutes, toutes pour une (Lelouch) (as Le chef d’orchestre)
2000 Anatomie (Ruzowitzky) (as Dr. Henning)

Publications

By VOGLER: articles—

Interview, in Cinématographe (Paris), February 1981.

Although Rüdiger Vogler is associated ineradicably with Wim Wenders for his starring roles in Alice in the Cities, Kings of the Road, and the relatively neglected Wrong Movement (not forgetting his smaller parts in The Goalkeeper’s Fear of the Penalty and The Scarlet Letter, and roles in Wenders’s 1990s films, Until the End of the World, Faraway, So Close!, and Lisbon Story), his earliest associations were in fact with Peter Handke. After studying drama at Heidelberg University Vogler worked at Frankfurt’s Theater am Turm from 1966, where he appeared in all of Handke’s plays, including the epochal 1968 production Publikumsbeschimpfung. He also appeared in Handke’s television film Die Chronik der Laufenden Ereignisse and, much later, in the writer’s debut as a feature director, The Left Handed Woman.

In one of his few published interviews Vogler once said that “just as a film is something of an image of a reality, so an actor is also the image of a real man,” and in many respects it is extremely tempting to regard his Wenders films not simply as at-one-remove portraits of their director but, moreover, as documentaries about the actor himself. Certainly it is very difficult to make the usual distinction between actor and character, and the continuities from film to film—the tenderness, the poignancy, the fear of ‘‘normal” settled-down life, the need for movement along with a certain unfulfilled desire for some kind of stability—give his three main films for Wenders the quality of a trilogy, a quality that stems as much from Vogler’s remarkable presence as Wenders’s writing and direction.

Vogler’s importance, however, goes beyond his roles in early Wenders, and his gentle, troubled persona has become a key ingredient in what Thomas Elsaesser has aptly referred to as the “collective associations and cross-references” that distinguish the New German Cinema. As he puts it, “what gave the use of actors in the German cinema the dimension of a star system was their appearance in the films of different directors, which complemented their roles in the different films by the same director. One might, for instance, construct for the New German Cinema a recognizable identity and an existence as a national cinema entirely on the basis of the different roles and personae that less than a dozen actors and actresses embodied in 40 or 50 films,” actors who “helped establish an intertextuality sufficiently stable to give the impression of a coherent fictional universe, although sufficiently variable to inhibit typecasting.” Fassbinder springs immediately to mind here, as does Herzog’s use of Klaus Kinski and Bruno S., along of course, with Wenders/Vogler.

Thus when Vogler crops up in von Trotta’s The German Sisters he brings to the role all sorts of associations that would not be present were the character being played by a different actor; indeed, as Elsaesser notes, he plays a role “which is not so much of a character within the fiction as that of a Wenders persona in a von Trotta film, and thus answering for the spectator the question of what Wenders’ attitude might be to left-wing politics, terrorism and the women’s movement.” Directors who have exploited the introspective side of his “Wenders” persona include Ingemar Engstrom (Letzte Liebe) and Ingo Kratisch (Logik des Gefühl) while the restless, rootless aspect (Alice, Kings) is more to the fore in Handke’s The Left-Handed Woman and Klaus Emmerich’s Kreutzer.

—Julian Petley

VOIGHT, Jon

Nationality: American. Born: Yonkers, New York, 29 December 1938; brother of songwriter Wes Voight (Chip Taylor). Education: Attended Archbishop Stepinac High School, White Plains, New York; Catholic University, Washington, D.C.; studied acting at the Neighborhood Playhouse under Sanford Meisner, 1960–64. Family: Married 1) Lauri Peters, 1962 (divorced 1967); 2) Marcheline Bertrand, 1971 (divorced 1978), children: James, and the actress Angelina Jolie. Career: Made his Broadway debut in a replacement role in The Sound of Music, early 1960s; had a major role in an off-Broadway production of A View from the Bridge, and acted in the San Diego Shakespeare Festival, 1965; appeared on Broadway with Irene Papas in That Summer—That Fail, and made his film debut in Fearless Frank, 1967; appeared in the TV mini-series Return to Lonesome Dove, 1993; made his directing debut with the TV movie Tin Soldier, 1995. Awards: Best Actor British Academy Award, National Society of Film Critics Best Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Actor, Most Promising Newcomer-Male Golden Globe, for Midnight Cowboy, 1969; Best Actor Academy Award, Cannes Film Festival Best Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Actor, National Board of Review Best Actor, Jon Voight (right) and Alan Arkin in Catch-22

Best Motion Picture Actor-Drama Golden Globe, for Coming Home, 1978; Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture-Drama Golden Globe, for Runaway Train, 1985. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90210 U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1967 Fearless Frank (Frank’s Greatest Adventure) (Kaufman) (title role); Hour of the Gun (John Sturges) (as Curly Bill Brocius)
1969 Midnight Cowboy (Schlesinger) (as Joe Buck); Out of It (Williams) (as Russ)
1970 The Revolutionary (Williams) (as A); Catch-22 (Mike Nichols) (as Milo Minderbinder)
1972 Deliverance (Boorman) (as Ed Gentry)
1973 The All-American Boy (Eastman) (as Vic Bealer)
1974 Conrack (Ritt) (as Pat Conroy); The Odessa File (Neame) (as Peter Miller)
1975 Der Richter und sein Henker (End of the Game; Murder on the Bridge; Getting Away with Murder) (Schell) (as Walter Tschanz)
1978 Coming Home (Ashby) (as Luke Martin)

1978 The Champ (Zeffirelli) (as Billy Flynn)
1982 Lookin’ to Get Out (Ashby) (as Alex Kovac, + co-sc)
1983 Table for Five (Lieberman) (as J. F. Tannen)
1985 Runaway Train (Konchalovsky) (as Manny)
1986 Desert Bloom (Corr) (as Jack Chismore)
1990 Eternity (Paul) (as James/Edward, + sc)
1991 Chernobyl: The Final Warning (Page—for TV) (as Dr. Robert Gale)
1992 The Last of His Tribe (Hook—for TV) (as Prof. Alfred Kroeber)
1994 The Rainbow Warrior (Tuchner) (as Peter Willcox)
1995 Convict Cowboy (Holcomb—for TV) (as Ry Weston); Heat (Michael Mann) (as Nate)
1996 Mission Impossible (De Palma) (as Jim Phelps); Rosewood (Singleton) (as John Wright)
1997 Anaconda (Llosa) (as Paul Sarone); U Turn (Stone) (as Blind Man); Most Wanted (Hogan) (as General Adam Woodward); The Rainmaker (Coppola) (as Leo F. Drummond)
1998 The Fixer (Carner—for TV) (as Jack Killoran, exec pr); The General (I Once Had a Life) (Boorman) (as Ned Kenny); Enemy of the State (Scott) (as Thomas Brian Reynolds).
1999 Varsity Blues (Robbins) (as Coach Bud Kilmer); Noah’s Ark (Irwin—for TV) (as title role); A Dog of Flanders (Brodie) (as Michel La Grande)
Film as Actor and Director:

1995 Tin Soldier (for TV) (as Yarik)

Publications

By VOIGHT: article—

‘Jon Voight: To Act or Not to Act,’’ interview with S. Miles, in Interview (New York), October 1974.

On VOIGHT: articles—

McGillivray, David, “‘Jon Voight,’’ in Focus on Film (London), Autumn 1972.

Jerome, Jim, “‘For Single Father Jon Voight, Table for Five Is a Story Close to His Own Painful Experience,’” in People Weekly (New York), 11 April 1983.

Gorkachov, V., “‘Jon Voight: To Russia with Love,‘’ in Soviet Film (Moscow), December 1988.

Eby, D., “‘Anaconda,‘’ in Cinefantastique (Forest Park), vol. 28, no. 11, 1997.

* * *

Jon Voight is a multitalented (but too-little-used) actor whose career is a study in schizophrenia. In the role that solidified his stardom, he played a boyishly naive, inexperienced character who is constantly victimized; as he reached middle-age, his best parts came as slick corporate villains and grizzled, all-too-experienced heavies, intimidating outlaws one would cross the street to avoid. In between came his most likable character: an Everyman war survivor whose time in battle has at once crippled his body but sharpened his mind, and his sensivities.

Voight won his initial celebrity in Midnight Cowboy, one of the defining films of the late-1960s-early 1970s, playing the ingenuous Texas stud Joe Buck, opposite Dustin Hoffman’s Ratso Rizzo. Joe Buck comes to New York thinking he effortlessly will earn wads of money selling himself to wealthy middle-aged ladies who will be taken by his coyboy charm. Instead, he ends up befriending the tubercular Ratso, with whom he shares a frosty room in a condemned building. His sexual contacts are just as often with men and boys as women. As a hustler, Joe Buck is an abysmal failure. At the finale, Ratso—who is his lone friend—dies, and Joe Buck’s future remains uncertain.

Among Voight’s most vividly-etched post-Midnight Cowboy roles have been characters totally unlike Joe Buck: heavies who either are psychotic to a spine-rattling degree (the prison escapee in Runaway Train, in which he offers an electrifying performance), or simply intimidating (Robert De Niro’s criminal contact in Heat, followed by the conniving, murderous National Security Agency official in Enemy of the State, the amoral, well-reconmpensed lawyer in The Rainmaker, and the redneck football coach in Varsity Blues). At their worst, the latter characters are stereotypical heavies. Still, they are necessary elements to their stories, and Voight does a first-class job of making them appropriately smarmy. Not all of his work has been letter-perfect; however, in Anaconda, he gives an over-the-top performance as a slimy, loony snake trapper. With the exception of Runaway Train, Voight’s roles in all these films are supporting. Even when his character is upstanding, and on the right side of the law—in The General, he plays a cop who is determined to nab Brendan Gleeson’s elusive working-class criminal—his role is a secondary one.

The part that links his Midnight Cowboy and Enemy of the State/Rainmaker/Varsity Blues celluloid personalities is the one for which Voight won an Oscar: Luke Martin, the sensitive, perceptive, paraplegic Vietnam veteran in Coming Home. Luke is a young American who went off to war his country had no business fighting. For his trouble, he will be spending the rest of his days in a wheelchair. But harsh real-life experience has not hardened him. Unlike too many other celluloid Vietnam veterans, he is neither psycho criminal nor ne’er-do-well. Despite his plight, Luke Martin demands no pity—and he has become an eloquent antiwar activist. His reward: Jane Fonda, whom he wins from gung-ho marine officer Bruce Dern. Voight’s knowing, sympathetic performance makes Luke the kind of guy with whom one might want to share a beer, or pass the hours deep in conversation.

Voight has had several other solid roles in noteworthy films (one of the unfortunates who sets out on what will be a harrowing backwoods canoe trip, in Deliverance; the common-sense teacher fighting racism and ignorance in the backwards black school, in Conrack). Still, his celluloid output has been spotty; since his screen debut in 1967, he has appeared in a little over three dozen films and made-for-television features. For this reason alone, Voight’s career cannot be considered at the level of Dustin Hoffman, Al Pacino, Richard Dreyfuss, Jack Nicholson, Gene Hackman, or Robert De Niro, his fellow Oscar-winners who also won renown in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

And at the turn of the twenty-first century, it even might be argued that Voight is best-known not for his own work but as the father of star-on-the-rise (and newly minted Oscar winner) Angelina Jolie.

—Rob Edelman

VOLENTÉ, Gian Maria

Nationality: Italian. Born: Milan, 9 April 1933. Education: Attended Academy of Dramatic Art, Rome. Family: Daughter with the actress Carla Gravina; Giovanna. Career: 1950s—stage actor for theater companies all over Italy; appeared in TV adaptations of Dostoyevsky’s Idiot, Chekhov’s Uncle Vanya, and Vittorio Alfieri’s Saul; 1960—film debut in Sotto dieci bandiere; 1964—directed controversial production of Hochhuth’s stage play The Representative; 1971—arrested during strike in Italy; increasingly took on roles that meshed with his militant leftist politics. Awards: Nastro d’Argento Award for Best Actor, for Oeuvre au noir, 1988; special jury prize, Felix awards, for Porte aperte, 1990; Golden Lion, Venice Film Festival, for career achievement, 1991. Died: Of heart attack, in Florina, Greece, 6 December 1994.
Films as Actor:

1960 Sotto dieci bandiere (Under Ten Flags) (Coletti) (as Braun)
1961 La ragazza con la valigia (Girl with a Suitcase; Pleasure Girl) (Zurlini) (as Piero); L'Antinea (L'Atlantide; Journey beneath the Desert; The Lost Kingdom) (Ulmer and Masini) (as Tarath); Ercole alla conquista di Atlantide (Hercules and the Captive Women) (Cottafavi); A cavalo della tigre (Comencini)
1962 Un uomo da bruciare (A Man for Burning) (Orsini and Taviani) (as Salvatore); Le quattro giornate di Napoli (The Four Days of Naples) (Loy) (as Stimolo); Il terrorista (de Bosio)
1963 Il peccato (Grau)
1964 Per un pugno di dollari (A Fistful of Dollars) (Leone) (as Ramon Rojo, credited as John Wells); Il magnifico cornuto (The Magnificent Cuckold) (Pietrangeli) (as assessor)
1965 Per qualche dollari in più (A Few Dollars More) (Leone) (as Indio, credited as John Wells); Svegliati e uccidi (La Tragedia dei Dalì: La nona per la nona; Wake Up and Die; Too Soon to Die) (Lizzani) (as Inspector Moroni); L'armata Brancaleone (Monicelli) (title role); La strega in amore (The Witch; Aura) (Damianni) (as Fabrizio)
1966 Het Gangstermeisje (A Gangster Girl) (Weisz) (as Jascha); A ciascuno il suo (We Still Kill the Old Way) (Pietri) (as Prof. Paolo Laurana); Faccia a faccia (Cara a Cara; Face to Face) (Sollima) (as Prof. Brad Fletcher); Quien sabe? (A Bullet for the General) (Damianni) (as El Chuncho); I sette fratelli Cervi (Puccini)
1968 Banditi a Milano (The Violent Four) (Lizzani) (as Cavallero); Summit (Bontempi) (as Paolo)
1969 L'amanti di Gramigna (Lizzani) (title role); Sotto il segno dello scorpione (Under the Sign of Scorpio) (Taviani) (as Renno)
1970 Le Vent d'est (Wind from the East; East Wind) (Godard) (as soldier); Indagine su un cittadino al di sopra di ogni sospetto (Investigation of a Citizen above Suspicion) (Pietri) (as police inspector); Le Cercle rouge (Puccini)
1971 Sacco e Vanzetti (Sacco and Vanzetti) (Montaldo) (as Bartolomeo Vanzetti); La classe operaia va in paradiso (The Working Class Goes to Heaven; Lulu the Tool) (Pietri) (as Lulu Massa); 12 Dicembre (Zurlini and others—doc); Il caso Mattei (The Mattei Affair) (Rosí) (as Enrico Mattei)
1972 L'Attentat (Plot; The French Conspiracy) (Boisset) (as Sadiel); Shatt il nostro in prima pagina (Bellocchio) (as Bizanti)
1973 A proposito Lucky Luciano (Re: Lucky Luciano; Lucky Luciano) (Rosí) (title role); Giordano Bruno (Montaldo) (title role)
1975 Il sospetto (Maselli) (as Emile)
1976 Todo modo (Pietri) (as the President)
1977 Io ho paura (Damianni)
1979 Cristo si è fermato a Eboli (Christ Stopped at Eboli; Eboli) (Rosí) (as Carlo Levi)
1980 Stark System (Balducci)
1981 La Dame aux camélias (The True Story of Camille; La Vera storia della signora delle camellie; Die Kameliendame) (Bolognini and Festa Campanile)
1982 The Secret Policeman's Other Ball (Temple and Graf—filmed concert)
1983 Scherzo del destino in anglo di strada (A Joke of Destiny; Lying in Wait around the Corner Like a Street Bandit) (Wermüller)
1984 La Mort de Mario Ricci (The Death of Mario Ricci) (Goretta) (as Bernard Fontana)
1985 Actas de Marusia (Letters from Marusia) (Littin)
1986 Il caso Moro (The Moro Affair) (Ferrara) (as Aldo Moro)
1987 Cronaca di una morte annunciata (Chronicle of a Death Foretold) (Rosí) (as Dr. Cristo Bedoya); Un ragazzo di Calabria (Comencini) (as Felice)
1988 Oeuvre au noir (The Abyss) (Delvaux) (as Prior); Pestalozzos Berg (Von Gunten) (as Pestalozzi)
1990 Porte aperte (Open Doors) (Amelio) (as Judge Vito Di Francesco); Tre colone in cronaca (Vanzina)
1991 Une Storia Semplice (A Simple Story) (Greco)
1993 Funes, un gran amor (Funes, a Great Love) (De La Torre)
1995 Un Eroe Borghese (Placido); To Vlemma tou Odysseas (Ulysses' Gaze; The Gaze of Odysseus; Le Regarde d'Ulysse) (Angelopoulos)

Publications

By VOLONTÉ: articles—

“Gian Maria Volonté Talks about Cinema and Politics,” interview with Guy Braucourt, in Cineaste (New York), Fall 1975.
Interview in Cine Cubano (Havana), no. 115, 1986.

On VOLONTÉ: book—

On VOLONTÉ: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Spring 1995; Autumn 1995.

The leading political actor of the 1960s and 1970s, Gian Maria Volonté shaped the look and style of Italian political filmmaking as much as have the great directors with whom he collaborated: Francesco Rosi, Elio Petri, and Marco Belloccio. Volonté established a strong reputation on stage and television before he entered cinema; even after he became the leading political spokesman on screen he continued to appear in socially committed theater productions.

Volonté’s first roles in films solidified one aspect of his persona: the bad guy. In half a dozen Italian Westerns, including Per un pugno with Bergman, 1957; joined the Royal Dramatic Theatre, Stockholm, 1960; played the role of Christ in his first U.S. film, _The Greatest Story Ever Told_, 1965; made his Broadway debut in _The Night of the Tribades_, 1977; appeared in the stage play _Duet for One_, 1981; directed his first film, _Katinka_, 1988; on stage in _The Tempest_ at the Old Vic, London, 1988; appeared in the TV mini-series _Radeckymarsch (Radecky March)_ , 1994, and _Enskilda Samtal_, 1996. _Awards:_ Venice Film Festival Best Actor, for _Flight of the Eagle_, 1982; Best Actor Guldbagge Award, Best Actor European Film Award, Bodil Festival Best Actor, Robert Festival Best Actor, for _Pelle the Conqueror_, 1987; Best Direction Guldbagge Award, for _Katinka_, 1988; Australian Film Institute Best Actor in a Lead Role, for _Father_, 1989; Tokyo International Film Festival Best Actor, for _The Silent Touch_, 1992; Best Actor Guldbagge Award, Bodil Festival Best Actor, for _Hamsun_. 1996. Address: c/o Filmuset, Box 27126, 102 52 Stockholm 27, Sweden.
VON SYDOW ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Bara en Mor (Only a Mother)</td>
<td>(Sjöberg)</td>
<td>(as Nils)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Frozen Julie (Miss Julie)</td>
<td>(Sjöberg)</td>
<td>(as Hand)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Ingens Mans Kvinna (No Man's Woman)</td>
<td>(Kjellgren)</td>
<td>(as Antonio Block)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>När livet (Brink of Life; So Close to Life)</td>
<td>(Bergman)</td>
<td>(as Harry Andersson); Spion 503 (Jeppesen); Ansikte (The Face; The Magician) (Bergman) (as Albert Emanuel Vogler)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Jangfrukällen (The Virgin Spring)</td>
<td>(Bergman)</td>
<td>(as Herr Tore); Brollopsdagen (The Wedding Day) (Frost) (as Anders Frost)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Todo modo</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Dett Sjunde Inseget (The Seventh Seal)</td>
<td>(Bergman)</td>
<td>(as Antonius Block); Präisten (Frost); Smultronsödet (Wild Strawberries) (Bergman) (as Akerman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Nils Holgerssons Underbara Resa (Adventures of Nils Holgersson); Alskarinnan (The Swedish Mistress) (Sjöman)</td>
<td>(as married man)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Nattwardsgästerna (Winter Light)</td>
<td>(Bergman)</td>
<td>(as Jonas Persson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Hawai (George Roy Hill)</td>
<td>(as Abner Hale); The Quiller Memorandum (Anderson) (as Oktober); Här har du ditt liv (Here's Your Life; This Is Your Life) (Troell)</td>
<td>(as Smalands-Pelle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Svarta palmkroner (The Black Palm Trees)</td>
<td>(Lindgren)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Vargtimmen (Hour of the Wolf)</td>
<td>(Bergman)</td>
<td>(as Johan Borg); Skammen (Shame) (Bergman) (as Jan Rosenberg); Made in Sweden (Bergenstrahle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The Kremlin Letter</td>
<td>(Col. Vladimir Kosnov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The Night Visitor (Benedek)</td>
<td>(as Salem); Beröringen (The Touch) (Bergman) (as Andreas Vergerus); Appelkriget (The Apple War) (Danielsson) (as Roy Lindberg); I havsbander (Lagerkvist—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Utvandrarna (The Emigrants)</td>
<td>(Troell) (as Karl Oskar); Embassy (Hessler) (as Gorenko)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Nybyggarna (The New Land)</td>
<td>(Troell) (as Karl Oskar); The Exorcist (Friedkin) (title role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Nationality: Swedish. Born: Carl von Sydow in Lund, 10 April 1929. Education: Attended Cathedral School of Lund; Royal Academy (now Royal Dramatic Theatre School), Stockholm, graduated 1951. Family: Married 1) the actress Kerstin Olin, 1951 (divorced 1996), sons: Claes and Henrik; 2) Cathrine Brelet, 1997. Career: Made his film debut in _Bara en Mor_, 1949; worked as an actor with the Norrköping-Linköping Municipal Theatre, 1951–53, worked at the Municipal Theatre of Hälsingborg, 1953–55, and the Municipal Theatre of Malmö, 1955–60; directed on stage at Malmö by Ingmar Bergman in _Cat on a Hot Tin Roof_, _Peer Gnt_, _Le Misanthrope_, and _Faust_; appeared in _The Seventh Seal_, his first film
Max von Sydow in Pelle Erovraren

1974  Steppenwolf (Haines) (as Harry Haller); Agget är löst (Egg! Egg! A Hardboiled Story)
1975  Froxtot (The Other Side of Paradise) (Ripstein) (as Larsen); Three Days of the Condor (Pollack) (as Joubert); The Ultimate Warrior (Clouse) (as the Baron); Cuore di cane (Lattuada); Il contesto (Rosi)
1976  Cadaveri eccelenti (Illustrious Corpses) (Rosi) (as Chief Justice); Voyage of the Damned (Wanamaker) (as Capt. Schroeder); Le désert des Tartares (Il deserto dei Tartari); The Desert of the Tartars (Zurlini) (as Hortiz)
1977  Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman) (as Father Merrin); March or Die (Richards) (as François Marneau); La signora della orroro (Black Journal)
1978  Brass Target (Hough) (as Shelley/Weber); Gran bollito  (Bolognini)
1979  Hurricane (Troell) (as Dr. Bascomb); A Look at Liv (Norway’s Liv Ullmann; Liv Ullmann’s Norway) (Kaplan—doc); Le Mort en direct (Deathwatch) (Tavernier) (as Gerald Mortenhoe)
1980  Flash Gordon (Hodges) (as Emperor Ming); She Dances Alone (Dornhelm) (as voice of Nijinsky); Bugie bianchi (Rolla)
1981  Victory (Escape to Victory) (Huston) (as Maj. Karl von Steiner)
1982  Conan the Barbarian (Milius) (as King Osric); Ingenjör Andres luftfärd (Flight of the Eagle) (Troell) (as Salomon August Andree)
1983  Strange Brew (Thomas and Morani) (as Brewmeister Smith); Never Say Never Again (Kershner) (as Ernst Stavro Blofeld); Cercel des passions (D’Anna)
1984  Dreamscape (Ruben) (as Dr. Novotny); Samson and Delilah (Philips—for TV); Letzte Zivlist (Heynemann—for TV); Target Eagle (Loma) (as Col. O’Donnell); Dune (Lynch) (as Liet Kynes); George Stevens: A Filmmaker’s Journey (Stevens Jr.—doc) (as himself); The Ice Pirates (Raffill—for TV)
1985  Kojak: The Belarush File (Markowitz—for TV); Code Name: Emerald (Sanger) (as Jurgen Brausch); The Last Place on Earth (Fairfax—for TV); Il pentito (Squitteri) (as Spinola); Quo Vadis (Rossi—for TV); Cristoforo Colombo (Christopher Columbus) (Lattuada—for TV) (as King John of Portugal)
1986  Hannah and Her Sisters (Woody Allen) (as Frederick); Duet for One (Konchalovsky) (as Dr. Louis Feldman); *Second Victory (Thomas) (as Dr. Huber); The Wolf at the Door (Oviri) (Carlsen) (as August Strindberg)
1987
Pelle Erovraren (Pelle the Conqueror) (August) (as Papa Lasse Karlsson)
1989
Red King, White Knight (Murphy—for TV) (as Szaz); Father (Power) (as Joseph Mueller)
1990
Hiroshima: Out of the Ashes (Werner—for TV) (as Father Siemss); Mio caro Dottor Graesler (Dr. Graesler, The Bachelor) (Faenza) (as Von Schleheim); Una Vita Scellerata (Violent Life) (Battiatto) (as Pope Clement VII); Awakenings (Penny Marshall) (as Dr. Peter Ingham)
1991
A Kiss before Dying (Dearden) (as Thor Carlsson); The Ox (Oxen) (Nykvist) (as the vicar); Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (as Henry Farber)
1992
Zentropa (Europa) (von Trier) (as narrator); Den Goda Viljan (The Best Intentions) (August) (as Johan Akerblom); Dotkniecie reki (The Silent Touch) (Zanussi) (as Henry Kesdi)
1993
Needful Things (Fraser Heston) (as Leland Gaunt)
1994
Time Is Money (Penny Marshall) (as Dr. Peter Ingham); Enskilda santal (Private Confessions) (Ullmann—series for TV) (as Jacob)
1997
Hostile Waters (Péril en mer) (Drury—for TV) (as Admiral Chernavin); En Frusen dróm (A Frozen Dream) (Troeell) (as voice of S.A. Andréé); La Principessa e il povero (Bava—for TV) (as Epos); Solomon (Young—for TV) (as David) 1998
What Dreams May Come (Ward) (as The Tracker)
1999
Snow Falling on Cedars (Hicks) (as Nels Gudmundsson)
2000
Nuremberg (Simoneau—mini for TV) (as Samuel Rosenman); Druids (Dorffmann)

Film as Director:
1988
Vid vejen (Katinka)

Publications

By VON SYDOW: articles—

On VON SYDOW: books—

On VON SYDOW: articles—

Ecran (Paris), May 1978.

* * *

When you think of Scandinavian movie stars, the first name that comes to mind is Max von Sydow. Since his screen debut in 1949 in Alf Sjöberg’s Only a Mother, he has appeared in countless films, including titles as diverse as Hannah and Her Sisters and Conan the Barbarian, The Emigrants and The Exorcist, Pelle the Conqueror and Judge Dredd. The actor is easily recognized by his gaunt appearance: he is tall, with a lean face and sharp features. These physical characteristics have been an asset in both aspects of his screen career, comprised of the character roles he has played in English-language films and his status as a principal on-screen interpreter of Ingmar Bergman.

In the United States, von Sydow enjoys the reputation of a serious actor, due to the roles he plays—character ones, rather than leading men or traditional star parts—and his past association with Bergman. His roles have ranged from intellectuals (the painter who is Barbara Hershey’s live-in lover in Hannah and Her Sisters and Conan the Barbarian, The Emigrants and The Exorcist, Pelle the Conqueror and Judge Dredd) to ministers and priests (in Hawaii and The Exorcist) to stock heavies (a sadistic Nazi in The Quiller Memorandum, cold-blooded assassins in Three Days of the Condor and Brass Target). He was the title character in The Exorcist, and a supernatural guide in What Dreams May Come; he also has played Christ, in The Greatest Story Ever Told, and the Devil, in Needful Things. And he has appeared in as many forgettable, if not outright disastrous, American films (Dune, Judge Dredd, and Hurricane are but a few) as he has in first-rate, Oscar-caliber titles (Hannah and Her Sisters, The Exorcist, Awakenings).

Von Sydow has co-starred in a number of European productions by prominent directors, including Mauro Bolognini, Bertrand Tavernier, Jan Troell, and, most recently, Bille August. But it is his work with Bergman for which he will be best-remembered. He earned his initial international acclaim in Bergman-directed films, particularly The Seventh Seal (as the tormented knight who rides through the plague-ridden countryside in search of a good deed he might perform before the figure of Death takes him away) and The Virgin Spring (as the father who avenges the rape-murder of his young daughter). Indeed, in his best roles for Bergman (in which he has, more often than not, played husbands and artists), von Sydow has embodied the anguished soul who suffers as a result of his desires, or guilt, or the guilt he feels because of his desires. Throughout his career, he has remained active on the stage, often working with Bergman on the latter’s theatrical undertakings; in fact, he began his collaboration with Bergman in the 1950s when he joined the Municipal Theatre of Malmö, where Bergman was the principal director. Decades later, he capped his association with the filmmaker by taking supporting roles in two Bergman-scripted family histories. First he played Johan Akerblom, Bergman’s maternal grandfather, in the Bille August-directed The Best Intentions. Then he was a character who, in an earlier day, might have been the counselor of one of his prior Bergman parts: the spiritual advisor of Anna, the filmmaker’s mother, in Private Confessions, directed by Liv Ullmann. Nearing age 60, von Sydow extended the boundaries of his career by directing his first feature: Katinka, a romantic story based on a novel by Herman Bang. Yet he remains primarily an actor, with his mere presence lending his projects an aura of class. In recent years, most of his roles have been supporting ones. One notable exception is Hamsun, directed by Jan Troell, in which he stars as Knut Hamsun, the controversial Nobel laureate writer who sided with Hitler during World War II.

Nonetheless, von Sydow’s finest late career role is the aging, illiterate old widower Lasse Karlsson in Pelle the Conqueror, directed by Bille August. Lasse and his young son Pelle are impoverished Swedish immigrants in Denmark: simple folk with modest dreams, who must valiantly struggle for survival in a world rife with everyday cruelty and injustice. Von Sydow eloquently captures his character in voice and mannerism; he plays Lasse brilliantly, with much grace, humor, and understanding, and he went on to earn his first (and, to date, only) Best Actor Academy Award nomination.

—Rob Edelman
WALBROOK, Anton

Films as Actor:

1922 Mater Dolorosa (von Bovary)
1925 Das Geheimnis auf Schloss Almshoh (Der Fluch der Bosen Tat) (Obal)
1931 Der Stolz der 3 Komagnie (Sauer); Salto Mortale (Trapeze) (Dupont) (as Robbie); Cinq gentilshommes maudits (Duvivier)
1932 Drei von der Stumpelstelle (Thiele); Baby (Lamac)
1933 Walzerkrieg (Waltz Time in Vienna) (Berger); Keine Angst vor Liebe (Steinhoff); Viktor and Viktoria (Schanzel)
1934 Der vertauschte Brant (Lamac); Maskerade (Masquerade in Vienna) (Forst) (as Heidinnick); Eine Frau, die weiss was sie will (Janson); Die englische Heirat (Schanzel) (as Robert); Regine (Waschncek) (as Frank Reynolds)
1935 Zigeuner-baron (Harth); Der Student von Prag (Robison) (as Balduin); Ich war Jack Mortimer (Froelich)
1936 Allotria (Forst); Michael Strogoff (Der Kurter des Zaren) (Eichberg) (title role); The Soldier and the Lady (Michael Strogoff) (Nicholls) (as Strogoff); I Give My Life (Port Arthur; Orders from Tokyo) (Farkas) (as Boris)
1937 Victoria the Great (Wilcox) (as Prince Albert); The Rat (Raymond) (as Jean Boucheron, title role)
1938 Sixty Glorious Years (Queen Victoria; Queen of Destiny) (Wilcox) (as Prince Albert)
1940 Gaslight (Angel Street) (Dickinson) (as Paul Mallen)
1941 49th Parallel (The Invaders) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Peter); Dangerous Moonlight (Suicide Squadron) (Hurst) (as Stefan Radetzky)
1943 The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp (Colonel Blimp) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Theo Kretschmar-Schuldorff)
1944 The Man from Morocco (Max Greene and Greenbaum) (as Karel Langer)
1948 The Red Shoes (Powell and Pressburger) (as Boris Lermontov); The Queen of Spades (Dickinson) (as Herman Suvotin)
1950 La Ronde (Circle of Love) (Max Ophuls) (as Master of Ceremonies); König für eine Nacht (May)

1951 Wien tanz (Vienna Waltzes; Wiener Walzer) (Reinert) (as Johann Strauss); Le Plaisir (House of Pleasure) (Max Ophuls) (as narrator of German version)
1954 L’Affaire Maurizius (Duvivier) (as Warenne)
1955 Oh, Rosalinda! (Fledermaus ’55) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Dr. Falke); Lola Montés (The Sins of Lola Montès; The Fall of Lola Montés) (Max Ophuls) (as King Ludwig I of Bavaria)
1957 Saint Joan (Preminger) (as Cauchon); I Accuse! (Ferrer) (as Maj. Esterhazy)
1962 Laura (Franz Josef Wild—for TV)

Publications

By WALBROOK: articles—

Interviews, in Picturegoer (London), 25 September 1937 and 27 April 1940.

On WALBROOK: articles—

Film Weekly, 25 December 1937.
Films and Filming (London), March 1978.

* * *

For most filmgoers, Anton Walbrook is associated, more than any other role, with the ballet impresario Boris Lermontov in The Red Shoes. A slim, straight Diaghilev, Lermontov views ballet as his ‘‘religion.’’ He reserves the roles of the virgin consort for Moira Shearer, who, no less dedicated, dances herself literally to death for him and her art. The expressionless Walbrook, whether watching Shearer dance Swan Lake to records in a London church hall or summoning her to an overgrown Riviera chateau to reveal her elevation to stardom, defined a vision of the aesthete/saint for whom art is all, and more than enough.

Queen Victoria’s consort Prince Albert established the image of the refined and cultured Continental gentleman in the British popular consciousness. Walbrook, who played Albert twice on screen, sustained and explored it. His Polish bomber pilot/pianist in Dangerous Moonlight made him the star he had never been in Austria. Richard Addinsell’s thundering Warsaw Concerto on the soundtrack expressed the passion and sensitivity of the tortured émigré in a way that instantly captivated audiences.

Powell and Pressburger soon incorporated Walbrook into their stock company. In 49th Parallel he led a Mennonite community in Canada with Christlike self-effacement. In The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp he played Theo Kretschmar-Schuldorff, the classic ‘good German’—aristocratic, English-speaking, polite, anti-Nazi, Beethoven-loving—to Roger Livesey’s equally stylized Briton. In Thelord Dickinson’s The Queen of Spades and Powell’s Oh, Rosalinda! based on Die Fledermaus, he was no less well-bred.

In 1950 Walbrook capped a career as observer of the vagaries of emotion by playing the weary meneur de jeu of Ophüls’s La Ronde, cynically overseeing the interlocking romances of Schnitzler’s lovers. Walbrook is buried in a shady corner of north London’s tiny Hampstead Cemetery, fitting interment for an actor who personified European style and good manners for the British.

—John Baxter

WALKEN, Christopher

Films as Actor:

1969 Me and My Brother (Robert Frank) (bit role)
1971 The Mind Snatchers (The Happiness Cage) (Girard) (as Pvt. James Reese)
1975 Valley Forge (Cook—for TV) (as the Hessian)
1976 Next Stop, Greenwich Village (Mazursky) (as Robert)
1977 The Sentinel (Winner) (as Rizzo); Annie Hall (Woody Allen) (as Duane Hall); Roseland (Ivyory) (as Russel)
1978 The Deer Hunter (Cimino) (as Nick)
1979 Last Embrace (Jonathan Demme) (as Eckart)
1980 Heaven’s Gate (Cimino) (as Nathan D. Champion); The Dogs of War (Irvin) (as Jamie Shelton)
1981 Shoot the Sun Down (Leeds); Pennies from Heaven (Ross) (as Tom)
1982 Who Am I This Time? (Jonathan Demme—for TV) (as Harry Nash)
1983 Brainstorm (Trumbull) (as Michael Anthony Brace); The Dead Zone (Cronenberg) (as Johnny Smith); Barefoot in Athens (Schaerer) (as Lamprocles)
1985 A View to a Kill (Glen) (as Max Zorin)
1986 At Close Range (Foley) (as Brad Whitewood, Sr.)

1987 Deadline (Gutman) (as Don Stevens)
1988 Biloxi Blues (Mike Nichols) (as Sgt. Merwin J. Toomey); The Milagro Beanfield War (Redford) (as Kyril Montana); Pass in Boots (Marner)
1989 Homeboy (Seresin) (as Wesley Pendergrass); Communion (Mora) (as Whitley Strieber)
1990 King of New York (Ferrara) (as Frank White); Sarah, Plain and Tall (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Jacob Wittig)
1991 The Comfort of Strangers (Schrader) (as Robert); McBain (Glickenhaus) (title role)
1992 All-American Murder (Anson Williams) (as P. J. Decker); Batman Returns (Burton) (as Max Shreck); Mistress (Primus) (as Warren Zell)
1993 True Romance (Tony Scott) (as Vincenzo Coccotti); Wayne’s World 2 (Surjik) (as Bobby Cahn); Skylark (Sargent—for TV) (as Jacob Wittig); Scam (Flynn—for TV); Le Grand Pardon II (Day of Atonement) (Arcady) (as Pasco Meisner)
1995 Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (as Capt. Koons); The Addiction (Ferrara) (as Peina); A Business Affair (Brandstrom) (as Vanni Corso); Nick of Time (Badham) (as Mr. Smith); Search and Destroy (Salle) (as Kim Ulander); Things to Do in Denver When You’re Dead (Feder) (as the Man with the Plan); The Wild Side (Cammell) (as Bruno)
1996 The Prophecy (God’s Army) (Widen) (as Angel Gabriel); Last Man Standing (Wallace Hill); The Funeral (Ferrara); Excess Baggage (Brambilla); Basquiat (Build a Fort, Set It on Fire) (Schnabel)
1997 Touch (Schrader) (as Bill Hill); Excess Baggage (Brambilla) (as Raymond Perkins); Suicide Kings (O’Fallon) (as Carlo Bartolucci/Charlie Barret); Mouse Hunt (Verbinski) (as Caesar)
1998 The Prophecy II (Spence) (as Gabriel); Illuminata (Turturro) (as Bevalaqua); Trance (Almeryda) (as Uncle Bill Ferrier); Antz (Darnell and Guterman) (as voice of Colonel Cutter); New Rose Hotel (Ferrara) (as Fox)
1999 The Prophecy III: The Ascend (Lussier) (as Gabriel); The Opportunists (Connell) (as Vic Kelly); Blast from the Past (Hugh Wilson) (as Calvin Webber); Vendetta (Meyer) (as James Houston); Sleepy Hollow (Burton) (as Hessian Horseman); Sarah, Plain and Tall: Winter’s End (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Jacob Wittig); Kiss Toledo Goodbye (Chubbuck) (as Max)

Publications

By WALKEN: articles—

Christopher Walken in The Dead Zone

“Interview with the Antichrist,” interview with M. Frankel, in Movieline (Escondido, California), December 1993.

On WALKEN: articles—

* * *

Christopher Walken started acting as a child when he appeared in countless television and stage productions. Then, as an adult he enjoyed several years of popularity and critical acclaim on the Broadway stage. In the 1970s, he started working in film, and during the early years of his screen career Walken distinguished himself in several compelling supporting roles, including his amusing performance as Diane Keaton’s strangely neurotic younger brother in Annie Hall, and as a cunning and comfortably kept gigolo in Roseland. Most notably, he appeared as The Deer Hunter’s Nick, a naive young man with romantic ideas about the adventures and heroism of war, who becomes emotionally broken, then embittered and suicidally detached as a result of his experience in Vietnam. After this still-memorable award-winning performance secured his formidable film reputation, his first leading screen role (and the first time he received top billing) was in The Dogs of War in 1980, the same year he appeared in the epic but commercially disastrous Western Heaven’s Gate.

One of America’s most skillful and unique actors, Walken has amassed a huge list of screen credits and has carved a compelling and singular niche for himself in cinematic history. He has worked with both mainstream directors, such as Tim Burton, Mike Nichols, and Robert Redford, and with more unconventional directors, such as Abel Ferrara, Paul Schrader, and Quentin Tarantino. As deft at comedic as at dramatic performance, Walken is a strikingly complex film presence: supremely confident yet accessible, menacing yet vulnerable, and eccentric yet serious. His characters convey unmistakably askew, and occasionally deeply disturbed, psyches. Tall, thin, and almost-handsome, Walken has one of the most singular visages in contemporary American cinema. Moreover, his talent is multifaceted: along with his nimble physical style (the result of his many years as a stage dancer) which enables him to convey a delicacy and subtlety of bodily expression, Walken has an extraordinary command of his voice—including an unexpected emphasis on certain words and a rich repertoire of rhythms.

His wide-ranging talents have been revealed in several remarkable roles, including At Close Range in which he offers a chilling performance as a sociopathic Midwestern hood who commands a gang of thieves and recruits hisadrft teenaged sons—among his countless other criminal and moral offenses. In the thriller The Comfort of Strangers, he conveys a deep understanding of the powerful combination of scary and funny; his performance as a monstrous and crazed European stranger in murderous pursuit of a vacationing British couple is disturbing and intense, yet also immensely funny.

As his film career has evolved over the years, Walken has altered his acting style, especially in terms of his emotional expressivity, in noteworthy ways. In his early film appearances, including The Deer Hunter and The Dead Zone, his performances have been more overtly emotional. In his more recent roles, Walken’s performances have tended to be less revealing and more stotic, thus lending an additional layer of complexity to his characterizations. In The Milagro Beanfield War, for example, he appears in only a few scenes as a taciturn troubleshooter working for a group of unethical businessmen and government officials. In a particularly compelling scene, Walken visits the office of a small-town lawyer and community activist where he calmly listens to the man’s emotional tirade which is meant to be intimidating. Remaining calm, Walken responds by raising his eyebrow, muttering ‘‘mhhmm,’’ and leaving—otherwise keeping his specific thoughts to himself, and thereby withholding the means by which to clearly interpret his interior state.

Recently, Walken redeemed the otherwise weak film The Prophecy, in which he appears as the evil, manipulative, yet strangely amusing archangel Gabriel. Also, with a willingness to accept smaller film roles, Walken has an uncanny ability to deliver quite memorable performance. In Pennies from Heaven, for example Walken makes a brief appearance as a seamy but seductive and dancing pimp. More recently, as a military buddy of Bruce Willis’s dead father in Pulp Fiction Walken is riveting—sober and commanding, even as the content of his monologue shifts from noble to amusingly outrageous.

Walken has quite aptly described his screen persona: ‘‘I am the malevolent WASP.’’ Indeed, he has achieved the American dream by playing an assortment of offbeat characters who typically represent a distortion of America’s puritan ideals.

---

WALKER, Robert

Nationality: American. Born: Salt Lake City, Utah, 13 October 1918. Education: Attended San Diego Army and Naval Institute, Carlsbad-by-the-Sea; American Academy of Dramatic Arts, New York, 1938. Family: Married 1) the actress Jennifer Jones, 1939 (divorced 1945), sons: the actors Robert Jr., and Michael; 2) Barbara Ford, 1948. Career: Actor in New York; 1938—radio actor, with Jennifer Jones, for the Mutual station, Tulsa; 1939—film debut in Winter Carnival; 1940—radio actor on Yesterday’s Children, John’s Other Wife, Against the Storm, and Myrt and Marge series; 1942—contract with MGM; 1948—9—hospitalized in the Meninger Clinic, Topeka, Kansas. Died: In Pacific Palisades, California, 28 August 1951.

Films as Actor:

1939 Winter Carnival (Riesner) (as undergraduate); These Glamour Girls (Simon) (as undergraduate); Dancing Co-Ed (Simon) (bit role)
1943 Bataan (Garnett) (as soldier); Madame Curie (LeRoy) (as a young scientist)
1944 See Here, Private Hargrove (Ruggles) (title role); Since You Went Away (Cromwell); Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy)
1945 The Clock (Minnelli); The Sailor Takes a Wife (Whorf); Her Highness and the Bellboy (Thorpe); What Next, Corporal Hargrove? (Thorpe) (title role)
1946 Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (as Jerome Kern); The Sea of Grass (Kazan)
1947 The Beginning of the End (Taurog); Song of Love (Brown) (as Johannes Brahms)
1948 One Touch of Venus (Seiter)
1950 Please Believe Me (Taurog); The Skipper Surprised His Wife (Nugent)
1951 Strangers on a Train (Hitchcock) (as Bruno Anthony); Vengeance Valley (Thorpe)
1952 My Son John (McCayre) (title role)

Publications

On WALKER: books—

Robert Walker’s skillful, mesmerizing performance as a psycho-pathic villain in Alfred Hitchcock’s suspense thriller Strangers on a Train suggested a fruitful career change away from his previously established reputation as a modestly effective, boyish leading man. But it proved to be his penultimate film, as his death the following year ended a short-lived career that was plagued throughout by personal problems.

After attending the Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York, marrying actress Jennifer Jones, snaring a few bit parts in movies, and appearing regularly on network radios, Walker signed a contract with MGM. His first substantial supporting film role was in Tay Garnett’s World War II drama, Bataan, playing a soldier—as he would many times in the early years of his movie career.

Typecast as sincere and likable, he worked in support of Mervyn LeRoy’s biographical epic Madame Curie and John Cromwell’s World War II melodrama Since You Went Away, before ascending to the military lead in Wesley Ruggles’s episodic film version of the best seller See Here, Private Hargrove. He then co-starred with Van Johnson in LeRoy’s Thirty Seconds over Tokyo, played the shy, soldierly male lead opposite Judy Garland in Vincente Minnelli’s nonmusical romance The Clock, starred as the apex of a romantic triangle involving Hedy Lamarr and June Allyson in Richard Thorpe’s Her Highness and the Bellboy, and reprised his first starring role in Thorpe’s sequel, What Next, Corporal Hargrove? He further starred as the songwriter Jerome Kern in Richard Whorf’s Till the Clouds Roll By, and supported Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn, playing their son in Elia Kazan’s unsuccessful Western The Sea of Grass.
Several more also-ran films, a second broken marriage (to director John Ford’s daughter), a drinking problem, and a nervous breakdown all but gutted his ailing career. In Strangers on a Train, however, he temporarily resuscitated his reputation with a splendid performance as Bruno Anthony, one of Hitchcock’s most colorful, memorable, and effective villains. As the pivotal character, he plays a fey, manipulative, murderous, yet mysteriously appealing and even ultimately sympathetic, antagonist. Casting him against type, Hitchcock had tapped the complex emotional undercurrents of Walker’s life.

The following year, the actor took a second step toward the dramatic modification and revitalization of his movie persona. In Leo McCarey’s Cold War melodrama My Son John he played a son suspected of being a Communist by his reactionary parents. However, footage from the final sequence in Strangers had to be borrowed for a second consecutive final-reel death scene—this one posthumous.

—Bill Wine

WALLACH, Eli

Nationality: American.  Born: Brooklyn, New York, 7 December 1915.  Education: Attended Erasmus High School; University of Texas, Austin, B.A. 1936; City College of New York, M.Sc. in education 1938; studied acting at the Neighborhood Playhouse school.

Films as Actor:

1956  Baby Doll (Kazan) (as Silva Vacarro)
1958  The Line-Up (Siegel) (as Dancer)
1960  Seven Thieves (Hathaway) (as Pancho); The Magnificent Seven (John Sturges) (as Calvera)
1961  The Misfits (Huston) (as Guido)
1962  Hemingway’s Adventures of a Young Man (Adventures of a Young Man) (Ritt) (as John)
1963  ‘The Outlaws’ ep. of How the West Was Won (Hathaway) (as Charlie Gant); The Victory (Foreman) (as Sergeant Craig); Act One (Schnay) (as Warren Stone)
1964  Kisses for My President (Bernhardt) (as Rodriguez Valdez); The Moon-Spinners (Neilson) (as Stratos)
1965  Genghis Khan (Levin) (as Shah of Khwarezm); Lord Jim (Richard Brooks) (as the General)
1966  How to Steal a Million (Wyler) (as David Leland); Il buono, il brutto, il cattivo (The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly) (Leone) (as Tuco); The Poppy Is Also a Flower (Terence Young) (as Locarno)
1967  The Tiger Makes Out (Hiller) (as Ben Harris)
1968  How to Save a Marriage—and Ruin Your Life (Cook) (as Harry Hunter); New York City—The Most (Pitt—doc) (as cabdriver); A Lovely Way to Die (Rich) (as Tennessee Fredericks); Mackenna’s Gold (J. Lee Thompson) (as Ben Baker); Il quattro dell’ave Maria (Ace High; Revenge at El Paso) (Colizzi) (as Cacopulos)
1969  Le Cerveau (The Brain) (Oury) (as Scannapieco)
1970  Ziggaz (False Witness) (Colla) (as Mario Gambretti); The People Next Door (David Greene) (as Arthur Mason); The Angel Levine (Kadar) (as a clerk); The Adventures of Gerard (Skolimowski) (as Napoleon)
1971  Romance of a Horsethief (Polonsky)
1972  Viva la muerte . . . tua! (Don’t Turn the Other Cheek; The Killer from Yuma) (Tessari)
1973  L’Ultima chance (Last Chance Motel; Stateline Motel) (Lucidi); Cinderella Liberty (Rydel) (as Lynn Forshay); A Cold Night’s Death (Freedman—for TV) (as Frank Enari)
1974  Crazy Joe (Lizzani) (as Don Vittorio); Indict and Convict (Sagal—for TV); L’Chaim—To Life! (Mayer) (as narrator)
1975  Il bianco, il giallo, il nero (Corbucci) (as the sheriff); Attenti al baffone! (Eye of the Cat) (Bevilaqua)

---

!Eli Wallach
1976 E tanta paura (Cavara) (as the detective); Independence (Huston—short) (as Benjamin Franklin); Twenty Shades of Pink (Stanley); Nasty Habits (The Abbess) (Lindsay-Hogg) (as the Monsignor)

1977 The Sentinel (Winner) (as Gatz); The Deep (Yates) (as Adam Coffin); The Domino Principle (The Domino Killings) (Kramer) (as General Tom Rezor)

1978 Girlfriends (Weill) (as Rabbi Gold); “Baxter’s Beauties of 1933” (as Pop), and “Dynamite Hands” (as Vince Marlowe), eps. of Movie Movie (Donen); The Pirate (Annakin—for TV) (as Ben Ezra); Squadra antimafia (Little Italy) (Corbucci)

1979 Winter Kills (Richert) (as Joe Diamond); Circle of Iron (The Silent Flute) (Richard Moore) (as man in oil); Firepower (Winner) (as Sal Hyman)

1980 The Hunter (Kulik) (as Ritchie Blumenthal); Fugitive Family (Kransy—for TV) (as Alan Vacio)

1981 The Salamander (Zimmer) (as Leporello); Acting: Lee Strasberg (Robbie—from TV); The Pride of Jesse Hallam (Nelson—for TV) (as Sal Galucci); Skokie (Wise—for TV) (as Bert Silverman)

1982 The Wall (Markowitz—for TV); The Executioner’s Song (Schiller—for TV) (as Uncle Vern Damico)

1983 Anatomy of an Illness (Heffron—for TV) (as Dr. William Hitzig)

1984 Sam’s Son (Landon) (as Sam Orowitz)

1985 Christopher Columbus (Lattuada—for TV) (as Hernando De’Alavera); Embassy (Robert Michael Lewis—for TV); Murder: By Reason of Insanity (Page—for TV) (as Dr. Huffman)

1986 Tough Guys (Kanew) (as Leo B. Little); Rocket to the Moon (Jacobs—for TV) (as Mr. Prince); Something in Common (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Norman Voss)

1987 Nuts (Ritt) (as Dr. Herbert A. Morrison); Hello Actors Studio (doc); Worlds Beyond: The Black Tomb (Jacobs—for TV); The Impossible Spy (Goddard—for TV)

1988 Funny (Ferren)

1989 Rosengarten (The Rose Garden) (Rademakers); Terezin Diary (Weissman and Justman)

1990 The Godfather, Part III (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Don Altobello); The Two Jakes (Nicholson) (as Cotton Weinberger)

1991 Vendetta: Secrets of a Mafia Bride (Bride of Violence: A Family Matter) (Margolin—for TV) (as Frank Latella)

1992 Night and the City (Irwin Winkler) (as Peck); Legacy of Lies (Moshover-Iorg—for TV) (as Moses Zelnick); Mistress (Primus) (as George Lieberhoff); Article 99 (Deutsch) (as Sam Abrams); Teamster Boss: The Jackie Presser Story (Reid—for TV) (as Bill Presser)

1995 Smoke (Rissi)

1996 Two Much (Trueba) (as Sheldon); James Dean: A Portrait (Legon—for TV) (as himself); Clark Gable: Tall, Dark and Handsome (Susan F. Walker—for TV) (as himself); Two Much (Trueba) (as Sheldon); The Associate (Petrie) (as Fallon)

1998 Naked City: Justice with a Bullet (Freilich) (as Deluca)

1999 New York: A Documentary Film (Burns—mini for TV) (as voice); Uninvited (Carlo Gabriel Nero) (as Strasser)

2000 Keeping the Faith (Norton) (as Rabbi Lewis)

---

Publications

- By WALLACH: books

- By WALLACH: articles—
  - “In All Directions,” interview in Films and Filming (London), May 1964.

On WALLACH: articles—

* * *

Eli Wallach started in the theater, returned to it frequently, but achieved his principal identification through film. Wallach began his film career as the sinister sneering con-man lover in the controversial Elia Kazan/Tennessee Williams film Baby Doll. Except for comic presentations later, such as The Tiger Makes Out, Wallach never returned to leading man roles.

His second film, Don Siegel’s The Line-Up, set the mold for Wallach. As the nervous psychotic killer Dancer, Wallach moved with grace, decision, and violence. He became a dancer, a choreographer of death, a man who could not understand why fate kept hitting him in the face. Whether comic or serious, Wallach has continually returned to this image and character, the none-too-bright killer who simply does not have the moral depth to understand why the world wants to destroy him. Whether his identity (and Eastern urban accent) is masked as a Latin bandit, as in The Magnificent Seven, or as an urban Italian soldier in The Victors, Wallach has become the epitome of the incredulous colorful villain. He had one of his best roles in this vein in the epic Sergio Leone spaghetti Western The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly, where he played the final adjectival in the title.

Villainy, however, is but one facet of the actor. Occasionally, in a film such as John Huston’s The Misfits, Wallach has portrayed not a killer of men but a man with a potentially dead soul. The pain behind the unloved eyes can be both contumacious and pitiful. Unfortunately, it is a portrayal of depth that Wallach was seldom allowed to bring to the screen after The Misfits. In more recent films, Wallach’s talents and the character type he has evolved have been limited to a decidedly secondary role, often forcing him to rely on the mannerisms which suggest his past portrayals. In the final Steve McQueen film The Hunter, for example, Wallach played a somewhat sympathetic Jewish bailbondsman on the thin edge of emotionalism, a polished but surface role at best.

Wallach, fortunately, is a character actor whom age will not diminish, nor, it seems, slow down. He appears in almost as many movies now as he did in his heyday. Among the most visible recent examples: as a mafioso in The Godfather, Part III, the final installment of Francis Ford Coppola’s Corleone saga; The Two Jakes, Jack Nicholson’s ill-fated (and ill-advised) sequel to the classic Chinatown; and Irwin Winkler’s updated remake of the forties noir thriller Night in the City. Wallach also joined aging contemporaries Kirk Douglas and Burt Lancaster for the enjoyable septuagenarian caper comedy Tough Guys.

—Stuart M. Kaminsky, updated by John McCarty

WASHINGTON, Denzel

Nationality: American. Born: Mount Vernon, New York, 28 December 1954. Education: Graduated from Fordham University with degrees in drama and journalism; studied one year at the American Conservatory Theater, San Francisco. Family: Married the actress and singer Pauleta Pearson, 1982; four children. Career: Performed with the New York Shakespeare Festival and the American Place Theater; 1981—off-Broadway in A Soldier’s Play and as Malcolm X in When the Chickens Come Home to Roost; theatrical film debut in Carbon Copy; 1982—88—as Dr. Phillip Chandler in TV series St. Elsewhere; 1988—on Broadway in Checkmates; has own production company Mundy Lane Entertainment. Awards: Obie Award, for A Soldier’s Play, 1982; Academy Award, Best Supporting Actor, Golden Globe, for Glory, 1989; Harvard Foundation Award, 1996. Address: PMK Public Relations, 955 South Carillo Drive, Suite 200, Los Angeles, CA 90048, U.S.A. Agent: ICM, 8942 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90211, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1977 Wilma (Greenspan—for TV)
1979 Flesh & Blood (Jud Taylor—for TV)
1981 Carbon Copy (Schultz) (as Roger Porter)
1984 A Soldier’s Story (Jewison) (as Pfc. Melvin Peterson); License to Kill (Jud Taylor—for TV) (as Martin Sawyer)
1986 Power (Lumet) (as Arnold Billings); The George Mckenna Story (Laneeville—for TV) (title role)
1987 Cry Freedom (Attenborough) (as Stephen Biko)
1988 Reunion (short)
1989 For Queen and Country (Stellman) (as Reuben James); Glory (Zwick) (as Trip); The Mighty Quinn (Schenkel) (as Xavier Quinn)
1990 Heart Condition (Parriott) (as Napoleon Stone); Mo’ Better Blues (Spike Lee) (as Bleek Gilliam)
1991 Ricochet (Mulcahy) (as Nick Styles)
1992 Malcolm X (Spike Lee) (title role); Mississippi Masala (Nair) (as Demetrius)
1993 Much Ado about Nothing (Branagh) (as Don Pedro); The Pelican Brief (Pakula) (as Gray Grantham); Philadelphia (Jonathan Demme) (as Joe Miller)
1995 Virtuosity (Brett Leonard) (as Parker Barnes); Devil in a Blue Dress (Carl Franklin) (as Easy Rawlins); Crimson Tide (Tony Scott) (as Lt. Cmdr. Hunter)
1996 Courage under Fire (Zwick) (as Lt. Col. Nathaniel Serling); The Preacher’s Wife (Penny Marshall) (as Dudley)
1998 Fallen (Hoblit) (as John Hobbes); He Got Game (Lee) (as Jake Shuttlesworth); The Siege (Zwick) (as Anthony “Hub” Hubbard)
1999 The Bone Collector (Noyce) (as Lincoln Rhyme); The Hurricane (Jewison) (as Rubin “Hurricane” Carter)
2000 Remembering the Titans (Yakin) (as Coach Boone)

Films as Director:

1999 Finding Fish

Publications

By WASHINGTON: articles—

Interview with Veronica Webb, and photographer Herb Ritts, in Interview (New York), July 1990.

On WASHINGTON: books—

On WASHINGTON: articles—

Clark, John, filmography in Premiere (Boulder), November 1992.

* * *

Denzel Washington has insisted in interviews that he wants to be thought of as an actor, not a black actor. In one sense (which is presumably the sense he intends) this is perfectly understandable: as a star he has everything going for him; he is a gifted and intelligent actor, he has a very strong screen presence, and he is one of the handsomest men in contemporary cinema. This eminence as an actor requires no qualification. In another sense, however, in a less than ideal world still riddled with racism, it is inevitable that his blackness would be an important signifying presence in every film in which he appears.

Consider, for example, one of his less interesting films, Crimson Tide. Take away his blackness and we are left with a perfectly banal, oft-repeated plot formula: intelligent and pragmatic subordinate clashes with his older, die-hard, commanding officer, who does everything by the book and according to the rules, even risking precipitating World War III and universal nuclear devastation. The sole source of dramatic tension is that here a black subordinate defies a white commanding officer—this despite the fact that there is no explicit allusion to Washington’s color. Or take the case of another, even less interesting, film, The Pelican Brief. With a white actor as a leading man, we might find it a refreshing change that hero and heroine do not end up as a couple. With Washington in the lead, their failure to unite in a love relationship must inevitably be attributed to issues of race and the still not uncommon fear of miscegenation, ridiculous, in this day and age, to be sure, but still apparently a matter of box-office concern to conservative and unimaginative producers.

Washington’s presence alone illuminates these films, which give him little to do except go through the paces of a conventionally conceived and written ‘hero’ role. The films in which Washington gives his strongest performances—which also happen to be the best in which he has appeared—all foreground in one way or another the issue of race: Malcolm X, obviously, but also Mississippi Masala, Philadelphia, and Devil in a Blue Dress. Though ultimately unsatisfying (it degenerates into contrivance and predictability), Mississippi Masala is one of the very few Hollywood films to deal in a completely frank, open, and detailed way with an interracial love relationship—though rendered ‘safe’ for white audiences by dramatizing a relationship between an African-American and an Indian woman. Although the action is contained within only a brief time period, we watch Washington mature in the course of the film. At that time (1992) he could still look boyish, exuding an innocent charm, and the scene in the Leopard Lounge when he first dances with Mina (Sarita Choudhury) exhibits his ability to portray subtle shifts of feeling. Using Mina first merely to arouse the jealousy of an old flame who, having ‘made it big,’ has treated him with condescension, he experiences a growing attraction to her, until the old flame is forgotten. A delightful chemistry develops between Washington and Choudhury, and the crucial scene by a lake when they first kiss is played by both with marvelous delicacy. Then, when the relationship is threatened and seemingly destroyed by racial tensions, Washington visibly sheds the boyishness, seeming to age into full manhood before our eyes.

This ability not merely to delineate but to develop a character is perhaps at its most striking in Malcolm X: Washington convincingly shows us Malcolm’s growth from irresponsibility to complete emotional and political maturity. If the film as a whole is somewhat disappointing—Spike Lee allows himself to slip too easily into the conventions and manner of the worthy but finally unexciting biopic—this is no fault of Washington’s; he carries the film securely, and is largely responsible for its limited distinction.

Washington’s two finest films are, arguably, Philadelphia and Devil in a Blue Dress. The relative commercial failure of the latter is a great disappointment: it deserved large audiences, and the studio was apparently planning to follow it with a series of adaptations of the splendid “Easy Rawlins” novels of Walter Mosley, a series which now may never materialize. The film is directed with great intelligence by Carl Franklin, and Washington’s performance as an unusually fallible and vulnerable involuntary “private eye” (we are worlds removed here from Philip Marlowe) is a marvel of integrity and insight.

Tom Hanks got most of the attention (and the Best Actor Oscar) for Philadelphia—understandably, as his character, a gay man dying of AIDS, is the more showy—but Washington’s performance equals his in intelligence and subtlety. Again, Washington traces with surety the character’s emotional and psychological development. Initially hostile to the idea of taking on a gay client, a prey to a casual and unthinking homophobia, he comes to understand the parallels between racial prejudice and antigay prejudice, systematically casting off his homophobia intellectually (if never entirely on the emotional level). We see him, in fact, learning from the Tom Hanks character, whom he originally rejected: learning especially, in the famous “María Callas” scene, the value of the individual life, the essential human creativity expressed in the striving to live, not merely exist or survive.

Since the collapse of the studio system, the situation and stability of the star have been notoriously precarious. Denzel Washington is the only black star so far to achieve so great a preeminence, and to sustain it over more than a decade. One can read his recent career in terms of strategies of security, a traversal of the currently fashionable generic cycles: the “Devil” movie (Fallen), the “Angel” movie (The Preacher’s Wife), the serial killer movie (The Bone Collector), the “Plea for Justice” movie (The Hurricane). Fallen is intriguing for its first half, a considerable letdown when the issues become clear. The Preacher’s Wife, a remake of The Bishop’s Wife with Washington in the Cary Grant role, owes most of its ideas to It’s a Wonderful Life and The Bells of St. Mary’s, whilst carefully avoiding the inner tensions that give those films their continuing interest; it proves mainly that frivolous romantic comedy is not his forte. The Bone Collector (out of Seven, by Silence of the Lambs) is better than its derivative nature suggests, but mainly because of Angelina Jolie. The Hurricane gives Washington a role that displays his strengths, his intensity, his virtuosity, within the simplistic and self-righteous setting of a Norman Jewison “social protest” movie. None of these films extends him significantly.

His return to collaboration with Spike Lee gives him his one chance to shine within a film of real distinction, and he makes the most of it. He Got Game had a disappointing critical reception (everyone seems to expect Lee to remake Do the Right Thing every time he shoots a film). Its insights into the importance of sport, as one of the few areas in which American blacks have been permitted to find success, dignity, and self-respect, are cogently and movingly presented, with Washington (almost unrecognizable in beard and Afro) at his finest in an emotionally demanding role. The complex father-son relationship is handled with great sensitivity and intelligence by director and star.

—Robin Wood

WATSON, Emily

Nationality: British. Born: London, 14 January 1967. Family: Married Jack Waters (an actor), 1995. Education: Studied literature at Bristol University; studied acting at Drama Studio London. Career: Member, Royal Shakespeare Company, 1992–93. Awards: New York Film Critics Circle Award, National Society of Film Critics Award, President Award, Fort Lauderdale International Film Festival, Felix Award, European Film Awards, all best actress, and New Generation Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, all for Breaking Waves, all 1996; Evening Standard British Film Award, Bodil Award, for Best Actress, Bodil Festival, Robert Award, Robert Festival, all for Breaking Waves, all 1997; British Independent Film Award, best actress in a motion picture-drama, for Hilary and Jackie, 1999; ALFS Award, for British Actress of the Year, London Critics Circle Awards, 2000. Agent: International Creative Management, 8942 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90211, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

- 1996 Breaking the Waves (von Trier) (as Bess McNeill)
- 1997 The Mill on the Floss (Theakston) (as Maggie Tulliver); The Boxer (Sheridan) (as Maggie); Metroland (Saville) (as Marion)
- 1998 Hilary and Jackie (Tucker) (as Jackie)
Emily Watson has distinguished herself in a series of low-key, critically-acclaimed performances, displaying an emotional vulnerability rare among today’s leading actresses. As Alex Kucynski wrote, Watson is “someone small whose intellectual and spiritual presence eventually dominates the room. On screen, her face seems as fragile as a blossom; her eyes serene, confused little puddles of clear blue; her cheeks as cartoonishly full as those of a kewpie doll.”

She splashed into the consciousness of English and American audiences in the arthouse hit Breaking the Waves as Bess, a religious Scottish housewife whose husband Jan is paralyzed in an oil-rig accident. Her faith in God already strained, she is astonished when the impotent Jan encourages her to have sex with other men and tell him about her lovemaking.

The film could have gone the route of Indecent Proposal and exploited its plot of illicit sex, but the film was held together by thoughtful direction and Watson’s sensitive onscreen religious devotion, another subject most Hollywood movies handle ham-handedly: her halting prayers to God were heartfelt without coming across as cloying or sentimental. Richard Corliss compared her Oscar-nominated performance here to “Lillian Gish and the other white roses of the silents. . . . She acts volcanically, as any heart does when it pumps with love. She is pure emotion, naked, shameless, unmediated by discretion.”

Watson won her second Academy Award nomination for her role as Jacqueline de Pre, a classical violinist stricken by multiple sclerosis, in the docudrama Hilary and Jackie. Watson and co-star Rachel Griffith turned what could have been a schmaltzy, highbrow version of Brian’s Song into a meditation on how feelings are expressed through art. Internet critic James Bernardelli wrote that Watson, “gives a stunning performance . . . capturing every nuance of a character trapped between genius and madness, whose playing defines her existence. . . . When she plays the cello, her fingers are in the right place, and she effectively mimics her character’s unconventional body movements. Even more remarkable, however, is her ability to produce this depth of emotion without ever straying over the top.”

Her breakthrough role in an American movie was as out-of-work actress Olive Thomas in Cradle Will Rock, whose stage performance in Mark Blitzstein’s radical 1938 musical leads to personal and romantic growth. Robbins’ film was frequently obvious as an agitation, loose in its historical detail and occasionally cheap in its characterizations of the rich and artistic. But the most resonant part of the movie was Watson’s performance. A scene on an unemployment line, as she desperately asks WPA bureaucrat Joan Cusack for a job, sums up the hardship of Depression New York.

Watson is also at the center of the movie’s climax; the opening night of “The Cradle Will Rock” abruptly moved to another theater, she rises from a seat in the SRO house and sings her introduction (“Moll’s Song”), defying the government censors as well as her actor’s union. Her costars join her one by one to perform the musical without sets or costumes. Her quiet, subtle performance (she did her own singing, as well) captured the power of theater and art to cause personal change, more persuasively than the whole film’s attempt to show art’s political effect.

Watson’s next film role was in the highly-anticipated Angela’s Ashes, the movie version of Frank McCourt’s 1996 best-selling autobiography about his Irish-American childhood. Again in a salt-of-the-earth role, Watson effectively personifies the title character, whom millions of readers had already pictured in their minds. Eschewing excessive emotion, she is truly effective in one traumatic scene when her adolescent son Frank slaps her in the face. Again, her performance anchors a film directed by a Hollywood name out of his element.

With two Oscar nominations under her belt before reaching age 35, Watson is trying to shake her wobegone screen image in the 2000 film Trixie, playing an American private eye. Perhaps as with her countrywomen Emma Thompson and Helena Bonham Carter, she will achieve wider popularity doing more openly enviable characters.

—Andrew Milner

WAYNE, John

John Wayne (left) with Kim Darby in True Grit

Films as Actor:

(unccredited)

1926 Brown of Harvard (Conway)
1927 The Drop Kick (Glitter) (Webb)
1928 Mother Machree (Ford); Hangman’s House (Ford) (as spectator at horse race)
1929 Salute (Ford and David Butler) (as football player)

(as Duke Morrison)

1929 Words and Music (Tinling) (as Pete Donahue)
1930 Men without Women (Ford) (bit role); A Rough Romance (Erickson) (bit role); Cheer Up and Smile (Lanfield) (bit role)
1931 The Big Trail (Walsh) (as Breck Coleman); Girls Demand Excitement (Feltz) (as Peter Brooks); Three Girls Lost (Lanfield) (as Gordon Wales); Men Are Like That (Arizona) (Seitz) (as Lt. Bob Denton); Range Feud (Lederman) (as Clint Turner); Maker of Men (Sedgwick) (as Dusty); The Deceiver (King) (as corpse)
1932 Haunted Gold (Wright) (as John Mason); Shadow of the Eagle (Beebe—serial) (as Craig McCoy); The Hurricane Express (Schaefer and McGowan—serial) (as Larry Baker); Texas Cyclone (Lederman) (as Steve Pickett); Lady and Gent (The Challenger) (Roberts) (as Buzz Kinney); Two-Fisted Law (Lederman) (as Duke); Ride Him Cowboy (The Hawk) (Fred Allen) (as John Drury); The Voice of Hollywood No. 13 (D’Agostino—short) (as narrator); The Big Stampede (Wright) (as John Steele); The Hollywood Handicap (Lamont—short) (as himself); Station S-T-A-R (short)
1933 The Telegraph Trail (Wright) (as John Trent); Central Airport (Wellman) (bit role); His Private Secretary (Whitman) (as Dick Wallace); Somewhere in Sonora (Wright) (as John Wayne)
1934 West of the Divide (Bradbury) (as Ted Hayden); The Lucky Texan (Bradbury) (as Jerry Mason); Blue Steel (Bradbury) (as John Carruthers); The Man from Utah (Bradbury) (as John Weston); Randy Rides Alone (Fraser) (title role); The Star Packer (Bradbury) (as John Travers); The Trail Beyond (Bradbury) (as Rod Drew); ’Neath the Arizona Skies (Fraser) (as Chris Morrell); The Lawless Frontier (Bradbury) (as John Tobin)

1935 Texas Terror (Bradbury) (as John Higgins); Rainbow Valley (Bradbury) (as John Martin); Paradise Canyon (Pierson) (as John Wyatt); The Dawn Rider (Bradbury) (as John Mason); Westward Ho (Bradbury) (as John Wyatt); The Desert Trail (Lewis) (as John Scott); The New Frontier (Pierson) (as John Dawson); The Lawless Range (Bradbury) (as John Middleton)

1936 The Lawless Nineties (Kane) (as John Tipton); King of the Pecos (Kane) (as John Clayborn); The Oregon Trail (Pembroke) (as Captain John Delmont); Winds of the Wasteland (Bishop); The Sea Spoilers (Strayer) (as Bob Randall); The Lonely Trail (Kane) (as John); Conflict (Howard) (as Pat)

1937 California Straight Ahead (Lubin) (as Biff Smith); I Cover the War (Lubin) (as Bob Adams); Idol of the Crowds (Lubin) (as Johnny Hanson); Adventure’s End (Lubin) (as Duke Slade)

1938 Born to the West (Hell Town) (Barton) (as Dare Rudd); Pals of the Saddle (Brooke) (as Stony Brooke); Overland Stage Raiders (Sherman) (as Stony Brooke); Santa Fe Stampede (Sherman) (as Stony Brooke); Red River Range (Sherman) (as Stony Brooke)

1939 Stagecoach (Ford) (as the Ringo Kid); The Night Raiders (Sherman) (as Stony Brooke); Three Texas Steers (Danger Rides the Range) (Sherman) (as Stony Brooke); Wyoming Outlaw (Sherman) (as Stony Brooke); New Frontier (Frontier Horizon) (Sherman) (as Stony Brooke); Allegheny Uprising (The First Rebel) (Seiter) (as John Smith)

1940 The Dark Command (Walsh) (as Bob Seton); Three Faces West (The Refugee) (Vorhaus) (as John Phillips); The Long Voyage Home (Ford) (as Ole Oleson); Seven Sinners (Garnett) (as Lt. Dan Brent); Melody Ranch (Santley)

1941 A Man Betrayed (Citadel of Crime; Wheel of Fortune) (Auer) (as Lynn Hollister); Lady from Louisiana (Vorhaus) (as John Reynolds); The Shepherd of the Hills (Hathaway) (as Young Matt Mathews); Lady for a Night (as Jack Morgan)

1942 Reap the Wild Wind (DeMille) (as Captain Jack Stewart); The Spoilers (Enright) (as Roy Glennister); In Old California (McGann) (as Tom Craig); Flying Tigers (Miller) (as Jim Gordon); Reunion in France (Reunion; Mademoiselle France) (Dassin) (as Pat Talbot); Pittsburgh (Seiler) (as Charles “Pittsburgh” Markham)
1969 True Grit (Hathaway) (as “Rooster” Cogburn); The Undefeated (McLaglen) (as Colonel John Thomas)
1970 Chisum (McLaglen) (title role); Rio Lobo (Hawks) (as Cord McNally); Chesty: A Tribute to a Legend (Ford—doc) (as narrator)
1971 Big Jake (Sherman) (as Jacob McCandles); Directed by John Ford (Bogdanovich—doc)
1972 The Cowboys (Rydel) (as Will Anderson); Cancel My Reservation (Bogart) (as himself)
1973 The Train Robbers (Kennedy) (as Lane); Cahill, United States Marshal (Cahill) (McLaglen) (title role)
1974 McQ (John Sturges) (title role)
1975 Brannigan (Hickox) (title role); Rooster Cogburn (Rooster Cogburn and the Lady) (Miller) (title role)
1976 The Shootist (Siegel) (as John Books)

Films as Actor and Director:

1960 The Alamo (as Colonel David Crockett)
1968 The Green Berets (as Colonel Mike Kirby, co-d)

Publications

By WAYNE: articles—

“John Wayne Talks Tough,” by Joe McInery, in Film Comment (New York), September 1972.
“Looking Back,” interview with Scott Eyman, in Focus on Film (London), Spring 1975.

On WAYNE: books—

Clark, Donald, John Wayne’s “The Alamo”: The Making of the Epic Film, Carol Publishing Group, 1995.
Fagen, Herb, Duke, We’re Glad We Knew You: John Wayne’s Friends & Colleagues Remember His Remarkable Life, Carol Publishing Group, 1998.

On WAYNE: articles—

Special issue of Film Heritage (New York), Summer 1975.
Stars (Mariembourg), no. 27, 1996.
During his last years John Wayne’s image hardened and became simplified: the movie star became either a national institution or an object of ridicule and vilification (depending upon one’s political viewpoint). Wayne himself clearly encouraged this transformation, the potential for which was always there in his image, at least from the 1950s on. His decision to direct and star in The Green Berets marks a crucial point of transition, confirmed by his subsequent political pronouncements and the tendency to choose self-mythologizing roles. This development has had the unfortunate effect of obscuring for many people the complexities of the Wayne persona and the extremely interesting uses to which it was put by two of Hollywood’s greatest directors, John Ford and Howard Hawks.

Ford is reported as saying, after seeing Red River, that he had never realized that Wayne could act. The operative criterion of acting here appears to be the hackneyed one of versatility, the ability to “become” different characters. If a limited actor, Wayne was always, from his first major role in Stagecoach, an extremely capable performer: the scenes that develop his relationship with Claire Trevor are played with considerable delicacy and sensitivity. Though the components of the Wayne persona were already clearly present there in The Long Voyage Home, Ford did not make full use of them until after World War II, when the dominant tone of his work modulated from idealism (associated with Henry Fonda) to disillusionment and retreat into stoicism. Through the three films of the “cavalry trilogy” (Fort Apache, She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, and Rio Grande) the Wayne persona reaches full expression. The makings of the later “national institution” are all there—conservatism, militarism, adherence to tradition, emphasis on patriotic duty—but they are held within a complex thematic network in which the sustaining of faith in American civilization becomes increasingly problematic, giving way to stoical resignation. Significantly, Ford also used Wayne centrally in films in which he abandons American civilization altogether, for a retreat either into the Irish past (The Quiet Man) or to a South Seas never-never land (Donovan’s Reef). Ford’s ultimate use of Wayne, however, was as the incarnation of the lost values of a mythical Old West, rendered obsolete by the civilization it helped build, in The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance.

Hawks never showed much interest in the established social order except as something to escape from, and Wayne is less central to his work than he is to Ford’s. Red River, while in many ways impressive, suffers from Hawks’s insufficient grasp of the material’s moral and political implications, to which Wayne’s Thomas Dunson is central. Interestingly, in relation to Wayne’s later career, the character develops marked connotations of fascism which the film tries to cope with but finally evades. Hawks’s finest use of Wayne is undoubtedly in Rio Bravo: here the stoic, self-reliance, and assumption of moral infallibility at once achieve their most complete expression and are subjected to a subtle criticism that defines their limitations. The infallible Wayne is alternately juxtaposed with the all-too-fallible Dean Martin and confronted with the amorous but ironic Angie Dickinson. Both relationships are being used by Hawks to probe, question, and affectionately satirize the Wayne image, exposing its human deficiencies while reaffirming its strength.

It is with Hawks also—in El Dorado and Rio Lobo—that Wayne enters the last phase of his career, where the central concern becomes age and failing powers. The Cowboys was not, as some asserted, the first film in which Wayne died (they forget, for example, Reap the Wild Wind, Sands of Iwo Jima, and, far more reprehensibly, Liberty Valance), but it is the first of his major roles in which he was killed face-to-face by the bad guy. Even more pertinent is The Shootist, in which he plays an aging gunfighter who is dying of cancer, the disease against which he himself struggled throughout this late period. If The Cowboys (in which Wayne explicitly becomes a role model for the young of America) celebrates the “national institution,” even at this stage of his career where the image is at its most petrified it still carries connotations—pain, loss, failure, stoical endurance—which makes it less simple than the popular view of “hawk” patriarch suggests.

Perhaps due to Wayne’s larger-than-life iconography as the quintessential American hero, he is as popular with audiences today as he was during his lifetime. His films are never off the television screen and remain among the fastest sellers in video stores. His directorial debut, The Alamo, a personal project in which he also starred, has been restored to its original director’s cut length after 30 years during which only the abbreviated version released to theaters by United Artists was available—and reissued on tape and laser disc to the lucrative collector’s market in a format that retained the film’s wide-screen grandeur. In the wake of its commercial success, two of Wayne’s rowdiest and most popular non-Ford and non-Hawks Westerns, McLintock and Honda, have finally found their way to television and video stores after many years of hibernation, as well.

—Robin Wood, updated by John McCarty

WEAVER, Sigourney

Nationality: American. Born: Susan Alexander Weaver in New York, 8 October 1949; daughter of the former president of NBC Sylvester “Pat” Weaver. Education: Attended Stanford University, B.A.; Yale University School of Drama, M.F.A. Family: Married the theater director Jim Simpson, 1984, one daughter: Charlotte. Career: 1974—stage debut on Broadway in The Constant Wife; continues as stage performer; 1976—featured film debut in Madman; 1977—walk-on part in Annie Hall. Awards: Academy of Science Fiction, Horror, and Fantasy Films Saturn Award, for Aliens, 1987; Golden Globe for Best Performance by an Actress in a Motion Picture-Drama, for Gorillas in the Mist, 1988; Golden Globe for Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role in a Motion Picture, for Working Girl, 1988; British Academy Award (BAFTA) for Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role, for The Ice Storm, 1998; Hasting Pudding Theatricals Woman of the Year, 1998. Agent: Sam Cohn, ICM, 40 West 57th Street, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1976 Madman (Cohen)
1977 Annie Hall (Woody Allen) (as Alvy’s date outside theater)
Sigourney Weaver has become a feminist icon in the eighties and nineties largely because of the coherence of her determined and tremendously self-reliant screen persona. Although she was memorably paired with Mel Gibson in a sultry turn in The Year of Living Dangerously, and has been variously partnered on the screen with Bill Murray, Michael Caine, Bryan Brown, and Charles Dance, Weaver has retained an air of independence about her in even her romantic roles. She is most usually seen on her own, struggling against tremendous threats to her own life and to those under her protection (often animals or small children). Strikingly, however, Weaver has resisted being typecast as watchful mothers or as heroic career women; indeed, she has had a screen career of remarkable variety.

Weaver’s strong screen persona owes much to her striking physical appearance. Her great height and striking beauty, coupled with her forceful jawline, have lent her a tremendously regal air. This air is itself perhaps intensified by Weaver’s background. Like the earlier Hollywood star she most evokes, Katharine Hepburn, Weaver enjoyed an especially patrician upbringing: the daughter of former NBC... president Sylvester “Pat” Weaver, she attended Stanford for her undergraduate degree and the Yale Drama School for her M.F.A. Weaver’s air of hauteur has often led her to be cast in somewhat aristocratic parts, including those of an American First Lady in Dave and of Queen Isabella in 1492: The Conquest of Paradise. The latter role was practically a cameo; yet so entertaining were Weaver’s subtly arch and bemused reactions to Gérard Depardieu’s wranglings for patronage that she almost took one’s mind off the endless torchlight processions and overwrought debates over navigation in the film’s opening half.

Yet the greatest asset to Weaver’s persona has been her sheer physicality on the screen. Almost alone among actresses in the last 25 years, Weaver has enjoyed a partial career as an eminently bankable action-adventure hero. In Ridley Scott’s Alien, Weaver’s Second Officer Ripley, her first sizable role in a major film, seized control not only of the space frigate Nostromo but also of the audience’s attention by sheer dint of her physical authority. As the film progresses, the director effectively counterpoints Weaver’s levelheadedness with Veronica Cartwright’s mounting hysteria, and her humane compassion with Ian Holm’s lethal coldness. As a role, Ripley, in the first Alien film might seem to be on paper scarcely more interesting than a stalked teenager in a run-of-the-mill horror film; yet Weaver so effectively allowed her audience to empathize with her that the role made her a star. She stood alone among other action stars of the decade, such as Schwarzenegger, Stallone, and Willis, not only because of her gender but also because of her disciplined training and emotional range. Weaver could not only seem effective discharging a flamethrower or uttering wry wisecracks but could also memorably evoke pathos, loneliness, and empathy. James Cameron capitalized on this to tremendous effect in Aliens, the second film in the series, by emphasizing Weaver’s more maternal aspects, giving her a young child to protect as well as an evil counterpart in the queen alien. Who would have thought that the Space Parasites would become series figures like Charlie Chan or Boston Blackie, albeit to diminishing box office returns in the nineties?

Aside from Ripley and Dr. Helen Hudson in Copycat, Weaver has not been cast to date in any other true action roles—due in large part, one suspects, to the misogynistic unwillingness of producers and studio executives to recognize her bankability as an adventure heroine. Yet many of her best screen moments have allowed her to display her physical talents. Weaver is never better on the screen than when she is in motion: shoving a car off a cliff in Death and the Maiden or roughhousing with one of the title animals in Galaxy Quest, her second film in the series, by emphasizing Weaver’s more maternal aspects, giving her child another opportunity to protect as well as an evil counterpart in the queen alien. Who would have thought that the Space Parasites would become series figures like Charlie Chan or Boston Blackie, albeit to diminishing box office returns in the nineties?

Weaver began her stage career out of drama school in the seventies performing in the frenzied comedies of her friend and Yale ex-classmate Christopher Durang. Although the eighties and nineties have not been the most fortuitous period in film history for women’s comic roles, Weaver has made the most of those that have come her way. The best of these was in Working Girl, where Weaver took her trademark authority and determination to maniacal extremes for hilarious effect. Whether barking orders at Melanie Griffith or schussing down ski slopes with berserk self-confidence, Weaver so thoroughly dominates the film that it seems almost incredible today that Working Girl could have made Melanie Griffith a star.

In recent years, Weaver has worked to extend her range by accepting some roles (Death and The Maiden, Gorillas in the Mist) that have accentuated her historic vulnerabilities rather than her strengths. Unlike Glenn Close or Jessica Lange, she doesn’t wear hysteria well. Bravely tackling other uncharacteristic roles, she shows astonishing range. In the otherwise unremarkable serial killer round-robin, Copycat, Weaver acts rings around her monotonous co-star and hammy antagonists by portraying her character’s agoraphobia as an act of aggression against herself. Besieged by a manipulative sociopath, Weaver’s psychiatrist deteriorates before our eyes as the maniac makes her rue the day she ever dabbled in profiling. Even more remarkable is her star turn in the Cable TV film, Snow White, in which she abandons herself to this Freudian fairy tale’s rueful implications while somehow drawing inadvertent sympathy for a monstrous stepmother.

Unlike her contemporaries, she doesn’t often settle for leading lady status opposite a male box office titan. Unjustly overlooked for a supporting actress nomination for The Ice Storm, Weaver’s suburban matron seems to be breaking apart from psychological brittleness. Wearing her trendy outfits as if they were strait-jackets, she interprets this role of a tightly wound 1970s swinger by exposing her character’s lacquered self-loathing. Just as revelatory is her bravura performance in A Map of the World, in which she refuses to gloss over her recalcitrant character’s self-destructive folly during the trainings that would have forced Job to throw in the towel. Unlike other actresses who wink at us to suggest they’re only playing at being wicked, Weaver unapologetically flings her work in your face.

Making the most of the skimpy opportunities offered women her age, Weaver should seek another action role that could shore up her box office now that the munching Aliens have lost their bite. (Of course, the pitfalls of becoming a female action star have been demonstrated by Meryl Streep in The River Wild and Geena Davis in Cutthroat Island.) Unlike them, she has already proven her prowess in a male-dominated field.

She also has the razor-sharp timing of the screwball goddesses of yesteryear, but comedies that aren’t built around Julia Roberts are in short supply. Resourcefully, she poked fun at her own cosmic past by kicking up her gravity boots in Galaxy Quest, a spoof about sci-fi TV stars thrust into an actual galactic fracas. In a tiny role in Jeffrey, her perspicacious acting satirizes modern-day priestesses like Marianne Williams. Simultaneously droll and frightening, Weaver encapsulates the smug self-infatuation of self-help gurus preying on the gullible. It’s a tour de force that confirms her readiness for a dazzling, sizeable comic role. As some stars age, we dread the choices forced upon them by exigent box office; with Weaver, we look forward to her continued courage under fire in a selection of genres.

—Jay Dickson, updated by Robert J. Pardi

WEBB, Clifton

member of the Aborn Opera Company; debut in Mignon; 1913—Broadway debut as dancer in The Purple Road; 1914—team with Mae Murray for engagement at Palace Theatre, then a succession of successful plays in New York as dancer and actor, including Sunny, 1925, As Thousands Cheer, 1933, The Man Who Came to Dinner on tour, 1931, and Blithe Spirit, 1941; 1920—film debut in Polly with a Past; 1921—London stage debut in Fun at the Fair; 1923—performed with the Dolly Sisters in Paris; 1948—first of several films featuring the character Mr. Belvedere, Sitting Pretty. Died: 13 October 1966.

Films as Actor:

1920 Polly with a Past (de Cordova)
1924 Let No Man Put Asunder (Blackton)
1925 The Heart of a Siren (Rosen) (as Maxim); New Toys (Robertson)
1930 The Still Alarm (short)
1944 Laura (Preminger and Mamoulian) (as Waldo Lydecker)
1946 The Dark Corner (Hathaway) (as Hardy Cathcart); The Razor’s Edge (Goulding) (as Elliott Templeton)
1948 Sitting Pretty (Walter Lang) (as Lynn Belvedere)
1949 Mr. Belvedere Goes to College (Nugent) (title role)
1950 Cheaper by the Dozen (Walter Lang) (as Frank Gilbert); For Heaven’s Sake (Seaton) (as Charles)
1951 Mr. Belvedere Rings the Bell (Koster) (title role); Elopement (Koster) (as Howard Osborne)
1952 Dreamboat (Binyon) (as Thirton Sayre); Stars and Stripes Forever (Koster) (as John Philip Sousa)
1953 Titanic (Negulesco) (as Robert Sturges); Mister Scoutmaster (Levin) (as Robert Jordan)
1954 Three Coins in the Fountain (Negulesco) (as Shadwell); Woman’s World (Negulesco) (as Gifford)
1956 The Man Who Never Was (Neame) (as Commander Ewen Montagu)
1957 Boy on a Dolphin (Negulesco) (as Victor Parmalee)
1959 The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker (Levin) (title role); Holiday for Lovers (Levin) (as Robert Dean)
1962 Satan Never Sleeps (The Devil Never Sleeps; Flight from Terror) (McCary) (as Father Bovard)

Publications

On WEBB: book—

On WEBB: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.

Clifton Webb’s career of rather secondary parts in motion pictures obscures his brilliant Broadway career as a singer and dancer. But that was long before his cinema debut and he was never featured as a musical comedy personality in films.

Hollywood found him most useful, however, in bitchy, acerbic roles, most notably that of the columnist Waldo Lydecker in Otto Preminger’s Laura. His screen career was hardly distinguished, but it was a steady one, and he had occasional strong roles such as the automobile executive in Woman’s World where he played an excellent foil to the ambitious wives of candidates for an automobile company’s vice presidency. But it was the character he played in Laura that typecast him, and that gave birth to such pictures as Sitting Pretty and the Mr. Belvedere series, which capitalized on his role in it.

Webb’s film career, coming as it did on the heels of a long stage career, was diminished only by old age. His last film was in Leo McCarey’s film, Satan Never Sleeps.

—Joseph Archins

WEGENER, Paul

Films as Actor:

1913 Der Student von Parag (Rye) (as Balduin, + co-sc)
1914 Die Verfuhrene (Geheimnisse des Blutes) (Rye); Die Rache des Blutes
1915 Peter Schlemihl (+ co-sc)
1918 Dornroschen (Leni); Welt ohne Waffen (doc); Der Galeerensträffing (Gliese) (+ sc)
1919 Nachtgestalten
1920 Medea (Lubitsch); Steuermann Holck (Wolff); Die Geliebte Roswolskys (Basch); Samurun (One Arabian Night) (Lubitsch) (as the Sheik)
1921 Der verlorene Schatten (The Lost Shadow) (Gliese) (as the magician, + sc); Flammende Völker (Reinert)
1922 Das Liebensnest (Dworsky and Walther-Fein); Lukrezia Borgia (Oswald); Monna Vanna (Eichberg) (as Guido Gurlino); Sterbende Völker (Popoli Morituri) (Reinert); Das Weib des Pharao (Lubitsch) (as King of the Ethiopians)
1923 Vanina, oder die Galgenhochzeit (von Gerlach) (as the father); SOS: Die Insel der Tränen (Mendes)
1924 Der Schatz der Gesteine Jakobsen (Walther-Fein)
1925 Der Mann aus dem Jenseits (Noa)
1926 Dagfin (May)
1927  Alraune (Unholy Love) (Galeen); Arme Kleine Sif (Bergen); Glanz und Elend der Kurtisanen (Survival) (Noa) (as Collin); Ramper, der Tiersch (The Strange Case of Captain Ramper) (Reichmann) (title role); Sveni (Gund and Righelli) (title role); Die Weber (The Weavers) (Zelink); Le Magicien (The Magician) (Ingram) (as Dr. Haddo)

1930  Fundvogel (Hoffman-Harnisch)

1932  Marschall Vorwärts (Paul); Das Geheimnis um Johann Orth (Wolff); Unheimliche Geschichten (The Living Dead) (Oswald) (as the mad inventor)

1933  Inge und die Millionen (Engel); Hans Westmar (Horst Wessel) (Wenzler) (as Russian Commissar)

1935  Der Mann mir der Pranke (van der Noss); ... nur ein Komödiant (Engel)

1936  Ein Liebesroman im Hause Hapsburg (Wolff) (as Russian Ambassador)

1938  In geheimer Mission (von Alten); Stärker al die Liebe (Stranger Than Love) (Stöchel); Das unsterbliche Herz (Harlan)

1939  Das Recht auf Liebe (The Right to Love) (Stochel); Das unsterbliche Herz (Harlan)

1940  Zwielicht (van der Noss); Das Mädchen von Fanö (Schweikart); Mein Leben für Irland (Kimmich)

1942  Diesel (Lamprecht); Der grosse König (Harlan); Hochzeit auf Bärenhof (Froelich)

1943  Wenn die Sonne wieder scheint (Barlog)

1944  Zwischen Nacht und Morgen (Augen der Liebe) (Braun); Seinerzeit zu meiner Zeit (Barlog); Der Fall Molander (Pabst)

1945  Dr. Phil Döderlein (Klinger); Tierarzt Dr. Vlimmen (Barlog); Kohlberg (Harlan)

1949  Der grosse Mandarin (Stroux)

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1914  Die Augen des Ole Brandis (co-d, + ro); Evintrude: Die Geschichte eines Abenteurers (co-d, + ro); Der Golem (co-d, + title role)

1916  Rübezahls Hochzeit (+ ro); Der Rattenfänger von Hamlen (+ ro); Der Yogh (ro)

1917  Der Golem und die Tänzerin (+ title role); Hans Tratz in Schlaraffenland (+ title role)

1918  Der fremde Fürst (+ ro)

1920  Der Golem, wie er in die Welt kam (+ title role)

1922  Herzog Ferrantes Ende (+ title role)

1923  Lehende Buddha (pr, ro)

1934  Die Freundin eines grossen Mannes; Ein Mann will nach Deutschland
1936  August der Starke; Die Stunde der Versuchung; Moskauer Shanghai

1937  Krach und Glück um Künstmann; Unter Ausschluss der Öffentlichkeit

Publications

On WEGENER: books—

Möller, Kai, Paul Wegener, Hamburg, 1954.
Staehlin Saavedra, Carlos Maria, Wegener, el doble y el golem, Valladolid, 1978.

On WEGENER: article—

* * *

‘The essence of this strongly built, muscle-hard fellow is a straddling permanent manliness. Such a chap, who lives and lets live; in no way tender, yet basically good-natured; hot-tempered, yet also sly, a part Odysseus, but also a part Achilles—in short, a complete fellow.’ This description by Paul Wegener’s contemporary Julius Bab captures a man whose physical presence is as commanding on the screen as it must have been on stage. Wegener’s highly successful stage acting career spanned over 50 years; his work in film spanned 35 years and many roles as authority figures or characters with an abnormal bent. Although he never directed on the stage, Wegener’s involvement in cinema went well beyond acting to include directing.

Wegener’s first film, Babi, captures a man whose physical presence is as commanding on the screen as it must have been on stage. Wegener’s highly successful stage acting career spanned over 50 years; his work in film spanned 35 years and many roles as authority figures or characters with an abnormal bent. Although he never directed on the stage, Wegener’s involvement in cinema went well beyond acting to include directing and writing. He explained his attraction to film as such: ‘I did not go into film as an actor; the problem of this new art form interested me in general. The mysterious possibilities of the camera kindled my fantasies. I conceived the fable Der Student von Prag because here was the possibility of acting opposite myself.’

On the stage Wegener was known for playing complex characters (Mephisto, Danton, Nathan der Weise); he then realized howfilmic devices could be used to further the development of multifaceted characters, or in transforming characters. Wegener’s first film, Der Student von Prag, suggests the essence of the great actor’s contribution to film history: his fascination with the supernatural and the doppelgänger (the evil double of oneself), and the potential inherent in film to exploit both. Der Student von Prag is the story of a poor student who makes a Faustian pact with a Satanic magician. The devil figure takes on the student’s mirror reflection as his part of the deal—an image that would become familiar as the Doppelgänger in many films to follow. The use of special effects combined with Wegener playing both roles created a haunting depiction of the evil lurking within one—a Romantic vision that Wegener brought forcefully to the screen.

Wegener was responsible for carrying on the German tradition of adult fairy tales, as perfected in E. T. A. Hoffmann’s novellas, by transposing them to film. Wegener created and acted in a series of fairy-tale films early in his film career, including Der Student von Prag, Riebezahl Hochzeit, Der Yogi (in which he once again played two roles), and Der Rattenfänger von Hameln. Wegener also directed two versions of Der Golem. In the second, Der Golem, wie er in die Welt kam, Wegener plays a clay giant brought to life, who is capable of unleashing powerful violence or gentle kindness. The role of the Golem offered Wegener the perfect opportunity to demonstrate his style of ‘discreet acting.’ He exercised restraint in physical movement, letting his face be the tool of expression. One of Wegener’s favorite films was Lebende Buddha, in which he plays the role of Buddha. Indeed, Wegener’s demeanor was not unlike that of the god’s eternal smile; Wegener’s face was an embodiment of expressiveness kept in check.

Wegener continued to act until early 1948, although his passion and greatest creative output occurred in the early films. His commanding presence extended to the total conception and production of these early films, and was not confined to the dramatic interpretation of his roles.

—Virginia Keller

WELD, Tuesday

Films as Actress:

1956 Rock, Rock, Rock (Price) (as Dori); The Wrong Man (Hitchcock) (as giggly girl)
1958 Rally round the Flag, Boys! (McCary) (as Comfort Goodpasture)
1959 The Five Pennies (Shavelson) (as Dorothy Nichols, age 12 to 14)
1960 Because They’re Young (Wendkos) (as Anne); High Time (Edwards) (as Joy Elder); Sex Kittens Go to College (Beauty and the Robot) (Zagsmith) (as Jody)
1961 The Private Lives of Adam and Eve (Zagsmith and Rooney) (as Vangie Harper); Return to Peyton Place (Ferrer) (as Selena Cross); Wild in the Country (Dunne) (as Noreen); Bachelor Flat (Tashlin) (as Libby Bushmill)
1963 Soldier in the Rain (Nelson) (as Bobby Jo Pepperdine)
1965 The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison) (as Christian); I’ll Take Sweden (de Cordova) (as JoJo Holcomb)
1966 Lord Love a Duck (Axelrod) (as Barbara Ann Greene)
1968 Pretty Poison (Black) (as Sue Ann Stepanek)
1970 I Walk the Line (Frankenheimer) (as Alma McCain)
1971 A Safe Place (Jaglom) (as Susan/Noah)
1972 Play It as It Lays (Ferry) (as Maria Wyeth)
1974 Reflections of Murder (Badham—for TV) (as Vicky)
1976 F. Scott Fitzgerald in Hollywood (Page—for TV)
1978 Who’ll Stop the Rain (The Dog Soldiers) (Reisz) (as Marge Converse); A Question of Guilt (Robert Butler—for TV)
1980 Mother and Daughter: The Loving War (Brinckerhoff—for TV); Serial (Persky) (as Kate)
1981 Madame X (Miller—for TV) (title role/Holly Richardson); Thief (Violent Streets) (Michael Mann) (as Jessie)
1982 Author! Author! (Hiller) (as Gloria); The Rainmaker (TV) (as Lizzie)
1983 The Winter of Our Discontent (Hussein—for TV)
1984 Once upon a Time in America (Leone) (as Carol); Scorned and Swindled (Wendkos—for TV)
1986 Circle of Violence: A Family Drama (David Greene—for TV) (as Georgia Benfield); Something in Common (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Shelly Grant)
1988 Heartbreak Hotel (Columbus) (as Marie Wolfe)
1993 Falling Down (reportedly her first commercially successful film). Weld’s uncredited
1996 Feeling Minnesota (Baigleman) (as Mrs. Prendergast)

Publications

By WELD: articles—

“This Stormy Tuesday,’’ interview with Lucy Saroyan, in Interview (New York), October 1988.
Interview with Henry Cabot Beck, in Interview (New York), March 1993.

On WELD: books—

On WELD: articles—

Premiere (Boulder), March 1996.
Queenan, J., “All’s Well that Ends Weld,’’ in Movieline (Escondido), June 1996.

* * *

Forthy years into her career, Tuesday Weld still percolates through American pop culture. A 1995 biography is devoted to her, and a worldwide web site; she will soon appear in the off-mainstream Feeling Minnesota, her first movie since 1993’s Falling Down (reportedly her first commercially successful film). Weld’s uncredited picture adorns the cover of rock musician Matthew Sweet’s 1991 Girlfriend album, epitomizing her continued if obscure relevance—but also suggesting that her signature star qualities of self-determining sexuality, insouciance, and nearly self-destructive wastefulness (philosophically grounded in antimaternalism as it may be) fit the rock ’n roll era’s patterns more than classical Hollywood’s.

As a post-studio system actress, Weld is sadly Hollywood-typical in that her talents have far outmatched her opportunities. Trash- and sex-associated, she distinguishes (and attracts cult status to) herself with the rock-star-like air of profigliacy she assumes: “Do you think I want a success?... I like the particular position I’ve been in all these years, with people wanting to save me from the awful films I’ve been in.” There is an abstractedness, always a lot left missing, in her characterizations, that in one way reflects the submerged place where new Hollywood fixed females, especially in the 1970s—but in another way fights against it, by revealing the eeriness and lostness of women unable to make their desires real, heard, or even clear to themselves. A chillingly transposed example occurs at the end of I Walk the Line when Gregory Peck takes on Weld’s characteristic wide-eyed, blank but brimming expression after she has (probably) mortally wounded him, having (maybe) misled him about her true motivations for their affair. Interestingly, in this as in many of Weld’s films, rock music gets used to fill in some of the gaps her physical choices (and the situations and dialogue given to her) leave.

Weld began her film career at 13, a former child model driven to alcohol and nearly suicide. For five years she played “sex kitten” variations: in movies, on television (with dozens of episodes throughout the 1960s), and in the press, for which she refused to either dress or comment politely while dating publicly and prolifically. In the mid-1960s she found meatier film roles, usually as someone’s beautiful but jumbled girlfriend; by the early 1970s, she went deeper into such cracked-surface glamour girls with leads in Play It as It Lays and Reflections of Murder. Many of her feature and television films from 1977 to 1984 ground her “neurotic” type (quite literally) deadly in its feminist-influenced historical context. Weld’s acting, however, insistently animates the subjectivities of her narratively unbalanced and decentedriven women: in her Oscar-nominated work in Looking for Mr. Goodbar and in Thief especially, she dramatically modulates her vocal pitch and volume and catches her characters’ flickering meanings simply by tilting her head or turning her upper body. She thereby demonstrates that, in the principles of modern screen acting, she is highly skilled if—characteristically—powerfully unschooled (she reports that the Actors Studio was too conventional for her; other sources claim that her application was rejected because she was too young).

—Susan Knobloch

WELLES, Orson

Vaudeville Circuit; 1941—played title role in and directed Citizen Kane; 1940s—returned to radio and theater, toured military bases with his magic show, “Mercy Wonder Show,” continued to star in his own productions, and began appearing in films directed by others; 1949—moved to Europe; 1955—two series for BBC TV, The Orson Welles Sketchbook and The World with Orson Welles; 1950s and 1960s—starred in his own films, appeared in films directed by others, appeared on TV and in the theater; 1970—moved back to America; 1970s and 1980s—appeared in films, on TV, and in commercials, including role as narrator for TV mini-series Shogun, 1980, and occasional role as voice of Robin Masters in TV series Magnum P.I., 1981—85. Awards: Academy Award, Best Screenplay, for Citizen Kane, 1941; 20th Anniversary Tribute, Cannes Film Festival, 1966; Honorary Oscar, for “superlative and distinguished service in the making of motion pictures,” 1970; inducted into the French Legion of Honor, 1972; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1975; Los Angeles Film Critics Career Achievement Award, 1978; inducted into the Radio Hall of Fame, 1979; Fellowship of the British Film Institute, 1983; D. W. Griffith Award, Directors Guild of America, 1984. Died: Of heart attack, in Hollywood, 10 October 1985.

Films as Actor:

1943 Jane Eyre (Stevenson) (as Edward Rochester)
1944 Follow the Boys (Sutherland) (revue appearance)
1945 Tomorrow Is Forever (Pichel) (as John McDonald)
1949 The Third Man (Reed) (as Harry Lime); Black Magic (Ratoff) (as Cagliostro); Prince of Foxes (Henry King) (as Cesare Borgia)
1950 The Black Rose (Hathaway) (as General Bayan)
1951 Return to Glenascaul (Edwards) (as himself)
1953 Trent’s Last Case (Wilcox) (as Sigsbee Manderson); Si Versailles m’était conté (Affairs in Versailles; Royal Affairs in Versailles) (Guitry) (as Benjamin Franklin); L’Uomo la Bestia e la Virtù (Man Beast and Virtue) (Vanzina) (as the beast); King Lear (Brook—for TV) (title role)
1954 Napoleon (Guitry) (as Gen. Hudson Lowe); Trouble in the Glen (Wilcox) (as Samin Cezador y Mengues)
1955 “Lord Mountdrago” ep. of Three Cases of Murder (O’Ferrall) (as Lord Mountdrago)
1956 Moby Dick (Huston) (as Father Mapple)
1957 Man in the Shadow (Pay the Devil) (Arnold) (as Virgil Remcler)
1958 The Long Hot Summer (Ritt) (as Will Varner); The Roots of Heaven (Huston) (as Cy Sedgwick)
1959 David e Golia (David and Goliath) (Pottier and Baldi) (as King Saul); Compulsion (Fleischer) (as Jonathan Wilk); Ferry to Hong Kong (Lewis Gilbert) (as Captain Hart)
1960 Austerlitz (Battle of Austerlitz) (Gance) (as Robert Fulton); Crack in the Mirror (Fleischer) (as Hagon/Lamoriciere); I Tartari (The Tartars) (Thorpe) (as Barundai)
1961 Lafayette (Dreville) (as Benjamin Franklin); Desordre (short)
1963 The V.I.P.’s (Asquith) (as Max Buda); “La Ricotta” ep. of Rogopag (Laviamoci il cervello; Let’s Have a Brainwash) (Pasolini) (as the film director)
1964 La Fabuleuse Aventure de Marco Polo (Marco the Magnificent) (de la Patelliere and Noel Howard) (as Ackermann)
1965 The Island of Treasure (Frano)
1966 A Man for All Seasons (Zimmennann) (as Cardinal Wolsey); Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément)
1967 Casino Royale (McGrath and Huston) (as Le Chiffre); The Sailor from Gibraltar (Richardson) (as Louis Mozambique); I’ll Never Forget What’s ‘is Name (Winner) (as Jonathan Lute); Oedipus the King (Saville) (as Creon)
1968 House of Cards (Guirremin) (as Claude Leschenhaut); Kampf um Rom (Fight for Rome) (Siodmak) (as Emperor Justinian)
1969 Michael the Brave (Nicolaescu); L’Etoile de Sud (The Southern Star) (Hayers) (as Flackett); Tepepa (Petroni); Twelve Plus One (Gessner) (as Markau); Mihai Viteazu (Nicolaescu); Kampf um Rom II (Fight for Rome II); Una su 13
1970 Catch-22 (Mike Nichols) (as General Dreedle); The Battle of Neretva (Bulajic) (as Senator); Waterloo (Bondarchuk) (as King Louis XVIII); Upon This Rock (Rasky); The Kremlin Letter (Huston) (as Aleksei Bresnachiv)
1971 A Safe Place (Jaglom) (as the Magician); The Toy Factory (Gordon); I Racconti di Canterbury (The Canterbury Tales) (Pasolini); To Kill a Stranger (Collinson)
1972 Get to Know Your Rabbit (De Palma) (as Mr. Delasandro); La Décade prodigieuse (Ten Days’ Wonder) (Chabrol) (as Theo Van Horn); Satjeska (Delic); Malpertuis (Kumel) (as Cassavius); Treasure Island (Hough and Bianchi) (as Long John Silver, + sc); Necromancy (The Witching) (Gordon) (as Mr. Cato); The Man Who Came to Dinner (Klikk) (as Sheridan Whiteside—for TV)
1975 And Then There Were None (Collinson) (as voice of himself)
1976 Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg) (as Estedes)
1977
It Happened One Christmas (Thomas—for TV)
1978
Hot Tomorrows (Brest) (as voice of Parklawn Mortuary)
1979
Never Trust an Honest Thief (McCowan);
Tajna Nikole Tesle (The Secret of Nicola Tesla; Tesla) (Papic) (as J. P. Morgan);
The Muppet Movie (Frawley) (as Lord Lew) 1982
Butterfly (Cimber) (as Judge Rauch);
The Muppets Take Manhattan (Oz)
1983
Where Is Parsifal? (Helman) (as Klingsor);
In Our Hands (Richter and Warnow)
1984
Slapstick of Another Kind (Paul) (as voice of Alien Father)
1986
The Transformers: The Movie (Shin and Morishita) (as voice of Planet Unicron) 1987
Someone to Love (Juglom) (as Danny’s friend)

Films as Narrator:

1937
The Spanish Earth (Ivens—doc)
1940
Swiss Family Robinson (Ludwig)
1946
Duel in the Sun (King Vidor)
1955
Out of Darkness (doc)
1958
Les Seigneurs de la Forêt (Masters of the Congo Jungle) (Sielman and Brandt);
The Vikings (Flesicher)
1959
High Journey (Baylis);
South Sea Adventure (Dudley)
1961
King of Kings (Nicholas Ray)
1962
Der grosse Atlantik (doc)
1964
The Finest Hours (Baylis—doc)
1966
A King’s Story (Booth—doc)
1969
Barbed Water (doc)
1970
To Build a Fire (Cohham);
A Horse Called Nijinsky; Start the Revolution without Me (Yorkin)
1971
Directed by John Ford (Bogdanovich—doc);
Sentinels of Silence (Amram—doc);
Happiness in Twenty Years (script)
1972
The Crucifixion (Guennette)
1975
Bugs Bunny Superstar (Larry E. Jackson)
1976
Challenge of Greatness (The Challenge) (Kline)
1978
A Woman Called Moses (Wendkos—for TV)
1979
The Late Great Planet Earth (Amram—doc);
The Double McGuffin (Camp)
1981
Genocide (Schwartzman);
The Man Who Saw Tomorrow (Guennette)
1982
History of the World, Part One (Mel Brooks)
1983
Almonds and Raisins (Karel)

Films as Director:

1934
The Hearts of Age (16mm short) (co-d with Vance, + ro)
1938
Too Much Johnson (16mm short) (+ sc, co-pr) (unreleased)
1941
Citizen Kane (+ ro as Charles Foster Kane, pr, co-sc)
1942
The Magnificent Ambersons (+ ro as narrator, pr, sc);
It’s All True (semi—doc) (co-d with Norman Foster, + co-sc, pr) (not completed—released in 1993 with added footage)
1943
Journey into Fear (co-d [uncredited] with Norman Foster, + ro as Colonel Haki, pr, co-sc)
1946
The Stranger (+ ro as Franz Kindler/Professor Charles Rankin, co-sc [uncredited])
1948
The Lady from Shanghai (+ ro as Michael O’Hara, sc);
Macbeth (+ title role, pr, sc)
1952
Othello (+ title role, pr, sc)
1955
Mr. Arkadin (Confidential Report) (+ ro as Gregory Arkadin, story, sc, art d, cost);
Don Quixote (+ ro as himself, co-pr, sc) (not completed)
1956
Fountain of Youth (TV pilot) (+ ro as the host)
1958
Touch of Evil (+ ro as Hank Quinlan, sc)
1962
Le Procès (The Trial) (+ ro as Advocate Hastler, sc)
1966
Campanadas a Medianoche (Chimes at Midnight; Falstaff) (+ ro as Sir John Falstaff, sc, cost)
1968
Une Histoire immortelle (The Immortal Story) (for TV) (+ ro as Mr. Clay, sc) 1969
The Deep (+ ro as Russ Brewer, sc) (unreleased)
1970
The Other Side of the Wind (+ sc) (not completed)
1975
F for Fake (Vérités et mensonges; About Fakes; Nothing but the Truth) (+ ro as himself, sc) (add’l footage by Reichenbach)

Publications

By WELLES: books—

Everybody’s Shakespeare, New York, 1933; revised as The Mercury Shakespeare, 1939.

The Trial (script), New York, 1970.

This Is Orson Welles, with Peter Bogdanovich, New York, 1972.

By WELLES: articles—

Interview with Francis Koval, in Sight and Sound (London), December 1950.

Interview with Everett Sloane, in Film (London), no. 37, 1965.

“ ‘Heart of Darkness,’” in Film Comment (New York), December 1972.

On WELLES: books—

On WELLES: articles—

Lindley, D., “He Has the Stage,” in Colliers (New York), 29 January 1938.
“Orson at War,” in Time (New York), 30 November 1942.
“Welles: Young Man of 1,000 Faces,” in * Cue*, 29 June 1946.
McBride, Joseph, “Welles’ Chimes at Midnight,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1969.
McBride, Joseph, “Welles before Kane,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1970.
“Orson Welles,” Life Award Ceremony Program, American Film Institute, 1975.
McBride, Joseph, “Welles’ Chimes at Midnight,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1969.
McBride, Joseph, “Welles before Kane,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1970.
Lyons, Donald, “Setting Terms for Orson,” in Film Comment (New York), vol. 32, no. 5, September-October 1996.

On WELLES: films—

Orson Welles à la Cinematéque (documentary, 1982.
The Battle over Citizen Kane, television documentary directed by Thomas Lennon and Michael Epstein, 1995.

* * *

Orson Welles’s reputation as a director has overshadowed his work as an actor. When reviewers do consider Welles’s film performances, their assessments are mixed. Some see Welles as a master of bravura performances. Others argue that his work consists of behavioristic clichés that pass for decent acting because of Welles’s mellifluous voice and striking physical presence. Welles’s performances are not always flawless, but what his critics miss is that often Welles does not aim for naturalism, but instead draws on melodramatic tradition that uses excess and theatricality to illustrate a film’s ethical implications.

Welles’s best work is in Citizen Kane, Jane Eyre, Touch of Evil, and Chimes at Midnight, along with The Third Man and Compulsion, where his performances dominate the films even though he appears in only a few scenes. Films such as Moby Dick and A Man for All Seasons reveal Welles’s unique ability to convey the texts’ ethical dilemmas, for with his naturally dramatic voice and imposing presence, his cameos performances become pivotal moments in the narrative.

A veteran of the Todd Troupers and weekly unofficial productions under his directorial control, Welles made his professional acting debut at age 16, and his Broadway debut at age 19. That same year, 1934, he directed and starred in his first film, played a Kane-like figure in a piece of agit-prop theater, and began starring in radio programs (e.g., The Shadow and First Person Singular). In 1937, he played Brutus in his Mercury production of Julius Caesar, the next year he broadcast the infamous “War of the Worlds.”

In 1941, Welles played the title role in Citizen Kane. Welles’s carefully designed performance does not aim for psychological realism, but instead conveys the different narrators’ conflicting views of Charles Foster Kane. In Thatcher’s sequence, Welles’s quick-rhythmmed speech and studied innocence express Thatcher’s view that Kane is a young madman headed for a Faustian bargain. In the Bernstein sequence, Welles’s exacting diction and flamboyant gestures convey Bernstein’s paternalistic image of Charlie-the-Great. In the next segment, Welles’s performance reflects Leland’s view that his friend becomes Kane-the-demagogue: Welles deepens his voice to deliver Kane’s political speech, his stance echoes the image of the poster that hangs behind him, and as the segment ends, Welles’s body is as immobile as a statue, his voice the booming voice of pitiless authority. In the concluding sequences, Welles’s increasingly expressionistic performance shows us that Kane becomes the hollow shell of his ambition, literally puff-ed-up with self-importance, Kane is an untethered dirigible crashing about, then finally an orator reduced to a whisper. In the films that would follow, Welles revealed his abiding interest in stylized and highly codified characterizations: he consistently played strong characters with his left, three-quarter profile to camera, and weak characters, or strong characters in weak moments, right profile to camera.

Welles was active on stage, screen, and radio throughout the 1940s. Jane Eyre was Welles’s first film acting assignment for another director, and his dramatic performance enhanced the mood of Bronte’s gothic melodrama. In his own The Lady from Shanghai, Welles played O’Hara with a phony brogue that underscored the film’s exploration of deceit, illusion, and artifice. In his last directorial assignment in Hollywood for a decade, Welles played the title role in his expressionistic Macbeth.

The conventional wisdom is that to secure financing for his own films, Welles spent the next three decades hamming-it-up in other people’s bad pictures. Yet a review of his performances shows that is not quite the case. Welles gives a brilliant performance in The Third Man, his careful underplaying effectively conveying Harry Lime’s sinister character. In the mid-fifties, Welles created notable performances for television; for example, in 1953, his performance in the title role of King Lear was a major success.

Some of Welles’s best work was to come. His characterizations in The Long Hot Summer and Compulsion are the work of an accomplished actor. His performance in his own Touch of Evil is disturbing and masterful. Welles’s performance as Falstaff in Chimes at Midnight is, quite arguably, the best performance of his career. Drawing on his lifelong study of Faustian figures, Welles gives us a Falstaff who is an endearing but detestable fool. And like his portrayals of other charming but flawed characters, Welles’s performance is enriched by the conflicting aspects of his own image: egotist, visionary, wastrel, martyr.

An international celebrity from the time he was a young man, Welles continually subjected his public image to scrutiny: in the 1970s, he appeared regularly on late-night variety shows, in commercials, and in films such as Catch-22 that present us with caricatures of Welles’s celebrity personae. F for Fake allowed Welles to reprise one of his signature roles: the entertaining charlatan, Someone to Love, Welles’s final appearance on film, provided an apt conclusion to his unique acting career, for it ends with Welles’s on-camera call to “cut.”

—Cynthia Baron
WERNER, Oskar

Films as Actor:

1948 Der Engel mit der Posaune (Hartl)
1949 Eroica (Kolm-Veltée and Hartl) (as Karl)
1950 Un Sourire dans la tempête (Chanas)
1951 Decision before Dawn (Litvak) (as Happy); The Angel with the Trumpet (Bushell); Das gestohlene Jahr (Fross); Ruf aus dem Äther (Klaren); Wunder unserer Tage (The Wonder Kid, Wonder Boy) (Hartl) (as Rudi)
1955 Der letzte Akt (Ten Days to Die; The Last Ten Days) (Pabst) (as Captain Wuest); Lola Montés (Ophüls) (as the Student); Spionage (Antel); Mozart (The Life and Loves of Mozart) (Hartl) (title role)
1961 Jules et Jim (Truffaut) (as Jules)
1965 Ship of Fools (Kramer) (as Dr. Schumann); The Spy Who Came In from the Cold (Ritt) (as Fiedler)
1966 Farenheit 451 (Truffaut) (as Montog)
1968 Interlude (Billington) (as Stefan Zelter); The Shoes of the Fisherman (Anderson) (as Father David Telemond)
1976 Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg) (as Dr. Kreisler)

Publications

By WERNER: article—

On WERNER: books—

Mazura, Margarethe, Oskar Werner: Maske, Mythos, Mensch, Vienna, 1986.

On WERNER: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1994.

* * *

Oskar Werner once stated that “I don’t like films, I only do it for the money. I’m married to the theater, films are only my mistress,” so it is not surprising that theater played a considerably larger role in his life than cinema. At 18 he joined the Burgtheater in Vienna, the Austrian equivalent of Britain’s Old Vic, and soon made a considerable mark, playing in over 50 productions before being drafted into the army in 1941. After the war he became something of a German stage idol, and also turned his attention to films.

His first major screen role, in Angel with a Trumpet, brought him to the notice of Anatole Litvak, and he was hired by Twentieth Century-Fox to play in Decision before Dawn as a conscience-stricken, anti-Nazi German prisoner of war who volunteers to spy for the Allies behind enemy lines. But, Hollywood had nothing of interest to offer him after this and he returned to Europe. His Hamlet in Frankfurt in 1953 was regarded as one of the great interpretations of the time, and assured Werner a key position in the postwar German theater pantheon. He was sometimes referred to as the Laurence Olivier of the continent, and in 1959 he founded his own theatrical troupe, the Theater Ensemble Oskar Werner.

In 1955 he appeared in, among other films, Ophüls’ Lola Montès and Pabst’s The Last Ten Days, but it was not until 1961 that he made the first of the films for which he is best known. This was Jules et Jim, which introduced Werner’s incredibly boyish good looks and characteristic sense of melancholy to burgeoning “art house” audiences everywhere. Another sensitive, soulful role followed, this time in a Hollywood context, in Stanley Kramer’s Ship of Fools, where he played a romantically world-weary doctor opposite Simone Signoret. Perhaps concerned at being typecast in sensitive, troubled parts he then took on the role of a hard-line East German Communist in The Spy Who Came In from the Cold, in which he was surprisingly convincing. The same year, however, he returned both to Truffaut and to another quietly agonised role as a book-burning fireman who has a change of heart in Fahrenheit 451. (Curiously, Truffaut and Werner died within two days of each other.)

Having achieved the status of an international film star, Werner nevertheless made only a few more films—Interlude, The Shoes of the Fisherman, and Voyage of the Damned—none of them especially interesting or really worthy of his talents. He also appeared in an episode of Columbo. He is reputed to have turned down more than 200 film parts. The increasing rarity of his film (and, for that matter, theater) performances can perhaps partly be ascribed to his frequent quarrels with film and stage directors, and to the fact that in the last ten years of his life, plagued by alcoholism, he lived the life of a virtual recluse.

—Julian Petley

WEST, Mae

Nationality: American. Born: Brooklyn, New York, 17 August 1892. Education: Attended Brooklyn public schools to age 13. Family: Married the entertainer Frank Wallace, 1911 (divorced 1942). Career: Child entertainer: joined Hal Clarendon’s stock company, Brooklyn, at age eight; toured with Frank Wallace; 1911—Broadway debut in the revue A la Broadway and Hello, Paris; then returned to vaudeville tour with star billing; early 1920s—toured in nightclub act with Harry Richman; 1926—on Broadway in her own play Sex (later plays produced include The Drag, 1926, The Wicked Age, 1927, Diamond Lil, 1928 and several revivals, The Pleasure Man, 1928, The Constant Sinner, 1931, and Catherine Was Great, 1944); 1932—film debut in Night After Night: contract with Paramount; then a series of popular films in the 1930s for which she often wrote the screenplay; 1954–56—toured with nightclub act; 1955—first of several albums of her songs, The Fabulous Mae West. Died: In Los Angeles, 22 November 1980.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Role(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Night After Night (Mayo)</td>
<td>(as Maudie Triplet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>She Done Him Wrong (Sherman)</td>
<td>(as Lady Lou)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>The Heat’s On (Tropicana) (Ratoff)</td>
<td>(as Fay Lawrence)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Myra Breckenridge (Sarne)</td>
<td>(as Leticia Van Allen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Sexette (Ken Hughes)</td>
<td>(as Marlo Manners)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By WEST: books—

Babe Gordon (novel), New York, 1930; as The Constant Sinner, New York, 1931.

Diamond Lil (novel), New York, 1932; as She Done Him Wrong, New York, 1932.

She Done Him Wrong, New York, 1995.

By WEST: articles—

‘‘Mae West,’’ interview with W. S. Eyman, in Take One (Montreal), January 1974.

On WEST: books—

Curry, Ramona, Too Much of a Good Thing: Mae West as Cultural Icon, Minneapolis, 1995.

Yeatts, Tabatha, The Legendary Mae West, Sterling.

On WEST: articles—

Troy, William, ‘‘Mae West and the Classic Tradition,’’ in Nation (New York), 8 November 1933.

Arbus, Diane, ‘‘Mae West: Emotion in Motion,’’ in Show (Hollywood), January 1965.

Christie, George, ‘‘Mae West Raps,’’ in Cosmopolitan (New York), May 1970.

Adair, G., ‘‘Go West, Old Mae,’’ in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1980.

McCourt, James, obituary in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1981.

Kobal, John, ‘‘Mae West,’’ in Films and Filming (London), September 1983.

Curry, Ramona, ‘‘Mae West as Censored Commodity: The Case of Diamond Lil,’’ in Cinema Journal (Austin), Fall 1991.

Clayton, Justin, ‘‘Mae West: The Biggest Blonde of Them All,’’ in Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1993.

Robertson, Pamela, ‘‘The Kinda Comedy That Imitates Me’: Mae West’s Identification with the Feminist Camp,’’ in Cinema Journal (Austin), Winter 1993.

Frank, Michael, ‘‘Mae West at the Ravenswood: Diamond Lil’s Glittery Los Angeles Apartment,’’ in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1994.

* * *

The strongest breakthrough for sophisticated sexual comedy was made by Mae West. The unabashed woman who takes pleasure in her sexuality and ability to control men with her physical charms was deftly burlesqued in her 1933 work She Done Him Wrong and I’m No Angel. In these movies she played the gaudy kept woman who enjoyed her position in society. Derived from the stage play Diamond Lil, which West wrote for herself in 1928, She Done Him Wrong was the weaker of the two films. Nevertheless, the movie had much to offer. West’s dialogue was sprinkled with double entendres, usually linked with sex. When asked if she had ever found a man who could make her happy, she replied with her famous drawl, a clenched jaw, and a smile: ‘‘Sure. Lots of times.’’ And there were the now well-known maxims, such as, ‘‘When women go wrong, men go right after them.’’ As in some of her later films, the total work did not have a strong comic design. An old-fashioned, serious love triangle held every story together. Sprinkled into the melodramas, two songs, ‘‘I Wonder Where My Easy Rider’s Gone’’ and ‘‘I Like a Man Who,’’ gave West the chance to make further sexual comments and display her talents with the torch song and the blues.

I’m No Angel not only displayed a definite improvement over the Diamond Lil adaptation, but also was West’s most distinguished contribution to the sophisticated comedy film. Her link with the underworld in I’m No Angel was rather melodramatic, but her bedhopping in high society created a comic framework for the total work. Her characterization of Tira, a carnivale dancer, shows a woman who is engaged in the put-down with the relish, if not the zip, of a Groucho Marx. When her boss, played by the daddy of all big deals, Edward Arnold, made a conciliatory gesture by stating, ‘‘Tira, I’ve changed my mind,’’ West cracked, ‘‘Does it work any better?’’ With an aggressiveness seldom exhibited in a woman at that time, she took over her own defense in a trial. I’m No Angel was also a showcase for still more of the famous West lines. To her servant she drawled: ‘‘Beulah, peel me a grape.’’ To a man, fluttering her eyelashes, she observed, ‘‘When I’m good, I’m very good, but when I’m bad [very long pause] I’m better.’’ As a gilded, tainted sage she uttered, ‘‘It’s not the men in your life that count—it’s the life in your men.’’ Most remembered and most often repeated (with variations) was the line: ‘‘And don’t forget—come up and see me sometime.’’

In her early 1930s movies, however, West’s humor was not merely verbal. It consisted of a provocative walk, a toss of the head or hip, or a glint in the eye. She was a personality comedienne with a particular style of her own. Actually, she never possessed strong acting skills: her delivery was, in fact, monotonous. Yet her slender talent and ample body made her a legend in her time and the height of camp in the 1960s. Since West’s sexual wit was nearly eliminated by the Hays Office in 1934, her subsequent films remain a pale shadow of those early works—especially in the wealth of innuendo. Nevertheless, she still portrayed the shady lady in the 1936 Klondike Annie, escaping the law.
by assuming the role of a religious leader in a booming, bawdy frontier community. Her high-handed tactics to "win souls" remain fresh today because they lampoon a type of religious leader who still exists. Ironically, West would not be able to use her sexual humor again until she appeared in Myra Breckinridge. At 78, West was still the femme fatale, uttering bawdier lines than she had been allowed to deliver in the 1930s.

—Donald McCaffrey

WHITAKER, Forest

Nationality: American. Born: Longview, Texas, 15 July 1961. Education: Attended Pomona College; studied voice and theater at the University of Southern California; attended the Drama School in Berkeley, California. Family: Married Keisha Simone Nash, 1996; has son from a previous relationship and one daughter born 1996. Career: Acted on the stage in the United States and England, early 1980s; made his screen debut in Fast Times at Ridgemont High, 1982; appeared in the TV mini-series North and South, 1985; appeared in the TV mini-series North and South II, 1986; had his first notable starring role in Bird, 1988; made his directorial debut with Strapped, 1993; directed Whitney Houston’s "Exhale (Shooop, Shooop)" music video, 1995. Awards: Cannes Film Festival Best Actor, for Bird, 1988. Address: 6409 Flagmore Place, Los Angeles, CA 90068, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1982 Fast Times at Ridgemont High (Heckerling) (as Charles Jefferson); Tag: The Assassination Game (Castle) (as Gowdy’s bodyguard)
1985 Vision Quest (Becker) (as Bulldozer)
1986 Platoon (Oliver Stone) (as Big Harold); The Color of Money (Scorsese) (as Amos)
1987 Stakeout (Badham) (as Jack Pismo); Good Morning, Vietnam (Levinson) (as Edward Garlick); Hands of a Stranger (Elikann—for TV) (as Sergeant Delaney); Bloodsport (Arnold) (as Rawlins)
1988 Bird (Eastwood) (as Charlie Parker)
1989 Johnny Handsome (Walter Hill) (as Dr. Steven Fisher)
1990 Downtown (Richard Benjamin) (as Dennis Curren); Criminal Justice (Wolk—for TV) (as Jessie Williams)
1991 A Rage in Harlem (Duke) (as Jackson)
1992 Article 99 (Deutch) (as Dr. Sid Handleman); Consenting Adults (Pakula) (as David Duttonville); The Crying Game (Neil Jordan) (as Jody); Diary of a Hit Man (London) (as Dekker)
1993 Bank Robber (Mead) (as Officer Battle); Lush Life (Elias) (as Buddy Chester); Last Light (Kiefer Sutherland—for TV) (as Fred Whitmore); Body Snatchers (Ferrara) (as Major Collins)
1994 Blown Away (Stephen Hopkins) (as Anthony Franklin); Jason’s Lyric (McHenry) (as Maddog); Ready to Wear (Prêt-a-Porter) (Altman) (as Cy Bianco); The Enemy Within (Darby—for TV) (as Col. Mac Casey)
1995 Smoke (Wang) (as Cyrus Cole); Species (Donaldson) (as Dan Smithson)

1996 Phenomenon (Turteltaub) (as Nate Pope); Rebound: The Legend of Earl ‘’The Goat’’ Manigault (Eriq La Salle—for TV) (as Mr. Rucker)
1998 The Split (Body Count) (Patton-Spurriul) (as Crane)
1999 Four Dogs Playing Poker (Rachman) (as Mr. Ellington); Ghost Dog: The Way of the Samurai (Jarmusch) (as Ghost Dog); Light it Up (Bolotin) (as Officer Dante Jackson); Witness Protection (Pearce—for TV) (as Steven Beck)
2000 Battlefield Earth (Christian) (as Ker); American Storytellers (Mukherji) (doc) (as himself)

Films as Director:

1993 Strapped (for TV)
1995 Waiting to Exhale
1998 Black Jaq (for TV) (+ exec pr); Hope Floats (+ exec pr, mus)

Publications

By WHITAKER: article—

On WHITAKER: articles—

Lantos, J., “Seeing the Forest Through the Tazoom,” in Movieline (Los Angeles), December 1996.

Because of his looks—he is round-faced, and on the chubby side—Forest Whitaker never will be mistaken for Denzel Washington or Wesley Snipes, and never will be a leading man. But he is an outstanding character actor, always interesting to watch, and he brings appropriate energy and vitality to all of his films. From the earliest stages of his career, he proved he could create an impression even when cast opposite strong, scene-stealing performers. This is exemplified by his appearance with Robin Williams in Good Morning, Vietnam. Williams, playing the smart-mouthed, delightfully profane military disc jockey Adrian Cronauer, could have been the entire show. But Whitaker, cast as Cronauer’s sidekick, has enough of a presence not to be obliterated by Williams’s manic charisma.

The actor earned major stardom playing jazz legend Charlie “Yardbird” Parker in the Clint Eastwood-directed biopic, Bird. Whitaker’s performance blends seamlessly into Eastwood’s story of the legendary, innovative bebop saxophonist. His bulky build and wide smile allowed him to physically resemble his subject, and his generous performance added immeasurably to Eastwood’s compassionate, lovingly detailed portrait of Parker. Whitaker was to go on to play another jazz musician in Lush Life: a trumpeter named Buddy Chester who, unlike Parker, is an obscure session man, and who discovers he has a fatal brain tumor.

Whitaker has played both leading and supporting roles, characters running the gamut from hero to heavy, sweet and soft-spoken to vicious and hard-bitten. He has been a sympathetic grunt, fighting the Vietnam war (in Platoon); a solitary, melancholy cop who has seen too much of the streets (Downtown); an ingenuous mamma’s boy who foolishly perceives of himself as the defender of a beautiful woman (A Rage in Harlem); a flamingly gay fashion designer (Ready to Wear); and a hired killer, on his last assignment before retirement, whose victim persuades him to pardon her (Diary of a Hitman). He has played embittered men who are violent and ill-fated (the Vietnam veteran in Jason’s Lyric), and embittered men who have come to accept their lives and fates (the one-armed gas station owner/guilty father in Smoke). In the latter film, Whitaker is at his best in a monologue in which his character reveals how he came to lose his arm: He crashed his car while “filled with spirits,” resulting in the death of his beloved. He survived, but not with his body completely intact—a fact which serves as an everyday reminder of what a “mean bastard” he really is.

One of Whitaker’s most overlooked performances came in The Crying Game, in which he is cast as Jody, a British soldier kidnapped by Irish Republican Army terrorists. Fellow cast-members Stephen Rea, Miranda Richardson, and Jaye Davidson may have earned the headlines, but Whitaker—playing a character who is murdered scant minutes into the story—makes Jody deeply human, effectively conveying the man’s innermost fears as he barters for his life. The actor also offered an assured, carefully modulated performance in Ghost Dog: The Way of the Samurai, conveying a quiet authority as a solitary contract killer who has adapted the disciplines and codes of the samurai.

In 1993, Whitaker made his directorial debut with the made-for-television feature Strapped, the devastating account of Diquan (Bokeem Woodbine), an otherwise thoughtful black teen who has grown up in a Brooklyn housing project. He deeply loves his pregnant girlfriend, and is willing to take on the responsibilities of fatherhood. But how can he support a family on the $4.35 an hour he earns as a bicycle messenger? When the pressures of the ghetto begin to close in on him, Diquan feels he must do whatever is necessary to support his family, even if it means marketing illegal firearms and becoming a police stoolie. Strapped is an uncompromising portrait of urban decay. Primarily, it works as an exacting example of how government bureaucracy and varying state laws make guns as easy to acquire in America as bubble gum at a corner candy store.

Strapped is a film with which Whitaker should forever be proud. And it was not his sole directorial effort, as it served as a calling card for theatrical feature work. He has helmed two to date. The first is Waiting to Exhale, also a narrative about the African-American experience. Based on the best-selling novel by Terry McMillan, it is the story of four black women who establish a camaraderie while seeking love, esteem, and harmony in their lives. His follow-up, Hope Floats, charts the plight of a former high school beauty queen who revisits her past upon breaking up with her unfaithful husband and returning to her Texas hometown. At its core, Waiting to Exhale is a predictable soap opera, while Hope Floats is a so-so romantic comedy. Yet both are inventively directed, with Whitaker adding nice visual touches which transcend his material.

—Rob Edelman

---

WHITE, Pearl

Nationality: American. Born: Greenridge, Illinois, 4 March 1889. Family: Married 1) the actor Victor C. Sutherland, 1907 (divorced 1914); 2) the actor Wallace McCutcheon Jr., 1919 (divorced 1921). Career: Stage debut at age of 6 as Little Eva in Uncle Tom’s Cabin; toured with parents in midwest stock companies; 1902–09—performed with equestrian circus act; 1909—serious riding injury, then secretary at Powers Pictures; 1910—film debut in role requiring horseback riding in The Life of Buffalo Bill; then made Westerns under director James Young Deer (total of about 100 one- and two-reelers); 1911—joined Lubin company, making about 20 films; 1912–13—in Universal comedies directed by Joseph Golden; 1913—took Europe for two months; on return signed by Charles Pathé; 1914—release of first serial, The Perils of Pauline; 1915—extraordinary success of The Exploits of Elaine established international reputation; 1920—contract with Fox; 1922—appeared at Casino de Paris in acrobatic sketch; suffered injury; attempt to resume making serials: Plunder poorly received; retired to France; 1924—last film appearance in 1924 serial made in France. Died: At French estate, 4 August 1938.

Films as Actress:

(in one- and two-reelers directed by Joseph Golden—partial listing)

1910  The Life of Buffalo Bill (three reels); The New Magdalene; The Maid of Niagara; The Yankee Girl; Sunshine in Poverty Row

1910–11  Tommy Gets His Sister Married; Her Photograph; The Motor Friend; A Summer Flirtation; The Hoodoo; How Rastus Gets His Turkey; Home, Sweet Home; His Birthday; Roundsman; The Express; The Chorus Girl; The Lost Necklace; The Unforeseen Complication; Angel Out of the Slums; For Honor of the Name; Helping Him Out; Locked Out; The Quarrel; The Coward; Honoring a Hero; Winonah’s Vengeance; The Flaming Arrow; Message of the Arrow; For Massa’s Sake; Love Molds Labor; A Daughter of the South; The Rival Brother’s Patriotism; Gun o’ Gunga Din; Prisoner of the Mohican; The Compact; The Governor’s Double (series of about 20 films for Lubin Company, under direction of Joseph Smiley, John Ince, or Wilbert Melville) (directed by Donald Mackenzie)

1911  The Stepsisters; The Dressmaker’s Bill; The Girl Next Room; Oh! Such a Night; Love’s Renunciation; Her Little Slipper; Mayblossom

1912  The Governor’s Double (directed by Joseph Golden) a Clairvoyant; Her Twin Brother; The Veiled Lady; Our Parents-in-Law; Two Lunatics; Pearl as a Detective; When Love Is Young; His Awful Daughter; Where Charity Begins; Mary’s Romance; The New Typist; A Call from Home; Will Power; The Girl Reporter; Who Is in the Box?; An Hour of Terror; True Chivalry; Muchly Engaged; Pearl’s Dilemma; College Chums; The Hallroom Girls; The Broken Spell; What Papa Got; Oh! You Scotch Lassie!; A Child Influence; Starving for Love; Pearl and the Tramp; Caught in the Act; A Greater Influence; His Aunt Emma; That Crying Baby; Pearl’s Hero; The Convict’s Daughter; A Woman’s Revenge; Girls Will Be Boys; The Cabaret Singer; Her Secretary; Oh! You Pearl!; His Rich Uncle; Robert’s Lesson; Willie’s Great Scheme; Pearl and the Poet; Pearl’s Mistake; The Ring; Oh! You Puppy!; A Father’s Devotion; A Grateful Outcast; Getting Reuben Back; Mr. Sweeney’s Masterpiece; Lizzie and the Iceman; Willie’s Disguise; Oh! You Mummy!; Going Some; Her New Hat; Pearl and the Burglars; Easy Money; A Telephone Engagement; The Bunch That Failed; Cops Is a Business; What Pearl’s Pearl Did; A Lady in Distress; The Dancing Craze; Her Necklace; The Book Agents; Some Collectors; The Maniac’s Desire; East Lynne in Bugville; The Lady Doctor; The Tell Tale Brother; The Masquer; A Girl in Pants; Shadowed

(directed by Donald Mackenzie)

1914 The Perils of Pauline (serial); Detective Swift; Ticket of Leave Man; The Stolen Birthright; The Warning; The Phantom Thief; The Hand of Destiny; The House of Mystery; Detective Craig’s Coup; A Pearl of the Punjab
1915 The Exploits of Elaine (serial); The New Exploits of Elaine (serial); The Romance of Elaine (serial)
1916 The Iron Claw (José and Seitz—serial); The King’s Game (Seitz); Annabel’s Romance (Gasnier); Hazel Kirke (Gasnier); Pearl of the Army (José—serial)
1917 The Fatal Ring (Seitz—serial)
1918 The House of Hate (Seitz—serial); The Lightning Raider (Seitz—serial)
1919 Black Secret (Seitz—serial)
1920 The White Moll (Millarde); The Dark Mirror (Giblyn); Black Is White (Giblyn); The Thief (Giblyn); A Virgin Paradise (Dawley)
1921 The Mountain Woman (Giblyn); Tiger’s Cub (Giblyn and Millarde); Know Your Men (Giblyn); Singing River (Giblyn)
1922 Plunder (Seitz—serial)
1924 Terreur (Seitz—serial)

Publications

By WHITE: book—

Just Me (autobiography), New York, 1930.

By WHITE: articles—

“Putting It Over,” in Motion Picture Magazine, February 1917.
“Why I Like to Work for Uncle Sam,” in Pictures and Picturegoer, 5 October 1918.

On WHITE: books—

Lahue, Kalton, Continued Next Week, Oklahoma, 1964.
Stedman, Raymond, The Serials: Suspense and Drama by Installment, Norman, Oklahoma, 1971.

On WHITE: articles—

Smith, Frederick, “A Pearl in the Rough,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), January 1919.
Katchmer, George, “Remembering the Great Silent,” in Classic Images (Muscatine), January 1996.

* * *

No one is more closely associated with the serial genre than Pearl White, and few actresses of the silent era are as well known today. Yet White was not the first to star in serials, and she was barely adequate as an actress. Rather, White starred in two of the most famous of all serials, The Perils of Pauline and The Exploits of Elaine, which stand up better in memory than on viewing, and she had such an infectious personality, so full of fun, so lacking in temperament, that audiences could easily relate to her. Certainly her initial popularity owed much to the sponsorship of her serials by the Hearst newspaper chain and to the songs, notably “Poor Pauline,” that her serials inspired.

Like all major personalities, she invented much about her life, particularly in her autobiography Just Me, creating an image to which the public could relate. It was as a comedienne that White first made her mark on screen, looking rather buxom and saucy, and it was a comic element that lay just under the surface in many of her serials.
Unlike her two major competitors, Ruth Roland and Kathlyn Williams, she was both trim and attractive. Although apparently wearing a wig, White’s blonde hair added to what today might be described as her sex appeal.

From serials White tried unsuccessfully to move on to features with the William Fox Company, but she was hampered by poor scripts and lackluster direction. She went to live in France, but ill health and added weight put an end to her career. It is worth noting that, despite her fame, she never set foot in California, making virtually all of her films in the New York area.

—Anthony Slide

WIDMARK, Richard

Films as Actor:

1947 Kiss of Death (Hathaway) (as Tommy Udo)
1948 Road House (Negulesco) (as Jefty Robbins); The Street with No Name (Keighley) (as Alec Stiles)
1949 Yellow Sky (Wellman) (as Dude); Down to the Sea in Ships (Hathaway) (as Dan Lancseford); Slattery’s Hurricane (De Toth) (title role)
1950 Night and the City (Dassin) (as Harry Fabian); Panic in the Streets (Kazan) (as Clinton Reed); No Way Out (Mankiewicz) (as Ray Biddle)
1951 The Halls of Montezuma (Milestone) (as Lt. Anderson); The Frogmen (Bacon) (as Lt. Commander John Lawrence)
1952 ‘The Clarion Calls’ ep. of O. Henry’s Full House (Hathaway) (as Johnny Kernan); Don’t Brother to Knock (Baker) (as Jed Towers); Red Skies of Montana (Newman) (as Cliff Mason); My Pal Gus (Parrish) (as Dave Jennings)
1953 Take the High Ground (Brooks) (Sgt. Thomas Ryan); Destination Gobi (Wise) (as CPO Sam McHale); Pickup on South Street (Fuller) (as Skip McCoy)
1954 Hell or High Water (Fuller) (as Adam Jones); Garden of Evil (Hathaway) (as Fiske); Broken Lance (Dmytryk) (as Ben Devereaux)
1955 The Cobweb (Minnelli) (as Dr. McNiver); A Prize of Gold (Robson) (as Joe Lawrence)
1956 Backlash (Sturges) (as Jil Slater); The Last Wagon (Davies) (as Todd); Run for the Sun (Boulting) (as Mike Latimer)
1957 Saint Joan (Preminger) (as Dauphin)

WIDMARK

1958 The Law and Jake Wade (Sturges) (as Clint Hollister); The Tunnel of Love (Kelly) (as Angie Poole)
1959 The Trap (The Baited Trap) (Panama) (as Ralph Anderson); Warlock (Dmytryk) (as Gannon)
1960 The Alamo (Wayne) (as Jim Bowie)
1961 Two Rode Together (Ford) (as Lt. Jim Gary); Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer) (as Colonel Tad Lawson)
1962 How the West Was Won (Ford and others) (as Mike King)
1964 Cheyenne Autumn (Ford) (as Captain Thomas Archer); Flight from Ashiya (Anderson) (as Colonel Glenn Stevenson); The Long Ships (Cardiff) (as Rolfe)
1965 The Bedford Incident (Harris) (as Captain Eric Finlander)
1966 Alvarez Kelly (Dmytryk) (as Colonel Tom Rossiter)
1967 The Way West (McLagen) (as Lije Evans)
1968 Madigan (Siegel) (title role); A Talent for Loving (Quine)
1969 Death of a Gunfighter (Siegel and Totten) (as Marshal Frank Patch)
1970 The Moonshine War (Quine) (as Dr. Taubbee)
1971 Vanished (Kulik—for TV) (as President Roadebush)
1972 When the Legends Die (Miller) (as Red Dillon)
1973 Madigan: Park Avenue Beat (March—for TV) (title role); Brock’s Last Case (Rich—for TV) (as Madigan); Madigan: The Lisbon Beat (Sagel—for TV) (title role); Madigan: The Naples Beat (Sagel—for TV) (title role)
1974 Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Ratchett)
1975 The Last Day (McEveety—for TV)
1976 To the Devil a Daughter (Sykes) (as John Verney); The Sell Out (Collinson) (as Sam Lucas)
1977 The Domino Principle (Kramer) (as Tagge); Rollercoaster (Goldstone) (as Hoyt); Twilight’s Last Gleaming (Aldrich) (as Martin MacKenzie)
1978 Coma (Crichton) (as Dr. Harris); The Swarm (Irwin Allen) (as General Slater); Dinero Maldito (Il braccio violento della mala) (Pacheco)
1979 Bear Island (Sharp) (as Otto Gerran); Mr. Horn (Starrett—for TV)
1980 All God’s Children (Thorpe—for TV)
1981 A Whale for the Killing (Hefter—for TV)
1982 Hanky Panky (Poirier) (as Ransom); National Lampoon’s Movie Madness (Giraldi and Jaglom); The Final Option (Who Dares Wins) (Sharp) (as U.S. Secretary of State)
1984 Against All Odds (Hackford) (as Ben Caxton)
1985 Blackout (Hickox)
1986 The Leopards of Kora (as narrator)
1987 A Gathering of Old Men (Schlondorff—for TV) (as Maps)
1988 Once upon a Texas Train (Texas Guns) (Kennedy—for TV) (as Capt. Oren Hayes)
1989 Cold Sassy Tree (Tewkesbury—for TV) (as E. Rucker Blakeslee)
1991 True Colors (Ross) (as Sen. James B. Stiles)
1992 Lincoln (Kunhardt—for TV) (as voice of Ward Hill Lamon)
1996 Wild Bill: Hollywood Maverick (Todd Robinson—doc)
1997 Big Guns Talk: the Story of the Western (Morris—doc for TV) (as himself)

Films as Producer:

1957 Time Limit (Malden) (+ ro as Colonel William Edwards)
1961 The Secret Ways (Karlson) (+ ro as Michael Reynolds)
Richard Widmark never became a major star, but through the middle part of the twentieth century regularly turned in convincing, workmanlike performances. A genuine product of the American midwest, Widmark strove for a career in show business. He worked at the local Princeton, Illinois, movie house as a high school student so he could see all the films free. At Lake Forest College, outside Chicago, he majored in drama, and after graduation made his way to New York to join a radio drama company. Throughout the late 1930s and the early 1940s Widmark was a fixture on radio, acting in hundreds of programs including Big Sister, Stella Dallas, Front Page Farrell, and March of Time. He also regularly took parts on Broadway, but always made no secret of his desire to go to Hollywood.

His chance came at an age (33) when most movie actors had long built up a list of credits. Even so Widmark was able to make a memorable impression in a small part in his very first film. His portrayal as a giggling psychopath in Henry Hathaway’s Kiss of Death earned him his only nomination for an Academy Award. Widmark then signed a standard seven-year contract with Twentieth Century-Fox, and went on to do his best film work during the 1950s and 1960s. He should best be remembered as a sentimental hoodlum in Sam Fuller’s Pickup on South Street, and as the tender and understanding hero in John Ford’s Two Rode Together and Cheyenne Autumn.

Richard Widmark (left) with John Wayne in The Alamo

By the 1970s Widmark had turned his considerable talents to television. For a two-part television movie, Vanished, he was nominated for an Emmy, but lost. His lone prime-time series, Madigan, based on his film role, did better, lasting two seasons. He ended his career with frequent appearances in television movies and mini-series.

—Douglas Gomery

WILDE, Cornel

Nationality: American. Born: Cornelius Louis Wilde in New York City, 13 October 1915. Education: Attended Townsend Harris High School, New York; studied art in Budapest; attended Columbia University, New York, briefly; College of the City of New York, premed degree; studied acting with Lee Strasberg. Family: Married 1) the actress Patricia Knight, 1938 (divorced 1951), one daughter; 2) the actress Jean Wallace, 1951 (divorced 1980), one son. Career: 1940—member of the U.S. Olympic training squad in saber; on stage in New York: debut in Moon over Mulberry Street, and in Olivier and Leigh’s Romeo and Juliet on Broadway; film debut in The Lady with Red Hair: short contract with Warner Brothers; then contract with 20th Century-Fox; 1945—role in A Song to Remember brought national popularity and leading man status; 1955—formed Theodora Productions; first film directed was Storm Fear, 1956. Died: Of leukemia, in Los Angeles, 16 October 1989.

Films as Actor:

1940 The Lady with Red Hair (Bernhardt) (bit role)
1941 High Sierra (Walsh); Kisses for Breakfast (Seiler) (as Chet Oakley); The Perfect Snob (McCary) (as Mike Lord)
1942 Right to the Heart (Knockout) (Clemens); Life Begins at 8:30 (Pichel) (as Robert); Manila Calling (Leeds) (as Jeff Bailey)
1943 Guest in the House (Brahm); Wintertime (Brahm) (as Freddie Austin)
1945 A Thousand and One Nights (Green) (as Aladdin); A Song to Remember (Vidor) (as Chopin); Leave Her to Heaven (Stahl) (as Richard Harland)
1946 The Bandit of Sherwood Forest (Sherman) (as Robin Hood); Centennial Summer (Preminger) (as Philippe Lascalles)
1947 Forever Amber (Preminger) (as Bruce Carlton); It Had to Be You (Maté and Hartman) (as George/Johnny Blaine); Stairway for a Star (as Jimmy Banks); The Homestretch (Humberstone) (as Jock Wallace)
1948 Road House (Negulesco) (as Pete Morgan); The Walls of Jericho (Stahl) (as Dave Connors)
1949 Four Days Leave (Lindberg) (as Stanley Robin); Shockproof (Sirk) (as Griff Marat)
1950 Two Flags West (Wise) (as Captain Mark Bradford)
1952 At Sword’s Point (Sons of the Musketeers) (Allen) (as D’Artagnan); The Greatest Show on Earth (DeMille) (as Sebastian); Operation Secret (Seiler) (as Peter Forrester); California Conquest (Landers) (as Don Arturo Bordega)
1953 Saadía (Lewin) (as Si Lahlisen); Treasure of the Golden Condor (Daves) (as Jean-Paul); Main Street to Broadway (Garnett) (as himself); Star of India (Lewin) (as Pierre St. Laurent)
1954 Passion (Dwan) (as Jean Obregon); Woman’s World (Negulesco) (as Bill Baxter)
1955 The Scarlet Coat (Sturges) (as Major John Bolton)
1956 Hot Blood (Ray) (as Stephen Torino)
1957 Omar Khayyam (Dieterle) (title role); Beyond Mombasa (Marshall) (as Matt Campbell)
1959 Edge of Eternity (Siegel) (as Lee Martin)
1962 Constantine the Great (Constantine and the Cross) (De Felice) (title role)
1969 The Comic (Reiner and Ruben) (as Frank Powers)
1971 Gargoyles (Norton—for TV) (as Mercer Boley)
1978 The Norseman (Pierce) (as Raynor)
1979 The Fifth Musketeer (Annakin) (as D’Artagnan, + co-sc)
1985 Flesh and Bullets (Tobalina)

Films as Producer:

1955 The Big Combo (Lewis) (+ ro as Diamond)
1970 No Blade of Grass (+ d, ro as narrator)
1975 Shark’s Treasure (+ d, sc, ro as Jim)

Films as Director:

1956 Storm Fear (+ ro as Charlie); The Devil’s Hairpin (+ ro as Nick Jargin)
1958 Maracaibo (+ ro as Bic Scott)
1963 Lancelot and Guinevere (Sword of Lancelot) (+ ro as Lancelot)
1966 The Naked Prey (+ title role)
1967 Beach Red (+ ro as Captain MacDonald)

Publications

By WILDE: articles—

On WILDE: books—

On WILDE: articles—

Atkinson, Michael, “Naked Prey,” in Film Comment (New York), November-December 1996.

*    *    *

In spite of an early Academy Award nomination for best actor in A Song to Remember, Cornel Wilde has been remembered as a reliable masculine presence in a series of half-remembered films. Occasionally, as in DeMille’s The Greatest Show on Earth, Wilde stood out. His vain trapeze artist who sees the light was a commentary on some of his earlier swashbuckling roles.

As an actor-director-producer, however, Cornel Wilde deserves a vote as the most neglected creator in film of the last quarter of a century. Wilde directed eight films, starring in all but one. He began his career as an independent producer with The Big Combo in 1955. In all of the films he controlled, Wilde’s character had to face extreme natural and physical danger, and prove himself equal to them or be destroyed. As director and actor Wilde always chose to shoot on location, to experience the danger himself. On more than one occasion, Wilde, a former collegiate fencer, risked death to get a shot.

Wilde’s commitment was so complete that Shark’s Treasure may rank as one of the most dangerous movies ever made. During the filming, on a small island in the Caribbean, Wilde and his crew actually battled sharks in single takes with no help from the magic of editing. In another sequence, the cast has to make its way through surf which can best be described as terrifying. As in his other films, Wilde clearly tests himself and his cast as he does his fictional characters.

In The Naked Prey Wilde’s concept of individuality, survival, and loyalty is clearly evident. The film contains only a few lines of English dialogue. It is virtually a silent tour de force for Wilde. The tactile element in Naked Prey is, perhaps, one of the most singular features. Death and torture are graphic, nightmarishly so. The natives—initially seen as loathesomely barbaric—club, bake, stab, and torment their victims. Wilde, running naked through the jungle, tastes a plant, eats a snake, tumbles down a rocky waterfall, dances wildly in a brush fire. One by one, his pursuers catch him, and fall in individual and personal combat. As they pursue and die, mourn and argue, fight and weep, they become personalized and human for the viewer. The question, “What is a villain?,” is made uncertain, as it is when dealing with the Japanese in Beach Red, the murderous young man in No Blade of Grass, and Lobo in Shark’s Treasure.

—Stuart M. Kaminsky

WILDER, Gene

Films as Actor:

1967 Bonnie and Clyde (Arthur Penn) (as Eugene Grizzard, undertaker)
1968 The Producers (Mel Brooks) (as Leo Bloom)
1970 Quackser Fortune Has a Cousin in the Bronx (Hussein) (title role); Start the Revolution without Me (Yorkin) (as Claude/Philippe)
1971 Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory (Stuart) (title role)
1972 Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Sex But Were Afraid to Ask (Woody Allen) (as Dr. Ross); Scarecrow (Schatzberg)
1974 Thursday’s Games (Moore—for TV, produced in 1971); Blazing Saddles (Mel Brooks) (as Jim: The Waco Kid); The Little Prince (Donen) (as the Fox); Rhinoceros (O’Horgan) (as Stanley); Young Frankenstein (Mel Brooks) (title role, + co-sc)
1976 Silver Streak (Hiller) (as George Caldwell)
1979 The Frisco Kid (Aldrich) (as Avram)
1980 Stir Crazy (Poitier) (as Skip Donahue)
1982 Hanky Panky (Poitier) (as Michael Jordon)
1989 See No Evil, Hear No Evil (Hiller) (as Dave Lyons, + co-sc)
1990 Funny about Love (Ninnoy) (as Duffy Bergman)
1991 Another You (Phillips) (as George/Abie Fielding)
1994 Something Wilder (series for TV) (as Gene Bergman)
1999 Murder in a Small Town (Joyce Chopra—for TV) (as Larry ‘’Cash’’ Carter + co-sc); Alice in Wonderland (Willing) (as Mock Turtle); The Lady in Question (Joyce Chopra—for TV) (as Larry Carter + co-sc)

Films as Actor, Director, and Scriptwriter:

1975 The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes’ Smarter Brother (as Sigerson Holmes)
1977 The World’s Greatest Lover (as Rudolph Valentino)
1981 ‘‘Skippy’’ ep. of Sunday Lovers (Les Seducteurs) (title role)
1984 The Woman in Red (as Teddy Pierce)
1986 Haunted Honeymoon (as Larry Abbot)

Publications

By WILDER: books—

Gilda’s Disease: Sharing Personal Experiences and a Medical Perspective on Ovarian Cancer, with M. Steven Piver, Amherst, 1996.

By WILDER: articles—

On WILDER: articles—

* * *

Both the modest success and the larger failure of Gene Wilder’s film career must be traced to the contradictory images of masculinity which the American public has demanded of its movie industry in the last 20 years. On the one hand, Wilder’s unthreatening sensitivity, his lack of strong sex appeal and charisma suit a public taste for more androgynous (or perhaps prepubescent) masculine figures. On the other hand, generally organized around idealized romantic fantasy, film narratives only with difficulty find a place for sensitized, androgynous males (unless of course, such a protagonist, such as Arnold Schwarzenegger in Twins, can embody a humorously unstable mixture of power and harmlessness).

Wilder’s ordinary looks, unmanageable hair, and underdeveloped body make such impersonations impossible for him. This inability is ironically most evident in a film Wilder not only starred in but directed: The Woman in Red. The production belongs to a subgenre that attained a good deal of popularity in the 1970s and 1980s: the male midlife crisis romance/comedy. Though a partially critical success, the film was a commercial failure for a number of reasons, including its inability to combine humorous and serious approaches to infidelity and marital dissatisfaction. More important, however, Wilder could not project the sexual energy and despair needed to motor the plot; his character’s obsession lacks a romantic intensity that can be sustained.

Woody Allen makes better use of Wilder’s limitations in a minor role: that of the general practitioner who falls in love with a sheep in Gene Wilder (standing) with Peter Boyle in Young Frankenstein

Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Sex but Were Afraid to Ask. Here Wilder’s ordinariness and desire for comfortable routine make the joke work: the doctor’s sodomy is hopelessly absurd. Successful characterizations for Mel Brooks depend on similar ironic contrasts. As the Waco Kid in Blazing Saddles, Wilder is the antithesis of the coolly masculine gunslinger; his draw is so fast no human eye can follow it (and that is because he does not really draw at all). Young Frankenstein and The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes’ Smarter Brother both offer Wilder as a junior, hungrier version of a more famous and accomplished relative: the first film works better than the second because its ensemble cast prevents a focus on Wilder’s one-dimensional protagonist (Sherlock, though a Brooks-inspired parody/pastiche, was directed by Wilder himself).

Sharing the narrative accounts for Wilder’s success in two films where he co-starred with Richard Pryor, Stir Crazy and See No Evil, Hear No Evil. In the former of these, Wilder’s Skip Donahue is a restless idealist whose best friend (Pryor) is more streetwise. Sent to prison by mistake, Pryor convinces Wilder that he must “be bad” in order to survive, but Wilder defeats the conventionality of this wisdom by finding other conversions, the sensitive songster inside a huge fellow inmate, former terror of the institution. In the latter film Wilder’s deaf character becomes allied with Pryor’s blind man: at first full of self-pity, alienated from others, Wilder’s character becomes sensitized and benevolent. The commercially successful Silver Streak is much the same, featuring a conversion to action and engagement, though this thriller lacks the romantic intensity of its obvious model, Hitchcock’s North by Northwest.

Wilder’s androgynous character suits him well for Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory; he does an interesting and similar turn as the Fox in The Little Prince. Given a religious and political inflection, however, this persona can be put to unusually effective use. In contrast to his other roles (with the exception of the highly anxious and hysterical Leo Bloom in The Producers), which do not utilize his Jewishness, Wilder’s Avram in The Frisco Kid is a rabbi, fresh from yeshiva in Poland, who emigrates to San Francisco to pastor a new congregation. Surviving a series of catastrophes, Avram meets up with a good/bad cowboy (played by Harrison Ford), from whom he learns about the gentile world. Avram falls into secularity, abandoning for a time the black coat and hat of the shtetl, though he is eventually reclaimed for an assimilationist form of Judaism. This extraordinary, if somewhat Capraesque film brings out the philosophical idealism implicit in the sensitivity and friendliness of the Wilder persona. The more recent Funny about Love elicits these qualities from the Wilder character’s relationship with a young child.

Perhaps his most affecting performance, however, works yet another variation on androgyny: the genuine naïf, the mental defective whose goodness is reflexive, unalloyed, and presexual. As the title character in Quackser Fortune Has a Cousin in the Bronx, Wilder plays a man who takes continuing joy in the only job life has made available to him: collecting horseshit from the streets of Dublin. Like Avram, Quackser accepts the world as he finds it and loves other people for what he finds in them. Other people, however, do not measure up to his standards of loving kindness. In the larger context of the contemporary American cinema, however, these roles offer exceptional (and thus not widely appealing) versions of masculine strength and virtue. His undoubted success in them therefore could not make Wilder a star.

—R. Barton Palmer, updated by Linda J. Stewart

WILLIAMS, Robin

Films as Actor:

1980 Popeye (Altman) (title role)

1982 The World According to Garp (George Roy Hill) (as Garp)

1983 The Survivors (Ritchie) (as Donald Quinelle)

1984 Moscow on the Hudson (Mazursky) (as Vladimir Ivanoff)

1986 The Best of Times (Spottiswoode) (as Jack Dundee); Club Paradise (Ramis) (as Jack Miniker); Seize the Day (Cook—doc for TV) (as Tommy Wilhelm)

1987 Good Morning, Vietnam (Lewison) (as Adrian Cronauer); Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam (Couturie—doc for TV)

1989 Dead Poets Society (Weir) (as John Keating); The Adventures of Baron Munchausen (Gilliam) (as King of the Moon)

1990 Cadillac Man (Donaldson) (as Joey O’Brien); Awakenings (Penny Marshall) (as Dr. Malcolm Sayer)

1991 Dead Again (Branagh) (as Dr. Cozy Carlisle); The Fisher King (Gilliam) (as Parry); Hook (Speilberg) (as Peter Pan)

1992 Toys (Lewison) (as Leslie Zevo); Shakes the Clown (Goldthwait) (as Mime Jerry); FernGully: The Last Rainforest (Kroyer—animation) (as voice of Batty Koda); Aladdin (Musker and Clements—animation) (as voice of Genie)

1993 Mrs. Doubtfire (Columbus) (as Daniel Hillard/Mrs. Iphigenia Doubtfire, + co-pr)

1994 Being Human (Forysth) (as Hector); The Road to Wellville (Alan Parker) (In Search of Dr. Seuss (Paterson) (as the Father)

1995 Jumanji (Johnston) (as Alan Parrish); Nine Months (Columbus) (as Dr. Kosevich); To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything! Julie Newmar (Kidron) (as John Jacob Jingleheimer Schmidt)

1996 The Birdcage (Mike Nichols) (as Armand Goldman); Jack (Coppola) (title role); Hamlet (Branagh) (as Osric); The Secret Agent (Hampton) (as the Professor)

1997 Great Minds Think for Themselves (series for TV) (as voice of The Genie); Deconstructing Harry (Allen) (as Mel); Floobler (Mayfield) (as Professor Philip Brainard); Good Will Hunting (Van Sant) (as Sean Maguire)

1999 What Dreams May Come (Vincent Ward) (as Chris Nielsen); Patch Adams (Shadyac) (as title role); In My Life (Benson—for TV) (as himself)

1999 Get Bruce (Kuehn) (as himself); Jakob the Liar (Kassovitz) (as Jakob Heym + exec pr); Bicentennial Man (Columbus) (as Andrew)

Publications

By WILLIAMS: articles—

Interview in Interview (New York), August 1986.

Interview with Michel Cieutat, Hubert Niogret and Michel Ciment, in Positif (Paris), March 1994.

“I Always Wonder If People Laugh At, Or With, Me,” an interview with Andrew Duncan, in Radio Times (London), 16 December 1995.

Interview with B. Bibby, in Premiere (Boulder), April 1996.

On WILLIAMS: books—

On WILLIAMS: articles—

Ansen, David, “‘King of Comedy,’” in Newsweek (New York), 7 July 1986.

1291
Buried under makeup as Popeye or dragging the literary fantasy apparatus of The World According to Garp, Robin Williams failed to make his mark in his first two movies. It took Michael Ritchie’s messy contemporary comedy The Survivors to set loose the manic power of his stand-up persona. Williams’s ability to create a character as it disintegrates makes his Donald, a man who tries to prepare for urban chaos by joining a survivalist camp, a wild original. Williams canassert his star personality and stay in character even whilefunctioning as the most free-swinging element in very knockabout farce. The outlandishly thin-skinned Donald shows Williams in his most antic mode. This is also how he played Jack Dundee in The Best of Times, a man who cannot live down having blown his small-town high school football team’s final game. Manipulating the old team into replaying the game enables him to get past it—he has to get much crazier before he can calm down. Similarly, as Parry in Terry Gilliam’s Fisher King we first see Williams talking to “the little people” in conversational switches so fast he seems as much tic as man, and then learn how he became homeless and admittedly, cheerfully psychotic, and how he thinks he can recover. He sends co-star Jeff Bridges—as a burnt-out talk show DJ inadvertently responsible for the death of Williams’s wife—on a quest for the Holy Grail which manages to reintegrate them both. If Fisher King is not cloying that is largely because of the extended conversations among the four leads. Williams pairs off with an equally whacked-out Amanda Plummer, and romantic comedy never threw screwier balls. These three performances of William's cohere wonderfully but are not for people hung up on gradual transitions.

But he can do shading, too. He remains himself while acting in a naturalistic vein in Paul Mazursky's Moscow on the Hudson, playing a Russian saxophonist who defects in Bloomingdale's, and in Dead Poets Society as a prep-school teacher receiving students in his cramped quarters. Williams can be precious, but he is almost always earthy, with an amazingly unforced broadness of spirit. And he is gone bare-assed in his movies surprisingly often, unthinkable in someone like Danny Kaye. Williams is both freakier and warmer than most big comedy stars—freakier because he fires from a solidly realistic launching pad.

The other side of his performance in Dead Poets Society is, of course, the stand-up, which he first played as the DJ in Good Morning, Vietnam. These pictures give him audiences for his motormouth outbursts within the stories, and then attach our feelings for Williams the entertainer to paltry melodramas in which his characters try to save young boys. Williams as cutup, as opposed to Williams's characters who are cutups, comes across best in Aladdin in which he improvised as the voice of the Genie, leaving the animators to keep up. He made the comedy play at five times the speed of any other Disney cartoon feature.

Probably because of Williams’s unthreatening directness, several of his pictures function as baby-sitters—Hook, Toys, Mrs. Doubtfire, Jumanji. Even as a negligent father or a bitter man, as in Hook and Jumanji, the scripts make him unpleasant only to redeem him. And Williams is not someone who needs help being likable. Mrs. Doubtfire is the most successful of these vehicles because we can see that Daniel, who loses his wife and custody of their children because he cannot assume adult responsibility, really is the loose cannon his ex-wife complains of. Even the way he thwarts her, by getting himself hired in drag as his children’s nanny, seems more crazy than touching. This is hilariously clear whenever Williams as Mrs. Doubtfire cannot hold “her” tongue around the ex-wife’s new boyfriend. In the climactic restaurant scene Daniel sprints from a table where he is supposed to be in drag, to one where he is not, but has so many drinks he loses track. When Daniel in drag snickers that “she” has “to piss like a race-horse,” Williams adds burlesque pungency for the adults of all ages in the helpless audience.

As a middle-ground variation Williams can play the relative straight man—superbly to Tim Robbins’s deranged husband holding Williams’s philandering car salesman hostage in Cadillac Man, and less effectively to Nathan Lane as his drag queen “wife” in The Birdcage, a remake of La Cage aux folles. The Birdcage feels like something left onshore by a receding tide, but Williams plays it honest, unself-consciously adopting gay mannerisms. As a comedian Williams is commercial in the best sense and neither cynical or lazy. He has taken on a wide range of projects and varied his approach, letting co-star Bonnie Hunt in Jumanji provide the laugh-getting commentary on the action that we expect from Williams, or taking the less flamboyant role in The Birdcage in order to avoid simply repeating the formula of Mrs. Doubtfire. He challenges himself in a way that allows the audience to keep pace with him. And when he is sparkling we feel juiced for life.

—Alan Dale

WILLIS, Bruce

Nationality: American. Born: West Germany, 19 March 1955.
Education: Attended public school in Penn’s Grove, New Jersey; Montclair State College, New Jersey—left in 1977 before graduating; studied acting briefly with Stella Adler. Family: Married the actress Demi Moore, 1987 (divorced, 1998), daughters: Rumer Glenn, Scout LaRue, and Tallulah Belle. Career: 1977—stage debut, off-Broadway in Heaven and Earth; member of Barbara Contardi’s First Amendment Comedy Theatre; 1980—film debut, The First Deadly Sin; 1984—85—worked on TV: guest starred in Miami Vice (‘‘No Exit’’), Twilight Zone (‘‘Shatterday’’); 1985—89—starred in TV series Moonlighting (as David Addison); 1987—wrote, produced, starred in an HBO special, The Return of Bruno (as Bruno); 1987—first starring film role, Blind Date; also has performed and recorded as a R & B singer; has done advertisements for Levi’s jeans, Seagram’s Wine Coolers (1987), and Sears (1995). Awards: Best Actor Emmy Award, for Moonlighting, 1987. Agent: Arnold Rifkin, William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The First Deadly Sin (Hutton)</td>
<td>(extra, uncredited)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>The Verdict (Lumet)</td>
<td>(as courtroom observer, uncredited)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Blind Date (Edwards)</td>
<td>(as Walter Davis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Die Hard (McTiernan)</td>
<td>(as John McClane); Sunset (Edwards)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Tom Mix, + co-exec pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>In Country (Jewison)</td>
<td>(as Emmeth Smith); Look Who’s Talking (Heckerling)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as voice of Mikey); That’s Adequate (Hurwitz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Bonfire of the Vanities (DePalma)</td>
<td>(as Peter Fallow); Die Hard 2: Die Harder (Harlin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as John McClane); Look Who’s Talking Too (Heckerling)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as voice of Mikey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Billy Bathgate (Benton)</td>
<td>(as Bo Weinberg); Hudson Hawk (Lehmann)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Hudon Hawk; + co-story); The Last Boy Scout (Tony Scott)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Joe Hallenbeck); Mortal Thoughts (Rudolph)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as James Urbanski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Death Becomes Her (Zemeckis)</td>
<td>(as Ernest Menville); The Player (Altman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as himself)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>National Lampoon’s Loaded Weapon I (Quintano)</td>
<td>(as Wrong Mobile Home Owner, uncredited); Striking Distance (Herrington)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Tom Hardy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Color of Night (Rush)</td>
<td>(as Dr. Bill Capa); Nobody’s Fool (Benton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Carl Roebuck); North (Rob Reiner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as narrator); Pulp Fiction (Tarantino)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Butch Coolidge)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Die Hard: With a Vengeance (McTiernan)</td>
<td>(as John McClane); “The Man from Hollywood” ep. of Four Rooms (Tarantino)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Leo, uncredited); 12 Monkeys (Gilliam)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as James Cole)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Breakfast for Champions (Rudolph); Le Cinquieme element (The Fifth Element) (Besson)</td>
<td>(as Combat! (Hill)); Firestorm (Andrew Davis); Last Man Standing (Walter Hill)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as John Smith); Beavis and Butt-head Do America (Judge and Kaplan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as voice of Muddy Grimes); Bruno the Kid (series for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Bruno the Kid, mus, exec pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>The Jackal (Caton-Jones)</td>
<td>(title role); Apocalypse (as Trey Kincaide)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1998  Mercury Rising (Becker) (as Arthur “Art” Jeffries); Armageddon (Bay) (as Harry S. Stamper); The Siege (Zwick)

1999  Breakfast of Champions (Rudolph) (as Dwayne Hoover); The Sixth Sense (M. Night Shyamalan) (as Malcolm Crowe); The Story of Us (Rob Reiner) (as Ben Jordan)

2000  The Whole Nine Yards (Lynn) (as Jimmy Tudeski); The Kid (Turteltaub) (as Russ Duritz); Unbreakable (Shyamalan) (as David Dunne)

Publications

By WILLIS: articles—

Interview with Lawrence Grobel, in Playboy (Chicago), November 1988.

Interview with David Sheff, in Playboy (Chicago), February 1996.

On WILLIS: books—

On WILLIS: articles—

Bruce Willis has pioneered a character type that might be called the postmodern proletarian. When his seven years on-stage in New York led to television stardom with Moonlighting, all the elements of his arsenal were already on display. Like the show itself, Willis’s David Addison was at once a generic staple and a parody. Sturdy physically but stunted emotionally, private-eye Addison is a working man’s man as beleaguered as attracted by his nouvelle poor feminist boss (Cybill Shepherd). And yet Addison is also a self-aware, verbally hyperagile ironist—indeed, often a self-conscious media construct.

It is not surprising, given the loaded, conflicted range of emotions called forth from Willis by Moonlighting, that he has subsequently forged a multifaceted film persona: as an action hero, a comic foil, and a dramatic artist, a megastar and a supporting player. His pursuit of these many genres and modes of performance has resulted in some strikingly huge hits, and some flops of similar size. Blind Date, his first big-screen starring vehicle, faltered in its would-be comic reliance upon the smooth-talking, unevenly romantic side of Willis. (Sunset similarly did not translate his comic appeal for movie audiences.) Die Hard also deployed his mastery of flippancy, but sparingly, accentuating instead his aura of besieged masculinity. The displaced cop John McClane is, like most of Willis’s characters, a battling underdog. McClane, however, does not fight either against or beside a woman; with McClane, the class-edged wars waged by Willis’s characters begin to play out centrally not “between the sexes” but upon Willis’s ever more bruised, sweating (and even aging) body itself.

Having established himself as a bona fide box-office draw with Die Hard (thereby starting a franchise which went on to yield two lucrative sequels), Willis played a wrecked Vietnam veteran in the well-reviewed but little-seen drama. In Country. This sort of creative daring underpins the strain of slightly off-mainstream dramas which has combined with supremely mainstream action adventures and comedies to make up the three-pronged thrust of his post-Die Hard movie career. In Look Who’s Talking, Willis brought his comic timing alone to bear on yet a second multiple sequel-spawning franchise, as the voice of a toddler. North five years later is of the same genre, although it does allow Willis on-screen in a bunny suit. From 1989 to 1994, Willis had only uneven box-office and critical success, with Hudson Hawk, The Last Boy Scout, and Striking Distance (all in the Die Hard mode, all flops), and Bonfire of the Vanities, Billy Bathgate, Mortal Thoughts, Death Becomes Her, and Color of Night (all stretches—in all but the last Willis sacrifices top billing for artistic satisfaction—but none hits).

In 1994, however, Willis’s embrace of working acting and not just stardom paid handsome dividends in the capital of hip. As Butch Coolidge, doomed but unbowed boxer in wunderkind Quentin Tarantino’s Pulp Fiction, Willis is a perfect match for Tarantino’s characteristic man-to-man battering, and bantering. By 1996, Variety would publish a column praising Willis’s willingness to accept little money to do low-budget but high-quality projects; such publicity around films such as Pulp Fiction and Nobodys Fool countermanded the rash of earlier articles that had decried the “excess” of Willis’s multimillion dollar per picture salaries.

His thinning hair shaved to the nub, Willis was not first-billed in Pulp Fiction; but his performance in it surely helped win him the similarly coifed lead role of James Cole in Terry Gilliam’s 1995 remake of the Chris Marker landmark La Jetée, 12 Monkeys. Cole allows all of Willis’s talents to shine, in a way that not one of his projects has since Moonlighting. A man under attack from unknown quarters, very possibly from the very social forces that command him, Cole fights through abuse and confusion—at first against, then towards, and finally alongside a psychiatrist played by Madeleine Stowe. The moment when Cole hears a pop song on the doctor’s car radio epitomizes what Willis brings to the film, and to film in general. Stress draining from his face, Cole’s unwillingly assumed armor drops away for an instant as he connects to something of the best in human creation, trivial as it may seem to the unenlightened. Willis knows how to depict not only the fight but what the fight is for, and it is this that has made him one of the modern screen’s most prominent artists of the ordinary man.

—Susan Knobloch

WINSLET, Kate

Nationality: British. Born: Reading, Berkshire, England, 5 October 1975; father Roger Winslet (actor), mother Sally; two sisters, Anna and Beth, both actors, one brother, Joss. Education: Redroofs Theatre School, Maidenhead, 1986–1991. Family: Married assistant director Jim Threapleton, November 1998. Career: Left school aged sixteen; gained acting experience in TV commercials; worked in a delicatessen after Heavenly Creatures, 1994; nominated for Best Supporting Actress Oscar for Sense and Sensibility, 1996. Awards: London Critics Circle ALFS Award for British Actress of the Year, for Heavenly Creatures, 1996; British Academy Awards (BAFTA) for Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role, and Screen Actors Guild Award for Outstanding performance by a Female Actor in a Supporting Role, for Sense and Sensibility, 1996; Evening Standard British Film Award for Best Actress, for Sense and Sensibility and Jude, 1997; European Film Awards Audience Award for Best Actress, and Blockbuster Entertainment Award for Favorite Actress, for Titanic, 1998. Agents: Dallas Smith, Peters Fraser and Dunlop Ltd., 503 The Chambers, Chelsea Harbour, Lots Road, London SW10 0XF, UK; William Morris Agency, 1325 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10009, USA.

Films as Actor:

1994 Heavenly Creatures (Jackson) (as Juliet Hulme)
1995 A Kid in King Arthur’s Court (Gottleib) (as Princess Sarah); Sense and Sensibility (Lee) (as Marianne Dashwood)
Kate Winslet and Leonardo DiCaprio in Titanic

1996  Jude (Winterbottom) (as Sue Bridehead); Hamlet (William Shakespeare’s Hamlet) (Branagh) (as Ophelia)
1997  Titanic (Cameron) (as Rose DeWitt Bukater)
1998  Hideous Kinky (Marrakech Express) (MacKinnon) (as Julia)
1999  Holy Smoke (Campion) (as Ruth)
2000  Quills (Kaufman) (as Madeleine Le Clerc)

Publications:

By WINSLET: articles—

Interview with Stephen Applebaum in Total Film (London), June 1997.

On WINSLET: articles—

* * *

Kate Winslet—who is for American audiences the embodiment of English womanhood—began acting full-time at the age of sixteen and made her television debut in a commercial for Sugar Puffs breakfast cereal in the United Kingdom. She made several appearances in British TV dramas, such as the hospital-based soap, Casualty, before moving into film at the age of nineteen in Heavenly Creatures. Winslet grew up in a theatrical family in Reading, a town west of London, and wanted to be an actor from an early age. Interviewers describe her as brimming with energy and enthusiasm for life. David Lipsky, in Rolling Stone, explains: “Everything she says has special effects in it: Those effects are the words brilliant, absolutely and gorgeous, and because of them, what she says really does seem brilliant, gorgeous and absolute, a slightly better world than the one you live in.”

Winslet has a reputation for taking on challenging projects, immersing herself in the roles she plays. Her big-screen debut in Heavenly Creatures, a film that explores murder and obsession, was difficult for an actress known for being intensely “method.” In it she plays Juliet Hulme alongside Melanie Lynskey as Pauline Parker, in the true story of two New Zealand schoolgirls in 1954 who murder Parker’s mother in order to stay together. The film was praised in particular for the subtlety of its portrayal of the two girls, and Winslet’s strong performance established her as talented and determined young actress.

Winslet’s on-screen persona as the typical English girl was cemented in the films Sense and Sensibility and Jude. A period costume adaptation of Jane Austen’s novel of the same name, Sense and Sensibility saw Winslet playing Marianne Dashwood alongside Emma Thompson as Elinor. There was a danger here of casting to type, with Thompson playing the sensible older sister while Winslet immersed herself in romantic fantasies. But the two became friends, and Winslet benefited from Thompson’s greater experience. Her next film role, as Sue Bridehead, came from the same mould, but Jude is a tragedy of unrelenting gloom, and provides a hint of Winslet’s wider abilities, which she was to show more compellingly as Ophelia in Kenneth Branagh’s Hamlet in the same year.

After making her name in period films, Winslet became the envy of teenage girls everywhere when she co-starred with Leonardo di Caprio in Titanic. It is characteristic of her drive and determination that Winslet fought hard to win the chance to be in the film, telephoning director Cameron directly to tell him “I am Rose.” Like many of Cameron’s films, the making of Titanic was an arduous process; many scenes involved the actors being immersed in cold water for hours at a time, or suspended at the top of enormous structures. Yet Winslet took it all in stride, winning the respect of the crew for her good humour and lack of affectation.

After Titanic, Winslet had the opportunity to take on more high profile and lucrative projects, but her choice of film roles suggests more interest in acting than stardom. Hideous Kinky, her first film after the Cameron blockbuster, was an interesting, if disappointing choice, and however successful it is with the critics, Holy Smoke, Jane Campion’s film about the effects of cult religious groups, is not a star vehicle.

Always more interested in pursuing her enthusiasms than doing what is expected of her, Kate Winslet’s career so far has been a curious mixture of idiosyncratic serious movies and popular acclaim. While Titanic demonstrated her abilities in the role of romantic lead, she has yet to accumulate a body of work sufficient to prove herself as a character actress of lasting significance. Winslet has recently branched out into producing, and her first project, Therese Raquin, in which she will play the title role, is expected to appear in 2001.

—Chris Routledge

WINTERS, Shelley

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Character Name</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>What a Woman!</td>
<td>(Cummings)</td>
<td>(as secretary)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Knickerbocker Holiday</td>
<td>(Brown)</td>
<td>(as Ulda Tienhoven); She’s a Soldier Too (Castle)</td>
<td>(as “Silver” Rankin); Sailor’s Holiday (Berke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Tonight and Every Night</td>
<td>(Saville)</td>
<td>(as Bubbles); A Thousand and One Nights</td>
<td>(as handmaiden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Two Smart People</td>
<td>(Dassin)</td>
<td>(as Princess)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>The Gangster</td>
<td>(Wiles)</td>
<td>(as Hazel); A Double Life (Cukor)</td>
<td>(as Pat Kroll); Living in a Big Way (La Cava); New Orleans</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Cry of the City</td>
<td>(Siodmak)</td>
<td>(as Brenda); Larceny (Sherman)</td>
<td>(as Tory); Red River (Hawks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>The Great Gatsby</td>
<td>(Nugent)</td>
<td>(as Myrtle Wilson); Take One False Step (Erskine)</td>
<td>(as Catherine Sykes); Johnny Stool Pigeon (Castle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>South Sea Sinner</td>
<td>(East of Java)</td>
<td>(Humberstone)</td>
<td>(as Coral); Winchester ’73 (Anthony Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>A Place in the Sun</td>
<td>(Stevens)</td>
<td>(as Alice Tripp); He Ran All the Way (Berry)</td>
<td>(as Peggy); Behave Yourself!</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Phone Call from a Stranger</td>
<td>(Negulesco)</td>
<td>(as Binky Gay); My Man and I</td>
<td>(as Wellman); Untamed Frontier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Saskatchewan</td>
<td>(O’Rourke of the Royal Mounted)</td>
<td>(Walsh)</td>
<td>(as Grace Markey); Executive Suite (Wise)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1955 Mambo (Rossen) (as Toni Salerno); The Night of the Hunter (Laughton) (as Willa Harper); I Am a Camera (Cornelius) (as Natalia Landauer); The Big Knife (Aldrich) (as Dixie Evans); The Treasure of Pancho Villa (Sherman) (as Ruth Harris); I Died a Thousand Times (Heisler) (as Marie)

1956 To Dorothy, a Son (Cash on Delivery) (Box) (as Myrtle La Mar)

1959 The Diary of Anne Frank (Stevens) (as Mrs. Van Daan); Odds against Tomorrow (Wise) (as Lorry); Let No Man Write My Epitaph (Leacock) (as Nellie)

1961 The Young Savages (Frankenheimer) (as Mary Di Pace)

1962 Lolita (Kubrick) (as Charlotte Haze); The Chapman Report (Cukor) (as Sarah Garnell)

1963 The Balcony (Strick) (as Madame Irma); Wives and Lovers (Rich) (as Fran Cabrell)

1964 A House Is Not a Home (Rouse) (as Polly Adler); Gli Indifferenti (A Time of Indifference) (Maselli) (as Lisa)

1965 The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens) (as woman of no name); A Patch of Blue (Green) (as Rose-Ann D'Arcy)

1966 Harper (The Moving Target) (Smight) (as Fay Estabrook); Alfie (Gilbert) (as Ruby)

1967 Enter Laughing (Carl Reiner) (as Mrs. Kolowitz)

1968 The Scalphunters (Pallock) (as Kate); Wild in the Streets (Shear) (as Mrs. Flatow); Buona Sera, Mrs. Campbell (Frank) (as Shirley Newman); The Mad Room (Girard) (as Mrs. Armstrong)

1969 Arthur! Arthur! (Gallu)

1970 Bloody Mama (Corman) (as Ma Barker); How Do I Love Thee (Gordon) (as Lena Mervin); Flap (The Last Warrior) (Reed)

1971 What's the Matter with Helen? (Harrington) (title role); Who Slew Auntie Roo? (Harrington) (as Rosie Forrest); Revenge! (Taylor—for TV) (as Amanda Hilton); A Death of Innocence (Wendkos—for TV)

1972 Something to Hide (Reid) (as Gabriella); The Poseidon Adventure (Neame) (as Belle Rosen); The Adventures of Nick Carter (Krasny—for TV)

1973 Blume in Love (Mazursky) (as Mrs. Carmer); Cleopatra Jones (Starrett) (as Mommy); The Devil's Daughter (Szwarc—for TV) (as Lilith Malone)

1974 Double Indemnity (Smith—for TV); The Sex Symbol (Rich—for TV); Big Rose (Krasny—for TV); Journey into Fear (Daniel Mann) (as Mrs. Mathews)
1975 That Lucky Touch (Miles) (as Diane Steedman)
1976 Next Stop, Greenwich Village (Mazursky) (as Mrs. Lapinsky); Diamonds (Golan) (as Zelda Shapiro); The Tenant (Polanski) (as the concierge)
1977 Tentacles (Hellman) (as Tillie Turner); Pete’s Dragon (Chaffey) (as Lena Gogan); The Three Sisters (Bogart) (as Natalya); Un borghese piccolo piccolo (An Average Man) (Monicelli)
1978 King of the Gypsies (Pierson) (as Queen Rachel); The Initiation of Sarah (Day—for TV) (as Miss Erica); Elvis (Carpenter) (as Elvis’s mother)
1979 Redneck Country (Robinson); City on Fire (Bakoff) (as Nurse Andrea Harper); The Magician of Lublin (Golan) (as Eliza)
1980 Il visitatore (The Visitor) (Paradisei) (as Jane Phillips)
1981 S.O.B. (Edwards) (as Eva Brown); Loopy (Bockmayer); My Mother, My Daughter (Werba)
1983 Fanny Hill (O’Hara)
1984 Ellie (Wittman) (as Cora); Over the Brooklyn Bridge (Golan) (as Becky Sherman)
1985 Déjà Vu (Richmond) (as Olga Nabokov)
1986 Witchfire (Privitera) (as Lydia); The Delta Force (Golan) (as Eddie Kaplan); Very Close Quarters (Rif) (as Galina)
1987 Marilyn Monroe: Beyond the Legend (Feldman—TV doc)
1988 The Purple People Eater (Shayne) (as Rita)
1989 An Unremarkable Life (Chaudri) (as Evelyn McCllany)
1990 Helena (Vuille); Touch of a Stranger (Brad Gilbert) (as Lily)
1991 The Linguini Incident (Shepherd); Stepping Out (Lewis Gilbert) (as Mrs. Fraser); Superstar: The Life and Times of Andy Warhol (Workman—doc)
1992 Weep No More, My Lady (Andrieu—for TV) (as Vi)
1993 The Pickle (Mazursky) (as Yetta)
1994 Il Silenzio dei Prosciutti (The Silence of the Hams) (Greggio)
1995 Jury Duty (Fortenberry) (as Mrs. Collins); Heavy (Mangold) (as Dolly); Backfire (A. Dean Bell) (as Lieut. Shithouse); Raging Angels (Smithee) (as Grandma Ruth)
1996 Marlon Brando: The Wild One (Joyce—for TV) (as herself); The Portrait of a Lady (Campion) (as Mrs. Touchett)
1999 Gideon (Hoover) (as Mrs. Willows); La Bomba (Base) (as Prof. Summers)

Publications

By WINTERS: books—

Shelley, also Known as Shirley, New York, 1980.

By WINTERS: articles—

Interview in Photoplay (London), December 1971.
Lilley, J., “Chilling Winters,” in Scarlet Street (Glen Rock), Summer 1993.
“A Winter’s Tale,” an interview with G. Fuller, in Interview, May 1996.

On WINTERS: articles—

* * *

Despite performances that generally rise above them, the films of Shelley Winters are overwhelmingly mediocre or forgettable. From them emerge key stock figures who, for better or worse, epitomize the role to which she became progressively typed: blond, imitation-Harlow bombshells; vulgar but vulnerable victims; mistresses; whorehouse madames; and Jewish mothers in caftans. The offscreen image of a brassy, high-flying sexpot—fostered by Universal—International’s publicity department—and reports of tantrums thrown on and off the set heightened the public’s early association of the actress with the parts she played and evolved in due course into the television talk show blabbermouth regaling Johnny, Merv, Jay, and Dave.

But Shelley Winters’s extensive stage and screen credits, spanning four decades, are dotted with surprises. In her aspirations and, occasionally, her achievements, she has revealed herself to be an actress of deceptive complexity. Nurtured by directors George Cukor (A Double Life, The Chapman Report) and, especially, George Stevens (A Place in the Sun, The Diary of Anne Frank, The Greatest Story Ever Told), she intuitively began to explore her roles with Method creatively before she or they fully grasped its theoretical base.

Intent on stretching her acting range beyond the level offered by most of her Hollywood assignments, Winters commuted regularly to New York, where for six years she observed Elia Kazan and Lee Strasberg in action during the formative years of the Actors Studio. Upon expiration of her Universal contract, she risked a return to Broadway (where in the 1940s she had replaced Celeste Holm as Ado Annie in Rodgers and Hammerstein’s musical Oklahoma!) to star, triumphantly, as a drug addict’s wife in Michael Gazzo’s play A Hatful of Rain. Officially admitted to Actors Studio membership, she continued to appear through this period, arguably the richest of her career, in important dramatic roles on Broadway, in repertory, on national tours, and on television. Until then, she once told an interviewer, “I never really believed I was an actress. It didn’t matter what they said to me about it. I thought it was the publicity jazz and the blonde hair and bosoms. . . . I thought it was an accident.”

But A Place in the Sun was no accident. She fought aggressively for the role and, as Alice Tripp in George Stevens’s adaptation of Theodore Dreiser’s An American Tragedy, drew the definitive Winters screen characterization. The brash Universal late-1940s blonde, on loan to Paramount, was transformed into Dreiser’s mousy, whiny mill girl in an early 1950s performance of remarkable subtlety and depth. Though she received co-star billing (and was nominated for a Best Actress Oscar), Winters’s film career has been essentially fulfilled as a character actress in unsympathetic roles, as her two Best Supporting Actress Academy Awards—for grasping Mrs. Van Daan in Diary of Anne Frank and the monstrous Rose-Ann D’Arcy in A Patch of Blue—attest.
George Cukor’s A Double Life, the film that triggered her rise to fame, Charles Laughton’s Night of the Hunter (from James Agee’s script), and Stanley Kubrick’s Lolita (from Vladimir Nabokov’s novel) also endure as landmark Winters films. In all three, she meets characteristically premature, violent—and memorable—ends. Winters’s performance style and her persona, particularly as a psychotic, deluded, aging hag, has led to a cult status of sorts, particularly around several of her lesser, trashier films. Note Something to Hide, in which she plays the nagging, pathetic wife of Peter Finch (again meeting a memorable end). Also Heartbreak Motel, in which she plays the insane, possessive wife of the motel’s owner. In 1971 alone she played a murderous psycho addicted to religious radio broadcasts in What’s the Matter with Helen?, and the deranged maternal figure with a fetish for orphans in Who Slew Auntie Roo? Both are excellent examples of Winters’s unique ability to turn even the most dismal scripts into over-the-top camp hilarity.

Like so many actors and—especially—actresses of a certain age, Winters is now rarely cast in major motion pictures. She continues to work, however, usually appearing in minimally reviewed films. Invariably, she performs competently, sometimes (as in so many of her earlier screen appearances) rising well above her material. Note her nice turn as Mrs. Fraser, the grouchy pianist in Stepping Out, adapted from the popular English stage comedy as a vehicle for Liza Minnelli.

—Mark W. Estrin, updated by Matthew Hays

WONG, Anna May

Nationality: American. Born: Wong Liu Tsong in Los Angeles, California, 3 January 1905. Education: Attended California Street School, Chinese Mission School, a Chinese school, and Los Angeles High School. Career: 1919—film debut at age 14 in The Red Lantern; 1921—first credited role in Bits of Life; 1922—first starring role in The Toll of the Sea; 1928—made her first film in Germany, Song; 1929—stage debut in The Circle of Chalk with Laurence Olivier in London; made first film in England, Piccadilly; 1930—New York stage debut in On the Spot; on tour in Brooklyn, Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Los Angeles; on stage in Vienna in Tschun Tsch (Springtime), which she also produced; 1933—special one-week appearance in Blackpool, England, on stage in Variety Fair; 1934—on stage in Italy, Switzerland, and the British Isles; 1935—on stage in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden; 1937—stars in Princess Turandot at the Westchester Playhouse, Mount Kisco, NY, and Westport, Connecticut; 1939—on stage in Melbourne, Australia; 1951—TV debut starring in The Gallery of Mme. Liu-Tsong. Died: In Santa Monica, California, 3 February 1961.

Films as Actress:

1919 The Red Lantern (Capellani) (uncredited bit as lantern bearer)
1920 Dinty (Neilan and MacDermott) (uncredited bit)
1921 The First Born (Campbell) (uncredited bit as servant); Outside the Law (Browning) (uncredited bit as Chinese girl); Bits of Life (Neilan) (as Toy Sing); Shame (Flynn) (as Lotus Blossom)

1922 The Toll of the Sea (Franklin) (as Lotus Flower)
1923 Mary of the Movies (McDermott) (herself); Drifting (Browning) (as Rose Li); Thundering Dawn (Garson) (as honky-tonk girl)
1924 The Alaskan (Brenon) (as Keok); The Thief of Bagdad (Walsh) (as the Mongol slave); The Fortieth Door (Seitz—serial) (as Zira); Peter Pan (Brenon) (as Tiger Lily)
1925 Forty Winks (Urson and Iribe) (as Annabelle Wu); His Supreme Moment (Fitzmaurice) (as harem girl in play); Screen Snapshots No. 3 (short) (as herself)
1926 Fifth Avenue (Vignola) (as Nan Lo); A Trip to Chinatown (Kerr) (as Ohtai); The Silk Bouquet (as Dragon Horse); The Desert’s Toll (Smith) (as Oneta)
1927 Driven from Home (Young); Mr. Wu (Nigh) (as Loo Song); The Honorable Mr. Buggs (Jackman—short) (as Baroness Stoloff); Old San Francisco (Crosland) (as Chinese girl); The Chinese Parrot (Leni) (as Nautch dancer); The Devil Dancer (Niblo and Rebich Shores) (as Sada); Streets of Shanghai (Gasnier) (as Su Quan)
1928 Across to Singapore (Nigh) (as Bailarina); The Crimson City (Mayo) (as Su); Chinatown Charlie (Hines) (as the Mandarin’s sweetheart); Song (Eichberg) (title role)
1929 Großstadtschmetterling (The City Butterfly) (Eichberg) (as Mah); Piccadilly (Dupont) (as Sho-Sho)
1930 The Road to Dishonour (Eichberg) (as Hai-Tang); Hai-Tang (German version of The Road to Dishonour) (title role); L’Amour Maître Des Choses (French version of The Road to Dishonour) (Kemm) (as Hai-Tang); Elstree Calling
Publications

By WONG: article—

On WONG: book—

On WONG: articles—

“Anna May Wong: Combination of East and West,” in New York Herald Tribune, 9 November 1930.

Davis, Mac, “Fled from Fame for 5 Years,” in New York Enquirer, 18 February 1957.

Anna May Wong is chiefly remembered as the first actress of Asian extraction to achieve stardom and as the epitome of the “Oriental temptress,” so much a fixture of melodramas in the late 1920s and 1930s. She began at Metro in 1919 at the age of 14 with a bit part in a Nazimova vehicle, The Red Lantern, and continued in such roles until receiving her initial screen credit in the first anthology film, Bits of Life. Although she starred in the first true Technicolor feature made in Hollywood, Toll of the Sea, and had an important role in Douglas Fairbanks’s classic fantasy, The Thief of Bagdad, most of the remainder of her Hollywood films in the 1920s saw her as either an exotic dancer or a temptress.

Fed up with that stereotype, she fled to more tolerant Europe in 1928, where she became a true star in German and British films. She also appeared on stage in London, Vienna, Oslo, Copenhagen, Goteborg, Switzerland, Italy, and throughout the British Isles, with periodic returns to New York and Hollywood up until 1935. In 1936 she visited China for the only time, where she purchased costumes that she later used in films and on stage. The following year she was back in Hollywood under contract at Paramount, for whom she made four thrillers in three years, as well as a loan-out to Warner Brothers, none of which aided her flagging film career. She traveled to Australia in 1939, where she appeared on stage in Melbourne to raise funds for Chinese War Relief, to which she devoted her energies up until the end of World War II, appearing only in two Poverty Row productions during the war, after which she was in virtual retirement form the screen. She appeared in one film in 1949, and two years later tackled television in her own series on the Dumont network, which lasted only 11 episodes. She appeared on a number of television programs throughout the 1950s before her final film appearance in Portrait in Black in 1960.

—Philip Leibfried

WOOD, Natalie

Films as Actress:

1943 Happy Land (Pichel)
1946 Tomorrow Is Forever (Pichel); The Bride Wore Boots (Pichel)
1947 Miracle on 34th Street (The Big Heart) (Seaton) (as Susan Walker); Driftdown (Dwan); The Ghost and Mrs. Mui (Mankiewicz) (as Anna)
1948 Scudda-Hoo! Scudda-Hay! (Herbert) (as Bean McGill)
1949 Chicken Every Sunday (Seaton); Father Was a Fullback (Stahl); The Green Promise (Russell)
1950 No Sad Songs for Me (Maté); The Jackpot (Walker Lang); Our Very Own (Miller); Never a Dull Moment (Marshall)
1951 Dear Brat (Setter); The Blue Veil (Bernhardt)
1952 Just for You (Nugent); The Rose Bowl Story (Beaudine)
Natalie Wood (1938–1981) was an American actress known for her roles in film and television. Born in San Francisco, California, she began her career as a child actor in the late 1930s and continued to work in films and on television throughout her life. Despite her early success and lasting impact on cinema, her personal life was marked by tragedy, including the death of her father and her own sudden passing in 1981.

1953
The Star (Heisler)

1954
The Silver Chalice (Saville)

1955
One Desire (Hopper); Rebel Without a Cause (Ray) (as Judy)

1956
A Cry in the Night (Tuttle); The Searchers (Ford); The Burning Hills (Heisler); The Girl He Left Behind (Butler)

1957
Bombers B-52 (Douglas); Marjorie Morningstar (Rapper); No Sleep Till Dawn (Douglas)

1958
Kings Go Forth (Daves)

1959
Cash McCall (Pevney)

1960
All the Fine Young Cannibals (Anderson)

1961
West Side Story (Wise and Robbins) (as Maria); Splendor in the Grass (Kazan) (as Wilma Dean Loomis)

1962
Gypsy (LeRoy) (title role)

1963
Love with the Proper Stranger (Mulligan) (as Angie Ronnini)

1964
Sex and the Single Girl (Quine) (as Helen Gurley Brown)

1965
The Great Race (Edwards) (as Maggie DuBois)

1966
Penelope (Hiller) (title role); This Property Is Condemned (Pollack) (as Alva Starr); Inside Daisy Clover (Mulligan) (title role)

1969
Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice (Mazursky) (as Carol Sanders)

1972
The Candidate (Ritchie); I’m a Stranger Here Myself (Helpern—for doc) (as herself)

1973
The Affair (Cates—for TV)

1975
Peeper (Hyams) (as Ellen Prendergast)

1976
Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Moore—for TV) (as Maggie)

1979
Meteor (Neame) (as Tatiana); The Cracker Factory (Brinckerhoff—for TV)

1980
The Last Married Couple in America (Cates) (as Mari Thompson); Willie and Phil (Mazursky)

1981
Brainstorm (Trumbull) (as Karen Brace)

Publications

On WOOD: books—

On WOOD: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), December 1989.

* * *

Natalie Wood’s death in 1981 at the age of 43 brought to an abrupt end one of the most enduring careers in cinema history. Often referred to as “Hollywood’s youngest veteran,” she had worked in films almost continuously since her first screen appearance at the age of five in Happy Land. With apparent ease, she negotiated the occupational minefields which for most of her contemporaries had spelled disaster. She made a fluent transition from child actress to teenage star, survived the studio system, and achieved a metamorphosis from lightweight starlet into serious actress. Since she was never considered a great actress—in fact, it was customary among industry observers to poke fun at her limitations—her staying power poses an intriguing conundrum.

As a child, Wood tended to play minor roles in films featuring established stars. Although she was pretty and pert, she was seldom, if ever, expected to outshine the chief luminaries. Sometimes she served merely as a foil; at other times, as in Miracle on 34th Street, she was pivotal to the plot but not required to carry films on her own merits. This early career as a scene-stealer rather than as a star may have eased her transition to older parts. The public grew accustomed to her face but it did not learn to idolize her or to expect too much. Her transition to older roles was also facilitated by a change in her screen persona. As a child, she could be bratty or sweet, but she was always lively and confident. As a teenager and young adult, she was tentative, insecure, and vulnerable. In this way, Wood offered audiences a new screen identity and it was one with which female audiences of her own age group could readily identify. In Rebel without a Cause, a watershed in her career development, she, along with James Dean, perfectly captured the unfocused restlessness of a generation.

After an undistinguished phase as Warner’s resident love interest, Wood’s star status gained immeasurably from the popular success of West Side Story. It was Splendor in the Grass, however, which first earned her respect as an adult actress. As a young woman whose sexual impulses are constrained by society’s moral imperatives, she struck a recognizable chord with the moviegoing public. The part earned Wood her second Academy Award nomination (the first was for Rebel without a Cause). Love with the Proper Stranger (her third Oscar nomination) was her finest achievement. Her performance was notable for its dramatic range and for the depth of feeling conveyed by nonverbal technique. It was also another film which probed a contemporary moral dilemma—the choice between a precarious independence and marriage for convenience’s sake.

Her screen image as a vulnerable, put-upon female endured in films such as Inside Daisy Clover and This Property Is Condemned, but it found decreasing popular and critical favor. At the height of her fame, seemingly aware of the need to diversify, Wood branched out into comedy. In this new incarnation, however, she was only intermittently successful. Her best comedy performance was in Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice, a brilliant satire on the 1960s obsession with self-discovery and sexual freedom. Unfortunately, her comedic talent was never again harnessed to good effect. During the 1970s her film appearances were infrequent and unexceptional, and she turned increasingly to television. In this medium, as in cinema, her record was uneven. Although she was widely lambasted for her performance in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, she drew critical praise for her portrait of a manic-depressive housewife in The Cracker Factory. At the time of her death, she was planning to make her stage debut in a production of Anastasia.

Throughout her career, Wood seemed more at ease when she was one step removed from the limelight. In Inside Daisy Clover, the only film in which she was the principal focus of attention, she seemed uncomfortable with her responsibilities. In the much underrated Gypsy, she was more convincing as the mousy daughter sitting on the sidelines than as the brassy burlesque artist occupying center stage. Her ability to survive in an industry notorious for its casualties owed something to this capacity for self-effacement. All her life, she seemed content to support rather than to compete with her fellow actors. Equally important to her longevity as a film actress was her willingness to diversify. She was also helped by the perennial youthfulness of her looks. If Natalie Wood often failed to shine, she nevertheless brightened many moments in cinema history. Her legacy is a memorable series of portraits which threw penetrating light on the changing mores of her generation.

—Fiona Valentine

WOODS, James

Films as Actor:

1971 All the Way Home (Coe—for TV) (as Andrew)
1972 The Visitors (Kazan) (as Bill Schmidt); Hickey and Boggs (Culp) (as Lt. Wyatt); Footsteps (Nice Guys Finish Last) (Wendkos—for TV) (as reporter); A Great American Tragedy (J. Lee Thompson—for TV) (as Rick)
1973 The Way We Were (Pollack) (as Frankie McVeigh)
1974 The Gambler (Reisz) (as bank officer)
1975 Distance (Lover) (as Larry); Night Moves (Arthur Penn) (as Quentin); Foster and Laurie (Moxey—for TV) (as the addict)
1976 Alex and the Gypsy (Love and Other Crimes) (Korty) (as Crainpool); F. Scott Fitzgerald in Hollywood (Anthony Page—for TV) (as Lenny Schoenfeld); The Disappearance of Aimee (Anthony Harvey—for TV) (as Joseph Ryan)
1977 The Choirboys (Aldrich) (as Harold Bloomgard); Raid on Entebbe (Kershner—for TV) (as Capt. Sammy Berg)
1978 The Gift of Love (Chaffey—for TV) (as Alfred Browning)
1979 The Onion Field (Becker) (as Gregory Powell); And Your Name Is Jonah (Richard Michaels—for TV) (as Danny Corelli); The Incredible Journey of Doctor Meg Laurel (Guy Green—for TV) (as the Sin Eater)
1980 The Black Marble (Becker) (as Fiddler)
1981 Eyewitness (The Janitor) (Yates) (as Aldo Mercer)
1982 Fast-Walking (James B. Harris) (as Fast-Walking Miniver); Split Image (Kotchek) (as Charles Pratt)
1983 Videodrome (Cronenberg) (as Max Renn)
1984 Against All Odds (Hackford) (as Jake Wise); Once upon a Time in America (Leone) (as Max)
1985 Cat’s Eye (Teague) (as Morrison); Joshua Then and Now (Kotchek) (as Joshua Shapiro); Badge of the Assassin (Damski—for TV) (as Robert K. Tannenbaum)
1986 Salvador (Olive Stone) (as Richard Boyle); Promise (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as D. J.)
1987 Best Seller (John Flynn) (as Cleve); In Love and War (Paul Aaron—for TV) (as Jim Stockdale)
1988 Cop (James B. Harris) (as Lloyd Hopkins, + co-pr); The Boost (Becker) (as Lenny Brown)
1989 True Believer (Ruben) (as Eddie Dodd); Immediate Family (Parental Guidance) (Kaplan) (as Michael Spector); My Name Is Bill W. (Petrie—for TV) (as Bill Wilson)
1990 Women and Men: Stories of Seduction (Tony Richardson—for TV) (as Robert)
1991 The Hard Way (Badham) (as John Moss); The Boys (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Walter Farmer)
James Woods (with crossbow) in John Carpenter’s Vampires

1992
Straight Talk (Kellman) (as Jack Russell);
Diggstown (Midnight Sting) (Ritchie) (as Gabriel Caine);
Chaplin (Attenborough) (as Lawyer Scott);
Citizen Cohn (Pierson—for TV) (title role)

1994
The Getaway (Donaldson) (as Jack Benyon);
The Specialist (Llosa) (as Ned Trent);
Jane’s House (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Paul Clark);
Next Door (Tony Bill—for TV) (as Matt Coler)

1995
Casino (Scorcese) (as Lester Diamond);
Nixon (Oliver Stone) (as H. R. “Bob” Haldeman);
Indictment: The McMartin Trial (Mick Jackson—for TV) (as Daniel Davis);
Curse of the Starving Class (McClary—for TV) (as Weston Tate)

1996
For Better or Worse (Jason Alexander) (as James);
The Killer (Metcalfe) (as Carl Panzram);
The Summer of Ben Tyler (Seidelman—for TV) (as Temple Rayburn)

1997
Hercules (as voice of Hades, Lord of the Dead);
Kicked in the Head (Harrison) (as Uncle Sam);
Contact (Zemeckis) (as Michael Kitz)

1998
America’s Endangered Species: Don’t Say Good-bye (Kenner—doc for TV) (as Narrator);
Hercules (series for TV) (as Hades, Lord of the Underworld);
Another Day in Paradise (Clark—as pr) (as Mel)

1999
Hercules: Zero to Hero (as voice of Hades, Lord of the Dead);
True Crime (Eastwood) (as Alan Mann);
The Virgin Suicides (Sofia Coppola) (as Mr. Lisbon);
The General’s Daughter (West) (as Col. Robert Moore);
Any Given Sunday (Stone) (as Dr. Harvey Mandrake)

2000
Dirty Pictures (Pierson—for TV) (as Dennis)

Publications

By WOODS: articles—

Interview with C. Dreifus, in Playboy (Chicago), April 1982.
Interview in Cinefantastique (Forest Park, Illinois), 1983–84.

On WOODS: articles—

Meley, D., “’The Voice of Experience,’’ in Screen Actor (Los Angeles), 1981.
Seberechts, K., “’Once upon a Time in America,’’ in Film en Televisie (Brussels), September 1984.
Babitz, E., “’Out of the Woods,’’ in American Film (Farmingtondale, New York), May 1987.
Mayer, M., “’James Woods,’’ in Film und Fernsehen (Potsdam, Germany), 1988.
“’James Woods: He’s Brash, Always Unpredictable, but He’s Not Psychotic, Is He?’’ in American Film (Los Angeles), May 1990.
Seberechts, K., “’Woods in Mineur,’’ in Film en Televisie (Brussels), April 1991.
“’Open Challenge to Woods,’’ in Moveline (Escondido, California), September 1991.
Clark, J., “’Into the Woods,’’ in Premiere (Boulder), March 1997.

* * *

Hyper live-wire James Woods understandably grew weary of being typecast as the scum of the earth. What is less comprehensible is his professed desire to be perceived as a conventional leading man when bland emoting in a high-toned soaper such as Immediate Family or a fizzless comedy such as Straight Talk reveals this actor at his most forgettable. (Did Jack Nicholson ever lose any sleep wishing that he could be George Peppard?) If the movies have never treated the unhandsome Woods like a star, television has proven liberating for the outspoken actor who varies backup work in high-profile prestige such as Casino and Nixon with superb delineations of more complex roles in television fare such as Indictment: The McMartin Trial, Citizen Cohn, and The Boys.

Leaving academic pursuits behind (after an injury to his right arm ended his dream of a career in medicine), Woods threw himself into the hard-knocks school of theatrical ventures. By the time he was taking bows off and on Broadway (even fooling the producers of The Borstal Boy into believing he was actually from Liverpool), the edgy actor felt frustrated by his opportunities and began concertedly studying film acting, self-taught by viewing movies. Putting his research to work with a master, Elia Kazan, in that veteran’s little-seen independent film, The Visitors, Woods worked his way up the television movie ranks, always drawing the discerning viewer’s eye no matter how small or narrowly conceived the role. After standing out in the glittering ensemble of the mini-series Holocaust (as a Jewish victim married to shiksa Meryl Streep), Woods nailed down his big screen breakthrough in The Onion Field. As a coldblooded cop killer who torments his surviving victim by turning jailhouse lawyer, Woods made audiences’ skin crawl. Not since Richard Widmark pushed that wheelchair-bound old lady down the stairs in Kiss of Death had a villain caused such a sensation; Woods’s portrayal of evil incarnate could have been lifted from a documentary on an actual avocational murderer.

Frustrated when The Onion Field did not open Hollywood’s eyes to his unconventional screen power, Woods drifted back into supporting roles that he seemed to color with his own inner rage. What set his rogues gallery apart from the lowlifes of previous eras was boundless enterprise and brain power. Not descendants from Crimeland’s primordial slime, Woods’s bad boys celebrate their outmaneuvering of the gullible with arias of vitriol. No matter how full of self-loathing mordial slime, Woods’s bad boys turned him so far over the top he parodies himself. If the movies have never treated him so far over the top he parodies himself. If The Hard Way is merely a misguided star vehicle ambushed by Woods’s pushiness, his unleavened intensity transforms the anticocaine diatribe, The Boost, into a Reefer Madness for the 1980s.

Surviving the bad press hovering around his post-Boost personal life (a real life ‘‘fatal attraction’’ affair with co-star Sean Young), Woods has found his métier in television even if he yearns for the heady air breathed by De Niro and Pacino on the silver screen. (Actually, Woods’s television work has been more perceptive and fully realized than anything those two icons have done since their heyday.) Whether crystallizing the terrifying self-awareness of a schizophrenic in Promise or chronicling the self-destructive binges of the co-founder of Alcoholics Anonymous in My Name Is Bill W., Woods never distances himself from imperfections in the characters he tackles. Imposing that trademark Woodsian fury on his roles, he still differentiates between a tortured prisoner of war in In Love and War and a cynical lawyer-for-sale who claims his soul by fearlessly defending the McMartin family on trumped-up child molestation charges in Indictment.

As with other character actors turned stars by force of talent (Robert Duvall, Gene Hackman), Woods feeds off a gift for quickly penetrating details, a craft one can only refine through years of labor. He is matched if not surpassed by his talent. Whether embarking on the self-destructive binges of the antiheroes often get the better of their antagonists with ass-kissing trickery and guile, only this time in the service of a good cause. Their true faces until they are at their victims’ throats, Woods’s acting genius. Tellingly, this dynamic actor makes Cohn’s diabolical evil not comprehensible but believable. Just as his monster-men never reveal their true faces until they are at their victims’ throats, Woods’s antiheroes often get the better of their antagonists with ass-kissing trickery and guile, only this time in the service of a good cause. Having been cinema’s specialist in criminal behavior, Woods is now an expert in suggesting how conflicted characters struggle to patch up the fault lines in their personalities. If he continues working at his present level of excellence, Woods will end up being acknowledged as an acting genius.

—Robert Pardi

WOODWARD, Joanne

Nationality: American. Born: Thomasville, Georgia, 27 February 1930. Education: Attended high school in Greenville, South Carolina; Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, for two years; studied acting with Sanford Meisner at the Neighborhood Playhouse School of the Theatre, New York. Family: Married the actor Paul Newman, 1958, three daughters. Career: Joined the Little Theatre Group in Greenville, then played in summer stock in Chatham, Massachusetts; then television work in New York, and understudy role in Broadway production of Picnic; 1955—contract with 20th Century-Fox; film debut in Count Three and Pray; 1956—on Broadway in The Lovers; 1968—directed by Newman in Rachel, Rachel; has made several TV movies. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award, for The Three Faces of Eve, 1957; Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for Rachel, Rachel, 1968; Best Actress, Cannes Festival, for The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds, 1973; Best Actress, New York Film Critics, 1973, and Best Actress, British Academy, 1974, for Summer Wishes, Winter Dreams; Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for Mr. and Mrs. Bridge, 1990. Address: 1120 5th Avenue #1C, New York, NY 10128, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Count Three and Pray (Sherman) (as Lissy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>A Kiss before Dying (Oswald) (as Dorothy Kingship)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Three Faces of Eve (Johnson) (title role); No Down Payment (Ritt) (as Leola Boone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>The Long, Hot Summer (Ritt) (as Clara Varner); Rally 'round the Flag, Boys! (McCary) (as Grace Bannerman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>The Sound and the Fury (Ritt) (as Quentin Compson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Fugitive Kind (Lumet) (as Carol Cutrere); From the Terrace (Robson) (as Mary St. John)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Paris Blues (Ritt) (as Lillian Corning)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>The Stripper (Woman of Summer) (Schaffner) (as Lila Green); A New Kind of Love (Shavelson) (as Samantha Blake)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Signpost to Murder (Englund) (as Molly Thomas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>A Fine Madness (Kersner) (as Rhoda Shillitoe); A Big Hand for the Little Lady (Big Deal at Dodge City) (Cook) (as Mary)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Rachel, Rachel (Newman) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Winning (Goldstone) (as Elora)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>WUSA (Rosenberg) (as Geraldine); King: A Filmed Record . . . Montgomery to Memphis (Lumet and Mankiewicz—doc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>They Might Be Giants (Harvey) (as Mildred Watson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds (Newman) (as Beatrice)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Summer Wishes, Winter Dreams (Cates) (as Rita Walden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>The Drowning Pool (Rosenberg) (as Iris Devereaux)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Sybil (Petrie—for TV) (as Dr. Wilbur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Come Back, Little Sheba (Narizanno—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>The End (Burt Reynolds) (as Jessica); See How She Runs (Heflin—for TV) (as Betty Quinn); A Christmas to Remember (Englund—for TV) (as Mildred McCland)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>The Streets of L.A. (Freedman—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The Shadow Box (Newman—for TV); Angel Dust (doc—for TV) (as narrator)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Crisis at Central High (Johnson—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Harry and Son (Newman) (as Lilly); Passions (Stern—for TV) (as Catherine Kennerly)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Do You Remember Love (Bleckner—for TV) (as Barbara Wyatt-Hollis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>The Glass Menagerie (Newman) (as Amanda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Mr. and Mrs. Bridge (Ivory) (as India Bridge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Blind Spot (Michael Toshiyuki Uno—for TV) (as Congresswoman Nell, + co-pr); Foreign Affairs (O’Brien—for TV) (as Vinnie Miner); Philadelphia (Jonathan Demme) (as Sarah Beckett); Age of Innocence (Scorsese) (as narrator)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Breathing Lessons (Erman—for TV) (as Maggie Moran)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>James Dean: A Portrait (Legon—for TV) (as herself)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>My Knees Were Jumping; Remembering the Kindertransports (Hacker—doc) (as Narrator)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Come along with Me (for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Hump Back Angel</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
While not as prolific a film actor as her illustrious husband, Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward nonetheless has etched some memorable celluloid characterizations. Outstanding in her early film career is her portrayal of the title role in The Three Faces of Eve, in which she plays a mentally disturbed young woman who has three distinct... personalities: a dull Southern housewife, a sex kitten, and a well-balanced and reasonable woman. What makes this film work is the fascination and credibility of Woodward’s triple-personality character, right down to the details of voices, gestures, and body movements which she adjusted for each of the women inside Eve’s mind. Although this was only her third appearance in films, the tour-de-force performance established her as a star and earned her an Academy Award (a feat she accomplished a full three decades prior to Newman).

From the very start of her career, Woodward displayed versatility. She could play a suburbanite (No Down Payment and Rally ‘round the Flag, Boys!), a dissatisfied Southern belle (The Long, Hot Summer), a spinster (Rachel, Rachel), or the title role in The Stripper (which originally was meant for Marilyn Monroe). What gives unity to her portrayals is the spirit and spunk with which she endows the characters. It should be noted that Woodward started acting in movies at a time when it was fashionable for female characters to be glamorous and almost altogether helpless. Woodward, a pretty blond who never really bespoke glamour, usually was cast as women who were discontent, “causey” or more seriously rebellious, or were fated to cope with the unfortunate lot they had been dealt.

In her very first appearance in Count Three and Pray, she is a feisty, unwashed teenaged backwoods girl who eventually becomes civilized—without relinquishing all of her spiritedness—when she encounters a willful, handsome man (Van Heflin). She acts the part with great strength of purpose, and displays a gamin quality which she subsequently carried over into several comedy roles. This especially was the case in A New Kind of Love, in which she plays an American plain-Jane in Paris who obtains a fashion makeover and in so doing attracts the attention of a playboy journalist, played by Paul Newman. The more serious and earthy rebel character came out in her role as a sex-hungry urchin who craves Marlon Brando in The Fugitive Kind.

After The Three Faces of Eve, Woodward’s best screen roles came either opposite Newman or in films directed by her husband. Their first effective pairing occurred in The Long, Hot Summer, and they are said to have fallen in love on the set. Indeed, they were married the same year. One can feel the heat between the two characters, he a handsome and clever but low-class drifter who strives for a more advantageous position in life, and she, the daughter of wealth, who passionately desires this beautiful stranger but fights against being manipulated by her father into marriage. Since then, Woodward and Newman have appeared together in comedies (Rally ‘round the Flag, Boys! and A Kind of Love), a glossy Hollywood soap opera (From the Terrace), and a string of dramas, including the very fine Paris Blues, an offbeat Paris-based romance of two jazz musicians and the two female tourists they befriend. In more recent years, they teamed for Mr. and Mrs. Bridge, based on two Evan S. O’Connell novels, which chronicles two decades in the life of a staid Kansas City couple.

With Newman as her director, Woodward presented several outstanding, multitiered characterizations at a time when Hollywood actresses were complaining of the sparsity of solid screen roles. She most often was cast as middle-aged women who were quietly leading unfulfilled lives, and who experience emotional crises. Possibly the finest is the drama Rachel, Rachel, in which she portrays a sexually naive old maid schoolteacher who is frustrated by the lack of meaning in her life. Another memorable performance is in the film version of Paul Zindel’s Pulitzer Prize-winning play The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds, where she plays an eccentric, alienated mother of two daughters. Summer Wishes, Winter Dreams places her in the role of an unhappy, frigid woman who is caught in an unfulfilled upper-middle-class marriage. She is at odds with her son, who is gay, and has just experienced the sudden demise of her elderly mother.

Over the years, Woodward has been a vigorous crusader for various liberal social and political causes. Her dedication to these causes has been reflected in her choice of parts, particularly her decision to play a college professor who falls victim to Alzheimer’s disease in a highly praised, television movie Do You Remember Love. This particular disease is spoken of mainly in hushed tones or not discussed at all by many families of its victims, so it was quite a bold—and instructive—move for Woodward to portray the sufferings of this character. She won an Emmy for her efforts, but the greater reward came in making known some of the more confounding facts of the illness. Also along that line is her role on the big screen as the mother of a gay man (Tom Hanks) who is battling AIDS in Philadelphia. Another interesting recent role came opposite James Garner in the television movie Breathing Lessons, a sensitive comedy-drama of a longtime married couple in which she once more portrayed an offbeat, troubled middle-aged wife struggling to live a meaningful life.

Over and over, from the beginning of her career, Woodward has created fascinating, full-blooded screen characters whose personalities have shed light on the cobwebbed corners of intimate and disturbed minds, or given joy through their offbeat and comical bent. For her offscreen social issue work and her on-screen accomplishments, she has won the respect of her industry colleagues and the public.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

WRAY, Fay

Films as Actress:

1923 Gasoline Love (short)
1925 The Coast Patrol (Barsky) (as Beth Slocum); A Cinch for the Gander
1926 The Man in the Saddle (Reynolds or Smith) (as Pauline Stewart); The Wild Horse Stampede (Rogell) (as Jessie Hayden); Lazy Lightning (Wyler) (as Lila Rogers)

1927 Loco Luck (Smith) (as Molly Vernon); A One Man Game (Laemmle) (as Roberts); Spurs and Saddles (Smith) (as Mildred Orth)

1928 Legion of the Condemned (Wellman) (as Christine Charteris); Street of Sin (Stillier) (as Elizabeth); The First Kiss (Lee) (as Anna Lee); The Wedding March (von Stroheim) (as Mitzi Schrammell)

1929 The Four Feathers (Cooper, Schoedsack, and Mendes) (as Ethne Eustace); Thunderbolt (von Sternberg) (as Ritzy); Pointed Heels (Sutherland) (as Laura Nixon)

1930 Behind the Makeup (Milton) (as Marie); “Dream Girl” technicolor segment of Paramount on Parade; The Texan (Cromwell) (as Consuelo); The Border Legion (Brower and Knopf) (as Joan Randall); The Sea God (Abbott) (as Daisy)

1931 The Finger Points (Dillon) (as Marcia Collins); Not Exactly Gentlemen; The Conquering Horde (Sloman) (as Taisie Lockhart); Three Rogues (Stoloff) (as Lee Carleton); Dirigible (Capra) (as Helen); Captain Thunder (Crosland) (as Ynez Dominguez); The Honeymoon (von Stroheim) (as Mitzi Schrammell); The Lawyer’s Secret (Gasnier and Marcin) (as Kay Roberts); The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice) (as Camille)

1932 Stowaway (Whitman); Doctor X (Curtiz) (as Joan Xavier); The Most Dangerous Game (Schoedsack and Pichel) (as Eve Trowbridge)

1933 The Vampire Bat (Strayer) (as Ruth Bertin); Mystery of the Wax Museum (Curtiz) (as Charlotte Duncan); King Kong (Cooper and Schoedsack) (as Ann Darrow); Below the Sea (Rogell) (as Diane Templeton); Ann Carver’s Profession (Buzzell) (title role); The Woman I Stole (Cummings) (as Vida Carew); The Big Brain (Archainbaud) (as Cynthia Glennon); One Sunday Afternoon (Roberts) (as Virginia Brush); Shanghai Madness (Blystone) (as Wildeth Christie); The Bowery (Walsh) (as Lucy Calhoun); Master of Men (Hillyer) (as Kay Walling)

1934 Madame Spy (Freund) (as Maria); Once to Every Woman (Hillyer) (as Mary Fanshawe); Cheating Cheaters (Thorpe) (as Nan Brockton); Woman in the Dark (Rosen); White Lies (Bulgakov); The Countess of Monte Cristo (Freund) (as Janet Kreuger); Viva Villa! (Conway) (as Teresa); Black Moon (Neill) (as Gail); The Affairs of Cellini (La Cava) (as Angela); The Richest Girl in the World (Seiter) (as Sylvia Vernon)

1935 The Clairvoyant (The Evil Mind) (Elvey) (as Renee); Come Out of the Pantry (Raymond) (as Hilda Beach-Howard); Alias Bulldog Drummond (Bulldog Jack) (Forde) (as Ann Manders); Mills of the Gods (Neill)

1936 When Knights Were Bold (Raymond) (as Lady Rowena); Roaming Lady (Rogell) (as Joyce); They Met in a Taxi (Green) (as Mary)

1937 It Happened in Hollywood (Once a Hero) (Lachman) (as Gloria Gay); Murder in Greenwich Village (Rogell) (as Kay Cabot)

1938 Smashing the Spy Ring (Cabanee) (as Eleanor Dunlap); The Jury’s Secret (Sloman) (as Linda Ware)

1939 Navy Secrets (Bretherton) (as Carol)

1940 Wildcat Bus (Woodruff) (as daughter of bus-line owner)

1941 Adam Had Four Sons (Ratoff) (as Molly); Melody for Three (Kenton) (as the mother)

1942 Not a Ladies’ Man (Landers)

1944 This Is the Life (Feist) (+ sc)

1953 Small Town Girl (Kardos) (as Mrs. Kimbell); Treasure of the Golden Condor (Daves) (as Marquise)

1955 The Cobweb (Minnelli) (as Edna Devanel); Queen Bee (MacDougall) (as Sue McKimmon)

1956 Hell on Frisco Bay (Tuttle) (as Kay Stanley); In Times Like These (Seiter)

1957 Crime of Passion (Oswald) (as Alice Pope); Tammy and the Bachelor (Pevny) (as Mrs. Brent); Rock, Pretty Baby (Bartlett) (as Beth Daley)

1958 Summer Love (Haas) (as Beth Daley); Dragstrip Riot (The Reckless Age) (Bradley)

1980 Gideon’s Trumpet (Collins—for TV) (as Edna Curtis)

1998 Universal Horror (Brownlow—for TV) (as herself)

Publications

By WRAY: book—

By WRAY: articles—

‘‘The Gorilla I Left Behind,’’ in Premiere (Boulder), Winter 1994.

On WRAY: book—

On WRAY: articles—

* * *

If Fay Wray had made only one film in her career—King Kong—she would have earned her spot in the annals of screen history. When she co-starred as the classic damsel-in-distress opposite moviedom’s most famous ape, she already was an established actress who had worked in major silent and sound Hollywood productions. Her sometimes stiff, sometimes exaggerated performance in King Kong has been misread by film enthusiasts who have not had the awareness of her earlier career.

Five years before King Kong, von Stroheim realized Wray’s potential for expressive acting when he cast her in The Wedding March as Mitzi, an ill-fated commoner who becomes the love object of a prince. But The Wedding March was a Hollywood oddity, an extravagant art film and a commercial failure, so Wray was unable to sustain her career playing in similar films. Instead, she was destined to be cast as conventional leads, with the exception coming when her association with King Kong directors Merian C. Cooper and Ernest B. Schoedsack led to her all-too-brief reign in horror films. She became the genre’s first sex symbol in King Kong, as well as in Mystery of the Wax Museum, Dr. X, Vampire Bat, and others, with her wholesome good looks and innocent demeanor effectively presented in contrast to the ‘‘monsters.’’

Wray is remembered for these few horror films, and it is disappointing that she did not appear in additional ones. As she aged, she might have been an asset to the 1940s horror cycle and 1950s science-fiction films.

—Anthony Ambrogio, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

WYMAN, Jane

Films as Actress:

(as Sarah Jane Fulks)

1932 The Kid from Spain (McCarey) (as a Goldwyn Girl)
1933 Elmer the Great (LeRoy) (bit role)
1934 College Rhythm (Taurog) (bit role)
1935 Rumba (Gering) (as chorus girl); All the King’s Horses (Tuttle) (bit role); Stolen Harmony (Werker) (bit role as girl)
1936 King of Burlesque (Lanfield) (bit role as girl); Anything Goes (Tops Is the Limit) (Milestone) (bit role); My Man Godfrey (La Cava) (as party-goer)

(as Jane Wyman)

1936 Stage Struck (Berkeley) (as Bessie Fuffnick); Cain and Mabel (Lloyd Bacon) (bit role); Polo Joe (McGann) (as polo spectator); Smart Blonde (McDonald) (as Dixie)
1937 “Love and War” production number of Gold Diggers of 1937 (Lloyd Bacon) (as chorus girl); Ready, Willing and Able (Enright) (as Dot); The King and the Chorus Girl (LeRoy) (as Babette); Slim (Enright) (as Stumpy’s girl friend); The Singing Marine (Enright) (as Joan); Mr. Dodd Takes the Air (Alfred E. Green) (as Marjorie Day); Public Wedding (Grinde) (as Flip Lane)
1938 The Spy Ring (Joseph H. Lewis) (as Elaine Burkette); Fools for Scandal (LeRoy) (bit role); He Couldn’t Say No (Seiler); Wide Open Faces (Neumann) (as Betty Martin); The Crowd Roars (Thorpe) (as Vivian); Brother Rat (Keighley) (as Claire Adams)

1939 Tail Spin (Del Ruth) (as Alabama); Private Detective (Noel Smith) (as Myrna Winslow); The Kid from Kokomo (Seiler) (as Miss Bronson); Torchy Plays with Dynamite (Noel Smith) (as Torchy Blane); Kid Nightingale (Amy) (as Judy Craig)
1940 Brother Rat and a Baby (Enright) (as Claire Ramm); An Angel from Texas (Enright) (as Marge Allen); Flight Angels (Seiler) (as Nan Hudson); My Love Came Back (Bernhardt) (as Joy O’Keefe); Tugboat Annie Sails Again (Seiler) (as Peggy Armstrong); Gambling on the High Seas (Amy) (as Laurie Ogden)

1941 Honeymoon for Three (Lloyd Bacon) (as Elizabeth Clochessy); Bad Men of Missouri (Enright) (as Mary Hathaway); You’re in the Army Now (Seiler) (as Bliss Dobson); The Body Disappears (Lederman) (as Lynn Shotesbury)
1942 Larceny, Inc. (Lloyd Bacon) (as Denny Costello); My Favorite Spy (Garnett) (as Connie); Footlight Serenade (Tugoff) (as Flo La Verne)
1943 Princess O’Rourke (Krasna) (as Jean)
1944 Make Your Own Bed (Godfrey) (as Susan Courtney); Crime by Night (Clemens) (as Robbie Vance); The Doughgirls (Kern) (as Vivian); Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as herself)
1945 The Lost Weekend (Wildler) (as Helen St. James)
1946 One More Tomorrow (Godfrey) (as Fran Connors); Night and Day (Curtiz) (as Gracie Harris); The Yearling (Brown) (as Ma Baxter)
1947 Cheyenne (Walsh) (as Ann Kincaid); Magic Town (Wellman) (as Mary Peterman)
1948 Johnny Belinda (Negulesco) (as Belinda McDonald)
1949 A Kiss in the Dark (Godfrey) (as Polly Haines); The Lady Takes a Sailor (Curtiz) (as Jennifer Smith); It’s a Great Feeling (David Butler) (as herself)
1950 Stage Fright (Hitchcock) (as Eve Gill); The Glass Menagerie (Rapper) (as Laura Wingfield)
1951 Three Fright (Hitchcock) (as Eve Gill); Here Comes the Groom (Capra) (as Emmadale Jones); The Blue Veil (Bernhardt) (as Louise Mason); Starlift (Del Ruth) (as herself)
1952 The Story of Will Rogers (Curtiz) (as Betty Rogers); Just for You (Nugent) (as Carolina Hill)
1953 Let’s Do It Again (Hall) (as Constance Stuart); So Big (Wise) (as Selina Dejong)
1954 Magnificent Obsession (Sirk) (as Helen Phillips)
1955 Lucy Gallant (Parrish) (title role); All that Heaven Allows (Sirk) (as Cary Scott)
1956 Miracle in the Rain (Maté) (as Ruth Wood)
1959 Holiday for Lovers (Levin) (as Mary Dean)
1960 Pollyanna (Swift) (as Aunt Polly)
1962 Bon Voyage! (Neilson) (as Katie Willard)
1969 How to Commit Marriage (Lilley) (as Elaine Benson)
1971 The Failing of Raymond (Sagal—for TV) (as Mary Bloomquist)
1978 The Outlanders (Green)
1979 The Incredible Journey of Dr. Meg Laurel (Guy Green—for TV) (as Granny Arrowroot)
1981–90 Falcon Crest (Armer and Badiyi—series for TV) (as Angela Channing)
1996 Wild Bill: Hollywood Maverick (Robinson—for TV) (as herself)
Decades before she was to become the star of the prime-time television soap opera Falcon Crest, Jane Wyman was just another ‘cute’ Hollywood blond with a turned-up nose who populated dozens of B films, usually playing a wisecracking friend of the star or a gold-digging chorus girl. Wyman provided some light, enjoyable moments in a wide variety of 1930s comedies such as Brother Rat and The Kid from Kokomo. As the war years dawned, she began to get increasingly better parts, mostly in Warner Brothers features such as Larceny, Inc. and The Doughgirls.

In 1945 Wyman’s career changed sharply for the better when she began to dye her hair brown and appeared in several well-received straight dramatic roles. Beginning with the critically acclaimed The Lost Weekend, Wyman showed a dramatic depth to her acting which the public had not seen. During the late 1940s and early 1950s she received several Academy Award nominations and received an Oscar for Best Actress for her touching performance as the deaf-mute heroine of Johnny Belinda.

Wisely varying her genres once she attained major stardom, Wyman often highlighted a chin-quivering vulnerability while playing down the verve she displayed as the longest-running starlet in B-movie history. Despite being outclassed in terms of theatrical training and despite being too old for the tricky role, her halting Laura is the most memorable performance in The Glass Menagerie. Although she radiates movie-star assuredness in all her 1950s soap operas (So Big, Lucy Gallant, Magnificent Obsession) she is most incandescent in All that Heaven Allows, the most caustic slap at suburban America’s snobbism and agism that has ever slipped past a major studio head’s attention span. If she had sobbed at the victim well once too often by the time she experienced her Miracle in the Rain, she also brought new meaning to the word ‘vivacious’ in some minor musicals (Just for You, Here Comes the Groom, Let’s Do It Again) that should have made MGM sit up and take notice.

Although her screen appearances grew sparse, particularly after the rise and fall of her heralded television anthology, The Jane Wyman Show, she always could be counted on to enliven the proceedings even in vanilla-flavored Disney ventures. Still, none of her joie de vivre prepared Wyman groupies for her steely stint in Falcon Crest, in which she huffed and puffed hammily, reportedly ran the set with an iron glove borrowed from the character she played, and locked horns with such formidable guest-starring divas as Kim Novak, Gina Lollobrigida, and Lana Turner. If her Angela Channing, the Wicked Witch of the Wine Country, cannot be considered fine acting on a par with her most masterful big-screen legacy, The Yearling, it is just as unforgettable in its own shameless, scenery-chewing way. Popping up infrequently since her vintage soap series was canceled, Wyman can regard her kaleidoscopic career as a testament to the resilience, clear-sightedness, and good humor her fans have always responded to, whether Wyman happened to be casting herself as fluffy contract player, song-and-dance gal, drama doyenne, or television matriarch from Hell.

—Patricia King Hanson, updated by Robert Pardi

---

Publications

On WYMAN: books—

On WYMAN: articles—

* * *

---

Patricia King Hanson, updated by Robert Pardi
YAMADA, Isuzu

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Mitsu Yamada in Osaka, 5 February 1917; daughter of the actor Kusuo Yamada. Education: Began studying dance, singing (samisen), and narration (kiyomoto) in 1922, license in kiyomoto, 1927. Family: Married 1) the actor Ichiro Tsukida, 1935 (divorced 1942), daughter; the actress Michiko Saga; 2) the producer Kazuo Takamura, 1942 (divorced); 3) the actor Shotaro Hanayagi, 1943 (divorced); 4) the director Teinosuke Kinugasa (divorced); 5) the actor Yoshi Kato, 1950 (divorced 1954); one additional marriage. Career: 1930—joined the Nikkatsu Studio, and studied with the director Kunio Watanabe; film debut in Tsurugi o koete; established her reputation as an actress during the next decade with films from the Nikkatsu Studio, the Daichi Company, 1934–36, Shinko Kinema, 1936–38, Toho studio, 1938–46, and Shin-Toho with films from the Nikkatsu Studio, the Daiichi Company, 1934–36, additional marriage. Tsukida, 1935 (divorced 1942), daughter: the actress Michiko Saga; 1917; daughter of the actor Kusuo Yamada.

Films as Actress:

1930 Tsurugi o koete (Watanabe) (as Okayo); Dai-Chushingura (Ikeda) (as Hinagiku); Fuun tenman-zoshi; Suronin Chuya (Itō) (as Yae); Udeippō (Watanabe); Kyoen kokisenn (Watanabe); Koiguruma (Itami); Nippon nijū-roku seijin; Zoku Himegiku-ki; Fuyuki shinju (Nakamura).
1931 Edo bishonen-oku; Onai goju-ryo; Edokko ichiba; Mabuta no hana (Inagaki) (as Otoy); Tobi no hito; Araki Mataemon; Ohisutaharetsumi Somekawa Shohachi; Arashi; Nichibei-gura (Itami); Kimi no uta (Itō) (as Oki); Tsuruhachi tsurijiro (title role); Zoku Fukei-zu (Asahina).
1932 Kokushi muso (Itami) (as Yae); Yatoro-gasa; Kyorai no maki; Dokuhō no maki (Inagaki) (as Oyuki); Yamiuchi no tsuki (Nakamura).
1933 Iniwa Hachiro; Shinjiu fujin; Koya no ka; Tsukigata Hanpeita (Itō) (as Umematsu); Tange Senzen (Itō) (as Hagino); Konjikinyasha (as Omiya); Nyomin Mandara (Itō) (as Yukiyo); Dansai Hyoe issho-tabi.
1934 Nyomin Mandara, Part II (Itō) (as Yokimo); Jinya no Shotaro; Budo kagami (Itami) (as Otae); Furyu katsujin-ken (Yamanaka) (as Okyo); Chirimen koyo; Tange Senzen; Kentei-hen; Ureshii koro; Chushingura: Ninjo-hen; Fukushu-hen (as Yosenin); Aizo-toge (The Mountain Pass of Love and Hate) (Mizoguchi) (as Utakichi); Sado jowa; Kentsushou no hitobito (Itō).

1935 Orizuru Osen (The Downfall of Osen) (Mizoguchi) (as Osan); Oroku kanzashi; Maria no Oyuki (Oyuki the Madonna) (Mizoguchi) (title role); Ojo Okichi; Chichi kaeru hana no kokoro; Shino Tsaruchiyō (Itō) (as Kikuhime and Himegiku).

1936 Naniwa ereji (Osaka Elegy) (Mizoguchi) (as Ayako Murai); Shijiu-hachi-nin me (Itō); Gion no shima; Kekkon he no michi (Tanaka); Osaka natsu no jin (The Summer Battle of Osaka) (Kinugasa) (as Okin); Aozora roshi (as Fuji-hime).

1937 Kinno inaka-zamurai; Then kurote-gume; Yoshia goten (Nobuchi); Nangoku samunsata-uta; Kekkon he no michi (Tanaka); Osaka natsu no jin (The Summer Battle of Osaka) (Minugasa) (as Sen-hime).

1938 Shizuka gozen; Utā-kichi andon; Tsuruhachi tsurijiro (Naruse) (as Tsuruhan); Budo sen-ichi-ya; Shinpen Tange Sazen; Yoto no maki, Futate no maki (Watanabe).

1939 Chushingura, Part II (Okaru); Higuchi Ichiyō (title role); Kenka-tobi (Ishida); Sono Zenya; Shinpen Tange Sazen; Sogon no maki, Kohayuruma no maki (Watanabe).

1940 Keshoyuki; Hebibihime-sama (The Snake Princess) (Inagusa) (as Oshima); Nizuma kagami (Watanabe); Arashi nisakuhana; Mozā; Sakujitsu kieta oto (as Kotomi).

1941 Ani no hanayome; Shinpen bocchun; Kaiketsu; Shannai no tsuki (Shanghai Moon) (Naruse); Yukiko to Natsuko; Jogakusei-ki; Kawakana-igen gassen (The Battle of Kawakana) (Inagusa) (as Oshino).

1942 Masashibo Benketsu; Matteiuta otoko (Makino) (as Otsuta); Fukei-za (Makino) (as Otsuta).

1943 Ina no Kantaro (Takizawa) (as Oshin); Uta-andon (The Song Lantern) (Naruse) (as Osode); Meijin Chojirō-bori (Hagiwara) (as Outa); Himetaru kagoku.

1944 Shibaido (The Way of Drama) (Naruse); Yotsu no kkekō.

1946 Hinoki butai; Matteiuta otoko (Makino) (as Otsuta); Fukei-za (Makino) (as Otsuta).

1947 Toho senichiya; Kōjirō-bori (Hagiwara) (as Outa); Himetaru kagoku.

1948 Lord for a Night (Kinugasa) (as Otsuta).

1949 Hana no tsukihi; Toho senichiya; Kōjirō-bori (Hagiwara) (as Outa); Himetaru kagoku.

1950 Kana no Hana; Koga yashiki; Kageboshi; Kogakusei-ki; Kowakana-igen gassen; Arashi nisakuhana; Mozā; Sakujitsu kieta oto (as Kotomi).

1951 Hina no tsukihi; Koga yashiki; Kageboshi; Kowakana-igen gassen; Arashi nisakuhana; Mozā; Sakujitsu kieta oto (as Kotomi).

1952 Kanoshima (Kinugasa) (as Otsuta); Fukei-za (Makino) (as Otsuta).

1953 Arashi; Matteiuta otoko (Makino) (as Otsuta); Fukei-za (Makino) (as Otsuta).

1954 Kusagiseru (The Song Lantern) (Naruse) (as Osode); Meijin Chojirō-bori (Hagiwara) (as Outa); Himetaru kagoku.

1955 Otsuka no moto; Kusagiseru (The Song Lantern) (Naruse) (as Osode); Meijin Chojirō-bori (Hagiwara) (as Outa); Himetaru kagoku.

1956 Kusagiseru (The Song Lantern) (Naruse) (as Osode); Meijin Chojirō-bori (Hagiwara) (as Outa); Himetaru kagoku.

1957 Kusagiseru (The Song Lantern) (Naruse) (as Osode); Meijin Chojirō-bori (Hagiwara) (as Outa); Himetaru kagoku.
1952 Haha nareba onna nareba (Kamei); Shusse tohi; Hanahagi sensei to Santa; Hakone fuun-roku (Yamamori, Kasuda, and Kosaka) (as Ritsu); Ako-jo (Hagiwara); Tsukigata Hanpeita; Zoku Ako-jo (Hagiwara); Mazo; iotshigo to taete yuakumo (Nakagawa); Gendaijin (Shibuya); Mangetsu sansu-joku-sen (Murune)

1953 Edo iroha matsuri; Kaga-sodo (Saeki); Onna hitori daichi o yuku (Kamei); Shukuzu (Epitome) (Shindo); Kumo nagareru hane ni (iki); Abare-jishi; Misereraredoru tamashii; Hiroshima (Sekigawa); Onna Kanja hibun: Ako-roshi (Sasaki)

1954 Tojin Okichi; Mama no shinkon-ryoko; Kinsei Meisho monogatari: Ogongai no hosha; Koku-sen o yuku Chushingura; monogatari: Ogongai no hosha; Hakuro no kamen, Jigokudani no taiketsu (Sasaki)

1954 Aisureba koso; Tokyo no sora no shita niwa; Ai no onimotsu (Kawashima); Banba no Chutarou; Yataro-gasa; Furisode kempo; Minamoto Yoritsune; Takekurabe (Comparation of Heights; Growing Up; Daughters of Yoshiwara) (Gosho) (as Oyoshi); Hana hiraku; Araki Mataemon; Seido no Kiritasu (Shibuya); Jinsei tohbo-gaeri; Ishi-gassen (Wakasugi) (as the mother); Wakaki ashi

1956 Oatari otoko ichidai; Haha san-nin; Fubuki to tomo ni kieyukinu

1958 Haha nareba onna nareba

1960 Osaka-jo monogatari; Ooku maruhi monogatari

1962 Sanrokugyo; Yama no sanka; Moyuraku wakamono-tachi (Glory on the Summit; Burning Youth) (Shinoda) (as Taka Hirooka); Sanbyaku-rokuju-goy; Shin no shikotei (The Great Wall) (Tanaka) (as dowager empress)

1963 Sakiko-san chotto; Ratai (The Body) (Narasaki)

1967 Ooku maruhi monogatari

1970 Onna kunicho

1978 Yagyu ichizoku no inbo (Shogun’s Samurai) (Fukasaku) (as Sugemin Ooyo)

1984 Hissatsu! (Hissatsu!: Sure Death) (Sadanaga) (as ‘’Shamisen Shop’’ Orik) (Ichikawa)

Publications

By YAMADA: article—

“Memories of Mizoguchi,” in Cinema (Beverly Hills), Spring 1971.

Still a teenager, but an actor’s daughter, Isuzu Yamada began her career as a period film star at the Nikkatsu Studio in 1930. She studied with director Kunio Watanabe, and, through working with excellent period film directors such as Ito, Itami, Uchida, Inagaki, Makino, and Yamanaka, and playing opposite such stars as Denjiro Okochi and Chiezo Katao, she gradually established herself as the most popular actress at Nikkatsu.

She did not gain critical acclaim, however, until her two films for Mizoguchi in 1936: Osaka Elegy and Sisters of Gion. In both films she played strong-willed “modern girls” (moga) who rebel against their environments, using their beauty and youth to take advantage of exploitative men, although they are finally vanquished by them. Yamada achieved powerful performances, even utilizing the Osaka and Kyoto dialects to project a heightened realism. In the famous last shot of Osaka Elegy, which is the film’s only close-up, Yamada stares defiantly at the camera, directly implicating the audience in her character’s downfall.

During the war she established the theater group Shin Engi-za with actor Kazuo Hasegawa and continued her stage activities. Her post-war film work began with her collaboration with Kinugasa, producing fine results such as Lord for a Night, in which she lightly played the role of a pure-hearted inn maid, and Actress, in which she passionately portrayed the innovative actress Sumako Matsui.

After her private relationship with Kinugasa (her fourth of six husbands) ended and she began a new relationship with leftist actor Yoshi Kato, Yamada started to participate in the leftist independent film movement. She was a representative works that brought her recognition was her performance as the wife in the feudal period piece Hakone fuun-roku. Although Yamada, in a prolific professional career, played various roles for many directors including Ichikawa, Kobayashi, Kawashima, Shibuya and Shinoda, her most memorable postwar roles are those of the ex-wife in Toyoda’s comedy, A Man, a Cat and Two Women, and of the weary brothel owner in Naruse’s Flowing. For Kurosawa, she played Lady Washizu (Macbeth) in Throne of Blood, employing the Noh play-style of acting with horrifying effectiveness; the role brought her international acclaim. She also starred as the greedy landlord’s wife in Naruse’s The Great Wall and the nagging wife of the head of a competing sect in Yojimbo. Her intensity was well-suited to Kurosawa’s powerful direction. She excelled at powerful portrayals of strong-willed women as well as the more delicate characterizations of women who are aging and showing the suffering of life.

YAMADA ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

1314

Her achievements were acknowledged many times during her long stage and screen career. The consistent high quality of her best-known performances makes one wish her many other films were more widely available.

—Kyoko Hirano, updated by Corey K. Creekmur

YAMAMURA, So

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Yoshisda Koga in Tenri City, 24 February 1910. Education: Studied German literature at Imperial University, Tokyo, was graduated in 1935.

Awards: Several Japanese prizes for acting and directing. Died: 26 May 2000 in Suginami, Tokyo, Japan, of myocardial infarction.

Films as Actor:

- 1946 Inochi aru kagiri (Kusada)
- 1947 Chikagai no niyuu-jikan; Joyu Sumako no koi (Mizoguchi) (as Hogetsu Shimamura)
- 1948 Dai-ni no jinsei (Sekigawa); Otoko o sabaku onna (Sasaki); Taisu-ken no onna (as gangster boss); Midori naki shima; Yukyo no mure (Osone)
- 1949 Onna no tatakai; Kirare no Senta; Utsukushiki batsu (Oba); Ruysie (Abe); Umi no yaja; Daitokai no kao (Abe); Maboroshi fujin; Hana no sugao (Oba)
- 1950 Shojo-dakara (Shima); Kageboshi; Hakun no ketto (Saei); Haha-tsubaki; Tokyo mushaku (Chiba); Josei tai dainsei (Saburi); Ai no sangaku; Dokuga (Sunohara); Shiroi yaja; Nankai no joka; Munekata-shima (The Munekata Sisters) (Oz) (as Kyosuke Minura); Senka no koete (Sekigawa); Yuki-fujin ezu (Madame Yuki) (Mizoguchi) (as Tatsuoka); Gunkan sudeni kemuri nasu (Sekigawa); Otone no yougiri (Hirade); Kikyo (Oba); Ijima no oto (Onma)
- 1951 Eriko to tomoni (Toyoda) (as Eriko’s father); Zemma (The Good Fairy) (Kinoshita); Nessa no byakuran (Kimura); Jiyu gakko (Yoshimura); Sonohito no na wa ienai (Sugie); Dare ga watashi o sabakukan (Taniguchi); Sekirei no kyoku (Toyoda); Maihime; Musashino fujin (Lady Musashino) (Mizoguchi) (as Eiji Ono); Hirate Miki (Namiki) (title role); Hibari no komori-uta; Hono wo hada
- 1952 Moshi (Repast) (Naruse); Kenju jigoku; Kenju hi-chou; Gunro no machi; Seishun kaigi; Kaze futatabi (Toyoda); Uchogashira; Okuni to Gohei; Shirun dorobo; Atakake no hitobito (Hisamatsu); Konna watashi ja nakattani; Onna no inochi; Asakusa yonin shima; Gendaijin (Shibuya); Chotto neesan omoide yanagi; Ashi ni sawatta onna (The Woman Who Touched Legs) (Ichikawa); Oka wa hanazakari (Chiba); Ringo-en no shojo; *Joka (Oba)
- 1953 Fukuyo harukaza (Taniguchi); Mura hachiby (Imaizumi); Shukazu (Eptomu) (Shindo); Ganpeki (Nakamura); Ochibi niki; Tokyo monogatari (Tokyo Story) (Ozu) (as Koichi); Ngorie (Muddy Water) (Imai)
- 1954 Yama no oto (Sounds from the Mountains; Sound of the Mountain) (Naruse); Moeru Shanhai; Shinjitsu ichiro; Rakei kazoku; Kaze tachini; Mama no shinkon-ryoko; Kakute yume aru; Doubi (Gutter) (Shindo); Nippon yaburezu; Karatachi no hana; Otsukisama niwai waruihato
- 1955 Hitokiri Hikosai; Aisureba kosou; Sugata Sanshiro; Ikotoki ikeru mono; Sengoku hibun; Bocchan kisha; Ai no inomotsu; Mori Ranmaru; Yuki no honoo; Yukyo no kana; Seimusho kaidan; Yokiki (Princess Yang Kwei-fei) (Mizoguchi) (as Anrokukan); Asita kuru hito; Fukashu no shichihakeman
- 1957
- 1958 Soshun (Early Spring) (Ozu) (as Yutaka Kawai); Ma no kimetsu; Haru no mizumizu; Mahira no anokku (Darkness at Noon) (Imai); Shu to midori (Nakamura); Wasureenu (Champi); Tsuruhsuru Tsurujiro; Nisshoku no natsu; Horikawa; Tseisugata Hanpeita; Hana no maki; Arashi no maki (Kinugasa) (as Kogoro Katsura); Yonjuhsai-sai no teiko (48-Year-Old Rebel; Protest at 48 Years Old) (Yoshimura); Hana futatabi; Typhoon over Nagasaki (Typhoon over Nagasaki) (Ciampi)
- 1959 Hibari no kuchu satsujin; Hakaji no hito; Fujinka-i no kokuhaku; Tokyo boshoku (Tokyo Twilight) (Ozu) (as Tsumoru Sekiguchi); Doshaburi; Jigokubana; Chikesho (Kumagai) (as Koto Takamatsu); Yoruno cho (Night Butterflies) (Yoshimura); Bakuro to daichi (Sekigawa); Ana (The Pit; The Hole) (Ichikawa)
- 1960
- 1961 Kyofu no kuchu satsujin; Hakaji no hito; Fujinka-i no kokuhaku; Tokyo boshoku (as Tsumoru Sekiguchi); Doshaburi; Jigokubana; Chikesho (Kumagai) (as Koto Takamatsu); Yoruno cho (Night Butterflies) (Yoshimura); Bakuro to daichi (Sekigawa); Ana (The Pit; The Hole) (Ichikawa)
- 1962 Anzukko (Naruse); Gendai mushaku; Yatsu no hajiki wa jikoku no daze; Oban: Kanketsu-hen (Chiba); Hibari no hanagata tantei gassen; Kibo; Murasaki zuken; Musume no naka no musume; The Barbarian and the Geisha (Huston) (as Tamura)
- 1965 Chushihigara (as Hiyob啮 Chisaka); Ningen no joken (The Human Condition; No Greater Love) (Kobayashi) (as Okishima); Muhomachi no yarodomo; Yora no hayaku; Karoubone; Izura (Nakamura); Tatsumaki; Yogoku; Sugata Sanshiro; Otoko no Taketsu; Ore-kara ikuzo; Shori to haiboku; Keishicho monogatari; Kikikomi; Fumoshis isha (The Country Doctor; Life of a Country Doctor) (Nagak) (as Dr. Meikai Ikeda); Sabaku o wataru tayto; Fuyu shojo
- 1966
- 1967
- 1968
- 1969
- 1970
- 1971
- 1972
- 1973
- 1974
- 1975
- 1976
- 1977
- 1978
- 1979
- 1980
- 1981
- 1982
- 1983
- 1984
- 1985
- 1986
- 1987
- 1988
- 1989
- 1990
- 1991
- 1992
- 1993
- 1994
- 1995
- 1996
- 1997
- 1998
- 1999
- 2000
butai; Ano kumo no hoshi wa matataku; Akitsu onsen (Yoshida); Honkon no hoshi (Star of Hong Kong) (Chiba); Yama no sanka; Miyura wakamonotachi (Glory on the Summit; Burning Youth) (Shinoda) (as Eijo Hirooka); Gishi shimentu-ki; Namida shishi no tategami no (Tears on the Lion’s Mane) (Shinoda); Kanshaku rojin niki (Kimura); Kawano hitoride (Born in Sin)
1963 Ano hitori no tamoto de, Part III; Ano hito was ima (Nomura); Staataro; Hana no saku ie; Zoku shimoto no mono (Return of Ninja) (Yamamoto) (as Mutsuhide Akechi); Gyangu chushingura; Oni-kenji; Akatsuki no gasho
1964 Kizudarake no sanga (Yamamoto) (as Katsuhei Arima)
1965 Nikutta no gakko (School for Sex; School of Love) (Kinoshita); Ane to imouto; Utsukishisha to kanashimi to (With Beauty and Sorrow) (Shinoda) (as Toshio Ooki); Taiheyo kiseki no sakusen: Kisuka
1967 Nippon no ichiban nagai hi (The Emperor and a General) (Okamoto) (as Navy Minister)
1970 Gekido no Showa-shi: Gunbatsu (Horikawa); Tora! Tora! Tora! (Fleischer) (as Adm. Isoroku Yamamoto)
1974 Kozure oikami; Oya no kokoro no kokoro
1975 Hissatsu shikake-nin: Shinsetsu shikake-bari; Nokotamadusam no daiyogen (Prophecies of Nostradamus; Catastrophe 1999) (Masuda)
1977 Kizudarake no sanga; Honkon no hoshi (Masuda)
1979 Domyaku retto (Masumura)
1980 Inuhue (Nakajima)
1983 Nankyoku monogatari (Antarctica) (Kurahara)
1986 Gung Ho (Working Class Man) (Ron Howard) (as Mr. Sakamoto)
1991 Gojira VS. Kingugidora (Godzilla vs. King Ghidora) (as Prime Minister)

Films as Actor and Director:
1953 Kani-ko sen (The Crab-Canning Ship) (ro as Matsuki, + sc)
1954 Kuroi ushio (Black Tide) (as Hayami)
1955 Sara no hanano toge
1959 Hahakogusa; Kashimanada no onna (The Maidens of Yashima Sea)
1960 Furyu Fukagawa uta (The Song of Fukagawa)

Publications
On YAMAMURA: article—

So Yamamura began his career as a stage actor, shifting to film after World War II. Perhaps because of his origins, he always studied the screenplay before accepting a role. His acting style was as careful as his attitude.

Yamamura’s greatest recognition in his early period was the result of his portrayal of the stagnant husband in Ozu’s The Manekata Sisters. He depicted this lonely man’s frustration so effectively that he made the character seem sympathetic as well as depressing. His vivid performance seemed to symbolize the bleak family relationships of the postwar period. Among Yamamura’s contributions to Ozu’s other films, his controlled performance as the eldest son in Tokyo Story is especially memorable.

In addition to his work with Ozu, Yamamura played several important roles of the films of Mizoguchi. Eventually, however, he established a leftist independent film company, Gendai Productions, and actively involved himself in the independent film movement. He produced and directed several films that were politically controversial and were not accepted by the major studios, but that demonstrated his ability to give realistic performances and to create dynamic and carefully constructed films. Examples of these include Kani-ko sen, which depicts the exploitation of a crab ship’s workers (based on a proletarian literary classic), and Karoi ushiro, which tells the story of a reporter who challenges authority, only to be ultimately defeated by it.

Perhaps Yamamura’s most remarkable characteristic was his versatility. Some of his most moving performances were in the role of an older man in love with a younger woman, as in the sensitive film of Kawabata’s novels, Sound of the Mountain and With Beauty and Sorrow. Perhaps the most outstanding creation of Yamamura’s film career, however, was the business mogul in Satsuo Yamamoto’s Kizudarake no sanga, which has become the archetype of the lonely villain who is also a victim of his own boundless ambition. Yamamura’s versatility as an actor is ample proof that his talent was equal to his integrity and devotion to his craft.

—Kyoko Hirano

YANKOVSKY, Oleg

Films as Actor:
1968 Shchit i mech (Shield and Sword) (Basov) (as Heinrich Schwartzkopf); Sluzhili dva tovarishcha (Two Comrades Served) (Karelov) (as Nekrasov)
1969 Beloe solntse pustiny (The White Sun of the Wilderness) (Motyl); Zhidi menyya, Ana (Wait for Me, Ana) (Vinogradov) (as Sergei Novikov); Daleko ot voiny (Far From War)
1970 Ya, Frantsisk skorina (Stepanov) (title role); Rasplata (Payment) (Filippov) (as Alexei Platov); Sokhranivshie ogon (Karelov) (as Semion)
1971 O lyubvi (About Love)
1972 Gonshchiki (The Racers) (Maslenikov) (as Sergachev)
1974 Ghev (Gibu and Proskurov) (as Leonte Chebotarua); Pod kamennym nebom (Beneath a Stony Sky) (Anderson and Maslennikov) (as Iashka); Premiya (The Prize) (Mikaelyan) (as Sololakhin)

1975 Zerkalo (The Mirror) (Tarkovsky) (as Otets); Chuzhie pisma (Other People’s Letters) (Averbakh) (as Priakhin); Zvezda plentelnogo schastya (The Star of Captivating Happiness) (Motyl) (as Ryleev)

1976 Dlinnoe, dlinnoe delo (A Long, Long Affair) (Arnon and Shredel) (as Vorontsov); Dovere (Trust) (Tregubovich) (as Piatakov); Polkovnik v otstavke (The Retired Colonel) (Sheshukov) (as Alexei); 72 gradusa nizhe nulla (72 Degrees below Zero) (Danilin and Tatarskii) (as Sergei Popov); Sladkaya chenzhchina (A Sweet Woman) (Fetin) (as Tikhon); Slovo dlya zashchity (A Word for the Defense) (Abrashitov) (as Ruslan); Sentimentalnyi roman (Maslennikov) (as Ilya Gorodnitskii)

1977 Obratnaya svyaz (Feedback) (Tregubovich) (as Sakulin); The Shooting Party (Lotyanu)

1978 Moi laskovyi i neizhnyi zver (My Tender Loving Beast) (Lotyanu) (as Kamyshov); Povorot (The Turning Point) (Abrashitov) (as Viktor Vedeneev); Obukhovnennoe utro (Zakharov) (as Khozaiain)

1979 Tot samyi Myunkhauzen (Munchhausen Himself) (Zakharov) (title role); Okrytaya kniga (An Open Book) (Fetin) (as Raevskii)

1980 My, nizhepodpisavshiesya . . . (We, the Undersigned) (Lizonova) (as Semenov)

1981 Shlyapa (The Hat) (Kvinikhidze) (as Lenisov); Sobaka Baskervilei (Maslennikov—for TV) (as Stepelton)

1982 Vlublen po sobstvennomu zelaniy (Voluntarily in Love) (Mikaelyan) (as Igor); Polisty vo sone naivou (Dream Flights) (Balayan) (as Sergei Makarov); Dom, kotoryi postroil svift (Zakharov—for TV)

1983 Nostalgia (Nostalgia) (Tarkovsky) (as Grotchkov)

1984 Khrami menio, moi talisman (Balayan) (as Liusha Dmitriev)

1987 Kreutzerova Sonata (Shiveytyzer) (as Vasil Pozdnyshnev)

1988 Filer (Balayan)

1989 Ubit Drakona (Zakharov); Az en XX. Szazadom (My 20th Century) (Enyedi) (as Z)

1990 Mado, Poste Restante (as Jean-Marie Zerlini)

1991 Tsareubiitsa (Assassin of the Tsar) (Shakhnazarov) (as Dr. Sminrov/Tsar Nicholas II)

1993 Moi Ivan, Toi Abraham (Ivan and Abraham; Me Ivan, You Abraham) (Zauberman)

1995 Mute Witness (Waller) (as Larsen); Pervaya lyubov (First Love) (Balayan)

1996 Rokovye yajtsa (Fatal Eggs) (Lomkin) (as Persikov); Muzhchina dlya molodoy devushki (A Man for a Young Girl) (Ibragimbekov); Miliyi drug davno zabytykh let (Sweet Friend of Years Forgotten Long Ago) (Samsonov); Revizor (Inspector) (Gazarov)

1998 Alissa (Goldschmidt) (as Kosicz)

Publications

By YANKOVSKY: articles—

Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), November 1973.
Interviews in Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 11, 1976, and no. 10, 1978.
Interview with Clare Kitson, in the Guardian (London), 20 April 1989.

On YANKOVSKY: articles—

Lyndina, E., ‘‘Strong, Manly, Tender,’’ in Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 12, 1981.

* * *

Oleg Yankovsky’s film career was launched by a chance meeting with the Soviet film director Vladimir Basov in a cafe in Lvov. Basov invited the young actor, a graduate of the Solomon Actors Studio in Saratov, to play the antagonist in his next film, Shchit i mech.

Since that auspicious debut, Yankovsky’s career has been closely tied to the new artistic tendencies in Soviet cinema, particularly when it comes to portraying new conceptions of traditional figures. In the 1960s and early 1970s, Yankovsky’s roles were predominantly patterned around this theme—several directors found his boyish figure, intelligently ironic features, and sardonic smile ideally suited to their unconventional approaches to historical characters. The most notable example of Yankovsky’s work from this period is his Nekrasov in Sluzhili dva tovarishcha, a student in St. Petersburg who joins the Red Army, taking part in the Revolution not only with his gun, but with his camera. The director, Karelov, had originally intended Yankovsky for the part of the antagonist Brusnetzov (played by Vladimir Visodsky), but gambled successfully on Yankovsky’s ability to play heroic roles without resorting to larger-than-life mannerisms. Instead, Yankovsky’s special ability appears to be his talent for making historic figures seem familiar and understandable to contemporary audiences, an attribute also evident in his performance in the title role of Ya, Frantsisk skorina as an enlightened 14th-century humanitarian.

Yankovsky’s realistic talent made him a natural candidate for roles in contemporary Soviet films that focused on the complex moral and social issues confronting a socialist economic system. His ability to express the inner emotions of his characters lifted his portrayals of Communist Party leaders (in Premiya and Obratnaya svyaz) far above the popular film stereotypes.

Perhaps the most consistent feature of Yankovsky’s film career has been his constant diversification of roles. This tendency became very evident in the 1970s, when Yankovsky’s creative restlessness propelled him through a large group of varied roles, not all of them major (some were small and even episodic). Throughout this diversity, a unifying theme remained in the actor’s continued exploration of complex, often contradictory characters, who frequently undergo violent emotional turmoil. An especially interesting example is Yankovsky’s performance in Emil Lotyanu’s Moi laskovyi i neizhnyi zver. In this adaptation of Chekhov’s Hunting Drama, Yankovsky’s character is Kamyshov, a bright and gifted man whose personality is dramatically crushed by the mediocrec pettiness and false morality of a small provincial Russian town. Yankovsky gives one of his best performances as he expresses the gradual deterioration of Kamyshov’s character, which ultimately transforms him into a murderer.

Character transformation is also a central theme of the musical Shlyapa, in which Yankovsky played an egocentric trumpeter who survives a deep emotional crisis, affecting both his private life and his career. Similarly, Yankovsky has played Igor, an alcoholic who reforms, in Vlublen po sobstvennomu zelaniy.
Yankovsky is also known for his collaboration with the director Andrey Tarkovsky in Nostalghia and Zerkalo. In addition to his active film career, Yankovsky also continues to act on the stage, maintaining his status as one of the most popular Russian actors.

—Christina Stoyanova

YORK, Michael

Education: Bachelor’s Degree in English from Oxford University.

Films as Actor:

1967 La Bisbetica Domata (The Taming of the Shrew) (Zefferilli) (as Lucentio); Red and Blue (Richardson); Smashing Time (Davis) (as Tom Wabe); Accident (Losey) (as William)

1968 The Strange Affair (Greene) (as Peter Strange); Romeo and Juliet (Zefferilli) (as Tybalt)

1969 Justine (Cukor) (as Darley); Alfred the Great (Donner) (as Guthrum); The Guru (Ivory) (as Tom Pickle)

1970 Something for Everyone (Black Flowers for the Bride: The Rook) (Prince) (as Konrad Ludwig)

1971 Zeffirelli (as Geoffrey Richter-Douglas); La Poudre D’Escampette (French Leave; Touch and Go) (deBroca) (as Basil)

1972 Cabaret (Fosse) (as Brian Roberts)

1973 The Three Musketeers (Lester) (as D’Artagnan); Lost Horizon (Jarrott) (as George Conway); England Made Me (Duffell) (as Anthony Farrant)

1974 Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Count Andrenyi); The Four Musketeers (Lester) (as D’Artagnan)

1975 Conduct Unbecoming (Anderson) (as Arthur Drake)

1976 Logan’s Run (Anderson) (as Logan); Seven Nights in Japan (Gilbert) (as Prince George)

1977 The Last Remake of Beau Geste (Feldman) (as Beau Geste); The Island of Doctor Moreau (Taylor) (as Andrew Braddock); Jesus of Nazareth (Zefferilli—for TV) (as John the Baptist)

1978 Fedora (Wilder) (as himself); Much Ado about Nothing (McWhinnie—for TV) (as Benedick); Speed Fever (Morra and Orefici)

1979 A Man Called Intrepid (Carter—for TV) (as Evan Michaelian)

1980 Final Assignment (Almond) (as Lyosha Petrov)

1981 Vendredi ou la Vie Sauvage (Robinson Crusoe and Man Friday) (Vergez—for TV) (as Robinson Crusoe); The White Lions (Stuart) (as Chris McElroy)

1983 The Phantom of the Opera (Markowitz—for TV) (as Hartnell); Au Nom de Tous les Miens (For Those I Loved) (Fernandez—for TV) (as Martin Gray)

1984 Success Is the Best Revenge (Skolimowski) (as Alex Rodak); Master of Ballantrae (Hickox—for TV) (as James Durrie)

1985 Space (Phillips and Sargent—for TV) (as Dieter Kolff); L’Aube (The Dawn) (Jancscs) (as John Dawson)

1986 Dark Mansions (London—for TV) (as Jason Drake); The Far Country (Miller—for TV) (Carl Zlinter); Sword of Gideon (Anderson—for TV) (as Robert)

1987 Der Joker (Lethal Obsession) (Patzak) (as Dr. Proper); Un Delitto Poco Comune (Off Balance; Phantom of Death) (Deodato) (as Robert Dominici)

1988 Killing Blue (Midnight Cop) (Patzak) (as Karstens); The Four Minute Mile (Goddard) (as Franz Stampp)

1989 Till We Meet Again (Jarrott—for TV) (as Paul de Lancel); The Lady and the Highwayman (Hough—for TV) (as King Charles II); The Secret of the Sahara (Negrin) (as Desmond Jordan); The Heat of the Day (Morahan) (as Robert); The Return of the Musketeers (Lester) (as D’Artagnan)

1990 Night of the Fox (Jarrott) (as Rommel); Come See the Paradise (Parker) (as Band Leader)

1991 Eline Vere (Kumel) (as Lawrence St. Claire); Rochade (Patzak—for TV) (as Paul Grumbach); The Wanderer (Levis) (as The Wanderer)

1992 Duel of Hearts (Hough—for TV) (as Gervaise Warlingham); The Long Shadow (Zsigmond) (as Gabor/Raphael Romandy)

1993 David Copperfield (Arioli—for TV) (as Murdstone); Wide Sargasso Sea (Duigan) (as Paul Mason); Discretion Assured (Mendes) (as Trevor)

1994 Fall From Grace (Hasseinz—for TV) (as Stromelburg); Tekwar: Teklab (Bond—for TV) (as Richard Stewart)

1995 Gospa (Sedlar) (as Milan Vukovic); Not of This Earth (Winkless) (as Paul Johnson); L’Ombra Abitata (Mazzuocco); A Young Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court (Thomas) (as Merlin)

1996 September (Bucksey—for TV) (as Edmund); La Nouvelle Tribu (Vadim—for TV) (as Ilya); Dark Planet (Magnoli) (as Winter); The Ring (Mastroianni) (as Walmar von Gotthard)

1997 The Ripper (Meyers—for TV) (as Charles Warren); Goodbye America (Notz) (as Senator Bladon); True Women (Arthur—for TV) (as Lewis Lawshe); Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery (Roach) (as Basil Exposition)

1998 A Knight in Camelot (Young—for TV) (as King Arthur); The Treat (Gems) (as Simon); 54 (Christopher) (as The Ambassador); Wrongfully Accused (Proff) (as Hibbing Goodhue); Lovers and Liars (Freed); Merchants of Venus (Richmond); One Hell of a Guy (Pasternak); Perfect Little Angels (Bond) (as Dr. Calvin Lawrence)

1999 The Omega Code (Marcarelli) (as Stone Alexander); Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me (Roach) (as Basil Exposition); Ghostly Rental (Marcus) (as Professor
Michael Johnson knew from an early age that he wanted a career as an actor. This led him, as a young man, to adopt the professional surname of “York” (inspired by a brand of cigarettes). Growing up just outside of London, York had the opportunity of joining the newly-formed National Youth Theatre, which had been founded to give talented children a chance to develop their thespian talents. York continued with acting while a student at England’s prestigious Oxford University. His contemporaries in the Oxford Dramatic Society included Michael Palin and Terry Jones, who would later form the famous comedy troupe “Monty Python.” A few months after graduation, York was on tour with the Dundee Repertory when he learned that Lawrence Olivier (perhaps the greatest actor that Britain had ever produced) was forming the British National Theatre Company. York auditioned, and was one of the first actors accepted. Many of his fellow performers—such as Maggie Smith, Derek Jacobi, Ian McKellen, Albert Finney, and Lynn Redgrave—would go on to become major figures on the stage and screen.
York’s work with the National Theatre brought him into contact with Italian director Franco Zeffirelli, who directed several plays for Olivier’s new troupe, including Much Ado about Nothing, which featured York in a prominent role. A year after directing York on stage, Zeffirelli cast him in the film version of another Shakespeare work, The Taming of the Shrew. York’s performance as Lucentio so impressed his director that Zeffirelli called again two years later, offering York the role of Tybalt in the new film version of Romeo and Juliet. Zeffirelli’s production proved to be one of the biggest hits of 1968, and young Michael York suddenly found himself considered a movie actor.

Although starring roles in several major films followed, York never gained the international superstar status enjoyed by some of his countrymen (such as Sean Connery and Michael Caine). He did achieve fame for several of his roles in the 1970s—bisexual Brian Roberts in Cabaret (1972), D’Artagnan in Richard Lester’s The Three Musketeers (1973), the title character in the futuristic sci-fi film Logan’s Run (1976), and John the Baptist in Zeffirelli’s made-for-TV epic, Jesus of Nazareth (1977).

But prominent roles in A-list films seemed to elude Michael York throughout the 1980s and most of the 1990s. He did, however, keep working regularly, playing mostly supporting roles—in films large and small, on stage in England and the U.S., and in episodic TV. He once described his career philosophy to an interviewer in this way: “Stay around, and stay busy.”

However, in the late 1990s, York’s film career received a distinct boost, from a couple of unlikely sources. He played Basil Exposition, head of Her Majesty’s Secret Service, in two Austin Powers films: Austin Powers, International Man of Mystery (1997) and its sequel, Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me (1999). The two films, which starred Mike Myers, spoofed the 1960s secret agent craze and were highly successful at the box office. In addition, York starred in The Omega Code (1999), an apocalyptic thriller made by a small, Christian-oriented production company operating on a shoestring budget. Despite the lack of a major studio to publicize the film, it was extremely popular among fundamentalist Christians, who were often told about it (and urged to see it) by their local preachers.

Whether his recent box-office successes will lead Michael York back into prominence in the twenty-first century remains to be seen, but it seems likely that, either way, he will continue to follow his own advice: “Stay around, and stay busy.”

—Justin Gustainis

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Role Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Tunes of Glory (Neame)</td>
<td>(as Morag Sinclair); There Was a Crooked Man (Burge) (as Ellen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>The Greenengage Summer (Loss of Innocence)</td>
<td>(Lewis Gilbert) (as Jess Grey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Freud (Freud: The Secret Passion)</td>
<td>(Huston) (as Cecily Koertner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Tom Jones (Richardson)</td>
<td>(as Sophie Western)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>The Seventh Dawn (Lewis Gilbert)</td>
<td>(as Candace Trumpey); Scene Un, Take One (Hatton) (as the actress)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Scruggs (Hart)</td>
<td>(as Susan); Sands of the Kalahari (Endfield) (as Grace Monckton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Kaleidoscope (The Bank Breaker) (Smight)</td>
<td>(as Angel McGinnis); A Man for All Seasons (Zinnemann) (as Margaret More)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Mr. Sebastian (Sebastian)</td>
<td>(as Becky Howard); Duffy (Parrish) (as Segolene); The Killing of Sister George (Aldrich) (as Alice “Childie” McNaught)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Lock Up Your Daughters (Coe)</td>
<td>(as Hiaret); Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Eleanor); Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (as Section Officer Maggie Harvey); They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? (Pollack) (as Alice LeBlanc); Country Dance (Brotherly Love) (J. Lee Thompson) (as Hilary Dow)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Zee and Company (X, Y, and Zee)</td>
<td>(Hutton) (as Stella); Jane Eyre (Delbert Mann—for TV) (title role); Happy Birthday, Wanda June (Robson) (as Penelope Ryan); Second Chance (Tewksbury—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Images (Altman)</td>
<td>(as Cathryn; + story)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Gold (Hunt)</td>
<td>(as Terry Steynor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Conduct Unbecoming (Anderson)</td>
<td>(as Mrs. Marjorie Scarlett); The Maids (Miles) (as Claire); That Lucky Touch (Miles) (as Julia Richardson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Sky Riders (Hickox)</td>
<td>(as Ellen Bracken); Eliza Fraser (Burstall) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Superman (Richard Donner)</td>
<td>(as Lara); The Shout (Skolimowski) (as Rachel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>The Silent Partner (Duke)</td>
<td>(as Julie Carver); The Golden Gate Murders (Phantom of the Golden Gate; Specter on the Bridge) (Grauman—for TV) (as Sister Veneca)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The Awakening (Newell)</td>
<td>(as Jane Turner); Superman II (Lester) (as Lara); Long Shot (Hatton) (as herself); Falling in Love Again (In Love) (Paul) (as Sue Lewis; + co-sc); Loophole (Break In) (Quested) (as Dinah Booker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>We’ll Meet Again (Wharmby—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Yellowbeard (Damski)</td>
<td>(as Lady Churchill); Nelly’s Version (Hatton) (as narrator)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>A Christmas Carol (Clive Donner—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Mrs. Cratchit); Macho (Gessner—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>A Month in the Country (Lawrence)</td>
<td>(as Lorraine Barry)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Alice (Gruza); Daemon (Finbow)</td>
<td>(as Thriller) (Gessner—for TV); Walkie Talkie (Perkins)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Prettykill (Kaczender)</td>
<td>(as Tonij); Barbabula Barbabulu (Carpi); Mia, moy mio (Grammatikov) (as The Weaver Woman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Superman IV: The Quest for Peace (Furie)</td>
<td>(as voice of Lara)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Yorker, Susannah

Susannah York (right) with Beryl Reid in The Killing of Sister George

1989  Melancholia (Engel) (as Catherine Lanham Franck); En Handfull Tid (A Handful of Time) (Asphaug)
1990  Fate (Paul); The Man from the Pru (Rohrer—for TV) (as Amy Wallace)
1992  Illusions (Kulle) (as Dr. Sanders)
1993  Piccolo Grande Amore (Pretty Princess) (Vanzina) (as Queen Christina); The Higher Mortals (Finbow) (as Miss Thorogood)
1997  Loop (Niblo) (as Olivia)
1998  So This Is Romance?
2000  St. Patrick: The Irish Legend (Robert Hughes—for TV) (as Concessa)

By YORK: articles—

On YORK: articles—

Film a Doba (Prague), October 1984.

Publications

By YORK: books—

When Susannah York started her career, one might have been tempted to think of her merely as the thinking man’s bimbo with her blond, engaging loveliness and ingenuous blue eyes. She has, however, tackled a wide variety of roles in her film career and given the lie to this crass assumption.

After her first film role, as Alec Guinness’s daughter in Tunes of Glory, Guinness called her “the best thing in films since Audrey Hepburn.” York also played a sweet young thing in the Norman Wisdom comedy There Was a Crooked Man, and a lovesick schoolgirl in The Greengage Summer with Kenneth More, then appeared opposite Montgomery Clift in John Huston’s Freud. The role that made her name, however, was as the captivating, innocent, and sensuous Sophie Western opposite Albert Finney in Tom Jones. After three fairly dire American films, she departed from her usual parts to play Sir Thomas More’s grave and intellectual daughter in A Man for All Seasons and the passive and childlike lesbian roommate of Beryl Reid in The Killing of Sister George amidst all the publicity attendant upon her love scene with Coral Browne. In 1969 she won an Oscar for her performance as a blond flapper/movie aspirant in Shoot Horses, Don’t They? She also made Sky Riders with James Coburn, starred with Elizabeth Taylor and Michael Caine in Zee and Company, and appeared in a television film of Jane Eyre with George C. Scott.

While her roles in the 1960s and 1970s made her an international name, superstardom eluded her. One of her most interesting films of this period was Robert Altman’s dreamlike psycho-thriller Images in which she played an author of children’s books, which she subsequently became in real life.

Her most recent role in a major film was as Christopher Reeve’s birth mother on the planet Krypton in the first two Superman films; her voice alone returned for the final installment in the series, Superman IV: The Quest for Peace. She continues to remain active in films for British and American television—among the most interesting recent examples of which was The Man from the Pru, a fictional recounting of Britain’s notorious Wallace murder case (the same case that inspired the play and film Dial M for Murder), co-starring Jonathan Pryce.

—Sylvia Paskin, updated by John McCarty

YOUNG, Loretta

Nationality: American. Born: Gretchen Michaela Young in Salt Lake City, 6 January 1913; grew up in Hollywood. Education: Attended the Ramona Convent, Alhambra, California. Family: Married 1) Grant Withers, 1930 (divorced 1931), adopted daughter: Judy; 2) Thomas H. A. Lewis, 1940, sons: Christopher Paul and Peter; 3) costume designer Jean Louis, 1993 (died 1997). Career: Film debut as extra at age five in The Only Way; late 1920s—contract with First National, and with 20th Century-Fox, 1933–40; 1953–61—host and occasionally actress in The Loretta Young Show (anthology program), and actress in the drama series The New Loretta Young Show, 1962–63. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award for The Farmer’s Daughter, 1947. Died: 12 August 2000 in Los Angeles, California, of ovarian cancer.

Films as Actress:

1919 The Only Way (Melford) (as child on the operating table); Sirens of the Sea (bit role)
1921 The Son of the Sheik (Melford) (as Arab child)
1927 Naughty but Nice (Webb)
1928 Her Wild Oat (Neilan); The Whip Woman (Boyle); Laugh, Clown, Laugh (Beron); The Magnificent Flirt (D’Arrast); The Head Man (Cline); Scarlett Seas (Dillon)
1929 The Squall (Korda) (as Irma); The Girl in the Glass Cage (Dawson) (as Gladys Cosgrove); Fast Life (Dillon); The Careless Age (Wray) (as Muriel); The Show of Shows (Adolfi); The Forward Pass (Cline) (as Patricia Carlyle)
1930 The Man from Blankley’s (Green) (as Margery Seaton); The Second-Story Murder (Del Ruth) (as Marian Ferguson); Loose Ankles (Wilde) (as Ann Harper Berry); Road to Paradise (Beaudine) (as Margaret Waring/Mary Brennan); Kismet (Dillon) (as Marsinah); The Truth about Youth (Seiter) (as Phyllis Ericson); The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice) (as Dorothy Hope)
1931 Beau Ideal (Brenon) (as Isabel Brandon); The Right of Way (Lloyd) (as Rosalie Evanturnal); Three Girls Lost (Lanfield) (as Noreen McMann); Too Young to Marry (Leroy) (as Elaine Bumpstead); Big Business Girl (Seiter) (as Claire McIntyre); I Like Your Nerve (McGann) (as Diana); Platinum Blonde (Capra) (as Gallagher); The Ruling Voice (Lee) (as Gloria Bannister)
1932 Taxi! (Del Ruth) (as Sue Riley); The Hatchet Man (Wellman) (as Toya San); Play Girl (Love on a Budget) (Enright) (as Buster); Weekend Marriage (Freeland) (as Lola Davis); Life Begins (Flood and Nugent) (as Grace Sutton); They Call It Sin (Freeland) (as Marion Cullen)
1933 Employee’s Entrance (Del Ruth) (as Madeline); Grand Slam (Dieterle) (as Marcia Stanislavsky); Zoo in Budapest (Lee) (as Eve); The Life of Jimmy Dolan (The Sucker) (Mayo) (as Peggy); Midnight Mary (Lady of the Night) (Wellman) (as Mary Martin); Heros for Sale (Breillante) (Wellman) (as Ruth Loring); The Devil’s in Love (Dieterle) (as Margot); She Had to Say Yes (Berkeley and Amy) (as Florence Denny); A Man’s Castle (Borzage) (as Trina)
1934 The House of Rothschild (Werker) (as Julie); Born to Be Bad (Sherman) (as Letty Strong); Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back (Del Ruth) (as Lola Field); Caravan (Charell) (as Countess Wilma); The White Parade (Cummings) (as June Arden)
1935 Clive of India (Boleslawski) (as Margaret Maskelyne Clive); Shanghai (Flood) (as Barbara Howard); Call of the Wild (Wellman) (as Claire Blake); The Crusades (DeMille) (as Berengaria)
1936 The Undefeated (Wood) (as Lady Helen Dearden); Private Number (Del Ruth) (as Ellen Neal); Ramona (King) (title role); Ladies in Love (Edward Griffith) (as Susie Schmidt)
1937 Love Is News (Garnett) (as Tony Gateson); Café Metropole (Edward Griffith) (as Laura Ridgeway); Love under Fire (Marshall) (as Myra Cooper); Wife, Doctor, and Nurse (Walter Lang) (as Ina); Second Honeymoon (Walter Lang) (as Vickie)
1938  Four Men and a Prayer (Ford) (as Lynn Cherrington); Three Blind Mice (Seiter) (as Pamela Charters); Sue (Dwan) (as Empress Eugenie); Kentucky (Butler) (as Sally Goodwin)

1939  Wife, Husband, Friend (Ratoff) (as Doris Blair Borland); The Story of Alexander Graham Bell (Cummings) (as Mrs. Bell); Eternally Yours (Garnett) (as Anita Halstead)

1940  The Doctor Takes a Wife (Hall) (as June Cameron); He Stayed for Breakfast (Hall) (as Marianne Duval)

1941  The Lady from Cheyenne (Lloyd) (as Annie); The Men in Her Life (Ratoff) (as Lina Varsavina)

1942  Bedtime Story (Hall) (as Jane Drake)

1943  A Night to Remember (Wallace) (as Nancy Troy); China (Farrow) (as Carolyn Grant)

1944  Ladies Courageous (Rawlins) (as Roberta Harper); And Now Tomorrow (Pichel) (as Emily Blair)

1945  Along Came Jones (Heisler) (as Cherry de Longpre)

1946  The Stranger (Welles) (as Mary Longstreet)

1947  The Perfect Marriage (Lewis Allen) (as Maggie Williams); The Farmer's Daughter (Potter) (as Katrin Holstrom); The Bishop's Wife (Koster) (as Julia Brougham)

1948  Rachel and the Stranger (Foster) (as Rachel)

1949  The Accused (Dieterle) (as Wilma Tuttle); Mother Is a Freshman (Bacon) (as Abigail Fortitude Abbott); Come to the Stable (Koster) (as Sister Margaret)

1950  Key to the City (Sidney) (as Clarissa Standish)

1951  Cause for Alarm (Garnett) (as Ellen Jones); Half Angel (Sale) (as Nora)

1952  Paula (Maté) (title role); Because of You (Pevney) (as Christine Carroll)

1953  It Happens Every Thursday (Pevney) (as Jane MacAvoy)

1986  Christmas Eve (Cooper—for TV) (as Amanda Kingsley); Going Hollywood: The War Years (doc—archival)

1989  Lady in the Corner (Levin—for TV) (as Grace Guthrie)

1994  Life Along the Mississippi (for TV) (as Narrator)

Publications

By YOUNG: article—

Loretta Young’s career is perhaps the archetype of those stars of the 1930s who prolonged careers by living an image rather than merely performing in films. Laughable as some of the side-effects of that effort may have been, it was also a way of enhancing one’s professional durability—Young managed to work a very long time.

Indeed, she was practically a child performer when she made her first featured film appearance in a Colleen Moore vehicle, Naughty but Nice. Her performance in that film gained her a contract with First National Pictures, and she was soon playing opposite Lon Chaney in Laugh, Clown, Laugh. She survived the transition to talkies, and entered into a busy career of B picture assignments. Most of these roles were of the sweet ingenue variety, and it was only in the occasional film, such as Born to Be Bad, that she got a dramatically challenging part. This was due to her hesitancy at essaying unsympathetic roles, a mistake that ultimately made her film career less distinctive than it might have been, since she could be a moving and effective actress when the occasion demanded. A concrete example of her ironclad public image of upstanding Catholicism was given by Leonard Spiegelgass (in an interview with George Eells). Spiegelgass, a scriptwriter on her film The Perfect Marriage, noted that: ‘‘we had all kinds of problems because she didn’t want to mention the word ‘divorce’ . . . the whole play was about a divorce she never got. That’s why she agreed to do it. She’d say ‘separation’ but not ‘divorce’.’’ This counterproductive attitude, and a marriage that put her into semiretirement, brought her career to an ebb in the mid-1940s. At the urging of MGM’s Dore Schary, she made a stunning comeback in The Farmer’s Daughter, for which she received an Academy Award.

Despite this success, Young’s career did not return to its prewar heights. Her well-established screen persona of virginal womanhood was perhaps less appealing to moviegoers in the postwar era. There was a new trend toward pictures that depicted life in greater complexity, without clear-cut happy endings. While her lighter, wholesome roles were waning, Young was used to advantage in several films noir, including The Accused, Cause for Alarm, and The Stranger. In the latter film she plays the fiancée of director Orson Welles’s character; he is an escaped Nazi posing as a New England college professor. In this film Young’s rosy beauty and innocence exemplify the superficial, naive realm in which ugliness and evil sometimes flourish.

Young’s image of wholesome, unsullied femininity was a ‘‘natural’’ for television, however, and she made a smooth transition to that medium in the early 1950s. She produced a pilot show for television that later became The Loretta Young Show, a series that won several Emmy Awards as well as a special prize at the Cannes Film Festival. After several years of success in that medium, the show was canceled, and she went into semiretirement.

Whatever her public image of yielding femininity might be, there is no denying that she was a forceful and commanding personality as a businesswoman, and it was this tenacity that ensured her lasting success in the entertainment field.

—Joseph Arkins, updated by Frank Uhle

---

YOUNG, Robert

Nationality: American. Born: Robert George Young in Chicago, Illinois, 22 February 1907. Education: Attended Lincoln High School, Los Angeles. Family: Married Elizabeth Louise Henderson, 1933 (died 1994), daughters: Carol Anne, Barbara Queen, Elizabeth Louise, and Kathleen Joy. Career: Worked as clerk, salesman, reporter, and loan company collector while studying and acting with the Pasadena Playhouse; 1931—toured with a stock company’s production of The Ship; 1931–45—contract with MGM; film debut in...

Films as Actor:

1931 The Black Camel (MacFadden) (as Jimmy Bradshaw); The Sin of Madelon Claudet (Selwyn) (as Dr. Claudet); The Guilty Generation (Rowland V. Lee) (as Marco Ricca); Hell Divers (George Hill) (as young officer) 1932 The Wet Parade (Fleming) (as young officer); New Morals for Old (Brabin) (as Ralph Thomas); Unashamed (Beaumont) (as Dick Ogden); Strange Interlude (Leonard) (as Gordon); The Kid from Spain (McCarey) (as Ricardo) 1933 Men Must Fight (Selwyn) (as Geoffrey); Today We Live (Hawks) (as Claude); Hell Below (Conway) (as Lt. Brick Walters); Tugboat Annie (LeRoy) (as Alec Brennan); Saturday’s Millions (Sedgwick) (as Jim Fowler); The Right to Romance (Santell) (as Bob Preble); La ciudad de carton (Cardboard City) (King) (as himself) 1934 Carolina (The House of Connelly) (Henry King) (as Will Connelly); Spitfire (Cromwell) (as John Stafford); The House of Rothschild (Werker) (as Captain Fitzroy); Lazy River (Seitz) (as Bill Drexel); Hollywood Party (Rowland and others) (as himself); Whom the Gods Destroy (Lang) (as Jack Forrester); Paris Interlude (Marin) (as Pat Wells); Death on the Diamond (Sedgwick) (as Larry Kelly); The Band Plays On (Mack) (as Tony Ferrera) 1935 West Point of the Air (Rosson) (as Little Mike); Vagabond Lady (Sam Taylor) (as Tony Spear); Calm Yourself (Seitz) (as Pat); Red Salute (Her Enlisted Man; Runaway Daughter; Arms and the Girl) (Lanfield) (as Jeff); Remember Last Night? (Whale) (as Tony Milburn); The Bride Comes Home (Ruggles) (as Jack Bristow) 1936 Three Wise Guys (Seitz) (as Joe); It’s Love Again (Saville) (as Peter Carlton); The Bride Walks Out (Jason) (as Hugh MacKenzie); Secret Agent (Hitchcock) (as Marvin); Sworn Enemy (Marin) (as Hank Sherman); The Longest Night (Taggart) (as Charley Phelps); Stowaway (Seiter) (as Tommy Randall) 1937 Dangerous Number (Thorpe) (as Hank Medhill); I Met Him in Paris (Ruggles) (as Gene Anders); Married before Breakfast (Marin) (as Tom Wakefield); The Emperor’s Candlesticks (Fitzmaurice) (as Grand Duke Peter); The Bride Wore Red (Arzner) (as Rudi Pal); Navy Blue and Gold (Wood) (as Roger Ash) 1938 Paradise for Three (Buzzell) (as Fritz Hagedorn); Josette (Dwan) (as Pierre Brossard); The Toy Wife (Thorpe) (as Andre Vallaire); Three Comrades (Borzage) (as Gottfried Lenz); Rich Man, Poor Girl (Schunzel) (as Bill Harrison); The Shining Hour (Borzage) (as David Linden) 1939 Honolulu (Buzzell) (as Brooks Mason/George Smith); Bridal Suite (Thiele) (as Neil McGill); Miracles for Sale (Browning) (as Michael Morgan); Maisie (Marin) (as Slim Martin) Northwest Passage (Conway and King Vidor) (as Langdon Towne); Florian (Marin) (as Anton); The Mortal Storm (Borzage) (as Fritz Marber); Sporting Blood (Simon) (as Myles Vanders); Dr. Kildare’s Crisis (Bucquet) (as Douglas Lamont) 1940 The Trial of Mary Dugan (McLeod) (as Jimmy Blake); Western Union (Fritz Lang) (as Richard Blake); Lady Be Good (McLeod) (as Eddie Crane); Married Bachelor (Buzzell) (as Randolph Haven); H.M. Pulham, Esq. (King Vidor) (title role) 1942 Joe Smith, American (Highway to Freedom) (Thorpe) (title role); Cairo (Van Dyke) (as Homer Smith); Journey for Margaret (Van Dyke) (as John Davis) 1943 Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles) (as Bob Stuart); Claudia (Goulding) (as David Naughton); Sweet Rosie O’Grady (Cummings) (as Sam Mackeever) 1944 The Canterville Ghost (Dassin) (as Cuffy Williams) The Enchanted Cottage (Cromwell) (as Oliver); Those Endearing Young Charms (Lewis Allen) (as Hank) 1946 Lady Luck (Marin) (as Scott); The Searching Wind (Dieterle) (as Alex Hazen); Claudia and David (Lang) (as David Naughton) 1947 They Won’t Believe Me (Pichel) (as Larry Ballantine); Crossfire (Dmytryk) (as Captain Finlay) 1948 Relentless (Sherman) (as Nick Buckley); Sitting Pretty (Walter Lang) (as Harry) 1949 Adventure in Baltimore (Wallace) (as Dr. Sheldon); Bride for Sale (William D. Russell) (as Steve Adams); That Forsyte Woman (The Forsyte Saga) (Bennett) (as Philip Bosinney); And Baby Makes Three (Levin) (as Vernon Walsh) 1951 The Second Woman (Kern) (as Jeff Cohalan); Goodbye, My Fancy (Sherman) (as James Merril) 1952 The Half-Breed (Gilmore) (as Dan Craig) 1954 Secret of the Incas (Jerry Hopper) (as Dr. Stanley Moorehead) 1961 Marcus Welby, M.D. (A Matter of Humanities) (Rich—for TV) (title role) 1971 Vanished (Kulik—for TV) (as Senator Earl Gannon) 1972 All My Darling Daughters (Rich—for TV) (as Judge Charles Raleigh) 1973 My Darling Daughters’ Anniversary (Pevney) (as Judge Charles Raleigh) 1978 Little Women (Rich—for TV) (as James Laurence) 1984 The Return of Marcus Welby, M.D. (Singer—for TV) (title role) 1987 Mercy or Murder? (Gethers—for TV) (as Roswell Gilbert); Conspiracy of Love (Black—for TV) (as Grampa Joe Wolardski) 1988 Marcus Welby, M.D.—A Holiday Affair (Singer—for TV) (title role) 1997 Die Verlorene Tochter (The Lost Daughter) (Cardinal) (as First Male Journalist) (title role)

Publications

By YOUNG: article—

On YOUNG: book—

On YOUNG: article—

* * *

After a long screen career that was noteworthy primarily for his survival while other, more flamboyant actors burned brightly and then disappeared, Robert Young achieved his greatest success at an age when most actors begin to think of retirement. Exuding a screen personality that conveyed a carefree yet honest and sympathetic air, he made a career of playing light romantic leads in predominately B pictures. When he grew too old to play such roles convincingly, he made a smooth transition to character parts. His stock in trade was that, while conveying a strength that was sufficient to win the heroine, he did not exhibit a fiery passion that would make her feel threatened.

Young’s strongest screen work came in the immediate postwar period: The Searching Wind (playing a deluded U.S. ambassador in prewar Europe); They Won’t Believe Me (as a deceitful husband); and Crossfire (as a weary but determined cop attempting to solve a murder). His best screen performance, however, that of Oliver in The Enchanted Cottage, demonstrated Young’s considerable range. The film, intended to raise the morale of disfigured soldiers returning from the war, required the actor to play a G.I. who returns from combat with severe scars and nerve damage, afraid to face his former fiancée. Playing opposite Dorothy Maguire, who acted the role of a similar social outcast, he created an unforgettable character that, while rooted in the quiet reality one expects from a Young portrayal, soared briefly in the enchantment of his own self-deception. In the end, the actor merged both aspects of the character to create a man, who, although physically deformed, could look upon himself as miraculously whole in the aspects of life that are the most meaningful.

Perhaps it was this image of self-acceptance and quiet strength that somehow transformed him into the prototypical patriarch of the universal American family on television in the 1950s. In the new medium, he enjoyed an even stronger success than he had known on the large screen. The long-running Father Knows Best rejuvenated his career and propelled him into an equally popular series that began in 1969, Marcus Welby, M.D.

—Stephen L. Hanson, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg
ZETTERLING, Mai (Elisabeth)

Films as Actress:

1941 Lasse-Maja (Olsson)
1943 Jag drapte (Molander)
1944 Hets (Torment; Frenzy) (Sjöberg) (as Bertha Olsson); Prins Gustaf (Bauman)
1946 Iris och Lojtnantshjarta (Iris and the Lieutenant) (Sjöberg) (as Iris); Driver dagg faller Regn (Sunshine Follows Rain)
1947 Frieda (Dearden) (title role)
1948 Musik i moerker (Music in Darkness; Night Is My Future) (Bergman) (as Ingrid); The Bad Lord Byron (Macdonald) (as Teresa Guiccioli); The Girl in the Painting (Portrait from Life) (Fisher) (as Hildegarde)
1949 Quartet (Annakin and others) (as Jeanne); The Romantic Age
1950 Blackmailed (Marc Allégret) (as Carol Edwards); The Lost People (Knowles) (as Lili)
1951 Hell Is Sold Out (Anderson) (as Valerie Martin)
1952 The Tall Headlines (The Frightened Bride) (Young) (as Doris Richardson); The Ringer (The Gaunt Stranger) (Hamilton) (as Lisa)
1953 Desperate Moment (Bennett) (as Anna de Burgh)
1954 Dance Little Lady (Guest) (as Nina Gordon); Knock on Wood (Panama) (as Ilse Nordstrom)
1955 A Prize of Gold (Robson) (as Maria)
1957 Abandon Ship! (Seven Waves Away) (Sale) (as Julie)
1958 The Truth about Women (Box) (as Julie); Lek pa regnbagen (Kjellgren)
1959 Jet Storm (Endfield) (as Carol Tilley)
1960 Faces in the Dark (Eady) (as Christiane Hammond); Piccadilly Third Stop (Rilla) (as Christine Pready)
1961 Offbeat (Owen) (as Ruth Lombard)
1962 The Man Who Finally Died (Lawrence) (as Lisa); Only Two Can Play (Giliat) (as Elizabeth Gruffydd Williams); The Main Attraction (Petrie) (as Gina)
1963 The Bay of St. Michael (Ainsworth) (as Helene Bretton)
1965 The Vine Bridge (Nykvist)
1988 Calling the Shots (Cole—doc) (appearance)
1990 The Witches (Roeg) (as Helga); Hidden Agenda (Loach) (as Moa)
1993 Morfar Resa (Grandfather’s Journey) (Staffan Lamm) (as Elin Fromm)

Films as Director:

1960 The Polite Invasion (doc—for TV)
1961 Lords of Little Egypt (doc—for TV); The War Game (short) (+ pr)
1962 The Prosperity Race (doc—for TV)
1963 The Do-It-Yourself Democracy (doc—for TV)
1964 Alsokande par (Loving Couples) (co-d with David Hughes, + co-sc)
1966 Nattlek (Night Games) (+ co-sc)
1967 Doktor Glas (co-d with David Hughes)
1968 Flickorna (The Girls) (co-d with David Hughes)
1971 Vincent the Dutchman (doc) (co-d with David Hughes, + pr)
1973 “The Strongest” ep. of Visions of Eight (co-d with David Hughes)
1976 We har manje namn (We Have Many Names) (+ ro, sc, ed)
1977 Stockholm (for TV) (+ ro)
1978 The Rain’s Hat (for TV) (+ ed)
1982 Love (for TV) (co-d, + co-sc)
1983 Scrubbers (+ co-sc)
1986 Amorosa (+ sc, co-ed)
1990 Sunday Pursuit

Publications

By ZETTERLING: books—

Shadow of the Sun (short stories), New York, 1975.
Bird of Passage (novel), New York, 1976.
Ice Island (novel), New York, 1979.

By ZETTERLING: articles—

Interview in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), April 1966.
“Mai Zetterling at the Olympic Games,” interview in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), November 1972.
On ZETTERLING: books—

On ZETTERLING: articles—

‘‘Meeting with Mai Zetterling,’’ in Cahiers du Cinéma in English (New York), December 1966.
Pyros, J., ‘‘Notes on Women Directors,’’ in Take One (Montreal), November/December 1970.

* * *

This Swedish actress turned controversial filmmaker combined the earthy sexiness of Ingrid Bergman with, as one critic noted, ‘‘a Dietrich-like suggestion of a steel vertebrae.’’

Zetterling was 19 when she made her screen debut as a prostitute in the international hit Frenzy, respectively directed and written by two of her country’s major talents, Alf Sjöberg and Ingmar Bergman, the latter just beginning his long and distinguished career. She later appeared for Bergman himself in his 1948 film Night Is My Future, playing a Lolita-ish maid, though by this time she possessed greater international renown than he did, having made her English-language film debut as a German war bride in the British drama Frieda and her theatrical debut on London’s West End in a revival of Ibsen’s Wild Duck.

Following in the footsteps of two other Swedish expatriates, Greta Garbo, then in retirement, and Ingrid Bergman, then persona non grata due to her scandalous relationship with Roberto Rossellini, Zetterling was lured to Hollywood to take their place. After making her American film debut as the love interest of star Danny Kaye in the 1954 espionage spoof Knock on Wood, however, she abruptly turned her back on Hollywood and left, never to return. In her autobiography, she writes that she was always too serious about her craft ever to do jobs just for the money. ‘‘For that I had a reputation as a freak in Hollywood, but I can’t say I ever regretted [never going back].’’

Settling in London, she remained active in the British cinema for the next decade, and appeared in two more American films as well, Mark Robson’s crime caper A Prize of Gold and Richard Sale’s taut tale of survival at sea, Abandon Ship!, based on a true story and starring Tyrone Power. The former was shot in Germany, the latter on a British soundstage. Subsequently, she appeared opposite a miscast Pat Boone in the lust and sawdust circus drama The Main Attraction and in the thriller The Man Who Finally Died, both made in Britain in 1962. She had one of her best roles the same year as a high society dame romanticed by Peter Sellers in the comedy Only Two Can Play, based on a satiric novel by Kingsley Amis.

Disheartened by the quality of most of the films she was being offered, Zetterling turned her back on acting after the routine action thriller The Bay of St. Michael and became a director, starting with several documentaries made for the BBC and the award-winning 1963 short The War Game (not to be confused with the 1967 Peter Watkins “ban the bomb” film of the same name). Returning to Sweden, she launched her feature directing career with Loving Couples, which was heavily censored in the United States and elsewhere due to its sexual explicitness. She directed one of her last films, Amorosa, in 1986, having turned her attention to writing short stories and novels, as well as a frank autobiography called All Those Tomorrows.

—John McCarty

ZHAO DAN

Nationality: Chinese. Born: Zhao Fengao in Yangzhou, 1914. Education: Attended Technical College of Art, Shanghai, 1931–34. Family: Married twice, children from both marriages, and two adopted sons. Career: 1925—first film appearance at age 11 in Young Master Feng; also wrote stories and plays for left-wing magazine; publication censored by Kuomintang government; Zhao changed name to Dan (‘‘Red’’) as political gesture; 1934—by time of graduation, acting regularly on stage and in films; 1937—reputation established by appearances in the films Street Angel and Crossroads; when Shanghai fell to Japanese, joined touring company performing anti-Japanese plays; 1939—captured by Kuomintang warlord, imprisoned for four years; 1943—returned to stage following release from prison; 1947—film directing debut; 1965—made last film, Red Crag; at outbreak of Cultural Revolution, arrested and imprisoned for five-and-a-half years; 1973—released; 1976—rejoined Shanghai Film Studio, as teacher; also stage director. Died: Of cancer, in Peking, 19 October 1980.

Films as Actor:

1925 Young Master Feng
1932 Spring Sorrow of the Pipa
1933 Twenty-Four Hours of Shanghai; Children of the Century
1934 Homesick for a Mountain Village; To the North-West; Bible for Girls
1935 Passionate, Faithful Spirit
1936 The Qingming Festival; Xiao Lingzi
1937 Shizi jietou (Crossroads) (as an unemployed graduate); Malutianshi (Street Angel)
1939 Children of China
1947 Faraway Love; Rhapsody of Happiness
1948 Irrepressible Brightness of Spring; Wuya yu Maque (Crows and Sparrows) (as the peddler, + co-sc)
1949 The Story of a Girl
1950 The Life of Wu Xun
1951 A Couple
1956 Li Shizhen, The Great Pharmacologist (title role); For Peace
1957 Hai hun (Soul of the Sea) (as the sailor)
1959 Lin xiez (The Opium War) (as the nobleman); Nie er
1960 Contemporary Heroes
1965 Lie Huozhong yongsheng (Red Crag) (as the Communist leader)
Films as Director:

1947  The Dress Returns to Glory
1953  Bless the Children
1958  An Evergreen Tree; Precious Green Mountains (+ ro)

Publications

On ZHAO DAN: books—

On ZHAO DAN: articles—

* * *

The riches of Chinese cinema still remain largely unknown to the West—otherwise, Zhao Dan would probably rank among the greatest screen actors. In Chinese terms, he might be considered roughly the equivalent of Humphrey Bogart or Gary Cooper, though far more versatile than either. Gravel-voiced, energetic, warmly likable, Zhao could play comedy without heavy mugging, and serious roles without being ponderous. In his later films he attained an unpretentious nobility, completely removed from the posturing heroics favored during the Cultural Revolution.

Zhao’s stage experience included Shakespeare and Ibsen, and he made nearly 30 films before the two which brought him to stardom. Both—not unlike Warner films of the period—blended romantic comedy with sharp-edged social comment. As the unemployed graduate of Crossroads, Zhao was cheerfully optimistic in the face of adversity; for the more somber-toned Street Angel his performance darkened, a note of manic violence creeping into his energy.

Unpopular with both the Japanese and the Kuomintang government for his left-wing beliefs, Zhao was imprisoned by the latter during the war. After his release he continued, undeterred, to make anti-KMT movies, most notably the teeming, exhilaratingly vital Crows and Sparrows, which he also co-scripted. His richly subtle performance as the opportunistic peddler meshed with inspired ensemble playing from the whole cast. Around this time he also started directing, making four competent but unremarkable films.

Increasingly, Zhao was cast as humanely heroic figures: the title role of Li Shizhen, father of Chinese herbal medicine; the sailor disgusted by his superiors’ brutality in Soul of the Sea; patriotically resisting British imperialism in The Opium War, the imprisoned, tortured Communist leader of Red Crag. This, tragically prophetic, was his last film. Arrested by order of Jiang Qing—Mao’s wife, who had acted with Zhao in the thirties—he was imprisoned again for more than five years. Broken in health, he never acted again.

—Philip Kemp
PICTURE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS
The editors wish to thank the copyright holders of the photographs included in this volume and the permissions managers of many book and magazine publishing companies for assisting us in securing reproduction rights. We are also grateful to the staffs of the Detroit Public Library, the Library of Congress, the University of Detroit Mercy Library, Wayne State University Purdy/Kresge Library Complex, and the University of Michigan Libraries for making their resources available to us. Every effort has been made to trace copyright, but if omissions have been made, please bring them to the attention of the editors. The following is a list of the copyright holders who have granted us permission to reproduce material in the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers as well as from where said resources were received:

AP/Wide World Photos. Fred Astaire; Dorothy Dandridge; Bette Davis; Dolores del Rio; Johnny Depp; Betty Grable; Rita Hayworth; Kris Kristofferson; Veronica Lake; Dorothy McGuire; Patricia Neal; Nick Nolte; Sidney Poitier; James Stewart; The Three Stooges; Barbra Streisand; Denzel Washington.

Archive Photos, Inc. Ann-Margaret; Mary Astor; Roscoe “Fatty” Arbuckle; Eddie Cantor; Bing Crosby; Tony Curtis; John Cusack; Doris Day; Jose Ferrer; Glenn Ford; Cary Grant; John Hurt/Paramount Pictures; Glenda Jackson; Buster Keaton; Charles Laughton/American Stock; Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy; Bruce Lee; Jack Lemmon/Universal Studios; The Marx Brothers/American Stock; Ray Milland/Warner Bros.; Marilyn Monroe; River Phoenix; Oliver Reed; Paul Robeson; Lana Turner; Michael York; John Wayne.

CORBIS. Bud Abbott and Lou Costello/Bettmann; Ellen Burstyn/Bettmann-UPI; Jackie Cooper; Clint Eastwood; Joan Fontaine/Bettmann-Springer; Greta Garbo/Bettmann-UPI; Vittorio Gassman/Bettmann; Trevor Howard/Bettmann-Springer; Anna Magnani/Bettmann; Maureen O’ Sullivan/Bettmann; Cliff Robertson/Bettmann-UPI; Ginger Rogers/Bettmann; Shirley Temple/Bettmann; Orson Wells/Bettmann; Anna May Wong/Bettmann; Joanne Woodward/Bettmann-Springer.

All remaining images were provided courtesy of the Kobal Collection.
NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS

AFFRON, Charles. Essayist. Professor of French, New York University, since 1965. Author of Star Acting: Gish, Garbo, Davis, 1977; Cinema and Sentiment, 1982; Divine Garbo, 1985; Fellini’s 8/2, 1987; and Sets in Motion: Art Direction and Film Narrative, 1995. General editor of Rutgers Films in Print Series. Essays: Colman; Dunbin; Garson; Rainer.

AMBROGIO, Anthony. Essayist. Formerly film and composition instructor, Wayne State University, Detroit. Contributor to Film Criticism and Pukka Afflatus. Essays: Lugosi; S. Simon; Wray.

ARKINS, Joseph. Essayist. Registrar, exhibitions program, New York Public Library. Essays: Carroll; Negri; Trevor; Webb; L. Young.

BARON, Cynthia. Essayist. Assistant lecturer, University of Southern California. Contributor to The Cinema and the Postmodern, Film and Philosophy, and Spectator. Essays: D. Andrews; Astor; Brando; Colman; Preston; Welles.

BASINGER, Jeanine. Adviser and essayist. Corwin-Fuller Professor of Film Studies, Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut; also chair, Film Studies program, and curator/founder, Wesleyan Cinema Archives. Trustee, American Film Institute; steering committee, National Center for Film and Video Preservation; and formerly on the board of advisers of the AIVF. Author of Anthony Mann, 1979; The World War II Combat Film: Anatomy of a Genre, 1986; The It’s a Wonderful Life Book, 1986; A Woman’s View: How Hollywood Spoke to Women, 1930–1960, 1993; American Cinema: 100 Years of Filmmaking, 1994; and numerous articles. Essays: Astaire; Colbert; Dunne; Hayworth; Montgomery; G. Rogers; Rooney; R. Ryan.

BERGAN, Ronald. Adviser. Regular contributor, The Guardian (London); consultant and writer for several TV documentaries; lectured on literature, theatre, and film during ten years in France; author of numerous books on the cinema, including biographies of the Coen Brothers, Sergei Eisenstein, Jean Renoir, Anthony Perkins, and Dustin Hoffman, as well as The United Artists Story and The Great Theatres of London.

BEUMERS, Birgit. Essayist. Lecturer in Russian, University of Bristol; author of Yuri Lyubimov at the Taganka Theatre (1997); editor of Russia on Reels (1999); author of articles on twentieth-century Russian theatre and contemporary cinema. Essays: Makovetskii; Men’shikov.

CLEMENTS, William M. Essayist. Professor of English, Arkansas State University. Essays: Bloom; Maximilian Schell.

COFFMAN, Elizabeth. Essayist. Assistant professor, University of Tampa. Videographer. Currently working on Women in Motion, a study of the influence of modern dance on films of the twenties and thirties. Essay: Gish.

COHEN, Allen. Essayist. Retired librarian, University of California, Santa Barbara, where he headed the Cataloging Department and was Collection Development Officer for Film Studies; publications include John Huston: A Guide to References and Resources, 1997; currently working on a biographical dictionary of the power brokers. in the movie industry and a book on the Farm Security Administration photographers in Pennsylvania. Essays: Aiello; Cusack.

COOK, Samantha. Essayist. Freelance editor, researcher, and writer, London. Essay: Bridges.

COUNSINS, R. F. Essayist. Senior lecturer in French studies, University of Birmingham, UK; responsible for French film courses. Publications include Zola’s Thérèse Raquin, 1992. Author of film essays in French Cinema in the 1990s, 1999; The Emile Zola Centenary Colloquium, 1995; and The Encyclopedia of Stage Plays on Film, forthcoming. Contributor to Literature/Film Quarterly, Les Annales de l’Université de Besançon, Excavatio, Les Cahiers Naturalistes, and The Bulletin of the Emile Zola Society. Essays: Darrieux; Gabin; Girardot; Huppert; Morgan; Noiret; Philipe; Piccoli; Presle; Trintignant.

CREEKMUR, Corey K. Essayist. Assistant professor of English, and advisory board member, Institute for Cinema and Culture and the Program for Sexuality Studies, University of Iowa; teaches courses in film, cultural studies, and American popular culture; publications include the co-edited anthology Out in Culture: Gay, Lesbian, and Queer Essays in Popular Culture, and essays in anthologies The Road Movie Book, Oscar Miechau and His Circle, and Photo-Textualities, and the periodicals Wide Angle, Discourse, Film Quarterly, and The Hitchcock Annual. Essays: Astaire; Dunne; Hara; Keitel; Kyo; D. Moore; Robeson; Ryu; Yamada.

CROWDUS, Gary. Adviser. Founder and editor-in-chief, Cineaste magazine; editor of A Political Companion to American Film.

DALE, Alan. Essayist. Lecturer, Princeton University. Essays: Cage; Day-Lewis; Hoffman; D. Keaton; Murray; Nolte; Penn; R. Williams.

DAVIAU, Gertraud Steiner. Essayist. Lecturer at the Universities of Vienna and Klagenfurt, Austria; visiting scholar, University of California, Riverside, and University of California, Los Angeles; civil servant, Austrian Federal Chancellery/ Federal Press Service, Austria; working on a research project and screenplay for the documentary Austria’s Hollywood—Hollywood’s Austria, author of Die Heimat-Macher. Kino in Österreich 1946–1966, 1987; Filmbook Austria, 2nd edition, 1997; and Traumfabrik Rosenhügel (The Dream Factory of Rosenhügel), 1997. Essay: Jürgens.

DEANE, Pamala S. Essayist. Independent writer and media historian; M.A. in Radio/TV/Film, University of Maryland, College Park; author of fiction and screenplays for documentary programming. Essay: Goldblum.

DELMATER, Jerome. Essayist. Associate professor, Department of Communication Arts, Hofstra University, Hempstead, New York, since 1978. Author of Dance in the American Musical, 1981. Essays: Charsisse; Hara; Gene Kelly; Miller; O’Connor; Sinatra; Sullivan.

DERRY, Charles. Essayist. Professor and coordinator of film studies, Wright State University, Dayton, Ohio, from 1978; author of Dark Dreams: A Psychological History of the Modern Horror Film, 1977; and The Suspense Thriller: Films in the Shadow of Alfred Hitchcock, 1988; co-author, with Jack Ellis and Sharon Kern, of the reference work The Film Book Bibliography: 1940–1975, 1979; director of the short films Cerebral Accident and Joan Crawford Died For Your Sins; author of the play “‘Ten Memories of My Mother, in the Order I Think of Them’”; fiction has appeared in a variety of periodicals and anthologies, including Reclaiming the Heartland: Gay and Lesbian Voices from the Midwest, Contra/Dictions, The Chattahoochee Review, and The Portland Literary Review. Essays: Ann-Margret; Audran; Farrow; G. Jackson; S. Martin; Streisand.

DIBATTISTA, Maria. Essayist. Professor of English and comparative literature, Princeton University. Author of forthcoming book on American film comedy of the thirties and forties. Essays: Basinger; Kline; Loy; Stanwyck.

DICKSON, Jay. Essayist. Lecturer in English, Princeton University. Essay: Weaver.

DOLL, Susan M. Essayist. Instructor in film at Oakton Community College and at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. Author of Elvis, a Tribute to His Life, 1989; Marilyn: Her Life and Legend, 1990; and Elvis, Rock ‘n’ Roll Legend, 1994. Essays: Armendáriz; Brynner; Cardinale; Murphy.

DURGNAT, Raymond. Essayist. Visiting professor of film, Wright State University, Dayton, Ohio. Author of numerous publications on film, including D urgnat on Film, 1975; King Vidor—American, 1988; and Michael Powell and the English Genius, 1991. Essays: Caine; Eilcott; Matthau; Sellers.

EDELMAN, Rob. Essayist. Author of Great Baseball Films, 1994; and Baseball on the Web, 1998. Co-author of Angela Lansbury: A Life on Stage and Screen, 1996; The John Travolta Scrapbook, 1997; and Meet the Mertzes, 1999. Contributing editor of Leonard Maltin’s Movie & Video Guide, Leonard Maltin’s Movie Encyclopedia, and Leonard Maltin’s Family Film Guide. Director of programming of Home Film Festival. Contributor to The Political Companion to American Film, Women Filmmakers & Their Films, Total Baseball, The Total Baseball Catalog, International Film Guide, and The Whole Film Sourcebook. Film critic/commentator, WAMC (North-east) Public Radio. Lecturer, University at Albany. Former film critic/columnist, New Haven Register and Gazette Newspapers. Former adjunct instructor, The School of Visual Arts, Iona College, Sacred Heart University. Essays: Attenborough; Bardot; A. Bates; Beatty; Belmondo; Blanchett; Bonham-Carter; Brandauer; Bridges; Caan; G. Chaplin; Clooney; Cobb; Costner; J. Curtis; De Niro; Deneuve; Depardieu; Dillon; Michael Douglas; Elliott; Ralph Fiennes; Finch; Finney; Fishburne; H. Fonda; Freeman; Gardner; Garfield; Goldberg; Gong Li; Hackman; R. Harris; W. Hurt; Huston; S. Jackson; James Earl Jones; Landau; Jennifer Jason Leigh; Lemmon; Malden; Mastroianni; Matthau; Maura; O’Sullivan; Olmos; Pacino; Palance; Pesci; Rainer; Redford; V. Redgrave; Richardson; Robbins; Rossellini; Rourke; Rowlands; Ryder; Seberg; Sheen; Snipes; Spacek; Stallone; Stamp; Streep; Thurman; Travolta; Trevor; Trintignant; Turturro; Voight; Von Sydow; Whitaker.

Technique. Essays: Burton; Christie; Gordon; Greenstreet; Irons; Tracy; Winters.

FALLER, Greg S. Essayist. Professor, Department of Electronic Media & Film, Towson University, Towson, Maryland, since 1986; Assistant/Associate editor of The International Dictionary of Films & Filmmakers, first edition, vols. 3, 4, and 5, and Journal of Film & Video, 1985–87; Advisor, The International Dictionary of Films & Filmmakers, second and third editions. Essays: G. Close; Midler; Miranda; Powell.

FARNSWORTH, Rodney. Essayist. Assistant professor of English, Indiana University-Purdue University, Fort Wayne. Essays: Bond; Lemmon; Marais; McLaglen; O’Hara; Seyrig; Vitti.

FELANDO, Cynthia. Essayist. University instructor and freelance writer; recently received doctorate from University of California, Los Angeles, Department of Film and Television. Essays: Arletty; Juliette Lewis; J. Russell; Temple; Walken.

GOMERY, Douglas. Adviser and essayist. Professor of media history, University of Maryland; author of ten books including Media in America (Johns Hopkins University Press, 1998), and Shared Pleasures: A History of Movie Presentation in the United States (University of Wisconsin Press, 1992). Essays: Bud Abbott and Lou Costello; Crosby; Dern; Grable; Griffith; E. Harris; Hawn; Kennedy; D. Martin; Poitier; D. Powell; R. Scott; Shearer; Sloane; Widmark.

HAYS, Matthew. Essayist. Freelance writer and editor, Montreal. Editor of MagNet, an online film magazine. Film critic for the weekly Montreal Mirror. Essays: J. Fonda; Hopper; Hunter; Schwarzenegger; Winters.

HONG, Guo-Juin. Essayist. Instructor, University of California, Santa Cruz, and San Francisco State University. Independent documentary filmmaker; current projects mainly in affiliation with the Gay and Lesbian Historical Society of Northern California, the Oral History Project. Essays: Bogart; Clift; Garbo; C. Grant; Irons; B. Lee; Olivier; Roberts.

HORTON, Robert. Essayist. Film critic, The Herald (Everett, Washington); KUOW-FM (Seattle); and Film.com; frequent contributor to Film Comment magazine; contributor to Seattle magazine, Seattle Times, American Film, Amazon.com, Microsoft Cinemania, and others; former director of Seattle Film Society (now defunct); editor of film magazine The Informer, 1980–86. Essay: Bonnaire.

HUMPHREY, Daniel. Essayist. Teacher, freelance writer, and filmmaker, San Francisco. Essays: Bacon; Malkovich; McDowell; M. Ryan; Sutherland.

IORDANOVA, Dina. Essayist. Contributing editor, BFI’s Companion to Eastern European and Russian Cinema; works in the field of Balkan cinema and transnational film. Essays: Churikova; Ladyzhina; Mordyukova; Nikulin; Orlova.

KEMP, Philip. Adviser and essayist. London-based freelance reviewer and film historian; contributor to Sight and Sound, Variety, and Film Comment; author of Lethal Innocence: The Cinema of Alexander Mackendrick, 1991; and of a forthcoming biography of Michael Balcon. Essays: Adjan; Baye; Buscemi; Carlyle; Connery; H. Fonda; Greenwood; Huston; Johnson; Jouvet; Karloff; Kendall; Kidman; Lorre; Mercouri; Papas; Postlethwaite; Sanders; Signoret; Spacey; Zhao Dan.

KNOBLOCH, Susan. Essayist. Ph.D. candidate in film and television critical studies, University of California, Los Angeles. Contributor to Film Quarterly. Essays: De Vito; Monroe; Neal; Pitt; Quaid; Weld; Willis.

KUPFERBERG, Audrey E. Essayist. Film historian, appraiser, and archivist. Co-author of Angela Lansbury: A Life on Stage and Screen, 1996; The John Travolta Scrapbook, 1997; and Meet the Mertzes, 1999. Lecturer, University at Albany. Contributing editor of Leonard Maltin’s Family Film Guide. Contributor to Women Filmmakers & Their Films and The Whole Film Sourcebook. Film consultant to the Peary-MacMillan Arctic Museum at Bowdoin College. Former director, Yale University Film Study Center. Former assistant director, the National Center for Film and Video Preservation at the American Film Institute. Former project director, the American Film Institute Catalog. Essays: Arkin; Ayres; Bacall; L. Barrymore; E. Barrymore; K. Bates; Beatty; Branagh; Brooks; Burke; Chariisse; Cher; Colbert; G. Davis; K. Douglas; Gaynor; Henreid; Hepburn; Hershey; Kaye; M. Keaton; Lupino; Meredith; Miller; Niven; D. Reynolds; E. Taylor; Thompson; Ullman; Woodward; Wray; R. Young.

LARSEN, Susan K. Adviser. Assistant professor of Russian literature, University of California, San Diego; author of Reading and Writing Girlhood in Late Imperial Russia, forthcoming; and many articles on Russian film and popular culture; former chair of the Working Group on Cinema and Television in Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union.

LIEBMANN, Roy. Essayist. Librarian and film bibliographer, California State University, Los Angeles. Author of Silent Film Performers, 1996; as well as several articles on media production. Essay: Calhern.

LIPPE, Richard. Essayist. Lecturer in film at Atkinson College, York University, Ontario. On the editorial board of CineAction! Essays: de Havillard; Melvyn Douglas; Fontaine; Gardner; Garland; Jennifer Jones; MacLaine; Minnelli; Novak; L. Turner.

MALPEZZI, Frances M. Essayist. Associate professor, Arkansas State University. Essay: Goddard.

MANCINI, Elaine. Essayist. Has taught film at the College of Staten Island, and at St. John’s University, New York. Author of The Free Years of the Italian Film Industry, 1930–1935, 1981; Struggles of the Italian Film Industry during Fascism, 1930–1935, 1985; and Luchino Visconti: A Guide to References and Resources, 1986. Essays: Cervi; Crisp; Fabrizi; Lancaster; Manganaro; Mastroianni; Pickford; Sordi; Valli; Volonté.

MCCAFFREY, Donald W. Essayist. Emeritus professor of English, University of North Dakota; author of Four Great Comedians: Chaplin, Lloyd, Keaton, and Langdon, 1968; The Golden Age of Sound Comedy: Comic Films and Comedians of the Thirties, 1973; Three Classic Silent Film Comedies Starring Harold Lloyd, 1976; Assault on Society: Satirical Literature to Film, 1992; editor of Focus on Chaplin, 1971. Essays: W. Allen; Arbuckle; Cantor; C. Chaplin; Chevalier; Cleese; J. Cooper; Downey, Jr.; Durant; Fernandel; Fields; B. Keaton; Langdon; Lloyd; Raimu; Three Stooges; West.

McCARTY, John. Essayist. Supervising writer and co-director of The Fearmakers: Screen Masters of Suspense and Terror, a video documentary series based on his 1994 book of the same name; author of numerous books on film, including Splatter Movies: Breaking the Last Taboo of the Screen, 1984; The Modern Horror Film: 50 Contemporary Classics, 1990; John McCarty’s Official Splasher Movie Guide, Vols. 1 and 2, 1989, 1992; and Hollywood Gangland, 1993. Essays: Bloom; Bogarde; Bonardouche; Borgnine; Bronson; Burton; Caine; Coburn; T. Curtis; Cushing; Falk; Flynn; Fontaine; Gable; Granger; H. Grant; Guinness; Harvey; Hoskins; Hudson; J. Hurt; Jourdan; Karloff; Grace Kelly; Kingsley; Lancaster; C. Lee; Janet Leigh; Jerry Lewis; Lom; Massey; McQueen; Mercouri; Mifune; Mills; Murphy; Neeson; Oldman; Pleasence; Price; Reed; Robards; Robinson; Rooney; Maximilian Schell; Sellers; Signoret; Tracy; Wallach; Wayne; York; Zetterling.

MILICIA, Joseph. Essayist. Professor of English, University of Wisconsin, Sheboygan; writes about film and literature for such periodicals as Multicultural Review and The New York Review of Science Fiction. Essays: Bujold; DiCaprio; Hanks; Helm; N. Kinski; K. Reeves.

NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS

OBALLIL, Linda J. Essayist. Assistant, Special Effects Unit, Dreamscape, Bruce Cohn Curtis Productions/Bella productions, since 1983. Essays: Carradine; Kaye; McDowall; Muni; Rathbone.

O'CONNOR, Margaret. Essayist. Freelance writer and lecturer, London. Essays: Lockwood; Roberts.

OKA, Susan. Adviser. Administrative/acquisitions librarian, Margaret Herrick Library, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

OTTER, Kelly. Essayist. Teacher and administrator, New York University. Doctoral candidate in arts and humanities. Essays: B. Andersson; Baxter; Binoche; Garson; Girardot; Karina; Olin; Shepard.

PALMER, R. Barton. Essayist. Calhoun Lemon Professor of Literature and director of the South Carolina Film Institute, Clemson University; books include Hollywood’s Dark Cinema; Perspectives on Film Noir; and Joseph Mankiewicz: A Bibliographical and Critical Study. Essays: Broderick; Glover; F. Granger; Hawkins; MacMurray; Malden; March; Nicholson; Palance; Peck; Phoenix; Wilder.

PARDI, Robert. Essayist. Formerly managing editor and chief film critic of four editions of Movies on TV; author of Movie Blockbusters and Who’s Who in Cable and TV; co-author of The Complete Guide to Videocassette Movies; staff reviewer for TV Guide. Essays: Abriol; Bancroft; Burstyn; Cagney; Caron; Cotten; J. Crawford; Cruise; B. Davis; Day; de Havilland; Dietrich; Dunaway; Duvall; Field; Ford; Foster; Garland; Gere; Gibson; Harlow; Holden; Jennifer Jones; Gene Kelly; Kerr; Lange; Lansbury; Vivien Leigh; Loren; Mitchum; Moorehead; Moreau; Neill; O’Connor; O’Hara; O’Toole; Perkins; Quinn; B. Reynolds; Roberts; Sarandon; Simmons; Maggie Smith; Steiger; Stuart; Swanson; Turner; Weaver; Woods; Wyman.

POLAN, Dana. Adviser. Professor of critical studies, School of Cinema-TV, University of Southern California. Author of Pulp Fiction (BFI Modern Classics); In a Lonely Place (BFI Film Classics); two other books, and numerous essays on film and cultural studies; former president of the Society for Cinema Studies.

PRICE, Victoria. Essayist. Writer for A&E’s Biography series; author of Vincent Price: A Daughter’s Biography, 1999; currently working on a biography of actress Dorothy McGuire for the University Press of Mississippi; completing her doctorate in American studies at the University of New Mexico. Essays: D. Barrymore; Bergen; Cusack; Damon; Dench; McGuire; McKellen; Tandy.

ROUTLEDGE, Chris. Essayist. Freelance writer and lecturer in literature and film; published essays on detective fiction, popular culture, and poetics; co-editor of Mystery in Children’s Literature, 2001. Essays: Auteuil; Brosnan; J. Fienennes; McDormand; McGregor; Roth; Winslet.

SALAMIE, David E. Essayist. Contributing editor, third edition of the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers, Actors and Actresses volume. Freelance writer and co-owner of InfoWorks Development Group, a reference publication development and editorial services company. Essays: Benigni; Cantinflas; Constantine; Harrison; K. Kinski; Masina; Montand; Mueller-Stahl; Remick; Rey; R. Ryan; Saint; Shaw; Ustinov; Volonté.

SIEGLOHR, Ulrike. Essayist. Film lecturer and writer, London. Essay: Schneider.

SLIDE, Anthony. Adviser and essayist. Author and editor of more than 50 books on the history of popular entertainment, including The Films of D. W. Griffith, 1975; The American Film Industry: A Historical Dictionary, 1986; Nitrate Won’t Wait: A History of Film Preservation in the United States, 1992; and The Encyclopedia of Vaudeville, 1994. Also editor of the Scarecrow Press “Filmmakers Series,” and a documentary filmmaker. Essays: Astor; Ayres; Banderas; Buchanan; Fitzgerald; Gaynor; Harrison; W. Huston; Meredith; Mirren; Novarro; Novello; R. Richardson; Sweet; Valentino; White.

STAFFORD, Jeff. Essayist. Program consultant, Films Inc., Atlanta. Essays: B. Crawford; Grahame.

STOKES, Cynthia Lee. Essayist. Reference librarian and liaison to the Film Studies Program, University Library, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis. Essay: Dean.

SULLIVAN, Bob. Essayist. Writer; received a Bachelor of Arts in Creative Writing from Purdue University and attended the University of Southern California graduate film school; postgraduate work at The Actors and Directors Lab under Jack Garfin; formerly film reviewer for the Los Angeles Free Press; author of the B-movie sci-fi classic Clonus; contributor, St. James Encyclopedia of Popular Culture. Essays: Bening; Carrey; P. Fonda; Norton; Paltrow; Russo.

TABERY, Karel. Essayist. Film researcher and historian, France. Historian/archivist, Czechoslovakian Film Archives, Prague, 1974–82. Essays: Aimée; Barrault; Belmondo; Bergner; Berry; Blier; Bondarchuk; Cuny; Delon; Feuillère; Fresnay; Montand.

TSIANTIS, Lee. Essayist. Publicist for Twentieth Century-Fox, Atlanta, Georgia. Former lecturer in film. Essay: Tierney.

TUDOR, Andrew. Essayist. Reader in sociology at the University of York; has written widely on film and cultural studies, most recently in Decoding Culture: Theory and Method in Cultural Studies, 1999. Essays: Eastwood; Newman.

UHLE, Frank. Essayist. Movie projectionist and librarian. Proofreader/researcher, Psychotronic Video magazine. Essays: Arthur; G. Ford; Goddard; Malone; McDowall; Presley; Robertson; L. Young.

VALENTINE, Fiona. Essayist. Member of Faculty, School of Speech, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. Essays: Hackman; Redford; E. Taylor; Wood.

VENKATACHALLAM, Usha. Essayist. Graduate student of film and video, American University, Washington, D.C. Documentary filmmaker. Essays: Azmi; Chatterjee; Kumar.

WALSH, George. Essayist. Publisher and freelance writer, Chicago. Essays: Day; Kortner.

NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS

1977; Abel Gance, 1978; and Peter Watkins: A Guide to References and Resources, 1986. Essays: A. Bates; Cagney; Fairbanks; J. Fonda; Stallone.

WILSON, James D. Essayist. Professor of English, Georgia State University, Atlanta, since 1984. Essay: Henreid.

WILSON, Richard. Essayist. Freelance writer. Essays: Karina; Raft.

WINE, Bill. Essayist. Assistant professor of communications, La Salle College, Philadelphia, since 1981. Film, theater, and television critic, Camden Courier-Post, 1974–81. Essays: Brennan; K. Douglas; Falk; Gassman; Lansbury; Pleasence; Robertson; Shaw; Ustinov; Walker.

WINNING, Rob. Essayist. Author and film scholar, Pittsburgh. Essays: Brandauer; Bronson; Cushing; Lake; Malone; Oates; Robards; Scheider; Streep.

WOOD, Robin. Essayist. Retired; taught Film Studies at Queen’s University, Kingston, Canada, University of Warwick, England, and York University, Toronto, Canada; author of twelve books on film, most recently Hollywood from Vietnam to Reagan, Hitchcock’s Films Revisited, and Sexual Politics and Narrative Film, all published by Columbia University Press; and a monograph on The Wings of the Dove for the British Film Institute; editor of, and regular contributor to, CineAction magazine. Essays: H. Andersson; Bergman; Dafoe; Dahlbeck; J. Davis; De Niro; Depp; Dickinson; Hawke; Hayward; K. Hepburn; J. Hurt; Jourdan; Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy; Janet Leigh; Magnani; Mineo; Moorehead; Neal; Pacino; Perkins; Remick; Rey; Russell; Ryu; Simmons; Stone; Travolta; Washington; Wayne.

ZUCKER, Carole. Adviser and essayist. Associate professor, Department of Cinema, Concordia University, Montreal. Author of The Idea of Image: Josef von Sternberg’s Dietrich Films, 1988; and Figures of Light: Actors and Directors Illuminate the Art of Film Acting, 1995; editor of Making Visible the Invisible: An Anthology of Original Essays on Film Acting, 1990. Regular contributor to Film Quarterly. Essays: Dreyfuss; Ganz.
NATIONALITY INDEX
Stan Laurel
Bruce Lee
Janet Leigh
Jennifer Jason Leigh
Jack Lemmon
Jerry Lewis
Juliette Lewis
Harold Lloyd
Carole Lombard
Myrna Loy
Ida Lupino
Shirley MacLaine
Fred MacMurray
Karl Malden
John Malkovich
Dorothy Malone
Fredric March
Dean Martin
Steve Martin
Lee Marvin
The Marx Brothers
Raymond Massey
Walter Matthau
Joel McCrea
Frances McDormand
Steve McQueen
Burgess Meredith
Bette Midler
Ann Miller
Sal Mineo
Liza Minnelli
Robert Mitchum
Marilyn Monroe
Robert Montgomery
Demi Moore
Agnes Moorehead
Paul Muni
Eddie Murphy
Bill Murray
Alla Nazimova
Patricia Neal
Pola Negri
Paul Newman
Jack Nicholson
Nick Nolte
Edward Norton
Kim Novak
Warren Oates
Edward James Olmos
Margaret O’Brien
Donald O’Connor
Maureen O’Hara
Al Pacino
Geraldine Page
Jack Palance
Gwyneth Paltrow
Gregory Peck
Sean Penn
Anthony Perkins
Joe Pesci
Michelle Pfeiffer
River Phoenix
Sidney Poitier
Dick Powell
Eleanor Powell
William Powell
Tyroine Power
Elvis Presley
Robert Preston
Vincent Price
Anthony Quinn
George Raft
Claude Rains
Robert Redford
Christopher Reeve
Lee Remick
Burt Reynolds
Debbie Reynolds
Jason Robards
Tim Robbins
Julia Roberts
Cliff Robertson
Paul Robeson
Edward G. Robinson
Ginger Rogers
Mickey Rooney
Mickey Rourke
Gena Rowlands
Jane Russell
Rosalind Russell
Rene Russo
Meg Ryan
Robert Ryan
Winona Ryder
Selan Shaik Sabu
Eva Marie Saint
Susan Sarandon
Roy Scheider
George C. Scott
Randolph Scott
Jean Seberg
Norma Shearer
Martin Sheen
Sam Shepard
Frank Sinatra
Everett Sloane
Will Smith
Wesley Snipes
Ann Sothern
Sissy Spacek
Sylvester Stallone
Barbara Stanwyck
Rod Steiger
James Stewart
Dean Stockwell
Sharon Stone
Meryl Streep
Barbra Streisand
Gloria Stuart
Margaret Sullivan
Gloria Swanson
Blanche Sweet
Norma Talmadge
Jessica Tandy
Robert Taylor
Shirley Temple
The Three Stooges
Gene Tierney
Spencer Tracy
John Travolta
Claire Trevor
Kathleen Turner
Lana Turner
John Turturro
Lee Van Cleef
Jon Voight
Christopher Walken
Robert Walker
Eli Wallach
Denzel Washington
John Wayne
Siegourney Weaver
Clifton Webb
Tuesday Weld
Orson Welles
Mae West
Forest Whitaker
Pearl White
Richard Widmark
Cornel Wilde
Gene Wilder
Robin Williams
Bruce Willis
Shelley Winters
Anna May Wong
Natalie Wood
James Woods
Joanne Woodward
Tuesday Weld
Fay Wray
Jane Wyman
Loretta Young
Robert Young
Australian
Cate Blanchett
Judy Davis
Austrian
Klaus Maria Brandauer
Oscar Homolka
Emil Jannings
Werner Krauss
Romy Schneider
Oskar Werner
Brazilian
Carmen Miranda
British
Julie Andrews
Richard Attenborough
Stanley Baker
Alan Bates
Elisabeth Bergner
Claire Bloom
Dirk Bogarde
Helena Bonham-Carter
Jack Buchanan
Richard Burton
Michael Caine
Madeleine Carroll
Charles Chaplin
Julie Christie
John Cleese
Ronald Colman
Sean Connery
Donald Crisp
Peter Cushing
Daniel Day-Lewis
Judi Dench
Robert Donat
Denholm Elliott
Joseph Fiennes
Ralph Fiennes
Peter Finch
Albert Finney
John Gielgud
Hugh Grant
Joan Greenwood
Alec Guinness
Rex Harrison
Laurence Harvey
Jack Hawkins
Audrey Hepburn
Anthony Hopkins
Bob Hoskins
Leslie Howard
Trevor Howard
John Hurt
Jeremy Irons
Glenda Jackson
Celia Johnson
Boris Karloff
Kay Kendall
Deborah Kerr
Ben Kingsley
Christopher Lee
Vivien Leigh
Margaret Lockwood
James Mason
Malcolm McDowell
Ewan McGregor
Ian McKellen
Victor McLaglen
John Mills
Helen Mirren
David Niven
Ivor Novello
Gary Oldman
Laurence Olivier
Donald Pleasence
Pete Postlethwaite
Michael Redgrave
Vanessa Redgrave
Oliver Reed
Ralph Richardson
Miranda Richardson
Tim Roth
Margaret Rutherford
George Sanders
Peter Sellers
Robert Shaw
Maggie Smith
Terence Stamp
Elizabeth Taylor
Terry-Thomas
Emma Thompson
Peter Ustinov
Emily Watson
Kate Winslet
Michael York
Susannah York
Canadian
Geneviève Bujold
Jim Carrey
Leslie Nielsen
Donald Sutherland
Chinese
Gong Li
Zhao Dan
Czech
Vlastimil Brodský
Herbert Lom
Danish
Anna Karina
Harald Madsen
Asta Nielsen
Carl Schenstrom
Dutch
Lil Dagover
Egyptian
Omar Sharif
French
Isabelle Adjani
Anouk Aimée
Fanny Ardant
Arletty
Stéphane Audran
Daniel Auteuil
Brigitte Bardot
Jean-Louis Barrault
Nathalie Baye
Jean-Paul Belmondo
Jules Berry
Juliette Binoche
Bernard Blier
Sandrine Bonnaire
Pierre Brasseur
Leslie Caron
Maurice Chevalier
Alain Cuny
Marcel Dalio
Danielle Darrieux
Alain Delon
Catherine Deneuve
Gérard Depardieu
Fernandel
Edwidge Feuillère
Pierre Fresnay
Jean Gabin
Annie Girardot
Isabelle Huppert
Louis Jourdan
Louis Jouvet
Jean-Pierre Léaud
Jean Marais
Mio-Miou
Yves Montand
Jeanne Moreau
Michèle Morgan
Philippe Noiret
Gérard Philippe
Michel Piccoli
Micheline Presle
Raimu
Delphine Seyrig
Simone Signoret
Simone Simon
Jean-Louis Trintignant
Charles Vanel
German
Horst Buchholz
Brigitte Helm
Nastassja Kinski
Armin Mueller-Stahl
Rüdiger Vogler
Paul Wegener
Greek
Melina Mercouri
Irene Papas
Hong Kong
Jackie Chan
Indian
Shabana Azmi
Soumitra Chatterjee
Dilip Kumar
Smita Patil
Irish
Kenneth Branagh
Pierce Brosnan
Cyril Cusack
Barry Fitzgerald
Richard Harris
Liam Neeson
Peter O'Toole
Italian
Roberto Benigni
Francesca Bertini
Claudia Cardinale
Gino Cervi
Aldo Fabrizi
Vittorio Gassman
Gina Lollobrigida
Sophia Loren
Anna Magnani
Silvana Mangano
Giulietta Masina
Marcello Mastroianni
Isabella Rossellini
Alberto Sordi
Alida Valli
Monica Vitti
Gian Maria Volonté

Japanese
Setsuko Hara
Kazuo Hasegawa
Kyoko Kagawa
Machiko Kyo
Toshiro Mifune
Masayuki Mori
Chishu Ryu
Takashi Shimura
Hideko Takamine
Kinuyo Tanaka
Yoko Tsukasa

Isuzu Yamada
So Yamamura

Mexican
Pedro Armendáriz
Cantinflas
Dolores Del Rio
Maria Félix
Pedro Infante

New Zealander
Russell Crowe

Norwegian
Liv Ullmann

Polish
Jan Nowicki
Daniel Olbrychski

Russian
Sergei Bondarchuk
Nikolai Cherkassov
Inna Churikova
Marina Ladynina
Sergei Makovetski
Oleg Men’shikov
Nonna Mordyukova
Ivan Mozhukin
Yuri Nikulin

Lyubov Orlova
Oleg Yankovsky

Scottish
Robert Carlyle

Spanish
Victoria Abril
Antonio Banderas
Carmen Maura
Fernando Rey

Swedish
Bibi Andersson
Harriet Andersson
Ingrid Bergman
Gunnar Björnstrand
Eva Dahlbeck
Erland Josephson
Lena Olin
Ingrid Thulin
Max von Sydow
Mai Zetterling

Swiss
Yul Brynner
Bruno Ganz
Maria Schell
Maximilian Schell
Michel Simon